As regards many of the soldiers in my own district, I have had the same experience as the gentleman from Iowa. I know of cases where there is a delay in their being settled of from eighteen months to two years after the cases had been placed in the hands of special examiners. I have in my mind one case especially, a soldier named Colonel Humphrey. He died over eighteen months ago. His widow applied for a pension. He had carried a bullet in his shoulder for fourteen years. It was finally extracted; but he afterwards met with an accident, breaking his limb, and his blood became poisoned, no doubt from his carrying that bullet so long. Mortification took place and he died. The case was referred to the medical examiners. The physicians of the town testified to the fact that the wound was the cause of his death, he having carried that bullet in the shoulder for so great a length of time. Yet the application of his poor widow, needing aid so much from the Government, was denied her.

Now, what sort of a way was that to treat a colonel of the Army or his widow, who needed the little pension that was due her? The case was sent to the special examiners in the field. They have had it in hand, and up to this time there is no report in her favor. I presume there will be by and by, but it is not a very pleasant thing for her to be kept waiting from month to month, depending, perhaps, upon the aid of friends and neighbors. I mention this as only one case illustrative of this pension business; and, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that these evils will be remedied until we adopt a general pension law which will apply to every soldier, no matter what may have been the length of his service; a law like the Mexican pension bill. I was very glad when that was passed. The Congress which passed it deserved credit, and they deserved, also, credit for passing another pension law for the benefit of the Union soldiers. If that bill had been signed by the President, as the Mexican pension bill was, I am satisfied that we would have had less of this trouble about pension legislation; and until such a measure is passed we shall always have these difficulties. No matter how many examiners we appoint or how many clerks we employ, the same troubles will exist.

I know of a man who applied for a pension and his application was pending four years. Finally it was allowed, and he received a pension. He was a man who was physically disabled and in destitute circumstances. I met him and asked him, "Charley, did you get your pension?" "Yes," he said, "I got it." "How much is it?" I asked. He said it was $2 a month. He had had to pay his attorney $10 for getting the pension, so it took five months of his pension to pay the attorney's fee. Now, everybody knows that if a man is not worth more than $2 a month he is not worth anything. What we want is a general bill like that introduced by my colleague, Mr. HOVEY. If we do not pass that, then I hope the per diem bill will pass. Either one will be in the direction of justice to the soldiers, and, I am confident, will be acceptable to the people all over the land. If the arrears-of-pension bill were passed that would be of great help; but, in my judgment, a general pension law is the only effectual means of relieving the ex-soldiers of the Union and solving the pension problem.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe that it is our duty to provide all practicable means for the speedy adjudication of pension cases. I do not complain, sir, of the present management of the Pension Office. I believe that it is conducted in an efficient way, and that the work that is done in the office is satisfactory. But, with the view of securing the earliest possible adjudication of pension claims, I believe we should increase the number of special examiners. It has been said by the gentleman from Indiana that many of the clerks may be detailed for special examiner work, but if that is done the efficiency of the office will be impaired just to that extent. On the other hand, if we increase the number of special examiners, the office force can remain as it is, and the cases can be disposed of with much greater rapidity.

I find upon reference to the annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions that only 19.2 per cent. of the applications for invalid pensions filed in 1886 have been allowed; that only 29 per cent. of the applications filed in 1885 have been allowed; that but 31 per cent. of the applications for original invalid pensions filed in 1884 have been allowed. An examination of this table discloses this fact: that the average allowances upon applications for original invalid pensions exceed 50 per cent., rising in one year as high as 88 per cent. of the applications filed during that year.

I take it, then, that amongst the applications filed in 1885, 1886, and 1887, and in the preceding years, there are a great number of claims that are entitled to allowance. Why should their admission be delayed? The answer will be that the cases are not yet made up; that they are not fully proved, and that therefore they can not be allowed; but my experience has been that the most effectual way of securing the proof of a pension claim is to put it into the hands of an intelligent special examiner, and let him go out amongst the witnesses and collect the testimony for himself.

It is an infinitely better way of proving up pension claims than relying upon ex parte affidavits, which may be drawn by any one at any cross-roads store. Many of the gentlemen who draw pension affidavits, whilst they mean very well indeed, do not succeed in bringing out the important and material facts that are within the knowledge of the witnesses, and within my own experience I have encountered many pension claims that could have been rendered complete by the testimony of witnesses whose statements were already filed, but whose testimony was inconclusive, because it had not been properly taken.

I believe that an increase in the number of special examiners will facilitate and hasten the allowance of these claims. Is it not, then, our duty to make this increase? I was struck by a remark once made in my hearing by a gentleman connected with a board of pension-examining surgeons. He said it seemed that the pension claims which were longest in securing an allowance were those of illiterate persons, and that intelligent people understand their rights and are generally able to prove their claims promptly, whilst the less intelligent do not always appreciate their rights under the pension laws, or are not so able to secure the testimony of their witnesses. Although this may not be generally true, it is obvious that the aid of a skillful pension examiner is of great value to a claimant for a pension——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto is now, by unanimous consent, closed. The pro forma amendments will be considered as withdrawn. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 25 strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "two hundred."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 51, noes 68.

Mr. ATKINSON. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PARKER and Mr. FORNEY were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 31, noes 70.

Mr. ATKINSON. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem in lieu of subsistence for one hundred and fifty additional special examiners above provided for, while traveling on duty, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual and necessary expenses for transportation, $190,000.

Mr. FORNEY. I am directed by the committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "for," in line 8, page 87, insert, "and five special examiners or clerks detailed and acting as supervising examiners."

Mr. FARQUHAR. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will explain that amendment.

Mr. CANNON. What is the object of the amendment?

Mr. FORNEY. The object is to allow to five supervising examiners a per diem. The committee, after referring the matter to the Commissioner of Pensions and obtaining his approval of it, thought it right to recommend this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I wish the gentleman would explain who these special examiners are, where they are on duty, what their present pay is, and how much additional this amendment will give them.

Mr. FORNEY. I think they are on duty here a portion of the time. They have charge of the five divisions of the country recognized by the Pension Department. I can not define what those divisions are.

Mr. CANNON. What is the pay of these officers now?

Mr. FORNEY. It ranges from $1,400 to $1,600.

Mr. CANNON. How much will this amendment add to their salary?

Mr. FORNEY. Three dollars a day—I suppose about $1,000 a year.

Mr. CANNON. Then the increase for each officer is about $1,000 annually?

Mr. FORNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. And they would draw this $1,600 extra whether on duty in the field or not?

Mr. FORNEY. Yes; but they are supposed to be in the field most of the time. This amendment puts them on an equal footing in this respect with their subordinates.

Mr. CANNON. Now that I understand the effect of the amendment I make a point of order upon it. I will state the point.

The law provides for clerks of classes 1, 2, 3, and 4. The officers named in this amendment are five special examiners—supervising examiners. Officers thus designated are not found in the law. Nowhere, so far as I know, does the statute speak of five supervising examiners. The truth is, as I understand, that five men who are clerks of class 3 or 4—probably class 4—and who receive salaries of $1,600 or $1,800 a year, are on duty in the city of Washington; they do not travel, but occupy a similar position to that of the head of a division, if you choose. This is a proposition to pay each one of these five men $3 a day—nominally for subsistence while they are away from home in the field, but really to add a thousand dollars a year to their salary.

It may be proper policy to pay these men more than $1,600 or $1,800 a year, but I want to know just how much more. If they ought to receive $2,000 a year, let us give it; if they ought to receive $2,200 a year, the same as the highest order of chiefs of division, let us give it. If they ought to receive $2,500 a year, let us give it; but let us know what we are giving. Therefore I make a point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman's point is that there is no existing law authorizing this additional pay.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. I will state that if the gentleman from Alabama thinks these men, in view of the duties which they perform, are equivalent to heads of division, and will move to give them an annual salary of $2,200, I will not make a point of order upon the proposition.

Mr. FORNEY. I can not move that, because it would be a change of the law.

Mr. CANNON. This is a change of the law.

Mr. FORNEY. I will state that under the administration of Mr. Dudley as Commissioner there were twenty-one of these officers, but the present Commissioner reduced the number to five. Their office is really here, but they have to go backward and forward; and this amendment simply puts them on an equal footing in respect to per diem with men who are under them. It is nothing but fair that they should have their per diem.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What does the gentleman say as to the amendment being in conformity with existing law?

Mr. FORNEY. The law authorizes special examiners.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But it does not authorize this increase of their pay in this indirect way.

Mr. FORNEY. This is no indirect way. The amendment simply gives these men $3 a day for traveling expenses.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. While they remain here.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want any confusion about this matter. As I understand the law, these employés of the Government, whenever they go into the field to make examination, get $3 a day for subsistence without the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

They are now paid at the rate of $3 a day for every day, although every day is spent by them in their office, and that is an increase of over $1,000 a year.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. The duties of those men are in reference to some outlying State or Territory where they have to go to make these investigations.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all, sir; their position is in the Pension Office, pure and simple, the same as any other clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the addition is not designed for traveling expenses, but is in the nature of an increase of salary, these clerks receiving a dollar each day during the year, which is a change of law, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman thinks these men ought to have the same pay that other clerks or chiefs of divisions have who discharge similar duties, I have no objection.

Mr. KERR. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States Patent Office: For compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, $5,000; for assistant commissioner, $3,000; for chief clerk, $2,250; one law clerk, at $2,000; three examiners-in-chief, at $3,000 each; examiner of interferences, $2,500; thirty principal examiners, at $2,400 each; thirty-two first assistant examiners, at $1,800 each; thirty-six second assistant examiners, at $1,600 each; forty-one third assistant examiners, at $1,400 each; fifty fourth assistant examiners, at $1,200 each; one financial clerk, $2,000, who shall give bonds in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine; one librarian, $2,000; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; three assistant chiefs of division, at $1,800 each; three clerks of class 4, one of whom shall act as application clerk; one machinist, $1,600; five clerks of class 3, one of whom shall be translator of languages; twelve clerks of class 2; fifty clerks of class 1; one skilled laborer, $1,200; three skilled draughtsmen, at $1,200 each; four draughtsmen, at $1,000 each; one messenger and property clerk, $1,000; twenty-five permanent clerks, at $1,000 each; five model attendants, at $1,000 each; ten model attendants, at $800 each; sixty copyists, five of whom may be copyists of drawings; four copyists, at $720 dollars each; ninety-two skilled laborers, at $720 each; forty-five laborers, at $600 each; forty laborers, at $480 each; fifteen messenger-boys, at $360 each; in all, $658,070.

For purchase of books, and expenses of transporting publications of patents issued by the Patent Office to foreign governments, $3,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I rise to another point of order. Page 87, lines 16 and 17, appropriates for chief clerk $2,250. The Revised Statutes fixes this salary, and I will say very properly, at $2,500 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to insert "$2,500," which is the amount provided in the law. He will get that or go without.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to insert "$2,250."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object. We will see whether the law rules in this matter or the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman had $2,250 stricken out, and when I proposed to insert it again he said he should get $2,500 or go without, which seems to be inconsistent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am responsible for my action and do not mean to be lectured when I propose to carry out the law.

Mr. RANDALL. It seems to me to be inconsistent because the gentleman can not get $2,500 he shall leave the office without any salary at all.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In lines 20 and 21, $2,400 each is the salary fixed for thirty principal examiners. The Revised Statutes gives them, and very properly, $2,500 each.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to fill the blank by inserting "$2,500."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to insert "$2,400."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Another case of inconsistency.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Another case of infraction of law by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

For photolithographing or otherwise producing plates for the Official Gazette, $44,000.

For photolithographing or otherwise producing copies of drawings of the weekly issues of patents, for producing copies of designs, trade-marks, and pending applications, and for the reproduction of exhausted copies; said photolithographing or otherwise producing plates and copies referred to in this and the preceding paragraph to be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents and in the city of Washington, if it can there be done at reasonable rates; and the Commissioner of Patents, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be authorized to make contracts therefor, $90,000.

For investigating the question of the public use or sale of inventions for two years or more prior to filing applications for patents, and for expenses attending defense of suits instituted against the Commissioner of Patents, $500.

Bureau of Education: For the Commissioner of Education, $3,000; collector and compiler of statistics, $2,400; chief clerk, $1,800; two clerks of class 4; one statistician, $1,800; two clerks of class 3; one translator, $1,600; four clerks of class 2; six clerks of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; seven copyists; one skilled laborer, $840; two copyists, at $800 each; one copyist, $720; one assistant messenger; two laborers; two laborers, at $480 each; one laborer, at $400; and one laborer, at $360; in all, $45,429.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 90, line 9, strike out "two," where it occurs near the end of the line; lines 10 and 11, strike out "one laborer at $400, and one laborer at $360;" and insert in line 9 "four" instead of "two."

Change footing to suit.

Mr. FORNEY. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have nothing to say in addition to what I have already said, except that in a preceding section the committee themselves have fixed the salary of messenger boys at $370, which is the sum proposed to be paid these laborers.

The CHAIRMAN declared the amendment to be disagreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 63.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MATSON. I wish to make a point of order on this section against the words "chief clerk, $1,800." The permanent law fixes this salary at $2,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MATSON. I move to insert "$2,000," and in support of that amendment I wish to say this is the only chief clerk who gets less than $2,000. Of course the chief clerk of the Bureau of Education has to be a well-educated man, and should receive the salary of $2,000 provided by the permanent law. If he were not the only one of that class whose salary has been reduced below $2,000 I would not ask for this amendment.

Mr. FORNEY. The chief clerks of the bureaus in the Navy Department get only $1,800.

Mr. MATSON. But they are not fixed by law at $2,000.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Indiana for a moment, to state to him that I have a list here of some seven or eight chief clerks who get less than $2,000.

Mr. MATSON. But not by the statute law.

Mr. WASHINGTON. They get it on the appropriation bill of last year, which fixes the status of the salary for this House, according to the rulings of the Chair.

Mr. MATSON. That may be; but the amount I state is what the statute fixes for the office.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I hold in my hand a list of nine who are getting but $1,800.

Mr. McMILLIN. And the gentleman from Alabama has just stated that those in the Navy Department get but $1,800.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Chair has already ruled that the current bill fixes the salary; hence this is obnoxious to the point of order.

Mr. MATSON. I ask a vote on the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think it is well to make the increase.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Has the Chair ruled upon the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled upon it, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask unanimous consent now to insert $1,800.

Mr. CHEADLE. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of buildings for the Interior Department, namely: For the Geological Survey, $10,000; for store-room for documents, $360; and for rent of buildings until not later than December 1, 1888, for the following offices: For the Bureau of Education, $1,667; Indian Office, $2,292; Bureau of Labor, $1,000; Railroad and General Land Office, $750; in all, $16,067.

Mr. FORNEY. I move to amend after line 13, by inserting the words "for rent of stables, not exceeding $600."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Dakota, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $7,000; in all, $9,000.

Mr. GIFFORD. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 13, page 95, strike out "seven" and insert "nine,"

Mr. GIFFORD. The effect of the amendment will be to appropriate the amount fixed by the estimate.

Mr. FORNEY. What is the gentleman's statement?

Mr. GIFFORD. That it will raise the amount of the appropriation to the estimate made by the Department.

Mr. RANDALL. It is an increase over last year already.

Mr. FORNEY. Yes; we have increased the clerks there from three to seven, and the committee thought that was enough.

Mr. GIFFORD. If that be the case, then I should not insist upon the amendment.

Mr. FORNEY. That has been done.

Mr. GIFFORD. Then I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in line 21, page 94, by striking out "three thousand" and inserting "four thousand six hundred" in lieu thereof; also strike out the words "five thousand five," in same page and line, and insert "seven thousand one" in lieu thereof.

Mr. RANDALL. We have already passed that provision and I object to going back. I have no objection to the gentleman stating the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. I would like to test the sense of the House on the amendment, because I think it is absolutely necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist upon the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I do, because we will never get through with the bill if we go back in this way.

Mr. SMITH, of Arizona. Can a point of order be sustained when one can not hear the Clerk read the bill, owing to the confusion in the Hall? I was endeavoring to follow the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only rule upon the point of order as made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and not on the situation.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of office for the surveyor-general, fuel, books, stationery, pay of messenger, and other incidental expenses, $1,500.

For surveyor-general of Minnesota, $1,800; and for the clerks in his office, $2,000; in all, $3,800.

Mr. LIND. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of requesting the Clerk to read a communication received from the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that this communication came to me within the past five minutes, in response to an inquiry I addressed to the Commissioner as to the condition of business in that office. I now ask the Clerk to read the communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT INTERIOR, Washington, D. C., May 29, 1888.

HON. JOHN LIND:

The present force in contest division, and public land division, C, is barely able to keep present arrears from increasing. It would require eighteen months in each of these divisions, with present force, to dispose of present accumulation, if no other cases came in. Recorder's division not more than two months behind. In pre-emption division 91,000 cases pending; with present force will dispose of about 15,000 per year.

The estimated number of cases received during this year, 50,000—a yearly increase of 800 per cent. since 1880. It will require five years to dispose of the accumulation, if no other cases should be received.

S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
Commissioner.

Mr. LIND. Now, Mr. Chairman, I renew my request to the committee——

Mr. RANDALL. And I repeat my objection.

Mr. LIND. I believe I am entitled to five minutes under the rule.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moved a pro forma amendment.

Mr. LIND. I did move to strike out.

I now repeat my request to the committee made a short time since, and state that it is not fair to the West, nor is it fair to this country, to cut down the estimate made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the amount of $200,000 and refuse his request of one hundred additional clerks when that office has now more work on hand than it can do in five years and business increasing at the rate of 800 per cent. per annum. It is unfair to the West. It is outrageous if it is anything.

Mr. Chairman, no one can deny the fact that this is without excuse. The poor devil living on a homestead claim in Dakota, if his claim is contested, will have to wait from four to five years before it can be ascertained whether he can hold his land or not. I repeat, it is outrageous. Is that a state of affairs that ought to prevail in a civilized community?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; but in a Democratic Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to going back.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment?

Mr. LIND. I do.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Idaho, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $1,500; in all, $4,000.

Mr. DUBOIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 10, page 96, by striking out "one thousand five hundred" and inserting "three thousand;" and amend line 11 by striking out "one thousand five hundred" and inserting "three thousand."

Mr. FORNEY. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read

Mr. FORNEY. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer these amendments for the following reasons: There are only 10,350,554 acres of surveyed land in the Territory of Idaho out of 55,000,000 acres. There are hundreds and hundreds of ranchers living upon unsurveyed lands in the Territory, who are besieging the Department daily for additional surveys. I am led to believe that the Appropriations Committee will make an appropriation in the sundry civil bill for this purpose. The appropriation will avail nothing unless there is sufficient force in the surveyor-general's office to work up the field-notes. This is a simple act of justice which I ask for in behalf of my growing Territory.

Mr. FORNEY. This, as regards the first amendment, is the same amount as was given in the bill last year, and no deficiency has been reported. As regards the second amendment, I will state that the amount which we give, $1,500, is all the Department has asked.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. DUBOIS, there were—ayes 49, noes 59.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Montana, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $6,000; in all, $8,500.

Mr. TOOLE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in line 22, page 96, by striking out "six thousand" and inserting "eight thousand" in lieu thereof, and by striking out the words "eight thousand five," in same line and same page, and inserting "ten thousand five" in lieu thereof.

Mr. TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is in keeping with the estimate of the Secretary of the Interior. If $8,000 was necessary when he made his estimate at the beginning of the session, it is much more so now. Since that a bill has passed Congress and become a law by which 17,500,000 acres of land, embraced within the Blackfoot-Indian reservation, have been thrown open to settlement under the homestead and desert-land law. Not one foot of this land has been surveyed. A railroad—the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba road—runs through this reservation for over 200 miles. On each side of that road and all over the ceded lands homesteaders have made and are making settlements. This question of clerk-hire is fundamental, and without an adequate force the amount hereafter to be appropriated in the sundry civil bill for the survey of public lands is not important. The force in the surveyor-general's office for the last year was wholy inadequate. The work of the office is a year behind. The result of this was that the money set aside for surveys in Montana last year was covered back into the Treasury. The reason was this: Contractors for doing the public surveys the year preceding took their contracts at the prices fixed by law upon the implied understanding that when the contracts were executed they would get their money. Their field-notes were required to be worked up in the surveyor-general's office and then transmitted to the General Land Office for examination and approval. Their pay was delayed over a year.

With this condition of affairs existing no applications for contracts were made the last year, and as before said, and for these reasons, no contracts were let, and the money intended for Montana was of no benefit to us. Unless this appropriation is increased we will experience the same thing again. I appeal to the gentlemen in charge of this bill to yield to this request. The settlement of lines and establishment of permanent boundaries in localities where settlements are made and are rapidly being made is of the greatest importance, and a failure to do so is sometimes freighted with the most serious consequences. Legal controversies arise out of it, personal encounters are not infrequent, and sometimes heavy costs and expenses are thereby entailed upon communities that are not able to bear them.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations recommend an increase of $3,000 over last year, and we considered after reflection and inquiry that that was sufficient.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For surveyor-general of Oregon, $1,800; and for the clerks in his office, $3,000; in all, $4,800.

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to make a point of order as to the salary of the surveyor-general in this paragraph. The regular salary by the existing law in the Statutes at Large is $2,500. The appropriation for the Forty-eighth Congress, second session, as appears from the statutes of that year, 1883-'85, volume 23, gives the surveyor-general of Oregon $2,500, while this allowance is $1,800. Therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. The statute fixes it at $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be compelled to rule as he has done in other cases and sustain the point of order.

Mr. HERMANN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit an amendment, to fill the blank with $2,500.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that amendment will not prevail. It will make the salary of that surveyor-general higher than the salary of any other.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the committee and of the Committee on Appropriations for a few minutes on this point. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has just said that this amendment will make the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon larger than that of any other. By referring to the present bill he will find that he is mistaken. For instance, he will find that the surveyor-general of the Territory of Idaho receives $2,500, that the surveyor-general of the Territory of Montana receives $2,500, and that several other surveyors-general of Territories receive $2,500, which is the maximum provided in the same law which allows $2,500 to the surveyor-general of Oregon.

Permit me to state further—and here again I ask the kind ear of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—that this is not one of those cases where the salary has been continued at this figure for ten or twelve years. Every Republican surveyor-general of Oregon has received a salary of $2,500. The present officer was one of the first appointments under this Administration, and almost immediately after his appointment this decrease was made. When he accepted his appointment he accepted it in view of the general statute which provided a salary of $2,500. At the last Congress I offered an amendment to the pending clause in the then appropriation bill, but it was objected to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] on the ground that the surveyor-general of Oregon would have less business than usual, because the committee had failed to make an appropriation for the extension of surveys, although there are remaining in that great State at least 20,000,000 of acres yet to be surveyed. But, Mr. Chairman, that condition of things has been changed. Under the act of February 8, 1887, it is provided that allotments shall be made in the Indian reservations, and the Indians on three or four of those large reservations have signified their desire to have allotments made of their lands, and the Committee on Indian Affairs have submitted in their appropriation bill a clause which provides the sum of $100,000 for surveys and resurveys. It reads:

For surveys and resurveys under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 8, 1887, to be repaid proportionately out of the proceeds of the sales of such lands as may be acquired from the Indians under the provisions of said act, $75,000; in all $100,000.

In the recommendations for these surveys are embraced three large Indian reservations in the State of Oregon, comprising an area far exceeding that of Connecticut. That will impose upon the surveyor-general of Oregon an immense amount of labor, and yet, in view of this labor, the small sum of $1,800 is to be continued in this bill as the salary of the surveyor-general. Now, I ask the Committee on Appropriations, and I particularly appeal to the chairman of that committee, whether it is not a gross injustice to a faithful officer, who is there to administer the law, and who does administer it——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERMANN. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this State in whose behalf I am speaking is as large as New York and Pennsylvania combined. There are over 20,000,000 acres of her lands yet to be surveyed. The great incoming tide of immigration is covering the country, and the people are demanding a survey and a proper segregation of the public lands in order that they may settle upon them and obtain titles. You may remember, Mr. Chairman, that only a short time ago the Secretary of the Interior transmitted a communication, accompanied by petitions from all the land officers in that State, embracing five land districts, asking for an increased extension of the public surveys. That, I apprehend, will be received in a proper manner by the Committee on Appropriations, who will make a suitable appropriation for that purpose. That will again increase the duties of this office. So that I ask you gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber, every one of you, whether you will permit this officer, with these increased labors, to go on in the discharge of his duties upon the salary of $1,800, in the face of the law which, when he accepted the appointment under this Administration, provided a salary of $2,500. Is it right or just? Besides, he is required to keep his office in a city where the expense of living is necessarily high. Would any gentleman on either side of this House accept the responsibilities imposed upon this officer with the salary to which you propose to limit him? Mr. Chairman, I believe not. Therefore I appeal to both sides of the House to increase this appropriation, and to increase it in accordance with statutory law which was in force when he accepted the position.

I claim that this is an exceptional instance, the like of which has not been before presented to the House. In the name of justice and right, and upon the principles of ordinary business, I appeal to you to increase this appropriation. I would rather that this bill should not carry the appropriation of one dollar for this officer, so that we may go into the Senate and see whether we can not obtain there what the law justly gives him, than to have him cut down to the insignificant sum of $1,800—a sum which under all the circumstances he should not be asked to receive. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the salary of this officer was cut down by the Senate. For two years the salary has been fixed at $1,800. To change it now would increase the salary of this officer over that of corresponding officers in Florida, Louisiana, and other States. None of these salaries are up to the general statute law. The gentleman's proposition is to increase this salary $700. I do not think this the proper season to make increases. Therefore I oppose the amendment.

Mr. HERMANN. The Secretary of the Interior, in the estimate which he submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, expressly asks that $2,500 be allowed as the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon.

Mr. RANDALL. He makes a similar request as to all of these officers. We have not followed his recommendation in that respect.

Mr. HERMANN. Then I say that under the peculiar circumstances which I have presented, and which the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office confirms, this should be made an exceptional instance. This officer should have his salary increased in view of the increased labors and responsibilities now imposed upon him by an act passed by Congress at the present session.

Mr. RANDALL. As the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] has appealed especially to this side in a party point of view, I only want to say that I do not know anything about such appeals as that; but if I did, I have more respect for the party than I have for any individual Democrat, and I do not want to see our party here increasing salaries.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is an "old, old story" to me. Our Democratic friends have the administration, and if they deliberately want to cut down this salary I presume they are the best judges in the matter. I think that a great many men now in office and drawing salaries (judging from what their party friends say about them, and in some instances from what I know about them myself) do not half earn the salaries that they get. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is to be commended for the position he takes in this matter; and certainly I shall not agonize to give these office-holders more salary than their Democratic friends think they are entitled to.

A remark has been made about increasing this salary in the Senate. While I am not a member of the Senate, I hope that these salaries will not be increased at the other end of the Capitol. You gentlemen here are the best judges of what these officers, your party friends, ought to be paid.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HERMANN, there were—ayes 42, noes 63.

Mr. HERMANN. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HERMANN and Mr. FORNEY were appointed.

Mr. HERMANN. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask unanimous consent that this salary be fixed at $1,800.

Mr. HERMANN. I object to that. Let us give this man what is fair and right, or let us give him nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Wyoming, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $3,000; in all, $5,500.

Mr. CAREY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 17, page 98, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$5,000." In same line, strike out "5" and insert "7."

Mr. CAREY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is for the purpose of increasing the amount allowed for clerk-hire in the office of the surveyor-general of Wyoming from $3,000 to $5,000. I can not understand why any appropriations should be made for the offices of surveyors-general unless sufficient appropriations are also made for clerk-hire and for public surveys. I venture to make the statement, which I believe within the bounds of truth, that this Government during the last three years has expended in this manner a quarter of a million dollars, for which it has received no return whatever. It keeps up year after year the offices of surveyors-general, which are costing for salaries and incidental expenses more than $100,000 annually, while very little money is being expended for the survey of the public lands. I believe it high time that all of these offices were abolished, unless Congress shall make proper appropriation for the surveys of the public lands, and shall compel the Commissioner of the General Land Office to make contracts and cause surveys to be made, as demanded by the people.

I venture to assert that in every one of the Territories the surveyor-general for the last three years has had absolutely nothing to do. He has filled his office and employed one or two clerks in order to conform to the law, paid office rent and drew his salary. He has not been authorized to make contracts where the interests of the people have demanded that the surveys be extended.

Where Congress made small appropriations for the public surveys, Mr. Sparks, lately in charge of the General Land Office, on the theory bred in one of his hallucinations that he could suspend a law of Congress, failed to do his duty and cause contracts to be made within these appropriations. I offered the amendment believing it the smallest amount that should be appropriated for clerk-hire in the office of the surveyor-general of Wyoming if any work is to be done through that office during the next fiscal year. I sincerely hope at least a small amount will be placed in the sundry civil bill for the continuance of the public surveys in that Territory, so that this work may go on from year to year until all the lands are surveyed. To meet the needs of a growing country new surveys are demanded each year.

It is not the time to refuse these appropriations, or to deny to the people of all the Territories the amounts absolutely necessary for the public lands. If there have been imperfect surveys, as is believed by the General Land Office, then let them be retraced, let the money be expended in retracing the lines and making the necessary office corrections. I believe the people are entitled to the surveys, and that it is unsound policy either for the Democratic or Republican side of the House to refuse to comply with their wishes in regard to this important branch of the public service.

Mr. RANDALL. The amount that was appropriated for the current year is only $50,000. That amount will probably be given for the coming year for the surveys of the public lands. At least I do not know that it will be increased for the coming fiscal year. But I will say to the gentleman that we have increased for this Territory of Wyoming $1,500 in this bill, which we consider adequate.

Mr. CAREY. I move to strike out the last word.

I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, for I failed to catch exactly what he said, to state again the amount that would probably be appropriated for the next fiscal year for the surveys of the public lands?

Mr. RANDALL. As far as I am able to judge, I do not think it will be increased over last year's appropriation of $50,000, if I remember correctly.

Mr. CAREY. Does the gentleman know what the estimates were?

Mr. RANDALL. The estimates, I am advised, are $300,000.

Mr. CAREY. Now, I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what consistency there is in keeping alive the offices of surveyors-general and paying clerk-hire simply for the purpose of expending $50,000 a year?

Mr. RANDALL. I am inclined to the opinion that there is no propriety in keeping alive these offices of surveyors-general.

Mr. CAREY. Then I only want to say in reply to that that these appropriations have not been sufficient to meet the actual requirements of the public service and the demands of the Western people for an extension of the system of public-land surveys. A few years ago the Appropriation Committee did not deny adequate appropriations.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office has made his estimates, I believe, amounting to about $300,000. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says that the appropriation for the coming year will probably be $50,000 for all the States and Territories.

I do not believe in abandoning the offices of the surveyors-general until the surveys are completed, but as a good business proposition I believe it would be wise to expend some money in public surveys if these offices are to be maintained during the next fiscal year.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say that the number of acres of land already surveyed and not disposed of in the various States and Territories is absolutely enormous; and if I remember correctly as to the gentleman's own Territory, there is a very large amount of surveyed lands not disposed of.

Mr. CAREY. And I wish to state in response that my Territory, though it is young, with a population of a hundred thousand people, has contributed to the overburdened Treasury of the United States over a million of dollars for public land, for which her people have only the receipts of the land offices, of which the Government itself has so destroyed the credit that not one cent can be borrowed on them.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman state how many acres there are in that Territory which have been surveyed and undisposed of? I do not now remember the exact number of acres.

Mr. CAREY. I can not state the exact number now from memory. It is a large number.

Mr. RANDALL. I will furnish it to the gentleman, as I have the statement here somewhere.

Mr. CAREY. But I know that I have received letter after letter asking me on behalf of my people to have these surveys extended where they have not been extended. There are many millions of acres not surveyed, and the people are settling upon them.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee will observe that this increases by $1,500 this appropriation over last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will treat the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming as having been withdrawn, and the question recurs on the amendment submitted by him.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee now rise, and will state that my object is to ask the House to extend the time of adjournment beyond 5 o'clock, in order that we may be able to dispose of this bill during this session, and thus avoid an evening session.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman allow an inquiry? Is it the purpose of those having the bill in charge to move an adjournment over to-morrow if this bill passes?

Mr. MILLS. That is my purpose, as soon as the committee rises, to get the floor and make that motion.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I hope that there will be no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Could it not be done by unanimous consent?

Mr. RANDALL. No; it has to be done in the House. I want to get the extension so as to avoid coming back here to-night.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 1640) changing the name of the port of Lamberton, in the District of Burlington, N. J., to the port of Trenton in said district;

An act (H. R. 9711) making an appropriation to enable the several Executive Departments of the Government and the Bureau of Agriculture, and the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum and Commission of Fish and Fisheries, to participate in the centennial exposition of the Ohio Valley, to be held at Cincinnati, Ohio, from July 4 to October 27, 1888;

An act (H. R. 2365) for the relief of William F. Thorne; and

An act (H. R. 484) for the relief of Thomas C. Dickey.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1948) to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Ark.; and

A bill (S. 2210) to revive the grade of General in the United States Army.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1286) granting a pension to Michael Lane;

A bill (S. 625) granting a pension to George W. Schell;

A bill (S. 760) granting a pension to Stephen C. Lobdell;

A bill (S. 1015) granting a pension to Margaret M. Collins;

A bill (S. 1554) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Sacramento, Cal.;

A bill (S. 2738) granting an increase of pension to John G. Merritt;

A bill (S. 1017) granting an increase of pension to Stephen C. Schiedel; and

A bill (S. 1083) for the erection of a public building at Tallahassee, Fla.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that the hour of adjournment of the House to-day be extended beyond 5 o'clock, till the conclusion of this bill. My object is to avoid an evening session, if we can. The weather is very warm, and it would be unpleasant to come here at night.

A MEMBER. No other business to be taken up?

Mr. RANDALL. There will be no other business taken up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MILLS. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next, to-morrow being Memorial Day.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Pending that I desire to submit a privileged report.

Mr. RANDALL. My motion is privileged.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. We can get through with this in one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will not interfere with the consideration of the pending bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is putting the question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Can I not ask a question of the Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can raise a question of order.

Mr. O'NIELL, of Missouri. It is a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I was recognized by the Speaker, and submitted a privileged report. After that the gentleman from Pennsylvania stated he did not yield; but when he had finished his motion the Speaker then recognized me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Missouri because he heard that gentleman address the Chair. He did not know whether he rose to a point of order or not. The Chair knew the gentleman was out of order unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania consented.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Then I will let the report lie there until we get through with this bill.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. BLOUNT in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Office of Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department: Law clerk, $2,500; one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3 (lease clerk); one clerk of class 2; in all, $7,300.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1, page 99, strike out "one clerk" where those words first occur and insert "two clerks;" so that it will read "two clerks of class 4."

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I offer this amendment for the purpose of giving another clerk in this Department, who may act as a stenographer to the Assistant Attorney-General. We are assured by the information which has been received by the Post-Office Committee that this is very important to the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department. The Committee on Appropriations, I suppose, thought this was not necessary. I do not know if they considered the point or not. I personally know that the Assistant Attorney-General for that Department is not able to discharge his duties without a clerk who can act as a stenographer. I do not believe the House will be disposed to refuse this reasonable request. An officer holding so important a position and having so much and such important work to do ought to have a stenographer. Most of the higher officers have, and I think all the chief officers who have a large amount of work to do ought to have stenographers in order that they may discharge their duties more rapidly and more satisfactorily to the people whom they serve.

When I have called on this Assistant Attorney-General—and I suppose other members of the Post-Office Committee have had the same experience, although I assume we would be more readily served than many other people—I say when I have called on him for opinions I have had to wait longer than I thought I ought to have waited. I am told that it results from the fact that there is not a sufficient force in the office to discharge its duties promptly, and that the difficulty will be remedied by giving the Assistant Attorney-General a stenographer.

Mr. FORNEY. In preparing this paragraph we followed the estimates submitted by the Department.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. One of the requests of that Department to the committee was that a stenographer be allowed for the office of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department. You will find that among the requests and recommendations of that office. I do not make this motion from captiousness, but because I am satisfied that this addition to the office is essential to its efficiency.

Mr. PETERS. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the Assistant Postmaster-General is not required to report upon all claims by postmasters against the Department for money stolen or lost?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. All losses of the Department and all questions where the construction of the law is involved are submitted to him. Many questions I have submitted myself, and I suppose every other member of the Post-Office Committee and many other members of the House have submitted legal questions to him—questions involving the law as applicable to the various complications arising in reference to our great postal system.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask my colleague on the committee if the duties of this officer have not been materially increased by a law just passed in this Congress and approved by the President, authorizing the Department to adjust claims of postmasters arising from the loss of postal funds.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. There is no question about that, and I am satisfied that the committee have overlooked the request for this stenographer, or else they would have made provision for him in the bill. I would much prefer to have unanimous consent to make the bill provide directly for a stenographer; but if that can not be done I would like to have an increase of the number of fourth-class clerks, one of whom should discharge the duties of a stenographer.

Mr. RANDALL. We have the original estimate and the supplemental estimate, and this proposed increase does not appear in either.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. The Post-Office Department sent to us a statement of the request.

Mr. RANDALL. But it does not appear in either the original or the supplemental estimate, so far as I can ascertain.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Well, I know that this officer is very anxious to have the provision made, and so is the Postmaster-General, and know his services are necessary. I was at the Department this morning, and they assured me of the importance of it and seemed to have an idea that the committee had considered it and by mistake or otherwise had refused it. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I now, on my own responsibility, ask this committee to provide for this stenographer in one shape or another.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has any point of order been made against it?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. No; as drawn the amendment is not subject to the point of order. I would much prefer to ask unanimous consent that this stenographer be allowed, if I did not know it would meet objection.

Mr. FORNEY. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in this very paragraph we allow for one clerk of class 3, who shall act as a stenographer and telegraph operator.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. That is for the Postmaster-General.

Mr. FORNEY. No; for the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Well, the First Assistant's office and this office are entirely separate, so that the same stenographer could not possibly serve both.

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was agreed to—ayes 54, noes 31.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, before passing from this paragraph, I would like to have added a provision that this clerk be authorized to act as stenographer.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Two clerks of class 4, one of whom shall be a stenographer.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, let us be exactly fair about this. A clerk of class 4 is appointed through the Civil Service Commission; a stenographer, I believe, is not. As to a clerk of class 4 who acts as a stenographer, I do not know whether he is appointed in that way or not.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I am trying to provide that he shall be required to take the civil-service examination as a stenographer.

Mr. PETERS. They usually do that. They are required to pass an examination particularly as stenographers.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not see but that it is competent for the committee to provide a stenographer, or to provide a clerk to discharge the duties of a stenographer, for any Department. We are continually providing appointees for the Departments for various purposes. The point of order is overruled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For First Assistant Postmaster-General, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,000; chief of salary and allowance division, $2,200; chief of appointment division, $2,000; chief of bond division, $2,000; superintendent division post-office supplies, $2,000; superintendent of free delivery, $3,000; two clerks of class 4; twenty-two clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 3, to act as stenographer and Department telegraph operator; seven clerks of class 2; twenty-one clerks of class 1; nine clerks, at $1,600 each; two clerks at $900 each; five assistant messengers; seven laborers; in all $111,620.

Mr. FORNEY. I am directed by the committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and to which I ask the attention of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 99, line 15, strike out "two hundred," and insert "four hundred." In line 16, after the word "thousand," insert "two hundred." In line 24, strike out "five," and insert "six." Page 100, line 2, strike out "$11,620," and insert "$12,640."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I make the point of order against that amendment that it names a figure above that in the last appropriation bill, and therefore changes existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. That is correct.

Mr. FORNEY. The point of the gentleman from New Jersey is made on the first and second amendments, not on the assistant messengers.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Not on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask that the amendment on which the point was not made be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 24, page 99, strike out "five," and insert "six."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAWLER. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "thousand," in line 18, page 99, the words "five hundred;" so as to read:

Superintendent division post-office supplies, $2,500.

Mr. FORNEY. I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point.

Mr. FORNEY. The law does not authorize this increase.

Mr. LAWLER. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the law fixes this salary at the figure named in the bill. I know that it has been increased on one or two occasions.

Mr. FORNEY. The current law makes the salary $2,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Dead-letter office: For superintendent of dead-letter office, $2,250; one clerk of class 4, who shall be chief clerk; one clerk of class 4; three clerks of class 3; eleven clerks of class 2; twenty-four clerks of class 1, including eight female clerks; four clerks at $1,000 each; fifty-five clerks, at $900 each; six female clerks, at $720 each; one assistant messenger; two laborers; four female laborers, at $480 each; in all, $116,630.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what salary the existing law provides for the superintendent of the dead-letter office.

Mr. PETERS. It is $2,500.

Mr. FORNEY. Yes, that is true; but $2,250, as named in the bill, is what has been appropriated for several years; and we do not see the propriety of changing it.

Mr. PETERS. Two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars was the amount appropriated for this salary prior to the office being made a separate bureau and while it was a branch of the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General. The office being now a separate bureau, I think the salary ought to be placed at what the law contemplates, $2,500.

Mr. FORNEY. I understand there is no amendment pending.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I make the point of order upon the amount named in the bill. The Postmaster-General in his report has recommended that $2,500, the salary fixed by law, be appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. The effect of this decision is to leave a blank for the amount.

Mr. PETERS. I move that $2,500 be inserted.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that will be voted down.

The amendment of Mr. PETERS was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, I ask unanimous consent that $2,250 be inserted.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

For office of disbursing clerk and superintendent of building: Disbursing clerk and superintendent, $2,100; one clerk of class 2, accountant; one clerk of class 1, storekeeper; one engineer, at $1,400; one assistant engineer, at $1,000; one fireman, who shall be a blacksmith, at $900; one fireman, who shall be a steam fitter, at $900; one conductor of elevator, $720; two firemen, at $720 each; one carpenter, at $1,200; one assistant carpenter, at $1,000; captain of the watch, at $1,000; nineteen watchmen; twenty laborers; one plumber, $900; one awning-maker, at $900; and fifteen charwomen; and for force in the additional building as follows: Four watchmen, three laborers, and three charwomen; in all, $52,120.

Mr. BURNES. I move a pro forma amendment for the purpose of making an inquiry of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman in charge of the bill. A very deserving gentleman who holds the position of awning-maker seems to be under the impression that some one has recommended an increase of his salary and that the amount in the bill is a reduction. I wish to ask my colleague whether any recommendation for an increase of this salary has been made, and whether there has been any reduction of the salary as paid for several years past?

Mr. FORNEY. The salary now is the same as it has been for several years, in fact ever since this man commenced making awnings for the Department.

Mr. BURNES. Is there any estimate for an increase of salary?

Mr. FORNEY. No, sir; there is not.

Mr. BURNES. That is all I desired to know. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1, page 103, strike out "one" and insert "three;" so as to make the salary of the disbursing clerk and superintendent, $2,300.

Mr. CANNON. I thought I heard some gentleman make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does any gentleman make a point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I think the statute fixes the salary at $2,300; but I hope the House will vote down the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] concedes, my amendment is precisely in accordance with existing law; and this amount of salary ought to be given. This officer disburses over $800,000 a year. He is compelled to give bond to the amount of more than $4,000. Two thousand three hundred dollars is certainly a small enough salary for an office involving such work and responsibility.

Mr. KERR. Is not the amount named in the bill the salary which this officer has been receiving for a number of years?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not care what he has been receiving. Our business is to legislate in accordance with existing law.

Mr. KERR. Is the gentleman anxious to have a Democratic appointee receive annually $200 more than his Republican predecessors received?

Mr. BUCHANAN. When the services of a Democratic appointee are worth $2,300 I am willing to give it.

Mr. KERR. And $200 more than the members of his own party are asking for him. Is that the gentleman's position?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I have the sublimest admiration for a soul that can not rise above party in a matter of $200. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] The question is not whether this gentleman is a Republican or a Democrat, but whether the House will obey the law. The law gives him a salary of $2,300. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt, from the character of the service which this officer performs, and the amount of responsibility resting upon him, that the sum which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] has named in his amendment ought to be voted. But I obtained the floor particularly for the purpose of calling attention to an amendment which I offered, and which was ruled out on a point of order, increasing the salary of the disbursing clerk of the War Department. That officer disburses over $2,000,000 annually, and the salary allowed him in this bill is but $2,000. There is no law fixing that salary, and when the point of order was made against it, it was ruled out. I do not think it is fair, I do not think it is right, to impose upon those men such great responsibilities, and at the same time give them such meager salaries. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury: For compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, $4,500; assistant solicitor, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; three clerks of class 4; three clerks of class 3; four clerks of class 2; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $26,680.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In line 13 I make the point of order that the salary of the Solicitor of the Treasury is provided at $4,500, when, according to the Revised Statutes, it should be $4,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FORNEY. I move to insert in the blank "$4,500."

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman can not get unanimous consent to violate the law. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the gentleman makes his point of order merely against the $500 increase over what is provided in the Revised Statutes. The bill provides $4,500 and the Revised Statutes make the salary $4,000. The gentleman makes his point of order against the $500, which I understand the Chair has sustained and ruled the $500 out.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I made my point of order against the $500 increase.

Mr. ROGERS. And that leaves $4,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so ruled.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of Claims: For salaries of five judges of the Court of Claims, at $4,500 each; chief clerk, $3,000; one assistant clerk, $2,000; bailiff, $1,500; two clerks, at $1,200 each; and one messenger; in all, $32,240.

For stationery, books, fuel, and other miscellaneous expenses, $2,500.

For reporting the decisions of the court and superintending the printing of the twenty-third volume of the Reports of the Court of Claims, to be paid on the order of the court, $1,000; said sum to be paid to the reporter, notwithstanding section 1765 of the Revised Statutes, or section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, chapter 328.

Mr. FORNEY. I have been directed by the Committee on Appropriations to move an increase from $2,500 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the pay of assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, laborers, and charwomen provided for in this act, unless otherwise specially stated, shall be as follows: For assistant messengers, firemen, and watchmen, at the rate of $720 per annum each; for laborers, at the rate of $660 per annum each, and for charwomen, at the rate of $240 per annum each.

Mr. LAWLER. I move, in line 19, to strike out the words "unless otherwise stated."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that on carefully looking over this bill I find there are some twenty or twenty-five laborers in reference to whom it is not mentioned what pay they are to get; but that is left to the heads of the Departments. By retaining these words in the bill it will only carry a few dollars in addition, and I believe it but just and right that these laborers should receive $2 a day all the way through.

Mr. FORNEY. This refers to some old women and boys, and the amount allowed of $340 or $360 is for the purpose of preventing them getting $660.

Mr. LAWLER. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have not in any way attempted to obstruct the passage of the bill in the hope that members would be willing to make a correction in reference to these matters when it was found to be necessary. I hope, therefore, they will allow these words to be stricken out, "unless otherwise specially ordered," so that all these laborers may receive a compensation of $2 a day. The trouble is these unfortunate laborers who receive per diem compensation are not allowed to come before the Committee on Appropriations and advocate their own claims.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, yes, they are.

Mr. LAWLER. Well, I will say that you do not find them there advocating their claims.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations hears everybody.

Mr. LAWLER. They would not be allowed to come to the Capitol by the Department officers for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee never refuses anybody.

Mr. LAWLER. Now, my point is this. Men who get $1,800 and $3,000 a year are constantly besieging the halls of Congress to increase their compensation. When they ask me whether or not I would favor an increase of their salaries I tell them that I believe they now receive enough of compensation. But here are laborers who do not have the opportunity of importuning committees for an increase of their pay, and I ask on their behalf that these words shall be stricken out so that those to whom this limitation applies shall be included at $2 a day as well as the others. I do not demand an increase of compensation or salary for anybody, but I do ask, and I am sure there will be no objection to my request when it is properly understood, that these words shall be stricken out.

But I want to say that the matter involved is so small that on the ground of humanity, and I make the appeal on that score, these four words ought to be stricken out and allow these laborers to receive just the same as the other laborers in the employ of the United States Government in this city. If you gentlemen do not agree to strike that out then will your committee have any objection to this amendment, referring to the laborers wherever it occurs in the bill, and providing that their pay shall be in all cases equal to $2 a day?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say in behalf of the Committee on Appropriations that we have listened more during this session in reference to matters in which labor was involved than ever before in my experience; and I do not know of anybody that has been kept away from us. The gentleman says that the superior officers over these laborers will not permit them to come. I do not know that to be the case. I do not think it is so. I have never heard of any such instance; though I do think if the superior officers in the various Departments of the Government would keep the clerks at home attending to their business, instead of rapping at the doors of the Appropriations Committee to increase salaries, it would be much more to the interest of the Government and far more agreeable to the members of that committee.

Mr. LEHLBACH. You say you have listened to more laborers during this session than ever before. Let me ask the gentleman if it did any good for them to have these hearings?

Mr. RANDALL. I will say that labor has been fairly and liberally treated by the committee. The estimates of the Departments have been taken into consideration in that regard, and liberality has been shown by the committee in treating the question.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I can not see it.

The CHAIRMAN. With a view of facilitating the consideration of the bill the Chair will ask if the gentleman insists upon the point of order, and if he does to be kind enough to inform the Chair exactly what the point is.

Mr. FORNEY. That it changes the amount carried by the bill, and is a change of existing law.

Mr. LAWLER. I will state, so as not to interfere with the passage of the bill, that I will withdraw that motion, and will offer an amendment to come in at the end of the section.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That has precedence, and the Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 109, at the end of section 2, add: "And each charwoman shall be granted thirty days' leave of absence, with pay."

Mr. FORNEY. That is the law now.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then it does not change existing law. It can do no harm to incorporate it here, for I will say that the law has not been enforced. It was absolutely violated last summer.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 16, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

I now move the amendment I send to the desk to be added to section 2.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Add at the end of the section:

"Provided, That the pay of laborers wherever it occurs in the bill shall in all cases be equal to the rate of $2 per day."

Mr. FORNEY. I make the point of order upon that amendment. It changes existing law.

Mr. LAWLER. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: If that is the law, why do we find that your committee have reported less than $2 per day in this bill? If the law makes the pay $2 per day——

Mr. FORNEY. I did not say that.

Mr. LAWLER. What did you say?

Mr. FORNEY. I say that it changes existing law.

Mr. LAWLER. What law is changed?

Mr. CANNON. I think the point of order would be really that through the bill the different sections provide for the rates of compensation to be paid for the different classes of labor employed. These various sections have been considered and adopted. Now, then, if this amendment was to be considered, its effect would be to carry it back through all the various sections, and running through the entire bill, which have been passed over.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that possibly the effect of his amendment would not be beneficial to the laborers, for if he insists on the amendment it will militate against the laborer in some cases where the salary has been fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. LAWLER. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question. He raises the point of order against this amendment. Now, I ask, on what law point does he raise it?

My point is this; it may not be clear to the gentleman, but it is this: That he claims that this would work a change of existing law, as I understand him. He claims, however, that we are bound by the existing law. Now, if the pay of these laborers is fixed by any existing law, then what objection could there be in making an amendment fixing them all at the same rate? Why do you put some of them at $1.50 a day?

Mr. FORNEY. It changes the existing law and makes new law.

Mr. LAWLER. Then I will state to the gentleman that this bill itself, the framework of it from the Committee on Appropriations, makes provisions for the laborers needed at the rate I have fixed here, and if the amendment is out of order certainly some portions of the bill are out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule on the question of order.

Mr. LAWLER. I would want information from the committee on the point of order; and ask what objection there could be to incorporating that amendment? It would only apply to laborers that are not mentioned in the bill, and fixes the compensation that they are to get. How are we to know what is to be paid at all, whether it be 87 cents or a dollar and a shilling, or a dollar and a half a day, unless you fix the amount in the bill in some form?

Mr. RANDALL. Those who execute the law know.

Mr. LAWLER. If it is proposed to leave this to the discretion of the heads of Departments who recommend salaries of $4,000 and $5,000 for themselves and a dollar and a half a day to a man who has to support his family, then I say, as one member of this House, I am not willing to allow any such power to the head of a Department.

Mr. RANDALL. The head of a Department has no authority except what is in the law itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The discussion has been turning on the merits. The Chair will decide the point of order. Two grounds for raising the point of order upon this amendment have been stated. One has been stated by the gentleman from Alabama that the amendment changes existing law; the other by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that it affects paragraphs which have already been passed. The Chair would prefer putting his ruling on the latter ground. The several paragraphs fixing the rates of compensation have been put to the committee and passed. The Chair rules the amendment out of order.

The Clerk read the third and last section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I raise the point of order against the whole of that section; and I do it on the ground that it changes existing law. In the first part of this bill certain moneys were appropriated in full compensation for the services of the officers. All through this bill are to be found appropriations less or greater than the amounts fixed by the Revised Statutes. Some were stricken out, but others remain. For instance, the salaries for the surveyors-general, fixed by the existing law, are different from the figures stated in the bill. But this section of the bill goes further and provides that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with its provisions are repealed. The bill, therefore, is a repeal of those portions of the Revised Statutes which fixed these salaries, and therefore changes existing law and is obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. RANDALL. The same provision is in the present appropriation bill. It only fixes whatever the committee has agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. It appears that the salaries of quite a number of officials have been entirely omitted from this bill, and if this became a law it would change the law which allows salaries. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill and the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. There are some twenty salaries omitted by reason of points of order. I now, as in duty bound, ask that those blanks be filled by the amounts respectively recommended by the Committee on Appropriations and embraced in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the blanks where salaries have been omitted be filled by the amounts recommended by the Committee on Appropriations. Is there objection?

Mr. GIFFORD. I object as regards Dakota Territory.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object generally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I now ask unanimous consent that those blanks be filled by the amounts fixed in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. RANDALL objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Shall the amendments be acted upon in gross or considered separately?

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for separate votes on the amendment relating to the Hydrographic Office, and also on the amendments as to the assay offices.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the several amendments which increase the salaries above what was recommended in the bill had better be voted on separately.

Mr. RANDALL. It may be as well to take up the amendments seriatim.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, after the word "dollars," in the twentieth line, insert "messenger to the Speaker, $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, strike out "two" and insert "four;" making it read "four conductors of the elevators," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also, in the twenty-first line, same page, after the word "each," an amendment making the elevator conductors under the supervision and direction of the Architect of the Capitol, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the only amendments that need be voted on separately are thus named by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and those that increase salaries. I suggest that all others be taken nem. con.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether there is any amendment in the bill increasing salaries. I do not think there is, but my memory may be at fault in that particular.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not myself recall to mind at this moment any increase of salaries above the amounts recommended by the committee, but I believe there are some. If in the memory of the gentleman having charge of this bill there are no increases of salary above the sums named in the bill, of course I do not ask a separate vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection, the amendments will be considered in gross, except those suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I would ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether there are any amendments increasing salaries.

Mr. FORNEY. I do not remember any, but there may be.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. When this bill went to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union it had certain provisions in it with regard to certain salaries, that of the Fourth Auditor, for instance, and others. It comes back to the House with those stricken out. Now, the House is not informed whether they were stricken out on motion or by the decision of the Chairman of the committee; and if by the decision of the Chairman, they are still amendments which could have been corrected by an appeal to the committee, and the committee could have overruled the decision of the Chair. Therefore it occurs to me that these blanks, as they appear now, are amendments to the bill, and that if we refuse to concur in the amendments we thereby put back the sums that have been struck out.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a very interesting point, and I took occasion to confer with the Speaker pro tempore in regard to it awhile ago, but I was unable to conclude my conference with him, because at that moment I was called back to the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that where a point of order was raised and a salary went out upon the point of order, that is not such an amendment as would be considered in the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it not an amendment to the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not such an amendment as would be considered in the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill went to the committee with certain sums fixed in it, and it comes back without anything at all in place of those sums.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that his view is in accordance with the uniform practice of the House.

Mr. MILLS. The Committee on Appropriations violated a rule of the House in putting the provision in the bill, and it has been stricken out. That is all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that where a provision was stricken out on the point of order, that is not such an amendment as would be considered in the House. The Chair understands that it is the desire of the House that the amendments shall be reported in gross, except those that have been objected to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think a separate vote should be had on the increased appropriation for the Civil Service Commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] desires a separate vote on certain amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; on the amendment increasing the hydrographic appropriation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then, with the exception of the amendments referred to, the question will be upon the adoption of the amendments in gross.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know what the exceptions are.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment in relation to the Civil Service Commission and that in regard to the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish also to make an exception of the paragraph in relation to the assay office in St. Louis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote, then, will be on the remaining amendments.

The question was taken, and the remaining amendments were adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the first amendment on which a separate vote is asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under the head of "Civil Service Commission," page 20, strike out, in line 9, "one" and insert "two;" so as to read "two clerks of class 3."

In line 10 strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read "two clerks of class 2;" also strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read "two clerks at $1,000 each."

In line 16 strike out "4" and insert "5," so as to read, "For necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the commission, $5,000."

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 37, noes 60.

Mr. KEAN, Mr. TRACEY, and others. No quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. If the point of "no quorum" is insisted upon, I shall be compelled to move that the House adjourn, as I do not want to incommode members by a call of the House.

Several MEMBERS. That is right; let us vote in a full House.

Mr. RANDALL. I know there is no quorum present; and if the point is insisted upon——

Mr. TRACEY. I shall insist upon it.

Mr. RANDALL. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] insists upon the point, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. GROSVENOR. To what time does the gentleman propose to adjourn?

Mr. RANDALL. It has already been ordered, on motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], that when the House adjourns to-day it will adjourn until Thursday next, thus dispensing with a meeting of the House to-morrow, on account of Decoration Day.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Pending that, I desire to present a privileged report——

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WASHINGTON. I rise to correct the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point that under the order of the House extending to-day's session beyond 5 o'clock, no business other than the consideration of the appropriation bill can be transacted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, in accordance with its previous order, until Thursday next, at 11 o'clock a. m.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BACON: A bill (H. R. 10237) for the relief of James E. Kelsey and others—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURNES: A bill (H. R. 10238) granting a pansion to Edwin A. Stormes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARUTH: A bill (H. R. 10239) for the relief of J. Edwin Pilcher—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10240) for the relief of J. Edwin Pilcher—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10241) increasing the pension of Richard Porter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DORSEY: A bill (H. R. 10242) granting a pension to Benjamin Hewitt—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FINLEY: A bill (H. R. 10243) for the relief of Granville St. John—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GRANGER (by request): A bill (H. R. 10244) granting a pension to Mrs. Betsy Lockwood—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 10245) granting an increase of pension to Hannibal Kimball—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOSEPH: A bill (H. R. 10246) for the relief of Oscar M. Brown—to the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims.

By Mr. LANHAM: A bill (H. R. 10247) granting a pension to Andrew J. Nials—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE, of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 10248) for the relief of William Hughes and others—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10249) for the relief of R. L. Moore—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10250) for the relief of Arthur Smith—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10251) for the relief of Thomas Jones—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STONE, of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 10252) for the relief of Henry L. Mitchell—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 10253) granting a pension to Emmanuel P. Steed—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WADE: A bill (H. R. 10254) for the relief of W. C. Wadlow—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WICKHAM: A bill (H. R. 10255) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 10256) to place on the pension-roll the name of Lucy Wagor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10257) to place on the pension-roll the name of Lewis McLouth—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10258) to place on the pension-roll the name of Cyrus Millins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10259) to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah H. Plank—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10260) to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles A. Stockman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10261) to place on the pension-roll the name of Nathan P. Sherman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE, of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 10262) for the relief of Mrs. James Humply—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10263) for the relief of Henry J. K. Brosin—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McMILLIN: A bill (H. R. 10264) for the relief of Hester J. Mitchell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10265) for the relief of Dr. T. W. Fitts—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10266) for the relief of Jacob Wagoner—to the Committee on War Claims.

Changes in the reference of joint resolutions improperly referred were made in the following cases, namely:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 155) authorizing the erection of a statue to the late Maj. Gen. John A. Logan, etc.—from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on the Library.

Also, joint resolution (H. Res. 162) making appropriation for the erection of a statue in the city of Washington to the memory of Maj. Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock—from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on the Library.

Also, joint resolution (H. Res. 85) making appropriation for statues of Generals Shields and Logan—from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on the Library.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. S. BAKER: Petition of the Real Estate Exchange of Rochester, N. Y., and others, in favor of the bill to reduce the rate of letter-postage to 1 cent an ounce—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of the Board of Trade and Transportation of New York, in favor of the bill to reduce the rate of letter-postage to 1 cent an ounce—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BINGHAM: Paper in relation to the establishment of a Government system of telegraphy—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BOOTHMAN: Petition of Local Assembly No. 5853, and of 6825, Knights of Labor, of the Sixth district of Ohio, protesting against the granting of civil pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURROWS: Petition of J. Murray, of Mattawan, Mich., for relief—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: Petition of John Hauck and a large number of other brewers of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying that the duty on rice be reduced or abolished—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, papers in the claim of Oscar M. Brown—to the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims.

By Mr. CARUTH: Papers relating to the claim of Richard Porter, for increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COWLES: Petition of Mrs. A. L. Alexander, of North Carolina, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. A. C. DAVIDSON: Petition of Jesse H. Peoples, of James H. Lee, of George M. Campbell, of Joseph Blake, of John M. Leach, of James M. C. Bell, of William A. Kelley, of R. M. Martin, of Jasper N. Barnes, of Sarah J. Harrison, of William Wilson, of Robert Carlisle, of Benjamin Barnes, of Robert Willing, of Sarah A. English, of heirs of Henry Friday, and of Elizabeth Nell, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Philip S. Falford; of Thomas B. Pierce; of William Gill; of Aquilla M. Goodwin; of P. O. Grimes; of Reuben Price, and of John Shener, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GEST: Petition of the Business Men's Association, of Rock Island, Ill., for rebuilding of the Government dam at Rock Island arsenal—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HARE: Petition of B. F. Potter, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HAUGEN: Petition of Hannibal Kimball, for a pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HERBERT: Petition of Adeline M. Willis, of Butler County, Alabama, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McMILLIN: Petition of Polly Brown, for removal of charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAISH: Petition for an appropriation to improve Government reservation No. 101, in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. MORROW: Resolutions of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, against the free-ship bill—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. PHELAN: Petition of Thornton G. Ladd, of Tipton County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of officers of the revenue-marine service, for increased appropriations—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. SPRINGER: Petition of citizens of Nebraska, in favor of the Springer bill—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. STONE, of Missouri: Petition of W. E. Moore and others, in favor of a pension to W. J. McGlade—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAULBEE: Petition for the relief of John Kind—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition for the relief of members of Three Forks Battalion of Kentucky State militia—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. E. J. TURNER: Petition of H. Bearnes and others, of Mouument, Kans.

By Mr. WADE: Petition of John H. Roberson, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. W. L. WILSON: Petition of William H. Roberts, for reference of his war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of B. L. Leisenning, of Charlestown, W. Va., for relief—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of citizens of Jefferson County, West Virginia, in favor of pure food—to the Committee on Agriculture.

The following petitions in favor of House bill 9716, for the better protection of free labor from convict labor, were received and severally referred to the Committee on Labor:

By Mr. REED: Of Knights of Labor of Berwick, and of Yarmouthville, Me.

By Mr. PATTON: Of Daniel Lemon and 19 others, workingmen of the Twentieth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. J. D. TAYLOR: Of Knights of Labor of Bellaire, Ohio.

By Mr. YARDLEY: Of Knights of Labor of Pottstown, Pa.

The following petition for the repeal or modification of the internal-revenue tax of $25 levied on druggists was received and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. SOWDEN: Petition of J. S. Lawall and others, citizens of the Tenth district of Pennsylvania.

The following petition for the proper protection of the Yellowstone National Park, as proposed in Senate bill 283, was received and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

By Mr. SOWDEN: Of L. W. Mazril and others, citizens of the Tenth district of Pennsylvania.

The following petitions for the more effectual protection of agriculture, by means of certain import duties, were received and severally referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. BOOTHMAN: Of Defiance County (Ohio) Pomona Grange.

By Mr. BUNNELL: Of farmers of Wayne County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. GOFF: Of David Garrison and others, and of Samuel L. Howell and others, of West Virginia.

By Mr. GROUT: Of Stephen Hovey and 35 others, of Grand Isle, Vt.

The following petition, indorsing the per diem rated service-pension bill, based on the principle of paying all soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war a monthly pension of 1 cent a day for each day they were in the service, was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: Of William Moore and others, residents of Marion County, Illinois.

The following petitions, praying for the enactment of a law providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy, were severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. BUNNELL: Of 161 citizens of Wayne County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. BURNES: Of 83 citizens of Buchanan and Nodoway Counties, Missouri.

By Mr. DE LANO: Of 30 citizens of Chenango County, New York.

By Mr. GOFF: Of 135 citizens of Brooke County, West Virginia.

By Mr. E. J. TURNER: Of 142 citizens of Ellsworth County, and of 207 citizens of Jewell County, Kansas.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 31, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by the Cadmus Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Cadmus, Linn County, Kansas, in favor of the passage of the bill making United States Senators elective by a direct vote of the people; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BUTLER. I present a communication from the governor of South Carolina, also from the superintendent of the penitentiary of that State, transmitting a protest against the passage of the bill in regard to the employment of convict labor. I move that the communication and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, presented the petition of N. S. McKenty and 50 other male citizens of Lonaconing, Alleghany County, Maryland, praying for the better protection of womanhood and girlhood, and that the age of consent be raised to eighteen years; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of the Board of Trade of the city of Pendleton, Oregon, praying for the early completion of the work of the allotment of the lands and sale of the remainder of the Umatilla reservation in the State of Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a petition of members of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Oregon, praying that an appropriation of $200,000 be made for the erection of headstones over the graves of Union soldiers and sailors; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the Portland (Me.) Clinical Society, praying for the removal of the import duty upon all medicines, medical and surgical appliances, and from articles used in the treatment and diagnosis of disease; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of the executive board of the National Farmers' Alliance, representing organized bodies of farmers in the United States comprising 1,400,000 members, praying for the passage of a bill establishing a department of agriculture with a Cabinet minister at its head; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave to present a large number of petitions which I have had placed on my desk. They are from Congressional districts in all parts of the country in large numbers, aggregating 7,755, more or less, names of adults, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia. I do not know that it is any use to present them, for it seems to me the more the people petition for the less they get; but I present another bushel, which I move be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage of the bill for the better observance of Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BERRY presented a petition of citizens of Arkansas, praying that an appropriation of $25,000 be made for the improvement of the channel of White River, in Arkansas, from Buffalo Shoals to Elbow Shoals, in that river; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of Nicholas Martin, of New York, praying for the passage of a law extending the time of filing claims for arrears of pension beyond July 1, 1880, so that worthy claimants may secure arrears; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of W. L. Whipple and 17 other citizens of the United States residing at Teheran, the capital of Persia, praying that the diplomatic mission of the United States at Teheran be raised in grade from that of minister resident to envoy extraordinary, and that Mr. Spencer Pratt be promoted to that rank; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Maritime Association of the port of New York, remonstrating against any reduction in the duty on sugar as proposed by the so-called Mills tariff bill unless a proportionate reduction is made upon molasses; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALDRICH presented the petition of Rev. J. H. Carr and 40 other citizens of Greene, R. I., praying for the passage of the Platt bill to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. VEST presented a memorial of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, Mo., protesting against the passage of the bill for the establishment of a bureau of harbors and water ways by Congress, and suggesting that the officers educated by the Government are the ones who should be especially charged with the improvement of rivers and harbors under appropriations made by Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Medical Association of the State of Missouri, favoring the control and direction by Federal authority of external quarantine measures; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TELLER. The Committee on Mines and Mining have had under consideration the bill (S. 1030) to submit to the Court of Claims, for adjudication, the title of William McGarrahan to the mineral interests of the rancho Panoche Grande tract of land, in the State of California, and for other purposes, and have directed me to report a substitute for the bill, with a written report. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] desires to submit the views of the minority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. FAULKNER. On behalf of the minority of the Committee on Mines and Mining, I submit an amendment to Senate bill 1030, which has just been reported by the majority of that committee, and I also submit the views of the minority to accompany the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority will be received and printed with the report.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2250) for the relief of Lewis G. La Tour, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2869) for the relief of William Welsh, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2266) to accept and ratify an agreement made with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians, for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of a portion of the Fort Hall reservation, in the Territory of Idaho, for the purposes of a town site, and for the grant of a right of way through said reservation to the Utah and Northern Railway Company, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2992) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Shoshones, Bannocks, and Sheepeaters of the Fort Hall and Lemhi reservations, in Idaho, May 14, 1880, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2582) for the relief of Elkanah Huddleston, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of W. J. Moberly, late a first lieutenant in the Fourth United States Cavalry, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by the following resolution:

Be it resolved, That the claim of W. J. Moberly, late first lieutenant Fourth United States Cavalry, for $776.95, alleged to have been erroneously withheld from his salary as lieutenant aforesaid, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment under the various provisions of law for such cases made and provided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Territories, to whom were referred the bill (S. 2821) relieving municipalities in the Territories in certain cases, and the bill (S. 2113) relieving municipalities in the Territories in certain cases, reported adversely thereon; and the bills were postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 3058) relieving municipalities in the Territories in certain cases; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 882) to correct the muster of and for the relief of George W. Davenport, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1284) for the relief of Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1426) supplementary to the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," and also of the act of July 2, 1864, and other acts amendatory of said first-named act, reported it with amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2384) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Loren W. Hastings, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 956) for the relief of the heirs of Christopher Cott, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. On the bill (S. 1284) for the relief of Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has heretofore submitted a report which embodies the views of the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs. I now submit a report on behalf of the minority of the committee, and I ask that the majority and minority reports be printed together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority will be received and printed in connection with the report of the committee previously filed in the case.

Mr. BROWN. The Committee on Foreign Relations instructs me to report back unfavorably the bill (S. 1953) to provide for the payment of the passage of General de Lafayette and family from France to the United States in 1824, as the "guest of the nation," etc. I will ask, however, that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3059) granting a pension to Rachel Dixon, mother of James Dixon, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 3060) providing a pension for Matilda C. King; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3061) for the relief of Emma McCallum; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3062) for the relief of Mary Ann Hough; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3063) for the relief of Levinia Robinson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 3064) for the relief of the heirs at law of H. M. Woodyard, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 3065) to incorporate the Underground Cable and Conduit Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. REAGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the "Bowman act;" which, with the certificate of the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court May 31, 1887, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the "Bowman act;" which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SHENANDOAH RIVER IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. FAULKNER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to inform the Senate why he has failed to use the appropriation of $15,000, made by the act approved June 30, 1880, and the sum of $2,500 appropriated by the act approved March 3, 1881, for the improvement of the Shenandoah River in Virginia and West Virginia.

IMPORTATION OF SILVER-LEAD ORES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further resolutions, concurrent or other, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. MITCHELL May 29, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate whatever silver-lead ores are being imported from any foreign country into the United States, and to what extent, and whether any duty is under the rulings of the Department collectible under existing law on the lead so imported in such ores, and to what amount; and whether any duty is being collected on any such silver-lead ores so imported into the United States, and if so, whether such importations are by the Department held and subjected to the duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem to which mineral substances in a crude state are subjected under existing law.

Mr. MITCHELL. My attention has been called to a resolution substantially similar, which was submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] some days ago calling for information, and I find that the information I desire is contained pretty fully in Executive Document No. 171. I therefore ask unanimous consent to withdraw the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

ROCK CREEK RAILWAY.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2017) to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, and agree to the same.

That the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and the Senate recede from the same.

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
C. B. FARWELL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.
JNO. T. HEARD,
J. H. ROWELL,
BARNES COMPTON,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6899) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "personal" before "taxes," in line 18, page 2; so as to read:

"And said company shall pay to the District of Columbia in lieu of taxes upon personal property, including cars and motive-power, each year 4 per cent. of its gross earnings," etc.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Amend section 8 so that it read:

"That the main line of said railway shall be commenced within three months and completed within twelve months from the passage of this act, and the branches of the same shall be completed within two years from the time First and Fourth streets and New York avenue shall be, respectively, graded; and if the said work on the main line shall not be so commenced and completed, then the privileges and powers herein granted shall be void."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 15, 16, 17, and 18, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the words, "sell the same" in the Senate amendment, insert "after five days' notice;" so that it will read:

"SEC. 12. That all articles of value that may be inadvertently left in any of the cars or other vehicles of the said company shall be taken to its principal depot and entered in a book of record of unclaimed goods, which book shall be open to the inspection of the public, and if said property remain unclaimed for one year the company shall sell the same after five days' notice.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28, and agree to the same.

That the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 29 and 30, and the Senate recede from the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same.

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
C. B. FARWELL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.
JNO. J. HEMPHILL,
M. S. BREWER,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report.

Mr. VEST. I could not distinctly hear the action of the conferees with regard to the rate of taxation.

Mr. HARRIS. It is 4 per cent. upon the gross earnings.

Mr. VEST. Was that the provision in the bill as passed by the Senate?

Mr. HARRIS. That is the provision in all the bills we have passed at this session. The Senator will remember that when a former bill was under consideration that question was discussed at some length.

Mr. VEST. I recollect that.

Mr. HARRIS. The statement was then made that the District Committee was investigating the whole question of taxation upon street railroads, and that when it had arrived at a conclusion it would report a bill dealing with that general subject and settling it in respect to all the street railroads in the District.

Mr. VEST. This fixes a rate of 4 per cent. upon the gross earnings?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, and that will be the rate until the general bill shall have been presented and passed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the Senator from Tennessee if this is a unanimous report?

Mr. HARRIS. Absolutely so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to call up a joint resolution concerning the public building at Denver, which has the approval of the Treasury Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, it is the duty of the Chair, under the previous order of the Senate, to lay before the Senate the bill (S. 287) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes. Does the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield. It will take only a moment to pass the joint resolution. It comes from the Treasury Department, and relates to a public building. It takes no money out of the Treasury.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will yield if it takes no time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 79) permitting the public building authorized by act of Congress approved May 8, 1882, at Denver, Colo., to be located not less than 16 feet from any other building, instead of 40 feet, as provided in said act.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUYALLUP RESERVATION.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. For what purpose?

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator to yield that I may call up a bill that will take no longer time than the reading of it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I should like to give way, but I have been appealed to by so many Senators that if I continue yielding we shall have the afternoon consumed and have made no progress with the Des Moines River lands bill. I hope the Senator will excuse me. I am in hopes that we shall be able to conclude the consideration of the bill within a reasonable time.

Mr. DAWES. I have no right to ask the Senator to yield, but it would be a great accommodation to me for various reasons which I can not very well state.

Mr. MITCHELL. I join in the appeal. I hope the Senator from Iowa will allow the bill to be taken up. It is a local matter concerning the West. There will be no opposition, I judge.

Mr. DAWES. It is not on my own account that I ask the Senator to yield.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. How long a time will it take?

Mr. DAWES. As long as it will take to read a railroad bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will yield.

Mr. DAWES. I am very much obliged to the Senator. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider the bill (S. 2807) to grant to the Puyallup Valley Railway Company a right of way through the Puyallup Indian reservation in Washington Territory.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I submitted as intended to be proposed as a substitute to the whole bill may be read instead of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Puyallup Valley Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the Territory of Washington, be, and the same is hereby, invested and empowered with the right of locating, constructing, owning, equipping, operating, using, and maintaining a railway, telegraph, and telephone lines through the Puyallup Indian reservation, or such parts thereof as may be hereinafter designated in this act, said line to begin on the northwestern boundary of the said Indian reservation, near the city of Tacoma, running thence by the most practicable route through said reservation to the southeastern boundary thereof; thence to the town of Sumner, in said Territory of Washington, with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, sidings, and extensions hereinafter mentioned as such company may deem necessary and to their interest to construct along, upon, and in connection with the right of way hereby granted. Before work is begun the definite line and location of said railway is to be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That a right of way 66 feet in width through said Indian reservation, or the designated parts thereof, is hereby granted to the Puyallup Valley Railway Company, and a strip of land 133 feet in width, with a length of 2,000 feet, in addition to the right of way, is granted for such stations, sidings, or junctions as may be established by said railway company for the proper and convenient operating of said railroad, with the right to use such additional ground, where there are heavy cuts or fills, as may be necessary for the proper construction and maintenance of the road-bed; but ground taken or used for such purposes shall not exceed 50 feet in width on each side the right of way, or only as much thereof as may be included in such cuts and fills: Provided, That no part or parts of land included in these grants shall be used for any other purposes than shall be necessary for the construction, maintenance, and convenient operation of said railroad, telegraph, and telephone lines: Provided further, That the consent of the Indians to said right of way upon the said Puyallup Indian reservation shall be obtained in such manner as the President of the United States may prescribe, before any right under this act shall accrue to said company: And provided further, That the location, construction, and operation of said road through said reservation shall be subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide.

SEC. 3. That before said railway shall be constructed through any land, claim, or improvement held by individual occupants, according to any treaties or laws of the United States, compensation shall be made such occupant or claimant for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of said railway. In case of failure to make satisfactory settlement with any such claimant, the just compensation shall be determined as provided for by the laws of Washington Territory, enacted for the settlement of like controversies in such cases. The amount of damages resulting to the Puyallup tribe of Indians in their tribal capacity by reason of the construction of said railway through such lands of the reservation as are not occupied in severalty, shall be ascertained and determined in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, and to be subject to his final approval: Provided further, That no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroads, and including the points for station buildings, depots, yards, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water-stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which approval shall be made in writing, and be open for the inspection of any party interested therein, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid: Provided, That the amount of compensation which may ultimately be awarded or adjudged against said railway company in respect of such last-mentioned lands shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior, to be by him expended on behalf of the tribe, for the benefit of their schools, or in such other manner as he shall deem best.

SEC. 4. That the maximum rate charged by the said railway company for the transportation of freight and passengers within the limits of the Indian reservation shall not exceed the rate charged for the same services in kind in the Territory of Washington; and Congress hereby reserves the right to regulate the charges for the freight and passengers on said railroad, and messages on said telegraph and telephone lines, until a State government or governments shall exist in the said Territory within the limits of which said railway, or a part thereof, shall be located: Provided, That the said railway company shall carry the United States mail at such price as Congress may by law provide, and until such rate is fixed by law the Postmaster-General may fix the rate of compensation: And provided further, That the passenger rates of fare shall not exceed 3 cents per mile where the distance is greater than 5 miles.

SEC. 5. That said company shall, as soon as the definite route and line of said railroad is located through said reservation, cause a map to be made showing such line and location, a copy of which shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and a copy shall also be filed in the office of the principal chief or governor of said tribe through which said road may have been located; and after the filing of said map of location no claim for subsequent settlement and improvement upon the right of way or additional grounds for depots, stations, sidings, or switches shall be valid as against said railroad company.

SEC. 6. That the officers, employés, and servants of said company necessary for the construction, operation, and management of said road, telegraph, and telephone lines shall be allowed to reside, while so engaged, upon the said right of way, but at the same time be subject to the provisions of the Indian intercourse laws and such rules and regulations as may be established by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance therewith.

SEC. 7. That the United States courts for the second judicial district of Washington Territory, and such other courts as may be authorized by Congress, shall have concurrent jurisdiction, without reference to the amount in controversy, over all cases arising between said railroad company and the tribe, as such, or individual members thereof, through whose territory said railway may be constructed; and the civil jurisdiction of said courts is extended within the limits of the said Puyallup Indian reservation, without distinction as to citizenship of parties interested, so far as it may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and give effect to all its enactments.

SEC. 8. That said railway company shall construct and maintain continually all fences, road and highway crossings, and necessary bridges over said railway wherever such roads and highways do now or shall hereafter cross said right of way or may by proper authority be laid out across the same.

SEC. 9. That all mortgages or conveyances executed and operating on any portion of this railway that may be constructed in the said Puyallup Indian reservation shall be recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the record thereof shall be evidence and notice of the execution of the same, and shall convey all rights of property of said railroad company therein expressed. That said company shall not sell, assign, transfer, or mortgage this right of way for any purpose whatever until said road shall be completed: Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise, together with the rolling-stock, for money to construct and complete said road: And provided further, That the right granted herein shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order within two years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 10. That Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAM-RAILROADS IN THE DISTRICT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 287 will be read as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the courtesy of the Senator from Iowa to yield that I may make a request of the Senate for unanimous consent with reference to an order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield for that purpose?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If it will not take any time; but I hope that afterwards I shall not be asked to yield any more, for we are consuming the afternoon.

Mr. FAULKNER. On the 15th of May the Senate fixed as a special order Senate bill 2919 to be considered on the 29th of May in connection with Senate bill 2615. With the concurrence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL] who has charge of Senate bill 2515, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who anticipates speaking upon the questions involved in these bills, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to fix as a special order for Tuesday, the 26th of June, both Senate bill 2919 and Senate bill 2615.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the special order of assignment of Senate bill 2919 and Senate bill 2615 for the 29th instant may be changed to the 26th of June, and that the bills be made a special order for that day at 2 o'clock.

Mr. DAWES. What are the bills?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The titles of the bills will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2615) to authorize the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to acquire and use real estate for railway purposes in the District of Columbia; and a bill (S. 2919) to define the route of steam-railroads in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the notice being given, and that is all that is necessary. But to make the bills a special order might be an embarrassment to other business and would give no advantage. I can assure the Senator from West Virginia that a special order under the circumstances at so remote a period would give no advantage, but it might be an embarrassment to other business. If the Senator simply gives notice that at that time he will move to take up the bills, that will be sufficient. I should not like to have one of the bills made a special order, because as it stands I am very much opposed to it, and I do not like to consent to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 2919, the Chair will inform the Senator from Ohio, has already been assigned as a special order. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend it from the 29th of May to the 26th of June.

Mr. HARRIS. It remaining of course a special order, but simply postponed till that day.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is simply a motion to postpone, I have no objection; but I thought it had been postponed.

Mr. FAULKNER. No, it has not been postponed; and the order would come now following the special order already made. I simply want to postpone it now to a fixed day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the change of the special order from the 29th of May to the 26th of June?

Mr. MORRILL. While I am ready to proceed with the discussion this morning, I shall make no objection to the proposition presented by the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the order of assignment is postponed until the 26th of June.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8560) to establish a Department of Labor.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8560) to establish a department of labor, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House agree to the amendments of the Senate to said bill.

H. W. BLAIR,
JAMES F. WILSON,
J. Z. GEORGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN J. O'NEILL,
JAMES BUCHANAN,
CARLOS FRENCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 287 will now be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 287) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 2, line 2, after the word "Attorney-General," to insert "as soon as practicable, and;" so as to read:

That it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General, as soon as practicable, and within three years after the passage of this act, to institute, or cause to be instituted, such suit or suits, either in law or equity, or both, as may be necessary and proper to assert and protect the title of the United States to said lands and remove all clouds from its title thereto; and until such suits shall be determined, and Congress shall so provide, no part of said lands shall be open for settlement or sale except as hereinbefore provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President——

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator will allow me a moment. As the Senator from Iowa has announced that he does not propose to occupy very much time in the discussion as it now appears to him, I would ask him whether he would not allow Senate bill 1469, that is now on the Calendar, and which was introduced by me, to be read for information, as I shall desire it shall be done before I commence my argument.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suppose it will not take any more time now than it will hereafter; so it may be read.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask that it may be read now, at the commencement of the argument on both sides.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Very well.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask, with the assent of the Senator from Iowa, that Senate bill 1469 may be read for information, as it enters into the discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read, if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 1469) for the relief of the settlers upon the lands along the Des Moines River, above the Raccoon Forks, in the State of Iowa, as follows:

Whereas in consequence of the indefiniteness of phraseology employed in an act granting certain lands to the Territory of Iowa in aid of the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River in said Territory, approved August 8, 1846, the Departments of the Government at different periods adopted different constructions of said act as to the extent of said grant, and in consequence of its doubtful meaning withdrew the lands which might be involved from settlement and entry; and

Whereas there resulted from said indefiniteness of language and the different constructions thereof and subsequent legislation of Congress in relation thereto a long and bitterly-contested litigation in the State and Federal courts as to the true meaning and effect of said act and subsequent legislation in connection with the various constructions thereof by the governmental Departments, between the grantees of the State of Iowa, claiming under said act of 1846 and the subsequent legislation, and settlers upon said lands, who asserted rights under the general laws of the United States providing for pre-emption and private entry of public lands; and

Whereas by a series of decisions in the Supreme Court of the United States running over a period of about twenty-eight years, and involving not less than twelve well-considered decisions, said litigation has been definitely determined in favor of the validity of the title of those claiming under the deed from the State of Iowa under said acts of Congress, and said court has expressly held that said title has passed from the United States and is now vested in said persons claiming under the State of Iowa, and that the said settlers never acquired any right, interest, or title in or to any of said lands; and

Whereas the settlers upon said lands, whose claims have been denied and held invalid in this litigation, are thus deprived of homes and tracts of land, with the improvements thereon and the accumulated values thereof, which they were induced to enter, occupy, and improve under what seemed the plain provision of the statute, fortified by the repeated and solemn decisions of the Departments, and are thus become the victims of inadequate and misleading legislation and administration, involving in many instances the results of the life-long toil and labor of those affected: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States will indemnify and pay to the settlers, or their heirs and legal representatives, who in good faith entered upon, for the purpose of purchasing, pre-empting, or securing homesteads upon any lands lying along the river Des Moines, in the State of Iowa, above and north of the Raccoon Forks, which were listed and certified to the State of Iowa under an act approved August 8, 1846, entitled "An act granting certain lands to the Territory of Iowa in aid of the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River in said Territory," and which said lands were afterwards, namely, on the 18th of May, 1858, sold and conveyed to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company by an indenture of that date, signed by Ralph P. Low, governor, and attested by Elijah Sells, secretary of state, by John Davis, his deputy; and that the indemnity and compensation shall embrace:

First. Any and all moneys paid by said settlers to the Government for certificates of entry or patents, or both, including fees paid to the officers of the land offices in relation to the same.

Second. All reasonable sums paid by said settlers to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, or to its grantees, to purchase in the outstanding title and secure lands upon which they had settled or located, or which they had entered.

Third. Any direct and immediate damages or losses sustained by any of said settlers who have been unable to buy in said outstanding title, and have in consequence been dispossessed and lost their possession and improvements.

Fourth. Any other damages, losses, or injury sustained by said settlers, which, upon just and equitable consideration, ought to be the subject of indemnity.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not extend to any settlement upon or entry of any of said lands made after January 1, 1880.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of enabling the Government to extend such indemnity and make compensation, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint three commissioners, who shall ascertain the number of acres and, by appraisement or otherwise, the value thereof, exclusive of improvements; the separate value and character of the improvements of all such lands lying north of Raccoon Forks, on the Des Moines River, in the State of Iowa, and embraced in the aforesaid deed of May 18, 1858, from the State of Iowa to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company; also what person or persons, as enterers or homestead pre-empters of any of said lands, have been evicted or dispossessed thereof, and have been compelled to purchase in the outstanding title, and the amount so paid; also who have been unable or unwilling to purchase in said title, and the extent and nature of the improvements lost, and any other data touching the rights of said parties which, in the judgment of the commissioners, should be considered in determining the measure and extent of indemnity. Said commissioners shall have regard to a report of a commission appointed under an act approved March 3, 1873, chapter 306, Statutes at Large, volume 17; and they shall report all the facts at the commencement of the next session of Congress.

SEC. 4. That said commissioners shall receive each $8 per day during the time they shall be actually engaged in said service.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate has been passed by this body three several times. It has been several times reported favorably from the Committee on Public Lands; it has been discussed exhaustively in this body, and, so far as I am concerned, I should be quite willing now to submit it to a vote of the Senate without further discussion. I am not disposed to weary the Senate by prolonged remarks, nor will I in any event trouble the Senate with prolonged remarks, nor will I inflict any at the present time. I shall wait to hear what may be said in opposition, and then in the briefest time possible present such opposing views as may occur to me proper at the time.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I am glad to see the Senate tolerably full for the consideration of this bill, for I would go further than the Senator from Iowa in saying that if the Senate will read this bill that is now under consideration and read the bill that I have proposed to settle these difficulties in an opposite and more beneficial mode, with a knowledge of what has been the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States through an unbroken series of decisions for now many years, and its last conclusive judgment upon the points at issue, so late as a judgment in May, 1887, since the last debate and the last votes in Congress, I would be ready that the Senators should vote upon their own scrutiny and their own judgment of the nature and the character and the operation and the consequences of such legislation as this.

If there is to be debate that is to engage the attention of the Senate, we were entitled on the part of the learned Senator who presents this proposition to some justification for it. I am told that it rests so plainly upon its own intelligence, its own integrity, its own legality, and its own statesmanship, that, until something can be said against it, it is not necessary to support it. Now, what is there against it that on its face it shall thus be adopted by the Senate without any elucidation or any suggestion of argument or reason to sustain it? It has against it the Supreme Court of the United States in a series of decisions involving scrutiny and examination on every point in dispute that is brought up between these settlers in their opposing rights, and, as I say, in a judgment given in May, 1887, to which I shall call the attention of the Senate. After our votes, after our debates, there comes this judgment, and I appeal to every lawyer in the Senate to say that the same judgment must be given by that court after the passage of this act in any litigation that it may stimulate and encourage.

Besides that, we had originally, when the present Attorney-General was a member of the Senate and was on the Judiciary Committee, a report from the Judiciary Committee as to which, so far as my information goes, there was no dissent, and the point was there distinctly suggested and the determination explained.

The Senate Judiciary Committee of the Forty-sixth Congress reported adversely to the same bill as this, saying:

The more recent decisions (Wolsey vs. Chapman, 101 U. S. R., 755, and Litchfield vs. County of Webber, ib., 773) approve the earlier cases on this subject already cited, and from them all it is clearly to be gathered that this matter has passed beyond the reach of Congress, and whatever rights the settlers seek to show or may wish to establish, they are not within any remedial legislation of Congress; they can not be affected by any act of Congress; in fact, it is a subject over which Congress has no jurisdiction.

In the session of the Senate in 1886 this same bill was passed, and the President, under a message communicating his disapproval of the bill, stated the legal and constitutional reasons why he could not give his approval to the bill. The Senate passed the bill over the veto, and it was lost in the other House, which gave heed to the observation of legal and constitutional objections to the bill. Now it is introduced here again.

Mr. President, it would be one thing to pass this bill by Congress if this bill could terminate the controversy, for there must be some end of litigation, and if it could not be reached by a summary and unjust determination, it might be argued—though I never should tolerate it for any support of mine—that there must be a determination.

On the contrary, this bill now proposed under the title given to it as "to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa" is to breed and encourage and revive litigation. The kind operation of time has alleviated and mitigated and produced settlements and compromises and adjustments. Who does not know that whatever may be the individual rights and wrongs, grievances or injustices, the prolongation of litigation is to the prejudice of the whole neighborhood and of the State and of the credit and the justice of the Government? What good is it, that when there are two alternative modes by which there shall be a settlement—one through the law and the courts that must obey the law—the courts after all should not be suffered to adjust it? If the Government is to intervene, it should be not to prostrate the courts and the law and the rights that have grown up, but it should itself come to the succor of the suffering settlers who have been thrown, if you please, into disorder and into defeat and into controversy by its course of action.

When common owners of land give inconsistent titles to different grantees of the same land, the grantor must relieve the injured parties that have suffered from a double grant. And now when the United States is the common grantor through its inconsistent legislation, if it be, is asked to supervise and settle the conflicts, what is the remedy that this bill proposes? It proposes to give litigants a footing by this act that the law of the land does not give them. It proposes to break down the rights of the owners in possession under the grant that is to be brought in question; and they are to be brought into a new litigation with a champertous litigant, that champertous litigant being the United States of America. What becomes of that beneficent doctrine adopted in the country where possession and right were ever in conflict? That right was to be pursued at any length? No, but the benign doctrine of adverse possession applies, which we in the Eastern States have now reduced to twenty years; and in the State of Iowa, as I am informed, in common with the policy of all the new States, the doctrine adopted as to the rule of adverse possession in Iowa is ten years. Then title was given by the United States to the settlers in 1862 after this dispute as to what was the meaning of the earlier grant of 1846. What becomes, under this bill, as I shall unfold it to the Senate, of the doctrine of adverse possession which is good in Iowa after ten years even without the basis of a title? And now there is to come along a litigant against whom adverse possession does not run and this lapse of time is not to prevail.

But besides, this bill, from one end to the other of it, is a mode, a contrivance, not only to give a new litigant, the United States, land which it has not nor by this bill proposes to get an inch of for itself, but to lay down for the courts of justice a rule of law between competing claimants to real estate that would be intolerable between private litigants under any possible circumstances.

Besides the benign rule of adverse possession to quiet title, what is greater and what more for the liberty and security of the subjects than the great rule of English real estate that a plaintiff must succeed by his own title and not by the defects of his adversaries? How benign, how useful that fundamental law! Powerful phrases! You can not secure land by picking flaws in the terre-tenant's title.

Now let me ask your attention to the bill. How does the United States, that has parted with every inch of this property, come into this settlement or quieting of titles? Under the pretension that now, today, it adds this land to the public domain. How else could it undertake to do it? If it did it to rob indiscriminately in pursuance of some policy of adding it to the public domain we might appreciate a general proposition which some one or other might think it was wise and just and honorable to adopt; but the bill only adds this land or any portion of it to the public domain in order that it may have a legal footing, as it is said, to dispute on the one side of these litigants and against the other, the bill not really proposing to give one inch of this property to the public domain. Is that a straightforward proposition? Is that creditable to a great government? Let me read:

That all the lands improperly certified to Iowa by the Department of the Interior, under the act of August 8, 1846, as referred to in the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, for which indemnity lands were selected and received by the State of Iowa, as provided in the act of 1862, are, and are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States.

Whose house is safe anywhere if he can trace a title to the United States as a part of the public domain, as to which a law may not be passed to add that property to the public domain? It parted from the mass of the public domain by the grant, by the deed, by the statute of the United States; and now it coolly proposes to recur to that grant, having its root in the act of 1846, and culminating in two formal statutes settling all contravening claims in 1861 and 1862, and to add it by this fiat to the public domain. Unless you can do that, and unless you ought to do that, you can not receive the benefit of what are called the remedial processes of quieting title.

Supposing it stopped there and the land was to be ours, how would that stand before the Supreme Court of the United States? Let the United States get into possession before they undertake to distribute the land of which in every inch they are out of possession, and bound by the principles of the common law to protect the integrity of title, instead of which it is made a title pronounced, not vendible, but a champertous title. Am I wrong in saying that if the legislation stopped there, it would, against the decision or future action of the courts, be perfectly idle, though a very discreditable act? It does not propose that the United States shall really get an inch of this land. What does it propose to do?

Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified and confirmed and made valid.

Well, that subject has been in litigation through the courts on all these questions of conflict between pre-emption or homestead claimants that claim a better title than the possession under the laws of the United States and the grant it made. Those of these grantees that have no adverse claims are ratified; so the United States does not take them into the public domain. It proceeds further:

Provided further, That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said land prior to January, 1880, not exceeding 160 acres—

Any pre-emption or homestead settler that in 1879 proclaimed that nte nt and that purpose is to override the intervening possession and occupation of the land from 1862 down to 1879—are hereby confirmed and made valid in them, their heirs or their proper assigns, and upon due proof thereof, and payment of the usual price or fees, where the same has not been paid, shall be carried to patent.

In other words, as to this portion of land added to the public domain, there is to issue forth a new patent of the age and of the date that the transaction shall be completed; and now—

Provided further, That the title of all bona fide claimants under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain the title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, settled upon the said lands prior to January, 1880, are confirmed and made valid.

What is the circuity, not very rounded; what is the legal, the governmental conception that is proposed now for the action of the Senate? First, that all the lands which were described and separated from the public domain in 1846, and that have passed through these stages of approval and confirmation, shall now be added to the public domain, and thereupon it being at the disposition of the United States as res nova (for unless it be as res nova it has no power), it proceeds to say that these grantees under the laws of the United States of such ancient date, and of the State of Iowa under such ancient grant, if nobody questions their title for pre-emption or for homestead settlement intervening and overreaching—that is, overreaching if it was the property of the United States, but otherwise not—they shall be confirmed. But the rule is laid down for the Supreme Court of the United States, not what by law, what by action had ripened at any intervening day as a homestead settler's claim or a pre-emption claim shall be protected, but on the principle of its being now res nova for the United States with regard to homestead settlers and pre-emptioners for this particular block or region of land.

That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said land prior to January, 1880, not exceeding 160 acres, are hereby confirmed and made valid in them, their heirs or their proper assigns.

Nothing else but that they should have entered in good faith without any reference to the question whether the status of the ripening of title had been completed or not.

Now, further, as a doucour, I suppose, to these actual settlers and occupants that have been ousted by the propositions of law—

That the title of all bona fide claimants under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, settled upon the said lands prior to January, 1880, are confirmed and made valid.

It is plain, then, that the basis of the validity of these provisions rests upon the proposition whether now this Government can add this land to the public domain. If it can add it, it can keep it. The question what it does with it does not touch the question whether it can do it, nor does it touch the question whether it should do it. No depredation upon the rights of others can be excused because the spoils are to be appropriated to a pious purpose.

My proposition is that it is utterly powerless for this Government to add this land to the public domain, and the Supreme Court will decide so just as much after the passage of the bill, and after the settlers have been deluded and kept going with litigation for some more years of anxiety, solicitude, and distress.

But what less injurious use could be made by the United States of land thus acquired than to apportion it contrary to the rules of law and of title that govern the land? How is this operation to be set agoing? If you stop with the section which I have read, the first section, then these litigants would have to commence their suits and try them as they have been doing, gaining or losing; but they have to proceed upon the ordinary rules that a claimant of property must show a title and must bear the burdens of his litigation of success or failure. What, then, do we say here to meet that disturbance of right between man and man under the laws of this land governing the title of real property?

SEC. 2. That it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General—

Is the Attorney-General at the suit of private litigants, is he to be at the suit of the United States when not an inch of land to be recovered is to belong to the Government?—

to institute, or cause to be instituted, such suit or suits, either in law or equity, or both, as may be necessary and proper to assert and protect the title of the United States to said lands and remove all clouds from its title thereto.

Then you are right back to the first clause that he is to stand upon the United States title to said land by virtue of this act of legislation, to add it to the public domain, "and remove all clouds" from the United States title, among them being the cloud of the statute of 1861 and the statute of 1862. An interesting occupation for an Attorney-General of the United States to go into the courts of the United States and say, "I, in the name of the United States, take these lands of all these numerous occupants and settlers and add them to the public domain of the United States, so as to remove anything that formed a cloud upon this title during this long interval between our grant and occupation of the lands;" or as I have said, if you can not take every inch from all you can not take any, and the use that you are going to make of it does not alter the legal proposition for the Government that after your Attorney-General has removed all cloud from the United States title in these lands then the United States is to give a new title of that date as of a new established right.

Let those who support this legislation see if they can take it out of these troubles which I deplore. They are dealing with a proposition which takes land that has been parted with forty years ago, at least so far as to have been the subject of honest claim, of honest occupation, of honest transactions on the part of the State of Iowa with those who undertook to improve its water ways, and in order to terminate any imperfect agitation of the title at an early day, in 1861, and again in 1862, we settled the whole matter of title.

Let us see what further:

And until such suits shall be determined, and Congress shall so provide, no part of said lands shall be open for settlement or sale except as hereinbefore provided.

That is, without a settlement by the courts of the validity of this act or confirmation by the courts of the title of the United States in these parcels of land, the defendant, as he would be called in an ejectment suit, is no longer to have dominion over this land.

And in any suits so instituted any person or persons in possession of or claiming title to any tract or tracts of land under the United States involved in such suits may, at his or their expense, unite with the United States in the prosecution of such suits.

It may be a qui tam action, but I do not think we can have co-plaintiffs of the United States and of individuals.

Mr. President, such legislation as this is not to be reproached for wicked or perverse motives, but it is a desperate effort to accomplish a disentanglement, which disentanglement, if it is chargeable anywhere, is chargeable to this Government and this Government alone; and if there have been diverse pretensions as to what the true meaning and operation of the acts of Congress has been, so that an appeal has been necessary to the courts of justice, the courts have decided upon rules of law in favor of one as against the other, not upon general propositions, but upon the very action of A B against C D about the locus in quo, where all the reasons that should make a good defense and all the reasons that make a decree in favor of a plaintiff have been settled. After all this the lord paramount is now to come in, dispossess the tenant, and resume the land in point of law; and these alleged settlers are to take now de novo from the lord paramount such grants as he sees fit to make. If you pass such a law as this, who can complain that rights are insecure, that courts are untrustworthy, and the honor of the Government and the serene majesty of the Supreme Court of the United States is whistled down the wind in the Senate of the United States without undertaking to deliberate and inquire whether it will commit itself to any such scheme?

I do not know what my friend, the Senator from Iowa, who now supports this bill on the floor, a good lawyer, a good real-estate lawyer, and who knows the laws and the rules of the property titles there, can say to this. I ask, then, what becomes of the benign law in Iowa by which an adverse possession is, as I have said, reduced to ten years? Ten years in Iowa for a man who has the pedis possessio, as the law terms it, keep out every intruder unless he can show superior title; and are we now, after a lapse between 1862 and 1888, twenty-six years' possession, to say that the United States, against whom adverse possession does not run, is to intervene as the dominant proprietor and resume its original title? Will the honorable Senator and the promoters of this bill, who, I suppose, have considered what has happened about adverse possession, explain it? As I understand, this is a fiat of Congress that the title is changed by law from the possessors, those having the possession of the land, to the United States, to be passed by the United States to certain claimants.

Mr. President, I ask attention now to a bill which I had the honor to introduce and which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands while it was still burdened with this bill, 287, as my method of assuaging the misfortunes and quieting titles, that would not open, revamp, and restore controversy; and what is it? Reciting these difficulties, these statutes which bring us down to the enacting clause, it proceeds to declare—

That the United States—

And to this I ask the attention of the Senate—

That the United States will indemnify and pay to the settlers, or their heirs and legal representatives, who in good faith entered upon, for the purpose of purchasing, pre-empting, or securing homesteads upon any lands lying along the river Des Moines, in the State of Iowa, above and north of the Raccoon Forks, which were listed and certified to the State of Iowa under an act approved August 8, 1846, entitled "An act granting certain lands to the Territory of Iowa in aid of the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River in said Territory," and which said lands were afterwards, namely, on the 18th day of May, 1858, sold and conveyed to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company by an indenture of that date, signed by Ralph P. Lowe, governor, and attested by Elijah Sells, secretary of state, by John Davis, his deputy, and that the indemnity and compensation shall embrace:

First. Any and all moneys paid by said settlers to the Government for certificates of entry or patents, or both, including fees paid to the officers of the land offices in relation to the same.

Second. All reasonable sums paid by said settlers to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, or to its grantees, to purchase in the outstanding title and secure lands upon which they had settled or located, or which they had entered.

Every one of them who attempted to secure title under the difficulties placed by the legislation of Congress that has secured a title by contract with the Des Moines Navigation Railroad Company shall be paid by the United States.

Third. Any direct and immediate damages or losses sustained by any of said settlers who have been unable to buy in said outstanding title, and have in consequence been dispossessed and lost their possession and improvements.

Fourth. Any other damages, losses, or injury sustained by said settlers, which, upon just and equitable consideration, ought to be the subject of indemnity.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not extend to any settlement upon or entry of any of said lands made after January 1, 1880.

Where a lord paramount having functions of government besides that of proprietorship comes in he should fulfill that obligation which belongs to government—that of doing justice. Under our great Constitution this great power of our Government before the majesty of its law must submit to the compulsion that the law of the land, as decreed by the great tribunal, shall ascertain and enforce the result of its judgment; but a higher and ampler and nobler function is under our control without violating or jostling the law of the land, without impairing or even questioning the vigor and the justice of the great tribunal, and I can not find anywhere that a doubt can be raised where the responsibility for the conclusion arises and where the remedy should be borne, at whatever inconvenience, except that it may result in some division of governmental responsibility between the United States of America and the State of Iowa, for every one of these settlers has a title under the State of Iowa under which he pays taxes year after year and now is paying taxes, and which the supreme court of Iowa has pronounced subject to taxation and collection.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a very lucid and a very concise review of this whole subject, so far as its legal relations are concerned, as delivered in the case of Bullard vs. The Des Moines and Fort Dodge Railroad Company on the merits of the Des Moines River lands title in the Supreme Court of the United States, May 23, 1887, more than a year later than the veto of the President of the United States, that had put upon constitutional and just principles the condemnation of the act submitted to him. This judgment was delivered with the unanimous consent of that court by the great legal luminary who has so long administered justice from the Supreme Bench, as well to the admiration of the profession as of the country—that officer, peerless in character, in ability, in standing, Mr. Justice Miller, a greater honor to Iowa than any attempt to break down that judgment can be. I ask—for I will not read it—that it be printed as part of my remarks in the RECORD, that after this bill passes, if not before, it may be read by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). If there be no objection, the decision will be printed in the RECORD.

The decision is a follows:

Supreme Court of the United States.—No. 287.—October term, 1886.

Edward F. Bullard, plaintiff in error, vs. The Des Moines and Fort Dodge Railroad Company and Charles E. Whitehead, trustee of said company. In error to the supreme court of the State of Iowa. [May 23, 1887.]

Mr. Justice Miller delivered the opinion of the court.

This is a writ of error to the supreme court of the State of Iowa.

The case originated in a suit in equity brought in the district court of that State for the county of Humboldt by Edward F. Bullard, who is the appellant here. The object of the bill was to quiet or remove clouds upon the title of the plaintiff to certain lands in that State, to which the defendant filed an answer and cross-bill, asking that its own title might be declared to be good and established by the decree of the court. The district court of that county made a decree in favor of the defendant, which on appeal to the supreme court of the State was affirmed.

There were many questions considered in the State courts of which this court can take no jurisdiction. But the main question raised there, and the only one here, has relation to a subject which has been often considered by this court. It arises out of what is called the Des Moines River land grant, which was originally made by the Congress of the United States to the then Territory of Iowa. A short history of the matters growing out of that grant, with some references to the decisions of this court, will simplify the complex record presented in this case.

By the act of Congress of August 8, 1846 (9 U. S. Stat. at Large, page 77), there was "granted to the Territory of Iowa, for the purpose of aiding said Territory to improve the navigation of the Des Moines River from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork (so-called), in said Territory, one equal moiety in alternate sections of the public lands remaining unsold and not otherwise disposed of, encumbered, or appropriated, in a strip 5 miles in width on each side of said river, to be selected within said Territory by an agent or agents to be appointed by the governor thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States."

Soon after the passage of this statute the State of Iowa created a board of public works to take charge of this river improvement under a system of slack-water navigation on that stream. The contract for the execution of the work came into the hands of a corporation called the Des Moines Navigation Company. The work progressed for a number of years, several dams and locks being built from the mouth of the river upwards, the means for paying the contractors coming solely from the sales of the lands granted to the State for that purpose. These lands, as the work went on and the money was needed, were certified to the State by the Secretary of the Treasury, and by it either sold to purchasers or conveyed to the contractors who did the work. The State made no appropriations and furnished no means from any other source than this for the prosecution of the enterprise.

So long as no request on the part of the State for the certification of lands lying above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork was made of the Secretary of the Treasury, no question arose as to the extent of the grant. Afterwards, however, when a demand was made upon that officer that such lands should be certified, he objected on the ground that the grant of lands did not extend beyond that point; that, as by the language of the statute making the grant it was "for the improvement of the Des Moines River from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork," it was not intended to grant lands lying above that point, although the same river ran through the entire length of the State, from near its northwestern corner in the Territory of Minnesota to the southeast corner, where it flows into the Mississippi River.

This question became the subject of active negotiations and controversy between the State of Iowa, through its governor and members of Congress, and the Treasury Department, as well as the Interior Department, which was created during this time and succeeded to the charge of this subject. Meanwhile one of the Secretaries certified to the State a part of the land in dispute, running to a certain range of townships above the Raccoon Fork. It may as well be stated here that the lands now in controversy were not among the lands so certified, but are among the odd sections lying north of those thus certified and within 5 miles of the Des Moines River.

On April 6, 1850, Secretary Ewing, while concurring with Attorney-General Crittenden in his opinion that the grant of 1846 did not extend above the Raccoon Fork, issued an order withholding all the lands then in controversy from market "until the close of the then session of Congress," which order has been continued ever since, in order to give the State the opportunity of petitioning for an extension of the grant by Congress. This court has decided in a number of cases, in regard to these lands, that this withdrawal operated to exclude from sale, purchase, or pre-emption all the lands in controversy, and unless the case we are about to consider constitutes an exception, it has never been revoked.

In 1856 Congress granted to the State of Iowa, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of several railroads across that State from the Mississippi to the Missouri River, every alternate section, as shown by odd numbers, of the lands on each side of said roads, each of which, when the line was fixed, crossed the Des Moines River and ran through the lands which the State claimed had been granted to it for the purpose of improving the navigation of that stream.

Pending this controversy between the State of Iowa and the authorities of the United States as to the extent of the grant, a suit was brought by one of these railroad companies, that the question might be decided by this court. The case is reported as the Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company vs. Litchfield, 23 Howard, 66, decided in 1860, and it was held that the grant did not extend above the Raccoon Fork. As soon as this decision was made, the State, through its Congressional delegation, sought the action of the Congress of the United States to obtain the passage of an act which would secure the grant to the State and its grantees in the full extent, which they believed Congress had originally intended by the act of 1846. That the propriety of some action by Congress, and the demand for it was pressing, is obvious, when we consider that the Des Moines Navigation Company, under contract with the State, had spent large sums of money beyond what they had received from the State, and beyond the value of the lands certified to the State by the Secretary. The work, with all the materials and implements on hand, was suspended, and the danger of the works being swept away and ruined by floods in the river was imminent. The whole subject was before Congress, but, without waiting to dispose of it entirely, that body, by way of immediate relief, passed the following joint resolution, approved March 2, 1861 (12 U. S. Stat. at Large, 251):

"That all the title which the United States still retain in the tracts of land along the Des Moines River, and above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork thereof, in the State of Iowa, which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior, as part of the grant by act of Congress approved August 8, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa, be, and the same is hereby, relinquished to the State of Iowa."

At the next session of Congress a statute was passed, approved July 12, 1862, which provided as follows:

"That the grant of lands to the then Territory of Iowa for the improvement of the Des Moines River made by the act of August 8, 1846, is hereby extended so as to include the alternate sections (designated by odd numbers) lying within 5 miles of said river, between the Raccoon Fork and the northern boundary of said State; such lands are to be held and applied in accordance with the provisions of the original grant, except that the consent of Congress is hereby given to the application of a portion thereof to aid in the construction of the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad, in accordance with the provisions of the act of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, approved March 22, 1858, etc." (12 United States Statutes at Large, 543.)

By this joint resolution and this act of Congress the United States relieved so far as it could the misfortune of the construction of the grant to the Territory of Iowa of 1846, made by this court, and ratified the construction which had always been claimed by the State.

During all this controversy there remained the order of the Department having control of the matter, withdrawing all the lands in dispute from public sale, settlement, or pre-emption. This withdrawal was held to be effectual against the grant made by Congress to the railroad companies in 1856, because that act contained the following proviso:

"That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States, by any act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement, or for any other purpose whatsoever, be, and the same are hereby, reserved to the United States from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the routes of said railroads through such reserved lands, in which case the right of way only shall be granted, subject to the approval of the President of the United States." (11 U. S. Stat. at Large, 9.)

See Walcott vs. Des Moines Company, 5 Wall., 681, and Williams vs. Baker, 17 Id., 144, in which cases is also to be found a very full and clear recital of the history of this Des Moines grant controversy.

On May, 1860, the Commissioner of the General Land Office sent to the registers and receivers of that office at Des Moines and Fort Dodge the following printed notice:

"Notice is hereby given that the land along the Des Moines River, in Iowa, within the claimed limits of the Des Moines grant, in that State, above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork of said river, which has been reserved from sale heretofore on account of the claim of the State thereto, will continue reserved, for the time being, from sale or from location, by any species of scrip or warrants, notwithstanding the recent decision of the Supreme Court against the claim. This action is deemed necessary to afford time for Congress to consider, upon memorial or otherwise, the case of actual bona fide settlers holding under titles from the State, and to make such provision, by confirmation or adjustment of the claims of such settlers, as may appear to be right and proper.

"JOHN S. WILSON,
"Commissioner of the General Land Office.

"GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 18, 1860."

It will thus be seen that, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the winter of 1860, the land office determined that the reservation of these lands should continue for the purpose of securing the very action by Congress which the State of Iowa was soliciting, and it is not disputed by counsel for the appellant in this case that this was a valid continuation of such reservation and that during its continuance the pre-emptions under which the plaintiff claims could not have been made. But it is argued that the joint resolution of 1861 terminated this condition of suspense, and in and of itself ended the withdrawal of these lands which had been established and continued since the controversy originated between the State and the Federal Government as to the extent of the grant. This is the only foundation on which plaintiff's title to the land in controversy in this case rests.

We do not think the joint resolution had the effect to end the reservation of these lands from public entry. Whether we consider the purpose of the original order, its long continuance, and that it has been held, in the face of an act of Congress granting lands for public purposes to the railroads already mentioned, to constitute such a withdrawal as that act excepts from the operations of the grant, and that up to the present time no pre-emptions or sales have been finally recognized as valid by the Department or by the courts, it would be very extraordinary if the joint resolution should have that effect. It does not purport to act upon all the matters which were in controversy between the State and the General Government. It certainly did not act upon all the claims and matters in question then pending before Congress in regard to these lands.

It was, indeed, a very limited disposition of a part of the matter, which Congress supposed might then be acted upon with safety without further investigation. It was simply the recognition of the title which had passed to the grantees of the State of Iowa in regard to the lands which had been certified by the proper authorities of the General Government to the State under the act of 1846, and which, by the decision in Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company vs. Litchfield, had been held to be unwarranted by the statute. Congress, urgently pressed by parties who were innocent purchasers under the State, passed the resolution which went to this extent, in the last days of the session, securing to such purchasers, so far as the United States could do so, their title to the lands that they had bought under the sanction of this action of the Department.

The broader and larger question of the title to the lands within 5 miles of the Des Moines River, above Raccoon Fork, which had not been certified to the State, and which were declared by the decision of Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company vs. Litchfield not to be included within the grant of 1846, Congress retained for further consideration, and, at its next session after this joint resolution was passed, it completely disposed of the whole subject, so far as it was within its power to do so, by validating the grant of 1846 to the full extent of the construction claimed by the State of Iowa. If the order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of May 18, 1860, was in force up to the passage of the joint resolution, it is not possible to perceive why it terminated then. It was declared by the Commissioner that the order or notice was made to protect these lands from location by any species of scrip or warrant, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court to afford time for Congress to further consider the case.

This is not the way in which a reservation from sale or pre-emption of public lands is removed. In almost every instance in which such a reservation is terminated there has been a proclamation by the President that the lands are open for entry or sale, and in most instances they have first been offered for sale at public auction. It can not be seen from anything in the joint resolution that Congress either considered the controversy ended or intended to remove the reservation instituted by the Department. Its immediate procedure at the next session to the full consideration of the whole subject shows that it had not ceased to deal with it; that the reason for this withdrawal or reservation continued as strongly as before, and it can not be doubted that the subject was before Congress, as well as before its committees, and that the act of July 12, 1862, was for the first time a conclusion and end of the matter so far as Congress was concerned.

The title of the plaintiff, therefore, rests upon settlements upon odd sections of land within 5 miles of the Des Moines River, which were reserved from sale or pre-emption at the time the settlements were made. Two of the settlements, which are the foundation of plaintiff's title, were made in May, 1862, only a few days before the passage of the act of July in the same year; and one of the settlements under which the plaintiff claims was made after the passage of that act. The title was transferred by that act to the State of Iowa for the original purposes of the grant of 1846.

The object of this bill is to have a declaration of the court that the title of the plaintiff under those settlements and pre-emptions is superior to the title conferred by Congress on the State of Iowa and her grantees under the act of July 12, 1862. If the lands were at the time of these settlements and pre-emption declarations effectually withdrawn from settlement, sale, or pre-emption, by the orders of the Department, which we have considered, there is an end of the plaintiff's title, for by that withdrawal or reservation the lands were reserved for another purpose, to which they were ultimately appropriated by the act of 1862, and no title could be initiated or established, because the Land Department had no right to grant it. This proposition, which we have fully discussed, will be found supported by the following decisions, which are decisive of the whole controversy: Dubuque and Pacific Railroad vs. Litchfield, 23 How., 66; Walcott vs. Des Moines Company, 5 Wall., 681; Homestead Company vs. Valley Railroad, 17 id., 153; Williams vs. Baker, and Cedar Rapids Railroad Company vs. Des Moines Company, 17 id., 144; Wolsey vs. Chapman, 101 U. S., 755; Dubuque vs. Des Moines Valley Railroad, 109 id., 334.

The judgment of the supreme court of the State of Iowa, founded on the same view of the subject as above set forth, is therefore affirmed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, the legislation in which this controversy had its origin was passed by Congress in 1846. Along the weary lines of forty-two years this controversy has been wending its way. When the act making the original grant was passed, in August, 1846, Iowa was a Territory, but became a State before the close of the year. It became a State before the grantee attempted to assume rights of title under the legislation making this grant. The years that have passed have been weary ones to the settlers who are awaiting again the opinion of this body concerning the rights which they claim to have to their lands. They have never had an opportunity to appear in court and assert a title such as this bill proposes they shall have opportunity to present. The long line of cases referred to by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] originated in one wherein both plaintiff and defendant desired the same result, and, of course, got it, and from the judicial current then started have poured out all the other decisions to which the Senator from New York has referred. In none of those cases were the rights of these settlers presented; in not one of them was the United States a party, nor any other person entitled to present the title of these settlers as this bill provides. The purpose of this bill is to afford an opportunity for whatsoever rights these settlers may have to go to the courts of the United States for adjudication, and that is all there is of it.

Now, Mr. President, are there any considerations which should induce us to allow these men who for long years have resided on these lands, having gone upon them by invitation of the United States, to have definite determination of whatever rights they possess? The Senator from New York thinks it would be transcending all the rules of law whereby limitations fall upon rights and determine them, but he says it is true no limitation runs against the United States, and therefore this bill has been framed on purpose to allow an evasion to be practiced of that principle of law.

Mr. President, the bill simply provides the way and means whereby the United States can act in good faith towards the people invited by it to enter upon these lands to make their homes, and there they have been through a quarter of a century, and many of them more, making their farms, improving them, raising their children, and depending upon the good faith of the United States to protect them. The office of this bill is to offer opportunity thereto.

But, Mr. President, there is another question, and I come to it now because I do not wish to detain the Senate long in this discussion, and that is this: Can the United States or any other person, natural or artificial, make a grant when there is no competent grantee to receive it? Of course the Senator from New York will admit that that can not be done, and yet that was what was attempted to be done in this case. Before any of this land inured, even imperfectly, to the State of Iowa, a provision had been incorporated in the constitution of the State to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. When the constitution of Iowa was formed in 1846 this provision was incorporated in it:

SEC. 7. The General Assembly shall not locate any of the public lands which have been or may be granted by Congress to this State, and the location of which may be given to the General Assembly, upon lands actually settled, without the consent of the occupant. The extent of the claim of such occupant so exempted shall not exceed 320 acres.

How was the State to acquire the land under this grant? By selection by authority of the General Assembly. Could the General Assembly select the land on which a settler resided? Not at all. Why? The constitution which created the General Assembly and all the officers of the State said, "You must not touch that land in making your selection." The State of Iowa was jealous of the right of the settler, of the hardy man who went there to aid in the upbuilding of that State, and therefore placed in her first constitution the declaration I have read. As the years went on, down to 1857, when a revision was had of the constitution of the State, care was taken by the revisers of that instrument and the people in the adoption of the revised constitution to preserve the clause which I have read from the original constitution.

Mr. President, could the General Assembly of Iowa, could the governor of Iowa, could any officer of the State, or all combined, select a tract of land on which a settler had planted himself? No. Then where remained the title to the land on which these settlers lived? In the United States. What do we ask by this bill? That the United States, having induced these settlers to go upon the land, shall now, through its own Department of Justice and in its own courts, institute a proceeding which shall make good the title it said these men should have.

Mr. VEST. With the Senator's permission, I wish to say that the position he takes, as I understand him now, is that the title did not pass to the State because of some provision of the State constitution.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am speaking of the inability of the State under the terms of the constitution to select as a part of the lands embraced within the original grant those upon which settlers were located.

Mr. VEST. Mr. Justice Miller, in the decision to which the Senator from New York has referred, uses this language:

> The broader and larger questions of the title to the lands within 5 miles of the Des Moines River, above Raccoon Fork, which had not been certified to the State, and which were declared by the decision of Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company vs. Litchfield not to be included within the grant of 1846, Congress retained for further consideration, and, at its next session after this joint resolution was passed, it completely disposed of the whole subject, so far as it was within its power to do so, by validating the grant of 1846 to the full extent of the construction claimed by the State of Iowa.

And then he emphasizes this with the further declaration—

> That the act of July 12, 1862, was, for the first time, a conclusion and end of the matter so far as Congress was concerned.
> The title of the plaintiff therefore rests upon settlements upon odd sections of land within 5 miles of the Des Moines River, which were reserved from sale or pre-emption at the time the settlements were made. Two of the settlements, which are the foundation of plaintiff's title, were made in May, 1862, only a few days before the passage of the act of July in the same year; and one of the settlements under which the plaintiff claims was made after the passage of that act. The title was transferred by that act to the State of Iowa for the original purposes of the grant of 1846.

If I understand that decision it says that by the act of 1862 all the title that the Government of the United States had in these lands was conveyed to the State of Iowa, and it is for that State to settle outstanding claims. If that be so, as the Supreme Court of the United States has determined, the question is settled, and it seems to me that ought to be the end of it. If I am mistaken I want to be corrected.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, there is not one of the decided cases, nor the whole line together, that settles this question. As I stated at the outset, the first case was made up for the purpose of reaching a definite decision desired by both parties, and it was reached, and the cases have followed it on down since that time.

But even taking the statement of the Senator from Missouri to be exact in all its terms, I still insist that the question which I have presented never has been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States, and I want this question to go there in order that it may pass upon this identical point: How could Congress in 1861, 1862, or any other time confer upon the State of Iowa the right by its General Assembly, or by any of its officers, to take land in violation of that provision of the constitution of the States? Therefore when the grant was originally made I claim that so far as these lands were concerned Congress, in attempting to make a grant which would cover them, had no competent grantee to take them.

Now it is said that the State of Iowa through its governor conveyed under the directions of the Legislature all the rights, title, and interest which the State had in these lands above Raccoon Fork. So it did, but it could not convey by that deed any right to land which it could not acquire because of the operation and force of that provision of the State constitution; and so when the joint resolution of 1861 was passed, under which these adverse claimants insist they have title to the land because, they say, the conference of title by that joint resolution upon the State inured to their benefit under the deed made by Governor Lowe; but how could that be? How could Congress confer title on the State in that respect which would inure to the benefit of the supposed grantees in the deed of Governor Lowe when the State constitution itself declares that the Legislature shall not do it?

Mr. PUGH. I understand the position of the Senator to be that by the effect of the State constitution Iowa was incapable of becoming the grantee of these lands under the act of Congress of 1862, and that the act of Congress of 1862 did not divest the United States of the title to these lands because the State of Iowa was incapable of being invested with them on account of the State constitution.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is the point I make.

Mr. PUGH. And you contend that the title to these lands still remains in the Federal Government, and if the Supreme Court under this bill so decides, then these lands can be disposed of as was desired to be by the parties who had that original act passed.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. The last decision of the Supreme Court was by Judge Miller, a citizen of the State of Iowa, an eminent lawyer who had practiced in that State a number of years. That point is not stated in the Bullard case which he decided.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not know why it was not done. I can possibly give the answer.

Mr. EVARTS. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. EVARTS. He stated, as I understand it, that the decisions of the State courts of Iowa have sustained all these titles. Why should that have been overlooked in the Supreme Court?

Mr. VEST. I never heard of this constitutional question; I never read the constitution of Iowa about it; but it is a remarkable fact that Mr. Justice Miller, with the great popular excitement that existed in the State, for this has been a very irritating question there, as we all know, a citizen of the State and a prominent justice of the Supreme Court from that State, should have fallen over this provision of the constitution, together with all the lawyers, and never raised it at all, if it has the bearing the Senator says it has. I should like to hear that provision of the constitution of Iowa read again.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is as follows:

> The General Assembly shall not locate any of the public lands which have been or may be granted by Congress to this State, and the location of which may be given to the General Assembly, upon lands actually settled, without the consent of the occupant. The extent of the claim of such occupant so exempted shall not exceed 320 acres.

I do not know why that point was not pressed in the Bullard case, but I can answer why it was not decided. It was because it was not present in the record, I presume, and that is answer sufficient so far as the opinion of the court is concerned. If the issue was not presented, of course the court would not go out of its way to create it itself. But there is the constitution under which every officer in the State of Iowa, from the members of the General Assembly and the governor all the way down, was prohibited from interfering with the right of settlers upon the public lands.

How did these men go there? The executive department of the Government and the judicial department both decided that the grant of 1846 did not extend above the Raccoon Fork. Therefore settlers went upon those lands. The Interior Department had declared that the lands belonged to the public domain. Why, then, do not these men get their rights through the executive department of the Government? Simply because of a technicality which has met them at every step, and I will state what it is. The lands had been reserved from settlement. Therefore they were not open to pre-emption settlement, nor after 1862 to homestead settlement. Why? Because the Secretary of the Interior, at the time he declared them to be public lands, failed to revoke the order of reservation; and on that technicality these men are now deprived of the rights they otherwise would have had under the general land laws of the United States.

Now, will some person tell me how in law, notwithstanding the decisions the Senator from New York has referred to, an officer of the State of Iowa could select from the public lands within that grant as portions of it those upon which settlers were residing? I do not care how many decisions there have been; I want on behalf of these settlers a proceeding which will place before that court that question among the others which may be raised, and let the Supreme Court say on review of this whole transaction whether the General Assembly of Iowa or any of her officers can or could, in the face of that provision of the Constitution, deprive these settlers of their rights by selecting the lands on which they were residing as part of those granted under the act of 1864 to the State.

The Senator from New York admits that there are strong equities existing in favor of these settlers, and he provides in his bill a method for the ascertainment of actual damage suffered by them and a reimbursement from the Treasury of the United States. Why does he not apply the principle of reimbursement for damages suffered to the Des Moines River Navigation and Railroad Company? If they have rights, if they have reasonable grounds to believe that they were exempted by the Government, why should they not take the indemnity that he provides, and let the hardy settlers upon those lands have their homes?

But, Mr. President, that proposition is not made. It is only that the men who a quarter of a century and more ago, and those who under like circumstances at later dates have acquired rights, shall leave their homes and possessions and shall give up the results of their long years of toil, shall have all of the home sentiments and sympathies crushed out, and that they shall be turned out with a few miserable dollars doled out to them as the difference between their possessions as first occupied and the improvements they have made thereon.

The United States can not afford to put itself in that attitude. These men went there by its invitation. The State protected them in their occupation of the land by the provision of her constitution to which I have referred. It is often said that it is the duty of a government quite as much to protect one citizen as a thousand. Why not then give to these people that protection? Why not open the doors of the courts, of its own courts, and let its Attorney-General enter those tribunals and present the issue which may save to these hardy people their homes?

Mr. President, I do not care to occupy more time just now, and unless some other occasion shall present itself during the progress of the debate I shall say no more, but will let this body vote again on the question. It has voted three times—on two occasions without division, on another by more than a two-thirds vote by yeas and nays in favor of this bill. Nothing is asked for these settlers but a judicial proceeding. Let them have it. It is their only chance. If the Government has misled them, let it do the best it can to protect them; but taking the case altogether, the operation of that provision of the State constitution, as well as other features of the case, I do not fear the result. Let the Supreme Court be called upon to determine definitely this exact issue.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, this bill was reported by the Committee on Public Lands during the last Congress, of which committee I was a member, and I had occasion at that time to examine its provisions rather closely. It had the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Lands. It passed the Senate by a large majority, passed the other House, was vetoed by the President, and failed to pass over the veto. It is practically, as I understand it, and probably literally, the same bill that was passed during the last Congress.

The object and purpose of the bill is to settle and quiet certain conflicting claims to lands in Iowa growing out of different grants, growing out of a misconstruction of a grant which, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] said, has been an irritating question in that State for a great many years, and will continue to be so until it is finally, definitely, and directly settled by the courts of the country.

The same objections urged to the passage of this bill are the objections urged by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] a few days ago to the institution of suits in the State of California. That is, it is objected that this bill ought not to pass because the courts of the country have already made decisions settling the titles in a certain way. It is objected further that it ought not to pass because it is alleged that the Government has no title, no interest whatever in this land, and it is simply using the name of the Government to give certain individuals a standing in court that they would not otherwise have.

These are the identical objections urged by the Senator from Nevada to the action of the Attorney-General in bringing suits in California, or suits that he proposes to bring. I think, however, that no one has questioned the motives of either the committee that reported this bill or the Senators from Iowa who so earnestly support it.

I therefore, in view of the similarity of the cases, take advantage of the present occasion to answer a few remarks made by the Senator from Nevada in reply to certain remarks made by my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] a few days ago in the Senate. The Senator from Nevada avoided the issue made by my colleague and sought to make it appear to the Senate that the issue was whether the United States would, should, or ought to succeed in the proposed suits in California. The point made by my colleague was that the Attorney-General had the power to bring these suits; that it rested in his discretion whether or not they should be brought.

Nor did my colleague seek to throw the responsibility, as was asserted by the Senator from Nevada, upon the Interior Department. The Department of Justice takes the full responsibility. But my colleague referred to the fact that the action had been recommended by the Interior Department for the simple reason that such had been the practice under this Administration and former administrations, and for the further reason that it refuted the idea of any evil intent upon the part of the Attorney-General in bringing the suits. My colleague asserted that this discretion rested with the Attorney-General; and I now read from a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to show that that assumption was authorized. The Supreme Court, in the case of the United States vs. Beebe and others, used the following language:

> The authority of the Attorney-General under the Constitution and laws of the United States to institute a suit in the name of the United States to set aside a patent alleged to have been obtained by fraud or other mistake, whenever denied by a specific pleading before this court, has been uniformly maintained. And it may now be accepted as settled that the United States can properly proceed by bill in equity to have a judicial decree of nullity and an order of cancellation of a patent issued in mistake or obtained by fraud where the Government has a direct interest or is under an obligation respecting the relief invoked.

The court further on used this language:

> The court below held that the bill in this case having been filed on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, for the declared purpose of having the questions which were being pressed upon the Land Department, in connection with the claims of the Philbrook heirs against the Government, determined by the judicial department, which claims were unsettled and important, the appeal to the court was proper. In this we think the learned judge is in full accord with the principle laid down by Mr. Justice Miller in the San Jacinto case.

It is directly and specifically decided there that the Attorney-General had a right to order these suits to be brought if in his judgment either of these facts laid down in this opinion existed in the case. If he has exercised that discretion improvidently I can see that the Senator from Nevada had a right to criticise his action in the premises and say that it does not fall within the case; but I deny that the Senator from Nevada has any right, without any proof whatever, to impute to the Attorney-General evil motives in bringing such suits.

It is true that private individuals, and sometimes the public press of the country, impute bad motives to public officers, and no public officer is so high that he escapes them. They have charged to the President of the United States, they have charged to Senators upon the floor of the Senate bad motives for their action in certain cases during the present session of Congress; but so long as such charges are made by private individuals or by partisan newspapers no one attaches any importance to it unless they produce evidence. But I assert again that unless the Senator from Nevada is furnished with proof that the Attorney-General in this California case was actuated by some bad motive—and the burden rests upon him to produce that proof—then he had no right to attack the Attorney-General's motives upon the floor of the Senate.

I do not believe that there is a single Senator upon the other side of the Chamber who served with the Attorney-General for the period of eight years that he was a member of this body who would be willing to impute to him any dishonest or dishonorable act. The distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who, perhaps, knew the Attorney-General as thoroughly as any man in the Senate—certainly as intimately as any one upon the other side of the Chamber—during the last Congress, when speaking of the Attorney-General, used the following language:

> The Attorney-General, for whose personal honesty and good intentions in every respect I have as great regard as I have for that of any man in the world.

I say such was the language used by the Senator from Vermont, who served with the Attorney-General upon committees in this body and who was intimately and thoroughly acquainted with every public act of his while he served here as a Senator.

Mr. Garland has been a citizen of the State from which I come for a period of more than fifty years. He has held many public positions of honor and trust, and during all that time nothing touching his good name has ever been alleged against him. Mr. Garland is recognized by the country at large as a lawyer who ranks with the best, as a patriotic and conservative statesman, as a representative of the people, whose interests he never betrayed, as a true gentleman, and an honest man, and such history will record him.

I rose simply to say that whoever in connection with these suits in California imputes to him any motive other than an honest desire to serve the Government, whose officer he is, faithfully and honestly and for the best interests of the whole people, does a gross injustice to a worthy official and an honest man.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I have no disposition to ascribe motives to any one, but I desire now, since this matter is again brought up, to state some facts showing the great hardship and injustice inflicted upon many citizens of this country by the official conduct of the Attorney-General. I regard it as a duty, not a pleasure, to say what I am about to say in reference to the Attorney-General, for I entertain for him none but kindly feelings. I first met him some twenty years ago and became well acquainted with him. He is a genial, pleasant man, but he is inflicting or allowing to be inflicted a great wrong upon a large number of people in California.

The cases to which I alluded are five in number. Four of them are of ancient date. In the two principal cases the patents were granted in 1857 and in 1859. In the case of the Las Pulgas Rancho the patent was granted October 2, 1857. The Cañada de Raimundo grant was dated July 19, 1859. These patents were granted after the claims had been confirmed by the courts, the United States having been represented, the settlers having had an opportunity to appear. Final decrees were had and then surveys were made by the surveyor-general after notice. These surveys were returned to the Interior Department for examination and approval, and were decided at a time when, I think, the Senators from Arkansas will admit the Commissioner of the General Land Office was at least a competent person. That person was Thomas A. Hendricks, who granted both of these patents. Mr. Thompson was Secretary of the Interior. They were granted, I say, after a hearing in that Department, after full notice to all the contestants.

Upon them are several large towns and villages. The water-works of San Francisco lie mostly upon those grants. San Mateo and Menlo Park are on these grants. There is not a settler upon them. In that they differ from the case under consideration. The case under consideration is for the protection of settlers who have been upon the land in Iowa for twenty-five, thirty, and forty years. The cases brought by the Attorney-General are cases where the lands have been settled for the last thirty years, under patents granted to a large number of people.

At whose instigation and why were these suits brought? I have examined the records in the Interior Department since the discussion the other day, and I find that the suits in all these five cases were ordered to be commenced on the application of J. W. Denver, his brother St. Clair Denver joining in one of them. It appears by the letter of the Attorney-General himself that these orders to bring suits were made not on the original request of the Interior Department, but on the application of General Denver. A letter which I copied in the Department, and is a sample of all his returns to the Department in deciding to bring these suits, is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, November 23, 1886.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of September 4, with its inclosures, relative to the application of J. W. Denver, attorney for the Coppinger claimants under the San Raimundo grant, for authority to use the name of the United States in legal proceedings to set aside a patent issued for the private land claim known as "Las Pulgas," San Mateo County, California, in order to secure the rectification of the survey thereof and of the San Raimundo grant.

The matter has been referred to the United States attorney for California, John T. Carey, esq., San Francisco, with instructions to institute the suit referred to, in accordance with your request.

Very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND, Attorney-General.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

These suits, as I said, were brought on the application of J. W. Denver. On looking further into the papers in the case I find that the real party in interest, the real prosecutor in these cases who caused these suits to be brought, is one R. S. Thornton. R. S. Thornton is a man well known in California as a leader in litigation. He has been here for the last twenty-five years attempting to pick flaws in titles and to get legislation. R. S. Thornton is the person for whom General Denver appears.

I find on file an application from R. S. Thornton to the Commissioner of the General Land Office to survey those towns and cities with a view of these proceedings. The Department declined to make the survey. The matter was referred to the Attorney-General, and the Attorney-General gave an opinion, which is on file in the Interior Department, that it was the duty of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to survey this private property which had been in the possession of citizens for a generation, and to use the funds appropriated by Congress for other purposes.

I say that it came with bad grace from Mr. Sparks, the late Commissioner of the General Land Office, to call on Congress for more appropriations for clerks to do the current business and represent, which is undoubtedly true, that there are from 12,000 to 15,000 undisputed cases of settlers desiring titles that could not be disposed of for want of force while he was using the money appropriated for that purpose to set aside patents issued by Mr. Hendricks thirty years ago.

I do not attribute it all to the Interior Department, because I think it emanates from a particular source in the Interior Department, and not from that Department generally. I want to exempt the Department as a general rule from this raid, but I say while they are clamoring for more clerks and more money they undertake to undo the work that was done by former administrations, including Democratic as well as Republican. They are trying to drive from their homes thousands of people instead of giving homes to those who are rightfully entitled to them under the laws of Congress.

That is the proceeding here, and that is not all. I hold in my hand a letter from the Attorney-General to myself with regard to this matter. After the trial in the San Jacinto case, in which I was an attorney, had been disposed of, I called on the Attorney-General and directed his attention to that decision. I had some pleasant conversation with him. He addressed me afterwards a note referring to it. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, May 15, 1888.

SIR: Since our conversation of yesterday relative to the suits heretofore directed in Northern California, in the matter of the patents to the Ranchos Raimundo and Las Pulgas, Buri-Buri, and others, I have gone over the papers with my law clerk, Mr. Robinson, and I find that the cases came to the Department with the urgent recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior that suits be brought to correct errors in the surveys and to annul or modify the patents.

From one cause and another the actions have not been commenced, but I have to-day taken steps to have them begun without further unnecessary delay and brought to a speedy judicial determination.

Very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND, Attorney-General.

Hon. W. M. STEWART,
United States Senate.

So far from its being the Interior Department, it was R. S. Thornton who inaugurated this proceeding. In order that the date of these various grants and the persons to whom the grants were given may appear in my remarks, I shall incorporate a list of these five grants with their dates and the officers who made the grants.

Buri-Buri: Date of patent, October 17, 1872. Commissioner, Willis Drummond. Secretary of Interior, Delano. Attorney, J. W. Denver.

Las Pulgas Rancho: Date of patent, October 2, 1857. Commissioner, Thomas A. Hendricks. Secretary of Interior, Jacob Thompson. Attorney, Denver.

Cañada de Raimundo: Date of patent, July 19, 1859. Commissioner, Thomas A. Hendricks. Secretary of Interior, Jacob Thompson. Attorney, Denver.

Cañada de Guadalupe la Visitacion y Rodeo Viejo: Date of patent, September 22, 1865. Commissioner, James M. Edmunds. Secretary, O. H. Browning. Attorney, Denver.

Corte de Madera del Presidio: Date of patent, February 25, 1 85. Commissioner, MacFarland. Secretary, Teller. Attorneys, J. W. & A. St. Clair Denver. R. S. Thornton, "agent for self and also for Coppinger claimants."

In my former remarks are printed the letter of the governor of California and petition of the leading members of the bar and many citizens protesting against this arbitrary proceeding of the Attorney-General. The governor transmitted these protests to the President of the United States for his consideration, asking that these suits should not be brought, and that the order should be countermanded. The Attorney-General had all this before him, and he consults a law clerk, as shown by his letter to me, but tells the Senate in answer to a resolution of inquiry that it was done at the urgent solicitation of the Interior Department. I say the Interior Department has no more jurisdiction over the matter than I have. It has passed for nearly thirty years out of their jurisdiction, and there is nothing in the Interior Department to make the Attorney-General attempt to review cases that occurred a generation ago.

How can the Department now administer the law more intelligently than Thomas A. Hendricks did? Whatever else may be said of him, he was a clear-headed, conscientious lawyer. I served with him upon the Committee on Public Lands here. I learned from him much that I know of the public-land laws and the practice under them. I came here and he was my teacher in the public-land laws, and a faithful, intelligent teacher he was. Wherever he granted a patent you may be pretty certain that it is right. For this administration, after the witnesses are all dead, to go back and say after thirty years have intervened, and cities have grown up, and at the instigation of an irresponsible man, undertake to review that work and neglect the issuing of patents that are necessary, it seems to me only wants to be stated to be condemned.

I say it was the duty of the Attorney-General to have heard the parties, to have summoned those lawyers and let them meet this agitator, this lobbyist, R. S. Thornton, face to face before he threw a cloud upon the title of thousands of people which must last for a generation before it can be removed if it has to go through the courts. The Supreme Court kindly advanced the San Jacinto case that a precedent might be set, and a precedent was set that ought to put an end to these raids upon private rights.

I will allude to that case briefly, and the rule laid down, so as to show how far the Attorney-General in this case has departed from it. But before I proceed to that I wish to say one word further about the Interior Department. I do not wish to cast any unjust reflections upon any one. I do not believe the Interior Department as such is responsible for these suits. When these orders were first given several gentlemen came from California—I was here last year—friends of mine, met me, and desired to be introduced to the Interior Department officials with regard to the matter.

I went to the Interior Department with the gentlemen and saw Mr. Lamar and inquired about the orders to bring these suits. Mr. Lamar said that he had no knowledge of any such orders. We told him that they had certainly been issued. He sent for the papers and found that he had signed them. He had signed them as a matter of course in the routine of business. I wish to say with regard to this matter, that if the Secretary of the Interior undertook to read all the communications that are prepared by the various bureaus for him to sign, he could do no other business. In fact he has no time to read them and can not read them. An ex-Secretary of the Interior said that would be an impossibility; that the Secretary of the Interior can only refer a matter to the Attorney-General, where it is to be investigated. Mr. Lamar took no responsibility in the matter. It emanated from another source, it emanated lower down. He had no responsibility in the matter, and in proof of how he regards such investigations I hold in my hand a decision rendered by Mr. Justice Lamar very recently, in which he condemns in unmeasured terms the bringing of stale suits to discredit titles and using the name of the United States for the purpose of private suits and private litigation. I refer to the case of the United States vs. Charles Beebe and others, which arose in the State of Arkansas. The Senators from that State are undoubtedly more familiar with that case than I am, but it involves the same principle of using the name of the United States for the benefit of private individuals.

The following are Mr. Lamar's views upon this character of suits and the impropriety of the name of the United States being used to disturb patents issued more than a generation ago. After stating the facts of the case and the decisions conceding to the Attorney-General the naked power to bring the suit, Justice Lamar said:

It is insisted that here the State is a party, moving the contest, and setting up a right to have this survey certified, and that the tenant will not be protected by his possession, because the statute of limitations does not run against the State. We have decided, and the decision is sustained by unbroken masses of authority, that the statute of limitations does not run against the State. The answer, however, to this argument is this: The State of Georgia is not the real party to the proceeding. * * * The process is in the name of the State, but the right asserted is a private right; the issue is between two of the citizens of the State.

Applying these principles to this case, an inspection of the records shows that the Government, though in name the complainant, is not the real contestant party to the title or property in the land in controversy. It has no interest in the suit, and has no thing to gain from the relief prayed for, and nothing to lose if the relief is denied. The bill itself was filed in the name of the United States, and signed by the Attorney-General on the petition of private individuals, and the right asserted is a private right, which might have been asserted without the intervention of the United States at all.

In his letter to the United States district attorney upon the subject the Attorney-General directs that that officer shall sign his (the Attorney-General's) name to the bill, when the attorneys for the petitioners shall present such a bill, and file the same in the proper court, and that after the suit is commenced these attorneys for the petitioners will have the management of the case. Accordingly the subsequent proceedings in the case have been conducted exclusively by these attorneys, who, in the pleadings, describe themselves as attorneys for the petitioners and beneficiaries of the suit.

We are of the opinion that when the Government is a mere formal complainant in a suit, not for the purpose of asserting any public right or protecting any public interest, title, or property, but merely to form a conduit through whom one private person can conduct litigation against another private person, a court of equity will not be restrained from administering the equities existing between the real parties by any exemption of the Government designed for the protection of the United States alone. The mere use of its name in a suit for the benefit of a private suitor can not extend its immunity as a sovereign government to said private suitor, whereby he can avoid and escape the scrutiny of a court of equity into the matters pleaded against him by the other party; nor stop the court from examining into and deciding the case according to the principles governing courts of equity in like cases between private litigants.

These principles, so far as they relate to general statutes of limitation, the laches of a party, and the lapse of time, have been rendered familiar to the legal mind by the oft-repeated enunciation and enforcement of them in the decisions of this court. According to these decisions, courts of equity in general recognize and give effect to the statute of limitations as a defense to an equitable right, when at law it would have been properly pleaded as a bar to a legal right. They refuse to interfere to give relief when there has been gross negligence in prosecuting a claim or where the lapse of time has been so long as to afford a clear presumption that the witnesses to the original transaction are dead, and the other means of proof have disappeared.

We think the court below justly and wisely applied the principle to the case under consideration in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the bill. The rights of the Philbrook heirs, the real parties to this case, which are set up in this bill, originated in 1815. The acts of Beebe perpetrating the alleged fraud were prior to 1838. The alleged illegal action of the Land Department occurred in 1839. More than forty-five years ago the complainants in this bill could have instituted their action.

The death of the parties charged with the fraud, and also of most, if not all, of the witnesses having personal knowledge of the transaction, the fact that a city has been built upon the land in question, the occupation of large portions of it by hundreds of innocent purchasers, the homesteads of many families covering other portions of it, the uninterrupted possession maintained for more than a generation, all resting upon faith in the patent issued by the United States Government, constitute reasons more than sufficient for the refusal of the court to set aside such patent at the suit of a party who has so long slept upon his alleged rights. For the reasons herein stated, the decree of the court below is affirmed.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir.

Mr. BERRY. I neglected to refer to that case as I intended to do. That was a case which arose in the city of Little Rock. The claim originated more than forty years ago. It involved 480 acres of land lying in the city of Little Rock and the title of persons who have been living in their homes and residing there for more than a quarter of a century. At the instance of Mr. Philbrook, the late Attorney-General, Mr. Brewster, directed the suit to be brought in the name of the United States. Notwithstanding these parties had held their titles and believed that they had a valid title for the period of forty years, the Attorney-General directed the suit to be brought in the name of Philbrook against the holders of the city of Little Rock. Although I have no doubt the people thought it was a hardship upon them to defend their homes, yet I do not think that even they ever imputed any evil motives to the late Attorney-General, Mr. Brewster, for directing that suit to be brought.

Mr. STEWART. What is the difference between that case and this? The people in the case I am considering are more numerous than in the town of Little Rock. They are living upon the lands, and they have lived upon them for a quarter of a century, and the suits are brought at the instigation of a lobbyist without a hearing. Is it not just as strong, would not the language of Justice Lamar apply to this case as well as to the Little Rock case in his condemnation?

But I condemn the action of Attorney-General Brewster. He set a very bad precedent. The San Jacinto case in which I was of counsel was instituted by him. A former Attorney-General some ten years ago tried a similar raid, and authorized, as I said the other day, one John B. Howard to make a general raid upon titles. Before I proceed to the San Jacinto case I want to call attention to what the Supreme Court said about John B. Howard's raid, to show what the Supreme Court thought of this kind of proceeding and to show that the Department is not following the courts, but is following the lobby. A celebrated case, one of John B. Howard's cases, is known as the Throckmorton case. Mr. Justice Miller, in discussing the propriety of the conduct of the Attorney-General in that case, said:

In the class of cases to which this belongs, however, the practice of the English and American courts has been to require the name of the Attorney-General as indorsing the suit before it will be entertained.

In explanation I would say that the Attorney-General authorized John B. Howard to appear for him, and he used the district attorney's name, authorizing him in that way, but the principle is the same.

The reason of this is obvious, namely, that in so important a matter as impeaching the grants of the Government, under its seal, its highest law officer should be consulted, and should give the support of his name and authority to the suit. He should also have control of it in every stage, so that if at any time during its progress he should become convinced that the proceeding is not well founded or is oppressive he may dismiss the bill.

I shall show how the present Attorney-General has disregarded this direction and suggestion of the Supreme Court.

There is appended to this record, though no part of it, a bond, given by some private persons to the United States, to save it harmless of costs in regard to this suit. If it is intended by this to show that the Attorney-General authorized this suit, it fails to prove it, though the bond recites that that officer had directed the district attorney to bring this suit.

It is not in this way that the then Attorney-General should have placed himself on the record as responsible for such a bill. In confirmation of this view, it does not appear that he or his successors have ever given the slightest attention to the case. At the argument of it before us no officer of the Government appeared. It would be a very dangerous doctrine, one threatening the title to millions of acres of and held by patents from the Government, if any man who has a grudge or claim against his neighbor can, by indemnifying the Government for costs, and furnishing the needed stimulus to a district attorney, institute a suit in chancery in the United States to declare the patent void.

It is essential, therefore, to such a suit that without special regard to form, but in some way which the court can recognize, it should appear that the Attorney-General has brought it himself, or given such order for its institution as will make him officially responsible for it and show his control of the cause. (98 U. S., pages 70, 71.)

Equally caustic remarks were made by other judges in the courts below, and for ten years the whole proceedings in this raid were quieted until Attorney-General Brewster authorized one or two suits. The San Jacinto suit was authorized before the present Attorney-General came into office. I was of counsel in the court below. The proceedings made it very oppressive to the parties. They were required to travel over California, and were made to spend $5,000 or $6,000 in taking testimony. After this was done, as attorney for the San Jacinto Company, I addressed a letter to the present Attorney-General and asked him to dismiss the suit. "No," he said.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for one moment? I wish to make a motion.

Mr. STEWART. All right.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope my friend will not press that motion until the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] comes in.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, entered the Chamber.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, here he is.

Mr. BUTLER. I am satisfied that the Senator from Iowa will not object to the motion.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I understood that, but I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] know of this motion. I think perhaps it is his intention to ask the Senate to consider an appropriation bill to-morrow. If that is the case, I should like to have him know of the motion before we vote on it.

Mr. BUTLER. He can learn of it afterwards.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg the Senator to withdraw the motion for a moment, until the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] comes in.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have sent down to his committee-room for him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the motion withdrawn?

Mr. BUTLER. For the present. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Nevada for yielding.

THOMAS JORDAN.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have here a disability bill which has been overlooked in the Committee on the Judiciary. There has been an accidental delay about it. I ask unanimous consent to report the bill at this time and put it on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report the bill (H. R. 6946) for the relief of Thomas Jordan, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to relieve Thomas Jordan, of the State of New York, of all political disabilities imposed upon him by the third section of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Nevada will yield to me, I simply desire to give notice, as I am compelled to leave the city to visit West Point, that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the formal morning business, I shall call up the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, for the purpose of making some remarks upon it.

ESTATE OF JOSEPH H. MADDOX.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to state that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], whom I do not now see in his seat, some weeks ago called up a bill in which I feel an interest, it being the bill (S. 2201) for the relief of Laura E. Maddox, widow and executrix, and Robert Morrison, executor of Joseph H. Maddox, deceased. The bill then went over informally on the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who has told me—he told me yesterday—that at any time when it was called up he would have no objection to its passage. Consequently, as I have to leave the city in a day or two, to be gone about ten days, I venture to ask the Senate on this assurance to consider the bill at this time. It was reported by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] from the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana appeals to the Senator from Nevada to yield to him for the purpose of considering the bill indicated.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to finish my remarks.

Mr. VOORHEES. The bill was passed over informally and it ought to be passed by the Senate now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield for that purpose?

Mr. STEWART. I will yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2201.

Mr. ALLISON. Subject to a call for the regular order at any time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2201) for the relief of Laura E. Maddox, widow and executrix, and Robert Morrison, executor of Joseph H. Maddox, deceased. It proposes to refer to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, for determination upon the evidence taken and now on file in the office of the clerk of the Court of Claims and in the War Department, and other competent evidence, all matters in relation to the agreement of Joseph H. Maddox and his associates, made with the supervising agent of the Treasury, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the delivery of tobacco and other property under the permit, safeguard, and orders of the President of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BUTLER. With the consent of the Senator from Nevada, I renew my motion that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. ALLISON. With the understanding, I hope, that the pending business can be disposed of to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no doubt that can be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DAWES. May I have the indulgence of the Senate for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Massachusetts proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to state that the Committee on Appropriations are ready to go on with the Indian appropriation bill and have been for four or five days. If the Senate, with that fact before them, choose to adjourn over, of course they will do so. I am ready to bring up the appropriation bill to-morrow morning, or this afternoon, or at any time.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think that anybody but the Appropriations Committee are ready to consider that bill; so I do not see what we would gain by remaining in session to-morrow. Many Senators are going away, and I am inclined to think that it would be time well spent to let the appropriation bill go over until Monday.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I wish to say in this connection that I want to go away on Saturday, and I should like to be here when the Indian appropriation bill is considered. It seems to me that the Senate could not pass to-morrow any more profitably than in disposing of a bill of that sort, which is absolutely necessary to be considered by the Senate at some time. I can see no necessity for an adjournment over, and I hope the Senate will continue in session. There are many bills of importance that a number of us want to have passed. We rested pretty well yesterday, and are in pretty good shape for work to-morrow.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate can proceed only by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that there are several questions connected with the Indian appropriations, and the members of the Committee on Appropriations would like to be present when the bill is passed upon. I happen to be a member of that committee, and I believe we can pass that bill to-morrow if we are all here. Next week there may perhaps be some trouble.

Mr. VOORHEES (to Mr. BUTLER). You had better withdraw the motion.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well; I withdraw the motion, and commend my distinguished friends for their industry and attention to their duties.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENTAL STATIONS.

Mr. BROWN. May I appeal to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. I can not yield any further.

Mr. BROWN. I wish the Senator to yield to me long enough to give a notice. I shall not ask to take up any time.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. BROWN. I simply wish to state that on the 2d of March, 1887, an act was passed, as the Senate will recollect, establishing experimental stations at the agricultural colleges in the different States. The act requires that the assent of the Legislature shall be given to the appropriations for each State. The Legislatures of some of the States failed to act in the matter, and on the 1st of July the appropriation lapses. As a short bill has passed the House of Representatives giving the governor the power to grant the assent where the Legislature is not in session, I simply wish to say that to-morrow morning at the end of the formal business I shall ask permission to call that bill up. There will be no discussion of it; there is no room for it. It simply proposes to empower the governor when the Legislature is not in session to give the notice of assent. I will not ask the Senate to allow me to take up the bill now.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 287) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, this enormous power in the hands of the Attorney-General is so liable to abuse that I doubted the existence of the power, and in the San Jacinto case I raised the question whether the power existed at all. The majority of the court held that it did exist, and thus described it:

> We are not insensible to the enormous power and its capacity for evil thus reposed in that department of the Government. Since the title to all of the land in more than half of the States and Territories of the Union depends upon patents from the Government of the United States, it is to be seen what a vast power is confided to the officer who may order the institution of suits to set aside every one of these patents; and if the doctrine that the United States in bringing such actions is not controlled by any statute of limitations or governed by the rule concerning laches be sound, of which we express no opinion at present, then the evil which may result would seem to be endless as well as enormous. But it has often been said that the fact that the exercise of power may be abused is no sufficient reason for denying its existence, and if restrictions are to be placed upon the exercise of this authority by the Attorney-General it is for the legislative body which created the office to enact them.

The court, however, did go on to suggest very many important restrictions, and laid down rules under which it would have been impossible for the Attorney-General to have brought these suits if he had adhered to the discharge of his duty. I will submit some further portions of this opinion, showing how utterly groundless this particular suit was, and the want of equity in it, and the admonitions of the court to the Attorney-General to bring no more suits of this kind. The following extracts will show the views of the majority of the court upon the merits of this class of litigation and the considerations which govern the Attorney-General:

> But we are of opinion that since the right of the Government of the United States to institute such a suit depends upon the same general principles which would authorize a private citizen to apply to a court of justice for relief against an instrument obtained from him by fraud or deceit, or any of those other practices which are admitted to justify a court in granting relief, the Government must show that, like the private individual, it has such an interest in the relief sought as entitles it to move in the matter.
>
> If it be a question of property a case must be made in which the court can afford a remedy in regard to that property; if it be a question of fraud which would render the instrument void, the fraud must operate to the prejudice of the United States; and if it is apparent that the suit is brought for the benefit of some third party, and that the United States has no pecuniary interest in the remedy sought, and is under no obligation to the party who will be benefited to sustain an action for his use; in short, if there does not appear any obligation on the part of the United States to the public, or to any individual, or any interest of its own, it can no more sustain such an action than any private person could under similar circumstances.
>
> In all the decisions to which we have just referred it is either expressed or implied that this interest or duty of the United States must exist as the foundation of the right of action. Of course this interest must be made to appear in the progress of the proceedings, either by pleading or evidence, and if there is a want of it, and the fact is manifest that the suit has actually been brought for the benefit of some third person, and that no obligation to the general public exists which requires the United States to bring it, then the suit must fail. In the case before us the bill itself leaves a fair implication that if this patent is set aside the title to the property will revert to the United States, together with the beneficial interest in it.
>
> It is argued in the brief that this is not true; that in fact the Government is but the instrument of one Baker, who married the widow of Abel Stearns, and that Stearns contested the correctness of this survey with others before the Land Department very actively and energetically, because he had such an interest in the land covered by it that if it was defeated he would become the equitable or beneficial owner of the land. This view is supported by some pretty strong testimony and by the fact that Baker was the man at whose instance the action was begun.
>
> When the Attorney-General required that a bond should be given to save the United States harmless with regard to the costs of these proceedings, Baker was the man who furnished the security and signed the bond himself. The condition inserted in that obligation recited "that whereas the Attorney-General of the United States of America has this day filed, at the request of the above-named R. S. Baker, a bill in equity in the name of and on behalf of the United States of America against the San Jacinto Tin Company. * * * Now, therefore, if the said Baker shall well and truly save the United States of America harmless from all costs and expenses which may be incurred by or against them in the prosecution of said suit to its final determination, and pay or cause to be paid on demand all such costs and expenses as may necessarily be incurred in such prosecution, then this obligation to be void." Taking all these circumstances together, it raises a very strong implication that Baker expected that if the patent was set aside his right to the land covered by it, or to a large part of it, would become paramount.
>
> But we are not so entirely satisfied of the want of interest of the United States in the whole or a part of the land which is covered by this patent as to justify us in saying that the bill in the present case ought to be dismissed on that ground.

The following comments of the court will show how these cases have been once decided, and the present attempt to relitigate them is simply to retry what was tried and determined by competent tribunal more than a quarter of a century ago:

The strongest argument against the commission of any fraud, and in favor of the correctness of the location of the grant by the survey, is to be found in the fact that it went through all the different offices in the land department to which it could possibly be taken, from its being filed by Thompson in the office of the surveyor-general up to its consideration by the Secretary of the Interior himself, and in all these offices ample time was given for careful examination, and an actual scrutiny of the matter was made by reason of the contest of Stearns, who succeeded in having the lines of the survey changed, so as to exclude property in which he was interested.

After this change was made, it was again brought before the Commissioner and argued by counsel on both sides, and considered in the light of all the facts which either party chose to bring before the office, and abundant time was given for its investigation. Mr. Wilson, the Commissioner, was a man of many years' experience in the class of cases to which this belongs, and which he was then called upon to decide. He made a full report, which is in the record, to the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. O. H. Browning, a lawyer of eminence and a man accustomed to weighing testimony, who, after having the case under consideration from May 22, 1867, to October 19 of the same year, made the following decision, which he referred back to the Commissioner of the General Land Office for execution:

"SIR: I have received your letter of the 22d May last, submitting for consideration the papers of the private land claim in California known as the 'Sobrante de San Jacinto,' and asking for instructions on the 'application for a patent to issue in accordance with the survey approved by the surveyor-general of California.' A careful examination of the papers and consideration of the arguments of counsel have led me to concur in your opinion that all the requirements of the law have been complied with, and that patent should issue in accorance with the survey."

We consider this examination of the case in the office of the Commissioner and its re-examination by the Secretary of the Interior as possessing the very strongest probative force in regard to the question of fraud, which was mooted before them, as well as the question of the proper location of the grant. No stronger evidence could be given of the honesty of Commissioner Wilson and his belief in the correctness of the survey than the fact of his reference of the whole matter to the Secretary of his own motion without any appeal by either party from his decision.

They had in the Land Office abundant materials for the investigation of all the matters in dispute; they had before them the interested parties, with all the evidence which they could collect, the records, the Mexican archives, and control of all the papers of the Government since the territory came into the possession of the United States, as well as ample time, more than this court has, to consider all these subjects. Very little that is new or that throws any light upon the questions at issue is now produced on the hearing of this case.

With regard to the question of fraud, we have no hesitation in saying that there is no such case made of intentional fraud, or actual fraud, committed upon the Government of the United States in this transaction as justifies the cancellation of the patent.

Mr. Justice Field also delivered an opinion in that case, concurring with the majority of the court in their decision that there was no merit in that suit, but dissenting from the majority as to the unlimited power of the Attorney-General to institute suits to set aside patents to land.

Separate opinion of Mr. Justice Field.

I concur in affirming the decree of the court below dismissing the bill in this case. The bill was filed to set aside a patent of the United States issued to Maria del Rosario Estudillo de Aguirre, and her heirs, for land situated in Southern California, in what is now known as San Bernardino County, granted to her by the Mexican government. The grant was of the sobrante, or surplus lands remaining within the boundaries of a tract called San Jacinto, after satisfying two previous grants.

The claim under it was presented to the board of land commissioners created by the act of Congress of March 3, 1851, to ascertain and settle private land claims in California, and was adjudged to be valid to the extent of 5 leagues. On appeal to the district court of the United States for the southern district of California, the claim was confirmed to the surplus land lying within the designated boundaries, not exceeding in extent 11 square leagues.

The case being brought to this court, the latter decree was affirmed. The judgment here was rendered at the December term, 1863. Then followed a protracted contest, accompanied with much feeling, for the location of the claim. There being within the San Jacinto tract a tin mine, then supposed to contain a rich body of metal, every step in the survey was contested. Witnesses were examined and repeated arguments made by counsel representing the parties for and against the location sought.

As there were no boundaries of the sobrante marked, by which the claim could be specifically designated, much was left to the judgment of the surveyor general, after having examined the topography of the country and heard the statements of witnesses familiar with it. The limitation made by the grant itself only required that the claim should be located within the exterior boundaries of the San Jacinto, and not encroach upon the land covered by the previous grants. In the determination of the survey and location several years were occupied.

The matter was at different times before all officers of the Land Department whose judgment could control any of the several steps of the proceedings, the United States surveyor-general for the State, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the Secretary of the Interior. Every objection now urged against the survey as ground for revoking the patent was taken before them, fully argued, and held to be untenable. At length, on the 26th day of October, 1867, a patent was issued to the claimants, from whom the defendant, the San Jacinto Tin Company, derives its title.

In April, 1883, after the company had been in possession of the property for nearly sixteen years, and after all the other land within the exterior boundaries of the San Jacinto tract had been patented to the previous grantees, or sold by the United States, so that if the location and survey on which the patent was issued could be set aside, there would be no land left to satisfy the grant without annulling titles which the United States had conveyed to other parties, this suit was brought. And it was not brought upon any new fact produced, or any new reason assigned why the original survey should be disturbed.

All the grounds of complaint presented for the new litigation had been urged and fully considered before. And as if convinced that no beneficial result could come to the United States from the reopening of the old controversy; as if afraid that the United States might be cast in the litigation, a bond was taken from one R. S. Baker, with sureties, to keep the United States harmless from all costs and expenses which might be incurred by or against them in the prosecution of the suit.

The original contest upon the survey was carried on, and the expenses of it borne by, one Abel Stearns. Since his death this R. S. Baker married the widow of Stearns, and has sought to retry the issues as to the survey which were decided and determined in the Land Department years before, when Abel Stearns was living.

The bond recites that "the Attorney-General of the United States of America has this day filed, at the request of the above-named R. S. Baker, a bill in equity in the name of and on behalf of said United States of America against the San Jacinto Tin Company" to vacate the patent. Not for the interest of the United States, not for the protection of their property, or to vindicate their honor, but at the request of a private litigant, the name and power of the United States are invoked by the Attorney-General to set aside a patent issued after a protracted contest upon the survey with the predecessor of this litigant.

If this were a solitary instance where the name and power of the United States have been used to serve the interests of private parties, it might be passed by with the simple statement of the facts. But, unfortunately, it is not a solitary instance. The records of this court show that it has been a frequent practice of the Department of Justice in authorizing suits for the cancellation of patents.

In United States vs. Throckmorton, which was here at the October term, 1878, it appeared that the district attorney of California was directed by the Attorney-General to bring suits to vacate patents for lands in that State, upon security being given by one John B. Howard, or a deposit made by him of a sufficient sum to defray the expenses which might be incurred in the litigation; and the bills filed upon such authority were not sworn to nor even authenticated by the signature of the Attorney-General. In this case the bill bears the signature of the Attorney-General in office at the time it was filed. His signature gives some assurance, which was wanting in the Throckmorton case, of his belief in its allegations, and that the suit is really brought by the United States to protect their rights, and not merely to promote the interests of private individuals.

In that and other cases brought on the authority of the Attorney-General, the patents embraced many thousand acres of land, and one of the judges holding the circuit court observed that "It is not to be supposed that if the Attorney-General were persuaded that so large and valuable a property belonged to the United States he would have made the assertion of its rights to depend upon the willingness or ability of private individuals to defray the expense of the litigation." (United States vs. Flint, 4 Sawyer, 83.)

In the present case the bill seeks, by setting aside a patent of the United States, to restore 11 leagues of land to the public domain; and yet, so doubtful did the Attorney-General appear to consider the rights of the United States to this vast tract, that he required from the party at whose instance the suit was brought a bond of indemnity against the expenses of the proceeding.

In commenting upon a similar bond, when the case of Throckmorton was here, the court, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, said: "It would be a very dangerous doctrine, one threatening the title to millions of acres of land held by patent from the Government, if any man who has a grudge or a claim against his neighbor can, by indemnifying the Government for costs, and furnishing the needed stimulus to a district attorney, institute a suit in chancery in the [name of the] United States to declare the patent void.

It is essential, therefore, to such a suit that, without special regard to form, but in some way which the court can recognize, it should appear that the Attorney-General has brought it himself, or given such order for its institution as will make him officially responsible for it, and show his control of the cause." (98 U. S., 61, 71.) And yet this requirement does not seem to have been potential enough to induce such an examination of the rights of the United States as to justify in the present case the attempt to enforce them without security from private parties.

I can not admit that the Attorney-General can, at the request of private parties, rightfully allow the use of the name and power of the United States in proceedings for the annulment of patents, upon such parties executing a bond as security for costs, or upon any other stipulation of indemnity to them. If the United States have not sufficient interest in property to justify the expenses of proper litigation for its maintenance, they had much better let it go.

It would seem that Congress designed to put its mark of condemnation upon the practice of obtaining services from private parties, without incurring liabilities for them, such as was adopted in this case, when, on May 4, 1884, it declared that "hereafter no Department or officer of the United States shall accept voluntary service for the Government, or employ personal service in excess of that authorized by law, except in cases of sudden emergency involving the loss of human life or the destruction of property." (23 U. S. Stats., 17.)

The language here used clearly indicates that the Government shall not, except in the emergencies mentioned, place itself under obligations to any one. The principle condemned is the same, whether the party rendering the service does so without any charge or because paid by other parties. The Government is forbidden to accept the service in either case.

It is not to be supposed that any head of the Department of Justice has or would intentionally lend the name and power of the Government to further private ends, and yet there is no practical difference between that course of procedure and the one adopted in this case. The opinion of the court shows above all controversy the utter groundlessness of the charges upon which it is sought to set aside the survey. A very little attention to the proceedings had before the Land Department in the contest upon that survey would have satisfied the Attorney-General of the futility of any attempt to disturb it, and it is not probable that he would have authorized any.

But independently of these considerations I can not assent to the position announced in the opinion of the court, that the Attorney-General has unlimited authority by virtue of his office to institute suits to set aside patents issued by the Government. He is the head of the Department of Justice, and as such he is charged with the superintendence and direction of all district attorneys of the United States, and generally of all litigation in which the United States are interested. He is also the legal adviser of the heads of the Executive Departments, and if they are fraudulently imposed upon in the discharge of their duties, or have mistaken the law, he may at their request take such legal proceedings as are necessary to correct their errors and revoke their action.

The legislation of Congress points out the infinite variety of cases where legal proceedings may be taken on behalf of the United States in the enforcement of their rights, the protection of their property, and the punishment of offenses, and wherever no authority is conferred by statute express or implied for the institution of suits, none in my judgment exists. Whenever Congress has felt it important that patents for lands should be revoked, either because of fraud in their issue or of breach of conditions in them, it has not failed to authorize legal proceedings for that purpose.

In a multitude of cases titles to lands, upon which whole communities live, rest upon patents of the United States. In several instances, cities having more than a hundred thousand people residing within their limits are built on land patented by the Government. I can not believe that it is within the power of the Attorney-General to be exercised at any time in the future, this generation or the next—as no statute of limitations runs against the Government—to institute suits to unsettle the title founded upon such patents, even where there are allegations of fraud in obtaining them.

There must be a time when such allegations will not be heeded. The examination into alleged frauds, when the patents are applied for, ought to close all controversy respecting them; clearly so, unless, upon newly-discovered evidence of the most convincing character, Congress should direct proceedings to be instituted to set aside the patents, and that result can be obtained without impairing the title of innocent parties. The power of the Attorney-General, if admitted when a single person holds title under a patent, may be exercised in cases where a whole community holds under a similar instrument.

If, without the authority of Congress, such proceedings may be instituted by him upon the repetition, as in this case, of old charges, or upon the unsupported statements of interested parties, a cloud may at any moment be cast upon the titles of a whole people, and there would be in his hands a tremendous weapon of vexation and oppression. I can never assent to the position that there exists in any officer of the Government a power so liable to abuse and so dangerous to the peace of many communities.

I do not recognize the doctrine that the Attorney-General takes any power by virtue of his office except what the Constitution and the laws confer. The powers of the executive officers of England are not vested in the executive officers of the United States Government simply because they are called by similar names. It is the theory and, I may add, the glory of our institutions, that they are founded upon law, that no one can exercise any authority over the rights and interests of others except pursuant to and in the manner authorized by law.

In the case of The Floyd Acceptances (7 Wall., 676), speaking of the powers of an officer of the Government—in that case of the Secretary of War—this court said: "When this inquiry arises, Where are we to look for the authority of the officer? the answer which at once suggests itself to one familiar with the structure of our Government, in which all power is delegated, and is defined by law, constitutional or statutory, is that to one or both of these sources we must resort in every instance. We have no officers in this Government, from the President down to the most subordinate agent, who does not hold office under the law, with prescribed duties and limited authority."

If the Attorney-General possesses the powers ascribed to him, in the absence of any law defining them, we have this singular condition presented, that the owner of property derived from the United States by the most solemn instruments, holds his possession subject to the liability that it may be disturbed at any time by a suit of the Government, brought at the will of that officer, a not very creditable commentary on our institutions; but if the owner can trace his title to some other source, he may have a reasonable degree of certainty that he will not be unnecessarily disturbed.

Aside from the qualifications thus expressed to the views of the court, there is much in the opinion which gives me great satisfaction. It holds that in suits brought by the Government for relief against an instrument alleged to have been obtained by fraud or deceit, or any practice which would justify a court in granting relief, the Government must show, like a private individual, that it has such an interest in the relief sought as entitles it to move in the matter.

If it be a question of property, a case must be made in which the court can afford a remedy in regard to that property; if it be a question of fraud, which would render the instrument void, the fraud must operate to the prejudice of the United States; and if it is apparent that the suit is brought for the benefit of some third party, and that the United States have no pecuniary interest in the remedy sought, and are under no obligation to the party who will be benefited to sustain an action for his use; in short, if there does not appear any obligation on the part of the United States to the public, or to any individual, or any interest of their own, they can no more sustain such an action than any private person could under similar circumstances.

From this ruling some degree of peace and security may come to holders of titles derived by patent from the Government.

From the clear and full statement, in the opinion of the court, of the case and of the controversies before the Land Department, involving the same questions now presented, there can be but one conclusion, and that is that the decree below dismissing the bill was in consonance with justice and right.

But there was one limitation put upon the power of the Attorney-General by Congress which he has deliberately violated in ordering these suits. It is a plain, distinct, and deliberate violation of a plain statute which was passed in 1884, and is found in the twenty-third volume of Statutes, page 17, and reads as follows:

> And hereafter no Department or officer of the United States shall accept voluntary service for the Government or employ personal service in excess of that authorized by law, except in case of sudden emergency involving the loss of human life or the destruction of property.

I hold in my hand the reply of the Attorney-General to the resolution of the Senate, in which he tells us that he has employed in sixteen of these land cases attorneys numbering something over thirty, I think, because there were several employed in each case, counting the different members of the firms. He employed them as special counsel, with no compensation from the Government. He has received the volunteer services in sixteen important cases, involving land upon which more than 100,000 people lived, and he has employed that volunteer counsel in violation of the language of the statute, which says he shall not do it; and he has allowed them to harass their neighbors. They are volunteer counsel, against the language of the statute.

You can imagine the evil and the persecution that may result by allowing blackmailers to prosecute these cases. I will not so characterize them, but they might be blackmailers. One individual, Mr. Thornton, will be talking about compromise with these poor people. Mr. Thornton, who holds the keys to the situation, will be proposing compromises. These people will have a chance to buy their peace, and they will be compelled to do it or stand ten years of clouded title—ten years of expense and vexatious litigation, and they will be harassed by these attorneys who are appearing without compensation. Mr. Thornton signs himself as the agent of settlers when there are no settlers; as the agent of adverse claimants when they have been defeated for thirty years. I ask by what authority does the Attorney-General of the United States farm out the privilege to volunteer counsel to litigate the title of their neighbors and to place them under tribute in violation of law?

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator allow me to answer that each one of those suits is under the charge of the district attorney? The Attorney-General has not "farmed out" the power to bring suits, and his reply does not so state. The Senator will see from the reply of the Attorney-General that it is done by the district attorney.

Mr. STEWART. I know the district attorney. I know in the San Jacinto case he never opened his mouth or knew anything about the case. I have talked with the present district attorney. He has no idea of prosecuting them in person, nor does the Attorney-General expect it of him. The idea of charging the district attorney with all these duties is absurd. Mr. Carey, the district attorney, has other duties. The army of volunteer lawyers will do the work, as in the Throckmorton and Flint cases, as they did in the San Jacinto case and in every other case where the Attorney-General has allowed them to appear in violation of the statute. The district attorney never will be heard of; he is a cipher. R. S. Thornton is the man who dictates the proceedings, who will dictate the compromises, and when R. S. Thornton is satisfied this great Government will be content and these cases will be dismissed.

The Attorney-General knows nothing at all about these cases. The application came from attorneys or it was done at the dictation of a lobbyist. The litigation is prosecuted with unrelenting greed by a gang of men who expect to make money out of it. Do you think these volunteer counsel are working for the United States on account of gratitude to the Government? There is no disguise about it. Mr. Thornton does not pretend that he is acting for the United States. He alleges that he is acting for private parties; the whole proceeding is for private parties and not for the United States.

I shall not weary the Senate by going into details; but with this enormous power the Senate can see what abuses may result. The cases I have presented are the grossest. The attempt on the part of this Administration to review proceedings that occurred away back in the fifties under other Democratic administrations, it seems to me, ought to be regarded by Democrats themselves as unwarranted and unjust. In the most important of these cases you are not opening the books on the Republicans; you are opening them on former Democratic administrations, and at the instigation of a lobbyist, and not on the investigation of any responsible party. The Attorney-General, notwithstanding the governor, notwithstanding the leading citizens representing these cases, consults his clerk and lets Thornton proceed.

I alluded to this matter to show the enormous power that is falling into the hands of the Executive. Did I not select a happy illustration? There are over 35,000,000 people living on land patented by the United States. The power asserted here is that the Attorney-General may bring suits against any of these men, and the power is also asserted by the Attorney-General to let other litigants use the name of the United States, to let any attorney who wants to force compromises go into these suits and use the name of the United States to harass the people. Is it possible that no title is yet settled in the United States? Is every title held up? That is the case if the practice of the Attorney-General shall prevail.

He furnishes no excuse for this power, except it be that the Supreme Court declares that the power to bring suit exists. Any man in Ohio, or Michigan, or Illinois, any man having a building in Chicago, is liable to be sued and voluntary attorneys employed to cloud his title, and after occupying property for a generation he will be compelled to go through the process of litigation in the courts. I ask, is not that an enormous power? Has it not been abused, and ought it not to be curtailed?

I allude to this, I say, as an example of the naked power to disturb every man's title, and there is nothing so sacred as title to land. There is nothing so necessary to the prosperity of a community. The Attorney-General declares that he has the power. He does not regard the restrictions, that there must be equity, that there must be right, that the United States must be directly interested, that there must be an equitable case. He does not regard the injunction that was given by the court, that he must do it himself. He does not regard the mandates of the law, that he shall take no volunteer service. Independent and alone he strikes a blow at the prosperity of a sovereign State, and tells us, "I do it because I have the power. I am the Attorney-General, and the Attorney-General can bring suit to set aside all patents."

I alluded, and I have been called to task for it, to the Pan-Electric business, not to criticise the conduct of the Attorney-General, but to illustrate the vast power there assumed. Since this discussion opened I have read the report of a committee of the House of Representatives, both the majority and the minority report, in examining this question, and I regard the case as a good illustration of the power assumed by the Attorney-General.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me to ask him if he does not know that the Solicitor-General upon his oath stated that never a word had passed between himself and the Attorney-General upon that subject, and that the Attorney-General had stated the same fact in his deposition, that the subject had never been presented to the Attorney-General, that he had taken no action in respect to it, had never himself passed an opinion or given a direction; that the whole matter had come up in the absence of the Attorney-General, and the action that was taken was taken by the next officer in rank in that Department, the Solicitor-General, whose duty it was to act in the absence of the Attorney-General.

Mr. STEWART. How does that affect this enormous power which was used by the Department of Justice? I do not care what were the instruments in that Department which were put in operation, the power was exercised.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Nevada that it does very materially affect the charge he made last week, reflecting personally on the Attorney-General, when he charged that the responsibility for the proceeding rested upon him alone.

Mr. STEWART. Very well; I have read these reports. The Attorney-General at the head of this Department had at all times power to stop these proceedings, whether he was there when they were initiated or at any other time. He did not swear that he did not know of the proceedings. He did not swear that he did not know that the name of the United States was being used, and he, from the time that knowledge came to him, was responsible. I do not charge him with conspiracy or anything like that. I do not charge him as the minority of the House committee did, but I do charge that that Department, he at the head of it, used an unwarrantable power, a power that never should have been exercised by any executive officer. Whether the power in that case existed at all was a question of grave doubt.

The circuit court of Massachusetts and many other courts have held that no such power existed. I hold in my hand the opinion of Judge Colt in one of these cases, reviewing the whole matter. He says it never has been decided by the Supreme Court; but however that may be, admitting that the power exists by the laws, the laws ought to be changed.

What does it mean to bring suits to set aside patents that have been granted by the Government? The only reason assigned for bringing this suit was because it was a monopoly. What patent is not a monopoly? The Government by its laws decrees that a man who makes a useful invention shall have a monopoly of it as a reward. If all men have monopolies all patents ought to be set aside. But the courts hold that the merits of the patent are open to litigation on questions of infringement. A man's patent is worth no more than the courts will accord to it. It is open all the while to private litigation, and is litigated from question to question in all our courts.

But what propriety was there in the Department of Justice, whether at the head or the foot of it, or anybody connected with it, taking this action? It has brought hundreds of thousands of dollars of expense by this private litigation on the plea that it was the duty of the United States after having granted patents and having created a monopoly to brings suits to set aside those very patents, when private litigants could litigate the cases as well. I say it was a grand usurpation. It never ought to have been tolerated one moment, and it shows the vast discretion exercised by the Department of Justice, one arm of the executive power. First they declare that they have the power, and will exercise it at their volition, to set aside the land titles of 35,000,000 people, and they justify it because the power exists, without investigation, without a hearing. The next day they declare that they have the power and will exert it to set aside all patents granted by the Government to inventors, that litigation shall be prosecuted by the United States, and they employ counsel and engage volunteer counsel.

What a usurpation this is! I tell you the more we reflect, the more this thing is discussed, the more we learn about it, the more it will be seen that this raid on land patents by the Attorney-General's Office is an alarming feature of the times and is absorbing the rights of the people, disturbing their property, interfering with private rights and endangering the peace and liberties of the country, and it must be stopped. If there is to be no title to property of any kind except at the will and pleasure of the Attorney-General, this country is no longer free. No country is free that has no legal rights, and what legal rights has any citizen when a lobbyist may call upon the Attorney-General to attack his title to his home? What a mockery to be driving these people from their homes under pretense of reinvestigating titles determined by the courts and the Departments thirty years ago, while hundreds and thousands of others are kept from their homes for want of an appropriation to execute the laws!

These are matters for serious consideration, and I thank the Senators from Arkansas for renewing this subject. I hope they will continue the discussion until every feature of it is developed, and then they themselves will have done the country a service.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, when I first called the attention of the Senate to the assault made by the Senator from Nevada on the Attorney-General, I did so because I believed the Attorney-General had been unjustly assailed, that he had been charged with motives in the discharge of public duty which were disgraceful to him if true.

The Senator from Nevada a few moments ago made a declaration which clearly marks the line of difference between him and me in our estimation of this question. He stated that there was nothing so sacred as title to land. I think that any man's good name and his honor are a long way above any such consideration as title to land. While I knew nothing of the facts involved in the order for suits to be brought to vacate patents to lands in California, and cared nothing especially about them, I did care for the good name and reputation of a man who I believed to be as spotless and as pure as any who ever lived on the face of the earth or ever served his country in this Chamber.

I am not inclined to enter into a discussion of the facts involved in the suits which have been brought by the Attorney-General, but we all know that in an opinion given by the Secretary of the Interior to the Attorney-General, when his opinion was asked about the propriety of ordering suits to set aide these patents, he stated certain facts in connection with the cases which are exceedingly important. In that opinion the Secretary of the Interior, giving the facts in the case of one of the grants mentioned by the Senator from Nevada to-day, the Las Pulgas grant, states that the claimants of that grant set up in a Mexican court a claim for about 8 leagues of land, and that the court decided against the claimants; that when the commission that the Senator spoke so highly of the other day was organized by the United States Government, they practically renewed their claim under that commission, and it was decided against them again.

The case was appealed then to the district court, and the district court decided that they were entitled to 4 square leagues of land, beginning at the mouth of the San Francisquito Creek, and running up the coast 4 leagues, and 1 league back from the shore. The case then came to the Supreme Court of the United States. That court said the limits of that grant could be fixed with mathematical certainty. In the face of and defiance of this fact the surveyor sent on the ground for the purpose of locating that grant in conformity with the finding of the Supreme Court of the United States made a survey embracing 8 instead of 4 square leagues. The Secretary of the Interior in his report to the Attorney-General states the facts I have mentioned; and if in obtaining a patent a fraud had been perpetrated upon that great Department, there was nobody who had a better right to ask that the courts should intervene for the purpose of setting aside the result of the fraud than the head of the Department.

The Secretary in his communication to the Attorney-General, after reciting many important facts, says:

> It would naturally be supposed that, in the light of all this, there could be no trouble in locating the western line of Las Pulgas, which, as the Supreme Court in Greer vs. Mezes, 24 Howard, 275, in speaking of the same grant, say, being of "the breadth of 1 league from the estuary or bay was a certain and definite boundary," "admitting of mathematical certainty." Yet, incredible as it may seem, under the final survey and patent of Las Pulgas, its western line is located some two leagues and a half west of the bay of San Francisco, and includes the greater part of the valley of Raymundo, notwithstanding the repeated decisions above cited to the contrary.
>
> Exactly how this western line was thus broadened from one to two leagues and a half, and the acreage of the grant correspondingly amplified, may never be known. But facts enough are disclosed to create the impression that in the first instance the grossest fraud was practiced in order to extend this line on the preliminary survey, and afterwards the same line was designedly adopted on the final survey and carried into patent.

Mr. STEWART. When was that patent issued?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. In 1857.

Mr. STEWART. By whom?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. By the Secretary of the Interior, I presume.

Mr. STEWART. Who was then the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I do not remember. I have not gone into the details. I have never been an attorney in this case or otherwise connected with it. I want to read a little more of what Mr. Lamar said in connection with this:

> Some time in 1883, after the death of Van Dorn, the protest against his survey, made and filed in 1854 by Greer—

A protest had been entered and filed with him which had not been sent up, as he was required under his oath to do, with the report to the Interior Department. That protest not having come here, the patent was issued, as the Senator says, in 1857. Then Mr. Lamar goes on:

> Some time in 1883, after the death of Van Dorn, the protest against his survey, made and filed in 1854 by Greer, and which had been abstracted from the records, was found among some papers in a house in which Van Dorn formerly lived. The Coppinger claimants holding this newly discovered evidence to be conclusive as to the fraudulent action of Van Dorn in said survey, and also being unable to obtain relief otherwise, have made the present application.

And with these facts staring us in the face, with the knowledge that a protest which had been filed in 1854 was suppressed and not forwarded by the surveyor, and with full knowledge that this matter has been contested day after day and step by step, year by year and continually from the time the patent was issued until this discovery of the stolen protest, we are gravely told in the Senate Chamber that an outrageous fraud like that should be allowed to stand because, forsooth, thirty years had intervened after the fraud was perpetrated before full proof of it could be had. This is not the first time this case has been here. In a report which I hold in my hand, made by Mr. Lewis, from the Committee on Public Lands, in the House of Representatives, he states that a bill proposing to open this case had been reported in the Forty-first, Forty-second, Forty-third, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses.

These people have been here constantly demanding relief. The Senator himself understands that for thirty years they have been in Congress and the courts constantly attempting to secure their rights. Any persons holding these lands know all this. The world has had full notice all the time.

The Senator intimates that the power of the lobby has been arrayed in this matter. That was the difficulty in passing the bill through Congress, I have no doubt, in all these years. I submit to the Senator, in view of the facts he has stated to-day, that the power of the lobby has been unquestionably great, and I thank God from what I am able to see of this case that there is a possibility that some court may soon be allowed to pass on all the facts of the case and determine whether the fraud shall be allowed to live simply because it was carried through so successfully and adroitly so many years ago—in 1854—as to be impossible of proof until now.

The Senator states that there are three or four villages on one of those grants. No man knows better than that Senator that those villages are all upon the uncontested part of the grant; that the land which is contested has no villages on it. These people understand perfectly well that their villages are claimed. Nobody denies that the grantees are entitled to 4 square leagues of land, beginning at the mouth of San Francisquito Creek and going up the bay for 4 leagues.

I do not know anything about the personal matters the Senator has brought into this discussion. I leave them to him and others. I know nothing about them, but I do know that the record shows in one of these cases that one of the parties had made a contract in the first instance with a lawyer that one-half of the land recovered over and above the real limits of the grant should be his, the lawyer's. I can not remember the name. But there have been some other examinations into these matters. I take it that the Senator from Nevada will not suspect, and least of all will not charge, that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] would be likely to invoke the intervention of the courts in these matters for the purpose of benefiting the friends and punishing the enemies of this Administration. I take it that he would hardly intimate that the Senator from Kansas would be willing to open up one of these cases for the purpose of carrying out some beneficial purpose or design so far as this Administration is concerned.

I take it that that Senator would hardly be charged with any of the infamous purposes that the Senator from Nevada has seen fit to charge on the Attorney-General during this debate. And yet I hold in my hand a report made to the Senate of the United States by the Senator from Kansas, in which, after citing all the facts in one of these cases with great care and circumspection, and, in my opinion, clearly showing the justice and necessity for sending this case to the courts, concludes as follows:

From the foregoing statement of facts (which are not disputed by any of the parties to this controversy)—

This was one of the five cases, the Presidio case, called up the other day by the Senator as one of the monstrous cases—

From the foregoing statement of facts (which are not disputed by any of the parties to this controversy) the committee deduce the conclusion that the grant to Read was one of quantity, and for 1 league of land and no more, to be found within the boundaries of the judicial possession conferred upon Read by the alcalde; that the decree of the district court confirmed to Read's heirs but 1 league of land, limited to the boundaries of such judicial possession; that said grant did not include Peninsula Island nor the lower portion of Point Taburon, nor any of the swamp or tide lands now claimed and which have been awarded to the Read heirs by the latest decision of the Secretary of the Interior. The committee have no doubt of the correctness of the decision of Attorney-General Devens upon all the material points of controversy.

But the decision of the Secretary of the Interior is entitled to great weight.

Mr. STEWART. Who was Secretary of the Interior when that was issued?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I do not remember now who made the different decisions.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to say a word about that case.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. That occurred while I was Secretary of the Interior. The Senate referred the matter to the Committee on Public Lands, and a subcommittee made that report, as I understand. The Senate and House of Representatives, the legislative department of the Government, did not interfere in the matter. It had been in the Land Office a long time, and it had received the adjudication of the Commissioner and of the preceding Commissioner and preceding Secretary of the Interior, and in accordance with the views of the office the patent issued, not in accordance with the views of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who had not in the first place any control whatever over it, who was not charged by law with the adjudication of it, while the Secretary of the Interior was. The Secretary of the Interior exercised a power conferred on him by statute.

I only say that the facts stated in that report are not properly stated. They are incorrect, not that they were intended to be so, but because the committee could not give that attention to the subject which the Department had given. There were at least two bushels, half a basketful, of documents that went to that committee.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I regret very much to hear the statement made by the Senator from Colorado, in whose rectitude I have the most absolute confidence. I regret it because of the five cases mentioned by the Senator from Nevada, the only one upon which there could be any room for debate as to whether there has been a deliberate fraud is the one that I have here now.

There was in this case alone perhaps room for doubt. This man Read had a ranch which was described by metes and bounds and then as a league of land. The question was whether it was a grant by boundaries or a grant by quantity. There would be fair room for doubt on that; no man could undertake to say which was correct and which was incorrect. I admit there was a question of doubt about that all the way through, and it was because it was the strongest case on the side the Senator contends for that I was reading it to show the extreme on one side and the extreme on the other. I am sorry that the Secretary says that this does not carry absolute verity with it, because it puts the best possible phase on the side that the Senator from Nevada has been attempting to present heretofore.

Mr. TELLER. I should say that undoubtedly that was a case which might have been decided either way; but the question was the one described in the deed and, of course, the Department had to take the best light it could get and act upon its best judgment, and not upon the judgment of a committee of this body.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Exactly so; and that is precisely what I have been saying, that in this case there might have been some room for doubt, and I intended to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there were these two ideas, either one of which might govern as to this grant, but not as to the others. The Supreme Court has said the others could be determined accurately. They have been decided without variation, without a difference, by all the courts, as I understand the decisions, wherever the question has come up for consideration at all.

I will continue to the conclusion of the report of the Committee on Public Lands:

But while the committee have not been able to adopt the views of the Secretary of the Interior, they feel that the contrariety of opinion held upon the question of the extent of the grant to Read by the Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Interior creates a substantial doubt, which can most properly be settled by the adjudication of a court.

That was the point made by Mr. PLUMB. He took exactly the same opinion that the Senator from Colorado does now, and that the Attorney-General has, that there was a doubt about it, and that it would be better, that it was right and proper that a court should settle the question. It was one of those doubtful cases that could not very well be settled by an executive officer. With that conclusion I fully agree, and believe it was correct.

The committee continue:

The fact that a portion of the lands in controversy are claimed by grantees of the State of California; that patents have been issued to other portions; that still another portion is occupied by the Government as a military reservation, and that it is regarded as of great importance in a military point of view, and that settlers under the public-land laws of the United States went upon portions of the lands now claimed, but which were excluded by the first survey, and who so settled in the faith of the validity of said survey constitute cogent reasons why jurisdiction should be given to a proper court to determine speedily and finally the validity of all outstanding claims under or adverse to the grant.

The absolute fairness of that proposition addressed itself to a man of the standing, character, and ability, and absolute freedom from any desire to punish any of the enemies of this Administration that characterizes the Senator from Kansas. He concludes with these words:

The committee therefore report a bill conferring jurisdiction upon the United States circuit court for California, and requiring suit to be instituted under the direction of the Attorney-General, to which all persons in interest shall be made parties, and under the decision in which all rights will be determined.

I simply cite this to show a fair sample of these cases, and that no man could undertake to say that they were not cases in which an Attorney-General acting honestly might believe that suits ought to be brought. There is no justification for the violent onslaught made by the Senator from Nevada on the character of the Attorney-General, for in these cases facts are well understood, and, as I said in the beginning, it was to defend the Attorney-General against these assaults—assaults against his character—that I rose rather than to advert to the facts of the cases.

I wish further to say a word as to the charge made by the Senator from Nevada that the right of the Attorney-General to bring those suits had been "farmed out." That has been repeated again and again. I can not believe that the Senator means to make that charge. I think he certainly has not stopped to weigh and consider the gravity of it. I do not think he will deliberately say that he believes the Attorney-General has "farmed out" any privilege. He certainly knows the meaning of that expression, and I can not believe he will be willing to have it understood that he deliberately means to make such a charge. But he says that such has been the case, and that these suits are authorized to be brought by private parties. My colleague stated the fact to be just now that no such suits have been instituted by private parties. All the suits have been brought by officers of the Government in every instance. They have not been brought in any other way, and I take it the Senator must be fully aware of the fact.

One main point in the complaint, in the beginning, was that these suits had been instituted without a hearing to the parties. To-day, in commenting on the enormity of the outrage alleged, he mentioned that he himself had presented the facts on the other side to the Attorney-General, and he read a letter from the Attorney-General in answer to one he had written to him. He said the facts had been laid before the President, and yet, he said, the suits had been instituted without notice to the parties. It is best for a man in making charges of this sort to stick to one side or the other. It is inconsistent to say in the first place that the parties had not been heard, and in the next that the facts had been presented, and then, in direct disregard of the facts, that the suits had been instituted.

But, Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate. I only intended, as I said before, to call attention to the facts, and I only proposed to defend the Attorney-General from this charge of willful and deliberate intention to do wrong. I do not really think that the Senator believes the Attorney-General is guilty of it. I know he is not, and I am satisfied that the American people will free him from any such charge, no matter by whom or where made.

Mr. STEWART. I only want to make a few remarks further. I am perfectly aware that there is no title in California but what somebody will come here and say it is a fraud. I am perfectly aware of the fact that charges of fraud were very numerous at the time these contests were going on before the courts and before the Departments. They were hard to determine, but they were settled as well as human skill and human honesty could do. After the death of the parties papers are brought here or said to be brought here. Who knows that they are genuine? Who knows that they are true? I do not believe a word of it.

About San Francisco the property was valuable and these cases were contested inch by inch in the courts and inch by inch before the Departments. Everybody was heard. These cases were contested thirty years ago, and it is very easy now to come in here and try them in Congress after they have had their day in the courts. It is very easy to come here with ex parte statements that are true or false, with no means of testing them, and I repeat, the interested parties had their hearing at the time, and it is scandalous to give serious consideration to manufactured ex parte statements to defeat titles adjudicated more than a quarter of a century ago, when all these matters were investigated. The assumption that Thomas A. Hendricks, with the witnesses still living, all parties before him, could not locate a survey in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court as accurately as Commissioner Sparks after the witnesses are all dead is too absurd for serious consideration.

I called on the Attorney-General not to represent any fact, but to say to him that after the decision in the San Jacinto case it was my opinion (and I think it is the opinion of the Attorney-General) that these cases could do the Government no good, and they were disturbing the people. I know he is a good lawyer, he has the reputation of being so, and he knows he can not take property away from those people after thirty years of possession, after they have been allowed to occupy it as innocent purchasers. The parties who are attempting to get this land have had their day in court, and if there was fraud they should have brought suit years ago, and if they had superior Mexican land titles they could have urged them, this class of claims and pretenses having been announced by the Supreme Court as stale.

In the case of United States vs. Flint, to which we have so frequently referred, Mr. Justice Field said:

> Although, on grounds of wise public policy, no statute of limitations runs against the United States, and no laches in bringing a suit can be imputed to them, yet the facility with which the truth could originally have been shown by them if different from the finding made, the changed condition of the parties and of the property from lapse of time, the difficulty, from this cause, of meeting objections which might perhaps at the time have been readily explained, and the acquisition of interests by third parties upon faith of the decree, are elements which will always be considered by the court in determining whether it be equitable to grant the relief prayed. All the attendant circumstances of each case will be weighed, that no wrong be done to the citizen, though the Government be the suitor against him. (4 Sawy., 48, 49.)

And upon the same question of laches and delays, Judge Hoffman, in the case last cited, says:

> Nor is it necessary to determine whether the general principle that laches can not be imputed to the Government applies to cases of this nature. It may, however, be suggested as worthy of consideration whether, if the act of 1851 be construed as tacitly reserving to the United States the right to re-examine and reverse in other tribunals the decrees which that act declared should be conclusive, the second proceeding should not be regarded as a part of, or a sequel to, the first, and that in it, as in the first, the United States has consented to be bound by all the rules which control the rights of equal litigants before a court of justice.
>
> It may also be suggested whether it is not a fundamental and inherent principle of the court of equity, at whose hands relief is now sought, to refuse to interpose in behalf of stale demands, not because they are barred by the statute of limitations, nor because laches can be imputed to the complainant, but because from the lapse of time and the nature of the case it is probable that justice can not be done. If this be the true ground of the refusal of equity to interfere in such cases, no distinction can be drawn between suits by the Government and those brought by private persons. The ascertainment of the truth may be as impracticable in the one case as in the other. If this principle be applicable to any case where the Government is a party, it would seem to be so to the case at bar—so far at least as the allegations of the bill are to be proved by oral testimony. (Ibid., p. 80.)

I call particular attention to the language of Judge Sawyer, who tried the case at bar in the court below, upon the point under consideration:

> It would, in our judgment, be inequitable at this late day, considering all the circumstances of the case, to vacate the patent, even if there had been some evidence of conspiracy and fraud on the part of the officers charged. When the United States enters a court as a litigant it waives its exemption from legal proceedings and stands upon the same footing with private individuals, and, therefore, if on consideration of all the circumstances of a given case it be inequitable to grant the relief prayed against a citizen, such relief will be refused by a court of equity, though the United States be the suitor. (United States vs. Flint, 4 Sawy., 43.)

These equitable considerations have no weight with the Attorney-General against the ex parte suggestions of R. S. Thornton or his attorneys.

The Attorney-General sees no difference between a fresh case and one upon which the Government and the interested parties have slept for a generation until the property has passed into the hands of innocent purchasers and the witnesses who might have testified to the facts are dead.

One case is as good as another for the purpose of extorting money from the inhabitants. We do not charge the Attorney-General with extortion, but we do charge him with placing third parties and volunteer counsel in position to exact contributions from innocent citizens of the United States.

The patent of the United States in these cases is simply a quitclaim deed of the United States; and it is expressly provided in the law that if there is any superior title the patent shall not interfere with it. They had their day in court, but they did not want to bear the expense of taking the responsibility. They knew that they could not recover on their title. They come here and seek Congress and seek the power of the Government to take the property of their neighbors and give it to them.

How did R. D. Thornton become an agent for lands worth millions and millions and occupied by thousands of people? He could undoubtedly go and impose on a committee when nobody was paying attention, when it was one-sided; but in these cases patents were not issued in the ordinary way. When the survey was filed there had to be published notices, there had to be time for contest, all the parties came in, and I say to you, thirty years ago, when the witnesses were living, when the facts could be proved, was a better time than now, and if the Attorney-General on irresponsible stories of interested parties is to bring suits and disturb titles there will be no peace in the country; there will be no prosperity.

These slanderous, outside, ex parte statements against deliberate determinations by competent officers, with the witnesses before them and the means of getting testimony—because this was no ex parte proceeding at all—to say that they can come here and that their ex parte scandals should be repeated to the Senate of the United States to damage the title of parties who have had land awarded to them by the solemn judgment of the Interior Department thirty years ago on investigation, is absolutely intolerable.

When you come to investigate those ancient titles you will find that they are well fortified. We have had a reference to one finally acted on in the last administration. There might be some excuse for bringing a suit to correct that, because the facts are within the memory of living men and there would not be so great a hardship; but here is a gentleman who was then Secretary of the Interior, and he tells you that he weighed the facts and did the best he could then. That recent case is not such an outrage as to disturb thousands of people upon an ex parte statement about what somebody found after somebody was dead.

I did not make any representations to the Attorney-General except that these people wanted to have their titles quieted; that to disturb the California titles was wrong, and he told me he was the attorney of the Interior Department and must do as they said. I find by his correspondence that he is acting on the suggestion of a lawyer, and lawyers sometimes make strange suggestions when they are employed on a given side.

I say that it only illustrates the enormous power that is in the hands of the Attorney-General to disturb the community; and if he has all this power, if all titles are subject to be disturbed at his will, both patents to land and patents to inventions, this is a country of discretion and not of law.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Just one moment to add one fact which I am satisfied escaped the attention of the Senator from Nevada. He says these people have had their day in court. So they had. They had their day in a Mexican court, then in the district court, and after that in the Supreme Court of the United States; and in each one of these courts, and in the commission, which he forgot to mention, the decision was against their claim, and the purpose of the present suit by the Attorney-General is to confine their land to the boundary and limit set out in each one of those decisions, as to which they had their day in court. That is all there is of the case.

Mr. STEWART. Congress passed on that question twenty years ago.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to make one statement. The Senator from Nevada said that I had brought this matter up again to-day. The Senator made these charges. They were replied to by my colleague. He then responded to my colleague for I think three-quarters of an hour, and when he knew that I was going to reply at the time and place, he yielded to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] over my protest to make a motion to go into executive session, and I had no opportunity until to-day to say what I have said. One other word only——

Mr. STEWART. I want to say a word about that.

Mr. BERRY. If there is nothing in this case whatever, if there is nothing in these suits, it seems somewhat strange to me that the Senator from Nevada is so chary of an investigation. It creates a suspicion that he is so familiar with the facts that he might know that if this investigation is made it will turn out that the suit was well brought.

Mr. STEWART. Would the Senator desire a suit brought against him and his right to his homestead investigated by the Supreme Court, and be compelled to pay costs and kept in court ten years?

Mr. BERRY. If there was an allegation that I obtained it from the United States through fraud I would court such an investigation, and I would scorn to hold the land after such fraud was established.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator assumes fraud, but he is not the inventor of the charge. The lobbyist was the inventor of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 2, after the word "Attorney-General," it is proposed to insert the words "as soon as practicable and;" so as to read:

> SEC. 2. That it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General, as soon as practicable and within three years after the passage of this act, to institute, or cause to be instituted, such suit or suits, either in law or equity or both, as may be necessary and proper to assert and protect the title of the United States to said lands and remove all clouds from its title thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I regret very much that the consideration of the Des Moines bill should have been protracted before the Senate by a consideration which, while possibly germane in the general relation to the disturbance of titles by Government, has really no bearing on the merits of this case, and that its discussion carried the debaters into that, into matters of interest to them quite outside, as it seems to me, of any general discussion. I shall, however, now confine what I have to say to a very few words.

It is true, Mr. President, that one suggestion has been made by the Senator from Iowa, and only one that I can perceive, which at all disturbs the legal propositions I advanced against this bill, its method, its object, and its constitutionality; and that is that there has not itself been presented in the controversies between these competing interests and claimants a question of constitutional law arising in the State of Iowa under its constitution. I am unable to see if in any of these litigations that constitutional question of the State of Iowa was a bar to the title of the plaintiffs representing the Des Moines Navigation Company claimants, or to a defense, as the case might be, under the litigations as they arose on the part of the settlers claiming adversely to the grant from Iowa to the Des Moines Navigation Company, why it was not a necessary part of that litigation. In my judgment it is no part of the litigation; but if it could be, it was a question of law in Iowa. It did not at any time, nor does it now, affect at all the question of whether the legislation of Congress vested these lands in the State of Iowa, not whether the subordinate and subsequent grants of Iowa carried to a particular terre-tenant a title to a particular lot of land because of the action of Iowa being at variance with the constitution of Iowa.

Now, the Senator must understand that he can not contravene my proposition against this legislation unless he claims that by reason of this point all subordinate and subsequent action of that State did revest the property in the United States. Surely the United States parted with their title, and it is now asked by this legislation that they shall resume this property on the ground that the State had not power to receive it. Unless there can be found something in the legislation of the United States that interferes with the proposition I have stated, the proposition must be admitted.

What is this proposition? How does the controversy arise at all? In 1846 the grant was made by this Government to Iowa of certain lands bordering on the Des Moines River. Nobody in Iowa ever undertook to limit the extent of this Government's grant to that State. They wanted the grant to be extended up to the northern boundary. It was questionable whether the grant of 1846 carried it above Raccoon Fork. But Iowa did not contend that that statute did not carry it to the northern boundary; and when, after disputation on that subject on the part of United States authorities as to how far the grant went, and whether it did or did not stop at the Raccoon Fork—when finally the Supreme Court, in 1860, the first time the consideration of the act of Congress of 1846 came before them, decided that it did not go above the Raccoon Fork, what did the Iowa authorities do on the subject? I find a convenient form to read from Judge Miller's opinion, which I have put in a statement not to be disputed by any Iowa pretension:

As soon as this decision—

Made in 1860, which held that the grant did not extend above Raccoon Fork—

As soon as this decision was made the State, through its Congressional delegation, sought the action of the Congress of the United States to obtain the passage of an act which would secure the grant to the State and its grantees in the full extent which they believed Congress had originally intended by the act of 1846.

Then what did Congress do? It decided finally in 1862—

That the grant of lands to the then Territory of Iowa for the improvement of the Des Moines River made by the act of August 8, 1846, is hereby extended so as to include the alternate sections (designated by odd numbers) lying within 5 miles of said river, between the Raccoon Fork and the northern boundary of said State.

It extended from that time and with the intent and desire of Iowa that it should operate as from the date of 1846; and now when the execution by the Supreme Court of the United States, when by the execution of the supreme court of Iowa all these titles above Raccoon Fork are held to have passed by the operation of the law of 1862 and the joint resolution of 1861, what is brought against the Supreme Court's complete adjudication of every question of title? Why, it is said that there is a provision of the constitution of Iowa, which has been read and to which I call the attention of the Senate:

The General Assembly shall not locate any of the public lands which have been or may be granted by Congress to this State, and the location of which may be given to the General Assembly, upon lands actually settled, without the consent of the occupant.

And it is said that some legislation of Iowa has contravened their constitution in respect to the titles to particular parcels of land that are in controversy or in claim. Does the Senator say that when the Legislature of Iowa transgressed that clause of their constitution by attempting to vest in private owners some portion of the public land of the United States, that revested the title in the United States? Does any one contend for that?

Unless that is the contention, what escape is there from the proposition that the first and essential initial step in this legislation, to seize by fiat of this law every inch of property that was parted with in 1861 and 1862 and add it to the public domain, can not be taken; and now it is supposed that some technical difficulty has arisen in the agitation of these controversies. How should it be technical? It was the decision of all the State courts of Iowa, of all the Federal courts on every form of agitation, that this title was in Iowa so far as the United States was concerned, and that there did not remain any opportunity to claim it or make out title or pretension to anybody under other laws of the United States, or under any regulations or rules of law that could compete with that sovereign grant of this nation to the State; and then the lawful or unlawful grant, as it might be, of the State of Iowa subsequent to and following down the title that was conferred absolutely on that State, has no possible influence upon this proposition which I have made.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand an abstract showing the title and condition of the river lands up to January 5, 1888, as reported to the governor of the State of Iowa by the commission appointed by the fourteenth General Assembly. Here are nine pages, showing the title and deductions of the description following out every lot. A great part of them, I am glad to say, have been settled by decision or by concession, but distributed over through this mass of private litigants and private litigation each turning under the law of the land of Iowa respecting land titles and land protection, dispersed through this long catalogue (and I call the attention of the Senate to the fact), are in the second and third lines of vested interest in these several lots. Then there are mortgages made by mortgagors who received their titles from the title conferred by Iowa and by the United States, and mortgagees that have advanced their loans not to any party under the original grants or under any of the disputes or controversies, but to present holders, to the extent of $400,000. And, now, in the Senate, without any reference to these subsequent rights—not the least—it is proposed to come in and resume as a part of the public domain every inch that was parted with under the grant made years ago.

The bill then undertakes by reason of it being part of the public domain to rearrange and distribute according to its own sense of propriety and of the interests of the community these resumed lands of the public domain.

What becomes of the $400,000 of mortgages of which mortgagor and mortgagee are alike strangers to any of these considerations? Is there any reservation of them? Not the least. So far from disputing my proposition that this effort was to make a great champertous litigant of the United States to contravene its own grants, to ride down the defense of adverse possession, to ride down the title of a defendant who is to yield his land to the better title of a plaintiff, and not because of a flaw in his own, it is apparent that by this mere high act of legislation defendants are to be deprived of the right, and the plaintiffs to be clothed with complete and absolute right. Can that be done? Can it be useful to be done? But that is the purpose of the legislation itself. Now, what did the President say? I will read but a few words from his veto on that subject. On the point of comparing the method of the bill No. 287 and my method by the bill which I have introduced, the number of which is 1469, the President says:

It seems to me that all controversies which can hereafter arise between those claiming these lands have been fairly remitted to the State of Iowa, and that there they can be properly and safely left; and the Government, through its Attorney-General, should not be called upon to litigate the rights of private parties.

It is not pleasant to contemplate loss threatened to any party acting in good faith, caused by uncertainty in the language of laws or their conflicting interpretation; and if there are persons occupying these lands who labor under such disabilities as prevent them from appealing to the courts for a redress of their wrongs, a plain statute, directed simply to a remedy for such disabilities, would not be objectionable.

Should there be meritorious cases of hardship and loss, caused by an invitation on the part of the Government to settle upon lands apparently public, but to which no right nor lawful possession can be secured, it would be better, rather than to attempt a disturbance of titles already settled, to ascertain such losses and do equity by compensating the proper parties through an appropriation for that purpose.

A law to accomplish this very object was passed by Congress in the year 1873. Valuable proof is thus furnished by the only law ever passed upon the subject of the manner in which it was thought proper by the Congress at that time to meet the difficulties suggested by the bill now under consideration.

And now the Senator from Iowa asks me why I did not bring in a bill to indemnify the purchasers and holders under the Des Moines navigation grant. Has the Senator introduced any such proposition on his part? Has the State of Iowa, that has undertaken to grasp these lands, proposed to indemnify its grantees and their subsequent grantees? Not they. Instead of these two great, powerful, and wealthy governments, one of Iowa and one of the United States, between whom the fault of these misfortunes rests, proposing to undertake the solution of these difficulties and bear the burden, however great it may be, it is proposed to unsettle the question of title which the law has pronounced valid, and to unsettle and reverse litigations and adjudications, and do it in the name of the United States, to its great shame, without one penny of compensation to the parties injured thereby.

This is called a bill "to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands," and it begins by unsettling everything back to a date further than 1862, further than 1861, back to 1858, back to 1846, in reagitation of these settlers. Why did they not stop in this new agitation with cases already settled by decision? Why did they not make the decisions final that were made prior to 1880? There is the point. How is it that after 1880 there is to be considered an open possession by the United States of land that was open to pre-emption and homestead settlers so that settlers are to earn a title after that? I have never heard of it before. A new settler, a new claimant on the land, and it is intended that he shall have title though it had been conveyed after 1862, after Iowa, by its governor, by its Senators, by its Representatives, had asked that the title should be carried up to the northern boundary. Iowa has now no title to the lands here in question. If these lands are added to the public domain under this bill, you simply renew litigation arising out of what Iowa has done.

Mr. President, a very eminent lawyer in our State—I mean Mr. Thomas Addis Emmet, the great Irish lawyer, who came here and became a great American lawyer—said to some of the great lawyers in the city of New York fifty or sixty years ago, when they were complaining that law business was not prosperous, that litigation was not active, "let us," said Mr. Emmet, "let us get the Legislature to pass a law quieting title."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, the Senator from New York seems to have difficulty in understanding how it is that the State of Iowa did not take title under the act of 1846 to the land on which settlers had made claim. I might ask the Senator this question: Suppose that in the constitution of Iowa there was a provision declaring that it should be unlawful for the State to receive any grant of land whatsoever from the United States, and with that provision existing the Congress of the United States should have made a grant to the State of Iowa similar to the one that was made in the act of 1846, will the Senator contend that the State of Iowa derived title under a grant of that kind? In order to have a grant you must have a grantor who is competent to make the grant and a grantee who is competent to receive it; and if you do not have both, the thing attempted to be granted remains in the grantor and no title has passed.

Under the provision of the constitution of the State of Iowa it could not receive any land under any grant made by the United States on which there was a settler located. How did the State get its title under the act of 1846? Merely by force of the act? No, it required certain other things to be done; selections were to be made, the lists to be presented to the Secretary of the Interior, and by his action upon those lists the title was conveyed to the State of Iowa. The selection must be made before the lists were formulated and presented to the Secretary; and what does this provision of the constitution of Iowa say? It says:

> The General Assembly shall not locate any of the public lands which have been or may be granted by Congress to this State and the location of which may be given to the General Assembly upon lands actually settled, without the consent of the occupant.

The State of Iowa could not select and list those lands and take the title without the consent of the occupant, and every section or part of section embraced in the approved lists upon which a settler was located remained in the United States, because the State of Iowa was incompetent under its constitution to take it.

The Senator from New York says that if we allow this provision of the constitution of Iowa to control our action here, as it controls the action of the State, you are going to unsettle all the titles to lands embraced within the limits of that grant. We are going to do no such thing, Mr. President. On the contrary, the bill proposes to settle the controversies, for it provides—

> That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said land prior to January, 1880, not exceeding 160 acres, are hereby confirmed and made valid in them, their heirs, or their proper assigns, and upon due proof thereof, and payment of the usual price or fees, where the same has not been paid, shall be carried to patent: Provided further, That the title of all bona fide claimants under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, settled upon the said lands prior to January, 1880, are confirmed and made valid.

So that the effect of the bill will be to cover all of the sections within the grant, first providing for a judicial determination as to who were entitled to receive title, and in all other cases where there is no conflict of claim the titles to be confirmed in the possessors. What we want in Iowa is a settlement of this controversy. The settlers ask it. They only ask that it may be a judicial settlement that shall terminate all controversy hereafter.

But the Senator from New York says that mortgages have been created and mortgagors and mortgagees are interested. Well, Mr. President, I suppose that on every tract of this land where a settler was located and in actual possession the conditions of the law relating thereto were embraced and were constructive notice to the people who issued the mortgages. And the fact is that the mortgages are largely held by the same class of persons; they were bought by speculators who made their arrangement with Iowa, never performed it, and today insist on turning these hardy settlers from their homes.

Now, Mr. President, I should like to have a vote on the bill in order that it may be determined and the Senate may pass to other matters, and to promote my convenience, which I have heretofore stated to the Senate, and which involves my absence from the city after Saturday next.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa reiterates the point that there must be a grantor and a grantee. The United States is admitted to be a grantor. It is admitted, I suppose, that the State of Iowa is in its constitution a political corporate existence capable of taking a grant.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Not where its constitution has said that it shall not.

Mr. EVARTS. I have not said that. I have simply said that it can take a grant. Now, here is the initial act.

> By the act of Congress of August 8, 1846 (9 U. S. Stat. at Large, page 77), there was "granted to the Territory of Iowa, for the purpose of aiding said Territory to improve the navigation of the Des Moines River from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork (so called) in said Territory, one equal moiety, in alternate sections, of the public lands remaining unsold and not otherwise disposed of, encumbered, or appropriated, in a strip 5 miles in width on each side of said river, to be selected within said Territory by an agent or agents to be appointed by the governor thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States."

Now, we have a good grantee and a good grantor, and a grantor that had a good title; and the only dispute raised was whether this grant stopped at the Raccoon Fork or went up to the northern boundary. Iowa always claimed that it went up to the boundary, and we extended it in 1862 up to the boundary. The Supreme Court has decided that these statutory grants vest in the State, by the operation of the law, property, and that the assignment of the special parcels of land is all that remains to be done, which is left to location, as it were, by a surveyor to determine the parcels. So this notion, this new-found rule of law, that Iowa did not take this or that parcel of land, although the governor, although the surveyor, although the Senators and the Representatives of Iowa took the patents from the Land Office and, therefore, those lands were left in the United States is a fallacy, because the lands had been parted with as between the United States and the State. It was the transaction of an allocation between that government and this; and if that State was responsible to any settler who should be ousted under that title it was a responsibility that the State was to answer.

Has the State of Iowa—I ask the attention of Senators to it—that now says it was not a grantee, ever offered to compensate those to whom it granted these lands? It received the consideration for them and is responsible to the litigants under its title, as we are responsible to the litigants under any responsibility of ours.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question, as I do not know that I quite understand him? I understand him to say that the indemnification should in justice come from the State of Iowa rather than from the United States. Is that his position?

Mr. EVARTS. The indemnification to the settler should come either from Iowa or the United States. I submit, Mr. President, this situation for the action of the Senate. If this bill passes and is sanctioned in the other House and becomes a law by the approval of the President, it will remain one of your laws that is against the Constitution, and in the face of deliberate declarations of the Supreme Court of the United States by its own chosen jurist, Justice Miller, speaking for the whole court in this matter. It is decided, as the President has said to you, as the Judiciary Committee said to the Senate in the Forty-sixth Congress, it has passed out of the range of legislation, and now rests in the authority of the administration of law.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to submit a proposition? I expect to leave the city in the morning, and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has been called away this afternoon. Yesterday he made a request that I should ask the Senate to take up a bill which, if not passed in the next few days, will amount to nothing. It is a bill extending the time for the construction of the bridge across the Kill-von-Kull by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. The limitation which Congress put on the bill will expire in three or four days from this time. It is a matter, therefore, of extreme importance that the time should be extended. I think there is no opposition to it whatever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent to consider the bill named by him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator from Missouri whether this involves the difficulty with the engineers about that water way?

Mr. VEST. Not at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not affect that question either way?

Mr. VEST. Not at all. That is now in the hands of the Committee on Commerce, who are examining into it. This simply extends, subject to their report, the time for the construction of the bridge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. ALLISON. I enter an objection now, which I will withdraw immediately after the passage of the pending bill.

Mr. EVARTS. This is obviously a bill that ought to be passed now, if there is no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the bill read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I object. I will withdraw the objection when the pending bill is passed. Let us settle the Des Moines land bill.

Mr. CALL. It is not my purpose to detain the Senate, but to say that I think this bill is one which ought to receive careful consideration as a remarkable case. The record here presents a case where citizens of the United States were in possession of part of the public domain under the protection of the laws of the United States, with the further guaranty of the constitutional provision of the State of Iowa that their possession should not be interfered with. That provision in the organic law of the State—that the State should have no power to acquire from the United States their land—was a provision of the organic law as wise as it was unusual. The law executed itself, and was notice to every one that the State of Iowa could not select this man's home under any grant from the United States, and yet it is claimed that the State did select it and conveyed it to others.

Now, what is the significance of those facts? We profess to have a republican government, a government of law, and yet the law is defied; and at whose instance is it defied in respect to these poor men upon an insignificant portion of the public domain, with the national power pledged to their protection, and with the sovereign power of the State in a constitutional provision surrounding their homesteads with the absolute guaranty that there shall be no power in the State organization to interfere with them? And yet it is done, and for thirty years these people, with this statement of facts literally true, can find no redress either in the courts or in the Congress of the United States.

Why, Mr. President, it seems to me that here is a question upon which there can be no argument on the other side, and I venture to say there can be no sound argument nor reasonable ground for it. The Government derives its power entirely from the people and its organic law, and if that organic law, as is clearly and unmistakably shown, has provided that the possession of the citizen, an actual settler upon the public lands of the United States, shall be guarantied to him, and that there shall be no power in the State government to interfere with it, who can doubt the effect and meaning of this language; and if a court, even if the Supreme Court of the country, shall undertake to pass judgment in defiance of the Constitution and the laws, and to assert that there is no such provision, and that this language has no such force and effect, what is the consequence?

Is there any function or power in the judicial department of the Government to overthrow the Constitution and nullify the laws, and make this then unlawful judgment not only binding on the property and on the parties in the particular case, but also on the legislative power and on the executive power of the Government? If so, the Government can easily be subverted, and a written Constitution is of no value and gives no protection to the people.

Is it binding upon the judgment of the co-ordinate Departments of the Government? Have we arrived at the point where it is openly maintained here that the decision of the Supreme Court destroys the Constitution and destroys our conscientious duty under oath to obey its provisions? There can be no such claim as that. But there have been hundreds of millions of acres of the public domain that have passed away, and all passed from the people and to those who are purchasers for profit, purchasers upon speculation, to great corporations and great organizations, and all the time and always the instrumentalities of government are found to be in favor of these great interests and opposed to the people.

I am in favor of protecting the interests of property, but I am not in favor of protecting the interests of property created under decisions of the courts which are unreasonable and not warranted by the law and by the Constitution. I would prefer to vote $10,000,000 and more out of the public Treasury to indemnify these persons, if by neglect or improper conduct of any of the Departments of the Government they have been injured in their property rights, than to take away from these settlers the homes that have been guarantied to them not only by the national law, but by the constitution of the State of Iowa. I wish, in giving my vote on this subject, to express in my place as a Senator my disapproval of that whole course of administration and of judicial action which has found a warrant where neither facts nor reason justify it to take away from the people their humble homes on the public domain in the supposed interest of great corporations or great associations of credit. No one will go farther than I in protecting the rights of property, but it should be at the expense of the National Treasury instead of at the expense of the poor people who make their homes on the public domain, under the pledge and guaranty of national authority that their homes shall be protected and guarantied to them.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. EVARTS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I am paired on this bill with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. EVARTS (when Mr. HISCOCK'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HISCOCK] was obliged to leave the Senate on some occasion, and is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]. My colleague, if present, would vote "nay," and the Senator from Texas, I understand, would vote "yea."

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FARWELL (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], and withdraw my vote.

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. HARRIS. Is the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] recorded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. HARRIS. I withhold my vote. I do not know how that Senator would vote. I should vote "nay," if he were present.

Mr. FAULKNER (after having voted in the affirmative). I thought the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] was present, but I find he is not present. I therefore ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia withdraws his vote.

Mr. FAULKNER. My colleague [Mr. KENNA] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. BROWN (after having voted in the negative). I voted in this case supposing that, it not being a political question, there would be no pairs announced; but as pairs have been announced, I wish to state that I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER]. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia withdraws his vote.

Mr. BOWEN. I have transferred my pair, and vote "yea."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I was under the impression that the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] was paired with me.

Mr. EVARTS. No, with the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. BECK. I announce my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allison,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,
Bate,	Colquitt,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Berry,	Davis,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Blair,	Dawes,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Bowen,	George,	Payne,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Ingalis,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa.

NAYS—11.

Blackburn,	Edmunds,	Hampton,	Vest,
Cullom,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Wilson of Md.
Dolph,	Gray,	Vance,

ABSENT—37.

Aldrich,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Beck,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Frye,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Butler,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Stanford,
Call,	Hale,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Cameron,	Harris,	Platt,	Walthall.
Chace,	Hawley,	Quay,
Daniel,	Hearst,	Ransom,
Eustis,	Hiscock,	Reagan,

So the bill was passed.

CLAIMS FOR BOUNTY, BACK PAY, ETC.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate a statement of the amount due each claimant for bounty, back pay, and other allowances, whose claim has been allowed in whole or in part since the commencement of the present session of Congress, and not already reported by him to Congress.

BRIDGE ACROSS STATEN ISLAND SOUND.

Mr. VEST. I now ask the Senate to take up for consideration Order of Business 288, being House bill 5929.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5929) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across Staten Island Sound. It provides that the further time of one year from and after the 16th day of June, 1888, shall be allowed to the Staten Island Rapid Transit Railroad Company and the Baltimore and New York Railroad Company, or either of them, to build the bridge across the Staten Island Sound or Arthur Kill, from New Jersey to Richmond County, New York, pursuant to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound," known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road, passed the 16th day of June, 1886.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by adding:

But this act shall have no other effect whatever than to operate as if the time herein mentioned had been embraced in the said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. COKE, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. DOLPH were appointed.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE AT GUNTERSVILLE, ALA.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senate to take up for consideration House bill 8623.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8623) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 11, after the word "companies," to insert "upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the parties, and if they can not agree then as the same shall be determined by the Secretary of War;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States, or passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroad or public highways leading to the said bridge; and it shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States. And equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all companies upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the parties, and if they can not agree then as the same shall be determined by the Secretary of War; and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge and its approaches for postal-telegraph purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 31, before the word "court," to strike out "district" and insert "circuit;" and in line 32, after the words "Alabama in," to strike out "which" and insert "whose territorial jurisdiction;" so as to read:

No bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and all such alterations shall be made and all such obstructions be removed at the expense of the owner or owners of said bridge; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the cause may be brought in the circuit court of the United States of the State of Alabama in whose territorial jurisdiction any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 17, after the word "built," to strike out—

And should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War,

And insert—

And if any change is required by the Secretary of War in the plan of said bridge, whilst the same is in process of construction, or after its completion, or if the entire removal of said bridge is required by him at any time, the cost of such change or removal shall be paid by the company owning or controlling said bridge.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built or located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile above and 1 mile below the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the currents at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built. And if any change is required by the Secretary of War in the plan of said bridge, whilst the same is in process of construction, or after its completion, or if the entire removal of said bridge is required by him at any time, the cost of such change or removal shall be paid by the company owning or controlling said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. COKE, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. DOLPH were appointed.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. BECK. I desire before the Senate adjourns to have a short executive session. I do not desire now to interfere with the bills which are being passed, but I hope before we adjourn we shall have an executive session.

SITE FOR NAVAL STATION ON PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 8) providing for the appointment of a commission to select a site for a naval station on the Pacific coast.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. The reading of the preamble may be omitted, as it is reported to be stricken out.

The joint resolution was read.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in section 2, line 2, before the words "thousand dollars," to insert "one;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That to defray the expenses of such commission the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Instead of submitting remarks of my own on this important subject, I ask that the letter which I hold in my hand from the Admiral of the Navy may be inserted in the RECORD without reading. It is rather lengthy. I also submit a letter of the Secretary of the Navy in reply to one from me, to be printed in the same way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon desires to have certain letters printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ADMIRAL, Washington, D. C., March 15, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Any one who takes an interest in our possessions on the Northwest coast, especially in the inland waters, including the straits of Fuca, Puget Sound, etc., will observe that here is the grandest collection of islands, inlets, bays, and harbors that is to be found in the United States. The climate is unsurpassed and the productions of the surrounding country in lumber, coal, and other minerals are unexcelled. If it is desirable to establish a naval station on any part of our Pacific coast, this is undoubtedly the place. The Bay of San Francisco, California, is the only place on the coast where a navy-yard could be established without a vast expenditure for breakwaters, etc., except the waters of Puget Sound, and here nature has offered so many facilities that it would be sheer folly to look elsewhere.

The climate of that part of our country is much milder than in the corresponding latitudes on the eastern coast, where for one-fifth of the year very little work can be done owing to inclement weather. Nature has destined this region to be the future seat of a great population, and in a few years emigrants pushing their way to the Northwest will people this beautiful section and render it absolutely necessary that the Government should do something for its protection. The British, who are quick to improve important positions, have of late years given much attention to their naval establishment at Esquimalt, on Vancouver Island, which was originally selected at the time of the Crimean war.

The value of this station has been much enhanced by the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. Every large gun that has been sent from England in the last three years for the heavy fortifications now being built has been transported over this road. All the stores, implements of war, machinery, in fact everything wanted for a navy is no longer shipped around Cape Horn, but is transmitted via the Canadian Pacific. This gives Great Britain a vast preponderance along the whole line of our Northwestern possessions, the command of the Strait of Fuca, Gulf of Georgia, Puget Sound, Admiralty Inlet, and Hood's Canal, placing at their mercy all that magnificent chain of islands, inlets, bays, and rivers for which this region is so famous.

So important has British Columbia become that already two great lines of steam-ships have been established from the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railroad at Vancouver, one to Hong Kong and Japan, the other to Australia. One of these will flood the country with Chinese emigrants, and the other will bring a large and worthless population from Australia, which, settling in British Columbia and encroaching on our territory, that portion commanded by British guns will pass out of our hands. Hence it becomes of vital importance to establish in this region one of the largest naval depots, to say nothing of military posts, for the defense of the coast, which will confine intruders to their legitimate domain.

I do not hesitate to say that the late rapid movements of the British Government in strengthening their naval depot at Esquimalt, building heavy works commanding the Strait of Fuca, indicates a policy antagonistic to the United States, namely, to obtain possession of that territory which they claimed in 1858. At that time the British contended for the Strait of Rosario as a boundary, instead of the Strait of Haro, which would have given them the command of our entire Northwestern coast. Now, although the British have a prominent position, and actually control the islands eastward of the Strait of Haro, or Admiralty Inlet and Puget Sound, unless we are willing they should do so, these great inland waters, on our side offer a better position by far for defensive purposes than the navy-yard in California, and form a half-way house between California and Alaska, which, although popularly supposed to be a region of Arctic cold, is really a very valuable country.

Unfortunately the coast of Oregon does not offer any proper site for a navy-yard. The few harbors are inaccessible in bad weather, and it would cost a large amount to make them available. The bar of the Columbia River is the great obstacle in that quarter. Therefore, the only points north of California for this purpose are in the inland waters known under the general name of Puget Sound. In Admiralty Inlet a navy-yard could be established far beyond the reach of an enemy's guns, up straits easily defended by fortifications and torpedoes, and unassailable by any forces an enemy might attempt to land from ships of war.

For many years Great Britain has had an eye on the Sandwich Islands, which, if in her possession, would hold the same position in regard to our Northwestern coast that Bermuda holds to our Eastern coast; but having so far failed in her design in that quarter, she has now selected a site for a naval station which is a constant menace to our shores. England never does anything without an object. One motive is to get possession of the whole trade of China and Japan, and have, via the Canadian Pacific Railroad, the shortest route to Europe. Another motive is to keep a large military and naval force to protect nominally what are called "British interests," but really to facilitate encroachments upon the territory of the United States. Here we permit a great and grasping rival to establish a powerful naval station right between us and our possessions in Alaska without taking any steps ourselves in the same direction.

The latter territory being so far away may not be regarded as important by the generality of our citizens, but it cost this country over $7,000,000; has a territory larger than California, Texas, and Colorado combined; contains the finest seal preserves; the finest salmon fisheries; inexhaustible supplies of other food-fishes, and magnificent timber, while gold is found and doubtless in future will be discovered in large quantities. The degree of cold in winter on the coast is not greater than that between Washington and New York. It is a healthy country and well worth retaining. Alaska can not depend for protection on a navy-yard as far distant as that at Mare Island. Indeed our whole coast from San Diego to Behring's Straits may be considered as wholly unprotected.

However, it is not materially different from the condition of our Atlantic coast. As a rule we give no protection to anything, and the 3,600,000 square miles of territory we have amassed depends alone for safety on that Providence which has heretofore looked out for creeping babies, drunken sailors, and the United States of America. Within a few years a commercial emporium must grow up at the western terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, which will have the protection of the naval station at Vancouver Island with a fleet to command all the waters of Puget Sound, and, consequently, every harbor of our inland waters will be at the mercy of British guns should such a misfortune happen as a war between Great Britain and the United States.

When a nation holds valuable possessions she owes it to her people to give them all the protection necessary, unless, like Cicero, they may consider that peace on any terms is better than war, even although subjected to the greatest humiliation. If we take such a view of the case, we need give ourselves no trouble about protecting anything, and can adopt for our motto the old saying that everything comes to him who can afford to wait. Under this rule we have obtained great success, having waited so many years for the fortification of our coasts and the augmentation of our naval forces.

It is sometimes argued that we have already too many navy-yards, but such an idea is only advanced by those who do not comprehend the subject. Navy-yards are the foundation of a navy, and without them, especially under the present system of heavy armor clads, a naval force would be useless, for private citizens do not, as a rule, build docks sufficient to take eight and ten thousand ton ships out of the water. We have, in fact, only the following-named yards that can be of service at any time: Portsmouth, N. H., Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Norfolk, and Mare Island. All the others mentioned as "navy-yards" or naval stations can never be of any use. Some of them have never had a spade driven into them, and time has shown that Pensacola, the nearest approach to a navy-yard among our minor stations, is entirely useless in its present condition.

We make a poor showing on the Eastern and Southern coasts, but ten times worse on the Western coast, where in a distance of more than 5,000 miles there is but one navy-yard, badly equipped and with small yearly appropriations. Even the dry-dock, which was commenced many years ago, is not completed. As a strategic point a navy-yard in Puget Sound would be much more valuable than the one at Mare Island, because it would be in a central position. It could be built cheaper and be more easily defended, and, as I have said before, has all the materials necessary and at low rates. There are many points in Admiralty Inlet where positions could be found with 2 miles of water-front, if necessary, and instead of building heavy stone docks, the water-front need only be faced with piles and the largest ships-of-war would have plenty of water.

The dry-dock at Mare Island has, up to date, cost $3,000,000, and has been in process of construction for sixteen years. For that amount of money we could build in Puget Sound six dry-docks that would accommodate the largest vessels. No practical man with our present knowledge would think of building a stone dry-dock where timber was abundant, for it has been proved that a dry-dock of timber will answer all the purposes of a stone one and can be more easily repaired.

The Northwest coast is amply supplied with stone quarries from which the buildings could be erected, and all the materials brought by water directly to the site of the navy-yard. The idea of constructing a navy-yard in this region is not, as many might suppose, a political scheme. A number of the so-called "navy-yards" on the Eastern coasts were simply sops to Cerberus to gratify some faction or section. Hence they have never been of any particular service, nor ever will be in war or in peace; but a navy-yard on Puget Sound is an absolute necessity if we wish to maintain a position as a naval power or show any disposition to defend our territory against encroachment.

British statesmen have been much shrewder than our own, for it will be remembered that before the treaty regarding the boundary between the two countries was concluded, the former contended so warmly for the southern end of Vancouver's Island that the line was deflected in order to give it to them and with it the command of the Strait of Fuca, whereas had we insisted on the boundary line of 49° being continued to the ocean we should have both shores of the strait. In spite of our concession, the British subsequently claimed the Strait of Rosario as the main ship-channel and boundary between the mainland and Vancouver's Island, and it was almost a case of war because we declined to yield anything more. The Emperor of Germany as arbitrator decided the point in our favor, and the Strait of Haro is the settled boundary. No doubt the British will eventually fortify the Saturna Islands, off the southeastern point of Vancouver's Island, so that the Straits of Fuca and Haro will be hermetically sealed by British guns.

When the Russians owned Alaska, in the harbors of which they had several naval stations, Great Britain might naturally want a dock-yard hence to carry on war against Russian territory, with a place to retire in case of disaster. This was exactly what the English fleet did after being driven off by the Russians at Petropauloski. They went to Esquimalt and there refitted their vessels. Although the British considered Esquimalt a naval station as far back as the opening of the Crimean war, it is only within the last few years that they have devoted their attention to making it a great naval depot.

To-day a line of railroad all along the boundary of our territory is in operation capable of supplying any number of British posts, and at the end of it is a great naval depot that dominates our whole Northwestern coast. This is a piece of strategy worthy a great nation, and we can not help admiring the wisdom and energy which has designed and executed such a plan, while deprecating the consequences which would result to our unprotected frontier in case of war with so vigilant and powerful an enemy.

The nation with whom we would be most likely to go to war is Great Britain, for the boundary between the two nations is of such vast extent, a mere geographical line marked with piles of stones which time will soon obliterate, and we are so curiously interwoven that when Washington Territory begins to fill up and overflow and our people encroach on the territory of Great Britain, with their numerous Chinese inhabitants brought over in their lines of steamers, there will no doubt arise sufficient provocatives of war to which, if we remain in our present defenseless state, the British would not object.

The British Government witnesses with alarm the great advancement we are making in our territory, and the very fact of their building up a great naval station at Esquimalt, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railroad, so heavily subsidized by them, shows an intent to which no one can take exception, but which must be considered an offensive act, for under present circumstances of peaceful relations between the two countries such extensive preparations do not seem to be necessary. England never fortifies a position without an intention to dominate over every place where her guns can reach, and hence where she undertakes to fortify the important points commanding the waters of a neighboring state it is incumbent on that state to do likewise.

There is no doubt of one thing. Great Britain has outwitted us in all this treaty matter by obtaining important points along the boundary of our territory. Had we adhered to our original demand of 54° 40′; Great Britain would not to-day have the Canadian Pacific Railroad, for she would have no seaport on the Northwest coast. Our shore-line would have been continuous from Lower California to Behring's Straits, but the statesmanship which secured in 1846 what properly belonged to the United States has done us an irreparable injury, and a competing line of railroad has been built and equipped in a manner exceeded by no other in the world.

"Upon the arrival of each train at Vancouver, the Pacific terminus, a steamer connects for Victoria, the capital of British Columbia. At either Vancouver or Victoria connection is made every day for the seaport towns on Puget Sound and in Oregon, and on nearly every day for San Francisco. At frequent intervals steamers depart for China and Japan, saving one-third in both time and distance over those sailing from San Francisco. Thus a new way around the world has been opened. Every fortnight a fine steamer leaves Vancouver for a tour of Alaska waters; sailing all the way in tranquil sounds and straits protected by outer islands, entering mountain-girdled fiords, and threading channels where glaciers dip into the surf—scenes beside which the shores of Norway have no comparison for grandeur."

Thus Great Britain has secured the shortest route to the East Indies—thirty days from Hong-Kong to Liverpool—through the Canadian snows and mountains, where it was never imagined the inhabitants had sufficient energy for such a gigantic undertaking, and which, indeed, would never have been accomplished but for British subsidies. While we, who started in the race for China, via the California Pacific Railroad, can not accomplish the distance from Hong-Kong to New York in less than thirty-four days. Our descendants will naturally wonder why our statesmen should have allowed a country which was ours by right to slip through their fingers; it is to be hoped that they will not have to wonder still more that the statesmen of to-day omitted to establish on the territory that still remains to us naval and military works that will defend our country from aggression and be a nucleus by which thousands of people will be attracted to the beautiful Northwest shores.

There is one essential in which the representatives of the people are very deficient, that is, in fortifying the principal points of our extensive coast and building naval depots at proper sites. Here is a case in point where a great naval depot should be established well up one of those capacious inlets where an enemy's guns can not reach, and where the station could be so well fortified below that no force of hostile ships could pass up to destroy it. To show how little attention we pay to such defenses, I inclose herewith an extract from my last annual report to the honorable Secretary of the Navy. It illustrates the pains taken by Great Britain to occupy the strongest points in her territories by military forces, and how much she does towards diverting desirable emigrants from the United States into her dominions, every man who settles under the British flag knowing that he is certain to be protected in all his rights. I also inclose herewith an extract from the report of Commander Charles Wilkes, commanding the United States exploring expedition (1840-'41). Commander Wilkes was an explorer of great ability, and gives an accurate picture of the country under discussion.

I have said more in this communication than may be pertinent to the subject of building a navy-yard on the Northwest coast, and hope you will excuse me if I have gone too far into the matter, and will attribute it to the interest I feel in this great project, and to a hope that it may awaken in the minds of others that feeling of loyalty to their country which has so distinguished you in this connection.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

DAVID D. PORTER,
Admiral United States Navy.

Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate.

[Extract from the report of the Admiral of the Navy to the Secretary of the Navy, 1887.]

We have so much to do in the way of building forts and ships and making guns for the land and naval defenses, and have so little time to do it all in, that it will be well to compare our national defenses with those of some other power, to show what others have done while we have been taking our repose. Our people seem to think that we are so far removed from Europe that we are beyond the reach of its armies and navies, forgetting that it is possible to step on board one of the great ocean greyhounds at New York on Monday morning and land in England on Saturday night; and although we might not be assailed quite so rapidly as that, the mere fact that it takes so little time under favorable circumstances to cross the Atlantic shows how short is the distance between ourselves and the possessors of the heaviest ships and guns.

We may keep clear of entangling alliances, but no matter what our desires may be, we can not avoid complications with foreign powers. We have an experience of this sort at the present time, and no one can tell whether the small cloud now gathering on the eastern horizon may not soon extend over the whole heavens. War often comes when least expected, and even when anticipated those who look forward to it can hardly realize that it is coming until it is upon them. For the event of war we are no more prepared than we were a year ago, although it is true we have made a beginning to repair simply the waste in our Navy for the last twenty-five years.

To show how little attention is paid to the defense of our coasts, I beg leave to exhibit to you, for the purpose of contrast, the weight that is attached to these matters abroad. The statement will show the country how much behindhand we are in regard to that on which our honor and safety depends as compared with those even who have less at stake than ourselves.

To take Great Britain as an example, with the coasts and harbors of the British Islands included, between latitude 5° and 59° north, and longitude 2° east and 11° west. The area of the British Islands is 115,840 square miles, while that of the United States is 3,602,990 square miles; that is, the size of these islands, the center of the imperial power, is thirty-one times less than the area of the United States. Please notice the difference in the care taken to protect the homes of British subjects from that given to guard the citizens of the United States, who, relying on the protection that they suppose will be afforded them, have built up great cities all along our coast and dotted the intermediate territory with homesteads, all of which are at the mercy of a foreign foe.

The geographical situation of the British islands gives them a guaranty of independence and protection to their inhabitants greater than any other people enjoy, but this would not avail were it not for the indomitable energy of the Britons, who, occupying a strong position in the first place, have left nothing undone to render it impregnable. The same reasons that exist for the elaborate defenses of Great Britain obtain in this country in an equal degree. We are very much alike in many respects, both being naturally great commercial nations, desirous to carry our products to every part of the world. Great Britain succeeding in all she undertakes, and we constantly failing for want of that governmental protection which every people have a right to claim.

Great Britain is separated from the continent of Europe by a wide moat, which enables her to defy attack. Her principal ports bristle with guns of the latest pattern, mounted on the most approved fortifications, while the moat and its surroundings are guarded by the following:

Class.	Number of vessels.	Number of guns.
Armored turret ships	26	171
Armored barbette ships	9	90
Armored casemate ships	10	157
Belted cruisers	8	93
Torpedo rams	2	2
Unarmored cruisers	62	724
Gun-vessels and cruising gunboats	65	271
Gunboats for coast and river service	40	64
Total	222	1,572

These embrace all classes from the 110-ton (16½ inch) to the 20-pounder howitzer. In addition the English navy is provided with 153 torpedo-vessels of all classes, some of which are armed with small rifled cannon (6-inch or less), and nearly all carry machine guns. It will be observed that no account is taken of the older classes of ships, of which, according to a French author, there are 339 steamers and 120 sailing ships fully capable of giving a good account of themselves.

The United States is separated from Europe by a wide moat, but this, instead of being a protection, is a disadvantage. The ocean affords a highway upon which, unseen until close upon us, an enemy can marshal his hosts and attack us in fifty vulnerable points at once. A war against us would terminate very quickly, as, without ships or guns, what could we do?

The forces charged with the defense of Great Britain's impregnable fortresses comprise the coast-guard fleet, the Channel fleet, and the land defenses, which are at all times ready for service, and are never permitted to fall off in strength or efficiency. This system may be compared to that of a city with policemen on their beats, while ours is like the old plan, where superannuated watchmen dozed away a night on a doorstep. The movable land forces of Great Britain are confined to special troops always ready to be forwarded to threatened points at short notice. The Channel fleet constitutes a reserve of heavy armor-clads, torpedo-vessels, and fast dispatch-vessels, ready at all times to proceed to any indicated point. Under these circumstances, the British can afford to await attack, while their naval forces elsewhere are ready to add their strength to these above mentioned. Any attempt made by a foreign power against the British Islands would probably result in the destruction of the attacking fleet, which might not even have the opportunity to bombard the land fortifications or throw destructive missiles into the seaboard cities.

[Extract from the report of Commander Charles Wilkes, commanding the United States Exploring Expedition. 1840-41.]

Nothing can surpass the beauty of these waters and their safety. Not a shoal exists within the straits of Juan de Fuca, Admiralty Inlet, or Hood's Canal that can in any way interrupt their navigation by a 74-gun ship. I venture nothing in saying that there is no country in the world that possesses waters equal to these; they cover an area of about 2,000 square miles. The shores of all its inlets and bays are remarkably bold, so much so that a ship's side would strike the shore before her keel would touch the ground.

The country by which these waters are surrounded is remarkably salubrious, and affords every advantage for the accommodation of a vast commercial and military marine, with convenience for docks, and a great many sites for towns and cities, at all times well supplied with water, and capable of being well provided with everything by the surrounding country, which is well adapted for agriculture.

The Straits of Juan de Fuca are 95 miles in length and have an average width of 11 miles. At the entrance (3 miles in width) no danger exists, and it may be safely navigated throughout.

No part of the world affords finer islands, sounds, or a greater number of harbors than are found within the Straits of Juan de Fuca, capable of receiving the largest class of vessels and without a danger in them that is not visible. From the rise and fall of the tide (18 feet), every facility is afforded for the erection of works for a great maritime nation.

The country also affords as many sites for water power as any other.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 16, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter requesting an expression of the views of this Department and such recommendation as it may deem advisable with reference to the propriety of the legislation contemplated by the resolution S. R. 8, a copy of which accompanies your letter, and which provides for the appointment of a commission to select a site for a naval station on the Pacific coast.

The duty of selecting a suitable site for an additional navy-yard at some point on that portion of the Pacific Coast which is embraced in the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington and Alaska could, in the opinion of the Department, be satisfactorily performed in the manner indicated by the resolution, namely, by a commission composed of three competent naval officers, acting under instructions framed in accordance with the requirements of the resolution, whose duty it would be, among other things, to make a careful examination of the coast-line, the several indentations thereof, the comparative advantages or disadvantages of the several inlets, bays, or harbors existing on the coast with reference to the depth of water and the fluctuations of the tide, and also with reference to convenient access by land and speedy communication with interior points by rail. It is also probable that the performance of such duty would be greatly facilitated by the use of data heretofore obtained through the operations of the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

It may be proper to state, however, with reference to the navy-yards on the Atlantic coast of the United States, that the tendency of legislation in the recent past has been in the direction of decreasing rather than increasing their number, and that in accordance with this tendency and for the purpose of lessening expenditures in this branch of the public service, the policy of the Department has been and is to concentrate, so far as practicable, and at the most central, convenient, and available points, the heavy work requisite to be done at the yards, as well as the storage and distribution of stores and material for the use of the naval service. If the same policy be adopted in supplying the wants of the Pacific coast it may perhaps be found expedient, in view of the great natural advantages as to size, location, and access, possessed by the navy-yard at Mare Island, to concentrate at that yard, so far as practicable, the bulk of the work, material, and stores required for the naval service on the Pacific coast.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JNO. H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] obtained leave of the Senate just now to print in the RECORD, as part of his remarks, a very interesting letter from Admiral Porter, relating to the American and the British fortifications on the Pacific coast. I ask unanimous consent that it also be printed as a document for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was disagreed to.

AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 1420, Senate bill 2986.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2986) to incorporate the American Historical Association.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Bancroft, named as one of the incorporators, should be mentioned as a citizen of "Newport, in the State of Rhode Island," instead of "Washington, in the District of Columbia." I move that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4 it is proposed to strike out "Washington, in the District of Columbia," and insert "Newport, in the State of Rhode Island;" so as to read:

George Bancroft, of Newport, in the State of Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOUGLAS CHAPMAN.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1451, House bill 4735.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4735) for the relief of Douglas Chapman. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Douglas Chapman, of Hot Spring County, Arkansas, late a private in Captain Wheeler's Company H, of the Third Regiment Infantry, United States Army, in the Seminole war of 1837, and that he be rated and receive such pension as is provided by the laws of the United States for persons engaged in the military service of the United States in the war of 1812.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE AT CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1402, House bill 7564.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7564) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Chattanooga, Tenn.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, after the word "railway," to insert "a corporation created and;" in line 10, after the word "it," to strike out "may be" and insert "is;" and in line 13, after the word "company," to strike out "and the Secretary of War shall have the right, from time to time, to revise, prescribe, and determine such rates or tolls," and insert "and approved by the Secretary of War;" so as to make the section read:

That the Chattanooga Western Railway, a corporation created and organized under the laws of the State of Tennessee, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct and maintain a bridge, and approaches thereto, over the Tennessee River, at or near the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., in the county of Hamilton. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of the corporation by which it is built, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals, and for foot passengers, for reasonable rates or tolls, to be fixed by said company and approved by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 3, after the word "and," where it occurs the second time, to strike out the word "it;" after the word "That," in line 4, to strike out the words "the bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-route, upon which also;" and in line 17, after the word "otherwise," to insert the word "so;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That any bridge built under this act and subject to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post-route, and shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States; that no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mail, troops, and munitions of war of the United States, or for through railway passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile for their transmission over the railroad leading to said bridge, and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge for postal-telegraph purposes; that the said bridge shall be constructed either by draw, span, or otherwise, so that a free and unobstructed passage-way may be secured to all water craft navigating said river at the point aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 18, after the word "construction," to insert "so as to prevent or remove all substantial obstruction to the navigation of said river;" in line 20, after the word "the," to insert "approval of;" and in line 20, after the word "War," to insert "and if any litigation shall be had in regard to said bridge the same shall be in the circuit court of the United States in whose territorial jurisdiction said bridge, or any part thereof, is located;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said company or corporation shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawings of the bridge, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of 1 mile below and 1 mile above the proposed location, the topography of the banks of the river, the shore-lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current at all stages, and the soundings, accurately showing the bed of the stream, the location of any other bridge or bridges, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until the said plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be built; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction, so as to prevent or remove all substantial obstruction to the navigation of said river, such change shall be subject to the approval of Secretary of War; and if any litigation shall be had in regard to said bridge, the same shall be in the circuit court of the United State in whose territorial jurisdiction said bridge, or any part thereof, is located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, after the word "act," at the end of line 1, to strike out the words "so as to prevent or remove all material and substantial obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of said bridge;" and in line 6, after the word "act," to insert "or its entire removal;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and any alterations or changes that may be required by Congress in the bridge constructed under this act, or its entire removal, shall be made by the corporation owning or controlling the same at its own expense. Furthermore, if the construction of said bridge shall not be commenced within two and completed within four years after the passage of this act, all privileges conferred hereby, and this act, shall become null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the managers on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. VEST, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. KENNA as the managers at the conference on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENTAL STATIONS.

Mr. BROWN. I move that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1358, House bill 7222.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7222) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish agricultural stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto."

The bill was read.

Mr. PLUMB. I think that bill should be subject to further scrutiny, and I shall object to its consideration now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Missouri to allow me to have a resolution adopted.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. HARRIS. I wanted to ask the Senator from Missouri to withdraw his motion for a moment until I can ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that to-morrow immediately after the routine business of the morning hour the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] gave notice of a motion to proceed with the Indian appropriation bill to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I will ask unanimous consent of the Senate that immediately after the consideration of that bill to-morrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII, beginning where we left off when the Calendar was last under consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. For how long?

Mr. HARRIS. For the remainder of the day.

Mr. ALLISON. That is satisfactory.

Mr. VOORHEES. The understanding, it seems to me, when we refused to adjourn over to Monday was that the Indian appropriation bill represented by the Senator from Massachusetts would be considered to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. This is to be after that.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well, then I have nothing to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that to-morrow after the conclusion of the Indian appropriation bill the Senate proceed, for the remainder of the day, to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will agree to that with the understanding that one objection shall carry any matter over until the Senate shall be full.

Mr. HARRIS. Is not that provided by Rule VIII?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, because a majority of the Senate may proceed to consideration notwithstanding an objection, and I wish it as a part of the unanimous consent that a single objection shall absolutely carry a case over to a full Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The understanding, then, is that to-morrow after the conclusion of the Indian appropriation bill the Senate will resume the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII, one objection to carry a bill over.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that while I shall not now interpose an objection to the proposition made by the Senator from Vermont in consideration of the fact that many Senators desire to be absent on a public occasion, I think there ought to be some time pretty soon devoted to the Calendar in the ordinary way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree to that.

Mr. HOAR. It is hardly fair that we should have these acts of legislation by unanimous consent and nothing else; and I therefore give notice that after the present occasion for this limitation has passed by, these two conventions, I shall insist on going to the Calendar under the Anthony rule in the ordinary way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is quite right. I only make this suggestion now under the apprehension that the Senate will be quite thin to-morrow.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENTAL STATIONS.

Mr. BROWN. In the case of the bill just called up by me, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] desires to make an amendment which he will have prepared by to-morrow morning. I shall ask leave, therefore, at the end of the routine business to-morrow morning to take it up, and I will accept his amendment.

Mr. CALL. I offer a resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the Chair announced the understanding?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has announced it.

ANASTASIA ISLAND.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States is hereby directed to report to the Senate whether Anastasia Island, near St. Augustine, Fla., is the property of the United States, and whether the whole or any part is covered by any grant from Spain which has been confirmed and is recognized as valid by the United States under the treaty between Spain and the United States for the cession of the provinces of the East and West Floridas made in 1819.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have that referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Senator from Florida will consent to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. If I may be pardoned for making the suggestion, suppose the law officer of the Government should be of opinion that there was a doubt about our title or should give an opinion against it, it is hardly fair, if there is any contest about the title to an island with Spain off our coast, to have our title prejudiced by the opinion of the law officer in that way. It seems to me the resolution should first go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CALL. Anastasia Island is now within our jurisdiction. It is within half a mile of St. Augustine. The only question is whether under a Spanish grant claimed to have been made it has or has not been confirmed, or belongs to the United States.

Mr. HOAR. But suppose the Attorney-General should be of opinion that it does not belong to the United States?

Mr. CALL. Then it belongs to a private citizen.

Mr. HOAR. There is no question of any foreign title?

Mr. CALL. None whatever.

Mr. HOAR. Then I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over under the rule and be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 1, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 31, 1888.

FOR PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Tenth Regiment of Cavalry.

First Lieut. William Davis, jr., to be captain May 10, 1888, vice Smithers, retired from active service.

INDIAN INSPECTOR.

Thomas D. Marcum, of Catlettsburgh, Ky., to be an Indian Inspector.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

The Senate having, on the 29th instant, ordered that the Journals of all the proceedings of the Senate in executive session and confidential legislative session concerning the fisheries treaty with Great Britain, now under consideration, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, they are as follows:

Monday, May 28, 1888.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the injunction of secrecy be removed from all proceedings of the Senate in reference to the treaty with Great Britain now under consideration.

Tuesday, May 29, 1888.

On motion by Mr. HOAR,

Ordered, That the Journals of all the proceedings of the Senate in reference to the treaty with Great Britain, now under consideration, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

EXTRACTS FROM EXECUTIVE JOURNAL.

Monday, February 20, 1888.

A message was received from the President of the United States, transmitting a treaty (Ex. M) between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington February 15, 1888.

On motion by Mr. SHERMAN, the treaty was read the first time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and, together with the message and accompanying documents, ordered to be printed in confidence for the use of the Senate.

Tuesday, February 21, 1888.

On motion by Mr. EDMUNDS, and by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That the injunction of secrecy be removed from the treaty (Ex. M) between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington, February 15, 1888.

On motion by Mr. FRYE, and by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That the said treaty, together with the message and accompanying protocols, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Monday, March 5, 1888.

The President pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State in relation to the recent negotiations concerning American fishing interests.

The message was read.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the message of the President of the date of March 5, 1888, transmitting certain documents and correspondence in relation to the recent negotiations with Great Britain concerning American fishery interests in British North American waters, be printed, and that, under the direction of the Committee on Printing, all communications hitherto made by the President to the Senate upon the same subject-matter of date subsequent to the 4th day of March, 1885, be reprinted in connection with the documents transmitted by said message.

On motion by Mr. SHERMAN, the Senate proceeded, by unanimous consent, to consider the said resolution, and after debate, the resolution, having been modified by Mr. SHERMAN, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the message of the President of the date of March 5, 1888, transmitting certain documents and correspondence in relation to the recent negotiations with Great Britain concerning American fishing interests in British North American waters be printed, and that, under the direction of the Committee on Printing, all communications hitherto made by the President or the Secretary of State to either House upon the fisheries question, and in relation to the seizure of fishing vessels of the United States in the ports or waters of Great Britain or her dependencies, of date subsequent to the 4th day of March, 1877, be reprinted in connection with the documents transmitted by said message, including all the evidence taken before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the reports thereon, and that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the documents proposed to be printed in this resolution. * * *

CONFIDENTIAL LEGISLATIVE PROCEEDINGS.

Tuesday, April 3, 1888.

The Senate having proceeded to the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER March 22, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of Rules XXXVI, XXXVII, and XXXVIII as provide for executive sessions be suspended during the consideration of the fisheries treaty, when the same shall be reported to the Senate—

And a motion to close the doors having been made and seconded, the President pro tempore directed the galleries to be cleared and the doors closed.

The order having been executed, the President pro tempore stated the question to be, Shall the consideration of the resolution be had with closed doors? and it was determined in the affirmative.

On motion by Mr. BUTLER to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, after debate, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 41, nays 8.

On motion by Mr. SHERMAN, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs.—

Allison,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Bate,	Cullom,	Hawley,	Sherman,
Beck,	Davis,	Hiscock,	Spooner,
Berry,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Stockbridge,
Blackburn,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Turpie,
Brown,	Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Butler,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Voorhees,
Call,	George,	Palmer,	Walthall.
Cameron,	Gorman,	Payne,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Pugh,
Coke,	Hampton,	Ransom,

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs.—

Farwell,	Mitchell,	Plumb,	Stewart,
Frye,	Platt,	Sawyer,	Teller.

So the motion was agreed to; whereupon the doors were reopened.

EXTRACT FROM EXECUTIVE JOURNAL.

Tuesday, April 10, 1888.

Mr. HOAR presented a resolution adopted by the common council of the city of Gloucester, Mass., remonstrating against the ratification of the so-called fisheries treaty now pending before the United States Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CONFIDENTIAL LEGISLATIVE PROCEEDINGS.

Tuesday, April 17, 1888.

The following resolution, submitted by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER on the 16th instant, being under consideration, namely:

Resolved, That so much of Rules XXXVI, XXXVII, and XXXVIII as provide for executive sessions be suspended during the consideration of the fisheries treaty, when the same shall be reported to the Senate—

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted a motion that the doors be closed; and the same having been seconded, the President pro tempore directed the galleries to be cleared and the doors closed.

The order having been executed, the President pro tempore stated the question to be, Shall the consideration of the resolution be continued with closed doors? and it was determined in the affirmative, when, on motion by Mr. HARRIS, that the resolution be postponed indefinitely, it was determined in the affirmative; whereupon, on motion by Mr. EDMUNDS, the doors were reopened.

EXTRACTS FROM EXECUTIVE JOURNAL.

Monday, May 7, 1888.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred, the 20th February, the treaty (Ex. M) between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington February 15, 1888, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a resolution for its ratification in the usual form, and a written adverse report thereon.

Mr. MORGAN, from the same committee, submitted the views of the minority on the same subject in writing; which, together with the report submitted by Mr. EDMUNDS, was ordered to be printed in confidence for the use of the Senate.

Thursday, May 10, 1888.

On motion by Mr. TELLER, and by unanimous consent—

Ordered, That the injunction of secrecy be removed from the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the views of the minority, upon the treaty (Ex. M) between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington, February 15, 1888.

CONFIDENTIAL LEGISLATIVE PROCEEDINGS.

Thursday, May 10, 1888.

The Senate having proceeded to the consideration of the following resolution submitted by Mr. HOAR April 19, 1888, and reported by Mr. SHERMAN from the Committee on Foreign Relations adversely, namely:

Resolved, That when the proposed treaty with Great Britain shall be under consideration the stenographic reporter shall be admitted and shall report the debates and proceedings, which may thereafter be made public if a majority of the Senate shall so order, except such portions thereof as it shall determine that the public interest requires shall be kept secret.

So much of the third clause of Rule XXXVI as conflicts with the resolution is suspended so far as necessary in order that the same shall take effect.

Mr. EDMUNDS moved that the doors be closed; and the motion having been seconded, the Presiding Officer directed the galleries to be cleared and the doors closed.

The order having been executed, the President pro tempore stated the question to be, Shall the consideration of the resolution be had with closed doors?

After debate, on motion by Mr. HOAR, and by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That the following resolution, submitted by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER March 22, 1888, be substituted for the one under consideration:

Resolved, That so much of Rules XXXVI, XXXVII, and XXXVIII as provide for executive sessions be suspended during the consideration of the fisheries treaty, when the same shall be reported to the Senate.

After debate on the question as to whether the resolution should be considered with closed doors,

On motion by Mr. MORGAN,

Ordered, That the further consideration of the question be postponed to Monday next, at 2 o'clock p. m., and at that hour the Presiding Officer direct the doors to be closed for the purpose.

On motion by Mr. SHERMAN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Monday, May 14, 1888.

The hour of 2 o'clock p. m. having arrived, the President pro tempore, pursuant to the order of the 10th instant, directed the galleries to be cleared and the doors closed. The order having been executed, the Senate resumed the consideration of the question, Shall the consideration of the following resolution be had with closed doors?

Resolved, That so much of Rules XXXVI, XXXVII, XXXVIII as provide for executive sessions be suspended during the consideration of the fisheries treaty, when the same shall be reported to the Senate.

And, after debate, it was determined in the affirmative; and on the question to agree to the resolution, after debate, it was determined in the negative—yeas 3, nays 41.

On motion by Mr. SHERMAN, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs.—

Dawes,	Sherman,	Teller.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs.—

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hiscock,	Saulsbury,
Allison,	Davis,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Spooner,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Blair,	Evarts,	Palmer,	Vance,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Butler,	George,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa,
Call,	Gray,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.
Chandler,	Hampton,	Ransom,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Reagan,
Coke,	Hawley,	Sabin,

So the resolution was not agreed to.

On motion by Mr. HOAR, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by him to admit the stenographic reporter to report the debates and proceedings in the consideration of the proposed treaty with Great Britain; and having been amended on the motion of Mr. MORGAN,

On the question to agree to the resolution as amended as follows:

Resolved, That Denis F. Murphy, the Official Reporter of the Senate, and such assistants as may be necessary, to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, shall be, when sworn, executive officers of the Senate to take down the proceedings and debates upon the fisheries treaty with Great Britain, now pending in the Senate. And, when said treaty is under consideration, they shall be admitted to the executive sessions of the Senate.

The debates on said treaty, and the proceedings relating to the same, shall be taken down by said reporters, and printed in confidence for the use of the Senate, from time to time, during such discussion, and shall be filed in the secret archives of the Senate, subject to its order, and may thereafter be made public if the Senate shall so order, except such portions thereof as it shall determine that the public interest requires shall be kept secret.

So much of the third clause of Rule XXXVI as conflicts with the resolution is suspended so far as necessary in order that the same shall take effect;

After debate, on motion of Mr. TURPIE that the resolution lie on the table, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 36, nays 10.

On motion by Mr. HOAR, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs.—

Allison,	Cullom,	Harris,	Reagan,
Bate,	Davis,	Hawley,	Sabin,
Berry,	Dolph,	Hiscock,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Stewart,
Butler,	Evarts,	Jones of Arkansas,	Teller,
Call,	Faulkner,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Chandler,	George,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Hampton,	Quay,	Wilson of Iowa.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs.—

Aldrich,	Hoar,	Saulsbury,	Vance.
Blair,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Dawes,	Ransom,	Spooner,

So the motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. SHERMAN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXTRACTS FROM EXECUTIVE JOURNAL.

Monday, May 14, 1888.

Mr. QUAY presented eight memorials of citizens of Scranton, Pa., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed fisheries treaty with Great Britain; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Tuesday, May 22, 1888.

The treaty (Ex. M) between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington, February 15, 1888, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

On motion by Mr. HOAR that the further consideration thereof be had in open executive session, it was determined in the negative—yeas 28, nays 28.

On motion by Mr. MORGAN, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present—

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs.—

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,
Allison,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Sabin,
Blair,	Farwell,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Chandler,	Frye,	Paddock,	Spooner,
Davis,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Dawes,	Hiscock,	Platt,	Stockbridge,
Dolph,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Teller.

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs.—

Bate,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,
Beck,	Daniel,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	George,	McPherson	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Morgan,	Vance,
Blodgett,	Hale,	Pasco,	Vest.
Call,	Hampton,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Ransom,	Walthall.

During the roll-call the following pairs were announced:

Mr. SAWYER, in the affirmative, with Mr. BROWN, in the negative.

Mr. CAMERON, in the affirmative, with Mr. BUTLER, in the negative.

Mr. CHACE, in the affirmative, with Mr. COLQUITT, in the negative.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, in the affirmative, with Mr. PAYNE, in the negative.

Mr. QUAY, in the affirmative, with Mr. FAULKNER, in the negative.

Mr. BOWEN, in the affirmative, with Mr. GIBSON, in the negative.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in the affirmative, with Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, in the negative.

Mr. CULLOM, in the affirmative, with Mr. GORMAN, in the negative.

Mr. INGALLS, in the affirmative, with Mr. EUSTIS, in the negative.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Wednesday, May 23, 1888.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the treaty (Ex. M) between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington February 15, 1888.

On motion by Mr. HOAR, that the further consideration thereof be had in open executive session,

Pending debate, on motion by Mr. SPOONER, at 1 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m., the doors were opened and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

Thursday, May 24, 1888.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the treaty (Ex. M) between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington February 15, 1888, and the question being on the motion of Mr. HOAR that the further consideration thereof be had in open executive session,

Pending debate, on motion by Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, that the further consideration of the said motion be postponed until Monday next,

On motion by Mr. SHERMAN, at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m., the doors were opened and the Senate adjourned.

Friday, May 25, 1888.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the treaty (Ex. M) between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington February 15, 1888, and the question being on the motion of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, to postpone until Monday next the further consideration of the motion of Mr. HOAR, that the further consideration of the treaty be had in open executive session,

After debate, on motion by Mr. SAULSBURY, at 5 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m., the doors were reopened, and, in pursuance of a motion adopted in legislative session, the Senate adjourned until Monday next.

Monday, May 28, 1888.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the treaty (Ex. M) between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington February 15, 1888, and, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. HOAR that the further consideration thereof be had in open executive session,

On motion by Mr. SHERMAN, the yeas and nays were ordered by one-fifth of the Senators present.

After debate, Mr. MORGAN submitted a motion that the further consideration of the pending question be postponed to the Wednesday after the first Monday in December next.

The President pro tempore decided that the motion of Mr. HOAR being an incidental question arising out of and occurring in consequence of the pendency of the main question, the motion of Mr. MOR-

GAN to postpone its consideration to a day certain was out of order and could not be received.

From this decision of the President pro tempore Mr. MORGAN appealed to the Senate.

Pending which, on motion by Mr. HOAR, that the appeal be laid on the table, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 21, nays 19.

On motion by Mr. MORGAN, the yeas and nays being desired by one-fifth of the Senators present,

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs.—

Allison,	Dawes,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Blair,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Chace,	Edmunds,	Paddock,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Evarts,	Platt,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Quay,
Davis,	Hoar,	Sherman,

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs.—

Bate,	George,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Berry,	Gray,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	Ransom,	Walthall,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Faulkner,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,

During the roll-call the following pairs were announced:

Mr. HALE, in the affirmative, with Mr. BECK, in the negative.

Mr. SAWYER, in the affirmative, with Mr. BROWN, in the negative.

Mr. HAWLEY, in the affirmative, with Mr. COCKRELL, in the negative.

Mr. ALDRICH, in the affirmative, with Mr. COLQUITT, in the negative.

Mr. MORRILL, in the affirmative, with Mr. HARRIS, in the negative.

Mr. SPOONER, in the affirmative, with Mr. BLACKBURN, in the negative.

Mr. PALMER, in the affirmative, with Mr. EUSTIS, in the negative.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, in the affirmative, with Mr. PAYNE, in the negative.

Mr. CAMERON, in the affirmative, with Mr. BUTLER, in the negative.

Mr. SABIN, in the affirmative, with Mr. KENNA, in the negative.

Mr. PLUMB, in the affirmative, with Mr. VEST, in the negative.

Mr. BOWEN, in the affirmative, with Mr. PASCO, in the negative.

Mr. TELLER, in the affirmative, with Mr. GIBSON, in the negative.

Mr. FARWELL, in the affirmative, with Mr. DANIEL, in the negative.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, in the affirmative, with Mr. BLODGETT, in the negative.

Mr. FRYE, in the affirmative, with Mr. GORMAN, in the negative.

So the appeal was laid on the table.

Mr. MORGAN moved to amend the motion of Mr. HOAR by adding after the words "executive session" the words "on the Wednesday after the first Monday in December next."

The President pro tempore decided that for the reasons stated in the motion to postpone, the motion was not in order and could not be received.

Mr. MORGAN moved that the motion of Mr. HOAR be laid on the table.

The President pro tempore decided that for the reasons stated on the motion to postpone, the motion was not in order and could not be received.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. HOAR, that the further consideration of the treaty be had in open executive session, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 21, nays 19.

The yeas and nays having heretofore been ordered—

Those who voted in the affirmative are Messrs.—

Allison,	Dawes,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Blair,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Chace,	Edmunds,	Paddock,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Evarts,	Platt,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Quay,
Davis,	Hoar,	Sherman,

Those who voted in the negative are Messrs.—

Bate,	George,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Berry,	Gray,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	Ransom,	Walthall,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.
Faulkner,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,

During the roll-call the following pairs were announced:

Mr. HALE, in the affirmative, with Mr. BECK, in the negative.

Mr. CAMERON, in the affirmative, with Mr. BUTLER, in the negative.

Mr. BOWEN, in the affirmative, with Mr. PASCO, in the negative.

Mr. FARWELL, in the affirmative, with Mr. DANIEL, in the negative.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, in the affirmative, with Mr. BLODGETT, in the negative.

Mr. SAWYER, in the affirmative, with Mr. BROWN, in the negative.

Mr. HAWLEY, in the affirmative, with Mr. COCKRELL, in the negative.

Mr. ALDRICH, in the affirmative, with Mr. COLQUITT, in the negative.

Mr. MORRILL, in the affirmative, with Mr. HARRIS, in the negative.

Mr INGALLS, in the affirmative, with Mr. EUSTIS, in the negative.

Mr. PALMER, in the affirmative, with Mr. VANCE, in the negative.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, in the affirmative, with Mr. PAYNE, in the negative.

Mr. SPOONER, in the affirmative, with Mr. BLACKBURN, in the negative.

Mr. TELLER, in the affirmative, with Mr. GIBSON, in the negative.

Mr. PLUMB, in the affirmative, with Mr. VEST, in the negative.

Mr. SABIN, in the affirmative, with Mr. KENNA, in the negative.

Mr. FRYE, in the affirmative, with Mr. GORMAN, in the negative.

So the motion was agreed to.

Whereupon, the President pro tempore directed the doors to be opened; and, at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m., the order having been executed, the Senate, in pursuance of the motion this day adopted in executive session, proceeded to consider the pending treaty (Ex. M) in open executive session.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 31, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT COLUMBUS, GA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying bill, was, on motion of Mr. GRIMES, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 1275, entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Columbus, Ga., and appropriating money therefor."

The city of Columbus, Ga., is undoubtedly a thriving, growing city. The only present necessity for a public building there is for the accommodation of its post-office. It is stated in the report of the House committee that the gross revenues of the office for the year ending June 30, 1887, were $16,700. The postmaster in a letter upon the subject makes the following statement: "I estimate the gross receipts at $17,500 for the fiscal year ending March 31, which will be an increase of nearly 7 per cent. over last year's receipts." There are nine persons employed in the post-office at present, including the postmaster. The present quarters are leased by the Government at an annual rent of $900. The postmaster represents that his accommodations are not adequate or convenient, and that instead of a space of 1,900 square feet which he now has, he should be provided with 2,500 square feet.

The population of the city in 1880 was 10,123. It is claimed that it is now about 20,000.

In my opinion the facts presented do not exhibit the necessity of the expenditure of $100,000 to afford the increased room for the post-office which may be desirable. I believe a private person would erect a building abundantly sufficient for all our postal needs in that city for many years to come for one-third of that sum.

Business prudence and good judgment seem to dictate that the erection of the proposed building should be delayed until its necessity is more manifest, and so that it can be better determined what expenditure for such a purpose will be justified by the continued growth of the city and the needs of the Government.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 29, 1888.

CLAIM OF HEZEKIAH MYERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the finding of facts in the case of Hezekiah Myers against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

MONUMENT AT WASHINGTON'S HEADQUARTERS, NEWBURGH, N. Y.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House, a report upon the present condition of the monument at Washington's headquarters, Newburgh, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I submit a conference report for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8560) to establish a department of labor, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House agree to the amendments of the Senate.

JOHN J. O'NEILL,
JAMES BUCHANAN,
CARLOS FRENCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

HENRY W. BLAIR,
JAMES F. WILSON,
J. Z. GEORGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement required by the rules was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House on H. R. 8560 submit the following statement in explanation of their report. The amendments of the Senate to said bill are formal in their character, being simply a change in the phrascology of the bill.

JOHN J. O'NEILL,
JAMES BUCHANAN,
CARLOS FRENCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was adopted.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask the Clerk to be kind enough to read the marked article which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A WORTHY BILL BURIED BY MR. SPINOLA.

WASHINGTON, May 23.

General regret was expressed on the Republican side of the House to-day that Mr. SPINOLA, of New York, should simply have presented pro forma, as chairman of the subcommittee on Military Affairs, the bill for the placing of John C. Frémont on the retired-list as major-general. Republican members, had they known of the intention to present a favorable report at this time, would have asked unanimous consent for its present consideration, and would at least have placed on record by their own action their appreciation of the intrepid pioneer of the West and the first Republican candidate for the Presidency. Buried in the House Calendar the bill is not likely to be called up for action.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, the article just read is from the New York Tribune, the political organ of the Republican party of this country, and the article as published is a gross falsification of the facts. There is not one solitary word of truth contained in that article from beginning to end as it there appears in the New York Tribune.

The facts of the case I intend the people of this country shall understand, and the organ of the Republican party shall not with impunity place any responsibility on my shoulders that I am not entitled to bear.

I wish to state, sir, to this House, and through this House to the people, the true condition of affairs. In the Committee on Military Affairs, of which I have the honor of being a member, the Democratic members of that committee voted unanimously to report this bill to the House, while the Republican members voted against it [applause on the Democratic side]; and, sir, when I was honored by the committee with the privilege of making that report to this House, I had no more than submitted my report in favor of placing General John C. Frémont on the retired-list than a Republican member on the other side rose in his place and asked consent to file a minority report accompanying the bill.

That fact alone, as every member here knows, would have prevented me or debarred me from the privilege of asking unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

This article purports to come from the Republican side of the House, and I propose, unless they purge themselves of responsibility for it, to hold that entire side accountable for the article. [Laughter.] "General regret," it is said, "was expressed on the Republican side of the House." That means, if it means anything, all the Republicans of that side; and they can not get away from that construction of it unless they individually rise and explain away their position. Now, then,——

Mr. REED. What is it all about?

Mr. SPINOLA. You will find what it is all about before I get through.

Mr. REED. I hope so.

Mr. SPINOLA. The Republican members of this House took the unsuspecting reporter of the New York Tribune, which is the Bible of that side of the House, and practiced upon him a fraud—innocent and unsuspecting as the reporter for the New York Tribune is, and unsophisticated, too, it would seem—and he communicated to Whitelaw Reid and his paper an unqualified falsehood, and he did it, as he states, under the advice of the Republican members of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I am willing to assume every particle of the responsibility that properly rests on me for every vote of mine and every action that I have ever assumed as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs of this House, and shall feel that responsibility in every vote that I may hereafter cast; but I will not submit to having placed upon my shoulders responsibility for that which belongs to another and for which I am not accountable. I want the people of this country to understand that the Republican side of the House, and the Republican party, are the men who have interfered with the early and unanimous passage of the bill to place General Frémont on the retired-list.

I have made this statement, sir, that it may go out to the people of this country, so that they may understand who has treated General Frémont in the manner that this article characterizes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. 79) permitting the public building authorized by act of Congress approved May 8, 1882, at Denver, Colo., to be located not less than 16 feet from any other building, instead of 40 feet, as provided in said act;

A bill (S. 2201) for the relief of Laura E. Maddox and Robert Morrison, executor of Joseph Maddox, deceased; and

A bill (S. 2807) to grant to the Puyallup Valley Railroad Company a right of way through the Puyallup Indian reservation in Washington Territory, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 6946) for the relief of Thomas Jordan.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to reports of committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 6899) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 2017) to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FORNEY. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the further consideration of the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the legislative appropriation bill.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the pending amendment on which a separate vote is asked.

The amendment in relation to additional clerks in the office of the Civil Service Commission was again reported.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand correctly, this is an increase which was voted in by the Committee of the Whole House as to the Civil Service Commission?

The SPEAKER. That is the pending amendment, on which a vote will now be taken.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee recommend the same number that is provided in the current law.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 56, noes 45.

So, no further count being demanded, the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the next amendment, on which a separate vote was demanded, as follows:

After line 7, on page 56, insert the following:

"Assay office at St. Louis, Mo.: For assayer in charge, $2,500; one clerk, $1,000; in all, $3,500.

"For incidental and contingent expenses, including labor, $2,400."

Mr. RANDALL. This is an amendment making an appropriation for the St. Louis assay office.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to know what is the full amount appropriated in the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, the Speaker stated that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 45.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 26, noes 53.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 106, nays 96, not voting 122; as follows:

YEAS—106.

Adams,	Farquhar,	McClammy,	Romeis,
Anderson, Iowa	Finley,	McCormick,	Rowland,
Baker, Ill.	Ford,	McCreary,	Ryan,
Barry,	Gay,	McCullogh,	Scott,
Bayne,	Gear,	McKenna,	Smith,
Biggs,	Grimes,	McKinley,	Spinola,
Bound,	Guenther,	McKinney,	Stahlnecker,
Bowden,	Harmer,	McMahon,	Steele,
Brown, Ohio	Hatch,	Milliken,	Stone, Mo.
Buchanan,	Haugen,	Montgomery,	Struble,
Bunnell,	Hayes,	Morrill,	Taulbee,
Burnes,	Heard,	Morrow,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio
Caruth,	Holmes,	Nelson,	Thomas, Ky.
Catchings,	Hovey,	Newton,	Thompson, Cal.
Cheadle,	Hunter,	Nichols,	Townshend,
Chipman,	Hutton,	O'Neill, Pa.	Turner, Kans.
Clardy,	Kean,	O'Neill, Mo.	Vance,
Cothran,	Ketcham,	Outhwaite,	Vandever,
Crain,	Laffoon,	Parker,	Walker,
Crouse,	Lagan,	Patton,	Warner,
Cummings,	Lane,	Payson,	White, N. Y.
Darlington,	Lawler,	Peel,	Whitthorne,
Davidson, Fla.	Lehlbach,	Phelan,	Wilkinson,
De Lano,	Lind,	Pugsley,	Wise,
Dingley,	Mansur,	Rayner,	Yoder.
Dockery,	Mason,	Robertson,
Dunn,	Matson,	Rogers,

NAYS—96.

Abbott,	Cobb,	Henderson, N. C.	McMillin,
Allen, Mass.	Cowles,	Herbert,	Mills,
Anderson, Miss.	Culberson,	Hiestand,	Moore,
Anderson, Kans.	Dalzell,	Hogg,	Morgan,
Atkinson,	Dibble,	Holman,	Neal,
Bankhead,	Dorsey,	Hopkins, Va.	Oates,
Blount,	Elliott,	Hudd,	O'Neall, Ind.
Breckinridge, Ark.	Ermentrout,	Jackson,	Osborne,
Breckinridge, Ky.	Fisher,	Johnston, Ind.	Penington,
Brewer,	Flood,	Johnston, N. C.	Perry,
Brower,	Foran,	Kennedy,	Randall,
Burnett,	Forney,	Kilgore,	Reed,
Burrows,	Fuller,	Landes,	Rice,
Butterworth,	Gest,	Lanham,	Russell, Mass.
Bynum,	Glass,	Lee,	Sayers,
Campbell, F., N. Y.	Goff,	Lodge,	Scull,
Campbell, Ohio	Grout,	Long,	Seney,
Cannon,	Hall,	Lyman,	Sherman,
Caswell,	Hare,	Maish,	Shively,
Clements,	Hemphill,	Martin,	Springer,

Stewart, Tex.	Taylor, E. B., Ohio	Turner, Ga.	Williams,
Stewart, Ga.	Thompson, Ohio	Weaver,	Wilson, Minn.
Stockdale,	Tillman,	Weber,	Wilson, W. Va.
Stone, Ky.	Tracey,	Whiting, Mass.	Woodburn.

NOT VOTING—122.

Allen, Mich.	Conger,	Hopkins, N. Y.	Richardson,
Allen, Miss.	Cooper,	Houk,	Rockwell,
Anderson, Ill.	Cox,	Howard,	Rowell,
Arnold,	Crisp,	Jones,	Russell, Conn.
Bacon,	Cutcheon,	Kelley,	Rusk,
Baker, N. Y.	Dargan,	Kerr,	Sawyer,
Barnes,	Davenport,	La Follette,	Seymour,
Belden,	Davidson, Ala.	Laidlaw,	Shaw,
Belmont,	Davis,	Laird,	Simmons,
Bingham,	Dougherty,	Latham,	Snyder,
Blanchard,	Dunham,	Lynch,	Sowden,
Bland,	Enloe,	Macdonald,	Spooner,
Bliss,	Felton,	Maffett,	Stephenson,
Boothman,	Fitch,	Mahoney,	Stewart, Vt.
Boutelle,	French,	McAdoo,	Symes,
Bowen,	Funston,	McComas,	Tarsney,
Browne, T. H. B., Va.	Gaines,	McShane,	Thomas, Ill.
Browne, Ind.	Gallinger,	Merriman,	Thomas, Wis.
Brown, J. R., Va.	Gibson,	Moffitt,	Wade,
Brumm,	Glover,	Morse,	Washington,
Bryce,	Granger,	Norwood,	West,
Buckalew,	Greenman,	Nutting,	Wheeler,
Butler,	Grosvenor,	O'Donnell,	White, Ind.
Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Hayden,	O'Ferrall,	Whiting, Mich.
Candler,	Henderson, Iowa	Owen,	Wickham,
Carlton,	Henderson, Ill.	Perkins,	Wilber,
Clark,	Hermann,	Peters,	Wilkins,
Cockran,	Hires,	Phelps,	Yardley,
Cogswell,	Hitt,	Pidcock,	Yost.
Collins,	Hooker,	Plumb,
Compton,	Hopkins, Ill.	Post,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I did not reach the Hall until after my name had been passed. I was here during a part of the roll-call. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). To entitle the gentleman to vote it was necessary that he should have been in the Hall when his name was called.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I should have voted "no."

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection.

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. MCSHANE with Mr. MCCOMAS.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. SEYMOUR.

Mr. MERRIMAN with Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. SIMMONS with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL with Mr. LAIDLAW.

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan, with Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, with Mr. CLARK.

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. DOUGHERTY with Mr. PETERS.

Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. YOST.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, with Mr. TOWNSHEND.

Mr. SHAW with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. HOOKER with Mr. CUTCHEON.

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin.

Mr. NORWOOD with Mr. COOPER.

Mr. JONES with Mr. SAWYER.

Mr. GREENMAN with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. WHITE, of New York, with Mr. COCKRAN.

For this day:

Mr. BRYCE with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.

Mr. LATHAM with Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE

Mr. BARNES with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. DARGAN with Mr. HITT.

On this vote:

Mr. BLAND with Mr. ENLOE. Mr. BLAND would vote "ay" and Mr. ENLOE would vote "no."

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. ROWELL.

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. RICHARDSON with Mr. GALLINGER.

Mr. BURNETT with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. WASHINGTON with Mr. BAKER, of New York.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The Clerk read the next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded, as follows:

On page 77 strike out the following:

"Contingent expenses of branch offices at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, New Orleans, San Francisco, and Portland, Oregon, including furniture, fuel, lights, rent and care of offices, car-fare and ferriage in visiting merchant vessels, freight, express, telegrams, and other necessary expenses incurred in collecting the latest information for the Pilot Chart, and for other purposes for which the offices were established, $8,000."

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For contingent expenses of branch offices, including furniture, fuel, lights, rent and care of offices, car-fare and ferriage in visiting merchant vessels, freight, express, telegrams, and other necessary expenses incurred in collecting the latest information for the Pilot Chart, and for other purposes for which the offices were established—at Boston, $1,500; New York, $5,000; Philadelphia, $1,500; Baltimore, $1,500; Norfolk, $1,500; New Orleans, $1,500; San Francisco, $1,500; Portland, Oregon, $1,500; in all, $15,500."

Mr. RANDALL. That amendment is an increase of $4,500. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That amount is absolutely needed.

Mr. MORROW. The amendment simply provides for the payment by the Government of expenses now paid by private enterprise. It should be adopted.

The question being put, there were—ayes 93, noes 51.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. That is pending.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. RANDALL. I now demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. Under the action of the Committee of the Whole House blanks have been left in this bill for forty-one salaries, thirty-nine or forty of which are increases and one or two are decreases. It is not proper that this bill should go to the Senate in that shape, but points of order were made, and the exact condition of the bill now is that there are forty-one blanks. The aggregate amounts in the respective paragraphs have not been changed; so that while the salaries are not fixed in the bill, the amounts include those salaries at the rates reported by the Committee on Appropriations, who were guided by the current law. I now ask unanimous consent that those blanks be filled in the manner I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. By inserting the amounts provided by law?

Mr. RANDALL. The amounts provided by the current law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the blanks in this bill may be filled in the manner indicated by him. The amendments will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 59, after "salary of governor," in line 6, insert "$2,600."
On page 81, after "assistant secretary," in line 4, insert "$4,000."
After "chief clerk," in line 5, insert "$2,500."
After "superintendent of documents," in line 13, insert "$2,000."
On page 82, after "captain of the watch," in lines 13 and 14, insert "$1,000."
After "one engineer," in line 16, insert "$1,200."
On page 84, after "Commissioner of Indian Affairs," in line 22, insert "$4,000."
On page 87, after "chief clerk," in line 16, insert "$2,250."
After "thirty principal examiners," in line 20, insert "$2,400."
On page 89, after "chief clerk," in line 24, insert "$1,800."
On page 97, line 20, after "surveyor-general of Oregon," insert "$1,800."
On page 108, after "Superintendent of Dead Letter Office," in lines 1 and 2, insert "$2,250."

Mr. RANDALL. Those amendments embrace exactly the amounts contained in the current law for these offices and they are in harmony with the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations, who followed the law in framing that portion of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, after the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I should be allowed to say a word.

Mr. RANDALL. I am making a motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What I desire to say is that neither the Committee of the Whole nor this House is responsible for the present condition of this bill. The Committee on Appropriations are responsible for it because of their not obeying the rules of this House.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the Committee on Appropriations will take all the odium that can be sent by the gentleman from New Jersey in their direction. I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report it back with those amendments.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I make the point of order upon that motion, for this reason——

Mr. RANDALL. Then, to save time, I move to recommit this bill; and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is what you ought to have done in the first place.

Mr. RANDALL. I will find a way out, you may be sure.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have no doubt of it.

The motion to recommit was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House the bill can not be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

A MEMBER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. MILLS. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. MILLS, and 70 members voted in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER. It is evident that two-thirds have not voted in the affirmative, and the motion is not agreed to.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS, ETC.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (S. 783) to correct the enrollment of an act approved March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875," which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BANKS, ETC.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1868) to repeal the proviso to section 12 of an act entitled "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," approved July 12, 1882; and the same was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

WILLIAM P. GORDON.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. 10267) granting a pension to William P. Gordon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OLIVER M. FARRAND.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 10268) for the relief of Oliver M. Farrand; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The call of committees was continued and concluded, no further reports being presented.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LAIDLAW, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for the rest of the week.

TARIFF.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House general debate on this bill has been closed. The bill will now be considered under clause 5 of Rule XXIII, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

When general debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon; but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to an amendment; and neither an amendment nor an amendment to an amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the first clause of the bill.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, this bill has never been read in full in Committee of the Whole——

The CHAIRMAN. The first reading of the bill was dispensed with; but that does not affect the operation of the rule which requires that it now be read and considered by sections or paragraphs. The Clerk will therefore read the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. McKINLEY. I was about to ask, Mr. Chairman, that as the bill has never been read as a whole in committee, it now be read in full.

Mr. MILLS. The first reading of the bill was dispensed with when we first went into Committee of the Whole upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill could only be read in full at this time by unanimous consent.

Mr. McKINLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill, not having been read, shall now be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that this bill be now read at length. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLS. I object. Let the bill be read by paragraphs.

Mr. McKINLEY. I now ask for the reading of the report on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in the nature of debate, and can only be done by unanimous consent or in the time of some gentleman who may be recognized for debate.

Mr. McKINLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the majority and the views of the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means be now read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. OATES. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the first paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of July, 1888, the following articles mentioned in this section, when imported, shall be exempt from duty.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to move an amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. MILLS. Let the paragraph be read through. No amendment is in order until the paragraph has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the first paragraph of the bill, which prescribes the time when the bill shall take effect, has been read. The amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3 strike out "1st day of July, 1888," and insert "1st day of January, 1889."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, we have had about a month of general debate on this bill, and now we come to questions of detail. It will be admitted, I think, on both sides of the House, that a bill making a radical change in the conditions under which any American industry is to be carried on will produce injury to some portion of our population. Gentlemen on the other side may claim that the injury is local and temporary, and that it is more than paid for by the ultimate good to be derived as they think by the people at large; we on this side may believe that the injury will be general and permanent. But we all agree that some persons will suffer to a certain extent for a certain time.

It is our duty as practical legislators to reduce that injury to a minimum. We must pay some regard to the vested interests of capital and the vested interests of labor. I have proposed an amendment changing the date at which the first section of the bill will take effect. I do so because of the great and unnecessary injury which will accrue even from the point of view of the gentlemen who support this bill to a large number of persons along the Northern border States, if the bill shall pass in its present form, who are engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber, in the raising of vegetables, and in the manufacture of brick.

Take first the lumber business. I do not speak now of the abolition of the lumber duty. I assume that duty is to be abolished. The caucus has so decreed. There was no Democratic vote to be made for the bill in the caucus in striking out lumber from the free-list; otherwise we know it would have been stricken from the free-list. Nor do I make this amendment simply for the purpose of postponing the evil day when, as we on this side of the House believe, many American lumbermen will have to go to Canada in search of work or change occupation; and when the Wisconsin farmer shall lose the market of the logging camp. I propose it because I believe it is unfair to make so radical a change in any American industry in the very middle of the season in which that industry is carried on.

Mr. BLAND. What does the gentleman propose to do with the surplus in the Treasury which is now bankrupting the country? What does he propose to do with that?

Mr. ADAMS. If I proposed to reduce that surplus, I should not propose to do it by the passage of this bill, because the passage of this bill will not reduce the surplus.

I do not know how it is with the lumber business on the Pacific coast or in the Southern States, but in the Northern States the lumber business has an annual course as regular as farming. I say it is as unreasonable to bring about a radical change in that industry to take effect on the 1st of July as it would be to terminate a farm lease in midsummer when the crops are half grown.

The lumbering season in the Northwest begins with the beginning of winter. Men are sent into the logging camps as soon as the snow is on the ground. All or nearly all the logs are cut and piled along the streams before the ice breaks in spring. Then begins the logging drives. A large part or a certain part of the winter's cut of logs reaches the mill late in spring or early in summer. But low water sometimes prevents it. The largest logs, which form the choicest part of the winter's cut, are hung up along the logging streams and do not arrive at the mills until August or September or even later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say that under the rules it is made his duty to recognize first for five minutes some gentleman who desires to oppose the amendment, if any one shall rise for that purpose.

If there is no objection, the gentleman will proceed for another five minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to say nothing more than I have indicated in my opening remarks.

I say the logs arrive at the mills, or the choicest part of them, sometimes as late as August or September. The mill season begins almost as soon as the logging season is over, and the manufactured lumber from the mills begins to arrive in the Chicago market almost as soon as navigation opens, and the lumber vessels continue to arrive there until the close of navigation in the fall. Of the 1,880,000,000 feet of lumber and the 687,000,000 of shingles which were received in the Chicago market during the last year, I venture to say more than one-half was received after the 1st day of July, the date on which this bill would take effect.

And let me state another further fact. All gentlemen familiar with the business will confirm the statement that all the lumber, or nearly all the lumber, cut in the course of the winter is cut and put on the market under contracts entered into during the latter part of the preceding year.

So that all the lumber that is now coming out of the woods and finding its way to the mills and from the mills to the Chicago market has been cut under contracts made before the lumbermen had any reasonable notice of the passage of this bill.

If placing lumber on the free-list will cause a decided fall in the price of lumber, those who have entered into contracts on the basis of existing laws will suffer far more severely if the change takes place in the middle of the lumbering season than if the change is postponed until the end of the present or beginning of the next lumbering year. That was the purpose of the amendment which I have proposed.

I have spoken of the lumbering business only; but the amendment proposed, and the reasoning with which it is supported, will apply equally, I think, to other articles that are embodied in the first section of the bill. Whether it will apply to flax and hemp I leave other gentlemen to discuss, but it will certainly apply to vegetables, and vegetables are placed upon the free-list by the terms of the pending bill. I maintain that in the interest of practical legislation, and in the interest of fair play, we ought rather to give to the farmers of the Northern border States, before the beginning of the season, fair notice that next year they must meet the competition of Canadian vegetables rather than to bring that competition to bear upon crops which had been put into the ground before they could possibly have had any reasonable notice of the provisions of this bill, or the prospects of its becoming a law. The same reasoning——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMS. I will move another amendment and withdraw the one I first sent to the desk.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has withdrawn the amendment and submits another, which the Clerk will read if there be no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3 strike out "1st day of July, 1888," and insert "2d day of January, 1889."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I object to the time of the committee being consumed by amendments of that character.

Mr. ADAMS. I have not the slightest objection to the gentleman from Arkansas answering the points I have already made now, and will take my time later on.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What I object to is having the time of the committee taken up by such amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no objection, as I have said, to an answer from the gentleman now. I think I will find an opportunity to be heard later on.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. How much time did the gentleman desire?

Mr. ADAMS. I only desired to occupy about five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman proceeding for five minutes longer?

Mr. SPINOLA. I object. [Cries of "Go on!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to consume five minutes longer.

Mr. SPINOLA and Mr. HARE objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has heard no objection to the modification of the amendment.

Mr. SPINOLA. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no desire to press that point now.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, as I have indicated, I was entirely willing that the gentleman should have five minutes without interruption, but some gentleman interposed objection. It did seem to me, however, that the mode of getting time proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] was rather out of the usual way and not called for by the generous concessions and temper of this side of the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is quite impossible to hear the gentleman over here.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It is partly my own fault. I am not able to throw my voice with strength enough to make it distinctly heard there.

The proposition of the gentleman, the essential point, is to defer the operation of the entire bill to the beginning of the next calendar year.

Mr. ADAMS. No, sir; only the first section.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It affects, practically, the whole bill. The gentleman refers to the first section of the bill specifically.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That involves a great deal; and, I suppose, if we deem it necessary to make that change so far as this section is concerned, it would be deemed necessary to do it for substantially all of the other sections on the same ground. This involves, even on lumber, to defer all relief to the Treasury and the people. But on that point of particular safety I will state to the gentleman that in the bill of 1883 no such precaution was deemed necessary. It was not thought necessary then to so extend the time, and the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee do not deem it necessary as regards this class of imports now. It was considered necessary to defer the date with reference to the effect of the bill as applicable to certain articles; and it will be found, on page 26, that that part of the bill referring to jute and ramie and similar articles, such as sisal grass, goes into effect on the 1st of January next. This is necessary and just to the manufacturers of products out of these articles, who are now making autumn stocks. As regards the substitutes for hemp and the manufactures thereof, and of flax, it goes into effect on the 1st of July of next year, so as to provide against any possible ill effects upon crops that are now planted, and that can not be properly guarded by an earlier day. It will also be found that there is a provision on page 27 with reference to woolen manufactures, as they make their contracts in a way that would make it inconvenient and hurtful to have the bill go into effect on the 1st of July; and after full and ample conference with gentlemen engaged in these industries, we fixed upon October 1 as a suitable period when this provision should go into effect.

Then there is a further provision, at the bottom of page 27, with reference to the worsted feature of the woolen schedule. These are the ample adjustments recommended in the bill. It goes much further and is much more guarded than was the bill of 1883, of which you do not complain, and the committee see no occasion for further delay.

I will say further, no lumber manufacturer has suggested this. The people of my own State and of my own town are very large exporters to the lake ports. My own town ships very extensively to the city (Chicago) of the gentleman who has just spoken, and if there had been a particle of danger I think the very sagacious gentlemen engaged in that trade would have mentioned it to me.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the gentleman from Arkansas speak of the lumber business?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do. That is an extensive business in my section.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the last word. So far as the act of 1883 is concerned I do not undertake to defend it. I was not in Congress then. The remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas as to the views he has received from Arkansas lumber manufacturers are characteristic of this bill and the way it is framed. For I expressly said in opening my remarks that they would not apply to lumber on the Pacific coast or lumber in the Southern States. I speak of the region of the country where the snow falls and the ice forms.

Mr. MORROW. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORROW. Do I understand the gentleman to say that in his judgment this length of time would not be necessary on the Pacific coast?

Mr. ADAMS. I did not say so. But I speak with reference to a part of the country with which I am more familiar.

Mr. MORROW. I suggest that the Pacific coast would require more time for this act to go into operation.

Mr. ADAMS. Then the amendment I have proposed is important for the whole country, except for the Southern States. I suggest the gentleman from Arkansas is in error in legislating for this entire country on the lumber business on the advice of the lumbermen of Arkansas.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What I stated was that no lumbermen of any part of the country made this suggestion.

Mr. KELLEY. They had no opportunity.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, the same reasoning which I have used in reference to lumber will apply to the manufacture of brick. Brick is also put on the free-list in the first section of the bill. Why it was put there I can not understand. Can it be to cheapen brick to the consumer? Gentlemen must know that in the manufacture of brick the cost of the wages paid to labor forms a larger proportion of the total cost than in other industries. For instance last year in and about Chicago there was employed in all branches of manufacture a capital of $114,000,000. That capital paid wages to one hundred and thirty-four thousand laboring men. That is an average of about $850 per capita to each laboring man.

Now, how is it in the brickmaking business? There are three thousand brickmakers in Chicago, who made last year 44,000,000 bricks, worth $2,925,000. Yet the total capital in all the seventy-two brickyards in and about Chicago was only about $500,000. That is an average of only $167 of capital to each laboring man.

Now, putting brick on the free-list will bring Canada brick into competition with American brick or it will not. That is the dilemma. If it will not, what is the justification of the provision of this bill putting brick on the free-list? How will it reduce the cost of brick to the consumer? And if it will, if Canada brick will be brought in competition with American brick by reason of the enactment of this law, gentlemen who are responsible for it can not lay the flattering unction to their souls that in making the change they are striking at the profits of capital. What they are striking at is the wages of labor.

But admit that brick should be put on the free-list; what I have to say is that the change in that business should take effect in the winter time and not right in the center of the busy season. Brick is a summer product. It can not be made safely in the spring so long as the nights are frosty. It can not be made in the fall when the early frosts begin. The great bulk of the 440,000,000 of brick made in Chicago last year was made in June, July, and August. The passage of this bill without the amendment I have proposed will bring about a radical change in the brickmaking business right in the middle of the season.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire three minutes more.

Mr. BAYNE. If I am recognized I yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if no gentleman rises to oppose the amendment, the Chair will then recognize any other gentleman who rises.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. Is it the duty of the Chair to suggest all these difficulties if nobody rises to object to the gentleman from Illinois having the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BAYNE. My inquiry was, is it the duty of the Chair to suggest these obstacles if nobody rises to oppose the gentleman from Illinois?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the duty of the Chair to enforce the rules in the committee, and it is the duty of the Chair to recognize any gentleman who desires to oppose this amendment. If any gentleman desires to oppose the amendment the Chair will recognize him; otherwise he will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BAYNE. But nobody rose except myself, and how did the Chair know but that I rose to oppose the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. How did the Chair know but some other gentleman desired to oppose the amendment?

Mr. BAYNE. Nobody else rose.

The CHAIRMAN. If gentlemen will be patient, they will find that all their rights will be preserved in the discussion of this bill.

Mr. BAYNE. I yield my five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] asks unanimous consent to yield five minutes' time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS]. Is there objection?

Mr. MACDONALD. I object.

Mr. HARE. I object.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that if one speech is made in favor of a proposed amendment and there is no speech against it, that ends the debate on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the end of the debate upon that amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is in order, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] having, as the Chair understands, withdrawn his formal amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I move a new amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] had a formal amendment pending.

Mr. ADAMS. If there was a formal amendment, I withdraw it. I was not aware that I had made it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] yielding to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS]?

Mr. HARE. I object.

Mr. MILLS. I hope my friend will withdraw his objection.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the last four words of my amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I want to sustain my amendment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, as there is nobody here to speak for the vast lumber interests of the Southern States [laughter], whose timber resources exceed those of the North now or at any past time, and whose mineral resources are immeasurably rich in comparison with those of the North, I wish to be heard for a few minutes in favor of maintaining the duty on these vast resources and the labor to be employed in utilizing them. In my own and other Northern States native timber was a charge upon the settlers' land, and had to be removed before crops could be grown. The forests had to be girdled, and the only reward for the labor of girdling and hewing them down was the potash that might be derived from their conflagration; but the forests of Alabama, Tennessee, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas, and North Carolina, and of South Carolina from the Smoky and Blue Ridge Mountains to the sea, are every foot of value. As the world needs our Southern timber for furniture, for the embellishment of elegant buildings, and for all the uses to which it is adapted, it does not depend on protective duties as timber near the Canada line does.

Go to the summits of the Smoky Mountains and the Blue Ridge and you will find there the fir tree, growing in wild luxuriance and in magnificent dimensions—the same tree that you find so dwarfed in the extreme northern part of our continent that it may be potted and placed as an ornament in a lady's boudoir—and I plead with you not to impoverish the poor people of those mountain regions by impairing the demand for their labor on the lumber by reducing the value of these vast stores of lumber in the world's markets. Gentlemen of the South, you buried your iron and your coal for two centuries and refused to utilize it, but, in the name of the owners of the Southern forests, I beg you to emancipate this source of Southern and national industry and wealth. To pass this bill and carry it into effect one month from to-morrow will paralyze the capital and energy of the forest district of every State in the South by destroying its market in the Northern States, and I am pleading with you to believe that a new era has come to your States, in which labor is entitled to wages, and that the prosperity of the community is to come from the expenditure of the wages of well-paid labor. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman ——

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state further that when a gentleman who has not yet spoken desires to speak upon an amendment, the Chair must recognize him rather than any member who has already spoken. No gentleman has a right to speak twice until others desiring to speak have been heard.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I have been deeply touched by the appeal of the venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] in behalf of the lumber interest; and now, sir, I wish to submit an appeal in behalf of the citizens who dwell in the prairie States, and who must have lumber to build their homes, their barns, their granaries; and in connection with the appeal which I make in their behalf for cheap lumber, I want to protest against any action on the part of this House which may operate to fasten a lumber trust upon the farmers of my district in Iowa. [Applause.] Among the lumber producers for whom the gentleman has made his appeal there is no one of any considerable importance either North or South who has not joined the trust, the members of which are bound by a penalty under the rules of the association not to undersell each other, but to keep up the price at all hazards, robbing the people of my district and the consumers of the great prairie States of the West. These people are entitled to some consideration. I protest against this tariff on lumber; and I demand in the name of my constituents that lumber shall be on the free-list.

Mr. REED rose.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be considered as withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. REED. I move to strike out the first word. Mr. Chairman, it seems very appropriate just at this moment that something should be said as to the effect of these amendments with regard to lumber. The gentleman from a prairie State [Mr. WEAVER] has got himself into a condition of mind in regard to a "trust." He feels that somehow or other this bill will greatly cheapen lumber for his constituents. I am sorry to be obliged to say to him that a consideration of the figures involved would show him that such could not by any possibility be the case.

That portion of our lumber which is not produced in the United States is obtained solely from Canada. In the United States twenty-four thousand million feet of lumber are cut; the proportion imported from Canada is only about 2½ per cent., and it would be very difficult to make it 10 per cent. under the most favorable circumstances. Now, I do not expect to affect many of the members on the other side by the consideration I am about to submit; but I do say to them that if they were business men, with business education, they would see at once from these figures that there is no possibility of lessening the cost of lumber and material for houses by letting in Canada lumber. The sole effect of it will be that there will be just so much added to the price of Canada lumber, just so much added to the price of Canada "limits." This bill does not touch that; and the result will be that whatever amount of money may by reason of this bill fail to go into the Treasury of the United States will go into the pockets either of Canadian subjects or of American subjects who have had the wisdom to purchase lands in Canada—except on the Pacific coast, where, by competition with Chinese labor, it is quite possible some damage may be done to the American industry.

It is also a fact that in certain portions of the country near the Canadian line, and in certain spruce regions, there will be some injury done to the industry. But the total change to the advantage of the consumer, even under the most favorable circumstances, will not for an instant countervail the injury which is sure to be done to the lumber business in various parts of the country. In other words, whatever cheapness, however slight, may result will only have the effect to injure the business and to injure men already concerned in it, and in the long run not conduce to cheap product.

The Democratic caucus, if the newspapers report its proceedings truly, has, in a great many instances outside of those recognized by the gentlemen who form the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, recognized the fact that it is necessary to protect American industry, even in the extremest cases, where the very largest percentage is demanded.

What reason, what excuse can there be for refusing to a great industry which stretches clear across this continent the small protection which it now has, and refusing it upon the basis of giving planed lumber protection and denying it to sawed lumber? How in the world can it be made to appear that labor engaged in sawing is unworthy of attention while labor engaged in planing demands the assistance of the other side?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, the venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] can not both be right. The gentleman from Pennsylvania appeals to the committee not to destroy the lumber industry of this country. How can it destroy this industry if the other contention of the gentleman be correct that the price of lumber is not increased by the tariff? The gentleman from Maine contends that the price of lumber will not be affected. Then I ask what harm is there in placing lumber on the free-list? The speech of the gentleman from Maine is a complete contradiction of the position taken by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentlemen are both wrong. It will reduce the price without bankrupting anybody.

The gentleman from Maine took good care not to deny that the lumber interests are combined in a "trust" for the purpose of limiting the supply and controlling the prices of lumber. It is not only true—historically true, and I refer gentlemen to an article in the North American Review, by Mr. Lloyd, as far back as 1884, and to a recent work published by William B. Cook, of the New York bar; it is not only true that this lumber interest is engaged in a "trust" to limit the supply and control the price, but it is also true that they control the local dealers and require them to sell at a schedule price also.

And, sir, by reason of their further combination with the transportation monopolies, no man can engage in the lumber business without the consent of the lumber trust and the transportation companies, which together constitute one of the most unconscionable trusts ever organized in this or any other country. It is organized for the very purpose of plundering the people who are far removed from the great centers of lumber manufacture. I challenge the gentleman to deny before the American people that this lumber industry is engaged in a trust, the object of which is to absolutely determine who may and who may not deal in lumber, to limit the production, and to control the price—a criminal organization at common law, because in the nature of a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

Now, as an appeal has been made in behalf of these "trusts" by gentlemen on the other side of the House, I stand here and make my appeal in behalf of the people of the West who consume this lumber. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Let this trust take its clutch from the throats of the people and quit robbing the consumer. Let them pay some respect to other people's industries, which are just as sacred and should be as inviolable as their own.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. This debate has drifted away from the original amendment moved by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

The CHAIRMAN. There is a formal amendment pending which must be withdrawn or voted on.

Mr. MILLS. Let it be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the formal amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. MILLS. This debate has drifted away from the amendment of my friend from Illinois. I want a vote on it. It has been discussed fully. Let us have a vote on the amendment and we can then get to the lumber interest and discuss it.

Mr. REED. We can discuss it here. We wish to express our views, and it is just as well to do so here as at another point.

Mr. MORROW. I move to strike out the first three words. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am ready to go as far as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], or any other gentleman, in legislation which will have for its purpose the destruction of all combinations or trusts, and I would do so in the interest of the people; but I do not understand that legislation which has for its purpose the destruction of all domestic competition can possibly result in destroying such combinations as are known as trusts. There is no trust that I know of in the production of lumber; but if there is a lumber trust in existence to-day, how can we deal with it in this bill? If we destroy our own American interest what do we do? We merely create a trust over the line in Canada which we could not possibly control, and which, with domestic competition out of the way, would be more grinding in its effect than any trusts which could be established in this country. But, as I have just said, I do not understand that there are any lumber trusts in this country.

Mr. WEAVER. Does the gentleman deny there is a redwood-lumber trust?

Mr. MORROW. I do deny there is any combination or trust of the sort indicated by the gentleman.

Mr. WEAVER. Does the gentleman deny there is a redwood-lumber trust?

Mr. MORROW. I do not know of any redwood-lumber trust. But suppose there is? Redwood lumber is not in active competition with the pine lumber of Canada.

Mr. WEAVER. I say there is such a lumber trust.

Mr. MORROW. I am not mistaken about my position, and I deny that the redwood-lumber interest of California comes into active competition with any other lumber interest; but the competition to which this bill relates in the removal of the duty on manufactured lumber is the pine-lumber interest.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from Iowa should be compelled to give the authority for his statement.

Mr. MORROW. There are no lumber forests in my district, but the finest lumber in the world may be found in the First Congressional district of California, represented by my colleague [Mr. THOMPSON], and I will leave him to explain the extent of that interest.

Mr. BIGGS. I wish to say in reply to what my colleague has said that there is competition between redwood rustic and sugar-maple rustic.

Mr. MORROW. As I have already said, so far as I know there is no competition with other lumber on the part of redwood lumber.

Mr. WEAVER. I repeat what I have already said, that redwood lumber does come into competition with other lumber. Redwood lumber is used in finishing cars and inside work in houses.

Mr. MORROW. Now, I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the proposed amendment will be agreed to, so that this bill, if it is to become a law, shall not go into effect until the 2d day of January next. There are now four hundred vessels, representing a tonnage of 175,000 tons, engaged in transporting lumber on the Pacific coast. They have charters running from six months to a year, and perhaps for two or three years. If this law shall go into effect on the 1st day of July next, thirty days from now, it will destroy without sufficient notice the relations which the lumber interest has to the carrying trade on the Pacific coast. In behalf of those, therefore, engaged in this transportation business, I ask gentlemen on the other side to consent to amend this bill so that it will not take effect until the 2d day of January next. If that be done it will enable the people engaged in this carrying trade to adjust their affairs with the lumber men. There are vessels now on the ocean that will probably be affected by this bill. They have gone under contract or charter, and before their present voyages are completed you proposed to change the bases of the business in which they are engaged. It would seem to be only fair and proper under the circumstances to postpone the going into effect of this law until these vessels get into port and adjust their business to the proposed new conditions.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Do you claim that the going into effect of this bill will reduce the price of lumber?

Mr. MORROW. I am not speaking specially of the price of lumber, but I am speaking of the charters of these vessels engaged in the carrying of lumber, assuming that the duty will be removed.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Very well; how can it affect the lumber market?

Mr. MORROW. It is proposed by gentlemen on the other side to change the tariff on lumber, that is, by placing it on the free-list. The present rate of duty on sawed lumber is $2 per thousand feet. That will of course effect a change in the present status of the business. It will admit lumber free from Canada, and bring to California the lumber produced by Chinese labor in British Columbia and other places over the border.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. But if that does not reduce the price, I do not see what effect it can possibly have upon the business interests engaged in it.

Mr. MORROW. Why, it brings the cheap manufactured lumber of Canada into direct conflict and competition with our lumber manufactured by higher-priced labor. It affects the situation of the business and makes a complete change in the whole lumber business.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I have amongst my constituents a good many lumber manufacturers, as well as a very great number of lumber consumers, and I admit with the gentleman from California, who has just taken his seat, that the lumber manufacturers and other persons interested in this business have invested in it an immense amount of capital; but the question presented here——

Mr. MORROW. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion? I was talking particularly about the carrying trade. The transportation of lumber on the Pacific coast is by vessels.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I know, and I say in response to what the gentleman argues that if the bill goes into effect and does not reduce the price of lumber, as some on that side assert, it can not affect that business at all. It does not affect the question one way or the other.

But I do not wish to digress. I do not wish, either, to discuss the aspect of the case presented by my friend from Iowa who has spoken with reference to trusts. I leave that branch of the subject to him. I take the matter as it appears before me. The lumber industries have been appealing to this Congress ever since this session commenced, not to reduce the tariff on lumber, because as alleged they could not compete with the Canadian lumber. That has been their plea. This House have had more appeals in behalf of lumber than of any other industry so far as I know in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I live in the midst of the most extensive lumber interest in America, and I am not unacquainted with it, and I have never known an industry that has grown rich so fast. I can point to more men within my own knowledge that have become millionaires in this industry within twenty-five years, I am satisfied, than can be pointed out in any other similar industry in this country.

Mr. GUENTHER. They got rich because they owned the stumpage.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. But they first made their money to purchase the stumpage. They could not secure that until they had money enough to buy it.

Mr. GUENTHER. That has not been the case in my part.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GUENTHER. Oh, no; they made it out of the pine lumber.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. But I do not wish, Mr. Chairman, to be interrupted. My time will not permit.

Allow me to say, sir, in this matter that the property invested in the lumber interest equally in my friend's district and in my locality within the last fifteen years has risen in value to an extent I am sure of not less than 300 to 500 per cent., whereas the property of the agricultural community, who are compelled to pay $2 a thousand feet to support and enrich this lumber interest, has not risen 1 per cent.

These are the facts for our consideration. And yet this tariff law compels the agriculturists, men who purchase from the lumber men, to pay a heavy tribute to them; and I repeat that within the last fifteen years this agricultural property has not risen 1 per cent. to match the increase of 300 to 500 per cent. which this protection has afforded to the lumber men. It is time that this condition of things was brought to an end. It is time that we stopped making these poor men support the millionaires. To keep up any longer this state of things is simply to legalize injustice, and although some of my best friends in the world are manufacturers of lumber, I can not vote to sustain this condition of things. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. FELTON. I move to strike out the last word. I desire to make one or two observations in reply to what the gentleman from Minnesota has just said in reply to my colleague. He asked if placing lumber on the free-list would reduce the price of lumber—referring, I suppose, to the Pacific coast. Yes, and it is for that reason I am opposed to the proposition. To put our lumber on the free-list would bring it into competition with lumber from British Columbia, the work on which is mainly supplied by Chinese labor at a much less price for labor than the citizens of the United States are getting at this time, thank God, and which I do not desire to see reduced.

As regards the statements of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], I have no doubt he intends to be correct, and I do not dispute his statement; but I think he is mistaken when he asserts that there is a combine or trust on redwood lumber on the Pacific coast. I know of none. I have no knowledge of, and I believe there is no such thing as, a trust there in lumber of any kind, redwood or otherwise. Within my personal knowledge I recollect of several manufacturers of redwood and other lumber that are in no trusts. They carry on their business upon their own responsibilities as manufacturers.

But desiring to be fair to the House, I will state the competition in lumber on the Pacific coast, especially in redwood lumber, has been so severe at times that the weak men have been crowded out, not being able to compete with the stronger manufacturers. The result has been at times they have agreed on prices, and such agreements have lasted for a time, until the cupidity of some man interested gets the better of the others, and they go down. That has been the history of agreements with reference to lumber in California.

Mr. MILLS. In this question there is the side of the producer and the side of the consumer. The producer is interested in having a duty on lumber that he may have the benefit of an increased price. The consumer is interested in having lumber put upon the free-list that he may enjoy the privilege and right of purchasing his lumber at a lower rate. Now, if this duty increases the price to the consumer, it does him a wrong. If it does not increase the price of lumber to the consumer, it does no good to the producer. These gentlemen can hang on either horn of the dilemma they choose. But while we are considering the interests of the great lumber producers, who it is said cut and put on the market several millions of dollars of product each year, we ought to take into consideration the far greater number of our people who are interested in building their houses, their homes, their barns, their fences, and who have a right in order to protect the products of their labor to buy lumber as cheaply as they can purchase it in open market.

It has been stated that this lumber business is a trust. That statement is denied on this floor. I want to produce some witnesses from California to substantiate that charge. It has been stated that petitions were sent to the Committee on Ways and Means and were not considered. I want to give you a few statements from one at least that has been considered. I do not know whose constituency it is from. This petition is from Merced County, California. About one hundred and fifty of these gentlemen ask us to remove the duty on lumber, and for the following reasons:

First. A combination of lumbermen of this State have advanced the price of lumber more than $8 per thousand, to such an exorbitant figure that it has become a grievous burden upon the farmers and all other persons who are compelled to use it, particularly to colonizing immigrants. It will at once be recognized that this is a serious obstacle to California's progress.

Second. If placed on the free-list it would at least have a tendency to save some of our grand forests yet left from the ruthless devastation that has swept away millions of acres of the finest timber in the world.

Third. There is practically no revenue derived from the duty now imposed, the duty now imposed being so nearly prohibitory that but $224 was collected on lumber hewed and sawed during the year 1886.

Mr. REED. Was that petition read to the committee?

Mr. MILLS. It was in the committee I got it, and I suppose every member of the committee read it. The gentleman will hardly say he failed to discharge his duty by not reading the petitions coming up from the citizens of this country remonstrating against this great injustice?

Mr. BURROWS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. Is not that the only petition from the sixty millions of the people of the United States asking for the removal of the duty on lumber?

Mr. MILLS. The 171 Democrats in this House have been presenting such petitions from the sixty millions of our people asking to have the duty taken off.

Mr. BURROWS. Is that the only petition in favor of free lumber from sixty millions of people?

Mr. MILLS. It is very hard for sixty millions of people to go around and get up petitions, but it is very easy for these trusts and combinations to get up petitions and send them here. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BURROWS. There are fifty petitions against it for one in favor of the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, it is said that this tariff on lumber is in the interest of the laboring man who cuts down the timber, that all this immense benefit is to go into his pocket. Gentlemen do not plead for the capitalists who have their millions invested in this business. They have too few votes to make it worth while to plead in their name; but gentlemen plead here for the working people, and yet, sir, I am told that in California and in the Territories, where this business is carried on, they are importing Chinese labor to do that work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLS. I have not completed what I desired to say.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas be allowed to proceed.

Mr. MILLS. Go ahead. I will get all the time I want.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. FELTON, by unanimous consent, withdrew his formal amendment.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment, which is not a pro forma one, to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend lines 3 and 4 by striking out "July" and inserting "November;" and by striking out "88" and inserting "89."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I propose by this amendment to extend the time named in the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois from January, 1889, to November, 1889, and let this proposal to take the duty from lumber take effect November 1, 1889, instead of July 1, 1888, as proposed by this Mills bill. It may do in some localities to permit the act to take effect in January, 1889, if it is ever to take effect, but where the lumber is produced by other methods the intervening time is not long enough.

I heard the suggestion which came from the gentleman from Arkansas, and which seemed to indicate that that section of the committee were disposed to consider and respect no interests but their own. Two or three years ago I had occasion to learn something of the methods of lumbering in that part of the country. They lay down temporary railroad tracks through the timber and take their workmen and teams into the woods; they purchase their supplies for their men and their grain and hay for their cattle in the North and it is brought by rail. They move the lumber on short hauls from the stump to the railroad and take it directly to the mills; and thus, in a few days at most, they complete their conveyance of supplies, their cutting, their hauling, their sawing, and their transportation to the distributing point. In the Northeast, for instance in Northern New York, the system is very different.

There we have long rivers, up which the men go for perhaps a hundred miles into the forests, and it often takes two years to get down the stock. As early as October the makers of lumber start for the woods with their supplies. In October, November, and December they are cutting the logs and skidding them and getting them ready to haul. Then from the last of December on through January and later months they are hauling them onto the ice of the streams and connected still-waters.

When the ice breaks up in the spring the logs are run down through a period of sometimes two or three months, to the mills below, and it often happens on the long Northern rivers that a large proportion of the stock which is being run down will catch in the rapids, will stick upon the shoals, or will be delayed or stopped by reason of low water, so that it will not reach the mills where it is to be cut up until the next year. Then it is necessary to saw the logs, to dry the lumber, to put it in shape for the market by planing, etc., and to market it in the different cities of the East and South and West. Therefore it is necessary that this amendment, extending the time to November, 1889, shall be adopted, in order to protect the lumber which is now coming down those rapid rivers of the North, and therefore, sir, in good faith, I ask that this amendment be considered and voted upon.

Let me now notice another point. The gentleman who spoke last [Mr. MILLS] has told us that this change will make no particular difference to the manufacturers, and that the price of lumber will be cheapened to the consumer. As to the effect of the passage of this bill upon the price of lumber I wish to say a word. Probably the first effect of the bill, if enacted, will be to make lumber cheaper. Why? Because it will throw our markets open to the competition of the lumbermen of Canada with their accumulated stocks and their cheap timber. They have bought their timber lands for less money per acre than our men pay for stumpage per standard log upon the stump in the forest along the Raquette, the Grasse, the Oswegatchie, the Saranac, and the other Northern rivers. Therefore the lumbermen at the great mills at Ottawa, in Canada, where they have probably as magnificent a water-power as there is in use in the world, and Canadian lumbermen at other points will add to their accumulated stocks, and put their cheap labor at work and manufacture their cheaper timber into all forms of lumber and rapidly flood our markets with it, thus breaking down our present mill-owners and stopping lumbering operations upon our Northern rivers, and then when that effect is produced they will turn about and put up the price, and hold the consumer at their mercy, while Canadian farmers and tradesmen will get the benefit of supplying. Whatever else is done with the lumber clauses of this bill, time should be given to operators and to employers to adjust their plans to the threatened competition and the new order of things proposed.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to place on record the testimony of one more witness as to the benefits of protection to lumber.

A MEMBER. Is there one more? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MILLS. This witness is a constituent of my friend from Chicago. I cut his testimony out of a newspaper a few days ago, and I will now read it:

Mr. Blanchard is engaged in the lumber business, and tells, with delightful candor, to what extent, and why he is a protectionist:

"I am high tariff on lumber, but low tariff on copper, iron, wool, cotton, leather, glass, etc., and I will tell you why. I own timber land and sell stumpage; besides, I operate largely myself, and this tariff puts money into my pocket. I get $2 per thousand for my stumpage and $2 per thousand for my boards. I have just sold 5,000,000 feet of lumber. Now, $2 a thousand on 5,000,000 feet is just $10,000. That is the difference to me between high tariff and free lumber. I am high tariff on lumber, I am! This blessed tariff, they tell us, is all for the benefit of the American laborer. What do you suppose I did with the $10,000? Divide it with my workmen? Not a bit of it. I put it right into this calf-skin wallet, I did! Of all my workmen I am the only protected American laborer. Wages depend on supply and demand, my friends, and not on taxes. When you see two men after one boss, wages are low; when you see two bosses after one man, wages are high. That is the whole of it—the theory, principle, and practice."

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GUENTHER. Does the gentleman know that to be a genuine interview? Does he vouch for its genuineness?

Mr. MILLS. As I have said, I clipped it from a Chicago paper.

A MEMBER. You do not know by whom it was inspired?

Mr. MILLS. I can not tell anything about that. I do not know whether Mr. Blanchard lives there or not, but whoever he is, he tells the truth when he says that the $2 duty on lumber which we are now seeking to take off goes into the leather wallet of the lumber producer, who goes into the market and hires his wage-man at exactly the market price, and does not pay a cent more than the market price. Mr. Chairman, the tariff does not change human nature; it can not change the constitution of man. All that the tariff does is to increase the price of the property to the man who owns it. It does not increase the wages of the laborer; that is regulated alone by the amount of labor seeking employment and the amount of demand for its employment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is now in order. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] now pending is an amendment in the second degree.

Mr. BURROWS. Is not that withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York is a substantial, not a formal, amendment. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend lines 3 and 4 by striking out "July, 1888," and inserting "November, 1889."

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to amend by striking out "1889" and inserting "1890."

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order at this time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then I move a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must move a substitute for the whole proposition; he can not move it as an amendment to this amendment, which is already in the second degree. The Chair will call members' attention to the rule already read—clause 5, Rule XXIII—which will show that there is no further amendment in order at this time. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PARKER. I ask that the paragraph be read as it will stand if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of November, 1889, the following articles mentioned in this section, when imported, shall be exempt from duty.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PARKER to the amendment, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 89, noes 134.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "1889" and inserting "1890." [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BOUTELLE. No; we will have some conversation before we vote, if the Chair pleases.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has just stated to us with that positiveness of assertion which has characterized most of his deliverances upon the tariff question that the only possible effect of putting lumber on the free-list will be to lessen the price to the consumer, and that the only object in keeping the tariff on lumber is to increase the profit of the manufacturer.

Mr. MILLS. I trust that we shall have order. I desire to hear the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The House will be in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, as I was remarking, the gentleman from Texas has asserted with that directness and positiveness which have characterized his utterances upon this question that the tariff on lumber has only the effect of increasing the profits of the manufacturer without increasing the wages of the laborer. That statement was reiterated several times, and certainly I can not be mistaken in understanding its purport.

Now, it would be important to know, Mr. Chairman, with what standard the gentleman from Texas was making a comparison. He certainly could not have intended to make his comparison with the prices paid to Chinese labor, whose competition with the lumber mills of California this bill would invite; and if he intended to make his comparison with the prices paid lumbermen in New Brunswick and other portions of Canada, he is mistaken to a degree that can hardly be comprehended. Nothing is more thoroughly known among those who are familiar to-day with the lumber interests of the New England States than the fact that for years there has existed and to-day still exists a very wide disparity between the wages paid to labor on the one side and on the other of the Canadian line. I have the honor to represent a district with several hundred miles of frontier largely devoted to lumber interests, and this bill strikes a destructive blow at the most important industrial pursuits of my constituency.

The effect of the free-lumber feature of this bill is to strike down a business in which to-day we are paying to those brawny-armed sons of toil who are professed to be the special protégés of the champions of this bill all the way from 20 to 45 per cent. more than they receive across the line in Canada. And I would say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] that the most cursory examination of this subject can not fail to convince him that removing the duty on lumber and allowing free importation from the British provinces can not fail to have the effect of striking down the rate of wages paid on our side of the line.

The point sought to be made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] in regard to the effect of the proposed action on the price of lumber involved the exact fallacy which runs all along the line of these tariff reductions. He says if it will cheapen the cost to the consumer it will do no harm.

Mr. Chairman, everybody understands that the immediate effect of the removal of this duty is to temporarily reduce the cost. It is a question, as my colleague has said, of the period of time you consider. You pass this bill putting lumber on the free-list, opening wide the door to the entry of Canadian and other foreign lumber, and undoubtedly it will temporarily reduce the price for the purpose of breaking down the industries in this country, of closing up the mills in the United States, and getting rid of competition here. But when the competition in this country is destroyed or greatly lessened, I ask my friend from Minnesota where he thinks then the price would go?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Let me answer that by asking a question: Which is the richest, the manufacturer of lumber in the United States or in Canada?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not know what bearing that has on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The richest men will not be overrun by the poorest.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LIND. This question of lumber, Mr. Chairman, is one in which my constituents are largely interested, and I desire to say a word or two at this time. My views differ in some degree from those which I have heard expressed here in this discussion. I do not think that the removal of the tariff on lumber would have the effect to cheapen the price of lumber to any appreciable extent; but if it does, so much the better. It might in California, where there is Chinese labor to compete with, but it would not in my State. It would not make a particle of difference.

And so far as the trusts which are alleged to exist are concerned it would not make any difference. If the capital invested in the lumber interest of the country is placed under a trust and is controlled by a combination, why can it not also be extended to and control the Canadian lumber regions, which are smaller than our own?

Conceding that it makes no difference in price, and conceding that it makes no difference in wages, the result of placing lumber on the free-list will have one good effect, namely, diminishing the cutting down of the forests in this country and decreasing the consumption of our own timber. So far in that respect as it would furnish protection to the forests of our country, it is in my judgment a wise and desirable thing. [Applause on the Democratic side.] For the protection of the timber interests of this country we passed a timber-culture law. It has been denounced by every epithet known to the vocabulary, and, notwithstanding its defects and the frauds which have been perpetrated under it, it has proved to be one of the wisest and most beneficent laws ever passed.

Mr. BOUTELLE rose.

Mr. LIND. I will answer the question of the gentleman when I get through with my statement. We have given away thousands and millions of acres of the public land for the purpose of promoting the planting of trees and the cultivation and growth of our timber interests, the object being to provide a national supply of this useful and necessary commodity, not only for the present but for future generations. Now, the direct tendency of prohibiting the importation of timber is to hasten the destruction of our own forests, and for that reason I am in favor of this feature of the bill opening our country to the importation of lumber, which, indirectly, will have the effect of protecting our own forests and our own timber.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman from Minnesota. It has been proved, I think, to the satisfaction of those who have examined the subject that the lumber business, when carried on systematically, economically, and judiciously, as it is at the present day in the older States, is one of the greatest conservators of the timber of the country. In other words, that the trimming up of the forests of New England has done more to keep the timber growth standing than could possibly have been accomplished by abandoning them, leaving the forests to the ravages of insects and to decay, and the natural evils which follow from neglect.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let me suggest to my colleague this inquiry: Is it not true, also, that there is more lumber standing to-day in Maine than there was twenty-five years ago?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes; and let me suggest further——

Mr. LIND. A statement has been made and submitted to me for an answer; now let me answer it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let me supplement that first.

Mr. LIND. I will answer the question first and then the supplement. How much white pine have you in your State?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Not a very great deal.

Mr. LIND. Well, in my State there is a great deal.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Ours has never been a great pine State.

Mr. LIND. And I can tell the gentleman that wherever white pine has once grown and been cut down it never grows again.

Mr. BOUTELLE. This bill is not going to protect pine lumber in Maine. Our principal lumber is the spruce and hemlock; and it is a fact that to-day, as my colleague has suggested, there is more lumber standing than there was twenty-five years ago. That is due in large measure, perhaps almost solely, to the fact that the timber has been better cared for. It has become more valuable, and hence there is more attention paid to it. The owners are watching it, protecting it from fires, and giving permits for cutting, taking only the ripened trees, and using that discretion in regard to cutting out the lumber that a farmer would use in rotating his various crops.

Mr. LIND. Is not the entire argument of the gentleman based on the assumption that if lumber were admitted duty-free the manufacture of American lumber would cease?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Partly.

Mr. LIND. And if that is the gentleman's argument, as I assume it is, I take it for granted that on an examination of the facts of the case when he gets down and considers the question impartially, he will not deliberately say that the removal of a $2-a-thousand-feet duty will drive every American manufacturer out of the business. Such a position is absurd. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. What does the gentleman think the effect of this bill will be, then?

Mr. LIND. I think perhaps that——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAWLER. I think unanimous consent should be given to allow these gentlemen to go on and bring out the whole of this question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What is the pending question?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment will be now reported, that the committee may understand the question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "1889" and insert "1890."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is another amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. No other amendment is in order until this is disposed of.

Mr. ENLOE. I want to offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to a question of order. How is it that debate has expired?

The CHAIRMAN. By reason of the fact that the gentleman's proposition to amend was presented and debated for five minutes. The gentleman from Minnesota then took the floor and occupied five minutes in opposition.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do I understand that to be the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the rule. The Chair has caused it to be read, and the question now is on the amendment to the amendment, which has just been read.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last word, and I send to the Clerk's desk a speech delivered on June 10, 1868, by Mr. Blaine, of Maine, which I will ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLAINE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I desire to discuss briefly the amendment which the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means so vigorously opposes. And in the first place let me say that during the entire war, when we were seeking everything on the earth and in the skies and in the waters under the earth out of which taxation could be wrung, it never entered into the conception of Congress to tax breadstuffs—never. During the most pressing exigencies of the terrible contest in which we were engaged neither breadstuffs nor lumber became the subject of one penny of taxation.

[Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

What was the reason of this? Let me tell my friend from Ohio that it was not because of the influence of the rich grain dealers at Chicago, or Toledo, or Milwaukee. It was because if anything be universal breadstuffs are universal, for they constitute literally "the staff of life." If you impose on them a tax ever so small in amount it will be made a pretext by the very speculators of whom gentlemen talk for adding an appreciable amount to the cost of a barrel of flour. I do beseech this House not to sanction the principle of subjecting such an article to taxation for the sake of the paltry amount that is to be gained from this source.

Mr. WELKER. Does the gentleman expect to secure an exemption for lumber by advocating an exemption for breadstuffs? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. I am referring to breadstuffs because it illustrates a principle. I beseech this House not to sanction a tax on breadstuffs which will simply build up a mountain of prejudice for the sake of a mole-hill of revenue.

But, sir, I have said enough on that point. Now, as to the article of lumber, I again remind this House that there has never been a tax upon this article. The gentleman from Ohio may talk of this question as he pleases, but I say that wherever the Western frontiersman undertakes to make for himself a home to till the soil, to carry on the business of life, he needs lumber for his cabin; he needs lumber for his fence; he needs lumber for his wagon or cart; he needs lumber for his plow; he needs lumber for almost every purpose in his daily life.

[Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That was said in the House in 1868. I have but one word to add. We present the curious anomaly of having a law to encourage the destruction of our forests and at the same time a law to give away land for the purpose of planting forests. In the last twenty years we have given more acres of land away for the planting of trees than we have received dollars for duties on imported lumber in all its forms. We are, therefore, apparently burning the candle at both ends, depleting the forests where we have them and giving away our territory under the policy of creating new forests.

Mr. McKINLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. McKINLEY. I wish to make a single inquiry. The gentleman had some remarks read which were made by Mr. Blaine. I desire to know whether as a matter of fact these remarks were not directed to internal taxation and not to customs, a subject he was not discussing. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman desires it, I will let the whole debate be published.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman from Kentucky answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is the fact?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not know. If the gentleman will wait a minute I have no objection to answering the question. I do not know whether the remarks were made on that part of the bill reported by Mr. Schenck which related to internal revenue or on the part relating to external revenue. But it was a tax on lumber and breadstuffs that he spoke of, and the argument is precisely the same.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Is it not the fact that the argument was against a tax on domestic lumber, but not against the tax on foreign lumber?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It was an argument against a tax on the necessaries of life, to be paid by the consumer. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.] The argument is precisely the same now as it was then.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] and those acting with him seem to be afraid that if we use our own resources the lumber of the country will be exhausted. I will say to the gentleman that he can stand in a forest in the State of Maine, where, if he uses the best ingenuity he has—and he has a great deal of it—he will find it very difficult for him to get out of the woods in the course of a week.

It is true, as far as the State of Maine is concerned, her pine has been cut off; and a gentleman has said that when pine is once cut it never grows again. The inference to be drawn from the gentleman's argument is that we should never cut pine, because if we do we will never get it again. But however that may be, I beg to say that in the State of Maine spruce and other lumber increases as fast as the existing supply is exhausted.

My friend from Texas [Mr. MILLS] argues that if a duty on lumber makes the price greater to the consumer the duty ought to be taken off or decreased. That remark would apply to everything that is on the dutiable list. It is very strange to me that the gentleman forgot to say that if there be 78 per cent. duty on sugar it costs the consumer very much more than he would have otherwise to pay for it, and it should therefore be put on the free-list.

Sugar, the duty on which gentlemen on the other side see no reason for reducing, is one of the prime necessaries of life. It goes into every home. It touches not merely every farmer, but it touches the poor man that labors in the city. It touches the interest of every man, woman, and child in the nation. And yet my friend has not had it occur to him that this is a tax on industry to the amount of 78 per cent. and causes an increase of the price to that extent to the consumer.

There is no conceivable reason for putting lumber on the free-list upon the theory laid down by gentlemen on the other side. They say they want duties imposed for revenue alone. The revenue duty on lumber would amount to about 40 per cent., but the duty on lumber to-day is not half that amount. Take your own theory that you lay a duty for revenue alone and I say you have not got half a revenue duty on lumber, while you are placing a double revenue duty on sugar and three times a revenue duty on rice. Yet you do not propose to cut down the duty on either of those articles to a revenue standard. Why is it you are so anxious to put lumber, which does not now pay 20 per cent., on the free-list, while at the same time you leave sugar with a duty of 78 per cent., and charge that 78 per cent. upon every man, woman, and child in the country?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DIBBLE. Will the gentleman from Maine yield to me for a question?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would if I had time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. ENLOE. I notice this morning the very interesting fact that there is a difference of opinion among our friends on the other side as to what is to be the effect of the section of the bill that is now under discussion. I understood the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] to say that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] was mistaken as to the benefits which it would confer upon the farmers of his State in the way of giving them cheap lumber.

When the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means read the petition, representing, as he stated, the interests of sixty millions of people in this country, asking for the removal of this duty on lumber, I heard another gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] state that there was nobody else presenting such a petition, and that it was the only petition on that subject that had come to the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I did not make that statement. I should have made it if it had been necessary, but the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] made it much more clearly and forcibly than I could have done it.

Mr. ENLOE. Well, the gentleman from Maine resembles the gentleman from Michigan so much that I made a mistake, and I beg the pardon of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. Chairman, it makes no difference who made the statement. I find that in the Forty-ninth Congress there was a gentleman here who thought that taking off the duty on lumber would cheapen the product to the consumer. I find that the gentleman from Maine who has just corrected me [Mr. BOUTELLE] introduced a bill in that Congress to allow a rebate of the duty on lumber for the benefit of the citizens of Eastport, Me., in order that they might be enabled to rebuild their town more cheaply. The gentleman from Maine then wanted the duty taken off lumber, so as to give the citizens of Eastport, in his State, the benefit of cheap lumber, and now we on this side of the House want to claim for the benefit of sixty millions of people the same advantages which the gentleman from Maine then asked for his constituents.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let me suggest to the gentleman that it would be a physical impossibility for his constituents to get that advantage. The sole reason for that bill was the geographical location of Eastport with reference to the British provinces.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, I imagine that if a duty does any thing it protects, that to the extent of the duty imposed there is protection, and that when we take off the duty we cheapen the product to that extent to the consumers, whether they reside in Tennessee or in Maine or on the prairies of the great West.

The duty is universal in its application to citizens of the different States, and if it was good for citizens of Maine to suspend it in 1885, it will relieve consumers of lumber in all the States to remove it entirely in 1888.

Mr. BOUTELLE. As to the case of Eastport, the idea was that the people across a little water-line of demarkation are paid so much less than our laborers that they are enabled to make the brick and lumber cheaper than our people can; but that does not apply to the gentleman's State.

Mr. ENLOE. Very well; that is conceding the point I make, namely, that we make the lumber cheaper by taking off the duty. We now insist on extending that benefit to all the people of all the States. This legislation is proposed not in the interest of a lumber trust, but for the benefit of the consumers of this country. It is gratifying to see that the gentleman from Minnesota on the other side [Mr. LIND] understands this question just as we do on this side of the House.

Where doctors disagree there is a chance for the patient. The doctrine that protection makes cheaper goods, and the higher the protection the cheaper the goods does not seem to hold good on lumber, even in the stronghold of protection. It seems that it all depends at last on where the shoe pinches.

Mr. MILLIKEN, by unanimous consent, withdrew his formal amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I happen to be a member of the Committee on Manufactures, which has been engaged during the past winter in an investigation of the subject of trusts, and I am astonished that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] should have had so great an amount of accurate information as to the existence of a lumber trust, and yet should not have appeared before that committee to impart that information and aid them in the investigation of that general subject. [Laughter on the Republican side.] No information of that sort has come to us, and, as a member of that committee, I say to the gentleman now, in view of the information that he has given us here, that if he will come to that committee and give us persons, places, and dates, I shall vote at once to commence the investigation.

Mr. WEAVER. I will give them to you.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And I am only sorry that the gentleman has left it until the hot weather has set in before giving us a chance to go to work upon that subject.

Mr. WEAVER. You have been all winter and spring at work on two trusts, and have not finished them yet. I will give you names, and plenty of them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We have been at work, as the gentleman states, at intervals, but we could have examined this timber trust and have had the facts before the House now instead of loose assertion. But, Mr. Chairman, I rose primarily for another purpose.

Mr. WEAVER rose.

Mr. BUCHANAN. You have had your say; now give me my time, undiluted by any remarks from you. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, some remarks have been read here as having been uttered by a distinguished gentleman, formerly a Representative on this floor from the State of Maine, and the question has been asked whether those remarks referred to the imposition of an internal tax or to a customs duty, and the gentleman who produced them and had them read here, and who should have had knowledge on the subject, told us that he was unable to answer the question.

Now, Mr. Blaine is above all things accurate in matters of public concern, and I propose to throw some light upon the question which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] was unable to answer. I find that by the act of July, 1846, wood, boards, plank, staves, laths, scantling, spars, etc., had a customs duty imposed upon them of 20 per cent.; I find that by the act of March 3, 1857, that was reduced to 15 per cent., and that by the act of March, 1861, it was increased to 20 per cent., and that through the subsequent tariff acts that amount has been continued; and therefore it goes without saying that when Mr. Blaine said that no one had dreamed of imposing a tax upon lumber, he was speaking of the internal-revenue tax, not of customs duties.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, considerable has been said here in behalf of the labor employed in this lumber industry, and as that is supposed to be the sole reason why the gentlemen from Maine are anxious that this duty be retained, the query has suggested itself to my mind, What is there to prevent the capitalists engaged in this industry from going across that little river and employing Canadian cheap labor to come over and compete with American labor?

A MEMBER. The tariff.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The tariff does not prevent laborers from coming over. I have seen it stated in the papers that your capitalists do go across the line and employ Canadian cheap labor to come over and work in your lumber regions.

Mr. BOUTELLE. At what wages?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I suppose at cheap rates.

Mr. BOUTELLE rose.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I want to call the attention of the House to some statistics on this subject. I have before me the Compendium of the Tenth Census.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let me ask——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I prefer to go on. During the time this discussion has been running to-day I have made a slight examination and computation from the figures embraced in this volume; and I want to show the great amount of wages that the poor lumberer gets in Maine and Michigan as compared with the percentage of the capitalist upon the amount he has invested. Take the State of Maine; total value of sawed lumber, $7,933,868; total value of materials, $4,951,957; and this estimate of material is, of course, at the high price that the manufacturers adopt as their estimate. Take the one sum from the other and you have remaining $2,981,911. From this subtract the amount of wages paid and divide the remainder by the capital, and it gives you 28¼ per cent. on the capital invested.

Mr. REED. Now, one single question.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Wait till I get through. Take the number of employés engaged in that business, and divide that into the total wages paid, and you get as the wages paid to a lumberman during one year $170. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REED. A single question.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In other words, Mr. Chairman, a man working during the year in this business in the State of Maine gets for his subsistence $170, while the capitalist upon every $1,000 invested gets a return of $285. Is not that a spectacle to show how protection benefits the laborer?

From the same page let us read the figures of the State of Michigan. The amount of wages paid there, as shown by a similar calculation, is in the lumber business $305 per year; the percentage upon capital invested is 33.7. In other words, the laborer during the year gets $305, while the capitalists upon each $1,000 invested gets $337, or $32 more than the laborer receives.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now I will hear your question.

Mr. REED. I do not want to ask you a question; I want to say something.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I think you ought to say something in reply to these figures, which are taken from the Compendium of the Tenth Census, and which I suppose are authentic, because I have no doubt that in those two States they were taken by Republicans. I have tabulated these statistics, because they teach a striking lesson:

Sawed lumber in Michigan.

[Items taken from page 1162, Compendium of the Tenth Census.]

Total value of all products	$52,449,928
Total value of all material used	32,251,372
Total profit and wages	20,198,556
Total wages paid	6,967,905
Profit to capital	13,230,651
Total capital employed	$39,290,428
Rate per cent. received by capital	33.7
Total wages paid during the year	$6,967,905
Average number of hands employed (males above sixteen years)	22,732
A man's wages during the year	$305
Every $1,000 of the capitalist earning during the same time	$337

Sawed lumber in Maine.

Total value of all products	$7,933,868
Total value of all materials	4,951,957
Total profit and wages	2,981,911
Total wages paid	1,161,142
Profit to capitalists	1,820,769
Total capital employed	$6,339,396
Rate per cent. received by capital	28¼
Total wages paid	$1,161,142
Average number of hands employed (males above sixteen years)	6,480
A man's wages during the year	$170
Every $1,000 of the capitalist earning during the same time	$285

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, fortunately there are touchstones of fact——

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will regard the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] as withdrawn.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I withdraw it.

Mr. REED. I wish the Chair would not interrupt the course of debate too much. A little leniency toward our unfortunate disregard of forms would make us very happy.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the Chair will enforce the rules. We have some rights as well as gentlemen on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to respect the rules.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will rise in his seat when he addresses the Chair.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, as I was about to remark, when kindly interrupted by the Chair, whose devotion to the rules of the House has touched us all, it is fortunate that there are touchstones of fact and that we are not left to the absurdity of figures which gentlemen produce from the United States census. There are certain things so absurd that a man never can believe in them or ask anybody else to believe in them if he will allow his mind to be focused on the subject.

Now, nobody knows better than the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] that it is utterly impossible for a profit of 285 per cent. or 337 per cent. to be made in a single year on $1,000 in a manufacturing business long established, which covers a great belt of this country. He knows that it is impossible, or else he is unfortunate in his mental make-up. I know him well enough to know that the trouble is inadvertence. He has found these figures and he was struck with what a sensation he might make on the Democratic side if he produced them; and he forgot to apply to them the logic of his good sense. Every man knows that such profits are preposterous; he can not help understanding it the moment his attention is directed to the matter. I do not care where the gentleman got his figures; I do not care what they are; the result is enough to show to a man of sense who will attend to the question that the gentleman from Ohio must be in error.

And the gentleman parades the wages of the lumberman as so much a year, apparently not knowing that those men work only from a quarter to half the time.

Now, just think of these things being produced here amid applause on the Democratic side of the House. [Laughter.] Gentlemen on the other side actually applauded; they do not understand the absurdity of the result any more than the man who makes the figures. They undertook in caucus assembled to settle the questions of the industries of the country, and yet they applaud figures like those.

Upon my word there can not be any better commentary on the business condition of the country than that is now. The other part of the year these men engaged in lumbering are engaged in other business.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is so.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does the gentleman answer my argument?

Mr. REED. Your what? [Laughter.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Do you answer my argument?

Mr. REED. Do you call it an argument? [Laughter.] That is not dictionary language. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the formal amendments are withdrawn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I think the necessities of our people in reference to the supply of lumber have been much changed in the last twenty or thirty years. There has long been a tax on lumber. In time our population covered the prairies of Illinois, and that vast treeless region of what we call the far West was reached on the latitude of Iowa and Minnesota, thence West to the woody slopes of the Pacific Ocean. South of this Arkansas and Missouri project a forest-covered region. Then Kansas and Texas and the country West are like the regions I just described. At present the great supply of lumber is in Arkansas and Southern Missouri.

One of the great difficulties the people had to encounter before they reached this treeless region was to get rid of the forest growth before they could make a crop. Now we find our population stretching out over Iowa, Minnesota, and Kansas, and they are cut off from the Canadian supply of lumber, which is mainly in the east of Canada, and is also taxed, and they are dependent for these supplies upon the country east and south of them.

And the gentleman from Maine, when reaching for a touchstone of fact, it seems to me did not get down to the bottom facts.

In the last five or six years there has been an enormous development of the lumber industry in my own State. It has perhaps as extensive and varied a supply of lumber as any other Territory of equal extent in the United States. I believe there is not less than $700,000,000 or $1,000,000,000 worth of lumber in the forests of Arkansas.

In the last five or six years, along the new lines of railroad crossing that State in various directions, we have great mills upon every hand. We see by our exports of lumber from Southern ports that they receive for their rough lumber from $12 to $13 a thousand, and we are selling it in my State in large quantities at from $9 to $10 a thousand. The coast mills now compete with Canadian lumber in every country on the globe. In the unorganized state of the trade at this time we sell for less to Kansas, Omaha, and Chicago, and we make money handsomely.

The Canadian can not hurt us. If we organize we can meet his prices, plus the tariff, and rob the farmers of the West, and even the East must soon look to us. Why, then, should we maintain this high tariff on the people? We are making money now, and will never sell for less. Do you want us to go into a trust, to strike hands with other corrupt monopolies, to oppress these people?

We do not need the protection; it would be dishonest and unpatriotic to ask it, and here we are fighting against the gentlemen from Kansas and other States who are seeking to subsidize us and to burden their own people. There is neither need nor welcome for class legislation in Arkansas. Freedom and fair play are better.

[Here the hammer fell.]

By unanimous consent, formal amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, the principal excuse which has been offered for placing imported manufactured lumber on the free-list while most other manufactured products are retained on the dutiable list is the plea that it is a raw material. This is the plea of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

I would like to have the gentlemen who framed this bill explain why sawed lumber, shingles, staves, laths, clapboards, and pickets are to be regarded as "raw materials" to be admitted free of duty, while coal, iron ore, lead and zinc ores, tobacco in leaf, and sawed marble, for example, are held to be manufactured products to be placed on the dutiable list.

Logs may in one sense be regarded as raw material, although even they, when delivered in market, have as much labor in them as coal and ores. But logs are on the free-list already, and there is no objection to having them remain there. When logs are taken to the mill and manufactured into boards, shingles, laths, clapboards, and other forms, they become as much a completed product so far as the lumber manufacturing industry is concerned as sugar is a completed product of the sugar industry, leather of the leather industry, glass of the glass industry, or pig-iron of the iron industry. There are very few manufactured industries whose completed products are not also the materials of some other industry.

If even sawed lumber is tested by the percentage of labor required in its production from the round log in the forest it will be found that as large a proportion of human effort is demanded in its manufacture as in many of the articles left on the dutiable list by this bill.

In 1880 the value of the sawed lumber manufactured in this country in nearly every State was $233,268,729; the number of men employed, 147,956; wages paid, $31,845,974; value of materials used, $146,155,385. In other words, nearly 15 per cent. of the value of the product represented the labor directly used in converting the logs into sawed lumber, making no account of the labor used in getting the logs to the mill, transporting the sawed lumber to the market, and building the mill-dams and machinery, which probably amounted to nearly as much more. It is not too much to say that one-fourth of the cost of sawed lumber is in the labor, in the cost of transportation and manufacture from the log.

The percentage of labor required in the manufacture of logs into sawed lumber is greater than that used to convert hides into leather, on which this bill leaves an average duty of 20 per cent., and six times as much as that required to convert raw sugar into refined sugar, for which refining industry the pending bill imposes a protective duty as high as the present average duty on imported lumber.

Mr. Chairman, why should not the labor employed in our lumber manufacturing industries receive protection proportionate to the labor employed in other industries? The average duty on manufactured lumber under the existing tariff is only 16 per cent. Logs, firewood, railroad ties, shingle bolts, ship timber and planking, hop-poles, hemlock bark, and cabinet woods not grown in this country, are now on the free-list. Over three and a half millions of such unmanufactured lumber was imported last year free of duty, and now the pending bill proposes to also place on the free-list imported Canadian lumber which has been manufactured by labor that cost at least 50 per cent. less than our labor.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] says that the lumbermen use Canadian labor. To whatever extent they do this, they pay American and not Canadian prices.

I ask gentlemen if that is just? I ask gentlemen from the coal-producing districts if it is fair to place so crude an article as coal on the dutiable list at 26 per cent., and at the same time to deprive manufactured lumber of its low duty of 16 per cent. and transfer it to the free-list?

I ask gentlemen who propose to vote to retain a duty of 68 per cent. on raw sugar how they can justify a vote to place manufactured lumber on the free-list?

Mr. Chairman, it is evident that gentlemen who are seeking for an excuse to place manufactured lumber on the free-list begin to see that there can be no justification for such a course on the ground that it is a raw material, for it clearly stands on the same basis as other manufactured products.

They have therefore brought forward an argument of a benevolent character, in which they appear as public benefactors seeking to preserve our forests. They tell us that any duty imposed on Canadian lumber seeking to enter our markets and drive out American lumber only encourages the destruction of our forests, which we ought to seek to preserve.

Such public benefactors who seek to obtain a selfish advantage by placing Canadian lumber on the free-list, and who defend their unjust discrimination against our farmers that grow lumber and our mills which manufacture it, by claiming that they are protecting our forests, remind me of Artemus Ward who said that he loved his country so devotedly that in her defense he was willing to shed all the blood which runs in the veins of his wife's relations.

These gentlemen are so anxious to protect our forests that they propose to require the farmers and others who own them and the men who carry on our lumber mills to surrender our own timber markets to Canadian operators.

But, so far as this benevolent argument is sincerely presented, it is based on a misapprehension of the facts. Where the country is being denuded of forests at the present time it is the direct and indirect outcome of the advent of settlers who want the land for farms, or whose presence leads to accidental fires. Lumbermen who are holding lands for timber do not strip them unless they are compelled to in order to save them from destruction by fire. On the contrary, where the trees are of the kind that reproduce themselves on the same ground, they now carefully cut out the large trees and leave the smaller ones to grow and to be cut in the future. In my own State of Maine, for example, where large tracts of land are held for timber culture, there is more standing timber to day than there was twenty-five years ago.

It is argued, however, that, aside from the considerations already discussed, it is the duty of Congress to place manufactured lumber on the free-list in order to give our people cheaper building and manufacturing materials.

If it be true that the removal of duties on manufactured lumber and other imported articles which may be produced here to the extent of our wants permanently reduces prices to the extent of the duties, then I ask gentlemen who hold to this view what justice there can be in selecting one class of manufactured products for the sacrifice and leaving all other kinds of manufactured products on the dutiable lists with higher prices? Certainly cheaper lumber is not so much of a boon as cheaper iron, cheaper coal, cheaper cotton and woolen goods, cheaper boots and shoes, cheaper sugar, cheaper rice. If you really believe that free lumber would be a blessing, why would not free iron, free coal, free clothing, free sugar, free rice be a still greater blessing?

Mr. Chairman, it is possible that the placing of manufactured lumber on the free-list might temporarily give lower prices, but not permanently. While the Canadians were seizing upon our markets and taking away from our lumber industries a part of their opportunities, there would be that temporary reduction of prices which always results from a gorged market, but as soon as our lumber industries realized that they must surrender a part of their business to Canadians and contracted their operations to meet the changed situation, prices would soon go back to the old standard, partly because a permanent reduction would stop the whole American production of lumber, because with our wages of labor it could not be manufactured here, and partly because the Canadian lumber fields are mainly held by the Canadian Government, which would take occasion to at once advance the prices of permits for cutting lumber correspondingly with the reduction of the duty.

To show the House that this view of the effect of the abolition of the duty on Canadian lumber is well founded, I ask the Clerk to read the following statements of the United States consul at Ottawa—a free-trader, by the way—who, in an interview published in the Boston Herald, a staunch "tariff-reform" paper, says:

The opinion which I shall give you as my own personal view is shared by nearly every Canadian lumberman with whom I have conversed. I unhesitatingly say that the American consumer will not reap one iota of benefit from the taking of the duty off of lumber. The first party to be benefited would be the Canadian lumberman. His benefit, however, would be of brief duration, as the necessities and inclinations of the provincial governments, which control all standing timber, are such that by renewed legislation and the imposition of increased taxes they would soon absorb the increased percentage of profit that they found the manufacturer was getting out of the timber.

* * * * * * *

It should be more generally known in the United States that the timber tracts of Canada are owned and controlled by the provincial governments, and are only leased by the great lumbermen, not bought in fee simple, as in the United States. All government timber tracts—called limits—are leased by the square mile (640 acres). As there is always a competitive demand for these leases, they are put up at auction, and the right to lease for one year is sold to the highest bidder. At the recent sale of limits by the Ontario government, which took place at Toronto in December last, $5,500 per square mile was paid for a portion of the limits put up, while the average price paid is estimated at $3 per thousand feet for the stumpage.

These buyers did not purchase this land and the trees thereon, but paid these prices as a bonus for the exclusive right and privilege of cutting timber on the land for one year, with the government as lessor, under certain terms and conditions agreed upon, namely: That the lessee shall, on May 1, pay into the Crown land office the annual dues, or rental, of $3 per square mile, and $1 per 1,000 feet, board measure, on every 1,000 feet of logs (including culls) cut on said limits, with a tariff for square timber, namely, timber, poles, masts, ties, and every product of the forest thereon; and if any minerals are discovered on leased limits, the discovery must be reported and a mineral lease obtained. If the annual dues and all timber dues have been paid promptly, the lessee has the right to a renewal for one year, and so on from year to year, subject, however, to any legislation the provincial government may see fit to enact for each coming year.

"You will see from this," said Mr. Hotchkiss "that the Canadian lumbermen are largely at the mercy of the provincial governments. The question naturally arises: How long would the provincial government look on and allow the manufacturers to enjoy the inflow of the $2 per thousand feet which the American Government remitted for the purpose of benefiting its own people by giving them cheaper lumber? You may safely say that not an iota of benefit will free lumber be to the American consumer."

That the Canadians regard the proposed abolition of all duties on manufactured lumber as a special boon to the Dominion is shown by the recent remarks of Sir Charles Tupper, the Dominion minister of finance in the Canadian Parliament on the fisheries treaty. Speaking of the introduction of the Mills bill into Congress, the Canadian minister says:

Already we have action by the financial exponent of the Administration of the United States—I mean Mr. MILLS—the gentleman who in the United States Congress represents the Government of the day, and stands in the position most analogous in the United States to the finance minister in this House, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who propounds the policy of the Administration in the House. How is he selected? The Democratic party, sustaining the Government, selects a man as Speaker of the House of Representatives who is in accord with the policy of the Administration for the time being, and Mr. CARLISLE, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, nominates the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means and all the members of the committee; and therefore the chairman of that committee occupies the position of representing the Government in bringing forward such bills as will represent the views and sentiments of the Democratic party in the United States supporting the Administration. What have we seen? The ink is barely dry upon this treaty before he, as the representative of the Government and chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, brings forward a measure to do what? Why, to make free articles that Canada sends into the United States, and upon which last year $1,800,000 of duty was paid.

* * * * * * *

I say that under this bill, which has been introduced, and which, I believe, will pass, for it does not require two-thirds of the Senate, where the Republican majority is only one in the whole House, to pass this bill; it requires a majority of one only, and I am very sanguine that this bill will pass during the present session. Modified it may be, but I am inclined to think the amendments will be still more in the interests of Canada than as the bill stands to-day. If this is the case, I think we may congratulate ourselves upon securing the free admission of our lumber, upon which was paid during the last year no less than $1,315,450. On copper ore, made free by the Mills bill, we paid, or there was paid to make it meet the views of the honorable gentleman opposite more correctly—$66,945. On salt $21,992 duty was paid. This is rendered free by the Mills bill. I am sorry to find, as I hoped would be the case from the first copy of the bill that came to me, that potatoes were not included amongst vegetables. I am sorry to find there is a doubt as to whether the term "vegetables not specially enumerated" will not exclude potatoes.

I call special attention, Mr. Chairman, to the "congratulations" of the Canadian minister over the anticipated advantage which Canada and not the United States is to gain by the passage of this bill. Evidently he and his associates are confident that Canada is to save the duty and the American people are not, in the end, to get their lumber any cheaper.

Mr. Chairman, I direct attention to the fact that the present duty on imported lumber is only 16 per cent., on the average, the same as it was made by the low tariff of 1846, which our Democratic friends have been commending us all through this debate. It is one of the lowest duties on the dutiable list, and now it is proposed to strike down that small duty and place manufactured lumber on the free-list.

The pending bill places wood and chemical pulp on the free-list. A manufactured product, produced in twenty-one States, valued at $12,375,000 last year, and giving employment to twenty-two thousand persons in the United States, is placed by this bill on the free-list. To show the injustice done in this particular, I print the following statement of this industry in the United States:

WOOD-PULP FIBER.

The Mills bill, so called, reported by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives of Congress, transfers pulp fiber from the dutiable to the free list. The manufacturers of wood fiber in this country, believing it due to them, and for the advantage of users and makers of paper of all kinds, for the welfare of the labor employed by them, and essential to the profitable continuance and development of their business, ask that the duty, which is among the lowest on dutiable articles, be not removed; and in support of this request they respectfully submit a statement of the beginning, growth, and present condition of the industry in the United States, also a comparison with that in foreign countries with which they are brought in competition.

The term "wood pulp dried for paper-makers' use," as used in the existing tariff law, embraces two qualities of wood-pulp fiber, one known as mechanical and the other as chemical wood-pulp fiber.

Mechanical wood-pulp fiber is produced by grinding, where heavy and expensive machinery and large water-power is employed.

Chemical fiber is produced by the use of chemicals and steam, and also involves an expensive and still more costly plant, in either product an outlay for mill and machinery of from $15,000 to $25,000 for each ton of the daily product of a mill, according to the permanency of the machinery and structures.

The production and use of mechanical wood pulp began about 1868. The manufacture and use of chemical wood-pulp fiber began at an earlier date, but was confined to one or two mills in Pennsylvania until its manufacture and use became more general, between the years 1870 and 1883.

Both of these processes were subject to patents, all of which have now expired, except patents of recent date on a new process known as sulphite wood-pulp fiber.

The introduction and use of these fibers was slow and difficult, there being a great prejudice among paper manufacturers against adopting them and among paper consumers against using paper made from these fibers.

After a trial had been made and prejudice removed, the manufacture and consumption increased rapidly, until it reached the enormous daily production and consumption of about 1,100 tons.

The mills are located in twenty-one different States and employ capital to the amount of at least $20,000,000, as shown by the tables following:

THE YEARLY PRODUCTION OF WOOD-PULP FIBER.

	Tons.
Ground-wood fiber	225,000
Chemical wood fiber	112,500
Total	337,500

VALUE.

Ground-wood fiber	$5,625,000
Chemical wood fiber	6,750,000
Total	12,375,000
The cost of labor to produce the same	10,000,000
Chemicals (dutiable), lime, interest on plant, insurance, taxes, wood on the stump	2,375,000
Total value of yearly product	12,375,000

The number of men employed and the cost for labor embraces the cutting, hauling, and the preparation of the wood, as well as the men employed in the various establishments. In the United States no women or boys are employed. The wood-pulp fiber industry employs fully 22,000 in this country, affording support to 110,000 persons.

List of ground wood-pulp mills in the United States.

Location.	Name.	Daily capacity.
		Pounds.
California: Alta	Pioneer Pulp Company	3,000
Connecticut:
Chaplin	Case Brothers	7,500
East Hampton	Brown Brothers	2,000
Georgia: Marietta	Marietta Paper Manufacturing Company.
Indiana:
Evansville	Ferdinande Funke, Evansville Paper Mill.	1,000
Mishawaka	The A. Gaylor Pulp Company	6,000
Do	M. W. Stokes	8,000
Monticello	Norway Pulp Company	6,000
Do	Tippecanoe Paper Company	6,000
South Bend	E. S. Reynolds	7,000
Do	South Bend Pulp Company	20,000
Kentucky: Louisville	Dupoint & Co
Maine:
Brunswick	Androskoggin Pulp Company	10,000
Livermore Falls	Alvin Record & Sons	16,000
North Gorham	Indurated Fiber Company
Paris	J. S. Clapp (post-office, Snow Falls, Paris).
Skowhegan	W. K. Shurtleff & Co	4,000
South Windham	Sebago Wood Board Company	18,000
Waterville	Kennebec Fiber Company	20,000
Maryland: Conowingo	Susquehanna Water-Power and Paper Company of Harford County.
Massachusetts:
Fitchburg	Charles Roesnell, Fitchburg Wood-Pulp Mill.	40,000
Hoosac Tunnel	Glen Pulp and Paper Company (post-office, Hartford, Conn.).	10,000
Stockbridge	C. H. Willis (post-office, Hartford)	3,000
Turner's Falls	Montague Paper Company	21,000
Wendell Depot	Farley Paper Company	4,000
Do	Goddard Wood Paper Company	6,000
Do	Wendell Paper Company	2,000
Michigan:
Ann Arbor	Cornwell Manufacturing Company	6,000
Birkett	Birkett Manufacturing Company	4,000
Niles	Michigan Wood-Pulp Company	40,000
Do	Ohio Paper Company	4,000
Petoskey	Birkett & Spokes	4,000
Michigan:
Utica	S. L. Dekay	1,000
Ypsilanti	Ypsilanti Paper Company	4,000
New Hampshire:
Bath	Conant & Clark Pulp Company	12,000
Berlin Falls	Glen Manufacturing Company	60,000
Do	White Mountain Pulp and Paper Company.	10,000
Bristol	Train, Smith & Co	3,000
Concord	Moore, Brown & Co	10,000
East Tilton	P. C. Cheney Company
Franklin	Franklin Falls Pulp Company	24,000
Do	Winnipiseogee Paper Company	14,000
Goffstown Centre	P. C. Cheney Company
Lisbon	O. D. Moore	5,000
Manchester	P. C. Cheney Company
Petersborough	Amoskeag Indurated Fiber Wire Company.
New York:
Ausable Chasm	Ausable Pulp Company (post-office, Troy).	10,000
Beaver Falls	J. P. Lewis, Beaver Falls Pulp Mills.	5,000
Binghamton	Bayless & Co	18,000
Balnard	Balnard Paper Company, Limited
Brown's Station	Hudson River Manufacturing Company.	6,000
Brownville	Black River Paper Company	4,000
Crown Point	Scott, Wyman & De Poutes	4,000
Fullerville Iron Works	Oswegatchie Pulp Company	24,000
Fulton	Victoria Paper Mills Company	5,000
Glen's Falls	Glen's Falls Paper Mills Company	50,000
Hadley	New York Pulp Company	14,000
Lockport	Cascade Wood Pulp Company	20,000
Rochester	Rochester Paper Company	20,000
Luzerne	Manufacturers' Paper Company	6,000
Lyonsdale	Lyonsdale Pulp Company	10,000
Lyons' Falls	G. H. P. Gould	8,000
Do	Herkimer Paper Company, Limited	20,000
Do	Moose River Pulp and Paper Mills	7,400
Malone	Salmon River Paper Company	4,000

List of ground wood-pulp mills in the United States—Continued.

Location.	Name.	Daily capacity.
		Pounds.
New York—Continued:
Middle Falls	Bennington Falls Pulp Company	30,000
Do	W. N. Sprague, Battenkill Mills	3,000
Niagara Falls	Cataract Manufacturing Company	16,000
Do	Niagara Wood Paper Company	25,000
Do	John F. Quigley	16,000
Oswego	Oswego Indurated Fiber Company
Palmer's Falls	Hudson River Pulp and Paper Company.	70,000
Plattsburgh	Allen & Sherman (post-office, Port Henry).	10,000
Do	Martin & Smith, Saranac Wood Pulp Mill.	6,000
Rochester	Rochester Paper Company	30,000
Ticonderoga	Glens Falls Pulp Company	20,000
Do	Lake George Pulp and Paper Company.	4,000
Valley Falls	Thomas Lape (Valley Falls Pulp Mills).	10,000
Waterford	Gilbert & Bell	12,000
Do	C. R. Remington & Sons	18,000
Do	Taggart Bros. Company	3,000
Do	Watertown Paper Company	16,000
Westport	Westport Pulp Company (Limited)	4,000
North Carolina	W. & R. Tiddy (Long Shoal Pulp Mill).	2,000
New Berne	The S. H. Gray Manufacturing Company.	4,000
Ohio:
Cleveland	Cleveland Paper Company	4,000
Grand Rapids	Ohio Pulp Company	6,500
Oregon: Portland	Columbia River Paper Company
Pennsylvania:
Ohiopyle	Stewart Bros. (Falls City Pulp Mills).	7,500
Philadelphia	York Haven Paper Company
South Carolina: Bath	Hill & Johnson Manufacturing Company.	6,000
Tennessee: Manchester	Stone Fort Paper Company
Vermont:
Barnet	Cascade Pulp Company	3,000
Bellows Falls	Fall Mountain Paper Company	50,000
Do	Willard, Russell & Co	5,000
East Barnett	Wilder & Co. (post-office, Boston)	6,000
Lyndon	Wilder & Co	8,000
Middlebury	Beldens Falls Pulp Company	16,000
Do	Green Mountain Pulp Company	80,000
Morrisville	Lamoyle Valley Pulp Company (post-office, Lowell).	16,000
North Bennington	Bennington Valley Pulp Company	10,000
Olcott	Olcott Falls Company (post-office, Devonshire street, Boston).	24,000
Passumpsic	Passumpsic Pulp Company (post-office, Lowell).	16,000
Reedsborough	Deerfield River Company	12,000
Salisbury	Dunmore Pulp Company	5,000
Do	Kingsley Brothers	2,000
West Derby	Conant & Co. (post-office, Newport)	30,000
Wisconsin:
Appleton	Atlas Paper Company	24,000
Do	Patten Paper Company, Limited	7,000
Centralia	Wisconsin Wood Pulp Company	8,000
Eau Claire	Eau Claire Pulp and Paper Company
Grand Rapids	Pioneer Wood-Pulp Company, Limited.	10,000
Kaukauna	American Pulp Company (post-office Appleton).	8,000
Do	Badger Paper Company
Do	Brokaw Pulp Company	7,000
Do	Fox River Pulp and Paper Company	12,000
Do	William Hood	6,000
Do	Kaukauna Paper Company
Do	Union Pulp Company	36,000
Marinette	Marinette and Menominee Paper Company.	16,000
Oconto Falls	The Falls Manufacturing Company	9,000
Total amount		1,418,900

List of chemical fiber mills in the United States.

Location.	Name.	Daily capacity.
		Pounds.
Connecticut: Birmingham	Wilkinson Bros. & Co., sulphite	4,000
Delaware: Wilmington	Jessup & Moore (post-office, New York City).	42,000
Maine:
Canton	Poland Pulp and Paper Company	20,000
Fairfield	Somerset Fiber Company	20,000
West Great Works	Penobscot Chemical Fiber Company	40,000
Lincoln	Lincoln Pulp and Paper Company	14,000
Cumberland	S. D. Warren & Co. (post-office, Boston, Mass.).	40,000
Yarmouthville	do	40,000
Mechanics Falls	Poland Pulp and Paper Company	14,000
Maryland: Elkton	William M. Singerly (post-office, Philadelphia, Pa.).	16,000
Massachusetts: Lawrence	Russell Paper Company	20,000
Michigan:
Alpena	Fletcher, Pack & Co., sulphite	20,000
Jackson	R. H. Emerson & Co	8,000
Detroit	Detroit Pulp Company, sulphite	20,000

List of chemical fiber mills in the United States—Continued.

Location.	Name.	Daily capacity.
		Pounds.
New Hampshire:
Berlin Falls	Forest Fiber Company	70,000
Wentworth	Mount Cube Fiber Company	15,000
New Jersey: Weymouth	Weymouth Paper Mills, sulphite	15,000
New York:
Ballston Spa	George West	12,000
Mechanicsville	Hudson River Water Power and Paper Company.	11,000
Saugerties	Barclay Fiber Company, sulphite	10,000
Ticonderoga	Ticonderoga Pulp and Paper Company.	24,000
Willsborough	Champlain Fiber Company	21,000
Pennsylvania:
Catawissa	Catawissa Pulp Company	8,000
Experiment Mills	Delaware Gap Pulp and Paper Company.	6,000
Lock Haven	Pennsylvania Pulp and Paper Company.	20,000
Philadelphia	American Wood Paper Company (post-office, New York City).	68,000
Manayunk	S. A. Rudolph (post-office, Philadelphia, Pa.).	8,000
Manayunk	M. & W. H. Nixon	20,000
Tyrone	Morrison & Cass	18,000
Rhode Island: Providence	Richmond Paper Company, sulphite	20,000
Wisconsin:
Appleton	Atlas Paper Company, sulphite	4,000
Appleton and Neenah	Kimberly & Clark	18,000
Monico	Wisconsin Sulphite Paper Company, sulphite.	4,000
Kentucky: Louisville	Bremaker-Moore Paper Company	6,000
Ohio	Clutch & Co	12,000
		756,000

RECAPITULATION BY STATES.

States.	Ground wood.	Chemical fiber.
California	3,000
Connecticut	9,500	4,000
Indiana	54,000
Kentucky		6,000
Maine	84,000	188,000
Maryland		16,000
Massachusetts	89,500	20,000
Michigan	63,000	48,000
New Hampshire	118,000	86,000
New York	542,400	144,000
North Carolina	6,000
Ohio	10,500	12,000
Oregon
Pennsylvania	7,500	158,000
South Carolina	6,000
Tennessee
Vermont	283,000
Wisconsin	143,000	26,000
Delaware		42,000
New Jersey		16,000
Rhode Island		20,000
Total ground-wood fiber	1,419,400
Total chemical fiber	756,000	756,000
Amount of daily capacity	2,175,400

A large majority of these mills were built between 1870 and 1883. The reduction of the tariff in 1883 from 20 to 10 per cent. ad valorem, the consequent increased importations, together with the sharp competition among domestic manufacturers, checked the increase in the development of the industry and compelled many mills to go out of existence. Among them we enumerate the following:

	Pounds.
C. H. Dexter & Sons, Connecticut, estimated daily product	4,000
Hulbert Chemical Fiber Company, Parkersburgh, W. Va	14,000
Chemical Paper Company, Massachusetts	20,000
Connecticut River Pulp Company, Massachusetts	26,000
Crocker, Burbank & Co., Massachusetts	12,000
Wilkinson Brothers & Co., Connecticut	12,000
Haverhill Fiber Company, New Hampshire	4,000
West Newton Mill, Pennsylvania; P. Markle & Sons	14,000
Philadelphia Enquirer Pulp and Paper Mill	4,000
Case Brothers, Connecticut	4,000
Middletown Company, Ohio	12,000
Hollingsworth & Whitlay Co., Maine	12,000
Total daily product	138,000
Value of plants abandoned	$2,070,000

Home competition has reduced the price of chemical wood fiber from 7 cents per pound in 1870 to 3½ cents, and ground wood-fiber from 4½ cents in 1870 to 1½ cents, now the selling prices at the mills.

The introduction of this fiber has wrought a wonderful change in the price of the paper. The lowest current price at which newspaper was ever sold, before the war, was 9 cents a pound. During the war, without wood-pulp fiber, and with a scarcity of stock, newspaper ran up to the enormous cost of 25 to 28 cents per pound. It has gradually fallen, until now the ordinary newspaper, such as is used by the metropolitan press, is furnished at about 4½ to 4¾ cents. Book papers in the same proportion. This has almost wholly been brought about by the introduction of wood-pulp fiber.

Norway and Sweden have also special advantages. Labor is very cheap, about one-third our own; inexhaustible water-powers and forests; easy and cheap communication with the shipping ports, such as Christiana and Gothenberg, whence low freights are obtained to American ports.

Finland has hitherto found its best market in Russia, but by reason of the high import duty recently imposed by Russia will, under the stimulus of this protection, produce their own wood-pulp fiber.

Then, Finland with its numerous lakes, its extensive forest, its labor—cheaper far than in Sweden and Norway—and its low water freights to this country, either direct or by way of London or Hull, will become another formidable competitor.

Wood delivered at the mill in Finland costs from $1.90 to $2 per cord; in Sweden and Norway from $2.90 to $3; in the United States from $5 to $9.

The chemicals used in the manufacture of chemical fiber are cheaper in these countries, having free admission into Norway and Sweden.

In Finland the labor employed in pulp mills costs from 25 to 30 cents per day. In the pulp mills of Norway and Sweden the men are paid from 30 to 50 cents per day. A large number of women are also employed at from about 12 to 20 cents per day. In the United States no women are employed, and the average wages paid are $1.50 to $1.65 per day.

The extent of the foreign competition even under the present tariff is shown by the constantly increasing importations.

There were reported in 1886, over 18,000 tons; in 1887, over 32,000 tons; in 1888, January and February, 9,000 tons, which, at the same volume through the year, will amount to 53,000 tons, or more than the two years 1886 and 1887.

Statements of the quantities and values of wood pulp (including paper pulp) imported into the United States during the years ending December 31, 1886 to 1887, and the two months ending February 29, 1888.

Customs districts into which imported.	Year ending December 31, 1886.		Year ending December 31, 1887.		Two months ending February 29, 1888.
	Pounds.	Dollars.	Pounds.	Dollars.	Pounds.	Dollars.
Baltimore, Md....	.....	.....	.....	.....	110,230	1,868
Bath, Me.....	.....	.....	383,041	4,788	.....	.....
Boston and Charlestown, Mass	2,317,033	33,743	3,650,135	72,974	611,522	10,162
Champlain, N. Y.....	258,500	3,693	48,440	667	.....	.....
Detroit, Mich.....	60,000	614	175,600	1,671	20,000	200
Fairfield, Conn	.....	.....	432,400	5,079	.....	.....
Huron, Mich.....	226,426	6,687	572,415	16,871	136,838	3,870
New Orleans, La	221,770	2,331	.....	.....	.....	.....
New York, N. Y	28,988,235	250,969	53,518,805	682,569	14,934,714	185,610
Niagara, N. Y	345,000	3,450	891,614	8,968	151,875	1,898
Oswegatchie, N. Y..	105,145	1,898	25,580	289	.....	.....
Philadelphia, Pa	.....	.....	144,080	3,378	.....	.....
Portland and Falmouth, Me.....	241,209	3,015	230,000	1,089	.....	.....
San Francisco, Cal ..	19,200	220	1,004,330	11,449	1,577,900	19,342
Vermont, Vt.....	3,306,776	67,826	2,251,232	46,734	206,230	5,279
Total	36,089,292	374,446	65,328,581	856,526	17,749,310	228,229

WM. F. SWITZLER, Chief of Bureau.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS, March 30, 1888.

Total importations for two years and two months, 119,167,185 pounds; 9,111,671 pounds came from Canada, or about 7½ per cent.

AN IMPORTANT INTEREST TO FARMERS AND FOREST-OWNERS.

The principal raw material used in the production of this fiber is wood, and its value in the forest, or on the stump, so called, is small—estimated from 75 cents to $1 per cord.

There are few, if any, products in this country the cost of which is so largely made up of labor as wood-pulp fiber.

The cutting and transportation of the wood to the mill, its preparation at the mill, and the skilled labor employed in its manufacture constitute fully 80 per cent. of its value; the balance representing imported chemicals, lime (a native product), the interest of the money invested in the plant, insurance, taxes, repairs, etc.

We wish here to call your attention to a very important fact connected with the manufacture of wood-pulp fiber in this country, which is that some of the principal woods (poplar and cottonwoods) used in the manufacture are of very little value for other purposes, being of too inferior a growth to be considered even of value for fuel. They grow profusely in every State in the Union and have a rapid growth, reaching their maturity in a few years, then going to decay unless used.

Therefore, to transfer this large and growing industry to Norway, Sweden, and Canada, where they have cheap labor, cheap wood, and water-power, not only deprives our people of a large capital investment, a large number of laborers of employment, but our farmers and land-owners of a ready market for their inferior woods.

An important factor in the manufacture of chemical wood fiber is soda-ash, on which there is a duty of 25 cents per 100 pounds. Other dutiable articles are also used, such as woolen felts and wire-cloths.

Wood pulp is manufactured extensively in Norway, Sweden, Finland, Germany, and Austria-Hungary—countries having cheap wood and water-power, cheap chemicals, and cheaper labor. At present the industry of the United States is most affected by competition with these countries, as they have extensive forests and wood well adapted for wood-pulp fiber.

Canada has extensive forests, abundant water-power, and cheaper labor than our own lying along our border, and will absorb this industry if the product be put upon the free-list.

These importations are chiefly from Norway and Sweden. In this connection it should be noticed that the great paper-consuming countries, with the exception of Great Britain, are closed to the manufacturers of this country by the tariff they impose, namely, France, Germany, and Russia.

In view of the fact that the manufacture of wood-pulp fiber has become so important an industry in so many States of the Union, engaging such a large capital, employing such a large number of adult male laborers at such remunerative wages, and consuming so much wood of so little value for other purposes, we are at a loss to know on what grounds the Ways and Means Committee place this American product on the free-list.

The manufacture of wood-pulp fiber is a distinctive manufacture, with as large an investment in plant and nearly as much labor per ton as paper itself, and the duty should be fixed and remain the same as on paper.

Tariff reformers can not justly assail this industry on the ground of being protected by an excessive duty while the duty is but 10 per cent. and the average duty on all manufactures is 40 per cent.

And those who believe in free trade can not consistently crowd us on the free-list while a duty still remains upon soda-ash, wire-cloth, felts, and machinery.

We claim for this product of American labor a specific duty of $10 per ton on chemical fiber and $5 per ton on ground wood fiber, equal to the duty on paper.

MAY 5, 1888.

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, the time having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to submit a few remarks in reply to the three gentlemen from Maine. I have before me report No. 4173, second session Forty-ninth Congress, made by the Committee on Ways and Means, upon a bill introduced by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] to allow a drawback upon imports of lumber and building material used by persons in the city of Eastport, Me., who had suffered from fire. I will read the bill; it is very short:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be allowed and paid, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, all materials actually used in buildings erected on the ground burned over by the fire which occurred at Eastport, Me., October 14, 1886, a drawback on the import duties paid on the same: Provided, That such materials shall have been imported and used during the term of two years from and after the said 14th day of October, 1886.

This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Maine, and its passage was urged by him, both before the committee and in the House. It establishes this fact, that there was a conviction in his mind at that time that the duty upon lumber enhanced the price to the consumer.

Mr. HATCH. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. WEAVER. It establishes, secondly, that he considered it was a good thing for poor people who were in trouble financially to have lumber on the free-list. [Applause.]

Now there are a great many people all over my State who would like to have cheap lumber as well as the people of Eastport, Me.

Mr. BOUTELLE rose.

Mr. WEAVER. I have no time to yield to the gentleman from Maine.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] assures the House that logs and round timber are on the free-list. That is true—and who gets the benefit of it?

The American mill-owner imports his logs from Canada free, converts them into lumber, and then sells it at the tariff price to my constituents. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS. "Log-rolling."

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is log-rolling, as suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas, and log-rolling against the interests of my constituents.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the law of 1883 also puts railroad ties of wood on the free-list. The railroads buy them ready hewn in Canada, made by cheap Canadian labor, ship them over here by the million, and thus they obtain cheap ties for their roads. But they are unwilling to treat the people with equal fairness. The same law puts the lumber which my constituents must use in constructing their houses, their granaries, and their barns on the dutiable list at a rate of from $2 to $3 per thousand feet. This is an unmitigated shame. [Applause.]

It is a plain discrimination in favor of the railroads and against the farmers and builders. This bill, sir, in a broad and catholic spirit, treats the monopolies and the people exactly alike. It puts the lumber of the poor man upon the free-list and at the same time it leaves the railroad tie on that list also. [Applause.]

I am astonished at the strength of the opposition to free lumber. It injures nobody, but treats the people decently and fairly. [Applause.] It treats them with a fairness that has been denied for a quarter of a century.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Will my friend permit a suggestion? The gentleman from Maine made a point which seemed difficult to answer, but if any one can answer it the gentleman from Iowa can. He said that if this duty were taken off, the lumbermen of Canada, who are not one-fifth as wealthy as ours, would overwhelm us and run us out of the market. How can you answer that?

Mr. WEAVER. That overwhelms me. [Laughter.] Ask me an easy one. I tremble for my feeble country and her infant industries. Why try to answer such an argument? It is a mere chimera of the brain and wholly absurd. It answers itself. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out four or five words. [Laughter.] We have had to-day, sir, three or four very striking illustrations of the character of the so-called arguments upon which the Democratic party of the nation, as represented in this House, depends in its advocacy of legislation which threatens destruction to extensive and important industries of our country. One of the arguments is that adopted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]. It is one of the favorite expedients of gentlemen who seem to have a lack of familiarity with the subject they are trying to handle. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

It is a resort to the old trick of attempting to show that somebody, somewhere, at some time, said something which could be tortured or twisted into inconsistency with the attitude or the utterance of somebody else at some other time and in some other place; and so eager are these gentlemen to raise a cloud of dust to conceal their inability to deal with these important industrial questions, that they are not at all careful or accurate as to the manner in which they make use of this kind of attempted argument.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] comes in here and undertakes to make a point in the guise of an arraignment of Mr. Blaine, by representing him as declaring against a tariff on foreign lumber—for that was the impression sought to be conveyed by the introduction of that extract from a speech of Mr. Blaine's—when, upon inquiry, the fact proves to be that the gentleman from Kentucky, if not purposely misusing that quotation from Mr. Blaine, was using it with an ignorance of its true application quite in keeping with the general treatment of this tariff question by gentlemen on the other side. The record demonstrates that Mr. Blaine stood at the time of that debate just where the Republican party stands to-day—in favor of raising the revenues of this Government by taxing the foreign manufacturer who desires to come into our market to compete with the American producer, and by removing as fast and as far as practicable the taxation placed by the internal-revenue laws, during a period of civil war, upon the industries of our own people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

That is one kind of "tariff-reform" argument.

Another is the very much worn and very threadbare, and, if it is parliamentary, I will say the very cheap and very small attempt to make a bill which I introduced here in behalf of a community that had been stricken by a calamity of fire a means of casting discredit upon the sincerity of my views and upon the strength of the position maintained upon this side of the House on the tariff question. There is not a gentleman on that side of the House of average intelligence—and I think there are some of them that would come within that category—who does not know that that bill was introduced as a request to the Government of this country to exercise an act of customary beneficence and kindliness to the people of a community who had seen their homes, their churches, their stores, their wharves, the entire business of their community swept away by a devouring conflagration.

There is not a gentleman in the valley of the Mississippi, or the Arkansas, or the Missouri, or the Ohio who does not know that the bill was simply a very modest request that this Government would extend to an afflicted community on the coast of Maine a slight measure of the same kindness and generosity that had been extended time and time again, partly by my vote in this House, to the people in those sections of the country who had been afflicted with disaster by floods and otherwise; and it is pretty small business for ambitious statesmen of the region that has so frequently been the recipient of national bounty to focus their intellects in assault upon a bill to allow the people of the town of Eastport, in the State of Maine, to bring across from the adjacent shores of New Brunswick, without the payment of duty, some of the brick and other materials required for the rebuilding of their stricken town—it is pretty small business, I say, to parade that bill as the peg upon which to hang speeches and reports from five or six different members on that side of the House who count themselves among the great exponents of tariff reform.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask to have my time extended.

A MEMBER. I object.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, obtained the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, at the time when that bill was introduced by me——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON], in front of the Chair, and understood he desired to yield a portion of his time to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I will yield if it does not interfere with my time.

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa). You will get time.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Iowa will yield his time to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to state as a matter of justice to some gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House, some of whom are not present now—some who I believe have more than a faint and glimmering comprehension of the great principles underlying this discussion—that when that bill was introduced by me I conferred in regard to it with a number of the leaders of the Democratic side of the House—the giants of the Democracy in this tariff discussion—and said to them that if it was thought there would be a man on that side of the House who would attempt to make that bill the excuse or vehicle for a tariff discussion I would not introduce it, and I had the assurance of every one of those gentlemen that in their belief no one would think of attempting to do such a thing.

That bill asked that the same spirit of kindness be manifested toward Eastport that had been extended to Chicago, to Portland, and to other communities that had suffered from similar calamities. It followed almost immediately after the direct donations that had been made in this body to build houses over the heads of the houseless sufferers by the floods of the Arkansas, Missouri, and Mississippi Rivers. It followed directly in the line of the appropriations which had my vote and my voice to send food to the foodless of the Mississippi Valley, who had suffered from a similar dispensation of Providence. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] who ran before he was sent to make a report upon the bill for the relief of Eastport, Me., as one of his intellectual efforts on the tariff question, is on record upon the files of this House in the preceding Congress as introducing and having referred to the Committee on Appropriations a request from the governor of his own State for a donation of the public funds from the public Treasury in behalf of the people who were suffering from disaster by a flood in Arkansas. I will include in my remarks the letter, with the governor's indorsement, introduced by the gentleman from Arkansas, as follows:

SWAN LAKE, ARKANSAS COUNTY, ARKANSAS, March 3, 1884.

DEAR SIR: We have had one of the most destructive overflows here that has ever occurred in this county. Miles of fences, houses, gin-houses, store-houses washed away, and caused general ruin to this part of the county. Great many left homeless. The people do not ask any aid to repair their buildings or fences. But their levees are broken badly and must be repaired immediately or we can not make a crop this year. We are not in the habit of asking aid, but this is a case of extreme necessity. The people here in this district are perfectly willing to be taxed to pay for any aid extended. We are not able to repair the levees in time to make a crop.

* * * * * * *

If you have no power to help us and you think we could get any aid from the General Government, then please send this to Messrs. ROGERS, BRECKINRIDGE, and Garland. We are aware that there is a great deal of money expended on the Arkansas River, but the producing populace never reap any of its benefits. The most or a greater portion of the money expended at Pine Bluff, which was a failure, etc.

To His Excellency JAMES BERRY,
Governor of Arkansas.

This was signed by W. R. Groceo, J. S. Anderson, J. W. Rosey, T. J. Stokes, and G. E. Crutchfield, and bore the following indorsement by the governor of Arkansas:

DEAR SIR: The statements above made are true. There is great distress as the levee at Arkansas City is broken; I fear much more. If it is possible to obtain relief, I know that all our members will do so.

Very truly,

JAMES H. BERRY.

Maj. C. R. BRECKINRIDGE.

The request was for pecuniary aid from the Government. Mr. Chairman, that aid was given. Similar aid had been voted—not by thousands or tens of thousands, but by hundreds of thousands of dollars at a clip, repeated again and again for the sufferers in that part of the country from those disasters. Only a few days previous the House voted, on February 12, 1884, $300,000 for the sufferers by the floods on the Ohio and Mississippi and their tributaries; on February 15 another appropriation carrying $200,000 additional was passed. On March 27, 1884, a resolution reappropriating $125,000 for the sufferers on these rivers was approved, and May 27, 1884, the House passed a further appropriation of $100,000 for the same purpose.

I say, Mr. Chairman, with all seriousness, that it comes with a poor grace from gentlemen belonging to that part of our common country, thus generously treated, to undertake to cast reflection upon me or my people as mendicants, when Maine, by her representatives here, on every occasion when there has been a demand for this Government to manifest its sympathy and generosity toward their people in affliction, have voted freely and liberally for their relief. In the face of such a record it is a small business for you to undertake to fling back at me the bill to remit a few thousand dollars of duties on materials for rebuilding Eastport, Me. We have asked no alms at your hands. One per cent. of Maine's share of the sums voted as gifts to your people in distress would more than have covered all the redundant revenue that could have been remitted under that bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a good deal of interest, as I always do, to my friend who has just taken his seat, but it seems to me that he falls into an entire misapprehension as to the purpose and uses for which the measure he introduced was brought here. It seems to me that he has but elaborated the transaction to which he alludes a good deal more forcefully than the original suggester of the transaction. It seems to me that his constituents, be they whom they may, and situated where they may be, were to receive a direct and substantial benefit by being relieved from the duty imposed on lumber. They being adjacent to the line—nearer to where cheap lumber was than we upon the prairies, I will concede that by reason of such proximity the relief is greater in degree than it would be if they were 1,500 miles away. But it is a difference in degree only, not in kind; and whatever difference there may be, even though in a lesser degree, I want it for the benefit of the people in the Congressional district I have the honor to represent. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I have listened to the arguments that my friends here have made; but, with the utmost respect for all they utter, I must say it does not obscure the fact of the dilemma in which they continually find themselves. During the many weeks in which this question has been discussed I have found scarcely a man on this floor opposing the pending measure, be his argument ever so forceful, who has not at one time or another produced arguments to answer himself. In this remark I include my distinguished friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. These gentlemen, to use a homely Western phrase, are out of the frying-pan into the fire, and back again.

He says there is no danger, there is no harm in the duty on lumber, because it does not enhance the price, and that if there is a duty on lumber and it does enhance the price it will make no difference to the poor people out in the country who want to buy shingles for their roofs because the cheaper lumber can not cross the line for the reason that the Canadian Government will in that event increase the price of export permits.

From my standpoint this is the simple question. I see men who are anxious to get in and sell cheap lumber. That proves one thing. I see men on this side of the Chamber with lumber to sell who are anxious to keep them out. That proves another thing. Putting the two together it satisfies my mind that the duty, whether it be great or small, has something to do with the value of the lumber.

I do not propose to indulge in any figures, because I have seen from the figures used in this debate they are most serviceable as in turn the same statistics seem to serve the purpose of members whether they are addressing the House upon this or the other side. [Laughter.] But the substantial fact, Mr. Chairman, remains that the men engaged in this business and who are directly interested in it do not want the tariff taken off. They must regard it, of course, as a good thing for them. Those who want cheap lumber of course want the duty taken off, and of course they must regard it as a good thing for them when it is taken off. The passage of this bill, therefore, in my mind, will enable the consumers of lumber, not only in my district, but throughout the country, to purchase lumber at a much cheaper rate than they now do. The removal of the duty to them will be a positive advantage, and for that reason I favor it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

By unanimous consent the formal amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. PETERS. I move to strike out the last word.

The first question I ask myself, Mr. Chairman, is whether free lumber will be of any benefit to the constituents I represent. We all look at these questions from the hearthstones we represent here upon this floor. We all endeavor to look at these questions from the standpoint of our homes and what is for their welfare. I for one, as representing a constituency of farmers, and farmers who are prairie farmers, without natural lumber enough to make a fire sufficient upon which to boil a cup of coffee, look at this question from the standpoint as to whether it will benefit the men who have gone out on the prairies on the great American desert to establish homes for themselves and their families. They need lumber to build their houses, they need lumber to fence their farms, and if there is anything in this bill that will compensate them for a threatened loss of customers they want to know it.

Now, what are the facts? Take a car-load of lumber in Chicago. My home is 700 miles from that city. What is the original cost of that car-load of lumber in Chicago? One hundred and forty dollars for a car-load of 10,000 feet, taking it as lumber runs. The cost is $12 a thousand feet at the mill. Then it costs $20 a thousand to transport it from the mill to Chicago, and $40 for a car containing 10,000 feet to transport it from Chicago to my home, 700 miles away. What is the tariff? Conceding that this $2 a thousand is added to the original cost of the lumber, what is the tariff on the car-load of lumber to my people? It equals the sum of $20 on every car-load of lumber laid down in the city of Newton, Kans., 700 miles from Chicago.

What do you ask? Why, here you ask the farmers of my section of the country to do away with these $2 a thousand or $20 on a car-load, and what do you promise for it? You promise them that the lumber they purchase there shall be reduced $20 a car-load. In other words, you promise that the consumer can get his lumber for $20 less. Can you prove it?

Let me show the dilemma in which you propose to put the farmer. What becomes of this $20 a car or $2 on each thousand feet of lumber? Let me tell you. The manufacturer comes in and says you have done away with the tariff and claims his portion of it, and he gets 50 cents on the thousand feet or $5 on the car-load. Then comes in the wholesale dealer and he gets his 50 cents on the thousand feet or $5 on the car-load. Then come in the men engaged in transportation, and they get their share; and if, as my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] says, these men are combined in a trust, they will have their share, and they will come in and take the balance. What, then, is left to the consumer? How is the farmer to get his share when it is all taken before the car-load of lumber reaches him? Where does his share of the $20 on each car-load come in?

Mr. STRUBLE. Let me ask this question of my friend: If it is not about time that the farmers should be putting in their claims for a little of this saving?

Mr. PETERS. I was just coming to that. Here you ask the farmer to give up, as it has been asserted and threatened in this debate, to give up the market for his products which is afforded to him now by the hundreds of thousands of men engaged in the lumber interests in this country—persons who are his customers.

Mr. McMILLIN. And a good many of them Canadians.

Mr. PETERS. I do not care where they come from; whether they are Canadians or from any other country. So long as they are customers of the American farmer it makes no difference. [Applause on the Republican side.] I repeat, you are asking the American farmer to take his chances of doing away with the hundred thousand lumber customers he has in the United States markets, and as a necessity to come in and tussle with the railroads and lumber kings and manufacturers of lumber for his small pittance of the $2 reduction of duty on a thousand feet of lumber. You ask him to give up a certainty for an uncertainty. Do you suppose the farmer will stand any chance in such a tussle? The farmers of this country do not want to jump out of the frying-pan into the fire. [Applause on the Republican side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider the pro forma amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. BAYNE. I renew it.

Mr. Chairman, if there be one distinguishing feature of this bill under consideration more marked than anything else in it, it is its strictly sectional character; and the particular branch of the subject under discussion affords an illustration as clear as could be pointed out of that fact.

When appropriations are asked for charitable purposes in this House all sectional lines seem to be obliterated, and kindly feeling and considerate regard, and clasping of hands over the bloody chasm that has hitherto divided us, permeates and pervades everything and everybody. But when it comes to the preparation of a bill like this one, which vitally affects the business, the commerce, and all of the industries of the country, sectional lines are drawn, and, as I have said, in a marked degree. The very proposition under discussion shows that feature to be dominant in the minds of the committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BAYNE. I will if you will extend my time; otherwise I can not yield.

There are great lumber regions in Georgia, in Mississippi, in Alabama, in Arkansas, and in other States of that section; but it must be borne in mind that the cost of transportation is a guaranty against competition of a material character against them, and feeling thus secure because of this cost of transportation, which is large, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] has just now stated, free lumber is made a provision of the bill.

But the States on the northern border, like Maine, Wisconsin, Michigan, and others which are equally largely interested in lumber, and which compete with Canada, need protection. The cost of transportation is not a barrier against competition. Where an industry in the South, however, is subject to competition, the duties are made high. Take sugar, for instance; that duty is kept up to 78 per cent. and rice at 100 per cent. There is a chance for competition. Rice and sugar are necessaries of life. Rice and sugar, however, are the products of the southern section. They are protected, and it must be because competition will interfere with the amount of money which the producers of these articles are enabled to make. If the lumber of the South needed protection, I imagine lumber would not be on the free-list in this bill.

A MEMBER. What about cotton-ties?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes; and cotton-ties also. They are produced North and consumed South, and cotton-ties are admitted free. Whatever they want down there and do not produce themselves they put on the free-list. Whatever they produce down there and wish to continue to produce they put a high duty on, if it is necessary to protect it. That is the sectional line which runs through the bill, and its distinction in that respect is more apparent than in any other bill that ever has been reported to the House. Why even the bill introduced by Mr. Morrison in the last Congress did not exhibit anything so one-sided as this.

Mr. BLAND. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to claim that he was advocating protection to lumber for the benefit of the South, who were chiefly to get the benefit of it, while you say they are not in need of it. How do you happen to disagree on so important a question?

Mr. BAYNE. I am not responsible for what the gentleman from Pennsylvania says. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] I am responsible only for the logic of the facts which I myself cite; and I state this fact, without fear of contradiction, that the cost of the transportation of lumber is a protection to the lumber producers of Arkansas, Mississippi, Georgia, and the other States South.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman know that Mississippi lumber is being shipped to Chicago?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And from Arkansas in large quantities? It does not want protection.

Mr. BAYNE. Well, there is not very much of it goes there.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And it is nothing on earth but a robbing monopoly to keep protection upon it.

Mr. BAYNE. There is but little of your lumber that goes North; and you have not the enterprise to use it yourselves.

Mr. HOOKER. We send millions of it every year to the Northwest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire to say something in reply to the very peculiar speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE]. He says lumber is sacrificed because competition will not injure the Southern lumber trade. His colleague [Mr. KELLEY] of very superior experience, and possessing how much ability in comparison I will spare the gentleman's modesty by saying, has said that if the bill is passed it does injure the Southern lumber trade. Now, which shall we believe, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY]?

Some gentlemen on that side seem to be so little that they can not look at anything except through sectional spectacles. I do not envy such a person his measure or his characteristics.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. I can not. This bill framed on sectional lines! I might truthfully answer the charge of sectionalism made against this bill as the faithful Emilia answered the charge of infidelity made by Iago against her mistress. It will be remembered that she said, "I will be hanged if some eternal villain, some busy and insinuating rogue, some cogging and cozening slave, to get some office, have not devised this slander. I will be hanged else."

Sectional lines! In this matter I know no section. This committee has known no section in drawing this bill. It has known alone the good of the people of the United States. Sectional! To prove it the gentleman says there has been a small cut on sugar and on rice. Now, the cut on sugar is infinitely greater than the cut on the gentleman's own product, iron. The cut on rice is infinitely greater than the cut on iron. And he who uses this argument to prove the sectional nature of this bill simply writes his own ignorance of it.

Now I want to comment on the hollow pretense that this lumber tax is proposed to be kept for the benefit of the laboring men. When every other argument is exhausted, when every other resource has failed, when every other expedient has proved ineffective, then they come and say, "Oh, touch not the laboring man; he is my friend; I live for him; I am ready to die for him—till election."

What is the fact concerning the lumber trade of the region the gentleman speaks of which he desires to be protected? I speak on the authority of men who have been in that region and seen the laboring men there at work; and they have announced it as the truth that the bulk of the men who do the work and whom these gentlemen are so anxious to protect are Canadians with Canadian teams brought over for this work, and taking themselves back, bag and baggage, as soon as it is done.

Let us away with this hollow pretense. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] undertook to prove that the reduction proposed by the bill would not benefit the people of Kansas. That is a matter I leave him to settle at the election. He will find, I think, that his people have greater intelligence than he gives them credit for. He says it will reduce the wages of labor. But how on earth is it going to reduce the wages of labor if it is not going to reduce the price of lumber?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the gentleman want an answer now to his question?

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Maine has been on the floor to-day for the greater part of the time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman asked a question, and I propose to answer it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will ask the gentleman another question. Is it a fact that the lumbermen of Maine bring over Canadians to do their work? Is that a fact?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I say no; it is not a fact.

Mr McMILLIN. Then you say what is not correct, or I am misinformed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. BAYNE. I do.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I renew it for the purpose of answering the gentleman from Tennessee in the good old Yankee fashion, by asking him another question. Does the gentleman from Tennessee assert that the Maine lumbermen do employ Canadian laborers?

Mr. McMILLIN. I do; I have been so informed on credible authority.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I want the gentleman from Tennessee to tell me why the Canadian laborers can be induced by the lumber manufacturers to come over to work for them.

Mr. McMILLIN. There are climatic influences. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BOUTELLE Let us hear about the climatic influences.

Mr. McMILLIN. This is the explanation of it. During the severe rigors of their more northern climate there is a period of time when these Canadians can go down to the State of Maine and work more successfully in the United States than in their own country, and then when that period is over they can go back and resume their regular avocations. I understand that as a matter of fact they do go back at a certain season.

Mr. BOUTELLE. They do! Now let me give the gentleman a little lesson in geography. People in Canada do not go down to the State of Maine. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. There is a part of Canada from which they go and a part of the State of Maine to which they go.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Maine and Canada run pretty nearly upon the same parallel of latitude.

Mr. McMILLIN. They do in part.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And if the gentleman from Tennessee will come down to my district——

Mr. McMILLIN. "Down" from here? "Down?" [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Down or up, whichever way the gentleman likes.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman himself needs a lesson in geography.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, if the gentleman will come to my district——

Mr. McMILLIN. Up, you mean.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Either up or down, as you prefer. We are not discussing the climatic or geographical relations of Washington and Maine, but those of Canada and Maine. If the gentleman will come to my district in the month of January I shall be glad to furnish him with a thermometer and let him make observations, and then I shall be glad to have him come here and tell us all about the climatic differences between Canada and Maine, all about the climatic advantages and disadvantages of men who live on one side of the St. John River, in the State of Maine, as compared with those who live on the other side of the river. Of course there is nothing in that.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman restricts his statement to that part of Canada and that part of Maine, of course he is correct; but I have been informed that those who follow lumbering along the Canadian border—not confining the statement to Maine, but extending away out West—do go back and forth across the line in the manner I have stated.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, the difference in climate all along the Canadian border between the localities from which Canadians are said to come and those on this side in which they are employed in lumbering would not be obvious to the ordinary observer, but of course it furnishes a convenient refuge for the gentleman from Tennessee. I believe that in the privacy of his closet and in the seclusion of his chamber, when he is alone by himself and is not obliged to grapple with the exigencies of the Mills tariff bill, the gentleman from Tennessee really believes that the Canadians come over to Maine to work because they get better wages.

Mr. McMILLIN. And the Maine employers turn out their Maine laborers and employ the cheaper Canadian labor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And if the gentleman does not believe it, then I want to inform him now that the man who comes from Canada to Maine gets from 20 to 45 per cent. more wages than he can get at home. It is simply a question of supply and demand.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Hereafter I shall take time to show that all this talk about the employment of Canadian cheap labor does not affect the gist of this question. It is only the cheapest class of labor that comes from across the line. The skilled labor in the business is that of American workingmen.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. If there is the difference in wages between Canada and Maine which the gentleman states, will he tell us why it is that Maine has not depopulated Canada?

Mr. BOUTELLE. She is doing it as fast as the law allows.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Statistics do not show it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes, they do show it. They show that Maine is not only drawing population from Canada year by year, but that she has also furnished population to build up Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, and those other magnificent commonwealths of the West, some of which are most ably represented to-day in this and the other branch of Congress by men who went out from Maine.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word about the competition of Northern lumber with Southern lumber, a question I happen to know something about. A large amount of lumber is sent from Arkansas and Texas not only to other parts of the South and to foreign countries, but to the West over the railroads. The great difficulty which the producers of Arkansas and Texas lumber have encountered is the excessive weight of the pitch-pine lumber as compared with the white-pine lumber of the more northern regions. It is a fact that a car-load of ten thousand feet of Northern pine is but little more than half as heavy as a similar car-load of pitch-pine lumber of the South. Therefore the lumber of Chicago is worth $12 per thousand, while the pitch-pine lumber at the Southern mills is worth only $9. These two classes of lumber meet in the markets of the West—in Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and in the Territories—and our millers must suffer loss by the difference which the transportation costs them by reason of the excessive weight. Carloads are measured by tons, but lumber is sold per 1,000 feet. One thousand feet of pitch pine weighs twice as much as 1,000 feet of Northern white pine, and hence transportation doubles. All lumber-dealers and railroad men understand this matter. The Northern lumber can float into our country down stream on all the rivers tributary to the Mississippi, this being the cheapest transportation known to the commerce of the world. Requiring neither sail nor steam to propel it, the lumber floats from the mills and competes successfully with the lumber manufactured right upon the ground in the South. Therefore the argument of the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is absolutely without foundation; there is no earthly authority for any such statement.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Is it not a fact that the lumber produced in your country is used for different purposes from the lumber of Canada?

Mr. DUNN. Not at all; the pitch pine and cypress come into competition with all other lumber.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Take Georgia pine.

Mr. DUNN. I am talking about Arkansas and Texas pine. Those are the lumbers that meet the Wisconsin lumber in the West.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Your lumber does not suffer from competition with the Canada lumber.

Mr. DUNN. We are not afraid of competition with Canada lumber or any other.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Yours is a different class of lumber from the Canadian lumber.

Mr. DUNN. Yes, and we are at a disadvantage on account of the difference in cost of transportation.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. My point is that much of the lumber raised in the South—in Arkansas, Georgia, and Texas—is used for flooring, for decorating the interior of houses, and for other purposes for which Canada lumber is not used; and for this reason the question of free lumber or protected lumber makes no difference with the producers of Southern lumber.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. On this point let me refer the gentleman to a letter written by a New York lumber-dealer who is right upon the Canada line, and who speaks of the probable early exhaustion of the supply of lumber in the North and the unlimited supply of lumber in the South. The latter, he says, can be used where white pine is now used, is suited for exactly the same purposes. We know that it is used for every purpose for which your lumber is used, and is good for many other purposes besides.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. But you can not use the Canada lumber for all the purposes for which Georgia pine and other lumber of the South can be used.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But we can use the Southern lumber for all the purposes for which Northern lumber can be used, and more, too.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. That does not meet the question at all. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. KERR. I move to amend by striking out the last five words. Mr. Chairman, the objection to this bill is that it proposes to change a line of policy in regard to the protection of our American manufactures. It is proposed to put lumber on the free-list after it represents the element of labor. Crude lumber—that is, in the log—is now and has been for years on the free-list. Where the element of labor is not involved, or is involved in only a small degree, lumber is already free. One gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has taken the ground that there is a very great demand in his district for free lumber. So far as lumber represents merely the crude, raw material, his people now have such lumber free.

Any manufacturer in the gentleman's district has the right to-day to import from Canada all the logs that he thinks proper, and may establish a manufactory for which this lumber is to be the raw material. But the manufacturer in any district on the Mississippi River, after he has manufactured his logs into lumber, is as much entitled to protection on his product as the lumberman at Chicago or in any other part of the United States. So that the policy sought to be adopted by the men who favor putting manufactured lumber on the free-list is not to give cheaper lumber, but to destroy the advantage which men engaged in the manufacture of lumber now have by virtue of the tariff upon the manufactured material.

One other thing, Mr. Chairman. I deny as a proposition of fact that if this duty were removed lumber would be any cheaper than it is to-day. I am a farmer. I have bought lumber for the last thirty years, and I know that under the old system the case was not different from what it is to-day. When the duty went down to 15 per cent. the cost of lumber was not reduced.

Gentlemen have said that in changing this duty they propose a new line of policy. I hold that it is unwise to change our policy in this respect. We ought to be fair in our tariff; we ought to protect every American interest. Gentlemen on the other side should not insist that 68 per cent. of duty be allowed for the protection of the man who raises sugar, 100 per cent. for the man who raises rice, but that no duty be allowed to the man who manufactures lumber or the man who manufactures flax.

Mr. HEMPHILL. What about the man who raises cotton? Why not bring him in?

Mr. KERR. The man who raises cotton ships a large part of it abroad; it goes into the markets of the world.

Mr. HEMPHILL. His "home market" is over in England.

Mr. KERR. We have a home market in the United States for one-third of the cotton product; and the advantage you have received from that home market has raised the price of cotton above what it was before the war.

Mr. HEMPHILL. On the contrary, it is lower.

Mr. KERR. I think not. I understand that cotton is higher to-day than it was before the war; and it has been made higher by the fact that those who wish to buy it in Europe are obliged to compete to a certain extent with those who want to buy it in the United States.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If you are going to protect all home industries, we want protection for cotton.

Mr. KERR. A gentleman near me informs me that cotton is 3 cents a pound higher than it was before the war. There is no duty of any kind upon raw cotton——

Mr. STRUBLE. We are willing that there should be.

Mr. KERR. And none is imported.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose that part of this bill which reduces the duty on lumber, and I oppose it just as I intend to oppose the reduction of other duties interfering with the labor of our people. So far as it touches the industrial classes and puts a check upon their progress and the success of their labors, the committee and the House will hear much more of it, if it should become a law, in the future than they have heard in the past. It is a question which we can not avoid and it must be met. That is the labor question. And every sensible man in this country knows that labor is one of the most important subjects of legislation and at the same time one of the most difficult to settle. And, sir, it will not be settled unless this Congress pays some attention to the wants of the laborers.

If it can be proved to be true that the laboring interests of the country will be bettered by the reduction of these duties, or that in any respect it will better the condition of our laboring men throughout the country by passing such a bill as we have here; if it can be shown that the reduction of the duty on lumber or on any other article will help the laboring class and the working class; if gentlemen on the other side of the House will do that, I am then, Mr. Chairman, one of those who will support it. But I do not believe they can do any such thing. They have not done so, at least, up to the present time. I am one who will support any measure that will benefit the people of the land; and when I use the word "people," I mean the working class, the laborers, the farmers. I do not mean the well-to-do, wealthy class, those who are perfectly able to protect themselves. I speak of the great body of the people, and I say to gentlemen on the other side of the House that if they can show that by reducing the duty on lumber or the duty on any other article it will have the effect of helping the working class, I will support it. Otherwise I propose to vote solidly against them, unless where the article does not compete with the labor of our own people at home.

Gentlemen on the other side have formulated this bill in accordance with the message of the President of the United States. Now, with all respect to the President I will say that he is clearly mistaken, in my judgment, in the view which he has taken of this tariff question. He advocates the reduction of the tariff upon the ground that it has been forced upon the people by a condition of affairs unprecedented in the history of this country; that it is owing to the surplus in the Treasury. Now, let me say that there would not have been left a dollar of surplus in the Treasury if the President had done his duty in carrying out the legislation of the Forty-ninth Congress. There would not have been a dollar in the Treasury to-day in the way of surplus revenue if he had done his duty by approving the liberal measures which were passed by the Forty-ninth Congress for the pensioning of our soldiers, and for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country. If he had approved those measures the money would have been distributed throughout the country. They would have emptied the Treasury, and by the distribution of this money done good to the people everywhere. Instead of paralyzing business by being hoarded up by the Government, it would have enabled our people to tide over their difficulties by having it in their pockets.

As I have said, Mr. Chairman, this bill has been formulated by the Committee on Ways and Means for the purpose of sustaining the position taken by the President in his message. In my judgment, he has not only mistaken the interests of the country but the wishes of the country when he took that view of the subject. If the real object be to reduce the surplus and not to interfere with the labor of the industrial classes of our people, there is an easy way to accomplish it. But the President by his action at the last Congress has shown that he is not in favor of taking any such course, because when the liberal measures were passed at that Congress he vetoed them. He vetoed the bill pensioning our soldiers, as well as others of a liberal character passed at the last Congress, and if this Congress should pass the same measures, so far as we know they would be met by precisely the same veto.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The formal amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I make this pro forma amendment for the purpose of stating one fact.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] asserted that the pending bill is sectional in its provisions, and to sustain the assertion he alleged that the South, because of the cost of transportation of lumber to market, did not need and did not care to have protection on this article. He evidently intended to convey the idea—indeed, his statement in this regard was the assertion of a fact—that the lumber dealers in the South disposed of their lumber at home and in home markets. If I have not properly apprehended the gentleman he can correct me.

Speaking with reference to the lumber business in Alabama, I have to say that the manufacturers in my State—and the gentleman mentioned these—do not find at home the market for the products of their mills. On the contrary, much the larger quantity of the lumber manufactured by the mills in Alabama is shipped to the North and the Northwest. It is there the markets are found. And it not unfrequently happens that the manufacturers of lumber in Alabama are compelled to refuse small orders for lumber made by those living at the very doors of the mills, because of the unfilled orders from these Northern markets. So that the point attempted to be made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania has no support from the condition of the lumber business in my State.

I yield what remains of my time to the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not care to occupy that time now, but will wait until I can get the floor in my own right.

Mr. STRUBLE was recognized.

Mr. MILLS. I want to ask that, by consent, the time of this debate be now limited. I ask the committee to let us come to a vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has been recognized.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Chairman, my constituents are largely, and, I may say, exclusively purchasers and consumers of lumber. They are, also—or a majority of them are—believers in the doctrine of protection to all the industries of the country. To a reasonable extent they believe in the application of this doctrine. At the same time I am persuaded there is quite a feeling among them that the duty on the wood schedule might be considerably reduced, if not entirely abated, without serious detriment to any class. I confess, sir, that this lumber question and my exact duty in connection with it have occasioned me serious thought.

It is not clear to me if we take off $2 on clapboards, for instance, that the farmers of my district will receive a very large percentage of that reduction. But I can not reason myself into the position as my friend from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] seems to have done, as well as my colleague [Mr. KERR], who seems practically to have the same opinion, that in this great struggle with the Canadian lumbermen and the Canadian manufacturers and the American manufacturers and wholesale dealers for a division of this $2, in the event lumber is placed on the free-list, the farmer is not going to receive any of it. I believe that in the scramble for division he will realize some benefit in the cheapening of his lumber; but I do not pretend to claim that it will be very much.

Now, it seems to me that inasmuch as we are engaged in an attempt to revise the tariff, and are considering the question of lumber, and that, too, in advance of a single line that touches the lumber schedule, we had better revise it on lumber by reducing it a little instead of making it free, and at the proper time I propose to submit an amendment proposing to strike out that part of this bill relating to lumber, and on reaching section 2, and the dutiable list, move to insert the provisions of existing law on the subject of lumber, but with the further proposition to reduce the rate of duty on each classification 50 per cent., thus making what I consider a fair reduction on this schedule.

As I have already said, I should not, if this amendment were made to the present law and duties were reduced 50 per cent., anticipate that the cost of lumber to the people of my district would be greatly cheapened. But I certainly think its cost would be somewhat reduced, and that without working any serious hardships to lumbermen, millers, and wholesale dealers. Let us try such a reduction for a reasonable time, until, if you please, the next general revision of the tariff laws, and if it clearly appears injustice to a serious extent is resulting to the lumber interests of the country a change can be made.

I confess, sir, I can not bring myself to believe that the whole business of lumber production in this country is to be irretrievably swamped if lumber is placed on the free-list. It does not seem to me at all probable. Our American dealers are not going to lie down in the face of Canadian competition and opposition. They are not of such metal. At the same time and while so believing, my desire, in so far as I can see my way clear, is to adhere to the protective principle in dealing with all these various productions of American capital and labor. And in this particular class I shall offer what I think a fair compromise; that being declined and none other proposed than the question of free lumber or the present rate of duty, I shall make choice of what I believe to be for the best interests of my constituents.

Mr. MILLS. I now ask unanimous consent that the debate close, and that we may take a vote on the pending amendments. Otherwise, I shall have to ask that the committee rise to limit debate.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope we will proceed for a while longer.

Mr. MILLS. We have had already four hours' debate.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope the gentleman will allow me to bring the attention of the committee back to the amendment I introduced.

Mr. MILLS. I will say to my friend that after we get into the House, if it is necessary to move that the committee rise, I will ask that debate be continued for ten minutes, five minutes on each side, and he may have the five minutes then, which, I suppose, will be satisfactory to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to say that I want five minutes on this amendment myself.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending first which was submitted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB].

Mr. COBB. I yielded the time to the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. That time has expired; and if there be no objection, the Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, strike out the "1st day of July, 1888," and insert the "2d day of January, 1889."

The CHAIRMAN. This is the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

The gentleman from Texas now asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I object.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to submit a pro forma amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to close the debate now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submitted that request, and objection was made.

Mr. MILLS. Who objected? I will suggest that we have twenty minutes' debate then, ten on each side. Will gentlemen agree to that?

Several members objected.

Mr. MILLS. Then I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman from New Hampshire, having been recognized, should be permitted first to occupy his time, as he only yielded for a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLS. I do not understand who objected to the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New Hampshire now to move his pro forma amendment, as he had the floor and was recognized for that purpose.

[Mr. GALLINGER withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no purpose to protract at any considerable length the discussion of this question. It seems to me, however, Mr. Chairman, that neither the theory of "protection" nor the theory of "free trade," so called, should be invoked in the consideration of this item of the pending measure.

Protection of the lumber interest to the absolute exclusion of foreign lumber means the ultimate destruction of the American forests. That is the logic of the proposition, and I quite agree with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND], who properly characterizes the unwisdom of such a policy and also calls attention to the fact that it is in contravention of the spirit of the timber-culture act which was passed, I believe, by a Republican Congress.

Mr. GUENTHER. What are the forests good for if you do not utilize them?

Mr. DOCKERY. Of course we all understand what they are good for, but they will not be good for anything after they are destroyed. Mr. Chairman, the statement has been made that there is a larger area of timber at this time in the various sections of our country than there was a quarter of a century ago, and in this connection the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has referred to the fact that the Walker tariff of 1846 imposed the same duty on lumber that the present tariff does. I concede that; but forty years ago there was not the same necessity for the protection of American lumber forests that there is to-day. I can not speak from personal knowledge as to other portions of the country, but I know that in the section of Missouri from where I come the forests have been largely denuded and the timber supply sensibly decreased.

Mr. GUENTHER. Not by the lumbermen; by the agriculturists.

Mr. DOCKERY. By the agriculturists; and in your State the forests have been cut down by the lumbermen.

Mr. GUENTHER. Yes; but the lands of which you speak now are farms, and the timber would have been gone in any case. The only difference is that on your plan it would not have been utilized.

Mr. DOCKERY. Possibly so; but as I have but five minutes I must beg to be allowed to proceed without further interruption.

Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allotted me under the rules I can only state that the theory of protection is largely responsible for the rapid destruction of our lumber forests, and I believe that the time has fully come when we should protect this great interest by supplementing our own resources with foreign lumber, thus enabling our people in Kansas, Minnesota, Iowa, and other prairie States to build cheaper houses by giving them lumber freed from the burdens of taxation.

Sir, in my opinion the effect of this provision of the bill will be to decrease the price of lumber to the consumer. If I did not entertain this belief I would not support the measure, but I am fully persuaded that this result will follow.

Now, Mr. Chairman, permit me a word in reply to the statements of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS]. I am obliged to the gentleman for the calculation he presents, by which it appears that there will be a reduction of $20 per car on each car-load of lumber shipped to his home at Newton, Kans., in the event that this bill as the result should become a law; but the gentleman says that the reduction will not inure to the benefit of the farmers of his district. Substantially the same argument the gentleman offers was made a few years since when it was proposed to put quinine on the free-list. Gentlemen on the other side then said that such action would not reduce the price of quinine to the consumer, but that its effects would be to destroy that industry in this country, and that American competition, having been thus overthrown, the price to the American consumer would be increased.

The reduced price of quinine since it was put on the free-list conclusively refutes the assertions made by our Republican friends at that time. I am advised that there are more men employed to-day in the manufacture of quinine, and there are more American quinine industries than there were before quinine was put on the free-list, although we were told that the industry would certainly be destroyed and utterly overthrown by foreign competition.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in that.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. DOCKERY. As my time is exhausted, I will close with the observation that the price of quinine, since it was stricken from the dutiable list, has fallen from $3.75 per ounce to 75 cents per ounce. In this instance the consumer is the beneficiary, as he will be when lumber is relieved from the burdens of unnecessary taxation.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I desire to offer at the end of the fifth line.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is an amendment to the pending amendment it is in order.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to have it come in at the end of the fifth line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only recognize at this time an amendment to the pending amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from New York can send his amendment up and have it read, and then the Chair will determine whether it is germane to the pending amendment or not.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 5 add:

"Provided, That in all cases a duty shall be imposed upon all goods and products now on the free-list whenever similar goods and products are subject to duty under the laws of the Dominion of Canada at a rate greater than or equal to that imposed thereunder."

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order that we have not yet reached that part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that this amendment is not now in order, as it is not an amendment to the pending amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. BAKER, of New York. When it is in order I shall ask leave to offer it and to be heard upon it. I move now to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying a few words with regard to the question raised in the amendment which I have just submitted. Mr. Chairman, it is a fact which is well known and which ought to be appreciated by every gentleman upon this floor that in the United States, and especially in New York and the other States bordering on the Canada frontier, there are large nursery industries which are much affected by their proximity to the Canadian border. We have there many other industries that are materially affected by the proposed changes in this bill.

In 1883, under the tariff law adopted by Congress and approved by the President, nursery stock, seeds, plants, and bulbs, and many other products were put upon the free-list; and under the reciprocity act of Canada, passed in 1879, those things were permitted, upon the proclamation of the governor-general in council, to be put upon the Canadian free-list. But they were not. From 1883 down to the present year the Canadian authorities have exacted duties upon nursery stock, seeds, plants, bulbs, etc., while availing themselves of the free-list provision upon similar articles coming into this country. By a proclamation which was only made after the introduction and under pressure of a resolution introduced by myself in this House on the 2d of April last, the Canadian authorities put these things upon the free-list; but, Mr. Chairman, they have already taken steps to restore the duty upon them. These acts looking to a restoration of the duty upon nursery stock, etc., constitute a gross breach of faith on the part of the Canadian authorities. Hence I have offered the amendment which has been read by the Clerk; and I hope it will be adopted.

This amendment is due to the large interests involved. Its purpose is to afford some degree of protection to the nursery and other industries of the United States, particularly in those sections where, like my own district, the industries referred to are more largely concerned and affected to a greater degree; where, because of their proximity to the Dominion of Canada, they have much larger dealings with the Canadian people. Our people feel that this bill, if passed, will affect their agricultural and manufacturing interests very seriously and detrimentally. If it is to pass, these interests should be guarded by an amendment, such as I propose, against a renewal of the "tactics" heretofore practiced by the Canadian Government towards the interests concerned. It is in the interest of "fair play." We can not afford to inaugurate "free trade" for the benefit of Canadian agriculturists and manufacturing industries and leave our own to the tender mercies of a people by whom our nursery, our seed, and other industries have been uniformly imposed upon and compelled to endure until such time as the Canadian Government may be compelled by fear of retaliation, or through the influence of the Department of State they come, though reluctantly, to a realizing sense of their sins of omission and commission, and are constrained to do in April, 1888, what by every consideration of honor and good faith they should have done in 1883, five years ago.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, is intended to guard against only one of the many wrongs our business interests have borne for a long time. Our people in the border districts of my State are beginning to feel that between the Dominion Parliament at Ottawa and the Congress of the United States now assembled everything is promised if not assured for Canada at their expense, while even Sir Charles Tupper boasts that "free lumber" alone will enrich Canada to the tune of a million and a half a year from the start, because he knows that their lumber will go in our markets, not at a reduced rate, but for American prices, thereby enriching the Canadian capitalist at the expense of American labor.

My friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] discourses upon the "climatic differences" between Maine and Canada and asserts that he is "so informed." I fear his informant is the same "unreliable fellow" that led the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to assert over at Providence that seamless socks are made only in the old country by secret process, etc., but we all live and learn, and my friend from Texas will hereafter, I am sure, send to my city for his seamless socks.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I desire to reply to the remarks made a moment since by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]. He claimed that the object of this bill is to protect the American forests. That is a very commendable object; and the question is one in which I feel a very great interest. It is a matter of great moment to this country that our forests shall be protected as far as possible. It has been demonstrated by our most learned men that the forests of this country have a great influence upon the quantity and uniformity of the rainfall, upon the temperature of any latitude, and upon the health of the people.

Therefore, if this bill would accomplish the protection of the American forests; if it would encourage the growth of timber; if it would preserve to the people this great source of moisture and temperature and health, I should certainly favor it. But I think, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman is mistaken. Those who have given some attention to this question have discovered that the omission to cut down our mature forests will not preserve them. If you will go to the forests of Michigan or Maine you will find that they are wasting away by decay and by fire as fast as by the woodman's ax. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] made the statement that white pine will not grow a second time on the same soil, or on the same land.

In some regions of the country this may be true, but I want to say that in other regions it is not true. In the southern part of Maine I have seen pine forests growing where pine had previously grown, and also where hardwood had previously grown, as I was informed. I have seen in Mr. REED'S Congressional district beautiful pine forests which were a second growth.

Hon. John Hall, of York County, Maine, a gentleman well known to all of the Representatives from that State, pointed out to me a field in which he had hoed corn when a boy, from which he had recently cut a fine crop of pine timber. I saw the logs. They were large and made fine lumber—as fine logs as you would see in any log-yard in the country. The first growth on this land had been hardwood, and the second growth was white pine, and the trees had grown as thick as trees could grow anywhere.

In Maine and in New Hampshire you will see a great deal of pine timber that has been growing only thirty or forty years which you would suppose was the original growth. They sometimes cut off the growth at the end of twenty or twenty-five years, and find it profitable to do so; but a large growth of very fine timber can be cut at the end of forty years.

I have watched the cutting of timber in the State of Maine for more than twenty years, and I wish to confirm the statement made by the gentleman from that State [Mr. DINGLEY] that there is more timber there now than there was twenty years ago.

I have been told by scores of individuals with whom I have conversed on this subject that the growth of timber in that State, or in the part of the State of which I speak, is greater than the consumption of it. The growth of pine in that country is simply marvelous, and what at first seemed to me destructive proved to be but a proper care of the growth.

The way to protect the American forests is by cutting down the old trees, taking care of the remaining ones, and by planting young trees. The only way to keep up the American forests is by continually planting trees. I would like to see alongside of every township and county road and along every railroad in this country lines of trees. All the poor, rough, stony, hilly land ought to be planted in trees. If this bill looked in that direction I would give it a very warm welcome, and I want to say that it is a mistake, a very grave error, to suppose that you can save our great forests by simply letting them alone.

The older trees decay rapidly and the value of trees after maturity greatly deteriorates. In my own State the farmers have been making this mistake. Our Ohio farmers have been preserving their timber with the greatest care for the last twenty or thirty years for future use, but when the time comes to use this timber it will be so decayed with the dry rot that it will be almost worthless. Instead of saving it they have lost it.

Nothing is gained by letting timber stand after it has reached its maturity. It decays and dies after it has reached a certain age, and should then be cut and used. There are times when the touching appeal to the axman to spare the tree is not founded in wisdom. We should use our timber at the proper time and grow more all the while. Again I repeat that the only way to protect the forests and retain the blessings which flow from them is to keep planting trees. We should study and practice tree-culture if we wish to preserve our American forests.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will assume that the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I do not desire to withdraw the amendment I have offered.

Mr. OWEN. I move to strike out the last word, and yield the time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered, and which has been read from the desk, I deem of very great importance, and I would like very much to have the House give it careful consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to interrupt the gentleman to state that he will find in a subsequent line on the first page a place where this amendment is properly applicable, and the Chair will then recognize the gentleman to offer it.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Very well; I will offer the amendment at the time suggested.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move a pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a pro forma amendment pending, on which the gentleman can take the floor.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to state the exact relation of the speech made by the gentleman from Maine, Mr. Blaine, and which was quoted in debate this morning by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] as bearing upon, or having some application to, the subject now under consideration in this committee. I felt at the time the remarks were read from the Clerk's desk that that distinguished Republican and pronounced protectionist had never uttered such language in connection with the duties upon foreign imports, and therefore I made the inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky which is now of record.

I have since looked up the debate, and have also procured a copy of the bill then under consideration, and to which Mr. Blaine was addressing himself on the floor of the House at the time he made the remarks referred to. I find that the Committee of the Whole had under consideration at the time House bill No. 1060, a bill to reduce into one act and to amend the laws relating to internal taxes; and, Mr. Chairman, of the sixty or seventy pages of this bill there is not one line of it having any relation whatever to duties upon imports. The remarks of the gentleman from Maine were uttered in protest of a proposed tax upon the domestic products of lumber and breadstuffs, and had no application at all to any proposed tax or duty upon foreign lumber or foreign breadstuffs. [Applause on the Republican side.] I merely state this in order that the record may be complete.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MCKINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HEARD. I wish to ask this. Is not the figure chosen by Mr. Blaine, in the remarks to which reference is made, for the purpose of illustration, and as a plea for cheap lumber for the frontiersman who wants to build his cabin or construct his fence, just as forcible and as applicable to domestic lumber as to foreign lumber?

Mr. MCKINLEY. Oh, no; quite the opposite.

Mr. HEARD. What is the difference to the consumer of the lumber?

Mr. MCKINLEY. The difference is simply this: That under a tax upon domestic products, the consumer always pays the tax; whereas under a tax or duty imposed upon a foreign product the consumer does not always pay the tax, indeed, he very rarely pays it. And it is particularly true that he scarcely ever pays it if the tax be put upon a competing foreign product. That is the exact difference; and if the gentleman from Missouri studies political economy he will discover that such is the difference between a tax upon a domestic and a foreign competing product, the one being paid by the consumer always and the other being paid largely by the diminished profit of the foreign producer.

Now, the gentleman from Maine, Mr. Blaine, in making this speech to which reference was made, addressed himself to a motion made by Mr. Ferry, then a member of the House, and subsequently a Senator from Michigan, to exempt from the operations of this law any unmanufactured lumber and breadstuffs. It was simply an effort to wipe out as speedily as possible internal taxation. In the line of the suggestion of Mr. Blaine, the Republican party has from 1868 on down through its control of the Government wiped out every one of these taxes upon domestic production save and except alone the tax upon whisky and tobacco [applause on the Republican side], making an annual reduction of over $360,000,000 imposed upon domestic production in the United States.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I have only made this statement in order to have the record exactly correct.

Mr. HEARD. Let me say to my friend, who has suggested that if I would study political economy I would receive certain lights and information, that I have no doubt I would receive just the kind he suggests if I studied it in the same school in which he was taught.

Mr. MCKINLEY. And that is just the school I want the gentleman to enter.

Mr. HEARD. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. MCKINLEY. For it is the very best school not only for the study of political economy but for practical business purposes.

Mr. HEARD. It is the school in which the American consumer is paying the tuition of those who are getting the benefit of its teachings.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the language of Mr. Blaine, which I have put into the RECORD, like everything that comes from that distinguished gentleman, was worthy of his ability, and was an effective argument against putting a tax upon lumber, and seemed, therefore, to be not an inappropriate contribution to the discussion we have been pursuing to-day, as to whether the lumber used in America should be free from taxation or not. All forms of obtaining money by the sovereign power must necessarily be, in the ultimate analysis, taxation of some kind; and the gentleman is wholly mistaken when he says that the teachings of political economy point to the conclusion that the consumer does not pay the added cost of production, whatever may be the particular element of that cost which is under discussion. Whatever it is, in all the various elements thereof, which makes up the unit of cost of production. it is paid, as a rule, by the purchaser of the article which costs that amount to produce. Whether it be the cost of the material, the cost of the labor put into it, the cost of transportation, the insurance premium, the commission of the commission merchant, the profit of the intermediary, the ultimate unit of the cost of production is, as a rule, the amount that the consumer pays for the article plus the profit of the last person who sells it to him.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. In a moment. The amount of duty imposed upon an article enters into the cost of the article and becomes a part of it, and, as a rule, is paid by the consumer. It is not always true in this country that the article on which a protective duty is imposed can be sold in America; and therefore it is not always true that the competing article sells for a price that is equal to its foreign cost of production plus the nominal duty that is by law put upon the competing article.

That is so with all the cheap cotton goods and upon the various other goods upon which duties are imposed as to their foreign competing goods where there is no real foreign competition, because there is no importation; but in every case where there is a foreign competition and there is a duty imposed upon the article, that duty enters into the cost of production. There can be no escape from it. That is the teaching of common sense. And that is the reason why the persons who manufacture the competing articles in America fight with such intense animosity against any bill which reduces those duties, for their profit is in the preservation of the duty which increases the cost of the competing article and enables them to undersell the foreign article at a price which will give to them a profit.

Mr. REED. I have no desire to follow the gentleman from Kentucky into the mazes of the argument by which he has withdrawn the House or the committee from the consideration of his presentation of Mr. Blaine's argument on one point precisely as if it had been made upon another, thereby inducing the Democratic party to give to Mr. Blaine what they have always most grudged him, the meed of generous applause. [Laughter.] I think the gentleman's losing himself in this argument to which we have just listened is plain proof to the House that his production of Mr. Blaine's statement on one point in order to uphold another was clearly an inadvertence; that it was done by accident; and it only remains for us to express our very sincere regret that he had not, prior to producing it to the House, given it the careful examination which it really merited. [Applause.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman from Maine is satisfied with the answer he has made to the remarks which I have submitted, I suppose I have no reason to complain. It was not an inadvertence that I produced the remarks of Mr. Blaine. I commend them to the gentlemen on the other side, and especially to my good friends from the Northwest, so that when they come to read them in the RECORD to-morrow they may mark, learn, and inwardly digest them.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me now for a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. With pleasure.

Mr. KELLEY. Did the gentleman know that Mr. Blaine was speaking of an internal tax and yet represent him as having referred to a customs duty? That is the point at issue.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Pennsylvania assumes what is untrue. I did not represent that Mr. Blaine had made these remarks about a customs duty, and the gentleman is wholly gratuitous and inaccurate in the assumption. I sent the RECORD to the desk to be read as the speech of Mr. Blaine, and when my friend from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] asked the question I could not answer it at once because other gentlemen on the same side interposed inquiries. As soon as I could I said I did not know. There was no attempt of any sort in any way to do anything except to have the remarks of Mr. Blaine read and inserted in the RECORD.

As to the remark of my friend from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], that the Republican party have reduced since then the internal taxes, I will say they have been decreased in the present bill and in the present tariff. But while it is true that all the taxes which were imposed on the various internal and domestic manufactures, except beer, and whisky, and tobacco, have been removed, the compensatory duties which the gentlemen on the other side put on foreign competing articles have not been reduced, and they do not propose to reduce them.

Mr. MILLS. I now ask unanimous consent that we may have a vote on the amendments that have been offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending paragraph be now closed. Is there objection?

Mr. BAYNE. I object.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I object for the purpose of asking a question. I desire to know whether the paragraph includes the amendment offered by me a while ago and read from the Clerk's desk?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not embrace that amendment.

Mr. MILLS. Can we have unanimous consent to close the debate in ten minutes from this time?

Mr. BAYNE. I object, because there are a number of gentlemen here who had no opportunity to discuss this question in the general debate, and who now wish to speak upon it.

Mr. MILLS. We have been four or five hours talking simply about the date when this law shall go into effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if debate is closed upon the pending paragraph the Clerk will then read, beginning with line 6 and ending with line 25. That is the paragraph in regard to lumber.

Mr. MILLS. This whole debate has been on the first paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. This whole debate has been on the first five lines.

Mr. MCKINLEY. What is before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. MCKINLEY. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 125, noes 107.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded, and the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 122, noes 83.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 9061) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill with certain amendments for the farther action of the House, and unless gentlemen desire to be heard upon it I ask that the bill be now disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reports back from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETERS. I reserve all points of order on that bill.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman had better state his point of order now.

Mr. PETERS. I reserve all points of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no disposition to deprive anybody of any rights that he has under the rule. I ask for the reading of the amendments which I have been instructed to submit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, after "salary of governor," in line 6, insert "$2,000."

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that this bill must be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. In reply I desire to state that not only this bill generally but these particular amendments now reported have already been considered in Committee of the Whole; so that the purpose of the rule has been carried into effect.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to be heard on that point. According to the Manual, page 142, after a bill has been committed and reported, it ought not in an ordinary course to be recommitted; but in cases of importance, and for special reasons, it is sometimes recommitted, and usually to the same committee. If a report be recommitted before agreed to in the House (which is the status of this bill) what has passed in the committee is of no validity; the whole question is again before the committee and a new resolution must be again moved as if nothing had passed.

Now, I take it for granted that this bill comes before this House virtually de novo, and that the usual point of order can be made against it, namely, that, as it provides for an appropriation, it must, under the rule, be first considered in Committee of the Whole. It is immaterial whether or not these amendments have once been considered in committee, and agreed to or disagreed to prior to the recommitment. That, I say, is immaterial, for otherwise a committee of this House would have the power within themselves to do away with any recommendation that the Committee of the Whole might make to the House. When this bill was passed an attempt was made to recommit it with instructions. The point of order was made against that, and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] made the motion to recommit virtually without instructions.

It was recommitted, and now it comes back as a new bill. As stated in Jefferson's Manual, without respect to what action may heretofore have been taken upon the bill in Committee of the Whole, it is now before the House for consideration just as though it were reported for the first time from the Appropriations Committee. I therefore make the point of order that this being virtually a new bill, it must be again considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I always desire to speak with great caution when I rely on my memory, but I wish to refer the Chair to a decision made, I think, in the last Congress in a case exactly similar to this. When the deficiency appropriation bill, after consideration in Committee of the Whole, came before the House, Mr. REAGAN, then a Representative from Texas, moved to recommit the bill with instructions. When it afterward came back a point of order similar to that now pending was raised; and the decision was then made that the bill, having been once fully considered in Committee of the Whole, the requirement of the rule had been satisfied.

Mr. REED. That was a recommittal with instructions.

Mr. RANDALL. I so stated the fact a moment ago.

Mr. REED. This bill was recommitted without instructions.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no distinction so far as the present question is concerned. This bill comes back in the same relation as when it was recommitted.

Mr. PETERS. What was the status of this bill when it came back from the Committee of the Whole and when it was recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations? If I remember correctly, it contained about twenty-two blanks, perhaps more. Points of order had been made upon certain amounts in the bill, some of which were increases of salaries above the legal compensation and some of which were reductions of the legal salary. Those points of order had been sustained, and the amounts reported by the Committee on Appropriations were stricken out. Motions were made to fill those blanks with the several amounts provided by law. Those motions were voted down. Then a motion was made that the blanks be filled with the amounts named in the appropriation bill now in force for the current year. Upon that proposition a point of order was made and sustained.

If the present point of order be not well taken, then this House has no power to enforce its own action after having expressed itself in Committee of the Whole as against filling those blanks with the amounts provided by the statute law of the land. In other words, if this bill can now be taken up and passed without any opportunity to amend, without any opportunity to fill those blanks, then we place the entire House in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations. This now comes back as a new bill. We do not know what is in it; we do not know how those blanks have been filled. We do not know but that they have been filled in direct opposition to the will of the House as expressed when it voted down the proposition to fill the blanks with the amounts required by the statute law. And there is no opportunity to find out how these blanks have been filled or what is the present condition of the bill until we go into Committee of the Whole and again consider the bill by paragraphs.

We cannot go into the room of the Committee on Appropriations and ascertain the proceedings they may have taken in connection with each item of this bill. The members of that committee are not permitted under the rules of the House to divulge the proceedings of the committee. We are powerless to obtain any such information if we desired to do so. Furthermore, no rule of this House can be so construed as to place the entire membership on this floor—325 members—under the power and dictation of the Committee on Appropriations.

There are certain blanks in this bill which appeared there after it had been considered and passed in Committee of the Whole. Certain statements were made in Committee of the Whole which were afterward found to be incorrect. Amendments were adopted in Committee of the Whole and afterward reported to the House with the understanding that certain statements were true; but those statements having been found incorrect, the bill with those incorrect figures in it was recommitted. How do we now know but that the Committee on Appropriations, in now reporting the bill back, have gone entirely contrary to the wishes of a majority of the members of this House? I submit, Mr. Speaker, that in consonance with common sense, in consonance with justice, in consonance with the rights of each individual member on this floor, the bill should be again considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, in the proceedings of this House in the last Congress there is a precedent which, in my judgment, exactly covers the present case. I refer to the action of the House upon the river and harbor bill at the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress. That bill had been considered in Committee of the Whole, and at a certain time a proposition was submitted by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors with instructions to report a bill of a single section, being an appropriation in gross for the whole amount carried in the previous bill. That proposition was adopted. When the Committee on Rivers and Harbors re-reported the bill to the House Mr. Hepburn, then a Representative from Iowa, began a discussion of the report. Thereupon, later on the point of order was made to the Speaker [Mr. CARLISLE]. That, in my judgment, was a question exactly on all fours with the present one. There was a recommital of the bill substantially without instructions, and a new bill was formulated so far as the particular item then under consideration was concerned. The ruling of the Chair on that occasion was, wi hout doubt the bill was subject to the point of order only for the factit had been waived by entering on the discussion of the merits of the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. T he Chair hopes the gentleman will give the reference to that decision.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say, being the party referred to, the gentleman is mistaken in his statement of that case.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It may be something else, but the question was precisely what I have said. The motion was to strike out the entire bill and insert, as I remember, and the present occupant of the chair on that occasion made the decision.

The question is whether by reference to the committee reporting a bill it can report back a new bill, because if you can do it in reference to one matter you can do it in reference to all. Now, can you evade the effect of the rule requiring a bill to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House by simply reporting back an amendment wiping out the entire bill and bringing in a new bill from the Committee on Appropriations or any other committee of the House?

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that there is not in the bill itself or any amendment of the bill anything whatever that has not been considered already in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. NELSON. Reference has been made to the point of order on the river and harbor bill of last year. It was made by myself, and the gentleman has not stated it truly; we had been considering the river and harbor bill for several days, and progressed only a page or two.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Just as we have done here in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NELSON. I moved a substitute for the entire bill, which was adopted in the Committee of the Whole, and the committee rose and reported that substitute to the House. Then the House as a House struck it out and adopted the original bill. The point of order was made that my substitute for the entire bill was not in order until the whole bill was read. The point was made to the Chair. That was the precise question. It has no relevancy to this point, and I have merely stated it to get the facts correctly before the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. When the point of order was raised by the gentleman in charge of this bill against the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. LEHLBACH] proposing a slight increase and a proper one to two engineers named in the bill, and certain points of order were also made by the Committee on Appropriations against amendments submitted by myself raising the pay of, in one case one, in another case two, laborers employed in the Departments from $360 per year to $180, it seemed to me only proper, if the Committee on Appropriations were so anxious to have the rules observed, they should be compelled to observe those rules themselves.

These points of order in reference to the salaries named by the gentleman from Pennsylvania have been so ruled on that I think it has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of this House that the rules as construed and expounded by the occupant of the chair, if insisted upon, provide the only way we can complete this bill is, by filling the blanks with the amounts named in the statute law, and not the amounts named by the committee. But I am satisfied the committee do not mean to so fill those blanks, for, as I understand, the amendments which the chairman is instructed to report and ask concurrence in are of the same character as the parts which were originally struck out on the points of order in the Committee of the Whole, and are just as obnoxious to a point of order. But suppose the point is raised and they are ruled out of order, the bill will be then recommitted, and again the Committee on Appropriations will come serenely in with proposals just as obnoxious, and no progress in legislation is made.

These appropriation bills are already farther in arrears than ever known before in the history of Congress. During the whole month of December this House was in actual session just ten hours and two minutes. This bill should have been properly prepared, passed in accordance with the rules, and in the hands of the Senate long ago.

I am satisfied that I have performed my duty in endeavoring to have the committee observe the rules and the law, and I am just as well satisfied the committee mean to observe neither; and I hope now that all points of order against the bill will be withdrawn, and that the bill will be allowed to go to the Senate without delay, in order that that body may act upon it in time for these laborers named in the bill to be paid promptly for the first month of the coming fiscal year.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the point of order to be withdrawn.

Mr. HERMANN. I renew it.

Mr. GIFFORD. And I wish to renew it also.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to extend the time of this day's session until this matter is disposed of, and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] may have an opportunity of introducing a bill conferring upon General Sheridan the rank of full general.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Let that be done now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to extend the time until the consideration of the legislative bill can be completed, and the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] acted upon, in relation to creating the office of General of the Army?

Mr. REED. I hardly think these two propositions should be coupled in that way.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Will the Chair state the proposition again?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is to extend the hour beyond 5 o'clock, fixed for adjournment, in order to complete the consideration of the bill under consideration, and also to enable the gentleman from New York to call up for consideration the bill to create the office of General of the Army.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania fix any time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No time has been fixed.

Mr. RANDALL. In my judgment it will not take over a quarter of an hour.

Mr. MCKINLEY. The gentleman suggests that it will take but fifteen minutes. In order to avoid any difficulty I suggest a half hour.

Mr. BLAND. I think we had better have the time without limit, or I shall otherwise object.

Mr. SOWDEN. Say until both of these measures are through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania object?

Mr. SOWDEN. No; but I want the time extended until these two measures are finally disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again ask: Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to continue the session until the legislative bill is finally disposed of, and also the bill creating the office of general?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

Mr. BLAND. Regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing, then, to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] to call up that bill now.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to make a privileged report. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the further consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. PETERS. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PETERS. I am informed that some one withdrew the point of order I made. I desire to state that I did not withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated that the impression of the Chair was that the point of order had been withdrawn; but thereupon it was renewed by several gentlemen, and was so recognized by the Chair.

Mr. PETERS. I did not withdraw it.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I desire to ask unanimous consent to submit a suggestion to the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The demand for the regular order cuts off all requests.

Mr. McKINLEY. I desired simply to ask unanimous consent that the Sheridan bill be taken up and disposed of before 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order has been demanded, and the legislative appropriation bill is now before the House.

Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania state that there is no new provision or clause in the bill as it came from the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. RANDALL. I state that there is no matter in the bill that has not been considered and acted upon in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, nor is there in the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That being so, the Chair is of opinion——

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I wish to ask a question for information, whether the amendment reported——

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask unanimous consent to present this bill for present consideration. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the regular order has been demanded by several gentlemen, and this appropriation bill is the regular order.

Mr. SPINOLA. But will the Speaker hear a proposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order having been demanded, the Chair is unable to do anything but recognize the demand.

Mr. GOFF. But the gentleman wishes to submit an additional request, to which objection may not be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the demand for the regular order withdrawn?

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order for the purpose of getting a decision on the point of order before 5 o'clock, which is now near at hand.

Mr. SOWDEN. I would like to know who the gentleman was that demanded the regular order. We have a right to know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has been demanded by several gentlemen.

Mr. SOWDEN. But who was it that objected?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated that a number of gentlemen demanded it.

Mr. SOWDEN. I would like to know the name of any one of them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] objected for one, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] demanded the regular order, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] demands the regular order to obtain a ruling upon the point of order.

Mr. SPINOLA. Will the Chair permit me to make a statement of a half a minute? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not remember any decision bearing upon this point of order except one case where there had been a recommittal of a bill with instructions, after it had been considered in Committee of the Whole, which bill on being reported back with a statement from the committee that there was no new matter in the bill which had not been considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, was admitted for consideration in the House and the report was sustained.

Clause 3, of Rule XXIII, provides:

> All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money or bills making appropriations of money or property, etc., shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole.

This bill was considered in Committee of the Whole, as required by the rule, and was reported back to the House. A controversy arising about some blanks existing in the bill, it was recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, now reports it back with the statement that no clause or appropriation has been added which was not considered in the Committee of the Whole. The rule does not provide that it shall have more than one consideration in Committee of the Whole.

To hold now that the rule required this bill to be again considered in Committee of the Whole, would make it necessary to go through with the entire bill, section by section, in Committee of the Whole, if demanded; for it would be impossible to have a part of the bill pending in the House and other portions in the committee. The Chair is not of opinion that such a proceeding was contemplated by the rule, when provision was made that the bill "shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole," and thinks that there has been a compliance with the rule.

The Chair thinks the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania brings this bill within the decision cited, and overrules the point of order, the gentleman having stated that there is no clause or provision reported by the committee that has not received consideration in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. PETERS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to lay the appeal of the gentleman from Kansas on the table.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being put on ordering the yeas and nays, the Speaker pro tempore stated that evidently a sufficient number had arisen.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays and demand a division of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to declare that the House stands adjourned until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 10269) granting a pension to John J. Gorham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARUTH: A bill (H. R. 10270) for the relief of Patrick Henry Sohan—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CULBERSON: A bill (H. R. 10271) for the relief of John M. Aycock—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GOFF: A bill (H. R. 10272) for the relief of James M. Weekley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRANGER: A bill (H. R. 10273) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint William Barrymore, of Connecticut, to be a junior lieutenant, not in the line of promotion, in the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LANE: A bill (H. R. 10274) granting a pension to Joseph W. Filler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10275) granting a pension to Joseph Hunter, M. D.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McADOO: A bill (H. R. 10276) amending an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Joseph M. Potter," approved March 3, 1887—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCREARY: A bill (H. R. 10277) to place the name of G. W. Cook, of Jackson County, Kentucky, on the muster-roll of Company A, Forty-seventh Kentucky Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MATSON: A bill (H. R. 10278) for the relief of Francis M. McDonald—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10279) granting a pension to William A. Moore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WICKHAM: A bill (H. R. 10280) granting a pension to Lana Loder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRIMES: A bill (H. R. 10281) for the relief of J. S. Miller—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10282) for the relief of William Amis—to the Committee on War Claims.

Change in the reference of the following bill, improperly referred, was made, namely:

A bill (H. R. 9832) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary T. Barnes—from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Petition of John J. Gorham, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. M. ALLEN: Petition of Catherine Condra, widow of Louis Condra, of Tishomingo County, Mississippi, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. C. S. BAKER: Petition of Mrs. J. N. Hinolf, heir of S. W. Roys, of Savannah, Nebr., for relief—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BELDEN: Petition of J. C. Miller and others, of Baldwinville, N. Y., in favor of adhering to our past policy of protection for all American productions—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. T. H. B. BROWNE: Memorial of the mayor and other citizens of San Francisco, Cal., for the passage of a bill for quarantine at that place—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CARUTH: Paper relating to the claim of Patrick Henry Sohan, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CLARDY: Petition of 71 citizens of Madison County, Missouri, for the amendment of the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. R. H. M. DAVIDSON: Petition of J. W. V. P. Plummer, mayor, and 163 citizens, of Key West, and of L. P. Thompson and 28 others, citizens of Florida, to increase the duty on stripped tobacco, on leaf-tobacco without stems, to 75 cents per pound—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DAVIS: Petition of J. D. Hathaway and 21 others, citizens of Bristol County, Massachusetts, in favor of an amendment to the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. ENLOE: Petition of executor of William P. Tharp, of Rutherford County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HAYES: Petition for a pension for George R. Wells, of Buffalo, Iowa—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. S. I. HOPKINS: Petition of manufacturers and bankers of Lynchburgh, Va., for the immediate repeal of the tobacco tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. JONES: Petition of Charles H. McKee and others, citizens of Selma, Ala., favoring the Cullom-Breckinridge bill—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LEE: Petition of citizens of Fairfax County, Virginia, for pure food—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LONG: Petition of Webster & Co., of Boston, Mass., for better postal facilities—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MCCLAMMY: Petition of Hiram Grantham, heir of Needham Grantham, of Sampson County, North Carolina, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MAISH: Petition of Henry Alexander, late a private Company I, Maryland Volunteer Infantry, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEAL: Petition of administrator of Ann Latspeich, of Monroe County, Tennessee, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Petition of C. P. B. Jeffreys, of Philadelphia, Pa., for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. H. O'NEALL: Petition of T. J. Downs and others, for a branch of the Soldiers' Home in Indiana—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PETERS: Petition of C. A. Haulenbeck and 52 others, of McPherson County, Kansas, for an amendment to the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, affidavit of Dr. W. W. Speirs, in the case of J. A. Underwood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PHELAN: Petition of Hudson Harris, and of James B. and Joseph B. Abington, of Fayette County, Tennessee, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: Petition of James F. Brooks, and of B. F. Reid, guardian heirs of Mary S. Sims, of Rutherford County, Tennessee, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of administrator of John B. Hawkins, of Franklin County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROBERTSON: Petition of Joel S. Mansur, heir of Hiram Mansur; of Josephine Roberts, heir of Stephen Roberts; and of Susan Lee Mansur, heir of George Snizer, of Louisiana, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SENEY: Petition of Findlay (Ohio) Assembly, No. 656, and of Tiffin (Ohio) Assembly, No. 2698, Knights of Labor, against civil pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TILLMAN: Petition of John H. Ruddell, executor of Reuben R. Turner, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: Petitions and affidavits to accompany House bill 9947, for the relief of John Morrison—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WASHINGTON: Petition of administrator of Joseph A. Aldrich, and of Robert T. Sweeney, of Davidson County, Tennessee, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: Petition of N. R. Wilkes, administrator of Richard L. Porter, of Maury County, Tennessee, for payment of his war claim—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions in favor of House bill 9716, for the better protection of free labor from convict labor, were received and severally referred to the Committee on Labor:

By Mr. FUNSTON: Of Knights of Labor of Pleasanton, Kans.

By Mr. HERBERT: Of Knights of Labor of Montgomery, Ala.

By Mr. STEPHENSON: Of Michael Bush and others, of Florence, Wis.

By Mr. CHARLES STEWART: Of citizens of Orange County, Texas.

The following petitions for the repeal or modification of the internal-revenue tax of $25 levied on druggists were received and severally referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. GRIMES: Of R. G. T. Halley, G. W. Newsom, and other citizens of Taylor County, Georgia.

By Mr. MAISH: Of A. Steward, M. D., and others, of Delta, Pa.

The following petition for the proper protection of the Yellowstone National Park, as proposed in Senate bill 283, was received and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

By Mr. HERMANN: Of sundry citizens of Oregon.

The following petitions, indorsing the per diem rated service-pension bill, based on the principle of paying all soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war a monthly pension of 1 cent a day for each day they were in the service, were severally referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

By Mr. FINLEY: Of ex-soldiers of Greensburgh, Ky.

By Mr. MATSON: Of 36 citizens of Staunton, Nebr.

The following petition for an increase of compensation of fourth-class postmasters was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads:

By Mr. HUNTER: Of M. C. Gittings and 63 others, of Gittings, Ky.

The following petitions, praying for the enactment of a law providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy, were severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. T. J. HENDERSON: Of 131 citizens of Putnam and Lee Counties, Illinois.

By Mr. PAYSON: Of 165 citizens of Iroquois County, Illinois.

By Mr. PERKINS: Of 52 citizens of Elk County, Kansas.

By Mr. CHARLES STEWART: Of 25 citizens of Harris County, Texas.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 1, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Charles E. French, a citizen of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of an amendment to the bill for refunding the public debt that would eliminate the fifty-year provision thereof; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Allen County, Kansas, praying for the passage of an amendment to the interstate-commerce law which will give all fines and penalties collected in prosecutions under that law to the complainants; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Ashland, Wis., praying for such amendment of the interstate-commerce law as will prevent its gross violations as at present by the railroad companies of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the petition of John Pope Hodnett, "president and founder of the United Labor League of America," praying to be allowed "permission to carry a deadly weapon on his person both day and night in the District of Columbia;" which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Stromsburgh, Nebr., praying for the passage of the refunding measure for the Pacific railroads known as the Outhwaite bill; which was referred to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of H. C. Coburn and 36 other citizens of Montcalm County, Michigan, praying for an amendment of the interstate-commerce law to give the complainants all fines and penalties which may be collected in prosecutions under that law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Thompson Kirby and 58 other ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Ashley, Mich., praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAMPTON presented the petition of J. A. Whitman, M. D., and 28 other citizens of Beaufort, S. C., praying for the passage of the Platt prohibition bill for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GRAY presented the petition of John W. B. Killgore and 22 other citizens of Newport, Del., praying for the passage of the Platt bill providing for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of Dunlap Grange, No. 919, Patrons of Husbandry, located at Dunlap, Ill., praying for the passage of the bill to create a department of agriculture with a Cabinet officer at its head; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of George B. Durkee and 26 other citizens of Hansen, Nebr., praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the petition of John Barsby and about 300 other citizens of Nebraska, praying for the passage of the rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Stromsburgh, Nebr., praying for the passage of the Outhwaite Pacific Railroad funding bill; which was referred to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the Missouri State Medical Association, held at Kansas City, Mo., in April, 1888, in regard to epidemic diseases, recommending that external quarantine measures should be under the control and direction of Federal authority, so as to afford the highest degree of protection to the people of this country, and favoring Congressional action looking to that end. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of John J. Gorman, of Billerica, Middlesex County, Massachusetts, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ORRIS A. BROWNE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5859) to remove the political disabilities of Orris A. Browne, of Virginia, to report the same adversely, with a written report, the ground of the report being that this gentleman at the time he left any connection with the authorities of the United States was simply a naval cadet at Annapolis, and the committee are clearly of opinion—there can be no doubt about it on examining the statutes—that he is not under disabilities now. They were removed by the general act of 1871 as to everybody except an enumerated class of officers of the United States, and this gentleman was not an officer either in the Army or the Navy. The committee therefore recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed for the reason that the gentleman is not under any disability whatever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection; and the report will be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3066) for the relief of Mrs. Mary T. Duncan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file in the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3067) for the improvement of Rock Creek, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3068) providing for the distribution of public documents to depositories and other public libraries; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PALMER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3069) granting pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry to Charles L. Jenny; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3070) for the relief of John Anthony Orleman and Mary Albina Wilhelmina Orleman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3071) granting a pension to William H. Cummings; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3072) granting a pension to John J. Gorham; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3073) granting a pension to Silas G. Brown; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 3074) for the relief of Nicholas J. Bigley; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 3075) to require preference to be given to citizens of the States and localities where the mails are to be carried in all mail lettings; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. COCKRELL (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 88) providing for printing public documents for sale; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act. The amendment provides for an appropriation to Sarah E. B. Smith, of Scotland County, Missouri, for $837.50, and I accompany it with the findings of fact made by the Court of Claims. I move that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Claims and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZA DOUGLASS.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate indefinitely postponed the bill (S. 2812) for the relief of Eliza Douglass, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

ANASTASIA ISLAND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution introduced by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], coming over from a former day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CALL, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States is hereby directed to report to the Senate whether Anastasia Island, near St. Augustine, Fla., is the property of the United States, and whether the whole or any part is covered by any grant from Spain which has been confirmed and is recognized as valid by the United States under the treaty between Spain and the United States for the cession of the provinces of the East and West Floridas made in 1819.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. If there is no further morning business, I move to take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to allow me only a few minutes to call up the bill which I gave notice I should ask the Senate to consider this morning.

Mr. DAWES. Let me get up the appropriation bill, and then I will yield.

Mr. BROWN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENTAL STATIONS.

Mr. BROWN. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1358, House bill 7222.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the pending business be informally laid aside for the purpose of considering a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7222) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish agricultural stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I have conferred with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who objected to the bill last evening, and we have agreed on certain amendments which I will now propose to the Senate.

At the end of line 9 I move to strike out the word "and" and insert the word "but;" so as to read:

But that such installments of the appropriations as may be now due or may hereafter become due, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. In line 10 I move to strike out the word "that," before the word "such," and insert the words "as to;" so as to read:

But as to such installments of the appropriations, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. In line 11, after the word "due," where it occurs the second time, I move to strike out the word "and" and insert the word "when;" so as to read:

Or may hereafter become due when the Legislature may not be in session.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. In line 14, after the word "he," I move to strike out the word "will" and insert the word "shall;" so as to read:

And upon a duly certified copy thereof to the Secretary of the Treasury he shall cause the same to be paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia desire a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments?

Mr. BROWN. I ask that a committee of conference be requested, though I think the House of Representatives will concur in the amendments. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PADDOCK, Mr. BROWN, and Mr. BLAIR were appointed.

DISTRICT BELT LINE RAILWAY.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it consider at this time Order of Business 1233, Senate bill 1580. I shall be absent from the sessions of the Senate for a few days after to-day, and would be glad to have this bill considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the pending business may be informally laid aside for the purpose of considering the bill (S. 1580) to amend an act entitled "An act incorporating the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company." Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 11, after the words "Louisiana avenue," to strike out "east on Louisiana avenue to Pennsylvania avenue, diagonally crossing Pennsylvania avenue to Market Space, east along Market Space to," and insert "north on Ninth street to D street northwest, east on D street northwest to;" and in line 21, before the word "street," to strike out "Fifth" and insert "Fifteenth," so as to read:

Second. Beginning at Ninth street northwest and Louisiana avenue, north on Ninth street to D street northwest, east on D street northwest to Louisiana avenue, northeast along Louisiana avenue to Indiana avenue, southeast along Indiana avenue to C street northwest to its intersection with C street northeast, east along C street northeast, passing around Stanton square to Eleventh street northeast, with the privilege of extending the same on C street to Tennessee avenue, northeast on said avenue to Fifteenth street northeast, north along said Fifteenth street to its intersection with Benning Bridge road, after said streets and avenue shall have been graded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, after the words "direction of the," at the end of line 3, to strike out "engineer commissioner of said Board of Commissioners," and insert "commissioners of the District;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the rails for the said extension shall be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and shall be laid under the supervision and direction of the commissioners of the District of Columbia. Unless said extensions are constructed and the cars run thereon within two years from and after the passage and approval of this act, the authority herein granted shall be void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 3, after the words "thereon the," to strike out "said" and insert "stock of the said;" in line 5, after the words "authorized to," to strike out "increase its capital stock in the" and insert "be increased to an amount equal to the cost of construction and equipment of said extension and the cost of real estate and buildings necessary to the same, not to exceed in the aggregate the;" and in line 9, after the words "sum of," to strike out "not more than" and insert "$250,000;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of the construction and equipment of said extensions, the purchase of land and the construction of necessary buildings thereon the stock of the said Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company is hereby authorized to be increased to an amount equal to the cost of construction and equipment of said extension and the cost of real estate and buildings necessary to the same, not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as a new section:

SEC. 4. That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to amend the charter of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company," approved March 3, 1881, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the third section of the act referred to?

Mr. HARRIS. It is in respect of the little detached line from Pennsylvania avenue to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. By this arrangement that detached part becomes a link in the general line of the road. The third section of the act of 1881 simply required that upon that little short line a higher rate of fare than 2 cents should not be charged, but now it becomes a link in the entire line of road, and if that section remains a passenger could get on at that point and travel all around the city for 2 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as a new section:

SEC. 5. That all the provisions of the charter of said railway company as they exist at this time shall apply to the extensions herein granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any provision in the bill reserving the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act?

Mr. HARRIS. That is in the original charter, but if it is not in this—I do not know whether it is in or not—I have no objection to putting it in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to add the following as a new section:

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1948) to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River, in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Ark.; and

A bill (S. 2210) to revive the grade of General in the United States Army.

BENJAMIN T. BAKER.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire rise to morning business?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not. I wish to have a pension bill passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] took advantage of my not attending to my own business and got a bill through. I do not know that I can yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BLAIR. I could have made my peace with the Senator from Massachusetts and would not trouble the Senate but for the bill I wish to call up being one that seems to appeal with unusually strong reasons for immediate action. It is the pension case of a very old man who is entirely disabled and poor, and who has for a long time been taken care of by his wife. She has lately met with an accident and both are now entirely helpless. I desire to have the bill make progress if possible. I have received a letter in regard to it. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2825) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin T. Baker.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from New Hampshire?

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "late," to strike out the words "a seaman," and insert "a quartermaster on the United States steamer Spuyten Duyvil;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin T. Baker, late a quartermaster on the United States steamer Spuyten Duyvil in the United States Navy, and pay him at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report in that case?

Mr. BLAIR. Yes, there is a printed report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to have the report read?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some reason given why this pension should be increased to $72 a month. What is the rate he is now receiving?

Mr. BLAIR. He is receiving $24 now, and is entirely helpless.

Mr. COCKRELL. He will be entitled under the law now to have the pension increased to $72 a month in the Pension Office if he is entirely helpless.

Mr. BLAIR. He is so entitled upon the facts. I can not say in regard to what the Pension Office would do. I do not know whether he would be considered entitled there or not; but it is a case where I know something of the great necessity, of the great disability, and the great need. The bill has proceeded thus far, and it is important that there should be immediate action. It is like a great many other cases where we have made increases.

Mr. COCKRELL. Here is the question I want to get at: Has not the Pension Office ample authority, upon competent evidence showing the kind of disability referred to—total disability—to increase this pension and allow him $72 per month without any special act of Congress?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know whether it has or not.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is not that the amount allowed for total disability?

Mr. BLAIR. In some cases they get it and in some cases they do not.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question is, what is the amount allowed by law for total disability when it is proved and established in the Pension Office? I ask the Senator for information. I am under the impression that the law explicitly allows $72 a month for total disability.

Mr. BLAIR. This is a case which has been examined once or twice in the Pension Office, and where the Pension Office has made a rating at $24 a month. The evidence has been filed with the Committee of Pensions and carefully examined, and it is the opinion of the committee, from the evidence, that the rating should be $72 a month. I do not know whether the Pension Office has power, if it sees fit, to allow a pension at the rate of $72 a month, where there is an equal opportunity——

Mr. COCKRELL. I think I know what the law is. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri calls for the regular order.

Mr. VOORHEES. Before the regular order is called, I think I can relieve this point of embarrassment.

There are a class of cases which were pensionable at $72 a month by the Pension Office under the general law, such as total blindness and perhaps one or two other kinds of disability. An attempt was made to increase the pension of every person laboring under total disability to $72 a month, and that was successful as to the cases that had been adjusted. I had occasion during this session to examine into the case of an officer from New York who was laboring under total disability, and I found that that act simply fixed the amount of pension to be received by those already on the pension-rolls, and did not operate in futuro. The consequence is that the kind of case the Senator from New Hampshire is representing calls for $50 a month, and that is the highest they can go in the office. I had occasion to go over the ground, and in a case of total disability under the law (I need not go into an explanation of its intricacies, you may rely upon what I say) the best that can be done in such a case is $50 a month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the further consideration of this bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, Mr. President, I must see the law on that question. It will only take a short time for me to hunt up the law.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the consent of the Senator from Massachusetts I wish to call attention——

Mr. BLAIR. Unanimous consent was given to the consideration of this case. I do not know whether it is now subject to a call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An objection can be interposed at any time.

JAMES B. MITCHELL.

Mr. SHERMAN. If House bill 615, which I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate, is read, and a short report is read, I have no doubt it will pass by unanimous consent, and I am willing to have it taken up subject to a call for the regular order. I make the request now because the man is in extremity. I am assured that he is now in great need of the small sum of money appropriated by the bill. He is very poor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, I will yield for fifteen or twenty minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there is any objection to the bill, I will let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 615) for the relief of James B. Mitchell.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to James B. Mitchell $438 for services as surveyor of customs at the port of Yorktown, Va., from September 7, 1882, to January 31, 1883.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AARON FRIEDHEIM.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has a bill which he desires to call up.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will consent, as it will take but a moment, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2882) to pay Aaron Friedheim the rebate due him under the act of March 3, A. D. 1883.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that the sum of $22.07 shall be paid to Aaron Friedheim, of Camden, Ouachita County, Arkansas, for the rebate due him under the act of March 3, 1883, of taxes paid on tobacco, snuff, cigars, and cigarettes, the claim for which having been lost in the transmission thereof.

Mr. BERRY. This is a bill in which my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas], is specially interested and I have called it up in his behalf.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BLAIR. I object, and call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire objects.

Mr. BERRY. I ask if an objection can be interposed when the bill has been before the Senate by unanimous consent and the question is upon its passage?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An objection can be interposed at any time.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his objection. I surely had nothing to do with stopping his pension bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I tried to get a bill through this morning, and an objection which went just like a hot iron through the heart of a man's mother was made here, and I feel a little as though when that bill could not be considered no other private bill should, because the bill I had called up was an act of humanity of the most pressing nature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind the Senator that debate is not in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator suppose that that kind of talk will make me withdraw my objection to his bill?

Mr. BLAIR. What does the Senator say?

Mr. COCKRELL. I say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. Does the Senator from New Hampshire insist on his objection?

Mr. BLAIR. No; I suppose I had better withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 2210) to revive the grade of General in the United States Army; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Indian appropriation bill will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments be considered as the reading of the bill proceeds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, line 9, before the word "agents," to strike out "fifty-nine" and insert "fifty-eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of fifty-eight agents of Indian affairs at the following-named agencies, at the rates respectively indicated, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out lines 24 and 25, as follows:

At the Nisqually and S'Kokomish agency, at $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out line 26, as follows:

At the Quinaielt agency, at $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 26, to insert:

At the Puyallup (consolidated) agency, embracing Nisqually and S'Kokomish and Quinaielt agencies, at $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 96, to reduce the appropriation for pay of agent "at the Osage agency" from $2,200 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 118, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for pay of Indian agents from $89,200 to $88,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 132, after the word "one," to strike out "superintend" and insert "superintendent;" and in line 133, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to make the clause read:

Pay of one superintendent of Indian schools, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "fulfilling treaty stipulations with and support of Indian tribes," in section 1, after line 339, to insert:

For payment of the balance of principal and interest of Kaw or Kansas Indian scrip, pursuant to the provisions of the Indian appropriation act for the year ending June 30, 1886, approved March 3, 1885, $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid out of the sum of $200,000 accruing to said Indians for cession of lands under article 2 of treaty entered into by said tribe with the United States, dated January 14, 1846, and to be immediately available: Provided, That the proceeds of sales of Kansas Indian lands realized hereafter shall be applied to the reimbursement of the said fund of $200,000 of the amount paid out under this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 399, to insert as a head-line "Miamies of Eel River;" and at the beginning of line 401 to strike out "Fulfilling treaties with Miamies of Eel River;" so as to read:

Miamies of Eel River:
This amount to be paid per capita to the Miamies of Eel River, being in full of all demands under their treaties with the United States dated August 3, 1795, August 23, 1805, and September 30, 1809, $22,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 438, to strike out the following clause:

Omahas:
For sixth of twelve installments, being last series, in moneys or otherwise, per fourth article of treaty of March 16, 1854, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 529, to insert as a head-line "Pottawatomies of Huron;" and at the beginning of line 536 to strike out "Fulfilling treaties with Pottawatomies of Huron;" so as to make the clause read:

Pottawatomies of Huron:
This amount to be paid per capita to the Pottawatomies of Huron, being in full for the permanent annuity, in money or otherwise, guarantied to them under the second article of treaty dated November 17, 1807, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with and support of "Quapaws," in section 1, line 538, after the word "education," to insert "during the pleasure of the President;" so as to make the clause read:

Quapaws:
For education, during the pleasure of the President, per third article of treaty of May 13, 1833, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with and support of "Shoshones and Bannocks," in section 1, line 665, before the word "article," to insert "eighth;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of second blacksmith, and such iron and steel and other materials as may be required, per eighth article of the same treaty, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaty stipulations with and support of "Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska," in section 1, line 694, after the words "per head for," to strike out "eight thousand persons roaming" and insert "such persons as roam and hunt, as per tenth article of same treaty;" in line 696, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty" and insert "fifty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" so as to make the clause read:

For nineteenth of thirty installments, to purchase such articles as may be considered proper by the Secretary of the Interior, at $10 per head, for such persons as roam and hunt, as per tenth article of same treaty, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, before the word "persons," in line 701, to strike out "three thousand five hundred;" in the same line, after the word "agriculture," to insert "as per tenth article of same treaty;" in line 702, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy" and insert "one hundred;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" so as to make the clause read:

For nineteenth of thirty installments, to purchase such articles as may be considered proper by the Secretary of the Interior, at $20 per head, for persons engaged in agriculture, as per tenth article of same treaty, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 716, after the word "dollars," to strike out the semicolon and insert a colon, and after the colon to insert:

Provided, That this sum shall include transportation of supplies from the termination of railroad or steam-boat transportation; and in this service Indians shall be employed wherever practicable.

So as to make the clause read:

For subsistence of the Sioux, and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, $1,000,000: Provided, That this sum shall include transportation of supplies from the termination of railroad or steam-boat transportation; and in this service Indians shall be employed wherever practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 734, to insert as a head-line, "Sioux, Medawakanton band;" in line 737, before the word "band," to strike out "Medwakanton" and insert "Medawakanton;" in line 743, after the word "lands," to strike out "and in making improvements thereon;" and in line 748, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "one;" so as to make the clause read:

For the support of the full-blood Indians in Minnesota, belonging to the Medawakanton band of Sioux Indians, who have resided in said State since the 24th day of May, A. D. 1886, and severed their tribal relations, $20,000, to be expended by the Secretary of the Interior in the purchase, in such manner as in his judgment he may deem best, of agricultural implements, cattle, horses, and lands: Provided, That of this amount the Secretary, if he may deem it for the best interests of said Indians, may cause to be erected for the use of the said Indians at the most suitable location, a school-house, at a cost not exceeding $1,000: And provided also, That he may appoint a suitable person to make the above-mentioned expenditures under his direction, the expense of the same to be paid out of this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "miscellaneous supports," in section 1, to strike out lines 817 and 818, as follows:

For subsistence and civilization of the Assinaboines in Montana, including pay of employés, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 819 to line 821, inclusive, as follows:

For support, education, and civilization of Blackfeet, Bloods, and Piegans including pay of employés, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 854 to line 856, inclusive, as follows:

For support and civilization of the Gros Ventres in Montana, and for pay of employés, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 866 to line 875, inclusive, as follows:

Support of Indians of Fort Peck agency: For this amount, to be expended in such goods, provisions, and other useful articles as the President may, from time to time, determine, in instructing in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, providing employés, educating children, procuring medicine and medical attendance, care for and support of the aged, sick, and infirm, for the helpless orphans of said Indians, and in any respect to promote their civilization, comfort, and improvement, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 901, after the word "employés," to strike out "and material for houses, fifteen thousand," and insert "seven thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Navajo Indians, including pay of employés, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 902, to insert:

For continuing the work of constructing ditches and reservoirs for the Navajo Indians, and for the purchase, maintenance, and operation of a portable sawmill for the use of said Indians, and for the purchase of nails and such other necessary materials as can not be obtained by the Indians for houses to be constructed by them, $15,000, to be taken from the funds now in the Treasury belonging to said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 921, to insert:

For support and education of the Seminole and Creek Indians in Florida, for the erection and furnishing of a school-house, for the employment of teachers, and for the purchase of seeds and agricultural implements and other necessary articles, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 45, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

The various amounts appropriated in this act for the support, maintenance, civilization, pay of employés, etc., of the Indians in Montana receiving rations at Fort Peck, Fort Belknap, and Blackfeet agencies, respectively, shall not be expended, provided the several agreements made with them by the agents of the United States in December, 1885, and January and February, 1887, be ratified by Congress. The first installment stipulated in said agreements to take the place of said appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "general incidental expenses of the Indian service," in section 1, at the beginning of line 957, to strike out "general" and insert "incidental expenses of Indian service in Arizona: For general;" so as to make the clause read:

Incidental expenses of Indian service in Arizona: For general incidental expenses of Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents, in Arizona, $4,000; for the support and civilization of Indians at the Colorado River, Pima, and Maricopa and Moquis Pueblo agencies, $8,000; and pay of employés at same agencies, $8,000; in all, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 970, after the word "carpenter," to insert "(for Hoopa Valley Agency);" so as to make the clause read:

Incidental expenses of Indian service in California: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service, including traveling expenses of agents, in California, and support and civilization of Indians at the Round Valley, Hoopa Valley, Tule River, and Mission agencies, $18,000; and pay of employés, including one carpenter (for Hoopa Valley Agency), at same agencies, $9,000; in all, $27,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill to the end of the following paragraph, under the head of "Miscellaneous:"

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers, in addition to the agency farmers now employed, at wages not exceeding $75 each per month, to superintend and direct farming among such Indians as are making effort for self-support, $50,000; and no person shall be employed as such farmer who has not been for at least five years previous to such employment practically engaged in the occupation of farming.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move to amend that paragraph by adding words which I offer with the approval of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been customary to go through with committee amendments first. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, under the head of "Miscellaneous," to strike out lines 1041 and 1042, as follows:

For the payment of salaries of judges of Indian courts, $5,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For compensation of judges of Indian courts, at such rate as may be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of the Interior, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1063, after the word "severalty," to insert "in accordance with treaty stipulation;" and in line 1065, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

For survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and of lands to be alloted to Indians, and to make allotments in severalty, in accordance with treaty stipulation, to be expended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1068, after the words "surveying and allotting Indian reservations (reimbursable)," to strike out the words:

For pay of special agents, and necessary expenses to carry out the provisions of section 3 of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," $35,000; $10,000 of which sum shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1076, to strike out:

For surveys and resurveys under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 8, 1887, to be repaid proportionately out of the proceeds of the sales of such lands as may be acquired from the Indians under the provisions of said act, $75,000; in all, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1082, to insert:

To enable the President to complete the work already undertaken and commenced under the third section of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," including the delivery to the Indians entitled thereunder of the trust patents authorized under said act, $10,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend that amendment by inserting, after the word "including," in line 1090, the words:

Necessary clerical work incident thereto in the field and in the office of Indian Affairs, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, after line 1092, to insert:

To enable the President to cause, under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," such Indian reservations as in his judgment are advantageous for agricultural and grazing purposes to be surveyed or resurveyed for the purposes of said act, and to complete the allotment of the same and delivery of trust patents under said act, $20,000. And no survey or resurvey shall be ordered or commenced upon any reservation unless the entire allotment upon such reservation and the delivery of trust patents therein can be completed under this appropriation.

Mr. DAWES. I offer from the committee an amendment to come in immediately after the word "same," in line 1102, as follows:

Including the necessary clerical work incident thereto in the field and in the office of Indian Affairs.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. Also after the word "patents," in the same line, I move to insert:

So far as allotments shall have been selected.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In line 1105 I move to strike out the word "entire" and add the letter "s" to the word "allotment," so as to read "allotments;" so as to make the clause read:

And no survey or resurvey shall be ordered or commenced upon any reservation unless the allotments upon such reservation and the delivery of trust patents therein can be completed under this appropriation.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. After the word "reservation," in line 1105, I move to insert the words "so selected."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, after line 1107, to insert:

For this amount, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in aiding Indians who have taken land in severalty under the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," to establish themselves in homes thereon, to procure seed, farming implements, and other things necessary, in addition to means already provided by law or treaty, for the commencement of farming, $30,000. The amounts provided for in the three preceding paragraphs shall be repaid to the Treasury proportionately out of the proceeds of the sales of such lands, if any, as may be acquired from the Indians under the provisions of the aforesaid act. And a report in detail of the expenditures made to December 1 next, under the appropriations provided by said paragraphs, shall be made to Congress at the commencement of the next session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1141, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay Charles F. Larrabee for services rendered as disbursing officer of the commission appointed May 15, 1886, to negotiate with certain tribes and bands of Indians in Minnesota, by reason of which service he was required to give a bond and to incur extra responsibility, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1148, to insert:

To pay Shirley C. Ward, of Los Angeles, Cal., for his services to date as special attorney for the Mission Indians of Southern California, under appointment by the Attorney-General, made at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1153, to insert:

For payment to Anna Adamson the equivalent of five months' salary as a teacher at the Indian school at the Mission Indian agency, California, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1158, to insert:

For this amount, to be paid to Wallace W. Rollins and Otis F. Presbrey, it being in full payment of the amount of their claim against the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians in North Carolina, found by the Court of Claims, in Departmental case No. 18, Senate Executive Document No. 158, Fiftieth Congress, first session, to be due them for services rendered under their contract of May 15, 1874, with same Indians, $10,176.77.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1167, to insert:

For the construction of a bridge across the Big Wind River, on the Wind River Indian reservation, in the Territory of Wyoming, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, upon plans and specifications to be approved by him, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1173, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase, upon such terms and conditions as he may deem just and proper, a tract of land at or in the vicinity of the Dalles of the Columbia River, in Oregon, of sufficient area and in such locality as to afford suitable facilities for the Indians of the Warm Springs reservation to take fish in said river, and to properly cure the same, said land to be held by the United States in trust for the use and benefit of said Indians, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1183, to insert:

For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Cœur d'Alene tribe of Indians for the purchase and release by said tribe of such portions of its reservation as such tribe shall consent to sell, on such terms and conditions as shall be considered just and equitable between the United States and said tribe of Indians, which purchase shall not be complete until ratified by Congress, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "For support of schools," in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 1194 to line 1198, inclusive, as follows:

Support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, for construction and repair of school buildings, and for purchase of horses, cattle, sheep, goats, swine, and so forth, for schools, $725,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, $595,000; for the construction and repair of school buildings, $55,000; and for purchase of horses, cattle, sheep, and swine for schools, $10,000; in all, $750,000: Provided, That the entire cost of any boarding-school building to be built from the moneys appropriated hereby, including furniture, shall not exceed $10,000, and the entire cost of any day-school building to be so built shall not exceed $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1216, after the word "Pennsylvania," to strike out "and for transportation of pupils to and from said school" and to insert "at not exceeding $167 for each pupil;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., at not exceeding $167 for each pupil, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1222, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "eighteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of erecting, constructing, and completing additional schoolrooms, according to plans and specifications to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1221, after the word "all," at the close of the appropriations for the Indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., to strike out "ninety-six" and insert "ninety-nine;" so as to make the clause read:

In all, $99,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1227, after the word "each," to strike out the semicolon and insert a comma; and, in line

1229, after the word "school," to insert "at $1,500;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian pupils, at $175 per annum each, at Indian school at Chilocco, Indian Territory (formerly near Arkansas City), and for pay of superintendent of said school, at $1,500, $52,125.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1234, after the word "school," to insert "at $1,500;" and in line 1236, after the word "Nebraska," to insert "not exceeding $5,000 in all;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian pupils, at $175 per annum each, and for pay of superintendent of school, at $1,500, at Genoa, Nebr.; heating apparatus, repairs, and erection of buildings at Indian school, Genoa, Nebr., not exceeding $5,000; in all, $36,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1238, to insert:

For support of Indian pupils, at $175 per annum each, and for necessary repairs to building and fencing, and for pay of superintendent, at $1,500, at the Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo., in addition to the sum authorized to be expended under the Ute agreement, approved June 15, 1880, from Ute interest money, $10,000; and Indian pupils, other than children of Ute Indians, may be allowed in said school, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1252, to insert:

To defray the expenses of transporting to and from the school at Hampton, Va., Indian pupils to be educated and supported thereat, without charge to the Government, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1261, after the word "school," to insert "at $2,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of four hundred and fifty Indian pupils, at $175 per annum each, necessary outbuildings, repairs, and fencing, at the Indian school at Lawrence, Kans., and for pay of superintendent of said school, at $2,000, $85,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1266, after the word "necessary," to strike out:

And to secure additional and better water accommodations for the use of such school and the farm connected therewith, the further sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; in all, $97,000.

So as to make the clause read:

For the repair and improvement of the wagon-road leading from the city of Lawrence to such school, $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1270, to insert—

For the purpose of securing additional and better water supply for the use of such school, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to contract with the Lawrence Water Works Company for such supply for a period not exceeding five years, and for the payment on account thereof for the fiscal year 1889 the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated; in all, $94,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1290, after the word "sixty," to strike out "Indians, pupils," and insert "Indian pupils;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of sixty Indian pupils at White's Manual Labor Institute of Wabash, Ind., including transportation, $10,020.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1297, after the word "school," to insert "at $1,500;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of two hundred Indian pupils at $175 per annum each: necessary outbuildings, repairs, and fencing at the Indian school at Salem, Oregon (formerly Forest Grove School), and for pay of the superintendent of said school, at $1,500, $36,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 1318 to line 1321, inclusive, as follows:

For the support and education of Indian pupils of both sexes at day and industrial schools in Alaska, $20,000; this to be expended under the supervision and control of the Bureau of Education.

Mr. HOAR. I think it will be interesting to the public, and especially to the persons engaged in the humane cause of Indian education, in which my friend and colleague has been so eminently a leader in this country for a good while, if he will make publicly the statement he has made to me in private, in regard to the purposes and the policy of his committee in reference to dealing with education in Alaska.

Mr. DAWES. The proposition to strike out this appropriation for Alaska did not arise in the committee from any disposition to limit the expenditures for the cause of education within that Territory; but it is very difficult to distinguish in Alaska those who go by the name of Indians, and those Aleuts and others who need education, and there has been from year to year an appropriation of $20,000 or $25,000 in the sundry civil bill for the purposes of education generally in Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the Bureau of Education.

In this bill there came from the other branch an appropriation of $20,000 for Indian pupils in Alaska, to be expended under the supervision and control of the Bureau of Education, and not under the Bureau of Indian Affairs. It was thought best to put both the appropriations together under the control of the Bureau of Education and have them in the sundry civil bill. If the Senate should be willing to increase not only this amount, but the aggregate of the two when that bill comes up, I do not think that the Committee on Appropriations would be misrepresented by a statement on my part that they would desire to see all the expenditure of money toward education in Alaska that can be usefully and profitably used in that line.

Mr. HOAR. Can my colleague state at this moment about the number of persons in Alaska of school age who require the aid and support of the Government for their education?

Mr. DAWES. I am unable to give the precise number of pupils, but there are several private schools supported by the Presbyterian church, and Mr. Sheldon Jackson is superintendent of those schools as well as superintendent of the expenditure of the Government money. They have, I should think, six or seven schools at different points in Alaska, but the precise number of pupils and the progress that has been made I am unable to state at this time.

Mr. HOAR. It seems rather out of place in this presence to say anything about Indian education upon a bill which is under the charge of my colleague; but I suppose it is well known to the Senate—it certainly is very well known to him—that the attention of humane and charitable persons throughout the country is now being especially called to the condition of things in the Territory of Alaska.

It has been growing in public interest for many years. It is undoubtedly true that the condition of things in that Territory is still a great reproach to the American nation. There are persons who are growing up and will grow up in barbarism, in one of the lowest and worst forms of barbarism, among the nations of those Northwestern regions. A tribe was brought over to our territory from British Columbia very recently who had been rescued from a very gross and horrible form of cannibalism to the glory of the missionary whose name, Duncan, is fresh in the memory of the public.

Now I believe, as I had the honor to say five or six years ago in regard to the general question of Indian education, that the expenditure for education in Alaska ought only to be limited by the amount that could be profitably employed. Of course the establishment of schools, the instruction and preparation of teachers, and the sentiment among the persons to be instructed must all be a matter of somewhat slow growth; and to hurry a vast expenditure of money before the time has come to make it would be a wasteful use of the purpose that persons who have Indian education at heart have in view.

But making allowance for that, it would be better for us to expend $10,000,000 a year for the next ten years in taking every Indian child in this country of school age and giving him instruction in certainly the ordinary employments of civilization. Then you have had every Indian youth who has grown up under the influence of this education, and let them take care of themselves like others, and in the end we should save by an expenditure of this kind, to say nothing of Indian wars, in Indian support, more than it would cost. But of course an expenditure of that kind would be utterly wasteful if undertaken now, and I suppose the same principle applies to Alaska.

I hope the committee and the Senate will be prepared to adopt the advice which my colleague has suggested would be given by him; that is, to go as far in that direction as the limits of profitable expenditure for the present year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the clause.

Mr. BLAIR. The subject commented on by the Senators from Massachusetts is an important one. I am unaware that there is any accurate information as to the number of pupils in Alaska, but there must be not far from ten or eleven thousand there who are in need of the means of education, and who are without the opportunity of obtaining it except as it is furnished by the Government of the United States, not only with regard to money, but with regard to teachers themselves.

I have not observed the amount of the appropriation proposed in this bill, but always hitherto the amount has been too meager for the necessities, and I do not apprehend there is special danger that there will be any error in the direction of excess.

The number of Indians in the country, I believe, is not far from a quarter of a million, and the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that an annual expenditure of $10,000,000 of money for their industrial and other education, in fact for the purpose of subjecting them to the processes of civilization efficiently and for a comparatively brief period of time, would be true economy, is of course a proposition which can not be controverted, and it seems not startling to us when we contemplate the application of that amount of money to the rescue of the Indians from their present condition. We know we shall save money by doing it. We know the cost of Indian wars, and we know that the support we give the Indians in the future, even if the future should be only a time of peace, would cost us more than this proposed investment of the Senator from Massachusetts, and yet while we are thus reasonable and thus inclined to be conservatively benevolent and economically generous for our own sake and for their sakes in regard to a suggestion like this, we hesitate and we fail utterly as a Congress to meet the glaring and certainly a thousand-fold more pressing necessity arising from the fact that some six or seven millions of our own race and of another race that is closer to us than the Indian are under equal necessity of national assistance.

I think that some of the benevolent feeling which we properly expend upon the Indian might properly be concentrated, or at least if not that feeling a like feeling be concentrated upon our own flesh and blood.

I have a communication sent me by a prominent Indian woman who was a delegate to the recent convention of women held in this city, in which she writes from her standpoint. She is a descendant of a Mohawk chief. She writes me from her standpoint upon the Indian problem. I think there is so much of what she says that it would be worth while for Congress to consider, that I shall ask the Secretary to read her letter which I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

KALAMAZOO, MICH., April 16, 1888.

I was requested, while in Washington attending the International Council of Women, to write in regard to the education of my people, what I thought of their past treatment, etc. First treat the Indians honorably, and truthfully do as you promise, and you will never have need to do more than that. The Indian problem will be forever solved. The Indians are not paupers. They have enough money in the Government to educate themselves. Why, then, this neglect to the rightful owners of the country? The Indian knows the white man to be untruthful. He has had nothing in return for all he has given but broken treaties from time immemorial. Roger Williams and Penn treated the Indians honorably, and in turn the Indians honored and loved them. What we want for our people is an education by vesting them with individual rights of property and have them live by their own labor. Individual rights are required to develop individual citizenship. It is nonsense to attempt Indian civilization by providing for the red men in tribal life. They must be located as individuals and families and made to feel the responsibility of distinctive efforts.

The presiding defects in your Indian policy are that you have merely established almshouses, where you have graduated helpless paupers. You changed the mode of the red man's existence, but you gave him nothing in place of what he had lost. He had hunted and fished for a living before you took him in hand. When game was exhausted in one section or the fishing gave out he sought another. You gave him a portion of land and told him he might traverse it at will, but over its boundaries he must not set his foot. You provided for his wants in a measure as compensation for prescribing his territory. Constant hunting, the encroachments of civilization, and a variety of causes soon left him no work. As one illustration, the water was so much raised at different lakes and rivers by the building of dams that the Indians could not catch any fish, their chief sustenance. Hundreds and thousands of Indians were wronged, deprived of their rights by the construction of those dams, since these dams, for reservoir purposes, were built at the headwaters of the Mississippi.

The Red Lake, Leach Lake, and Winnebagoshish Indians have suffered every year by the loss of their fish, wild rice, and other crops. Indian history has been of similar character. It has been one of broken treaties. You have perpetually taken away privileges granted to the original people of this continent. You have condemned them because they could not grasp at once the idea of your civilization, and because they did not understand your condition to be more desirable than their own mode of life. You have regarded it a hopeless undertaking to make the Indian anything but a wild man of the forest. You have considered that his extermination was inevitable. Now, in Canada ever since 1857 or 1858 Parliament has been trying by various acts and amendments to enfranchise our Indians and gradually confer on them full rights of citizenship, but with such indifferent success that the efforts heretofore made may be said to have been entire failures. Why have these efforts failed? Simply because Parliament has, in every instance, begun at the wrong end. Every enfranchisement act in the past has made it a condition precedent for an Indian to obtain the right to vote that he should practically abandon his people, alienate them from himself, and destroy any influence he might have among them.

A change necessary: It is urged that only those Indians who thus become enfranchised should be given a vote and none other.

Surely nearly thirty years' experience of such a policy would in the future continue to be as barren of any good to the Indians as in the past. Our Indians in Canada, I respectfully submit, are as capable of exercising the right of franchise intelligently as are the majority of the farmers in that or any other country.

Qualifications of Indians: Let me briefly put before you the qualifications of some of these people with a right of franchise: Take first the Mohawks, of the Bay of Quinte reservation; Chief Samson Green has a farm near Deseronto, on which he resides, consisting of about 80 acres of land under cultivation. Chief Cornelius Maricle and the Lofts and others own a hundred acres apiece under good cultivation. These Indians are fairly educated and are intelligent, sober, industrious men. They are but types of scores of other Indians upon that reserve. If you go to the Grand River reservation you will find scores of Indians, such as the Garlows, Martins, Styers, Hills, Johnstons, and Smiths, that are equally intelligent, equally capable, and who are living each upon his farm in comfortable frame and brick houses, raising thousands of bushels of grain and farm produce each year, and thus adding to the wealth of the country.

Indians as rate-payers: These are the Indians that have been denied so long the right of franchise. Let it be clearly understood that both these reservations are surveyed and divided into farms of 100 acres each; that these farms are not held in common, but are regarded by the Indians as the individual property of the occupants thereof, just as much as if held in fee-simple, and that in this country some own over 50 acres, others 100, and still others 200 acres or more; that the Indians themselves maintain the roads and bridges; that at the Bay of Quinte reserve the Mohawks maintain three common schools on the reserve; that they themselves pay the stipend of their clergyman; that at the Grand River reserve there are some twelve or fourteen public schools, all taught by native teachers, and one industrial school, which are maintained in part by the Indians and in part by the New England Company. The six nations gave out of their own funds over a hundred thousand dollars to the Grand River Navigation Company; that they subscribed liberally to bridges built near their reservation, and in other ways have assisted to develop the country, and above all the Government does not contribute one cent for their support and maintenance. More than that, I believe some of the officers of the Indian Department at Ottawa are paid not out of the funds of the Government, but of the funds of the Indians themselves. In other words, these Indians are taxed to pay not only local and municipal charges, but also pay a part of the expenses in connection with the Government machinery at Ottawa. The Indians in Canada were given a vote for the first time in 1886. As far as I know at present all are prosperous.

The Indians of the United States are really in a deplorable condition. Why is this neglect to the rightful owners of the country? You as a nation have looked after the negro and in a measure redeemed some of the wrongs they have suffered. But the first people of the country have been driven from pillar to post, neglected. I ask you as a nation to at least give the Indians their rights to an education. I believe that Congress as a body wishes us no wrong, but nevertheless great wrongs are done. Some of them never can be righted. One of the greatest wrongs is the introduction of the fire-water among my people. I appeal to you as a nation to see the Indians are educated. Send less theology among them and more true Christianity. If you understand the Indians right you would have no trouble with them. Send honest people if you have any among you. An Indian loves honor and truth, but despises deceit. Native teachers should be furnished their schools. There are a great many Indian teachers in Canada as well as the United States that ought to be employed. The Indians are perfectly capable to fill any position in life when educated. I believe all were satisfied in Washington whom I talked with, that I at least, as an Indian, was capable of conversing with all whom I met there, and when I tell you when I was eight years of age I could not understand one word of English. My education was all received in Canada, but my travels and observation has been worth more to me. In a measure I have educated myself. Give the Indians a chance of an education and you will have reason to feel proud of them. You would have no more use for the United States troops that are held at the different agencies and of less expense to the Government. We have great reasons to be proud. We are Indians. We have never been known to manufacture alcoholic drinks to destroy body and soul; neither have we language to take God's name in vain.

Respectfully,

PRINCESS VIROGNA.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, after line 1329, to insert:

For the purpose of constructing and completing suitable school buildings for an Indian industrial school, to be located at some point in Ormsby County, in the State of Nevada, upon lands previously donated to the Government of not less than 200 acres in extent, and of such character and location as shall be deemed most suitable for the purpose by the Secretary of the Interior, upon plans and specifications to be approved by him, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1347, to insert:

That in the expenditure of any money appropriated in this act for any of the purposes of education of Indian children, those children of Indians who have taken lands in severalty under any existing law shall not, by reason thereof, be excluded from the benefits of such appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for "interest on trust-fund stocks," in section 2, line 5, before the word "namely," to strike out "eighty-nine" and insert "eighty-eight;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That for payment of interest on certain abstracted and non-paying State stocks belonging to the various Indian tribes, and held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior, for the year ending June 30, 1888, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 5 of section 8.

Mr. DAWES. In line 4 of section 8, before the word "education," I move to insert the word "practical" and to strike out the word "Indian" before the word "children;" so as to read:

That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a person of knowledge and experience in the management, training, and practical education of children, to be the superintendent of Indian schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 8, line 5, after the word "schools," to insert:

Who shall, from time to time, and as often as the nature of his duties will permit, visit the schools where Indians are taught, in whole or in part, by appropriations from the United States Treasury, and shall, from time to time, report to the Secretary of the Interior, what, in his judgment, are the defects, if any, in any of them in system, in administration, or in means for the most effective advancement of the children in them toward civilization and self-support; and what changes are needed to remedy such defects as may exist; and shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, employ and discharge superintendents, teachers, and any other person connected with such schools, and with such approval make such rules and regulations for the conduct of the schools as in his judgment the good of such schools may require. The Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be detailed from the employés of his Department such assistants and shall furnish such facilities as shall be necessary to carry out the foregoing provisions respecting said Indian schools.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a person of knowledge and experience in the management, training, and practical education of children, to be superintendent of Indian schools, who shall, from time to time, and as often as the nature of his duties will permit, visit the schools where Indians are taught, in whole or in part, by appropriations from the United States Treasury, and shall, from time to time, report to the Secretary of the Interior what, in his judgment, are the defects, if any, in any of them in system, in administration, or in means for the most effective advancement of the children in them toward civilization and self-support; and what changes are needed to remedy such defects as may exist; and shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, employ and discharge superintendents, teachers, and any other person connected with such schools, and with such approval make such rules and regulations for the conduct of the schools as in his judgment the good of such schools may require. The Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be detailed from the employés of his Department such assistants, and shall furnish such facilities as shall be necessary to carry out the foregoing provisions respecting said Indian schools.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, it will be observed that this amendment takes the entire control of Indian schools away from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and vests it in a bureau officer having equal salary and dignity with the Commissioner, and of equal rank with all the other bureau officers of the Interior Department. The determination to do this has been manifested by a unanimous vote in both the Senate and the House of Representatives, the Senate having passed a bill for this special purpose, and the House committee having put it on this appropriation bill exactly as it passed the Senate, the remarkable feature of it being that it was done, as it was required to be done, under the rules of the House by unanimous consent.

This provision in its general effect reflects the judgment not only of both Houses of Congress, but of those who have observed the management of the Indian Bureau under the present Administration as to what is absolutely necessary to be done. It is deemed absolutely necessary to take the control of the Indian schools from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under whose administration the schools have not been kept up to the proper standard, and by whom the general and proper management of Indian affairs has been largely subordinated to a scuffle about patronage. The Indian Bureau is under the control as to essentials of subordinates than of the head of it, and therefore it seems to both Houses of Congress necessary to the public interest to take away as much as possible of its jurisdiction.

It is exceedingly important that the system to be employed in the education of Indian children is one of sufficient importance to call for its control by a thoroughly competent man, vigorous, intelligent, effective one, totally unlike the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who, although well meaning, amiable, and honest, by reason of his age and inexperience and general lack of vigor, has been unable to cope with even the responsible and widely extended duties of this position. This may be said without special discredit, for better men have failed in the same position.

It is proper to say in connection with this subject that many of the vices of the system of Indian education are inherent. They grow out of misunderstanding the requirements of the Indian. They grow, to some extent, out of the misguided efforts of philanthropic people. They grow out of the fact, too, that neither the people of the United States nor Congress representing the people have heretofore addressed themselves as thoroughly to the situation as they ought to have done.

I am entirely persuaded myself, and I am satisfied that the country will ultimately come to the same conclusion, that what is needed is not the segregation of the Indians from the whites, it is not gathering them on Indian reservations, but it is their dispersal at the earliest possible moment among and absorption in the great body of the people of the United States. The Indian can not, as a rule, maintain himself and keep up a condition of necessary progress upon a reservation even with the protection of the laws. The civilization by which he will be surrounded is aggressive, forceful, and to some extent rapacious. He can not maintain himself in contact with the whites while under the tribal relation, nor can he do so in a condition of severalty, as a rule, except with the result of a descent in the scale.

He is so situated and constituted that he will take, by that kind of contact, the vices and not the virtues of the whites. He needs the sustaining power of civilization, and he needs it applied to him as an individual and not in his tribal capacity, and he needs it, too, applied to him in such a way that he is not the subject of cupidity. Just as long as an Indian holds a considerable body of land there will be men around him who will seek to take advantage of him, and who in one way and another will accomplish that, who will get the control of his estate, who will get the control of his operations, and they will do that by pandering to his vices; and no amount of protection which the Government can throw around him will prevent it from being done.

The remedy is to take the Indians as far as possible away from their reservations; it is to scatter them among the people of the United States; it is to put them in positions where their qualifications, whatever they may be, will be not only recognized but they will be protected from the effect of their weaknesses.

I have insisted for many years, vainly however, that the proper plan for the education of the Indian youth was to give them the smallest portion of what might be called book learning, and the largest amount of that education which comes by contact—to put them out among good people in families, in places where whatever aptitude they had could be developed, for work upon farms and in shops, and by the helpful aid of those who would take an interest in them to strengthen and to aid them in learning self-support, realizing always that they have got to begin at a rather low plane; that it is not possible to take an Indian and by the mere process of school education put him upon the plane of the white people who have been generations in doing that which he is now expected to do in the course of a few years.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator if, in this method of distributing the Indian children throughout the country, he contemplates the breaking up of the family relation for the time being, or would he not do this with children nearing maturity, when the child naturally leaves the parent and is made to mix with civilized people and a totally different life from that to which he was accustomed? If he would pursue the first course, what would he do with the common feelings of human nature, which are as powerful in the savage as in civilized man?

Mr. PLUMB. No education of this kind could be secured at once, nor can it be done according to any rule which will be equally practicable for all Indian youth. Some may be taken earlier and some later, but I would take the Indian children for the purpose of education as far as possible from their original surroundings. I would not do unnecessary violence to the feeling of which the Senator has spoken, but taking the orphans, taking those whom their parents are willing to have go, taking them at an earlier age or later, as the case might be, and adapting what was done to the circumstances in each case, but acting upon the idea of getting them as far as practicable away from their reservations, away from savagery, and with the intention that they should not go back, if that could be reasonably prevented. One reason is because they find little or nothing to do in the time of their school acquirements. Take Sioux Indians, for example. Suppose you should take even five hundred children from thence and educate them at Carlisle or elsewhere in the mechanic arts, and when they have learned all they can learn there is nothing on the Sioux reservation for them to do——

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will allow me to ask, for he has had observation, do the children thus educated at Carlisle, at Hampton, and other schools in the East, cease to be possessed of a longing for home and a desire to return as they become civilized? Do they form an inclination to desert their ancestors and to settle down among the white inhabitants of the country, or is there a tendency among them to return to their old associations, and perhaps to their old style of life? How is that?

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt there is a longing on the part of many of them to go back to the wild state from which they came, and when they go back to the reservation (and that is the unfortunate part of it) they go back to savage habits; they go back to idleness, which is the accompanyment of savagery; they go back not to labor with their hands as a rule, not to set examples in farming and mechanical labor and so on, but they go back to be judges at horse races, to be jockeys, to exhibit themselves as smart enough to get along without labor, and they almost inevitably deteriorate from the apparent standard which their education had brought them to.

I am not speaking of that as reflecting upon the Indians. It is the result of the forcing process we are putting them through. We are asking of the Indian that he shall come from a system of savagery into the daylight of civilization which the white race has been centuries in accomplishing. The fiber which has come by hard labor, by generations of toil, is not theirs to exercise. I am thoroughly convinced myself that a large portion of the money we are now spending upon Indian education is not only idly spent, it is worse than that, it is viciously spent.

Mr. BLAIR. Would it improve the matter if these schools, instead of being located on the Atlantic, were located right upon the reservations and sustained there, and civilization introduced among the Indians so largely and so symmetrically as to be able to effect a lodgment there, to set an example there, so that industrial as well as ordinary instruction could be laid there on the spot among the Indians and held in mind by observing and by witnessing as well as by actual instruction in the schools? Would such a system benefit the matter?

Mr. PLUMB. Any system which educates them on the reservation, in my judgment, is a mistake; that is to say, which seeks to educate them as to anything else except for the performance of what might be called the duties and avocations of a pastoral existence.

Mr. BLAIR. What will holding in severalty do?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator asks what will severalty do. Severalty will do this: If you can put them under conditions in which they will not be subjected to the opportunity of acquiring the vices of the whites—give them time, generation after generation following, to build up in an increasing scale to a better condition of things, no doubt; but the trouble is that we are not willing that they shall do that. We pay our money, and we want results at once. We want to take these Indians from their reservations and put them in a condition where the white boys and girls of the United States are. We are trying to do too much at once. We are not giving them instruction in that which is primary to them.

We educate at Carlisle, and no doubt well, so far as the mere education goes, the Indian children in the various trades. They learn to be blacksmiths, they learn to be harness-makers, they learn to be carpenters and wagon-makers, and so on; but there is no employment for them when they go back to the reservation, or a very limited employment on the reservations from which they came. The Indians are not the greatest consumers of wagons and harness, of the blacksmiths' work, and things of that kind. So the mechanics we educate at such great expense find little or nothing to do.

Mr. BLAIR. They do go back?

Mr. PLUMB. They go too much, following naturally the instinct which the Senator has spoken of, which I have no doubt is as strong in them as in anybody else, and they ought as far as possible to be weaned away from it.

The following provision is found in the bill on page 55:

For collecting and transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools, and also for the transportation of Indian pupils from all the Indian schools and placing of them with the consent of their parents under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified to give such pupils moral, industrial, and educational training under arrangements in which their proper care, support, and education shall be in exchange for their labor, etc.

That was first inserted in the Indian appropriation bill many years ago upon my suggestion, but with the full and active concurrence of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]. He and I agreed in substance upon it, and if something of that kind had been carried out in a large way, if the people who are indulging in so much talk about the Indians, if the Indian Rights Association, which meets annually at Newport—if some of the philanthropy, which finds vent in high-sounding speeches about the injustice that has been done to the Indian, could be turned in the way of carrying into effect the idea embodied in this section—taking the Indian children from the reservations and placing them in good white families, surrounding them by influences which are not only wholesome, but which would lead them in the direction of self-support, they would find their place, not in the higher ranks of society, not perhaps in the politics of the country, but in avenues, modest enough, to be sure, but in which they could be useful and in which they would gradually build up, grow, develop, and become useful members of society. It is only by contact of that kind, by the supporting influence of a civilization which must not only surround them, but become interested in them, that the advance desired can be made—not that contact which they necessarily incur on the reservation.

Mr. BLAIR. The question whether we carry civilization to them or they come here and get it, and the relative expense and the results of the two systems, I think, is a matter of some consequence, and as the Senator knows about it, I wish to call his attention to the case of the civilized Indians in the Indian Territory. As far as I know the history of the process which brought them from savagery to very near our own civilization perhaps, it was one in which the missionary and the industrial and the civilized arts and civilization itself all went to the Indian, and they found him on the spot. They transformed him by long and persistent and systematic pressure and effort, finally, perhaps after generations of work, from what he was to what he is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire will suspend. The Chair will receive a message from the President of the United States.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 2210) to revive the grade of General in the United States Army; and communicated a message in writing.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose there may be a motion made to go into executive session.

Mr. HAWLEY. Probably the Senate is tolerably well aware of the nature of the communication just received from the President. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business for a few moments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9788) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11; that it had agreed to the twelfth amendment of the Senate to the bill with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; and that it also requested the concurrence of the Senate in an amendment to the title of the bill.

The message also announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4920) for the protection of the officials of the United States in the Indian Territory, and agreed to the same.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1772) for the relief of John H. Marion;

A bill (S. 2123) to authorize the removal of an obstruction to the navigation of Broad Creek, in the State of Delaware;

A bill (S. 6946) for the relief of Thomas Jordan; and

A bill (S. 8560) to establish a department of labor.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortification appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] is entitled to the floor on the pending amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has the floor. I was asking him a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from New Hampshire to be on the floor when the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. At the time of the interruption I was asking the Senator from Kansas with reference to his theory that the Indian youth should be scattered among the civilized people, trained in the arts of civilization, and discouraged at least in their tendency to return to their own people; that gradually the Indians should be scattered and diffused among the civilized portion of the inhabitants of the country. I ask him whether the illustration that we have of an opposite theory in the case of the civilization and transformation of the Choctaws, Cherokees, and others in the Indian Territory would not seem to perhaps suggest a different treatment of the Indian question from that which he has advocated? There the Indians were concentrated practically upon the reservations. Civilization, Christianity, schools, the arts and sciences were carried to them, planted there, and by direct, constant, and persistent pressure of these influences and the effect of these examples constantly before their eyes for a few generations, we find them transformed from what they were to what they now are. Does not the Senator think it would be perhaps better for us, if need be, to discontinue our present experiment as we have carried it on and locate the Hampton school and the Carlisle school, and all the civilizing influences which we are maintaining at so great expense for a comparatively few, who finally return and find just the same condition as that from which they were first taken, and very soon, submitting to the pressure of barbarism, return to it; would it not be better, I say, to carry these influences there, to build a permanent fire, a constantly shining light, in the hope that the same which has happened to the Choctaws and Cherokees would ultimately happen to the Sioux and other equally great and persistent races or tribes of men?

Mr. PLUMB. I think the picture which the Senator from New Hampshire has drawn of the Cherokees is far removed from the fact. It is true they were set off by themselves, and so with the Creeks, Chickasaws, and Seminoles; but the most of the whites who came in contact with them were religious men, inspired by the motive to build up, develop, and christianize them. They did not want the Indian lands, nor even to trade with them. The Indians were beyond the tide of emigration and settlement for a long time after their removal, and so beyond that ordinary and demoralizing contact which has been spoken of. In the next place they commenced their career in the Indian Territory upon a higher plane than that upon which almost any of the Indians, certainly any of the great tribes of Indians, now are. Those tribes were in a better condition to receive instructions, and to benefit by the Christian contact by which alone they were accompanied and surrounded.

Again, the example of the Cherokees and of the other tribes in the Indian Territory is not, on the whole, an encouraging one. There are some very talented men in all those tribes, but the mass of them are not in an encouraging condition. Certainly the Senator has read enough in the public prints to know that a condition of lawlessness, which is without parallel in any civilized country in the world, obtains in the Indian Territory.

Mr. BLAIR. I was not aware of it, except in No Man's Land. I think many of those civilized tribes, as we call them, have really efficient schools. I have heard them spoken of certainly as being excellent, and many of the graduates as comparing in intellectual accomplishments very well with some of their educated white brothers. It may be ignorance on my part, but it certainly was my impression that among the civilized tribes, as they are called, in the Indian Territory, there were a very large proportion of intelligent people, and civilized people owning property, administering the laws and preserving order. I certainly thought that to be so.

If the Senator will pardon me, I certainly have seen during the session every week newspapers coming from that country which administered to the Indian Committee of the House and of the Senate that sort of civilized blackguardism and castigation which is hardly surpassed by the most able performances in the metropolitan press of this country. I thought they were entitled to perhaps rank pretty well up with the educated press of the country.

Mr. PLUMB. As I have before said, the Indian gets the vices of the white men perfectly, and I have no doubt that would be equally true of the vices of intemperate and immoral speech, and so on.

Mr. DAWES. Since the Senator from New Hampshire was standing here putting these inquiries, there has come from the other House notice of the passage by the House of an act which went through here, the purpose of which was to meet a terrible condition of things down in the Indian Territory which existed nowhere else, where officers of the law were shot at their doors, and the murderers have been going about the Territory in the face of what are called the law officers of the Territory and the courts of the Territory with perfect impunity, and it was found necessary to make a special enactment for the protection of the officers of the law in the performance of their duties.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator think that is anything exceptional on this continent? Has he not read of what has occurred within a very short time—a few years ago—in the great city of Chicago? Does he not know of instances where not only officers of the law were assailed, but where officers of the law themselves assailed others?

Mr. DAWES. I speak of the excess of this great lawlessness down there, of the fact that there was no law of the Territory, that the Territory has utterly neglected not only to protect the officers of the law but to make it an offense or to enforce such laws as it had until Congress, against the general policy of leaving the Five Nations to govern themselves, has interfered with legislation to do in the Indian Territory what the five civilized tribes as they are called have wholly neglected to do.

Now, if the Senator will allow me a little further——

Mr. BLAIR. I was going to ask the Senator, while he is explaining this, if he would go a little further and let us understand what that condition of lawlessness is there. What officers are assailed? Whose fault is it? Who is being protected?

Mr. DAWES. Nothing is more interesting than the study of the history of those five tribes for the last fifty years. The fact that after having made some progress, and comparatively great progress, they have come not only to a standstill, but in many respects to retrograde, presents a study for the political philosopher of great interest.

According to the general judgment of those familiar with the condition of things in that Territory, it is not only discouraging, but it is a very unfortunate condition of things. They have made progress up to a certain limit. Left to themselves in the beginning, as the Senator from Kansas has said, with their lands secured to them, and out of the influences and the way of the white man, with Christian missionaries among them, they made great progress towards civilization; but in the mean time they have become surrounded with the white people pressing in upon them. White people have gone in. They hold their land by a tenure which renders enterprise, industry, energy, and forethought impossible. They go along in a quiet way, content to be let alone in the condition in which they are. They do not want any better condition of life, and, content with that, there come in upon them all the malign influences of their surroundings without any power within themselves to repel it.

My idea is that the heroic treatment with the Indian Territory is coming faster to be a necessity to save the good that has sprung up there under other good influences of the past, and to break up that crust which rests upon them and which they seem unable to break up themselves. There has got to be put over them a new government, a new holding of their lands. There are men in that Territory who realize that fact, and who would be glad, if they could, to divide up their common heritage into small holdings, the fee-simple in individuals, without which in my opinion a higher state of civilization than they have is impossible.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator's remarks and those of the Senator from Kansas would seem to indicate that the Indian is to be inevitably exterminated by war or by peace if he is to remain in contact with the white man at all.

Mr. DAWES. No, Mr. President——

Mr. BLAIR. I will just show the Senator why I think so, and I should be very glad to be controverted in my opinion then.

We certainly do know that our contact with the Indian from the beginning, so long as the relation between the two races was, and whenever it has been, one of force or of hostility between the two, has resulted in his extermination; at all events it has resulted in his expulsion from the territory which he had previously occupied so far as the white man has come to occupy any of the territory of the continent. The two races do not live intermixed; they do not live upon adjoining pieces of land. The Indian inevitably disappears so far and so fast as the pioneer and the white man's civilization take possession of the country. War destroys him. That is certainly so.

On the other hand, we have tried the method of civilizing him, seeking to live with him in peace; and in order that we may live with him in peace, either he must transform us or we must transform him. We have undertaken by the influences of what we call civilization and religion to transform him and make his condition homogeneous with our own.

We placed the Choctaws, the Cherokees, and some other tribes in the Indian Territory; we gave them geographical boundaries which we promised not to trespass upon; we sent there the missionary; we sent there the school; we sent there the printing-press; we placed in their possession the implements of industry; we taught them how to use them; and created among them civilized communities. I supposed that they were doing on the whole very well, but it seems that when this condition of isolation in civilization among the Indians ceases, whenever the white man surrounds them, by reason of his badness their goodness disappears; and thus it comes to pass that as we inclose them with a belt of civilization along this invisible geographical boundary which by our laws we respect or assume to respect, and the influences of what we call actual civilization find their way over that boundary and among the Indians, the Indians commence to retrograde. In other words, when the average white man, the higher orders of whom have improved him, goes there, unless our pioneers are below the average of white men (and I do not think they are, but rather above it than otherwise), when the average white man or the white man's civilization gets there, the Indian becomes a barbarian again, or worse, if the illustrations which the Senator is making are at all pertinent to the real problem that we are trying to consider.

So far as anything has been accomplished, however, it seems to have been done with the Indian by carrying to him where he is in a given community dominant in population and in general influence and not the white man—by carrying to him and locating in the spot where he is these civilizing influences and tendencies, the Christian teacher, the teacher of the arts and utilities of civilized life, and by his being instructed in those arts until he acquires a certain degree of civilization and gradually comes to improve; and so long as that state of things continues he proceeds to gradually find his way upward. We do not resort, we never have resorted to the method of disintegrating the human race and scattering the children away from home influences, from the natural instincts and the concentrating force of humanity, which is the theory of the Senator from Kansas, and which, when carried out by returning that civilized child to the home from which he emanated, still remaining under its barbarous influences, substantially the same as when he left home, very soon carries him back to the condition of degradation from which he started. So that amounts to nothing; that is a total failure; and the only good we have done we have accomplished by pursuing the other course, segregating these weaker specimens of humanity, these organized communities barbarous or savage in their condition, separating them from the influences, from the domination of the average white man's civilization, and in that isolated condition bringing to bear upon them the influences of civilization and the directly fructifying and transforming influences of what we call Christianity. That is the way we have done it, and so far as any good has been done it has been done that way, and thus the Indian is improving until the average civilization of the white man reaches him and then he commences to retrograde and be ruined again.

I think it is historically true that the improvement of these tribes continued until about the time of the war of the rebellion, and then the sudden destruction of all existing relations led perhaps to that demoralized condition in which these tribes appear to some extent to be now existing. But if we had left them as they were, if we had never approached them, if we had allowed them to be improving, strengthening, and elevating under the influences which were operating upon them and gradually transforming them, if we had allowed them thus to remain and to have improved, perhaps in a few generations more they would have become able to meet with and resist this rapacious Christian civilization which the Senator from Kansas has described to us. If that is not so, if the progress which has been demonstrated to produce some good effects is continued a sufficient length of time, it is not found to elevate to the point where they are capable of self-advance, then peace and Christianity are to exterminate them as well as war; and if that be so I ask what is the use of spending any more money on them? Why not abandon all these appropriations and this perplexity of legislation that we have every session of Congress for the benefit of the Indians? If the Indian is not worth saving and can not be saved, if nothing can be made out of him by either process, that suggested by the Senator from Kansas or that now being pursued under the policy which is being advocated by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, if both these policies ultimately are to fail, it seems to me the sooner we stop, the sooner we allow the savage either to destroy himself or to exist as a savage the better it is. There is no use whatever in any of these systems of education or improvement of the Indian if what we hear to-day be true.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator will allow me to use an illustration for a moment. It seems to me that the plan which I suggest is one designed for the preservation, not the destruction, of the Indian. There is to-day a large preponderance of blacks in the State of Mississippi. They are a very large majority in some counties, forming almost the entire population of some counties. Some years ago an exodus took 40,000 of them to Kansas. That did not destroy those who went to Kansas because they were taken out of associations in which they had lived and been brought up. It took them out of those associations into others where they were not in a majority; where they were not the sole occupants of certain counties and subdivisions; but they were better off than they were before; they have advanced in civilization; they have increased in wealth and power, and to some extent in numbers by their deportation. The Indian himself might lose his tribal identity among the whites, but he would not thereby be lost as an individual; the Indian himself would be there; his blood would be there; he would intermarry; he would take his proper position in society; we should have whatever benefit would come of that contact, and he would have the benefit that grows out of the social contact and the support of civilization all around him, relieved, as I said before, of the operation to some extent of the conflict going on now between him and the white people by whom he is surrounded.

Mr. BLAIR. That would be all very well if a like method should be pursued with the Indian that has been taken with the colored man where he had the opportunity, but the two methods of emigration are entirely different. The colored man goes to such place as he chooses; he has no tribal relation; he has been the subject of civilizing influences for lo, now, these two hundred and fifty years; and he is a very different being from the one who originally came from Africa. The illustration can hardly be held to be a pertinent one until the Indian has lived in civilized communities, until he has been first taken into civilized communities man by man by the destruction of those affinities of human nature to which I have alluded, taken as the colored man was, brought from Africa, when "men from England bought and sold him, paid his price in paltry gold," bought him as an individual and enslaved him, held him subject to the influences of civilization, it may be for purposes of gain or what not, yet in a manner that was overruled by Divine Providence so that at the end of two hundred and fifty years the colored man in the South as compared with the colored man of Africa or the savage of America is himself a civilized being; but they went as families, so at the present time it is a civilized man, it is a civilized family which is leaving one part of the country and finding a home somewhere else. The colored man in Kansas, who went there during the exodus, is a civilized man and is not a savage, and the cases are entirely lacking in parallelism.

But, Mr. President, I return to the point: If the savage is to be reclaimed by a process similar to that through which the negro passed and became what he is in this country, is it worth while for us to engage in what we are now doing? Is it of sufficient importance that we break up the tribal relation, not by giving them land to live on in severalty and teaching them the arts of civilization where they are and where their land is, but giving them title according to the rules of civilized life and civilized society to that land and to other property in the same way—is it, I say, worth while that we break up this human relation by scattering the individuals of which the family is composed, the human unit of which these races are composed, and taking them hundreds and thousands of miles from their existing location and affiliations? Is it a mercy to the Indian to do that when on the other hand we have seen the excellent results following from the original system which was introduced by the missionary and which worked well as long as we left the missionary and the Indian alone, and the good results of which omitted to appear when an unchristianized white civilization came in contact with them and introduced the elements of disorder and violence, to meet and overcome which we have just been passing the act to which the Senator from Massachusetts alludes? If, I say, we have an illustration of the good that another system can do, why not presevere in that policy and correct the evil results which have followed from our abandonment of it?

Give the Indian land; give him his inclosure; keep the white man away from him, as we have the power to do; give the Indian his land in severalty, if you please. The opportunity to maintain himself by hunting has disappeared with the buffalo and with the occupation of the greater portion of the territory where his hunting grounds were located. I say give him his territory; give him his land in severalty; give him that structure or organization of law which is necessary in civilized life; give him Christianity; give him schools and locate them where he is. Why not continue the process which we have seen so illustrated in other tribes among those which are working to us; and why not remove the pressure of the bad influences which we have cast among the Choctaws and Cherokees? Doing this there would be some sense in spending our money. If in order to do this it is necessary to withdraw the appropriations of the Government and to allow the missionaries private benevolence and those private influences which distribute and disseminate Christianity among the heathen and the lower orders—I mean if in order to do it successfully it is necessary that the Government shall stay its hand only so far as it gives them protection within the borders where they live, let it be done. But to introduce a system of disintegration, of destruction, and to undertake to justify this by saying that the opposite system which succeeded for two generations has proved a failure in the present day, I think must be an error.

I am very doubtful whether we do much for the Indian in the way we are now pursuing. We are certainly supporting him when he ought to support himself, and when, if the necessity were upon him, he would support himself, for the Indian will never starve rather than work. Nothing but the actual necessity of providing for his own wants makes the white man, or the colored man, or any man, exert himself. Make him work, and thus gradually civilize and elevate him. When we place upon the Indian and fasten upon him, and keep there, the necessity of individual exertion to avoid the pangs of hunger and to secure the prolongation of his life, when we compel him to submit to the same necessity that the white man submits to, then he will learn the art of labor and of civilization and get that best primary form of education which should precede and must precede that which is to be found even in the primary school.

I had not expected to say anything about this matter and have talked more to get information than to impart it, and having obtained a good deal from the mouths of the organ of the committee and the Senator from Kansas, I shall sit down instructed by what I have heard.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I do not want to protract this debate, and will not undertake to intrude upon the Senate any new solution of the Indian problem. I have found in the few years I have been here, about once a week all the time there comes out some new solution of the Indian problem. There is some good in every one of these solutions and there is a great deal that is impracticable in most of them. It has been my observation that those who have the most to do with the Indian have the least to say about the solution of the problem, and they say the least about it the more they have considered the question.

I do not quite understand the Senator from New Hampshire. For part of the time the Senator seems to be advocating the idea of going back to the old method of gathering the Indians together away from the white man and letting them alone, keeping them away from the white man, and he closed up by urging upon us the necessity of——

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will allow me to say——

Mr. DAWES. Wait until I tell you what the last idea was.

One idea was to keep things as they have been and as they have been going on so gloriously down in the Indian Territory, without free contact with the white man—nothing to do with him; and the other, the last one, was to take the Indian and force him to work, teach him the necessity of work, and show him how to support himself and how he had got to support himself. Those two things can not go together. You have got to take him away from his isolation; you have got to take him and put him among white men to show him how they work and live. Now the Senator says that one thing is certain, that the Indian is to be exterminated either by Christian influences or by some other.

Mr. BLAIR. I say that is so upon the theory of some gentlemen, but I do not agree to it.

Mr. DAWES. Upon any theory it is absolutely certain that the Indian as an Indian is to disappear from this country, for this reason: The Indian as an Indian can not live here any more. The climatic changes have not wrought more effectually upon the character of animal and vegetable life the necessity of an absolute change than the conditions of life in this country since we came here have made it absolutely impossible for the Indian of the past, the Indian as an Indian, to live here in this country. The Indian of our fathers with this vast continent to roam over, dominant, powerful, the rulers of the continent, can not live here because there is no condition in which they can longer exist.

The Indian who lived by the chase, who lived by what he could find of live game in the country, and in no other way, can not live here now because the game has disappeared. The Indian of the reservation can not live here, he can not be here in this crowded country of ours, with the white civilization gathering in around him on all sides and pressing in upon him. The Indian of the reservation can live here no longer. The Indian as an Indian can find no place on this continent. The race will continue here. Statistics show that the race instead of diminishing in the last twenty-five or thirty years is increasing and multiplying in numbers on our hands; and when all the conditions of the past have disappeared a new condition comes, and he must live here under one of two conditions—in his old character or in a new character. If in his passed character, it is that of a savage tramp, with no knowledge of work, with no disposition to work, with no means of self-support, with no heritage upon which to live, no habitation in which to dwell, and he becomes of necessity and the conditions of the life he lives are those of a thriftless wanderer, gathering his food and sustenance as best he may, with the same character he had when he had the whole country to roam over. Or he must live under a changed character; he must be made a self-supporting citizen of the United States, or he will certainly be a vagabond with the instincts of a savage.

That is the alternative as an absolute necessity. You can not continue the old condition of things in the Indian Territory, I will say to my friend from New Hampshire; that is impossible. Those who have solutions for the Indian question almost as "thick as autumnal leaves in Vallombrosa," forget that conditions make character; conditions determine what is to be done with the Indian, the white man, the negro, and all civilized and uncivilized life around us. All these forces combine to make this country what it is and what it is to be, involve in their sweep the two hundred and fifty or three hundred thousand Indians here along with sixty million white people, and we are going on in one common destiny to one common end of good or ill. They go together.

Now I will say a few words about what my friend from Kansas has said. There was a poor, unfortunate Indian at the school at Hampton so disappointed with the life there that he could not stay there, and after having been there a couple of years he ran away from school and went off back to his tribe. The next thing heard of him he was a jockey at a horse-race; and he has done more service since then; he has turned up in every discussion of the Indian problem since then that I have heard of everywhere as the result of education at Hampton and Carlisle. Now the Carlisle school is not responsible for that. The Carlisle school is not constructed on the principle of educating Indians and sending them back. The theory of Captain Pratt to do just what the Senator from Kansas thinks ought to be done——

Mr. PLUMB. Captain Pratt is somewhat enamored of that idea. He got that, perhaps, from the Senator from Massachusetts and myself very largely. Certainly the practice at Carlisle in that respect has changed very much in the last two years. Prior to that time the other theory was carried out there.

Mr. DAWES. Captain Pratt has between five and seven hundred pupils under him, two hundred of whom he has scattered among the farmers of Pennsylvania at work at day labor, respectable employés of the farmers of Pennsylvania, and he is distributing his scholars as fast as he can. He does not believe in sending them back. He believes just as the Senator from Kansas does, that the best way is to absorb them in the civilization of this country. General Armstrong believes that he can do with his pupils a great deal by sending them back onto the reservations, and they go back to the reservations and the history of every one that has gone from that school back to the reservations is kept. The record is kept as faithfully and clearly as the record and history of the family of the Senator from New Hampshire or my own. There can be shown that out of the whole of them scarcely 10 per cent. who have gone back among their people have failed to come up to the anticipations and hopes and promises with which they went out among their people, and that under the very treatment alluded to by the Senator from Kansas.

They are made harness-makers, they are made blacksmiths, and they have been taught all manner of trades, and then they are sent off among their people to seek employment themselves. But while the treaties and while the statutes of the United States require every Indian agent to employ Indians in all the service upon the reservations, yet right in the face of it Indian agents have employed white people, and these young Indians who come from the schools have to find employment as best they can. They go out among their people and white men are doing what they are taught to do and they can not get employment, and so they have a hard time of it. They have not only the discouragement of young men and young women seeking employment, but they have to withstand all the adverse influences of their tribe, and they go about like young white men who get through with their education, seeking employment.

Many a poor white boy, I know, has sought in vain for employment and has gone to the bad in consequence of all these influences against him. There are not 10 per cent. of these Indian youth that have gone to the bad.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and the Senator from Minnesota in front of me [Mr. DAVIS] and myself were upon a reservation last fall where we made a stipulation in our treaty that all the work done upon that reservation should be done by Indians, and yet all the employés almost without exception were white men, and there were educated Indians of the Chippewa race and others educated at the schools, the training-school in the very State of Minnesota, within 80 or 90 miles of there, and yet the lack—and that is all I desire to call it—the lack of intuition on the part of those who manage the Indian there, the lack of that knowledge of the necessity to take by the hand these young Indians and lead them along, help them, has led to the employment of white men to do that which Indians could do. But all I desire to say is that nothing is left for us, nothing confronts us in this Indian question but the alternative between making the Indian a self-supporting citizen of the United States and a vagabond savage tramp, and we can take our choice.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I hardly know how to regard the Senator from Massachusetts in his effort at frequent and, as I thought, trifling personal allusion to those who have solutions for the Indian question. I do not know whether he deems that we are to go on year after year appropriating money by the million and no man ever ask a question or intimate a question, or whether the Indian problem is one for which we are continually to furnish money without asking those under whose direction we make these contributions occasionally to give us even an opinion on the subject. I do not think he could have had that idea, and therefore I presume I trespass not at all on any propriety of this Chamber in trying to find out something about the theory upon which we are spending our millions and either killing or curing the savage, one of the two.

So much for that part of the subject. Now, I am still forced to the conclusion by what the Senator says and fails to say, and by what the Senator from Kansas says and does not say, that the civilized tribes in their existence are a demonstration of the fact that the only way in which we can expect to accomplish good for this Indian population is to carry the good to the Indian population, is to oblige the Indian to acquire the knowledge that is wanted, and that it is not necessary that we expend our millions to break up the ties of humanity, to take the young boys and girls from their fathers and their mothers and distribute them among another, an alien, a hostile race, a race where, if they live at all, they live by ignoring and destroying the affiliations of childhood and youth.

I think the case of the civilized tribes is a demonstration that the true road to success is by carrying the principles of Christianity and the influence of the gospel and of civilization that the white man has attained after the two thousand years he has lived under the golden rule and the doctrine of the atonement and of Christianity, by carrying to them where they are, just as they were brought to our fathers who were savages but very little better than the Indians—by carrying to them the same influences as have made the difference between us and them, and applying them where the difficulty is, just as they were applied to us by the early missionaries, just as St. Patrick went to Ireland and just as St. Augustine and others carried the Christian religion to the pagans and the savages who surrounded them.

The fact that in these later years these five partially civilized tribes have retrograded, if you please, that violence has broken out among them, that it has been necessary to enact the law to which allusion has been made, the fact that this present condition has supervened upon the progress which they were making is not a fact from which the conclusion can logically be drawn which has been drawn that it is impossible to civilize the Indian where he is by carrying the medicine where the disease itself exists and locating its action where its action is needed. But it seems that, ignoring and in hostility to these influences and this good which was gradually being wrought out, we have surrounded them by the adverse influences of our own civilization; we have obstructed the gradual improvement that was going on, and we have presented to them Christianity intermixed with the remnants of savagery still lingering in our civilization. That is the difficulty. We have only to remove that difficulty and give the other theory which was formerly acted on by the missionaries full force and scope in order to produce to its full extent the result of elevation and advancement which is desired.

The Senator says that the percentage as shown is that at least 90 out of every 100 of the Indians educated at Hampton and who have been sent back to the tribes from which they came have maintained themselves in the condition of elevation and improvement which they acquired here in the Eastern schools. I doubt not that that is so and that it is true all over, and that if the white man was not allowed to go in among the Indians and compete for labor and practically exclude this Indian child after we have educated him from the opportunity of improving those who are around him by the exercise of the improved powers we have given him—if, I say, the white man did not go there and strike down the good which had been accomplished by these schools, we should find the tribes of Indians in other parts of the country improving and following after the model of what we call the civilized tribes up to the time when these adverse influences fell upon them by the rapacity of our civilization.

Now, I ask the Senator this question, why, if educating an Indian boy on the coast of the Atlantic in the arts of civilization and sending him back to the tribe from which he came is a good thing, and if the theory is carried out will result in the improvement of his tribe, why precisely the same effect would not be accomplished by locating the school where the tribe already is? If Hampton was in the middle of the Sioux reservation, if Carlisle was in the middle of the Sioux reservation, does anybody believe that the excellence of its influences would be lost upon the Indian tribes surrounding it? On the contrary, it seems to me it must be in comparison to what is now accomplished like the light of the sun in heaven burning and illuminating right where the darkness itself is. Carry light where the darkness is, and in my opinion the uplifting of the Indian tribes would be a matter of comparatively little expense.

I do not believe that there is so much difference in the different races of men. As to the Anglo-Saxon race, of which we are so proud and consider the highest form of civilization, I believe if when our ancestors were pirates they had been subjected to the influences which the Indian now suffers under, they would have been extirpated and destroyed. But Christianity took possession of the pirate—took him where it found him—improved the pirate's character, his whole character—elevated the whole character, and the Anglo-Saxon race of the present is the result. Those conditions came by carrying the elements of Christianity to those who were to be improved and changed by them.

The proposition of the Senator is simply saying that the savage can not be a savage after he is civilized; that under civilizing influences his condition must change. He can not live permanently a savage under the influences of civilization. Of course he can not. All that we are doing is undertaking to carry to him these new conditions, and it is a mere question whether we are to bring here the Indian's child and educate him and have him carry back civilization by the spoonful or by the peck measure, or whether we are to locate the school where the Indian is, in that fruitful soil, and develop and illuminate and civilize him by the wholesale. That is all there is in this.

For my own part I am willing to vote these appropriations, and I am anxious to see them applied in both ways. I believe that the Carlisle school is a great blessing, that the Hampton school is a great blessing, and that they are doing great things for the Indians to-day. But we are doing them in a small way, and while they accomplish what they can it will be well for us to locate like institutions devoted especially on the spot to the accomplishment of the great work in which they are engaged under great disadvantages.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, some question has been raised as to the conduct of the Indian Bureau under this Administration. I do not know of any administration of which it can be said that the conduct of Indian affairs has been less subject to unfavorable criticism. It has been more successful than under any previous administrations, as I read the report of the Commissioner.

A more conscientious administration, in reference to its duties, and a more successful one in obtaining the results looked for has not recently obtained. No doubt the head of the bureau has had the usual difficulties which attend this subject, but on the whole his administration has been eminently successful—honest and clean-handed. The proofs of this will be found in the official reports. The school at Carlisle, under Captain Pratt, continues to be an eminent success. The schools on the reservations and elsewhere are doing as well as, if not better than, at any former period. I am a friend of the education of the Indian, as I am of all the people; and I have confidence that, under a proper system, the Indian and every other people may be civilized and made submissive to and conversant with all the humanizing arts and influences of our civilization; and I believe the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has been sincerely desirous of bringing this result into practical and successful effect.

Having said this much, which I think is due in vindication of the Commissioner and his administration of Indian affairs, I wish to say that I am opposed to the change which the bill makes in removing the charge of Indian education from the Commissioner. I have heard of no ground upon which reasonably it can be assumed that an independent superintendent of education to be subject alone to the Secretary of the Interior, and that in a somewhat doubtful manner to be entirely exempt from the control or supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is a proper arrangement.

It will cause a divided authority over the same subject-matter and over the same people. An Indian agent and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have comparatively little to do except in the matter of education of one kind or another. The education of the Indian is practical education. His subsistence and their protection in the rights given by the Government compose the agent's whole duty, and the larger part is the educational part. If there is any force in the idea that the education of the Indian should be regarded as of supreme importance and that a special jurisdiction should supervise the conduct of inferior agents and teachers, that may be very well, but that does not import that it should be independent of the agent, or the agent independent of the Commissioner, or the superintendent of education independent of the Commissioner.

Either the superintendent should be the Commissioner or the Commissioner the superintendent, and if you wish to have a general superintendent he should be inferior to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He should be so placed and subordinated directly to the control of one chief, one head. If there be at any time some administrator of Indian affairs who is inefficient, who is incapable, that does not prove that the system is wrong. It simply means that you have the wrong incumbent of the office, and that he should be removed. But the idea is a correct one of responsibility in one head and with one person charged with a single discretion to carry out the law and execute the policy declared by the laws.

I venture the opinion here, and withhold my vote from this amendment to this bill, that there can be no good effect resulting from a divided jurisdiction over the same subject-matter and the same people, and for that reason I am opposed to this provision of the bill. The education of the Indian in the practical business of life, in the arts and handicrafts which will make him self-supporting, is all-important. Much has been done and is now being done in this direction, but I think the change made by this bill will not have a beneficial effect, and I shall vote against it.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "such," in line 16 of section 8, before the word "schools," and inserting after the word "schools" the words "wholly supported by the Government."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment to the amendment will be stated.

Mr. BATE. Before that is read I wish to say that I was out of the Senate Chamber when the Senator from Kansas began his remarks, and I understood from the Senator from Florida, who has just spoken, that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] made, during my absence, some comments on the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, General Atkins. He is my constituent, and I have known him during our lives. I have known him personally, officially, and comparatively; I know the reputation which he bears among the people whom I represent. I think that any reflections sought to be made upon him, or his administration, in the Senate, are without foundation.

I do not know whether my impression is correct; but if I understand correctly the statement of the Senator from Kansas, it was that the Indian schools were not kept up to that high standard under his administration that they ought to be. I have read the official reports from that bureau; I have had somewhat to do with this Department as its friend and as a Senator.

I have not, however, been a member of the committee to which such matters are referred, and therefore am not so familiar with the details of its management as otherwise I should have been; but from what I have been enabled to learn from the reports of that bureau and other sources I am persuaded that the administration of the educational feature is up to the highest standard of such schools, and has been so kept during his administration, and his will compare favorably with any previous administration of Indian affairs.

No one knows better than the Senator from Kansas that there is much to embarrass and criticise in the conduct of the Indian Bureau, and has been for half a century; and yet I repeat that during no administration has it attained a higher degree of excellence than it has under that which now has charge of it, and every dollar which has been appropriated to it has gone through the proper channels and has been put to the best and most efficient purposes and uses that possibly could have been under the circumstances.

I understand further that the Senator said that the management of Indian affairs has been subordinated to patronage, carrying the implication that the Commissioner has used it perhaps for either a party or a personal purpose. That I deny, and I say that in the dispensation of that patronage the Commissioner has not only shown a liberality towards his opponents, but he has shown a justice and a discrimination that is praiseworthy. You may take the State of Kansas, if you please, that the gentleman well represents on this floor, and take the State that the Commissioner himself is from, the State of Tennessee, and compare the numbers and the character of those who have been the recipients of his patronage, and you will find that there can be no cause of complaint whatever. If I understand it, there have been two to one, or more, who have been appointed from Kansas to these school positions than from the State of Tennessee.

Furthermore, if the Senator means that Commissioner Atkins has exercised a partiality for Democrats in making appointments, I say amen. I am one of those who believe that when a party is in power it has a right to gather around it its friends and those who sympathize with it politically. If the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has done this, if that is what the Senator means by the exercise of patronage, I approve it. I say that when a vacancy occurs in the bureau he has charge of, and he is the appointing power, it is then for him to exercise the discretion and say whether he will appoint a man who reflects his own political sentiments, or go elsewhere and select an antagonist as his subaltern officer. I think prudence would dictate that the Commissioner should, in a bureau where money is to be handled, bonds given, and the delicacy of official relationship has to be observed, the intercourse must needs be confidential, he should call around him men of his own political convictions. If that be the intimation, then I, for one, approve it, and say to my constituent, well done. I have no cause of criticism for that; neither have I fear for the consequences of such.

The other point made, as I understand, is that his subordinates seem to be running the bureau. That has been so successfully answered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] who has just taken his seat, that I feel that I am not called upon to say anything in regard to it. But who does not know when there is an office with machinery like the Indian Bureau, perhaps more embarrassing than in any other bureau in this Government, that the Commissioner is forced to rely on those who are his subordinates?

They are away, many of them, a great distance; there are but few of them in his office, where he can give personal supervision; but he has to rely on the character of the men and must appoint them on their reputations and characters as shown to him. That he may have made some bad appointments I do not deny; I know, however, instances where he has certainly removed agents, although they were appointed on the recommendation of his own political party, and members of that party, because they did not work the machinery as he desired and in the most efficient manner for the interest of the Government. Knowing that, I conclude, and I have a right to do so, I think, legitimately, that this Commissioner has exercised discretion and good faith in his appointments and in the conduct of his office.

He is a man who has held himself without criticism for thirty years, honored and trusted by his people. No judgment should be passed upon him unless the facts are given to sustain it before the country. Therefore I am here to defend in this way Commissioner Atkins. He may have committed errors in some respects. But who does not? He has done well, and no antecedents in that bureau have done better than Commissioner Atkins, and I doubt whether any one who will follow him, with the same embarrassments, will do better.

I felt, Mr. President, that this much was due to my constituent and the honorable reputation that he bears as to the conduct of his office so far as I have been able to learn it. I trust that if there are any things the Senator from Kansas knows that ought to be exposed, it will be done. I will not shrink from meeting them, and I believe that there is a full answer to any charge that can be make against him. If there is anything that ought to be known, let it come. He does not want to screen himself; he is open as day, and he is willing and ready to meet anything that may be said against him or his administration, and I court any investigation that may be desired.

As for comparison, whether the bureau is better managed now than it was formerly, that is a question of opinion which may be biased by the political sentiment of critics. For him, however, I have to say that he is honest, honorable, pure, and his reputation always has been of that character, and I think he has conducted the bureau in a manner that will be approved by the people of this country in a way honorable to himself, and just and economical, and to the interests of the country.

Mr. PLUMB. The statement made by the Senator from Tennessee, to the effect that whoever succeeded the present Commissioner of Pensions would not do any better than the present incumbent himself, brings up a question that I do not now care to go into very deeply. With the material the President has at his disposal for such appointments, it may be he can do no better. The Senator knows better than I whether the Democratic party contains any one more fitted for the performance of the duties of Commissioner of Indian Affairs than the person now occupying that office. I will not go into that phase of the question.

Mr. BATE. It is certain that the Republican party did not furnish a better man.

Mr. PLUMB. I indorse all the Senator has said about the propriety of Democrats being appointed to office under a Democratic administration of the Indian Office as well as in all the other Departments of the Government. I am even willing that that which has never before occurred in the history of the Government, that politics be made the test of the appointment of Indian traders, still shall be continued so long as this administration lasts. I do not object to that. I do not know how many appointments there may be in the Indian Bureau from the State of Kansas. I am entirely free from knowledge on that subject. I can only recall one, but there may be a thousand for aught I know, and it may be, as the Senator says, that they are not up to the standard of those who have been appointed from the State of Tennessee. If that is one way of casting mud at the Democracy of Kansas, I do not know that I feel called on to defend them. I only regret that if they are not equal to the small remnant of unappointed Democrats to be found in Tennessee that the Commissioner did not ignore Kansas entirely and appoint all the employés from Tennessee. That certainly would seem to be the proper thing for the civil service, to take the best men who can be found, whether found in Kansas, Tennessee, or elsewhere. And if, as the Senator seems to intimate, the appointments from Kansas have not been up to the standard of those made from Tennessee, all, of course, being Democrats, I think there has been a very great mistake made and the quantum from Kansas ought to be displaced by appointments from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. The Senator knows that I have said nothing in disparagement of those appointed from Kansas. Of course, I do not personally know the character or even the politics of the appointees, but I only stated the fact that if the Senator will look over the record he will find that more than twice as many have been appointed from his State, whether Democrats or Republicans I do not know, as from mine; and Mr. Atkins being a Democrat, he certainly should have appointed Democrats. If he did not, I say he should have done so. I have no reflection to make on the character of the men appointed who are constituents of the Senator from Kansas. I know nothing about them, but I do believe if General Atkins appointed men from that State he certainly appointed Democrats who were qualified and just as good as any who belong to the opposite party.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is shifting the issue a little. I supposed it was a question of quality, and now it seems to be a question of quantity.

Mr. BATE. I do not think it has always heretofore been regarded as a question of quality. As nothing has been heard of Indian traderships during his administration must be an improvement.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator from Tennessee means to intimate now, as it seems he does, that the President or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has been able to find more qualified persons in the Democratic party in Kansas for office than he has been able to find in the State of Tennessee and other Democratic States, then he ministers to my State pride. But the Senator entirely mistakes my opinion upon this question if he supposes I complain about the character or locality of appointments under this Administration. I am like the Senator in wishing the Administration to have its own. I can illustrate my position more perfectly by relating an actual occurrence. A Democrat was appointed to a post-office in Kansas. A fellow-Democrat living in his town wrote to me to say that the appointee was not only a gambler, but had been convicted of gambling in the police court of the town; that he was not only a drunkard, but had been convicted of drunkenness in public, and he wanted to know if I, a Republican Senator, was going to vote to confirm such a man. My answer was that I did not know anything about the material the President had to work with in that section of the State. He was better qualified, certainly, to determine the qualifications, relative and actual, of the Democracy of the town in which this man had been appointed postmaster than I was, and I was bound to presume he had done the very best he could under the circumstances, and that I was so willing that the Democrats should have all the offices that I would give to even such an appointment as was under consideration the benefit of a belief that the President could do no better and vote for the confirmation.

So the Senator can get up no issue with me on this point. When I spoke of patronage I alluded to the necessary absorption by the Commissioner in the removal of Republican office-holders and Indian traders and their substitution by active Democrats. This duty was so much the most important that the Commissioner has not had time to attend to the ordinary duties of administration in his office. The brokerage in traderships, with headquarters in a Southern State, has been a very absorbing subject for the Commissioner.

Mr. President, I alluded to the schools because I found that the House of Representatives, Democratic in composition, unanimously agreed that they ought to be taken out from under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, where they have been from the beginning, and that in that they agreed with the Senate, and in neither body has there been a single dissent from the proposition to take away from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs this most important function. The Senator can put whatever construction he pleases on this unanimous legislative action. I know that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is an honest man. He confesses that himself publicly three or four times every day that he lives, and that constitutes the best evidence. I believe he is just as honest as he confesses himself to be. I have never disputed it. I raise no question on that.

The substance of my complaint is that the Commissioner is unequal to the situation. He is a man of advanced years and of failing powers. He has had no experience in administration. He has fallen into the hands—unwisely, I think—of the experienced men whom he found running the financial department of his bureau. He has done what he thought, under all the circumstances, was the best by accepting the machinery which we furnished him and to do what these experienced people told him to do. I do not think he has misappropriated any money. The very nature of the machinery which he found ready to his hand when he came into office and which he has used would prevent it, if nothing else, and I know that there is no such desire on his part to do aught that is wrong. But he has been comparatively helpless. He has not the comprehensive intellect or the mental or physical vigor to control and direct the affairs of his great office, one of the greatest offices of the Government. There is more room for the exercise of quiet, judicious, wholesome power in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs than probably in any bureau of the Government. It requires a man of great grasp, of mental, intellectual vigor, of determination; not a narrow man, not a man who quibbles about little things. He deals with a situation which presses him at every point, which can not be solved by general rules, which produces a multitude of cases that have got to be decided each upon its own merits. Perhaps it is not any reflection on the present incumbent to say that he has not been equal to this great situation.

It takes a wise man, a good man, and a strong one for it; one who is in the prime of life, in the enjoyment of his full intellectual faculties and capacity. Such a man I hope we shall get some of these days to deal with this problem that so concerns us in regard to the welfare of a dependent race of people to whom we are bound by the ties of humanity, of obligation, and of duty.

I have no doubt that many of the schools have been going on with a certain degree of excellence. Some of them may not have deteriorated; but there is lack of organization of system, and it is confessed that a change in control is necessary. And if I had time I should like to go into the administration of the affairs of the office in the Indian Territory. I should like to produce proof, which I can produce, that there is more drunkenness among Indians in the Indian Territory than ever before. I could show that never has there been a time when the despotism of the trader has been so manifest as now; that the Indians have never been so swindled by the men sent there under the auspices of the Government to sell them goods as is the case to-day.

Mr. BATE. I know nothing of that; but it is open to the Senator to make his charges, and I challenge him to make the facts known, and the man guilty of such offenses will be removed. A great many things may occur out there, 3,000 miles away, not known here at the center; but as soon as it is known to a man of the character of this Commissioner the guilty party will be removed. I think it is due him, when the Senator states that fact, to make it known through some proper channel, so that the service may be corrected if there is anything wrong in it.

As to the capacity of the Commissioner, a man who has held a high position in the other wing of the Capitol as representative of an intelligent constituency for fifteen or twenty years, and made a national reputation at the head of some of the chief committees there, and the American people are satisfied as to his character and pronounced a favorable verdict upon his capacity, he need have no fears of public judgment on that score.

As to age, he is but little older than my friend, and I think he is certainly in the full vigor of manhood. I say, therefore, he is up to the occasion—competent for the office he holds, and he exercises it with a discretion and urbanity becoming to any man who holds the position he does.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator introduced the last part of this subject to the Senate. I did not bring it in. He replies to something I have not charged.

Mr. BATE. Let us understand each other. I only speak for this gentleman against the charge made. If no charges are made, very well. I did not want it to go out in the daily papers or in the RECORD to last for all time that such charges were made against Commissioner Atkins without a proper defense. I have done that simply not only as a duty but to vindicate justice and the right.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator perhaps does well to defend his constituent. I make no complaint about that. I repeat, however, that it is amply susceptible of proof that the condition of affairs in the Indian country is worse than it has been for the last fifteen years at least. The control of the traders is greater than ever; the Indians are worse cheated than when they were more in debt, and there never was a time when drunkenness was so common. The demoralization existing is very great, and this grows out of the lax management of the Indian Office in the main.

I did not expect, of course, that this matter would come up in connection with this bill, or I should have come armed with the proof which I shall make at a later period. It is not for me to tell the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that which comes within the purview of his jurisdiction and possibly under his knowledge and not specially or officially under mine. It is not for me to tell him that maladministration is going on in his department. It is not for me to tell him where the very purpose of the organization of his bureau is being defeated. He ought to know that himself if he is competent for his place.

Mr. BATE. But the Senator makes the statement on the floor of the Senate. Then he ought to be armed with the proof, so as to give him a chance to explain it if it becomes necessary to explain it, to refute it if it should be necessary, and see if he has not some facts which can be brought forward to set the matter right.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the statement now, on my responsibility as a Senator, that all the things which I have stated are true in regard to the condition of affairs among the Indians of the Indian Territory.

Mr. BATE. Do I understand the Senator to say that he knows these things personally?

Mr. PLUMB. I know them by contact with persons who are familiar with affairs in the Indian Territory.

Mr. BATE. Ah!

Mr. PLUMB. And for whom I vouch.

Mr. BATE. Then I know by contact with persons on the other side that they are not true.

Mr. PLUMB. You assume to know a negative, which no man can really know.

Mr. BATE. I see that, of course; but I get it from those men who are at the headquarters, and know these things.

Mr. PLUMB. It is the headquarters I am arraigning.

Mr. BATE. A man can certainly know a negative to be a negative.

Mr. PLUMB. It is the headquarters I am arraigning. I am not taking the word of those who are responsible for this, but I am taking the word of agents in the Indian Territory, persons who have had dealings with the Indians and with agents in the Territory. I am taking the common knowledge and judgment of men all along the entire border. I am taking the statement of officials who have had to do with the trial of causes arising in the Indian Territory, the statements made in newspapers and not gainsaid or questioned, although they are not matters within my personal knowledge. I know there is such a place as London. I never saw it. I know of the existence of a great many other things I have never seen, and yet my knowledge is no less perfect, no less definite because it is to a certain extent the result of hearsay.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, so now at last we are at the bottom of it. The trouble in the Indian Territory and among the civilized tribes is owing to rum, and not to religion and civilization. There is the trouble, and the bill which has come over from the other House providing for measures by which we can keep the officers of the law from being murdered in the discharge of their duties, which seem to multiply greatly of late, is not to be attributed to the operations of the missionaries or the civilizing influences that were going on among the Indians as the result of the method which I have alluded to earlier in this debate. That bill, I say, is to be attributed to the vices of the white man and not to any fault in that system of civilizing the red man. So I hold that still my illustration of what has been done by the civilized tribes is a demonstration of the true method of trying to make something of the Indian, and nobody has met that historical example as yet.

There are a good many things about this bill that I should like to know, and some that I want to know and mean to know about before I get through. I should like to know, in the first place, what the full amount of the appropriation is. The Senator from Massachusetts, of course, can state the aggregate. Bills of this kind frequently show the aggregate. I find nothing here but a multiplicity of items, with nothing to show the total. Perhaps the Senator can tell me.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator would read the report, No. 1375——

Mr. BLAIR. I have not seen it, but I have read the bill. Will the Senator give me the aggregate? I do not ask the Senator to read the report, which is a day long.

Mr. DAWES. As I reported to the Senate, the amount appropriated by the bill, given on the first page of the report, is $8,172,129.13.

Mr. BLAIR. Can the Senator give me the amount which is expended for what is called education, for support of schools?

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will turn to the fifth page of the report he will see that the amount for the support of schools appropriated by the bill, as passed by the other House, is $1,307,015. In the bill as reported to the Senate the amount is $1,348,015.

Mr. BLAIR. Can the Senator state to us the amount that is appropriated for schools outside of the Indian reservations or Territory; that is, for the Indian schools in Kansas and the Eastern States?

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will turn to the fourth page of the report he will find at the bottom of the page a table giving the amount appropriated for the support of Indian schools, for day and industrial schools, construction and repair of school buildings at Albuquerque so much, Alaska industrial school so much, etc.

Mr. BLAIR. The items are in the bill itself.

Mr. DAWES. The items are in the bill itself, and the amount is carried out in a table on the fourth page of the report.

Mr. BLAIR. What is the amount? Will the Senator state it?

Mr. DAWES. Those schools separately are not added up by themselves, but I can give the Senator each item.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not care for that, because the items are in the bill itself.

Mr. DAWES. I can not give the Senator the aggregate of the amount appropriated for schools outside of the reservations and the amount for schools inside the reservations, the amount for the training-schools, the amount for the day schools, and the amount for the boarding-schools. They are all in this table, but they are not added up separately.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact which appears on the fiftieth page of the bill, that there is "for support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for," an appropriation of $685,000; "for the construction and repair of school buildings, $55,000; and for purchase of horses, cattle, sheep, and swine for schools, $10,000; in all, $750,000;" and then a proviso is added. I ask the Senator if it be the fact that the entire appropriation for the support of schools, save only the $750,000, is included in the appropriation for the support of children at the various independent schools outside of the reservations?

Mr. DAWES. There are treaty schools maintained by a fund, and there are treaty schools maintained in other ways.

Mr. BLAIR. Those are not appropriated for in this bill?

Mr. DAWES. This $750,000 is to be a sum of money in the hands of the Indian Bureau to maintain all maintained schools not enumerated in the bill. There are schools enumerated in the bill and appropriations made for those schools. Then there is the sum of one hundred and odd thousand dollars for purposes of Indian education, to be put into the hands of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to be expended by him.

Mr. BLAIR. The point that I want to reach, if I can, is the amount that is appropriated by the bill for schools like the school at Albuquerque, in New Mexico, the rate per pupil being $167 per annum, making $35,000; and for support of Indian industrial school at Carlisle, not exceeding $167 for each pupil, $80,000. From that point on through the bill there seem to be perhaps twenty or more schools, to each of which is made a large appropriation for the support of a mentioned number of Indian pupils, all of them receiving $167 apiece. I should like to know the amount, or about the amount, that is appropriated for the maintenance of pupils at these various schools among the white folks at $167 per pupil.

Mr. DAWES. Take $750,000, in the first paragraph, from $1,348,015, and the remainder will be what is expended otherwise here. Five hundred and ninety-eight thousand and fifteen dollars is expended in support of the schools mentioned in this bill.

Mr. BLAIR. That is what I supposed, making about $600,000 that is distributed among these various schools for the support, culture, and discipline of the Indian pupils, at $167 each.

Mr. DAWES. The schools are not all in the East.

Mr. BLAIR. Schools among the white people, then?

Mr. DAWES. Those that are separate from the reservations.

Mr. BLAIR. Separate from the body of the Indian population?

Mr. DAWES. There are some on the border, like the school at Chilocco, which are not properly among the Indians, but are very near them.

Mr. BLAIR. I think I understand the Senator. On the fifty-second page of the bill I find the following item:

> For support and education of one hundred and twenty Indian pupils at the school at Hampton, Va., $20,040.

That is to support one hundred and twenty Indian pupils. Then there is a second appropriation provided—an appropriation of $1,000 for transporting Indian children to and from that school. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks that is a prudent, economical, and judicious use of public money in the education of these one hundred and twenty Indian pupils?

Mr. DAWES. I am sorry that the Senator has picked up his old quarrel with General Armstrong on his educational bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I have not, but I shall do so if the Senator desires.

Mr. DAWES. I do not desire it. I want to get this bill through and that is what made me regret that the Senator had brought up the question.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator does not want to have the bill passed until it has been discussed and understood and appreciated upon its merits?

Mr. DAWES. The Hampton Institute is established and has been maintained by the Presbyterian body of Christians.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not ask the Senator to make a speech. If he is not inclined to answer my question definitely I will just keep the floor, and he can reply to me when I get through.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator wish to have the floor?

Mr. BLAIR. No; I should like to have the Senator's opinion as to whether he thinks that these appropriations at this rate are judiciously made.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator must take my opinion as I give it. I am not going to have the Senator prescribe the way I give it.

Mr. BLAIR. Let me ask the Senator the question, then——

Mr. DAWES. I thought the Senator had asked it already.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator whether in his opinion it is an economical and judicious method of expending public money in the matter of education to appropriate at the rate of $167 per pupil for the support of these children at Hampton, Lawrence, Carlisle, and these various other schools, where, it seems, some $600,000 of the public money is thus appropriated?

Before the Senator answers the question, as he seems to think, with a prescience that I commend him for, because his imagination outruns the fact, that I am picking up some old quarrel, I wish to say that I am not doing that at all. I have no old quarrel with anybody about this matter. But the discussion this afternoon has set me thinking about some of these things, and as the Senator from Massachusetts has studied these subjects a great while, and I presume for quite a number of Congresses has not been called upon to explain much about these appropriations, he will pardon me for asking him a few questions, and I do not know that I am likely to be deterred from doing it by the intimation that I have some old quarrel with somebody, when I have no old quarrel with anybody, and no new one either, for that matter.

These children are being educated at $167 apiece. There is great doubt or at least a question between the two eminent members of the Appropriations Committee who bring us this bill whether the child, after being thus educated, is made the better or made the worse, whether he is made a good Indian, whether he is fitted for civilized life, or simply is unfitted for savage life and thus practically ruined by his education.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that the institutions which educate these boys and get these enormous amounts of money for so doing follow them to their wilderness retreats again, and that according to the record which they make up for them 90 per cent. of them amount to something. The Senator from Kansas says that they become the worst kind of barbarians again, destroyed by the process of educated uselessness, neither fit for the savage nor the civilized life, and that their education is a dead loss. I do not know how that may be. The Senator from Kansas is very likely to know something about it, for he lives in that vicinity. But I assume, for my instincts and feelings are in that direction, that the Senator from Massachusetts is right, and that the Indian educated at Hampton and at Carlisle is improved by the process, and that he carries some good influence back to the people from whom he came.

However, the Senate will observe that here is annually expended, aside from transportation, $167 for each one of these pupils. At Hampton, for instance, which strikes my eye, the appropriation for this purpose to educate 120 Indian pupils is $20,040. The pupil is brought here; he is taken into this institution; he is boarded; he is clothed; and he is educated, and that is the amount of the cost. If there was a school among the Indians the same sort of instruction could be given, I venture to say, by a not larger number than two teachers. The plant once existing, that is to say, the school once established among the Indians, two teachers could very well take care of these 120 pupils. Vast numbers of the common schools of the country are filled with more than that number to each teacher.

I am asking for information; but it seemed to me that $1,000 or $1,500 given to a teacher on the spot would enable two teachers to impart as much instruction as is given by the process which is here pursued, the figure of which I do not wonder at when I see twenty or thirty institutions thriving under it, sure of their support and maintenance from the funds of the Government, when they would bankrupt themselves as private institutions, depending upon the ordinary sources that such private institutions have to depend upon for their support.

I say that in this way it has seemed to me that the money of the Government has been expended in the most uneconomical manner that could be imagined, and I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to answer the question I have propounded. I do not know but that there may be views of it by which it may be made to appear that what two teachers could do for $3,000, or $5,000 at the most, is economically performed under this system at $21,000 or $22,000, but I do not see how it can be so, and I ask the Senator to explain it.

Before he does that, since he has alluded to the supposed quarrel, to which I should not have alluded, I will ask him upon what basis it is that an institution like the one at Hampton, the head of which says that the imparting of education from any extraneous source demoralizes the people—that they must educate themselves—I ask him upon what principle it is that that is a rule which should apply to the negro or any individual or family or community which is found in our own immediate civilization and should not apply to the Indian himself? Why should he not be called upon to educate himself and to starve and remain a barbarian until he does it?

But, Mr. President, that is an argument the absurdity of which hardly needs a question to expose it. If I had a quarrel it would be that an eminent educator, himself a preacher of charity, coming here in this very bill asking charity in order that his institution may exist and may do good, should ever have propounded a theory of the description to which allusion has been made. That is no quarrel of mine. It is for the man who advances the absurdity to get along with it, and account for it theoretically as well as to account for his own contrary conduct.

Now I will ask the Senator if he considers this system of educating these Indian children a judicious and economical one, and if so, why?

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I do not consider that the system under which Indian education is carried on is the best possible. It is a very imperfect system. It is improving, I think, every day. It is enlarging its scope; it is increasing its efficiency; it is producing better results every day, and is growing, more and more answering the great end for which it was inaugurated. The system is but ten years old. It was begun with an appropriation of $20,000; it now covers an appropriation in this bill of $1,300,000. It has various phases. It has the day school upon the reservation, where simply a teacher is hired for $500 or $600 and attends to the school as well as he may. That is the teacher whom the Senator declared, with the aid of another one, could do what General Armstrong is doing with $20,000. He thinks he could accomplish all that with $2,000. General Armstrong takes the scholar and supports him; he keeps him day and night, and clothes him.

Mr. BLAIR. Will not the Senator answer me whether it would not be more judicious to support this Indian child at home, where we are already supporting his whole tribe?

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator not let me answer him in my hobbling way as well as I can? I can not do it any better, and the moment when I am getting along as well as I can with these interrogatories of my learned friend, he gets up and complains, and asks, "Will you not answer better?"

Mr. BLAIR. Oh, no, Mr. President——

Mr. DAWES. I am doing as well as I know how. I want to say to the Senator that there are a great many kinds of these schools. It is necessary that there should be a great many kinds of them, because there are a great many things to be taught a savage who does not know anything, and there are a great many ways that you have got to go to work to teach him, and some of them cost a good deal more than others. A day-school is a good thing in some places and it is not good for anything in another place. Take a day-school among the Comanches and it would not be better than having a school of blue-jays. Then there is the boarding-school on the reservation. That is an excellent thing in some places and does wonderfully good work. Then there is the training-school, the purpose of which is to teach a savage Indian from the bottom clear up, to teach him how to walk, to teach him how to do everything in the world, just as my friend was taught when he was a little boy. Now, that costs a good deal more. You must have machine-shops, you must have tools, and you must have a great many things that you do not have in any of the schools to which the Senator alludes, what he calls a common school, with a school-marm. You can not teach Indian children how to make shoes with a school-marm in a log school-house, or how to make tin ware, or how to make harness, or how to make clothes, merely with a school-marm at $600 a year in a little school-house, such as he and I went to school in when we were boys. That costs a good deal more.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator wants to know whether I think it is economical. It is pretty expensive, there is no doubt about that, and the results are not all that we could desire; but they are something. They are more every year than they were the year before; and the number of Indians who are learning to take care of themselves is increasing wonderfully on all the reservations. Indian wars have ceased; they have become impossible. Indian reservations, I have already said, are going by the board; something else is taking their place. This is pretty expensive; it requires a good deal of patience, not only with the Indians, but with some white men too. It is quite as difficult to get along with the outside adverse influences as it is to get along with the Indians themselves.

I can not tell exactly in dollars and cents whether it would be as cheap to let the Indian go by the board as to educate him and expend this money in trying to make something of him. I undertake to say, however, that it would not only be a reproach to this nation that would sooner or later exact a penalty from it, after having robbed the Indian for two centuries, stripped him, hunted him, cheated him, murdered him, burned him in his wigwam, to have turned him out and let him become a vagabond and a beggar in the country, it would not only be a disgrace and a dishonor that would ultimately be paid for dearly, but it would be a most dangerous thing in those communities in which it would be the misfortune for such a body of people to undertake to roam, for they would roam and plunder.

I am not stopping, sir, to try to figure out whether it would cost six cents and a quarter more to teach one of these Indians at Hampton than to teach him somewhere else. I am for the best results, and the results at Hampton, at Carlisle, at Chilocco, and at Lawrence are results that are not to be measured by dollars and cents. One hundred and twenty pupils at Hampton, developed into self-supporting citizens of the United States for $20,000, are worth more to this Union than so many vagabonds, and they are worth more than they cost.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator evades the question by implication. I asked him whether as compared with the appropriation of this money for like schools in the like way on the spot, the appropriation was a judicious and an economical one.

Mr. DAWES. Did I not answer the Senator? I tried to do so. I will just say there are two or three plans, two or three ways of doing this. One is the theory and the plan upon which General Armstrong goes, to educate these Indians and send them back among their people to work out on the reservations the renovation and regeneration of their people. The other is the plan that Captain Pratt goes on, to educate and develop them into men and turn them out into the community to be absorbed. Another plan is the day-school, and another is the boarding-school. As to which is the best, there is a variety of opinion. Some think one is best and some another.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] gets up here, and from his observation and his information tells you that the very day-school you are pleading for is utterly worthless and ought to be abolished entirely. Now, I do not think so. I think every one of these schools, with different degrees of merit and different results, is useful. Everything that a white man does that is commendable brought in among these Indians, and in all the ways you can contrive, bringing them in contact with the right side of civilization at as many points as you can, is useful. Put railroads through everywhere; put white men's homes among them; let them be object-lessons. Everything of that kind has its influence for good. You can not tell whether a day-school is better than a family of white people living among them. In some places it would be better; in other places it would not be so good. It depends very much on the susceptibility of the Indian community in which they are to this kind of influence or that kind of influence.

For me to get up here and say that I can demonstrate that one kind of school is better than another kind of school among these savages of sixty or seventy different tribes, every one of them having a different and distinct characteristic of life, of habit, and of personality, to attempt to measure them all by one particular rule, is an absurdity.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, it seems that after all it is a question that the Senator can not answer, and in his inability to do it I must concur, because he has demonstrated it by a somewhat prolonged effort to answer. If the confession had been made in the beginning it would have saved something of time. The Senator pursues throughout his effort to answer what he admits in the end to be unanswerable, a somewhat sneering style of comment which I observe at the same time that I will not, I think, mention it.

I did not suppose that it was necessary to bring an Indian to Carlisle or to Hampton to teach him how to walk and to run. I had the impression that the Indian race had developed a tolerable degree of agility without the assistance of civilized training under General Armstrong or Captain Pratt.

My inquiry was directed to a principle which when properly carried out would bring every Indian child across the continent and educate him along the shores of the Atlantic, and bring the Alaskan child to the same points and give him his education, and then send him back to that doubtful future status, whether of improvement or of the destruction of his good qualities even as a savage, which the Senator from Kansas has depicted. I say that a policy which at such an extraordinary expense leads to such absurdities in conduct and doubtful results, it seems to me, is properly one in regard to which question should be raised on this floor.

I can see myself how in order to give these Indians industrial training, as it is called, it may be well to bring some of them here to the Atlantic Slope, where they can come in contact with and learn to handle machinery, giving them industrial training and at the same time giving them education in the way of reading and writing, and I expect that they do not want much if anything more. These are processes to which the Indian child must be subjected like the white child, and the question whether it shall be done here, 3,000 miles from the place where his future is to be spent, or whether it shall be done on the spot, in the community where he was born, and to the improvement of which his education is to be dedicated, and whether it can be done there at a less expense than is now being incurred in the method that is being pursued, is one that those who have the guardianship of the public money might, it seems to me, well inquire into.

If the Indian children who are being educated in these Eastern schools are to go back and to act as instructors themselves, as teachers themselves, the limited number who are brought here may well be educated, it seems to me, even at a much higher expense, if it can be done with greater rapidity; and in the absence of the other system, the system of local development, undoubtedly it is better at any degree of expense to make the effort to do the work in the way it is being done in these Eastern schools. But I insist upon it that it is worthy of consideration on the part of the committee that every year comes in here and takes $8,000,000 and lays it out upon the Indians, when the most of it is laid out upon them in a way which is infinitely less creditable to our good sense and to our civilization than this pittance of it which is expended upon the schools, that is, in their support in a condition of idleness.

I say that when we lay out upon the 250,000 Indian men, women, and children (not more than 50,000 children in the whole of them) the amount of money which we have undertaken here in several Congresses to appropriate by the year for the period of only eight years' time to educate our own flesh and blood, as I expressed it a little while ago, I think it is time to inquire somewhat into this system of economy and this system of sentimentalism, when Senators get up here and say themselves, as was done in the earlier part of the debate, that it is questionable whether the Indian is to be saved at all, when it is admitted that war has destroyed him and peace has done just about the same, and after being educated to a certain extent, as in the case of the civilized tribes, as I call them, they are now retrograding and being gradually destroyed by ourselves and by our rum and the bad influences we bring to bear upon them. I say, Mr. President, when this is the ultimate result of the system of expenditure which has been going on from the beginning down to the present time and we are neglecting our own people, it is time to stop and inquire whether we are human ourselves exactly, to inquire something about charity beginning at home, something about justice beginning at home.

I think the committee may well consider, and the Senate may well consider, and the country may well consider whether it is judicious in the condition of the public funds when we can not educate our own children, that we should peddle our money out down here at Hampton and these other schools at $167 a head to Indian children, when they can get along at home and be educated at an expenditure of $1 where we now pay ten.

There is another point to which I should like to call the attention of the Senate, and I do it with deference. I should like to know how these various schools are supported. Who manages them? I see it stated in the papers, and great complaint made, that the Catholic Church has an undue influence in the administration of the money that is appropriated to the Indian schools. I should like to know about that. The Protestant denominations are raising this inquiry. I do not care so much about it myself, if it only educates the children and educates them economically and judiciously, but I should like to know about these different schools, what religious influences there are that get this money, and how it is that these appropriations are obtained from year to year, whether they are obtained, as is charged, by ingenuity and misdirection, or indirection, and for the support and for the benefit of particular ecclesiastical institutions, or whether it is otherwise; because it is a libel if it be otherwise. I think the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs ought to vindicate the Catholic Church if it is unjustly accused.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 17 of the amendment I move to strike out the word "such" where it first occurs and insert the word "like;" in line 18 to strike out the word "the," after the word "of," and insert the word "such;" and to strike out the word "the" where it last occurs in the line and insert "then," and then to strike out the words "of such schools;" so as to read:

And any other person connected with schools wholly supported by the Government, and with like approval make such rules and regulations for the conduct of such schools as in his judgment their good may require.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 8, to strike out all after the word "schools," in line 5, as follows:

That it shall be the duty of the superintendent of Indian schools to visit, from time to time, and as often as the nature of his duties will permit, the schools where Indians are taught, in whole or in part, by appropriations from the United States Treasury, and, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to report annually to Congress the condition and progress of said schools: what, in his judgment are the defects, if any, in any of them in system, in administration, or in means for the most effective advancement of the children in them toward civilization and self-support; and what changes are needed to remedy such defects as may exist. It shall be the duty of said superintendent, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to employ and discharge superintendents, teachers, and any other person connected with such schools, and to make such rules and regulations for the conduct of the schools as in his judgment the good of such schools may require. He shall embody in detail his doings under this section, with the reasons for his action in each case, in his annual report to Congress. The said superintendent shall be allowed and paid a salary of $4,000 per annum, and, in addition thereto, his actual and necessary traveling expenses incurred while in the discharge of the duties prescribed by this act, such expenses to be allowed and paid on vouchers approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be detailed from the employés of his Department such assistants, and shall furnish such facilities, as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, line 18, after the word "requisition," to insert "or requisitions;" after the word "made," at the end of the same line, to insert "by the proper authorities of the Choctaw Nation;" in line 20, before the word "Nation," to strike out "the Choctaw" and insert "said;" in the same line, after the word "such," to strike out "agent or other person" and insert "other person or persons;" in line 22, before the word "requisitions," to strike out "the requisition or" and insert "said;" in the same line, after the word "therefore," to strike out "made by the proper authorities of the said Choctaw Nation, as required by," and insert "in accordance with;" and in line 29, after the word "available," to insert "and to be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States arising under article 12 of said treaty;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That for payment to the Choctaw Nation, $2,858,798.62, the said sum being the amount of the judgment rendered in favor of said nation, by the Court of Claims, on the 15th day of December, A. D. 1886, on a mandate issued by the Supreme Court, at the October term of said court, together with such further sum as may be necessary to pay the interest on said judgment, at 5 per cent. per annum, from the date of the presentation of the transcript of said judgment to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment, as provided in section 1090 of the Revised Statutes, to the date of this act. The appropriation hereby made shall be a permanent and continuing appropriation, not subject to lapse, or to be covered into the Treasury; and said sum, together with the interest thereon, shall be paid from time to time, and in such sums as requisition, or requisitions, therefor shall be made, by the proper authorities of the Choctaw Nation, to the national treasurer of said nation, or to such other person of persons as shall be named in said requisitions therefor, in accordance with article 12 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, concluded June 22, 1855: Provided, That no interest shall be paid on this appropriation after the passage of this act, but the amount herein appropriated to be immediately available, and to be in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States arising under article 12 of said treaty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent to add a section in the nature of legislation, which is subject to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it reported by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. DAWES. No, it is not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section:

Until otherwise provided by law all that portion of what is known as the Blackfeet Indian reservation in Montana Territory, lying west of the one hundred and eighth meridian, ceded to the United States under an agreement with the several bands of Indians occupying the same, which said agreement was ratified by act of Congress approved May 1, 1888, is hereby attached to and made a part of the county of Choteau, in said Territory, and, until otherwise provided by law, all that portion of said reservation ceded under said grant and lying east of the one hundred and eighth meridian, Montana, is hereby attached to and made part of the county of Dawson, in said Territory. The laws of the Territory of Montana now in force in the counties of Dawson and Choteau shall extend over and be in force in the portions of territory added to said counties respectively.

Mr. DAWES. The need of this legislation is this: By a recent act of Congress ratifying the agreement made with the Indians of that large reservation, the Piegans, Blackfeet, and Bloods, a very large tract of country in Montana, about 20,000 square miles, has been opened to settlement and people are rushing in there in great crowds; but there was no provision in that bill by which the laws of Montana were extended over that territory, so that the processes of the county government which prevail in that Territory do not apply to that large tract of country. The taxes to be assessed for the ensuing year must be assessed by county officers, but there is nobody to assess taxes upon the property in this large area of country. The Legislature does not meet till next January, and it happens that all the cattlemen in all the region round about have gathered all their cattle on this territory to escape taxation. There is no method of enforcing law, and unless a bill should be got through in some such way as this it will be a whole year before there can be any government of that kind there. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will permit the amendment to be attached to this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposing general legislation—is there objection to its reception? [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not desire to make objection, but I desire the Senator to answer my last question.

Mr. DAWES. Let this go on.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator desires me to answer his question. I will take occasion to do so before the bill passes.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 38, section 1, after the provision for the Navajo Indians, after line 910:

The sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the settlers who, in good faith, made settlement in township 29 north, ranges 14, 15, and 16 west, New Mexico principal meridian, in the Territory of New Mexico, prior to May 1, 1885, for their improvements and for damages sustained by reason of the inclusion of said townships within the Navajo reservation (executive order of April 24, 1886), and such settlers may make their homestead, pre-emption, and timber-culture entries as if they had never made settlement within said townships.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. In order that this may be understood by the committee of conference, I desire to submit some letters which recite the facts of the case and show why these people ought to be paid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be received and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. As well as a petition from one of the settlers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will also be printed.

The papers are as follows:

FARMINGTON, N. MEX., October 31, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Yours of September 24 is before me, and I herewith proceed to make as "calm and temperate" statement of "facts" as possible. As I have not the dates before me, I shall be obliged to relate the incidents without them. I shall go no further back than to the time that President Arthur, by Executive order, threw open for settlement all that portion south of the San Juan River in township 29, north of ranges 14, 15, and 16 west of principal meridian of New Mexico, being all in the Territory of New Mexico. This being a desirable portion of country, possessing a most charming climate and adjacent to thriving settlements of Americans, it was speedily settled upon by the home seekers. These lands having been surveyed were located under the several land laws, homesteads, pre-emptions, etc. The settlers, being possessed of the usual Western enterprise, taking hold and going to work with a vim, gave flattering promise of thrift.

It soon became apparent that the Navajo Indians were inclined to remain among the settlers with their numerous herds and flocks, which kept the country bare of grass. This, of course, the settlers could not tolerate, as they had stock of their own that must be fed. Consequently they petitioned General Bradley, Commanding the District of New Mexico, to send troops to remove the Indians, which he previously promised would be done when necessary. After a long and annoying delay one William Parsons, from Fort Defiance, N. Mex., arrived in our midst and announced himself as an agent of the United States Government to "investigate" our "troubles with the Indians," appointing a time and place that the settlers and Indians should meet him to make known their grievances. Accordingly the settlers went to the place designated, to find a large tent apparently full of Indians.

We were informed that the agent was inside, but there "was no room for white men." We lingered on the outside until his honor emerged. He said that he was glad to meet us, but was awful hungry, therefore he must request us to meet him at the Ohio school-house at 7 o'clock p. m., some 2½ miles away, on the opposite side of the river. Promptly we were on hand to find himself and his friends (the Navajos) in waiting. He installed himself chairman and proceeded to announce the object of the meeting, requesting us to make our statements. But every word and act of the man told us but too plainly that his verdict was rendered; that it was useless for us to speak; nevertheless we proceeded to state our case. This meeting was on April 5, 1886, just in the midst of planting time. The settlers were busily engaged in plowing and planting, and the Indians wished to do so likewise, as they had been accustomed to do in years past upon the same lands, some of them that the settler was occupying.

There was a conflict of interest, the Indian thinking he had a right, and the settler knowing that he had acquired rights of the United States Government. Neither party wished to yield. Mr. Parsons advised the settlers to suspend operations for a time, as he considered dangerous, as the Indian was greatly opposed to the white man making any further improvements, especially wire fences, as they were liable to injure Indian horses. Nevertheless the white man went on with his improvements, plowing, planting, building irrigating ditches, setting out fruit trees, etc., the Indian frequently encroaching with his stock, cutting down fences, etc. It seems a wonder that there was no blood shed. Mr. Parsons told the Indians and us that the Government would adjust matters.

On April 24 the President issued an order returning all the disputed country to the Navajo Indian reservation, which reached us some days latar. The news came to the writer while he was engaged setting out fruit trees. I had several hundred trees, grape-vines, etc., which have since proven a total loss on account of the Government interference. The next day after the President's order came every Indian seemed to know of it, and they gave us orders to vacate at once, they supposing that the land all belonged to them, which indeed, the President's order seemed to indicate, for that document totally ignored the presence of settlers on those lands. The settlers knew that they had rights there which they did not propose to relinquish without a struggle. Accordingly they sent a deputation to call on Mr. S. A. Marshall (an assistant agent residing at Farmington, N. M.,) and request his immediate presence among the Indians to explain matters to them, to inform them that the lands were not all theirs. This he attended to promptly, but the Indians insisted on being allowed to plant on the lands owned by the whites. Mr. Marshall seemed on the point of yielding to their entreaties, but the settlers stoutly protested that if they were to have tenants they would have them of their own choosing.

The Indians were finally ordered to desist from planting, with the assurance that they would soon get the lands and probably the crops also. In the meantime the soldiers were ordered to come to the rescue (but we were never fully satisfied of whom, the Indians or settlers), but they were of no consequence either way, for they were stationed several miles away and on the opposite side of the river.

Time dragged wearily on, the Indians frequently trespassing with their stock, committing numerous acts to annoy the settlers. At times it would seem that a conflict was inevitable, yet wonderful to relate there was no one hurt.

On June 17 Mr. Edwin S. Bruce arrived among us, announcing himself as an agent of the Government, sent for the purpose of "ascertaining the value of our improvements, in order that the Government might be able to know what to pay us." Against this we felt to revolt as we had not hired to work for the Government. However, we submitted to the listing of our improvements in many instances far below what we knew them to have actually cost us, for be it remembered that some of us had moved long distances to get here, and had labored under great disadvantages, which, of course, Mr. Bruce could not take into account. It was evident that the settlers could realize little or nothing from their labors by remaining here on account of the presence of the Indians, therefore Mr. Bruce advised them to leave and go where they could make something, telling them that the Government would recognize their claims the same as though they had remained.

On this assurance several left. Mr. Bruce called a meeting for the Indians at which he told them to remain "quiet and orderly," that the lands would soon be theirs, crops and all. I should have stated that Mr. Bruce assessed the valuation of the growing crops with the anticipation that the Indians would get them. It was Mr. Bruce's opinion that "the Government would make a final and liberal settlement with the settlers, one they would be satisfied with, within three months from that date, June 19, 1886. Matters moved on a little more quietly for a while, yet there was more or less annoyance to be endured all the while, for it is impossible for Indians and whites to dwell together in unity. Time passed on, but we kept our pen busy trying to learn what was our legal rights. I wrote to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, to the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but could get no reply. I also wrote to a Western Senator with regard to the Government acts in this affair, which elicited a reply in this wise:

* * * "If you have paid for your lands there is no power in the Government of the United States to deprive you of your lands to give to the Indians.

"If you have not made payments for your lands, but have made settlement according to law under the homestead law, the Government can not disturb you any more than if you had paid for the lands.

* * * "In this country neither the President nor Congress can take away any one's property to give to some one else.

"No special agent can dictate what you are to have for your property."

This letter seemed evident to us all the while, hence our reluctance to list our improvements to Mr. Bruce. The above letter as quoted served to make us feel much more secure, as from it it was evident that the Government must respect the rights of its citizens under the law.

The three months elapsed and no word from the Government. The Indians and settlers were alike impatient. All were anxious for a speedy settlement of this vexatious problem. No official would deign to reply to anything that might be written, till we became tired and disgusted. Finally, I concluded to write to the register of the United States land office at Santa Fé, as I knew he must answer me one way or the other. I informed him that I had complied with all the requirements of the law with regard to pre-emption filing number 1884, and wished to make final proof on the same. To my surprise he instructed me to send $7 to pay for advertising, and he would set the time for final proof. This I did, and he set November 26, but as the advertisement did not appear in the paper at an early enough date, the day for final proof was postponed till December 11, at which date I made final proof on north half southwest fourth, southeast fourth southwest fourth, section 17, township 29, range 14 west, containing 120 acres. At this I was somewhat puzzled, as a neighbor whose lands were adjoining my own was refused the privilege of making final proof.

No further developments until some time in April, I think it was, the Government, through the local land office, gave us each notice that our filings and entries were all held for cancellation by the Interior Department; but we were informed that we had sixty days for appeal to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, to show cause why our filings and entries should not be canceled.

These appeals were promptly made in a legal form before a notary public and forwarded to the honorable Secretary through the local land office. This is the last we have heard from them; the honorable Secretary seems to have entirely ignored them.

Some of the settlers still stuck to their homes, hoping that sooner or later the Government might be induced to relieve its citizens. They ventured to plant crops and fight the Indians off as best they could. This they succeeded in pretty well, till a new lot of soldiers came; also the Navajo agent, Mr. Patterson, made us a visit, since which time the Indians seem to think themselves licensed to commit all kinds of petty annoyances. They have since broken into houses while the owners were absent and rifled them of all they desired, a thing never indulged in until Mr. Patterson's visit. The people clung to their rights against all odds, trying to raise crops, etc., notwithstanding it seemed a very pandemonium.

Finally, on August 25, the Government sent Lieutenant Scott, Company I, Thirteenth United States Infantry, with the boys in blue, to remove the settlers from their homes, which he promptly did. In one instance he came to a house where the husband was absent, informed the lady of his business, hurriedly tumbled a few of the most necessary household effects into the big Government wagon, nailed up the doors and windows of the house, turned their crops over to custody of a "responsible Navajo!"—so he (the lieutenant) wrote to the commandant of this military district; ordered the women and children to get into the wagon and take a ride off the reservation. Said responsible Navajo appears to have invited all his friends to come and harvest said crops, which consisted, in part, of about an acre of melons, very fine and just beginning to ripen. In three days you could not have found a melon as large as your fist.

They harvested everything they could use and turned their stock upon the rest. Since the eviction there has nothing of importance occurred. The Indians and soldiers have full possession. The soldiers daily patrol the river front, we suppose to keep the settlers from returning, which some of them are liable to do as soon as the soldiers leave, unless the Government settles with them. The soldiers are depredating upon the improvements worse than the Indians ever did. They tore down cabins, and pole fences, cut up fence posts, etc., and used them for fuel.

These are the main facts as they come vividly to my memory, stated as dispassionately as possible under my present feelings. I hope you will be able to use them to advantage in behalf of justice and American liberty.

We shall impatiently await the action of Congress; if it fails to give relief, I suppose our only resource will then be the court.

The above narrative is divested of its thunder, which of course you will supply when necessary; but I trust, Senator, you will excuse a few comments by myself.

First. The President's order making our country an Indian reservation is ex post facto in its nature, seriously affecting former agreements between the Government and its citizens—in fact, totally annulling them; an act illy becoming the Chief Executive of a free nation.

Second. In sending a man here to assess the value of our improvements, the Government is guilty of a gross usurpation, assuming to dictate what we "shall have for" our "property," a violation of law, as per the Senator's letter.

Third. In sending the soldiery to remove the settlers the Government is guilty of a military despotism; of evicting its citizens from their own homes. An act more unjust, more unwarrantable than was ever perpetrated against the Irish tenant. The Irish tenant is evicted for non-payment of rents and by the English landlord. The American evictions are by the Government itself, of its own citizens, who are accused of violating no law, guilty of no offense. Evicted while attending to their own business; their homes given to other parties who possess many hundreds of acres of lands besides.

It is claimed by some that the executive order opening that country for settlement, taking it from the Indians, was an illegal act; let us grant it. But is not the Government responsible for the acts of its officials? "Principals are responsible for the acts of their agents." Should the unoffending settler suffer for the illegal acts of the Government?

It is claimed that it was a military necessity to move the settlers to prevent bloodshed. Which is the easier to remove, the settlers or the Indians?

I trust that you may have had the time and patience to read this rather lengthy letter, and that it may be of service in the cause of justice.

Believe me, I am most gratefully yours,

W. P. HENDRICKSON.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
Washington, D. C.

OHIO, N. MEX., December 21, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I herewith inclose a letter from honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs for your examination, with a few comments by myself. I will underscore with pencil the points I would most particularly notice.

First, the Commissioner says "it is deemed absolutely indispensable to the well-being of the Navajo," etc.

This as an error, whether intentional or otherwise. As was suggested at your office in Denver, the Government might do a far better thing for the Indians, and no injustice to its citizens, than to give them those lands, by sinking wells and erecting wind-mills to hoist water, as they have vast acres of the finest of grazing lands now practically worthless. We are told that it is "practically impossible" to "reach water outside of the narrow strip" mentioned. It is known that the Navajo herds and flocks aggregate many hundreds of thousands, hence the absurdity of the above assertion; besides it can be easily proven that they have on their reservation no less than "18,000 head of cattle wintering for other parties." Not one of the above-mentioned stock water at the river on said "narrow strip." As above stated, the Indians have much fine grazing lands practically useless from the absence of water; they also have much that is available outside the "narrow strip," else how could they winter all those cattle for other parties?

"Long occupied and cultivated those lands," etc. Prior to the settlement of those lands, under President Grant's administration, by the whites not a foot of land was cultivated by the Navajos on said "narrow strip;" not until it had been occupied by the white man, who dug irrigating ditches, built houses, etc., did the Indian want it. Indeed, he could not have cultivated it prior to that time, for he has not the engineering skill to construct irrigating ditches. So that the "long occupation" spoken of only reaches back to the time that President Hayes robbed the first white settlers of those same lands and gave them to the Navajos.

The Honorable Commissioner does not think that the "white settler acquired any rights to the soil!" Oh, for shame, that a man holding his high position should thus unblushingly assert! He well knows that the Government has received $1.25 per acre for no less than two entries (my own and Mr. Mat Ebert's), besides numerous filing fees, and yet we are told that we have "acquired no rights to the soil."

It is held by "high judicial authority" that no one has a right to intrude upon lands held or "possessed by others;" in short, that no man should be robbed that another might profit. Had this just policy been carried out from the beginning, President Hayes would never have dispossessed the first white settlers of their lands and improvements on said "narrow strip." As before stated, the only improvements ever made in the way of ditches, etc., were made by white men.

"Only three settlers removed," these the "only actual bona fide" possessors of claims, etc. Why was this? As I have stated in a former letter, Mr. Bruce, the then mouth-piece of Government, told the settlers that they had "better leave and go where they could make something;" that "when it come to a settlement their rights would be recognized by the Government the same as though they had remained on their claims." Mr. Bruce could see that the settler could do himself but little good by remaining, hampered as he was by the Indians; hence the advice. But the Commissioner would seem to insinuate that all save these three were "speculators," and consequently entitled to nothing.

"No improvements except here and there traces of old fences."

Simply because the improvements of the settlers have been destroyed in their absence. I had several hundred fruit trees and vines on my place that had been destroyed by the Indian herds; besides, I had cleared the heavy sage brush from about 20 acres at an expense of about $12 per acre. Not myself alone but many others have been at great expense making improvements that are scarcely discernible at this time.

The people that settled those lands were not "speculators," as insinuated, and if they have made small improvements, and those almost all destroyed, it is because of the unwise and unjust policy of the Government towards them. Had their rights been respected to-day there would have been many pleasant homes on the "narrow strip" instead of a few worthless Navajos, who are a menace to civilization and will always be a hinderance to their white neighbors just across the river.

We are told that "they are now in peaceable possession" of those lands, etc. Yes, peaceable, as long as they are allowed to have their own way. But a very few days after the settlers were removed from the reservation, the Navajos were over on the north side of the river with their stock, but I guess the soldiers ordered them back; but the soldiers are withdrawn now and the Navajo is liable to repeat the experiment. If he does, he is liable to get hurt, for the people are thoroughly incensed at what has already happened and are not inclined to submit to much more foolishness. As we are the under dog and not able to fight Uncle Sam, we would ask that we be not wholly robbed. This Government is amply able to remunerate us for our loss of time and opportunity to get other lands, also for all the improvements we have ever made on those lands even if nothing remains but "here and there a few traces of old fences." We think our rights to locate other lands under the several land laws ought to be restored also. Several of these dispossessed people are quite destitute, and they ought to be relieved as soon as possible. If Congress is to do anything I hope it will hurry up.

After examination please return the inclosed letter; it might be of service if we were obliged to enter suit against the Government for our rights.

Please, Senator, if you can find time to spare, drop us a line that we may know what to expect from the Government.

Very respectfully and fraternally yours,

W. P. HENDRICKSON.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
Washington, D. C.

AN OPEN LETTER.

FARMINGTON, N. MEX., June 25.

MY DEAR SIR: Your order adding to the Navajo Indian reservation those lands embraced in township 29 north, of ranges 14, 15, and 16 west of principal meridian of New Mexico, on the south side of the San Jan River, is, and has been from the reception of said order, working a grievous hardship to the American settlers upon those lands.

The order itself was a great surprise. First, because it apparently ignored the presence of any settlers upon those lands; and secondly, that the Government, through its Chief Magistrate, would essay to annul its contracts. The Government has virtually sold those lands to its citizens, has taken all the money demanded of them, and given its receipt for the same: how, then, it may be reasonably asked, can the Government deprive those parties of their homes without their consent, they having complied with the law by "continued occupation and improvement?" Can the Government justly violate faith with its loyal citizen tax-payers in favor of alien non-tax-payers?

The answer is self-evident to the mind of every lover of fairness. But it is argued that the Government has a right to condemn titles to property belonging to individuals and appropriate it to other uses when the public good demands it. It is difficult to see how the safety, honor, or prosperity of our great nation depends upon the robbing of a few of our hard-working citizens of their only homes—a small patch of 160 acres—and giving them to parties owning thousands of acres each, which is literally true of the Navajo Indians.

But it is said that the Government does not intend robbing those citizens. Let us see. It assumes the right to deprive these people of their homes without their consent, to say that they may have something or nothing as it wills. What is this but robbery? Is not the highwayman equally just? He takes what suits him and restores what he chooses, if anything. The Government sends out its land commissioner to assess the valuation of the improvements that those people have been able to make during the few short months that they have occupied, and to say that the Government would soon pay them for the same.

This is a gross absurdity. The value of those improvements in many instances is not a tithe of the expense incurred. To illustrate, a settler has been at the expense of moving hundreds, perhaps thousands, of miles to get to his home; he has purchased team and wagon, plows, harrows, hoes, etc., provisions for a year, seeds, in fact everything necessary for the first year's use on his new home. He has expended all his available means, but hopes by close economy and constant industry to be able to pull through.

Weary and dusty, Saturday night he pitches his tent upon the south bank of the beautiful San Juan River. With delight he "views the landscape o'er." 'Tis here he expects to reap a reward for his toilsome journey, to rear his young family, to beautify, to enrich the home of his choice. He spends the Sabbath in thanksgiving. Monday morning he meets one of his new neighbors, who tells him that the Government has given his home to its dusky pets, the Navajo Indians, but adds sarcastically that he will be allowed pay for his improvements!

Improvements! How absurd! How cruelly unjust! Not a dollar's worth can he show, though he has spent his all toward procuring and moving to what he fondly hoped to call home as long as he lived. Much that he has brought with him is now comparatively valueless to him. Can anything be more unjust than to turn him away empty? He has lost a settler's right. He has lost opportunities of locating in some other place; he has lost a year's time and a prospective crop. He has on hand that which cost his last dollar, now rendered worthless. Do you say that that man is not robbed? Shame on such a heartless, unprincipled Government!

If the Government has found that it made a mistake by offering inducements for its citizens to settle on those lands by taking their money for the same, as an honest individual it ought to have sought to have made amicable terms with them, and not to have robbed them upon the principle that might makes right, for there can be no other right.

Mr. President, I am informed upon reliable authority that you claim to have been ignorant of the presence of settlers upon those lands at the time you issued your order giving them to the Navajo Indians. It is hard for me to conceive how it is possible that our Chief Executive could be so illy posted, but through charity I prefer believing that, instead of believing that you would willingly, willfully rob the toiling few who have sought a place of repose, a home in the wilderness West. But, Mr. President, since the fiat has gone forth, I would ask you in behalf of those people, as an honorable guardian of the people's rights, to use your utmost influence that they be justly reimbursed, that they be enabled to move from here and procure as good places otherwheres, and that they be remunerated for at least a year's loss of time, for the year is lost to them. Thus you may be instrumental in wiping the foul blot from the brow of our fair country.

Very respectfully, yours,

W. P. HENDRICKSON.

To Hon. GROVER CLEVELAND,
President of the United States.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., June 28, 1886.

SIR: Your communication of May 10, 1886, requesting instruction with regard to the right of one A. C. Damon to open and conduct a trading establishment without license upon the Navajo reservation, is received.

In reply I have to say that Mr. Damon has no valid claim to the land in question, which he can maintain against the United States, and therefore no right to trade with the Indians.

By the fact of prior settlement he has rights which he can maintain against an outsider or subsequent settler, but not against the United States. You will advise Mr. Damon, according to the above instructions, that he will not be allowed to engage in the Indian trade upon the reservation under your jurisdiction.

J. D. C. ATKINS, Commissioner.

S. S. PATTERSON,
U. S. Indian Agent, Navajo Agency, New Mexico.

NAVAJO AGENCY, NEW MEXICO, May 10, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to state and make known that one A. C. Damon, residing on a tract of land within the reservation, about three-quarters of a mile south of this place, is about to open a traders' store upon his land for the purpose of selling goods to the Navajo Indians, and that he claims the right to establish such store and to sell goods there without a license, by reason of ownership and long-continued occupancy of this land before and after the extension of the reservation in which his land is situated.

I get the following statement from him respecting his occupancy and use of this land, which, as near as I can learn, is about correct, to wit:

Took possession and marked out 160 acres by monuments in May, 1874. A house 30 by 30, four rooms and a hall, built by Thomas V. Keams in 1870 and used as a trader's store up to the time Damon went upon the land, was then on it. He immediately fenced 20 acres and planted 10 acres. The remainder he used as pasture land, and erected another house 40 by 20, with an L 25 by 35, besides a stable, hen-house, and corral. Never took out any papers concerning title; the land is unsurveyed. Never homesteaded or pre-empted any other land. A continuous and unbroken residence and use since he first entered upon it, in May, 1874, as before mentioned. Not fully knowing what the practice of your office is in such cases, or whether such persons come within the law concerning license, I submit the foregoing statement of facts in the matter for your consideration and advice and ask for instructions.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. S. PATTERSON,
United States Indian Agent.

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

NAVAJO AGENCY, NEW MEXICO, July 5, 1886.

DEAR SIR: In the matter of the question of your right to trade on this reservation at your place without license, I have now to inform you that in response to my communication to the honorable Commissioner of May 10, 1886, I have received a letter of instructions saying that you will not be allowed to engage in such trade on the reservation, a copy of which letter is hereto annexed for your information. In pursuance of said letter of instructions, you are hereby notified that from the date of service of this notice on you, you will therefore desist from any further trading with the Indians within this reservation.

Very respectfully,

S. S. PATTERSON.
United States Indian Agent.

MR. A. C. DAMON.

Mr. TELLER. I submit, in connection with the letters that have gone in the RECORD, the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior in his last annual report in reference to the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator has a right to include whatever he thinks proper in the papers to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. I want the committee of conference to understand the case.

The following extract is from the report of Secretary Lamar for the year ending June 30, 1887:

NAVAJO TROUBLES ON THE SAN JUAN RIVER.

The presence of a few settlers, who had located immediately south of the San Juan River, in New Mexico, remaining there after the land had been again made a part of the Navajo reservation by Executive order of April 24, 1886, continued to cause some disquiet among the Indians in that locality. Their removal was suggested by the Indian Bureau, and repeatedly urged by the local military commander as a measure necessary for the preservation of good order. As inchoate rights of settlers had attached to the lands upon which they had located, the Department declined to sanction any proceedings for their removal until it was again strongly urged by Colonel Grierson as the only safe, proper, and effective measure by which peace could be permanently maintained and security given to life and property in that locality.

That officer recently reported that the settlers had been peaceably removed and the Navajoes quietly placed in possession of the lands occupied by them.

The settlers who in good faith located and made valuable improvements upon the lands, and who have been compelled for the public good to abandon them, should be fully indemnified for the losses thus sustained. To do this, however, it will be necessary for Congress to grant the authority and make a sufficient appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to offer an amendment on page 43. In line 1031 of section 1, after the word "farming," I move to add:

Also, to pay clerk of Otoe agency, Indian Territory, $1,200.

This amendment was submitted to the chairman of the committee by my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas].

Mr. PLUMB. I shall have to make the point of order on that for the reason that there is no place in this bill where clerks at reservations are provided for. There is no provision anywhere in the statutes for clerks, except a general provision authorizing the appointment of clerks by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior, and their payment out of such general fund as may be provided, and the Secretary of the Interior, or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under his direction, fixes the rate of payment of every single clerk in the Indian service. Now, if one is to be taken out and provided for specially, of course all the others will be treated in the same way, and thus we shall enter on a course of legislation which is entirely unusual, and which, according to the experience of the Department, I think is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. BERRY. I suppose the point of order is well taken, and I shall not insist on the amendment. I am so anxious to get an executive session that I shall not contest the point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TELLER. I offer an amendment, on page 51, section 1, line 1242, to strike out the word "five," and insert the word "eight." That will give the superintendent of the Grand Junction school $1,800 a year instead of $1,500. I beg to say here that it is impossible for a man to live in that expensive country on $1,500. I understand the committee do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the proposed amendment. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 1242, page 51, it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

For support of Indian pupils, at $175 per annum each, and for necessary repairs to buildings and fencing, and for pay of superintendent, at $1,800, at the Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo., etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I have a further amendment that I now offer to the same clause, to come in after the word "Interior," on line 1249:

That out of the appropriation hereby made there may be expended for the construction of a blacksmith shop, carpenter shop, sheds, stables, or outhouses, at such school, a sum not exceeding $1,500.

This does not increase the total.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer an amendment which is in one sense legislation, and I appeal to the committee to make no objection on a point of order. It is simply changing the place of sale of the lands in the Umatilla reservation from the land-office to the reservation. A bill for that purpose has already passed the Senate, but is not likely to be acted on in the other House.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

That section 2 of an act entitled "An act providing for allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Umatilla reservation, in the State of Oregon, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to provide that the lands described in said section shall be sold at the agency on said reservation, in Umatilla County, State of Oregon, instead of at the proper land-office of the United States, as provided in and by said section, such sales in all other respects to be made in the manner as prescribed in said act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is general legislation, and not in order under the rule. Is there objection to its being received? The Chair hears none. At what point in the bill shall it be inserted?

Mr. DAWES. As an additional section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be treated as an additional section, to be numbered by the Secretary.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the passage of the bill I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to answer the question which I propounded in reference to the denominational management of the schools.

Mr. DAWES. As I stated before, there is a great variety of schools. One large branch of Indian education is what is called "the contract schools," schools which are established out of this gross sum of $700,000 by private individuals or associations or organizations, religious or other, and the Interior Department makes contracts with those people to educate a certain number of scholars as they agree upon at a fixed price, which is $108 in some instances and $158 in others. There has been a good deal of solicitation to obtain these scholars, and of course among the different denominations those the most active and vigilant get the most of these contracts.

There has been a good deal of complaint among the denominations, and it has been charged upon the Indian Bureau that some religious denominations have got a predominant share of these schools. There are religious denominations who are very active in looking out for every opportunity. There is one religious denomination that has a bureau here in Washington, whose duty it is to look out for opportunities to make contracts for the education of Indian children, and it is very natural that under such circumstances such activity and such earnestness should result in that religious denomination getting a large share of these contract schools.

Out of that has grown a complaint that the Catholic organization has got a larger share of the contract schools for the education of Indians than any other denomination, and I think that is true, that they have a larger share. I attribute it in some degree to the reasons which I have assigned here; but, whatever may be the reasons, the truth is undeniable that the Catholic religious organization has a very large share of the contract schools for the education of the Indians on the reservations.

The bill was passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

CUSTOMS AND OTHER DEFICIENCIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives; which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 1, 1888.

Resolved, That the House concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9788) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, numbered as follows: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11. And concur in the twelfth amendment of the Senate to said bill with an amendment as follows:

After the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

"Fees of jurors: To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the fees of jurors, United States courts, on account of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, $50,000.

"Fees of witnesses: To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for fees of witnesses, United States courts, on account of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, $60,000.

"GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

"For current expenses of the Government Hospital for the Insane: For support, clothing, and treatment in the Government Hospital for the Insane of the insane from the Army and Navy, Marine Corps, and revenue-cutter service, persons charged with or convicted of crimes against the United States, inmates of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and of all persons who have become insane since their entry into the military or naval service of the United States and who are indigent, $11,713.07, being a deficiency on account o the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888."

"And in the first line of the title of the bill, strike out the words "an appropriation," and insert the word "appropriations."

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives. These amendments are three in number, one being for the fees of jurors for the current year, one for the fees of witnesses for the current year, and the other a small deficiency for the Insane Asylum in this District.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that motion is put I desire to present a table which I promised the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to present when this bill was pending before, and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD, showing the amount of receipts from fines, penalties, and forfeitures under the customs laws for the years beginning in 1871 and ending in 1887. I will say that this table verifies in a specific way the general statement that I made on the floor when the bill was heretofore under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed in the RECORD.

The paper is as follows:

Receipts and expenditures, customs service, and percentage of cost for the fiscal years 1871 to 1887, inclusive.

Fiscal year—	Total collections.	Cost of collection.	Percentage.
1871	$206,270,408.05	$6,560,672.61	.6318+
1872	216,370,286.77	6,960,189.81	.6321+
1873	188,089,522.70	7,079,743.42	.6376+
1874	163,103,833.69	7,319,487.88	.0448+
1875	157,162,722.35	7,028,796.77	.0447+
1876	148,071,984.61	6,702,230.34	.0452+
1877	130,956,493.07	6,501,037.57	.0496+
1878	130,170,680.20	5,887,443.69	.0452+
1879	137,250,047.70	5,485,343.87	.0414+
1880	186,522,054.60	6,023,253.53	.0322+
1881	198,159,676.02	6,383,288.10	.0323+
1882	220,410,730.25	6,506,359.26	.0295+
1883	214,706,496.93	6,591,224.51	.0306+
1884	195,067,489.76	6,709,485.76	.0344+
1885	181,471,949.34	6,494,847.29	.0357+
1886	192,905,023.44	6,427,612.67	.0333+
1887	217,286,893.13	6,870,804.29	.0316+

Receipts from miscellaneous sources, customs service, 1871 to 1887.

Fiscal year.	Fines, penalties, and forfeitures.	Fees of customs officers.	Storage, cartage, etc.	Total.
1871	$952,579.86	$575,887.69	$414,310.61	$1,952,778.16
1872	674,232.77	411,157.99	461,409.12	1,546,799.88
1873	1,169,515.38	321,212.61	475,741.37	1,966,469.36
1874	651,271.76	276,017.50	465,417.73	1,392,706.99
1875	228,870.23	677,617.68	434,882.85	1,341,370.76
1876	183,797.86	570,812.55	455,533.53	1,210,143.94
1877	146,413.21	511,780.15	386,519.48	1,044,712.84
1878	130,997.15	551,338.81	364,528.40	1,046,864.36
1879	163,513.06	566,414.44	370,944.16	1,100,871.66
1880	123,786.28	645,047.47	379,966.41	1,148,800.16
1881	150,433.99	668,914.44	406,166.43	1,225,514.86
1882	105,644.80	849,551.43	388,151.77	1,343,348.00
1883	134,590.74	896,027.08	405,618.52	1,436,236.34
1884	78,496.90	572,328.79	423,839.77	1,074,665.46
1885	142,759.52	578,345.11	459,663.54	1,180,768.17
1886	128,843.58	462,457.48	423,482.52	1,014,783.58
1887	160,205.41	446,121.29	446,711.16	1,053,037.86
Total	5,325,952.50	9,591,032.51	7,162,887.37	22,079,872.38

Mr. ALLISON. Prior to the passage of the act of August 5, 1882 (22 Statutes, 256), which requires that the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause all unexpended balances of the permanent and indefinite appropriations for collecting the revenue from customs which shall have remained upon the books of the Treasury for two fiscal years to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury, the appropriation for "Expenses of collecting the revenue from customs" was a continuous one, and any balance thereof remaining at the end of a fiscal year could be used to meet the expenses incurred in the year following.

Since the fiscal year 1882 only the permanent annual sum of $5,500,000 and such miscellaneous customs receipts as are received within each fiscal year can be used to meet the expenses of such year.

The balances carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of the act of 1882 were:

Fiscal year—
1883	$723,340.24
1884	293,752.93
1885	362,467.08
1887	89,893.60
Total	1,469,453.85

In addition to these balances, $2,000,000 were carried to the surplus fund by Secretary Sherman in the fiscal year 1880.

I believe this covers all the points suggested.

I will also say that while the amendments now presented by the House for deficiencies for fees of jurors and witnesses in the United States courts seem large, and are large compared with the expenses of other years, I am satisfied that they are necessary and should be agreed to.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were concurred in.

CONFINEMENT OF INEBRIATES IN GOVERNMENT INSANE HOSPITAL.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 537, Calendar No. 1409. I propose simply to ask a recommitment of the bill with instructions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill (S. 537) to provide for the confinement of inebriates in the Government Hospital for the Insane is before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 537) to provide for the confinement of inebriates in the Government Hospital for the Insane be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions to inquire and report whether the same, if enacted, will or not be injurious to the said hospital, and further as to the expediency of confining and treating inebriates in hospitals for the insane.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF OFFICERS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. DAWES presented the following report; which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4920) for the protection of the officials of the United States in the Indian Territory, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

H. L. DAWES,
F. B. STOCKBRIDGE,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JNO. H. ROGERS,
JOHN S. HENDERSON,
WM. E. FULLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House having receded, no action of the Senate is necessary.

PURCHASE OF PROPERTY AT WEST POINT.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, that a letter of the Secretary of War and certain documents be printed for the use of the Senate. These documents relate to the purchase of a certain tract of land immediately adjoining the Government property at West Point. There are some maps accompanying this communication which it is not necessary to print, and I hope the Secretary will inform the Printer that the maps need not be published.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can give the necessary instructions to the printing clerk. The order to print will be entered.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 4, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate June 1, 1888.

GENERAL OF THE ARMY.

Lieut. Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, to be General of the Army, under the provisions of an act of Congress approved June 1, 1888.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate June 1, 1888.

GENERAL OF THE ARMY.

Lieut. Gen. Philip H. Sheridan, to be General of the Army.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 1, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the reading of the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 1, 1888.

SIR: Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House to-day.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

To Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution of appropriation for expenses of international exchanges for the fiscal year of 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TREASURY DIVISION OF LOANS AND CURRENCY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an amended estimate of an appropriation for the clerical force of the division of loans and currency for the fiscal year 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior of appropriation to supply deficiency for expenses of the Government Hospital for the Insane for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

STATE, WAR, AND NAVY BUILDING.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the final report upon the construction of the State, War, and Navy Department building; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House letters from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copies of the findings of fact in the following cases, and they were severally referred to the Committee on War Claims:

H. A. Bell, executor, etc., against the United States.
William R. Kearney against the United States.
Sarah E. A. Smith against the United States.
Milton J. Durham, administrator, etc., against the United States.

CLAIMS DISMISSED BY COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the opinion of the court dismissing the case of Lucy E. Dowdy, executrix, against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the order dismissing the case of W. A. Galloway against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CANDLER, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BARNES, for eight days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BACON, indefinitely, on account of going to West Point as member of the Board of Visitors.

BRIDGE ACROSS POTEAU RIVER, NEAR FORT SMITH, ARK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a bill (S. 1948) to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River, in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Ark.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a House bill similar to that Senate bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the House take up the Senate bill and consider it this morning. I suggest that the reading of the bill be dispensed with, as it conforms to the established precedents for the construction of bridges.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I think any bill that is going to be passed by this House ought at least to be read. I do not object at all to the bill, but I ask that it be read.

The bill was read in part.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I understand from the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] that substantially this bill has been read to the House in the form of a House bill, and I therefore withdraw my request for the reading.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not mean to say that the bill has been read twice in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] that this Senate bill be considered at this time?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I move the previous question on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The House bill for the same purpose (H. R. 7031) was laid on the table.

GENERAL OF THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a bill (S. 2210) to revive the grade of General in the United States Army.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be now taken up. I have been instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to make this request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from New York can attain his object on Monday next by a motion to suspend the rules, under an individual recognition by the Speaker. The only danger in that course is that, unfortunately, General Sheridan may not live until that time.

Mr. STEELE. I ask that the bill lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

Mr. SPINOLA. I make the same request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

LAURA E. MADDOX.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a bill (S. 2201) for the relief of Laura E. Maddox, widow and executrix, and Robert Morrison, executor of Joseph H. Maddox, deceased; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BUILDING, DENVER, COLO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House joint resolution (S. R. 79) permitting the public building authorized by act of Congress approved May 8, 1882, at Denver, Colo., to be located not less than 16 feet from any other building, instead of 40 feet, as provided in said act; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WEAVER. I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, and ask that it be now considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. WEAVER. What is the reason of that? I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill and consider it at this time.

Mr. RANDALL. What bill is it?

Mr. WEAVER. A public-building bill appropriating only $40,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, if we enter upon public-building bills we shall never get through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. WEAVER. Debate is not in order, but I want to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. We have entered upon this kind of business for other gentlemen in this House.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I have not—not in the presence of an appropriation bill.

Mr. WEAVER. Oh, the appropriation bill will not suffer. That will pass anyhow.

Mr. BOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. BOWDEN. I am sure the gentleman does not object to this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I am quite sure that I do. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOWDEN. I do not think you will object if you examine it.

Mr. WEAVER. Oh, he would not have objected to my bill if he had examined it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

ESTIMATES FOR CERTAIN NEW LIGHT-HOUSES AND FOG-SIGNALS.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL the Committee on Appropriations was discharged from the further consideration of House Executive Documents Nos. 328, 329, 330, and 332, submitting estimate of lights and fog-signals at Stuart Island, Washington Territory, Point Buchon, California, Patos Island, Washington Territory, and Point Arguello, California; and they were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

DANIEL W. PERKINS.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8846) for the relief of Daniel W. Perkins; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JURIES IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (S. 64) to authorize the juries of the United States circuit and district courts to be used interchangeably and to provide for drawing talesmen; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF HENRY H. SIBLEY.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 518) for the relief of the legal personal representatives of Henry H. Sibley, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that a House bill now on the Calendar, precisely similar to the Senate bill just reported, be laid on the table and that this bill be substituted for it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request can not be made during this call.

Mr. McCULLOGH. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] in regard to the nature of the report just made.

Mr. TAULBEE. We have adopted and filed with this bill the report already made on the House bill, accompanied with the views of the minority of the committee on that bill.

Mr. McCULLOGH. That is satisfactory.

CAROLINE T. COCKLE.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 736) for the relief of Caroline T. Cockle; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OWNERS, ETC., OF BRITISH BARK CHANCE.

Mr. BOWDEN, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 1026) for the relief of the owners, officers, and crew of the British bark Chance; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 116) to incorporate the American Trust Company of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GRADE OF GENERAL, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask consent that Senate bill No. 2210 be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request can not be made during this call.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. NEWTON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2121) authorizing the construction of a public building at Burlington, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PEORIA, ILL.

Mr. NEWTON also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2546) to appropriate $12,000 for the completion of the public building at Peoria, Ill., and increasing the limit of the cost of said building; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WINONA, MINN.

Mr. NEWTON also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2475) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Winona, Minn.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS K. HOUSE.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 9865) granting a pension to Francis K. House; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FRANK W. TUBBESING.

Mr. GALLINGER also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 9885) granting a pension to Frank W. Tubbesing; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GRADE OF GENERAL, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of Confederate soldiers, living and dead, I ask unanimous consent to put on its passage the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time the bill which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2210) to revive the grade of General in the United States Army.

Be it enacted, etc., That the grade of Lieutenant-General of the Army is hereby discontinued and is merged in the grade of General of the Army of the United States, which grade shall continue during the lifetime of the present Lieutenant-General of the Army, after which such grade shall also cease; and the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, a General of the Army of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the pay and allowances of the General be the same as heretofore allowed for that grade.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has just been read?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

Mr. STEELE. Let it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection that order will be made.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WHITE, of New York, rising to a question of privilege, said: Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the following telegraphic dispatch, which was sent from Washington on May 22, and which appeared in the New York Times on the following day.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Deacon" S. V. WHITE, of New York, has not had very much to say in the House of Representatives since he found it advisable to explain certain statements about his mixing of stock speculation and statesmanship, but he evidently is willing to be talked about again. Some of his colleagues are talking about him now. Their special theme is a little joint resolution introduced by the Deacon yesterday, which is regarded as proof that he possesses the necessary "cheek" to be a successful broker. Mr. WHITE's resolution in effect authorizes the President to declare war against the Venezuelan Government, if necessary, to collect indemnity for certain damages suffered by the Venezuelan Steam Transportation Company when some of their vessels were seized by Venezuelan belligerents in 1871.

Mr. WHITE is quite familiar with the history and standing of the various claims against Venezuela, for Mr. WHITE has a part interest in some of those claims. Secretary of State Bayard regards some of these claims as of such character as to warrant him in declining to pay on them the money deposited for that purpose by Venezuela until further investigation. Mr. WHITE is so anxious to see the claims paid that he has appeared as his own counsel in the United States Supreme Court in an effort to obtain a mandamus to compel the Secretary to distribute the funds in his possession. The Deacon is also credited with some knowledge of an attempt recently made to establish a precedent for the payment of 6 per cent. interest on claims against the Government. The authority of Congress to declare war upon Venezuela would probably be regarded by Deacon WHITE as an excellent whip with which to drive that government into consenting to pay all claims presented by Americans without a too critical examination into their merits.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I certainly should deprecate consuming the time of this House in the mere refutation of false, scurrilous, personal attacks in the public press.

It is unfortunately true that every man of affairs in this country, if he attempts to achieve success in his undertakings, will arouse somewhere a cur to bark at his heels; and experience has shown that it is generally the part of wisdom to let such curs bark till they become weary rather than waste time and muscle in clubbing them to their kennels, and such has been my course in the main for many years in a somewhat busy life.

But when a Representative in the American Congress is accused in a daily newspaper, printed in the city which has been his business home for well-nigh a quarter of a century, of attempting to involve the country which he represents in a war with a sister Republic, and of pressing a suit in respect to the diplomatic relations of his Government with such Republic in the highest tribunal in the land for the purposes of private pecuniary profit, the honor of the American Congress as well as the personal honor of the Representative assailed demands that he should turn aside from the contemptuous silence, which is ordinarily the most dignified rebuke, and expose the malignant mendacity of the author of the falsehood. [Applause.] Let this be my apology for consuming a very few moments of your time.

The article read by the Clerk starts out with the assertion that I "found it advisable" at one time "to explain certain statements about my mixing of stock speculation with statesmanship." You, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, are my witnesses of the falsity of that statement. I made no explanation of that charge whatever. I found a ridiculous lie afloat, and I stamped on it in your presence with the contempt which its absurdity demanded, and from the time that I took my heel off it upon this floor,

Imperial Cæsar, dead and turned to clay, was not more dead than was this senseless canard. [Laughter and applause.]

But to the New York Times a dead lie, under the relations which that paper bore to me, was much better than no lie at all, and the mangled fragments of this wreck were carefully laid aside for future use.

There was without doubt much sadness in the office of the New York Times about that first lie. It was of the particular style of merchandise which they wanted on their shelves. It had been a secret pride in that office that, though they might be slow in news, they were smart in lying. [Laughter.]

And here was this juicy and toothsome falsehood, which, with better luck, they might have rolled under their tongue as a sweet morsel for days before it was contradicted, and in an evil hour they had mistaken it for news, and "got on to it," as usual, twenty-four hours after their more enterprising neighbors. [Laughter.] Evidently they were chastened and saddened, but determined upon more vigilance in the future; and so this "funeral baked meat" is used as a relish to whet the appetite for a more malevolent lie. [Renewed laughter.]

And now I address myself to the subject-matter of the communication which the Clerk has just read. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, you know it is not true that you are or have been talking about me and the joint resolution in regard to Venezuela. You and each of you have heard nothing about it, and have said nothing about it. It is also not true that I have a dollar's interest, direct or collateral, as principal or an attorney, in any claim of any nature against Venezuela, and, so far as I am aware, no constituent of mine has any such claim. The statement that I ever brought an action of mandamus or any other action against Mr. Bayard or any other human being, in respect to any claim against Venezuela, or that had respect to any contention about Venezuela, in any form whatever, is a lie; it is an unmistakable, palpable lie telegraphed from yonder press gallery, referring to an imaginary cause in the Supreme Court of the United States, whose archives are within a hundred paces of where the slander was penned; and those archives will prove, upon the most casual inquiry, the falsity of the fabrication. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, possibly I have said all that I am called on to say in regard to this matter, but I shall crave your indulgence a minute longer.

The Times in this article lays great and contemptuous stress upon my business as a stock-broker.

Mr. Speaker, there is not a man on this floor who will accuse me of ever "talking shop," either here or elsewhere. There was never a time when I so far lacked discrimination as not to know that it made no difference whether a man in public life had been a farmer or mechanic, a preacher or lawyer; that he did not stand in this hall upon any certificate of past achievement, but was rated here according to his ability and his fidelity in the discharge of his public trusts.

And so if any man on this floor knows anything of my past business life he knows it from outside information, and not from any remark of mine made here or elsewhere.

But before dismissing the New York Times I propose to embalm one of the editors of that sheet, who has for over four years inspired the course of the paper towards me, and to do this it is made necessary to recall a single personal incident in my past life.

This article which the Clerk has just read gives me my usual soubriquet of "deacon." The most genial and kindly friends I have on this floor often address me as "deacon." Some of you may think, when you behold my "orderly walk and conversation," that the title was given me from my official church relation, or because I behave like a "deacon." But candor compels me to admit, modestly, that these things are not true, and that however illogical it may seem I was brevetted deacon for success in battle upon the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, which battle was waged to settle a dispute over the appropriate market price of Lackawanna. [Laughter.]

The engagement took place on March 1, 1884. As is always the case in a contest of that kind, there were more camp followers than there were soldiers; and prominent among the camp followers was one of the editors of the New York Times.

He was one of those serviceable fellows whom you each met within twenty-four hours after your nominatian for Congress, who could do you so much good in the doubtful precincts, and whose services were at your command, if you would send out 10,000 papers at 10 cents a piece.

I did not need him and he was arrayed, through his broker, on the other side. It was a day of very marked activity among bears, and a day when those who asked for terms earliest, fared best. The Times editor was dilatory that morning, and before 3 o'clock I convinced him, through his broker, that my property which he had squandered by selling short the day before at 127 "regular" was cheap that afternoon at 137 cash. [Great laughter.] To use the language of the irreverent, the Times editor "got left" that day, and he has been trying to "get even" ever since, and the weakling in the press gallery who sent that dispatch was acting under general instructions from headquarters when he telegraphed the lie.

Let me give you proof of the personal malice which poisons this dispatch.

This Venezuela joint resolution, in the identical words which I used, was introduced into the Senate on May 16 (page 4366 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD) by the distinguished Senator from New York, Mr. EVARTS, formerly Secretary of State. This was five days before I introduced the same resolution in this House. Now, which horn of the dilemma will the Times take—that it had not enterprise enough to find that Mr. EVARTS had introduced the same resolution or that it did not gratify any personal malice to state the fact in respect to that distinguished Senator?

Again, in the matter of the amendment offered by me to the urgent deficiency bill to pay 6 per cent. interest from March 4, 1887, to the date of the passage of that bill, because the creditors had lost that interest through the neglect of the Forty-ninth Congress; the same amendment, in the exact words, was afterwards introduced in the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, Mr. SHERMAN. Was the suppression of that fact the result of ignorance as to public affairs, or had the Times no personal venom to inject in its relations with that Senator?

One word on the cowardice of these malignant misrepresentations, and I am done. This is no question of a manly statement of fact and fair criticism of a public servant; such statement and criticism I invite and commend; but this fabrication is a sample merely, with perhaps a higher percentage of truth than the average statements of the Times, with which they have commented upon my private affairs and my public acts for the last four years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the world unites in its execration of a coward, but in the roll-call of cowardice the most execrable devil that answers to his name is the newspaper man who, armed with a printing press, uses it to gratify a personal spite, by scattering world-wide, false statements against a citizen who has no equal means either of contradiction or of retaliation. And such a case is the case at bar. [Prolonged applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the House adjourned on yesterday evening it was divided on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to lay on the table the appeal made by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] to make a report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SPINOLA. I wish to report back the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, referred to that committee this morning, in regard to the rank of General of the United States Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send the bill to the desk.

Mr. SPINOLA. I have sent to the committee-room for the bill; it will be here in a moment.

Mr. RANDALL. Pending that, I move to dispense with private business for the entire day.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 140, noes 8.

Mr. BUTLER. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This motion requires a vote of two-thirds.

Mr. BUTLER (one of the tellers). I withdraw the demand for a quorum.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

GRADE OF GENERAL IN THE ARMY.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2210) to revive the grade of General in the United States Army.

Mr. SPINOLA. I am instructed by the committee to report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the report being now made?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlemen from Texas objects to making the report.

Mr. KILGORE. No; I do not object to making the report from the committee. I object to present consideration.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman will withdraw objection to the bill. Let it be considered now. General Sheridan ought to be given that rank, and I hope the bill will pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again submit the request of the gentleman from New York for unanimous consent to make the report from the committee at this time.

Mr. OATES. I renew the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report can only be made by unanimous consent at this time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again state that on yesterday evening, at the time of adjournment, the House was dividing on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair taken by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS]. The yeas and nays had been demanded, which demand was subsequently withdrawn. Thereupon the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] demanded a division, and the House was dividing at the time.

The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to lay the appeal on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 112, noes 47.

Mr. MASON, Mr. PETERS, and others. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that a quorum has not voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. PETERS were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 111, noes 6.

Mr. MASON. No quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. To save time I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I think we can save time upon this matter if the gentlemen on the other side of the House will consent to take up the bill for the relief of General Sheridan.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent to take up that bill for consideration at this time.

Mr. MORSE. You have already placed yourselves on the record.

Mr. RANDALL. And this side of the House has shown its disposition to take up and pass the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Is there objection to the request I have made?

Mr. MILLS. The yeas and nays have been demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the Chair please state the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to lay on the table the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 9, not voting 185; as follows:

YEAS—130.

Abbott,	Dibble,	Landes,	Rogers,
Allen, Miss.	Dockery,	Lane,	Rowland,
Anderson, Ill.	Dunn,	Lanham,	Sayers,
Bankhead,	Elliott,	Lawler,	Seney,
Barry,	Enloe,	Lee,	Shaw,
Biggs,	Ermentrout,	Long,	Shively,
Blanchard,	Fisher,	Lynch,	Smith,
Bland,	Foran,	Macdonald,	Sowden,
Bliss,	Ford,	Mahoney,	Spinola,
Blount,	Forney,	Maish,	Springer,
Breckinridge, Ark.	French,	Mansur,	Stahlnecker,
Breckinridge, Ky.	Gay,	Martin,	Stewart, Tex.
Bryce,	Glass,	McAdoo,	Stewart, Ga.
Buckalew,	Grimes,	McClammy,	Stockdale,
Burnes,	Hall,	McCreary,	Stone, Ky.
Burnett,	Hare,	McShane,	Stone, Mo.
Bynum,	Hatch,	Mills,	Taulbee,
Campbell, P., N. Y.	Hayes,	Moore,	Thompson, Cal.
Cannon,	Heard,	Morgan,	Tillman,
Carlton,	Hemphill,	Morse,	Tracey,
Caruth,	Henderson, N. C.	Neal,	Turner, Ga.
Catchings,	Herbert,	Newton,	Vance,
Chipman,	Holman,	Oates,	Walker,
Clardy,	Hopkins, Va.	O'Neall, Ind.	Washington,
Clements,	Howard,	Outhwaite,	Weaver,
Cobb,	Hudd,	Peel,	Wheeler,
Cothran,	Hutton,	Penington,	Whitthorne,
Cowles,	Johnston, N. C.	Perry,	Wilkins,
Cox,	Jones,	Randall,	Wilkinson,
Culberson,	Kerr,	Rayner,	Wilson, Minn.
Dargan,	Kilgore,	Rice,	Wilson, W. Va.
Davidson, Ala.	Laffoon,	Richardson,
Davidson, Fla.	Lagan,	Robertson,

NAYS—9.

Anderson, Iowa	Hermann,	Lehlbach,	McKenna,
Baker, Ill.	Hiestand,	Lind,	Romeis.
Brewer,

NOT VOTING—185.

Adams,	Dalzell,	Kennedy,	Rowell,
Allen, Mass.	Darlington,	Ketcham,	Russell, Conn.
Allen, Mich.	Davenport,	La Follette,	Russell, Mass.
Anderson, Miss.	Davis,	Laidlaw,	Rusk,
Anderson, Kans.	De Lano,	Laird,	Ryan,
Arnold,	Dingley,	Latham,	Sawyer,
Atkinson,	Dorsey,	Lodge,	Scott,
Bacon,	Dougherty,	Lyman,	Scull,
Baker, N. Y.	Dunham,	Maffett,	Seymour,
Barnes,	Farquhar,	Mason,	Sherman,
Bayne,	Felton,	Matson,	Simmons,
Belden,	Finley,	McComas,	Snyder,
Belmont,	Fitch,	McCormick,	Spooner,
Bingham,	Flood,	McCullogh,	Steele,
Boothman,	Fuller,	McKinley,	Stephenson,
Bound,	Funston,	McKinney,	Stewart, Vt.
Boutelle,	Gaines,	McMillin,	Struble,
Bowden,	Gallinger,	McRae,	Symes,
Bowen,	Gear,	Merriman,	Tarsney,
Brower,	Gest,	Milliken,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Browne, T. H. B., Va.	Gibson,	Moffitt,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio
Browne, Ind.	Glover,	Montgomery,	Thomas, Ky.
Brown, Ohio	Goff,	Morrill,	Thomas, Ill.
Brown, J. R., Va.	Granger,	Morrow,	Thomas, Wis.
Brumm,	Greenman,	Nelson,	Thompson, Ohio
Buchanan,	Grosvenor,	Nichols,	Townshend,
Bunnell,	Grout,	Norwood,	Turner, Kans.
Burrows,	Guenther,	Nutting,	Vandever,
Butler,	Harmer,	O'Donnell,	Wade,
Butterworth,	Haugen,	O'Ferrall,	Warner,
Campbell, Ohio	Hayden,	O'Neill, Pa.	Weber,
Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Henderson, Iowa	O'Neill, Mo.	West,
Candler,	Henderson, Ill.	Osborne,	White, Ind.
Caswell,	Hires,	Owen,	White, N. Y.
Cheadle,	Hitt,	Parker,	Whiting, Mich.
Clark.	Hogg,	Patton,	Whiting, Mass.
Cockran,	Holmes,	Payson,	Wickham,
Cogswell,	Hooker,	Perkins,	Wilber,
Collins,	Hopkins, Ill.	Peters,	Williams,
Compton,	Hopkins, N. Y.	Phelan,	Wise,
Conger,	Houk,	Phelps,	Woodburn,
Cooper,	Hovey,	Pidcock,	Yardley,
Crain,	Hunter,	Plumb,	Yoder,
Crisp,	Jackson,	Post,	Yost.
Crouse,	Johnston, Ind.	Pugsley,
Cummings,	Kean,	Reed,
Cutcheon,	Kelley,	Rockwell,

When the name of Mr. MASON was called,

Mr. MASON said: I rise for information. I desire to know the question before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That has been stated more than once.

But, with the consent of the House, the Chair will again state, the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to lay on the table the appeal of the gentleman from Kansas from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MASON. I desire, Mr. Speaker—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MASON. Can I not ask to be excused from voting? I will state that I do not propose to vote on this or any other measure while General Sheridan is alive until this bill giving him the rank and title of General of the Army has passed. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The Clerk continued and completed calling the roll.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. MASON and others objected.

The following members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. SAWYER.
Mr. BELMONT with Mr. CLARK.
Mr. LATHAM with Mr. LAIRD.
Mr. BACON with Mr. HAYDEN.
Mr. GIBSON with Mr. PUGSLEY.
Mr. RUSK with Mr. SEYMOUR.
Mr. MERRIMAN with Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut.
Mr. SNYDER with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.
Mr. SIMMONS with Mr. DUNHAM.
Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL with Mr. LAIDLAW.
Mr. WHITING, of Michigan, with Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan.
Mr. DOUGHERTY with Mr. PETERS.
Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.
Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL.
Mr. GLOVER with Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin.
Mr. NORWOOD with Mr. COOPER.
Mr. GREENMAN with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.
Mr. WHITE, of New York, with Mr. COCKRAN.

Mr. CANDLER was announced as paired with Mr. CUTCHEON until June 8.

The following pairs were also announced:

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. T. H. B. BROWNE, of Virginia, on all questions in the House and in Committee of the Whole until further notice.

Mr. CUMMINGS with Mr. MCCORMICK, on all questions in the House and in Committee of the Whole until further notice.

Mr. MATSON with Mr. OWEN, until further notice, not to vote in the House or in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BARNES with Mr. BAKER, of New York, on all questions in the House and in Committee of the Whole until June 9.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. WEBER, on all questions in Committee of the Whole and in the House until further notice.

Mr. YODER with Mr. BOOTHMAN, on all questions in the House and in Committee of the Whole until further notice.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. ARNOLD, on this vote.
Mr. MONTGOMERY with Mr. BINGHAM, on this vote.
Mr. MCRAE with Mr. HOUK, on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. MASON. No quorum. I move there be a call of the House.

GENERAL OF THE ARMY.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for immediate consideration the bill of the Senate entitled "An act to revive the grade of General in the United States Army."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The last vote having disclosed the fact that there is no quorum, no business is in order until the presence of a quorum is ascertained.

Mr. RANDALL. The request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that a distinction is drawn in the rule between an aye-and-no vote and a vote taken viva voce, and the Chair is of opinion that the absence of a quorum having been disclosed by an aye-and-no vote, no other business is now in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I now move a call of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is right.

The question was taken on ordering a call of the House, and there were—ayes 177, noes 6.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have to attain his object, the Chair thinks, by moving to reconsider the vote by which the call of the House was ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then I make that motion.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I now ask unanimous consent to take up for immediate consideration the act to revive the grade of General in the United States Army. I do not know that it has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, but if so, I move to discharge that committee from the further consideration of the bill, and to put it upon its passage.

Mr. SPINOLA. It was referred to the committee this morning, and I have just tried to report it back again, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] that his request can not be entertained at this time. The House has just reconsidered the vote by which the call of the House was ordered, and the question now recurs on the motion for a call of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Which motion, with the consent of the House, I now withdraw.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion for a call of the House is withdrawn. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] asks unanimous consent to report back at this time from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (S. 2210), being an act to revive the grade of General in the United States Army, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] moves that the bill be now considered. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

Mr. FORD. Before that is done, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement, which will not occupy more than five seconds, to correct a misapprehension. [Cries on the Republican side of "No, no! Let us pass the bill."]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill; after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk again read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that he may report this bill from the Committee on Military Affairs at this time? The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] that the bill be considered at this time?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House that I am opposed to legislation of this character—— [Interruptions on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope gentlemen will allow the gentleman from Texas to make a statement.

Several MEMBERS (on the Republican side). Certainly.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not care whether they allow it or not. [Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this character of legislation—this hasty legislation on an important matter like this, piling up precedents which may in the future be quoted and may prove to be dangerous; but I say to the House that if they will concede to us a yea-and-nay vote upon the bill and will allow me to put upon record a brief statement from a Republican paper in relation to this question, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. MASON. All right.

Several MEMBERS (on the Republican side). There is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. KILGORE. On the condition I have stated I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, was recognized.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], who desires to make a statement.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I have no statement to make further than to send to the desk to be read an extract from the Indianapolis News of May 30, an independent Republican paper, which expresses my views upon this question. I ask that this article be read and printed in the RECORD.

The article was read, as follows:

The Senate did a silly thing in reviving the office of General for General Sheridan. The office was dead, and it ought to be allowed to remain so. It is to be hoped the House will refuse to concur. In Grant's case there was a difference. The office had been created for him. He left it when he became President. In his last days it was an anomaly that the great soldier of our war should be without any right to a military title at all, and so his old office was conferred upon him. He was retired at the same time, and thus by a national act his title was conferred upon him. Sheridan never has held the office. It is not in existence for him to be promoted to, but must be recreated specially for the occasion, and it is a performance sadly out of place—waiting all these years without ever thinking of doing it, and now rushing into his sick-chamber, perhaps to the side of his death-bed. It is poor manners, diseased sentiment, and title-worship, and decent Republicanism and common sense ought to put an end to it.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, in sending up this item to be read I have given full expression to my views on this question; and as I am now on record in opposition to this bill, and shall vote against it, I withdraw the other condition upon which I abandoned my objection, and will not insist on a vote by yeas and nays.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], who I understand desires to occupy two or three minutes.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to state that the paper from which the extract has just been read by the Clerk is not a Republican paper. It is an ably-edited independent evening paper.

In justice to the Committee on Military Affairs, I will say that it has taken no hasty action in this matter. A bill similar to this has been before us for several weeks, and we have been considering it. The only reason it has not been reported back favorably before this was the hope that we might have a unanimous report. There have been only two or three objections up to yesterday evening, when there was but one. That is all I desire to say. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of opposing this bill; I intend to support it. I simply wish to state the character and standing of the Indianapolis News, from which the Clerk has just read. True, it is an independent paper, but it is of Republican antecedents, and seldom supports a Democrat or a Democratic measure. It is an ardent supporter of General Harrison for the Presidency. It has at all times supported the national Republican ticket. At the same time it is thoroughly independent. No more independent, no more reliable, no more conscientious men edit any newspaper in the United States than those who edit the Indianapolis News. [Renewed cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I yield for a few minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I did intend to say a word or two in justification of the action of the Committee on Military Affairs, but as my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE], has explained that matter, I do not care to take up further time of the House.

Many MEMBERS. Now let us vote.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the House allow me a word? [Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, there were reasons why I might not have been willing for this bill to pass if General Sheridan had remained in the prime of a vigorous and robust manhood. I can appreciate, however, the feeling of gentlemen on all sides of the House who desire to do honor to a gallant soldier who won deserved glory during four years of such terrific warfare; but whatever feeling I might have had under other circumstances gave way when I understood the other day that General Sheridan stood in the presence of that enemy whom he had so dauntlessly faced through so many years; and if it can add anything to the comfort of the dying hours of that great soldier or take something from the sorrow of the wife whom he leaves, for the nation to tender this new crown to him, I am glad to have the opportunity to mingle my sympathy with that of all sides of this Chamber. [Loud applause.]

I now desire to give the opportunity for a more handsome tribute than anything I can say by yielding to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] whatever time he may desire.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to be here to-day to give my suffrage for this bill. Although indisposed, and although my place would be perhaps in my own room, I came here to-day to do honor to a man whom I have known, lo! these many years, in all the vicissitudes of his wonderful life. He was born in Central Ohio, near where I was born. He drove a cart for watering the streets in the town of Zanesville about the time I came back from school. I can recall with distinctness the Congressman who sent him to West Point, and all the various anecdotes connected with that remarkable county of Perry and the town of Somerset come back to me now.

This man was not merely a soldier, as my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has said, in our civil conflict of four years, but he was a born soldier from the beginning of his career at West Point—not merely in the Indian country, but everywhere. Whilst criticising the strategy of the great generals of Europe in the great battles that have occurred within our own time, he was conspicuous as a critic, observant as a general, and brought to the examination of the contests in other lands the experience acquired in the great struggle of our own.

Mr. Speaker, in the agony of his present great struggle, when, almost in articulo mortis, he is reaching out to the unseen world, I am proud to forego all other associations to give my heart and my best hope for the success of this vote, which, I trust, the members of this House may give as an entirety for the bill, so that there may appear no objection from any member on this floor representing any part of the American people to thus placing upon the roster as a general the first soldier of the Republic, the kind and genial gentleman, Philip H. Sheridan. [Loud applause.]

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to yield now to the venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] whatever time he may desire.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, the unmeaning title of "father of the House" has never received appreciation from me, though I believe I have borne it longer than any of my predecessors, till now, when it justifies me in rising to say, as I do most fervently, that I am proud of the family which this title regards me as looking upon as in some sense my own. [Applause.] And to convey the heartfelt gratitude of the Republican minority to the Democratic majority of the House for overcoming the obstructions which seemed to be impassable in the pathway of legislation which proposes to cheer the greatest soldier of the age, General Philip H. Sheridan, in the closing days of his illustrious life. [Great applause.]

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The terms of the agreement made with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE]——

Several MEMBERS. He does not insist upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas withdrew his demand. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The bill was passed.

[Renewed and long continued applause.]

Mr. OATES. I demand a division. [Cries of "Don't do that, Oates," on the Democratic side.] Very well, I do not wish to embarrass any gentleman by demanding a division, but I wish it to be known that I voted in the negative.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to lay upon the table the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

The motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. BLOUNT's motion to lay the appeal of Mr. PETERS upon the table, and it was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move the previous question on the adoption of the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations on the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the amendments will be voted on in gross.

The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations were agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RANDALL demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLLECTING REVENUES FROM CUSTOMS.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask, by unanimous consent, to call up the report of the Committee on Appropriations on the bill (H. R. 9788) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and to now consider the same.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SAYERS. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. BURNES, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report to accompany the bill H. R. 9788:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9788) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the Senate thereto, having considered the same, beg leave to report, as follows:

They recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

They recommend concurrence in the amendment numbered 12 with an amendment as follows: After the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Expenses of United States courts:

"Fees of jurors: To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the fees of jurors of United States courts on account of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, $50,000.

"Fees of witnesses: To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for fees of witnesses, United States courts, on account of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, $60,000.

"Government Hospital for Insane:

"For current expenses of the Government Hospital for the Insane: For support, clothing, and treatment in the Government Hospital for the Insane of the insane from the Army and Navy, Marine Corps, and revenue-cutter service, of persons charged with or convicted of crimes against the United States, inmates of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and of all persons who have become insane since their entry into the military or naval service of the United States and who are indigent, $11,713.07, being a deficiency on account of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888."

And in the first line of the title of the bill strike out the words "an appropriation" and insert in lieu thereof the word "appropriations."

Mr. ADAMS. I would like to have the gentleman from Texas explain to the House just exactly what action has been taken by the Committee on Appropriations in reference to the changes made by the Senate amendments, especially as to witness fees.

Mr. SAYERS. The Senate struck out the provision in the bill which related to a change in the method of supporting the customs service, and also amended the bill by adding certain items of appropriation covering the expenditures of that body. It also amended the bill with one item relating to the House expenditures. The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence in the Senate amendments with the adoption of other items, which provide for the Department of Justice in the matter of jury and witness fees, and also for the support of the Hospital for the Insane during the remainder of the present fiscal year.

Mr. ADAMS. Allow me to have an extract read from a newspaper in reference to the point to which I would like to direct his attention.

The Clerk read as follows:

NO MONEY TO PAY WITNESSES.

CHICAGO, May 22.

A dispatch from Fort Smith, Ark., says: Owing to the absence of appropriations for the pay of witnesses the Federal court of this city has been obliged to close, and over four hundred witnesses were discharged yesterday without pay. Many of these came from points several hundred miles distant on the Indian Territory, and are in absolute poverty. Among the cases continued until the next term of the court are thirty-five murders, twenty-six larceny, forty illicit-whisky selling, and twenty-eight assault, besides over thirty other cases. The district judge and United States marshal have sent a telegram to the Attorney-General asking that authority be granted for the transfer of witnesses' vouchers, Comptroller Durham having recently decided that they are not transferable—Washington Post, May 23, 1888.

Mr. ADAMS. I will ask the gentleman from Texas, first, whether the Committee on Appropriations has had in view that deficiency in the recommendations they made, and, secondly, whether they have inserted or can insert any provision in the bill to meet the difficulty last mentioned in that extract, to wit, the lack of transferability of witness' certificates.

Mr. SAYERS. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, that one of the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations meets that very difficulty. In response to the second question, I will say to him that it would be a matter of new legislation, and, as such, incompetent under the rules of the House to be reported by the committee.

Mr. ADAMS. Would it not be possible for the committee to ask unanimous consent, and in the opinion of the gentleman would not that consent be granted if asked by the committee?

Mr. SAYERS. I can only state that it would involve a change of existing law; and as it is absolutely necessary that this appropriation shall go through immediately in order to be available during the coming week, I do not think it would be wise to incorporate such a provision on the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I will say in answer to my colleague that I think there would be objection, even if unanimous consent was asked and given, to the incorporation of the legislation to which he refers.

Mr. RANDALL. Permit me to say a few words in this connection. The Committee on Appropriations have recommended appropriations, which were made, of $600,000, against the Department's annual estimate of $500,000 for 1888, for the fees of jurors; and in regard to payment of witnesses, the committee recommended the full amount of the annual estimate, $550,000, which was appropriated, and has since given a supplemental sum of $300,000. That is to say, the appropriations have exceeded the estimates, and Congress has given, as far as I know, every dollar that has been asked by the Department.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, every dollar that has been estimated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the recommendations of the committee.

The amendments of the committee were adopted.

Mr. SAYERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF A VOTE.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to withdraw my vote from the roll recently taken on the appeal from the ruling of the Chair. I make this request because I am not quite clear in my conviction as to whether the ruling was accurate or not. I prefer, therefore, to withdraw the vote altogether.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to withdraw his vote, and if there be no objection that will be allowed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PROTECTION OF UNITED STATES OFFICIALS, INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send it up.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4920) for the protection of the officials of the United States in the Indian Territory, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

JOHN H. ROGERS,
JOHN S. HENDERSON,
WILLIAM E. FULLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. L. DAWES,
JAMES K. JONES,
F. B. STOCKBRIDGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Under the rule the managers on the part of the House submitted the following statement to accompany the report:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to bill (H. R. 4920) for the protection of the officials of the United States in the Indian Territory submit the following written statement:

The effect of the action recommended in the accompanying conference report, if ratified by the two Houses, will pass the bill as amended by the Senate.

JNO. H. ROGERS,
JOHN S. HENDERSON,
WM. E. FULLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, at this point it would be proper for me, I presume, to place on the record a statement exhibiting the lawlessness prevailing in that Territory, and the number of murders which have been committed in the last two years on the marshal's force of that district, which shows the necessity of this legislation. I will not ask to have it read, but simply print it in the RECORD.

It is as follows:

[Arkansas Gazette correspondence.]

FORT SMITH, SEBASTIAN COUNTY.

FORT SMITH, December 18, 1887.

It is the prevailing opinion out here on the border that the increase in lawlessness in the Indian Territory will induce Congress at its present session to open that county to settlement, or at least make an effort to do so. As it now is the Government is at an enormous expense in its endeavors to enforce the laws of that benighted county, and yet eight criminals out of ten are never brought to justice.

The present United States marshal for the western district of Arkansas has held the office since October 30, 1885, and during that time has had nine deputy marshals, two posses, and three guards murdered while in the discharge of their official duties, as follows:

Jack E. Richardson, murdered by Bill Pigeon, a Cherokee, who is still at large.

William Erwin, waylaid and murdered in the Choctaw Nation by Jake Spanlard and Frank Palmer for the purpose of rescuing a prisoner he had in charge. Both at large.

F. M. Sweeden, murdered in Choctaw Nation by unknown parties, who will probably never be known.

Sam Sickiller, murdered at Muskogee, Creek Nation, by Dick Vann and Alf Cunningham. The Government paid $500 for the arrest of the latter, but he broke down the jurisdiction of the court here and was turned over to the Creek Nation authorities, who allowed him to escape before trial, and he is still at large. Vann was killed a short time since by Deputy Marshal Jackson Ellis.

Capt. William Fields was murdered in the Creek Nation by Bill Cunius, who was captured and died in jail here before his trial.

Deputy Dan Maples was murdered at Tahlequah, the capital of the Cherokee Nation. Ned Christie, Charlie Bobtail, Bud Trainer, and John Parish are charged with this diabolical deed, and the three latter are in jail here, while Christie is at large.

Deputy John Carlton was murdered at Denison, Tex., by a lawless negro from the Territory, who is now in jail at Sherman.

Deputy Frank Dalton was murdered in the Cherokee Nation by Dave Smith, Will Towerly, and Lee Dixon. Dave Smith was killed by Deputy Cole at the same time he killed Dalton. Dixon was wounded by Cole and is now in jail here recovering. Towerly escaped and one week later killed Deputy Ed. Stokery, and was himself killed by his victim and the posse he had with him. The wife of Dixon was killed in the mêlée with Dalton, and Deputy Cole was wounded. Towerly acknowledged before he died that he and Smith had for some time been engaged in horse stealing. He was killed in his father's yard in the presence of his mother and sister. He was but nineteen years old.

Ben. Lupson, posse of Deputy Lawrence, was murdered by a citizen of the Territory, and being himself a citizen this court had no jurisdiction in the case, hence he has never been molested.

William Smith, posse, John Kelly and Mark Kuykendall, guards, were murdered in the Creek country by Seaborn Green, a young Indian, who was arrested, convicted, and hung for the crime.

Henry Miller, a guard, was murdered by Big Chewee, a Cherokee; but, as Miller was a citizen of the Cherokee Nation also, Chewee was turned over to that government, and a jury acquitted him.

Thus far, it will be seen that only one of the murderers of United States officers in the Indian Territory has been punished under the law, and that was Seaborn Green.

There is a standing reward by the Government of $500 each for the arrest of all murderers of deputy marshals, posse, or guards, who are still alive and at large, over whom this court has jurisdiction.

All the deputies murdered were good, honest, upright citizens.

This state of affairs will never cease so long as Congress allows the Indian country to remain as it is, and the killing of United States officers will continue with unabated vigor, while murder, rapine, and crimes of lesser magnitude will increase with the influx of outlaws of the States, who find a safe abiding-place among the Indians, where no one but United States officers can molest them.

A change must come, and the sooner Congress takes hold of it the better.

In this connection I desire also to correct what seems to have been, and I am sure was, a total misapprehension on the part of my friend from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], who is not here at present, as shown by the RECORD of May 3, with reference to the places where these offenses occurred, such as are embodied in the paper to which I have just referred. In the RECORD, in response to a remark, and a side remark from me, not intended for him, then occupying the floor, he said in substance that I had boasted on the floor of representing a district where this class of crimes, among others, had been committed more frequently than in any other district in the country. Upon calling his attention to it he kindly struck his remarks from the RECORD. It is right for me to say that only a small proportion of the territory spoken of as the "western district of Arkansas is in the State of Arkansas, and only a small proportion, perhaps one-third or less, of that which is in Arkansas is in my district; and finally, the Federal court has no jurisdiction whatever over crimes of this character committed in the State. I think I should be within the limits of the truth if I said that probably not 3 per cent. in number of the crimes tried at Fort Smith are committed in Arkansas, and that 3 per cent. are such as occur in all the States. They are committed in the Indian Territory, west of Arkansas, which was attached to that district by act of Congress, and are all tried at that point, where the United States court sits which has the jurisdiction, a general jurisdiction, because not within the limits of a State.

Of course my friend from Maryland was under a misapprehension, and as soon as he was so advised he struck the matter from the RECORD. But it is due to myself to say I never boasted of anything of that kind; on the contrary, I deplore the existence of crime anywhere, and if the gentleman had thought for a moment what the jurisdiction of the Federal courts was he would not have inadvertently fallen into the error. The effect of the Senate amendment to the House bill is to extend greater protection to the officials of that country, in this, that it confers jurisdiction on Federal courts to try parties for murder, assault with intent to kill, or assault and battery, or who shall resist process issued under authority of the United States courts. I concur entirely in the action of the Senate and now ask the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TARIFF.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering revenue measures. But pending that motion I wish to make a proposition to the gentlemen on the other side about limiting the time on the paragraph under consideration. When the committee rose the debate on that paragraph had lasted over four hours. I propose that debate on it shall close in twenty minutes, ten minutes being allowed to each side. I refer to the first paragraph, which has reference to the day on which the law shall come into operation.

Mr. ADAMS. Do you mean the first five lines of the bill?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I desire to make an inquiry, whether the limit proposed by the gentleman from Texas is to be applied to any amendments which may hereafter be offered to those five lines?

Mr. MILLS. My proposition is that as to those five lines debate after twenty minutes shall close upon all amendments.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Amendments now pending and those which may be offered?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I do not think we can accede to that.

Mr. MILLS. This does not exclude amendments, but only debate.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I understand that.

Mr. MILLS. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and pending that I move that all debate on the paragraph and the amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suggest that this paragraph is much more important, perhaps, than any other in the bill.

Mr. MILLS. It refers only to the date.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman refers to the paragraph of five lines which cover the proposition now pending to change the time when the law shall go into effect. It covers every schedule, and is of vastly greater importance than any other single paragraph in the bill.

Mr. MILLS. Gentlemen can have the same latitude in talking about the date when we get down to the consideration of lumber as they have had in talking about lumber when this amendment of date was under consideration yesterday.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suggest, if this debate is to have any effect or is to be regarded as at all serious, or having any object, the debating of a proposition fixing the time when the law should go into effect after the paragraph had been passed and the time fixed would be a waste of time.

Mr. REED. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas to make the time an hour.

Mr. MILLS. I will agree to half an hour.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I move to amend by striking out twenty minutes and inserting forty minutes.

Mr. REED. I will consent to that.

Mr. MILLS. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, and demand the previous question on my motion.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. MILLS, as modified, to limit debate to forty minutes, was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. MILLS, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue, was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenues.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3 strike out "1st day of July, 1888," and insert "2d day of January, 1889."

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto has been limited to forty minutes. The Chair will divide the time between those favorable to the proposition and those opposed to it.

[Mr. HOLMAN withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time for the purpose of replying to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] and not for the purpose of offering any formal amendment to this bill, which I hope to do at the proper time. It was charged upon this floor yesterday by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa that there is a "lumber trust" in this country. That I may give his exact language, I read from the RECORD of this day's issue, page 5096. Replying to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], the gentleman from Iowa says:

And, sir, by reason of their further combination with the transportation monopolies, no man can engage in the lumber business without the consent of the lumber trust and the transportation companies, which together constitute one of the most unconscionable trusts ever organized in this or any other country.

Mr. Chairman, coming as I do from a district whose chief industry is lumber, an industry that amounts to an annual product of more than $10,000,000, I feel it incumbent upon me to defend my constituents against this grave and criminal charge of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa. I deny in general and in particular that there exists in this country a "lumber trust" at all. I deny that it has ever existed anywhere in this country so far as the great lumbering industries are concerned; and the gentleman from Iowa, when interrogated by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], finally limited his charge to the redwood lumber of California. That was denied by the two members on this side of the House representing California. What is now left of the charge?

The gentleman tells us that an article was published in the North American Review in 1884, and that some lawyer in New York by the name of Cook had charged that there is a "lumber trust" in this country. Why, Mr. Chairman, this trust is a phantom. There are real trusts in this country to which the gentleman's eyes appear to be blinded; but this phantom trust appears to satisfy his purposes better, because he is not hampered by the facts of the case. [Laughter and applause.] In regard to this his imagination can have full scope, and he can picture this non-existing "lumber trust" in all its hideous deformity.

Mr. Chairman, I do not charge the gentleman from Iowa with willfully misstating facts. His credulity has been imposed upon by some designing free-trader. [Laughter.] Somebody has suspected that he was the same gentleman who some years ago believed that money could be made by the use of the printing press and plenty of paper. [Laughter.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, a trust in lumber in the United States is simply out of the question. More than 350,000,000 feet of pine lumber grow in the States represented by the party associates of the gentleman on the other side of this House; and I know there is far too much virtue in the States represented by them to ever permit any such iniquitous thing as a "lumber trust." Besides that, Mr. Chairman, the duty upon lumber is so low that it is not prohibitory; and this is proven by the fact that during the years 1886 and 1887 one-half of the entire lumber product of Canada found its market within the limits of the United States. Talk about a "trust" or a "combine," it would have to be made with Canada; it would have to extend to every part of these United States, including the great lumbering districts of the South and of the Pacific coast. The mere statement of the proposition carries its own refutation. [Applause.]

Mr. WEAVER obtained the floor.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole will rise informally that a report may be received from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore,

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the Committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; which were signed by the Speaker:

A bill (S. 2210) to revive the grade of General in the United States Army;

A bill (S. 1772) for the relief of John H. Marion;
A bill (S. 2123) to authorize the removal of an obstruction to the navigation of Broad Creek, in the State of Delaware;
A bill (H. R. 8560) to establish a department of labor; and
A bill (H. R. 6946) for the relief of Thomas Jordan.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 287) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 2986) to incorporate the American Historical Association; and Joint resolution (S. R. 8) providing for the appointment of a commission to select a site for a naval station on the Pacific coast.

The message further announced the passage of the following House bills without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 4735) for the relief of Douglass Chapman; and
A bill (H. R. 615) for the relief of James B. Mitchell.

The message further announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 5919) to extend the time for the completion of the bridge across Staten Island Sound, with amendments; and that the Senate had requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as such conferees on its part Mr. COKE, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. DOLPH.

The message further announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 7564) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Chattanooga, Tenn., with amendments; and that the Senate had requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on its part Mr. VEST, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. KENNA.

The message further announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 8623) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes, with amendment; and that the Senate had requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as such conferees on its part Mr. COKE, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. DOLPH.

The message further announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 7222) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish agricultural stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto;" and had requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as such conferees on its part Mr. PADDOCK, Mr. BROWN, and Mr. BLAIR.

TARIFF.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I am very much astonished to hear the gentleman deny the existence of a lumber trust in this country. That such a trust exists is known to the entire trade and by the whole reading public. It is a part of the current history of the present period. Its headquarters are in Chicago, and I send to the Clerk's desk to have read an extract from an article by Henry D. Lloyd, in the North American Review for June, 1884.

The Clerk read as follows:

Four years ago the Chicago Lumberman's Exchange adopted a resolution declaring it to be "dishonorable" for any dealer to make lower prices than those published by it for the control of prices in one of the greatest lumber markets of the world. Monthly reports are required by this exchange from dealers, so that accurate accounts may be kept of stock on hand in order to regulate prices. The price-lists of the exchange are revised and made "honest" at monthly banquets. In February, 1883, it was found that members who ostensibly adhered to the price-lists dipped into the dishonorable practice of competition on the sly by giving buyers greater than the usual discounts. This was then forbidden, and another pathway of competition closed.

The effect of this price-legislation was attested by the address of a dealer of Minneapolis at one of the price-list banquets of the exchange, who said that his firm, which made sales as far as Manitoba and Dakota, had never sold a foot for less than the published lists. A delegation of dealers from the Mississippi River district spoke feelingly of their labors "for harmony," and their willingness that Chicago should make prices. A secret meeting of lumbermen from all parts of the West was held in Chicago March 8, 1883, to discuss means for advancing prices, restricting production at least 35 per cent., and in general, in the language of one of them, putting themselves into a position like that of the coal producers of Pennsylvania, who by combination dictated the prices of coal throughout the whole country. In May, last year, the national association of lumber dealers met in Chicago. It represents over five hundred and fifty retail dealers in the West, and its principal purpose was to prevent wholesale dealers at Chicago, St. Louis, and other centers from retailing lumber to carpenters, farmers, and scalpers in the territory of the retailers.

There are too many sellers, and so any wholesaler who persists in competing in this way with local dealers is, when found guilty, named to all the retailers and punished by losing their trade. The mills of Puget Sound, which supply a large proportion of the lumber consumed in the Pacific States, formed a combination last year to regulate the production and sustain prices. It is said by the local newspapers that the mills which do not belong to the association are hired to stand idle, as there are too many mills, and the association finds it profitable to sustain prices at the cost of thousands of dollars paid out in this way. The lumber market of the Pacific coast is ruled by the California Lumber Exchange, and that is controlled by a few powerful firms. The prices of redwood are fixed by the Redwood Manufacturers' Association, and those of pine by the Pine Manufacturers' Association.

During the past year the retail dealers of San Francisco have had to sign contracts with these associations, binding themselves to buy only from members of the associations, to buy and sell only at prices fixed by them, to give time and discount only according to rule, and to keep accounts so that every item will be clear to the inspectors hired by the associations to look after the retailers. Finally the retailer binds himself, if he is "found guilty" of committing any of the forbidden sins, to pay a fine, which may amount to $1,000, to be divided among the faithful. The literature of business can show no more remarkable productions than the printed forms of these contracts. This system is in imitation of the "special contracts" with shippers which have been put in force by the Central Pacific Railroad.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MILLS. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, the article, an extract from which has just been read, is the famous article of Henry D. Lloyd on "The Lords of Industry," published in the North American Review in June, 1884, an article which has never yet been successfully assailed——

A MEMBER. Who is Mr. Lloyd?

Mr. WEAVER. He is an acknowledged authority on such subjects, of unquestioned information and veracity, and is one of the members of the eminent staff of that foremost of all periodicals, the North American Review.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEAVER. No; I have not the time.

Now, I personally know members of that organization living in Chicago, extensive lumber-dealers there, and can give the names if it be necessary. I can say further that a gentleman in my State, a gentleman of prominence as a man of wealth, a lumber dealer, who has also been prominent in the politics of the State, told me all about how the combinations were carried on and how he and his relative had made an enormous fortune, $150,000, if I remember correctly, in seven years of business. He stood in with two pools, the lumber pool and the railroad pool. Before the farmer could get the lumber to construct his humble home he was and is to-day compelled to pay tribute to both of these pools.

The gentleman's lack of knowledge concerning the lumber trust is only equaled by his lack of knowledge concerning finance. I am somewhat older than he perhaps. I saw this great Government, by an exercise of its sovereign power, create money and with it preserve the life of this nation. The gentleman twits me of believing that the Government can make money out of paper. It is not a matter of faith. I know it. The whole country knows it, and the Supreme Court have declared it lawful in war and constitutional in peace; and I am not only opposed to the lumber trust but to the national-bank trust, and to all other trusts as well.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question—just a short question?

Mr. WEAVER. Not now.

The gentleman says my charge, that there is a lumber trust, was denied by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW]. Let us see the denial. I turn to the RECORD, page 5097, and read from the remarks of the gentleman from California; he says:

I do not know of any redwood-lumber trust.

That is a mere declaration of the absence of knowledge and proves nothing.

And he goes on to say:

But suppose there is.

That is what the gentleman said.

Mr. MORROW. Permit me a moment. I asked the question:

Suppose there is?

Mr. WEAVER. There is no interrogation point.

Mr. MORROW. At all events it was intended as a question.

Mr. WEAVER. Well, now, let us suppose there is, then. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the pending amendment, which is to extend the time within which this bill, if it becomes a law, shall take effect, has been under discussion for some time and the debate has been on everything else under the sun than on that amendment. Not wishing to appear singular, I desire to say something upon a subject other than upon the question of the extension of the time; and I will offer at the appropriate moment an amendment to the bill which I desire to explain now, because it must be offered to the paragraph under consideration, and I must explain it, if at all, before the expiration of the forty minutes.

I shall move to amend the bill by inserting, after the words "eighteen eighty-eight," in line 4, the following:

No goods manufactured or produced wholly or in part by prison labor or which have been made within or in connection with any prison, jail, penitentiary, or other penal or reformatory institution, shall be imported into the United States of America under a penalty of $200 for each invoice so imported, and the forfeiture and destruction of the said goods and of the packages in which they are contained; and it is further enacted that—

So that this provision of the bill will go on to read:

The following articles mentioned in this section, and imported, shall be exempt from duty.

The operation, Mr. Chairman, of that provision, if enacted into law, is obvious; and I know from the arguments and the appeals in the interest of labor in this country, which have been coming up all winter from the other side of the House, that my amendment will be adopted by a unanimous vote; and the effect of the amendment when adopted will be to prevent the importation into this country of the goods made in the prisons of Canada and Europe. It is in effect and purpose precisely the same statute which the Dominion of Canada has had upon her statute-books ever since the year 1873; and if it is good for Canada it is good for the United States, under and in consonance with the reasoning of gentlemen on the other side. Further than that, to-day important industries in my own State have been driven to the wall. They have suspended their operations, and the men and women engaged in the prosecution of those industries are without employment, because of the importation from Austrian prisons of goods produced by convict labor and sent here to sell.

Now, whatever we may think about tariff duties, whether they should be high or whether they should be low, and whatever we may think of the abstract principles of protection or free trade, it seems to me every representative of American citizens will agree with me that the labor of this country should be protected at least against foreign prison labor.

I offer this amendment and send it to the desk that it may be considered as pending; and when it is in order I will move its adoption, and I will be gratified by seeing a unanimous vote in its favor.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment as already read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I reserve the point of order on the amendment. I do not understand that the gentleman offers it now.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I gave notice that I would offer it at the proper time. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute of his time remaining.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield that to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR], who will have it in addition to his own five minutes.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Contrary to what has been the practice of those who have preceded me in this debate, I desire to address the House in a few words about the pending amendment. In the bill presented to us, in the first section, it is provided that the act shall take effect as regards the articles mentioned in that section on the 1st day of July, 1888.

Now turning to page 9, section 2, I find there the same clause—

That on and after the 1st day of July, 1888, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed on the articles hereinafter mentioned there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following rates of duties on said articles severally.

Turning to the third section we find this clause—

On and after October 1, 1888, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed on the articles hereinafter mentioned in this section, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following rates of duties.

That section covers woolen and worsted goods, flannels, clothing, cloaks, and other articles in the woolen schedule. And I find section 4 returning again to the provision that the articles controlled by that section shall be subject to the rates of duty it imposes on and after the 1st day of July, 1888. This section includes paper, printing-paper, paper-hangings, bonnets, carriages, hats, gloves, gutta-percha, feathers, and other miscellaneous articles.

Now, Mr. Chairman, why should there be this discrimination between the woolen schedule and the schedules which cover all other business interests in this country? Why should the one take effect on the 1st of October and the others on the 1st of July?

Then again I find a general provision that "this act shall be in force from and after July 1, 1888, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." So that the bill itself is contradictory.

Now, as to the pending amendment, in respect to lumber, I want to submit one or two propositions to the chairman of the committee especially. It is very well known that in the winter time in the North contracts are made that last a whole summer. Between the 1st day of January and the opening of navigation our lumbermen also go into contracts for transportation. This bill going into effect on the 1st of July hazards that trade at the very first step. Whatever the result of our legislation may be, whether lumber becomes free or not, whether shingles become free or not, it certainly hazards three hundred millions of property in this country, and also the wages of nearly a million of men engaged in this business. There is no part of the bill that really takes as unbusiness-like a shape as this does.

There is no other industry affected by the Mills bill that carries with it as long contracts as the lumber business does. And more than that, it is a business that inside of its season can not make any change in its contracts so as to make a recovery either of lost ground, lost prices, or lost contracts. Therefore whether you vote lumber free or not, I say it is unfair to the men engaged in the lumber business and the transportation companies, whether on water or by rail, to hazard at once an industry so large as this, and that is bound up by contracts as solemn and as exacting as a note in the bank.

Now, sir, I desire simply to confine my remarks to the pending amendment. At a proper time in the consideration of this bill I shall present other matters that are of paramount importance, but I want to say now, distinctly and unequivocally, that if this Congress should pass—I do not think it will, but if it should pass—such a nonsensical provision as this, it ought to be laughed out of existence as a legislative body.

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address myself briefly to the question whether lumber should be made free or not. I understand that the two reasons given by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means why it should be made free are, first, that it will make lumber cheaper to the consumer, and, secondly, that it will open the markets of the world to our products. Now, in answer to the first proposition, I will say for myself that if any gentleman upon the floor of this House will prove to me that this change will make lumber cheaper to the consumer I will vote for it; but I think it is perfectly susceptible of proof that it will be impossible for this change to produce that effect. Precedent in this case is as good as it is in any other, and we all know that from 1854 to 1866 we had lumber free from Canada.

The reciprocity treaty permitted lumber to be imported free from Canada into the United States and what was the result? During all those years, at a time, too, which was particularly favorable to the administration of the proposition that is maintained by the majority here, because we had a war on our hands during nearly half the time—during all that period the result was that there was no change in the price of lumber except that it continually advanced. During all the time we had reciprocity with Canada, when lumber was coming in free, the price advanced steadily until 1866, when the treaty was done away with. Now, if this was true during a period which was so favorable for the demonstration of the theory which is advocated here by gentlemen on the other side, I say it is very likely to be true in the future if this bill should pass. I desire to treat this bill fairly as a business proposition, and I now proceed to consider the question whether we shall find a market for our lumber products in Canada.

We need not expect that if we give Canada the free entrée to our markets we shall necessarily have the entrée to her markets in regard to every particular article; still in a sense we may expect that. Now, the population of Canada does not exceed 5,000,000 of people to-day, not as many people as are in the State of New York, which I have the honor to represent in part. During the period of the reciprocity treaty the exportation of lumber from the United States to Canada was simply nothing, and it is nothing now. Last year we collected in duties on imported Canadian lumber $1,500,000. Now, if we are not to get lumber cheaper, and if we are not to secure a market in Canada for our products—and I do not believe there is a man on this floor who will contend that we shall find a market there—if, I say, we are not to get either of these things, what are we going to do by the passage of this bill? I will tell you, Mr. Chairman, what will be the result if this bill shall pass. The result will be that you will give to the Canadians $1,500,000 in duties which we now collect of them and which they will put into their pockets, while they will sell their lumber in our markets for precisely the same prices that it is bringing now. Wherever there is a trade of that kind between two countries the one that has the largest amount of product controls the price. Now, the United States manufacture 97 per cent. more lumber than the Canadians do, and from Canada we get the greatest amount of lumber that is imported into this country from any foreign country. So our market has controlled, and for all time in the future as long as any member of this House is likely to live, our market will control the price of lumber. Therefore, when by this bill you take off a duty of $2 per thousand from lumber imported from Canada into the United States you simply put $2 more into the pocket of the Canadian lumberman, and to the extent of that $2 per thousand you assess a tax upon our own people to make up the amount which our Treasury suffers by the operation.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire whether the amendment offered by me yesterday is to be regarded as pending to be voted upon?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at this time; not upon this paragraph.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to have it considered as pending at the end of the fifth line.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at this time. The Chair will entertain it at the proper time.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know whether the forty minutes allowed for debate have not expired.

The CHAIRMAN. There are five minutes remaining to be occupied by a gentleman who favors the bill. As the time was to be equally divided between the friends and the opponents of the bill, unless some gentleman on the right of the Chair desires to occupy the time in favor of the bill, the debate will be considered as closed.

Mr. CROUSE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a question for information. I understood that the proposition limiting the debate to forty minutes was confined to the first five lines of the bill. Reading those lines, I see that they qualify or relate to all that follows in section 1. I wish to ask whether the object of the motion limiting debate was to preclude any amendments that might be offered to any of the items that follow the five lines.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not; it applied only to the five lines.

The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3 strike out "1st day of July, 1888," and insert "2d day of January, 1889."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 87, noes 116.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MCKINLEY and Mr. MILLS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 118.

So the amendment of Mr. ADAMS was rejected. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to be proposed?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After "88," in line 4, insert—

"No goods manufactured or produced wholly or in part by prison labor, or which have been made within, or in connection with, any prison, jail, penitentiary, or other penal or reformatory institution shall be imported into the United States of America under a penalty of $200 for each invoice so imported, and the forfeiture and destruction of said goods and of the packages in which they are contained; and it is further enacted that."

Mr. MILLS. I make a point of order on this amendment that it is not germane to the pending provision of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand the point of order is made that this amendment is not germane to the paragraph now pending.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make the further point of order that the amendment is the substance of a pending bill.

Mr. MILLS. The pending paragraph simply fixes the date at which this bill shall go into effect. The amendment may be germane to some other provision of the bill, but it is not to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do desire to be heard, for the reason that I do not believe the point of order can be seriously made by the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from New Jersey that debate upon this portion of the bill having been closed by the House, discussion upon any points arising incidentally upon it can only be entertained by unanimous consent.

Mr. DINGLEY. The closing of debate on the paragraph does not cut off debate on the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The question pending now is upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Still it arises in connection with this paragraph of the bill; and the rulings of Speakers heretofore have been that all points of order arising after the previous question has been moved must be decided without debate.

Mr. REED and others. There is no previous question here.

The CHAIRMAN. The closing of debate in Committee of the Whole is equivalent to the previous question.

Mr. REED. Oh, no. If the Chair will permit me, the closing of debate is a mere incident to the question, "Shall the main question be now put?" The closing of debate is only one of the things which are the result.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read clause 3 of Rule XVII.

The Clerk read as follows:

All incidental questions of order arising after a motion is made for the previous question, and pending such motion, shall be decided, whether on appeal or otherwise, without debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that an order of the House closing debate in Committee of the Whole is equivalent to a motion for the previous question in the House, and as there can be no previous question in Committee of the Whole——

Mr. REED. Does the Chair mean to say that the closing of debate on the paragraph and amendments closes debate on a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that debate on the paragraph and on all incidental questions connected with it was closed by order of the House.

Mr. REED. Debate on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. This is an incidental question.

Mr. REED. Well, that is a most amazing decision. I have no doubt the Chair has some precedent for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has read the rule, which is clear enough.

Mr. REED. That has nothing to do with it, if the Chair pleases.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it has, with all due respect to the gentleman.

Mr. REED. There is no previous question here.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Maine inform the Chair what in his opinion is the effect of an order closing debate in the committee?

Mr. REED. The debate now proposed is not debate upon the paragraph, but upon a question of order. Debate was closed on the paragraph and pending amendments. This is not debate on either the paragraph or pending amendments, but upon a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. But this is an incidental question.

Mr. REED. It seems to me nothing can be said to make the question plainer. All that the House authorizes or intends to authorize by the order is the closing of debate on the paragraph and pending amendments. The House has no occasion to close debate on points of order. Debate on such points is primarily for the information of the Chair. Of course in some cases it would not be needed; but it is primarily for the information of the Chair and secondarily for the information of the House if an appeal should be taken. This is a most surprising decision of the present occupant of the chair. I presume he must have some precedent for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has cited the rule.

Mr. REED. It seems singular that in all previous Congresses nobody has ever stumbled on such a decision before.

The CHAIRMAN. It has frequently been held that all incidental questions, after the previous question is moved, must be decided without debate.

Mr. LONG. I understand that debate on a point of order is very much within the discretion of the Chair, and that the Chair in its discretion never refuses to allow debate upon such a point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is perfectly willing to hear gentlemen upon the point of order, and was about to ask whether the debate should proceed by unanimous consent. The Chair was very desirous to hear the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. LONG. This is not a question for unanimous consent. It is a matter within the discretion of the Chair—a discretion which the Chair has always exercised.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing in the rules providing for any debate upon points of order. The Chair always indulges such debate unless objection is made. In this case, as the previous question is operating upon this portion of the bill, so far as the previous question can operate in Committee of the Whole, the Chair was of the opinion that no debate could be allowed upon any incidental question after debate had been closed upon the main proposition. That is still the opinion of the Chair; but he will ask that the gentleman from New Jersey be permitted to address the Chair upon this point of order. If there be no objection——

Mr. CANNON. Let me make a suggestion to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to understand the Chair's decision. Does the Chair say the previous question is operating in the Committee of the Whole? I suppose the Chair means it is operating by analogy. The previous question in the House not only cuts off debate, but it also cuts off all amendments. If the previous question should operate therefore there would be not only no further debate on this paragraph, but it would not be in order to move an amendment or an amendment to an amendment. The Chair has therefore as much right to cut off amendments as he has to cut off debate under his construction that the previous question is operating in the committee. It is a construction of the rules never before given in this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That would be true if it were not for the latter clause of the sixth paragraph of Rule XXIII, which says:

But this—

Which is the closing of debate—

shall not preclude further amendments to be decided without debate.

There is the limitation providing for other amendments, and without that clause not only would the debate be cut off but no further amendment would be in order to this paragraph.

Mr. BURROWS. Let me understand the position taken by the Chair. If an amendment is offered and a point of order is raised against that amendment, the Chair holds that is not debatable except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not say so.

Mr. BURROWS. Then the Chair holds that the point of order is debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair said that all debate on this paragraph of the bill having been closed by order of the House, that that was in the nature of a previous question in the committee and prevented the committee from further debate, and that that was provided for in the clause of the rule which was read.

Mr. BURROWS. Then the Chair thinks that a point of order is not debatable except by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so holds under the order of the House.

Mr. BURROWS. The Chair holds a point of order is not debatable even if the Chair desires to be informed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was asking unanimous consent for the gentleman from New Jersey to be heard.

Mr. BURROWS. Even if the Chair desires to be informed he could not get that information unless by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. The Chair would be powerless even if he did not know anything about it.

Mr. REED. You can see how convenient this is going to be.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be convenient for gentlemen to make remarks of that kind, but the Chair intends to enforce the rules as he understands them. When the responsibility is imposed upon other gentlemen they will exercise it as they think best, and the Chair, so long as he occupies his present position, will enforce the rules of the House as he understands them.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Suppose there be an appeal from that decision, will the Chair undertake to decide that all debate is cut off on that appeal? Does the Chair hold that we can not have any discussion on that point of order?

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Does not this committee have the right to appeal from this decision of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. I wish to know the length of time which the gentleman from New Jersey desires.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Not longer than five minutes. If permitted to proceed I would have been through long ago; but five minutes are enough to show the absurdity of this point of order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection.

Mr. REED. We intend to appeal from that decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain it.

Mr. REED. And we wish to discuss that appeal. We wish to discuss the entire question. Does the Chair hold we shall have to get unanimous consent for such discussion? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked for permission for the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. REED. Does the Chair hold we must have unanimous consent for each individual to be heard?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would so hold.

Mr. REED. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOOKER. I demand the regular order. The gentleman from New Jersey has the floor; let him speak if he wants to.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I object to the speech being made. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late now to interpose this objection, as the gentleman has already received consent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to submit some observations touching this point of order by leave of the Chair, not by leave of the committee. The Chair desires to be informed as to the grounds upon which the point of order is made, whether it be tenable or not.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object to the gentleman's proceeding under the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is now too late.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I understand the gentleman declines to proceed by leave of the committee, but only by leave of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Leave has been given the gentleman to proceed, and he can proceed in his own way, which of course does not change the order of the committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The provision of this bill to which my amendment is applicable, and to which it is offered, is in the following language:

That on and after the 1st day of July, 1888, the following articles mentioned in this section, when imported, shall be exempt from duty.

And then follows a long list enumerating articles to which that language applies.

That list constitutes the entire remainder of the section. Let me state again: The remainder of that section, after the words I have quoted, is devoted exclusively to a list enumerating articles to which these active words apply. Take those words away from that section and the section is just as dead as a man with his head cut clean off. It cuts the head of the section off, and the whole section goes into a state of innocuous desuetude. [Laughter.] I do not wish to exercise any pernicious activity in a partisan line in using that expression, but it occurred to me as the best definition I could employ at the moment, and I had high authority for using it. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the first question here presented is, what does this section propose to do? This section proposes that a certain line of goods, when imported into the United States, shall be imported free of duty, and then proceeds to give a list of articles which come under that category. Now, what does my amendment propose? It simply limits that list, and that is all. The very words which make that list operative I propose to limit; and is there a brain belonging to any man who knew enough to find his way on the 4th day of December last to this Capitol to be sworn in that can not see the force of that point? [Laughter.] I say my amendment proposes to limit that list by prescribing that whereas these goods in this list may be imported into the United States free of duty, yet nevertheless goods of the character therein mentioned, when made in a certain way, should not be thus entitled.

A MEMBER. Let us have some authorities on that point.

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I wish to keep my argument clear and undiluted, and so plain that a wayfaring man, even if a little below the average in intellect, need not err therein. [Laughter.]

I repeat it, that these three lines are the active words in this section; and that we have a right to limit the operation, the field, and the scope of that activity. That is exactly what my amendment seeks to accomplish, nothing more and nothing less.

I have authorities produced here by gentlemen near me, but I never want to go to a law-book to prove the proposition that two and two make four. In fact, sir, it seems to me that this question is so clear that the mere statement of the effect and the purport of the amendment is of itself enough to show that the point of order is utterly without foundation in parliamentary law. If the amendment be not germane to this list, will the Chairman tell me where in this section it is germane? Where will it be applicable if not here?

Some of my good brethren sitting near me request me to read this:

An amendment need not necessarily be germane to the pending paragraph, but must be to the general provisions of the bill.

That goes further than I have gone. It is not necessary for me to go as far as that. I say the amendment is not only germane to the section, but it is germane and proper to be inserted at the precise place I have asked to have it inserted. But if germane to any provision of the bill it would certainly be germane to the point where it is now offered for insertion.

I do not know that I desire to say anything more. It seems to me that I have stated the proposition so plainly that there can be no mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that this provision would be germane to some subsequent paragraph of this bill, but is not germane at the present stage of the bill This is an amendment providing some criminal statutes in reference to the importation of goods manufactured by prison labor in foreign countries. If inserted in this place, it would be inserted in a provision which says "that the following articles mentioned in this section when imported shall be exempt from duty." The section, if amended as proposed, then proceeds with a clause prohibiting the importation of certain goods entirely, which would be absurd if inserted in this place; and the Chair presumes that we should look to the sense of the measure as it would stand if amended. Therefore the clause here would not be germane. It would be at a subsequent place in the bill, and the Chair will indicate to the gentleman where it would be proper to offer it, and where the Chair could entertain the amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that he has misunderstood the connection in which those words occur. I say, "Be it further enacted, That the following articles mentioned in this section," etc. It makes good grammar, law, and justice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated that he will entertain the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey at the proper time; but it is certainly not germane at this point.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I dislike to appeal from the decision of the Chair; but it seems to me to be a very important ruling, and the sense of the committee should be taken on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 123, noes 89.

So the decision of the Chair stood as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BUCHANAN. The amendment I desire to offer comes in prior to his.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert between lines 4 and 5 the following:

"When not manufactured or produced, wholly or in part, by prison labor, or made within or in connection with, any prison, jail, penitentiary, or other penal or reformatory institution."

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I should like to be heard for two minutes on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this proposition is germane and will entertain it. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 105.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 5 insert the following:

"Provided, That in all cases a duty shall be imposed upon all goods and products now on the free-list whenever similar goods and products are subject to duty under the laws of the Dominion of Canada, at a rate greater than or equal to that imposed thereunder."

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment would properly come in at line 25. It is unusual to place a proviso at the beginning of a section.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I want it to apply to all articles on the free-list.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it should be reserved until the end of the free-list.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I want to know if in the reading of this bill where the articles to be placed on the free-list are enumerated, as, for instance, when lines 6 and 7 of the bill have been read and passed over, after the reading of line 8, would amendments to lines 6 and 7 be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. They would not be. After a paragraph has been passed it is not in order to return to it for amendment except by unanimous consent.

Mr. TAULBEE. My object was to understand what the Chair would construe as a paragraph of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that at the proper time, if no other amendment is to be offered, the Chair will direct the Clerk to read the next paragraph.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 5 the following:
"Provided, That articles, the manufacture of which or the sale whereof is controlled by trusts or other combination of capital to depress the price of labor, or increase the cost of the article to the consumer, shall not be imported into the United States."

Mr. MILLS. I make the point that that is not germane to that part of the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the point of order will not be sustained until the amendment has been carefully examined by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would be more in accordance with the fitness of things that provisos should come at the close of the sections than that they should precede them. But the Chair will entertain the proposition.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Does the Chair mean that if the only thing involved is the supposed fitness of things the Chair should refuse to entertain a proposition instead of submitting it to the committee?

Mr. REED. Suppose the committee chooses to put on a proviso early in a section, has not the committee that right?

Mr. BUCHANAN. In the twenty-second line the committee have placed a proviso in the middle of a section.

The CHAIRMAN. But that relates only to articles which precede it. This is a matter of taste; but the Chair will entertain the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. The gentleman seems to have peculiar notions about taste, but the Chair will indulge him.

Mr. BURROWS. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken on Mr. GROSVENOR'S amendment, there were—ayes 70, noes 105.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Perhaps the Chair will entertain my amendment now as a matter of taste.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the gentleman's amendment.

The amendment heretofore offered by Mr. BAKER, of New York, was again read, as follows:

On page 1, line 5, insert the following:
"Provided, That in all cases a duty shall be imposed upon all goods and products now on the free-list whenever similar goods and products are subject to duty under the laws of the Dominion of Canada, at a rate greater than or equal to that imposed thereunder."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 106.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless some other amendment is to be offered the Clerk will report lines 6 and 7.

The Clerk read as follows:

Timber hewn and sawed, and timber used for spars and in building wharves.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Chairman, is it in order at this time to move to strike out lines 6 and 7, and also the following lines down to and including line 25, or should the motion be confined to lines 6 and 7?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain motions to perfect the text as taking precedence to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. STRUBLE. Then I move at this time to strike out lines 6 and 7. Upon that I expressed myself yesterday as fully as I desired. All that I wish to do now is briefly to remind the House of my position, which is this, that all of these lines in relation to lumber schedules should be striken out of this bill, and that the existing law should be ingrafted upon it as section 2, with a reduction of the duties upon lumber.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I had purposed entering the motion which has been entered by the gentleman who has preceded me, to strike out these lines. I wish now to announce that if that motion should carry I will offer an amendment to a subsequent section of the bill, providing an import duty on the articles enumerated in this section at the rate of 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE].

The CHAIRMAN. Let it be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out lines 6, 7, and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"Timber not further manufactured than hewn, squared, or sided."

Mr. STRUBLE. I make a point of order on that.

Mr. MILLS. That is not germane to these two lines.

Mr. DINGLEY. Line 8 has not been reached yet and an amendment to it is not in order.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] by striking out the last word of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McCORMICK] is recognized as having the floor.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The gentleman from Pennsylvania made a motion, which has been ruled out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not ruled upon it. The Chair called the gentleman's attention to the fact that he proposed to strike out a line which had not been reached.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. And there was a point of order made upon the amendment. If the gentleman's amendment was not in order, I am; if it was, then, of course, I am not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who was putting his amendment in proper shape.

Mr. McCORMICK. I understand that the Chair has ruled out my amendment as not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair only called the gentleman's attention to the fact that he had moved to strike out a line which had not yet been reached.

Mr. McCORMICK. Well, I desire to make a few observations——

Mr. LONG. Then, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania may modify his amendment if he desires.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in line 7.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, is not that a different motion, and does not mine precede it? It is not the motion we were acting upon, and the gentleman has not been recognized for another motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has modified his motion, and the Chair thinks he ought to be heard on his proposition. The Chair will entertain the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA. B. TAYLOR] later.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offered a few moments ago, and which I understood the Chair to rule out on a point of order as not being proper at this time, included lines 6, 7, and 8, and its object was to strike out those three lines.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, are lines 6, 7, and 8 under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. Lines 6 and 7 are.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment to strike out and insert applies to lines 6, 7, and 8, and I suggest that we have those three lines read and considered together, as the amendment relates to all three.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McCORMICK] had withdrawn that amendment, and had submitted an overwhelming amendment upon which he was proceeding to address the Chair in explanation of the object he has in view. If there be no objection, however, the Chair will regard the eighth line as pending so that the gentleman may move to amend it also.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I object.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have offered this pro forma amendment for the purpose of showing the committee that the motion to strike out lines 6, 7, and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the amendment which I have proposed, is entirely proper at this time. Lines 6, 7, and 8 have reference entirely to timber hewn and sawed, and timber squared or sided. The amendment which I proposed and which I shall renew unless prevented by the ruling of the Chair has reference to all these classes of lumber embraced in these three lines. My proposition is to insert upon the free-list in lieu of the classes of lumber named in these three lines, "timber not farther advanced in manufacture than hewn, squared, or sided."

Such an amendment, while admitting free of duty timber not farther advanced in manufacture than simply hewn, squared, or sided, would not admit free of duty what is commonly known as bill timber, or timber which is farther advanced in manufacture than hewn, squared, or sided. Such an amendment as that proposed would preserve to our own people the right to manufacture the timber into the smaller sizes, and would have the effect of giving the labor to our own people instead of to foreigners. Logs are now on the free-list, and this amendment would enlarge the free-list by allowing the logs to be squared or sided in Canada before transportation to this country.

This is all I wish to say on this point at present. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

[Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, the pending motion is to strike from the free-list sawed lumber, and I suppose the motion is made in order that the men engaged in that industry as wage-earners shall be protected, and not for the benefit of the capitalists engaged in that industry. It is considered on all hands that they have been receiving as much tribute from the American people who use lumber as they ought to receive.

Yesterday in discussing a kindred question I uttered some remarks and I was taken to task for quoting figures from the United States census. We are about preparing to take other United States census reports, and if they are of no value we waste the time of the House in legislation to do so and the money of the people in getting together and publishing those facts.

How were they obtained? Slips were sent out and men were sent out to the people engaged in this industry, with the request they should make their returns; that they should state the number of establishments; that they should state the amount of capital invested; that they should state also the number of employés; that they should state the total amount of production; that they should state the total cost of material, and that they should state the total amount of wages. They made all those statements, and from those statements, drawn from the Compendium of the Census, I made the remarks I did yesterday.

The gentleman who took me to task for using the figures of the United States census uses this language:

That we are not left to the absurdity of figures which gentlemen produce from the United States census.

* * * * * * *

Now, nobody knows better than the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] that it is utterly impossible for a profit of 285 per cent. or 337 per cent. to be made in a single year on $1,000 in a manufacturing business long established, which covers a great belt of this country. He knows that it is impossible, or else he is unfortunate in his mental make-up. I know him well enough to know that the trouble is inadvertence.

I wish to call attention of the House to the fact that the inadvertence was not on my part, as can be seen by referring to the RECORD of yesterday, but on the part of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. I made no statement that lumber capitalists were receiving there in Maine or Michigan the enormous amount of 285 or 337 per cent. I stated that the capitalists in Maine receive as a return on their capital invested 28½ per cent. and in Michigan 33.7 per cent., and I have yet to see or hear any contradiction of that statement. Those are the facts, and they can not be contradicted.

To impress it upon the minds of members of the House, I took the position that a wage-earner in the State of Maine engaged in the sawed-lumber business during the year received as compensation $170, while the capitalist on every $1,000 he had invested received as wages on that capital $285. I was attempting to show, and I think I did, that the division was largely in favor of the capitalist. I wish to present it in another form; but before doing so, and right here, Mr. Chairman, allow me to suggest that the criticism that my figures related to the lumbermen is inaccurate. The statistics I have invoked in support of the argument that I have presented are statistics concerning sawed lumber. Now that industry, the industry of sawed lumber, is one that I presume goes on in some form all the year round.

Mr. GUENTHER. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I think it does.

Mr. GUENTHER. No, sir; you are mistaken.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But whether it goes on all the year or not, taking the time while the wage-earner is engaged in earning $170, the thousand dollars of capital that is invested in that business is engaged in earning $285. To present this matter in another form, I want to make this statement: Taking $2.98 of the total profit and wages combined, what is the division of that sum? How is it divided between capital and labor? Why, Mr. Chairman, the capital gets $1.82 of the amount, while the laborer gets only $1.16 of that which is made by the combination of the two in the sawed-lumber industry of Maine.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERBERT rose.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I shall only want a few moments longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's proceeding by unanimous consent for five minutes longer?

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask that he have that privilege.

There was no objection.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I thank my colleague and the House for this courtesy.

As the House has now given me consent, I will hear the question of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to certain errors he makes in using the census figures for the purpose of ascertaining the profits of the lumber industry, or any other——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I can only yield for a question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I want to show the gentleman that the census figures, while they are correct as far as they go——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not want any correction now in my five minutes, but if the gentleman asks a question I will answer, or try to do so.

Mr. DINGLEY. Very well; I will take my own time. The gentleman is doing himself a great deal of injustice.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am perfectly willing to stand upon the figures of my own, computing from the census and the argument deduced from them.

Mr. REED. All baggage at the owner's risk here. [Laughter.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If you consider in the same manner a case in Michigan, in which you use the same data as I used in my remarks heretofore, and take $20 of the profit of labor and capital combined, what is the division of that amount between the two—$20, I mean of that surplus over and above the cost of production, including raw material and supplies? That is, to be a little more explicit, let us take a product amounting to $52 out of which you deduct $32 for the material and mill supplies, leaving $20 as the result, the combined profit; and then let us see how this is divided between the capitalist and the wage-earner.

Of this sum the capitalist gets $13 out of the $20, and how much is left for the wage-earner? Why, $7; less than one-half of the amount, and but little more than one-half as much as the capitalist gets. We have heard here, and it has been customary to say in the course of this debate, that almost all of these protected products consist of 95 per cent. of labor. I certainly must be permitted to claim in this instance, at least in regard to Michigan lumber, that a large percentage of the value of the product—the finished product of the sawed lumber—is the result of labor. If that be true, instead of 95 per cent. of it going to the labor, there has been a very substantially different division in this instance; because capital gets $13 and labor but $7 out of the total of the $20 left to be divided between capital and labor, after deducting the $32 that had been paid for material and mill supplies from the whole product, valued at $52.

But to make the illustration a little clearer, a little more distinct, for the benefit of these men who are struggling in these protected industries to persuade the wage-earners that their industries will be destroyed, I take a dollar's worth of product. Now, what is the division in a dollar's worth of product in Michigan? How is it divided? By the term "product," as I now use it in this illustration I wish it to be understood that I do not mean simply the product, but I mean the surplus; I mean that portion over and above and after taking out all of the cost of material and expense of every kind, as shown by the census reports.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the census report——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I can not yield. One dollar of that combined profit is divided as follows: 65 cents of it to the capital and 35 cents to the labor.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What does that 65 cents include?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Nothing in the world but profit upon capital. It does not include a single penny of expense or material. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. REED. Sixty-five cents on the dollar profit?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, sir; but 65 cents of that dollar.

Mr. REED. What percentage is that?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Thirty-three and seven-tenths per cent. upon the capital.

Mr. REED. And you believe that?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not know that it is a question of my belief. The figures show it.

Mr. REED. But do you believe it?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly I do.

Mr. REED. I am very glad to hear it. I am glad to find one man who is willing to admit it. [Laughter.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I repeat that the wage-earner gets but 35 cents, while the capitalist gets 65 cents out of the dollar of surplus.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HERMANN. Is the gentleman not aware of the fact that in a great many, if not in all of the States, where the lumber interest figures conspicuously, the manufacturers are, as a general thing, the owners of the lands from which the lumber is taken?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In each instance I have given them the credit of the value of the raw lumber. I allow them interest on everything they say is capital engaged in the industry, and I do not think they were likely to omit putting in anything. I believe they put in their timber, not at prices they paid for land, but at the price they now deem it to be worth.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish to ask the gentleman this: Will you not kindly take a tree standing, cut it down, bring it to the mill, manufacture it, and then show how you arrive at your conclusion?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It would take too long to do so.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It would not take me very long.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman will have an opportunity to do so. I take the figures from the census of the value of the product and the cost of the raw material in the State of Maine. The value of the product was $7,933,868. How much was there for material and expenses? Four million nine hundred and fifty-one thousand nine hundred and fifty-seven dollars. That is their own statement; their own presentation of their case. I have first deducted that before I began to divide between capital and labor. I have then deducted the amount paid in wages; I have taken out all of that; and I have no doubt there is clearly presented the amount of profit to the capitalists in the remainder.

Mr. BOUTELLE. You arrive at these results in the same way as yesterday, from the annual amount paid to laborers.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Exactly so; I speak of the amount of wages during the year. I am dealing with the facts in the Compendium of the Census with regard to sawed lumber.

Mr BOUTELLE. But you do not see the difference between the amount of money paid a man for two or three months' work in a year and the money paid to a man who works a whole year.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have no proof of what you suggest. You have produced none. I am taking the statistics as I find them.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do you not know enough about the lumber business to know that without proof?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I know the saw-mills run nearly all the year round.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I presume that one of the reasons for putting timber on the free-list is that it will be cheapened in price to the consumer.

The free-traders claim that this always follows the removal of duties, and the decline in the price of quinine since it was put on the free-list has often been cited as an example.

Let us see if this is true? The duty on quinine prior to 1873 was 45 per cent. In that year it was reduced to 20 per cent., and it was placed on the free-list in 1879. When the duty of 20 per cent. was removed it sold for $2.96 per ounce in London; in 1887 its price in the London market was 50 cents an ounce, a decline of 83 per cent.

If this decline of 83 per cent. in the price of quinine in London is due to the removal of 20 per cent. of duty in the United States, then our tariff legislation must have a wonderful effect on prices outside of this country. Nobody believes any such thing. It is absurd.

But I will tell you what reduced the price of quinine. It is a product of cinchona bark, and the cinchona tree was found only in South America. This tree grows in remote mountain regions and the demand for its bark was so great that it was feared that the supply might soon be exhausted. In 1877 quinine sold as high as $4 per ounce in London because the exportation of cinchona bark from South America was interrupted by civil war in New Granada and by low water in the Magdalena River.

Owing to the fears entertained that the supply of bark might fail, and because it was furnished in uncertain quantities, attempts were made to cultivate the cinchona tree, and these experiments have met with complete success. The Dutch introduced it into Java and the British into the East Indies, and last year more than 15,000,000 pounds of bark were sold from their plantations. A remarkable fact connected with this enterprise is that the bark of the cultivated cinchona tree yields from 8 to 12 per cent. of quinine, while the bark of the native tree produces no more than 2 per cent. The decline in the price of quinine is said to be entirely attributable to this new supply of cultivated cinchona and the increased proportion of quinine it bears.

But besides this, new methods of extracting quinine from the bark have been adopted. Under the old process it took from ten to fifteen days to exhaust the bark; now it is done in ten hours. The British cinchona plantations have become profitable, and private individuals have begun the cultivation of the tree. The United States deserves no credit for the reduction in the price of this important drug, and anybody that claims that putting quinine on the free-list made the great reduction in price falls into a grave error. The duty should never have been removed. It does the consumer no good. If the price in London is now 50 cents an ounce and the duty of 20 per cent., to wit, 10 cents an ounce, were added, the increased cost would be lost in the course of trade. Few sick men take 100 grains of quinine, but the duty on that amount would be only 2½ cents, a trifle too insignificant to consider.

But the removal of the duty has made us dependent upon foreigners for our supply of quinine. In 1878, before the removal of the duty, we imported but 17,549 ounces; in 1879, the duty being off, we imported 228,348 ounces, and our importations in 1887 were 2,180,157 ounces. Only three firms now make quinine in the United States, and its manufacture is unprofitable. When the American supply was made in our own country it came from manufacturers who had a reputation to maintain and who put a pure article on the market. Now no man can tell whether what he buys is adulterated or not. Experiments must be made upon a sick man to determine how much foreign quinine will produce a given result. With the pure article made in America no such experiments were necessary. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that when a man is sick, good medicine, and not cheap medicine, is what he wants. [Applause.]

I append a statement of the facts, made by a firm of unquestioned character, which shows the truth of the whole matter.

PHILADELPHIA, December 20, 1887.

DEAR SIR: * * * In regard to the assertions respecting the manufacture of sulphate of quinine, we can only say that it is seldom so many misrepresentations are made in regard to any commodity as to this.

At the time of the removal of the duty sulphate of quinine ruled high the world over.

It need hardly be told to intelligent and fair-minded persons that prices were adjusted in Europe without reference to the United States tariff.

The duty was removed in 1879. We will submit quotations for the years 1877 and 1879.

AVERAGE PRICES IN THE LONDON MARKET, 1877.

English, in 1-ounce vials, 13*s.* 2*d.* per ounce = $3.16 in London.
French, in 1-ounce vials, 12*s.* 3*d.* per ounce = $2.94 in London.
Italian and German, in tins, 11*s.* 8*d.* per ounce = $2.80 in London.

AVERAGE PRICES IN THE LONDON MARKET, 1879.

English, in 1-ounce vials, 12*s.* 4*d.* per ounce = $2.96 in London.
French, in 1-ounce vials, 12*s.* 4*d.* per ounce = $2.96 in London.
Italian and German, in tins, 11*s.* 2*d.* per ounce = $2.68 in London.

MAXIMUM PRICES IN THE LONDON MARKET, 1877.

In the year 1877 the sales of sulphate of quinine were made in London at figures as high as the following, say May, 1877, in large lots:
English, in 1-ounce vials, 16*s.* 6*d.* per ounce = $3.96 in London.
French, in 1-ounce vials, 15*s.* 9*d.* per ounce = $3.78 in London.
Italian and German, in tins, 15*s.* per ounce = $3.60 in London.
Taking the shilling at 24 cents, we have as high as $3.96 per ounce paid for English quinine in London.

To say that the duty of 20 per cent. then imposed on foreign quinine by the tariff of the United States had any bearing on these quotations would subject the assertion to ridicule. It is simply an absurdity.

In like manner to venture the statement that recent low prices the world over have been brought about by the removal of the duty in this country would only expose the ignorance or the malicious falsehood of the utterance.

MINIMUM PRICES IN THE LONDON MARKET, 1887.

Now we submit the following as quotations named in the London market for sulphate of quinine, November, 1887.
English, in 1-ounce vials, 2*s.* 1*d.* = 50 cents in London.
French, in 1-ounce vials, 2*s.* = 48 cents in London.
German and Italian, in tins, 1*s.* 3*d.* = 30 cents in London.
Here we have London prices for foreign makes of quinine:
Fifty cents in 1887, against $3.96 for English, in vials, in 1877.
Forty-eight cents in 1887, against $3.78 for French, in vials, in 1877.
Thirty cents in 1887, against $3.60 for German and Italian, in tins, in 1877.

As quinine dropped in price the world over (from 80 to 90 per cent. between the years 1877 and 1887), and as English, French, German, Italian, and all manufacturers, irrespective of locality, lowered their figures gradually and synchronously—pari passu—step by step, and with equal pace, it follows logically that the controlling influence must have been one and the same.

If, then, that power was the Congress of the United States (and it is to be distinctly and prominently kept in view that to Congressional action alone is attributed the low price of quinine in the Star article), then to our legislators, and to them alone, is the whole world indebted.

Although the Americans never planted a tree in Ceylon and Java, and the work was all done by the English and Dutch, does it not seem ungenerous to say that our own Congress had nothing to do with it? Why not say they had all to do with it?

And why so modestly ask to be credited with only the insignificant amount of $50,000,000 saved to the American people, when the pounds sterling of the English (who paid $3.96 before the duty was removed and 50 cents since), and the francs of the French (who paid $3.78 before the 20 per cent. burden was lifted and 48 cents since), and the marks of the Germans and the liras of the Italians (who paid $3.60 before the rules were suspended and quinine made free and 30 cents since) might be added with just as much propriety and just about as little mendacity and effrontery, and make such a snug sum to represent the saving to the whole world by striking out a little 20 per cent. duty in the legislative halls of the United States?

Absurdity could no further go than to claim this reduction in prices in Europe to have been caused by any action whatever of the Congress of the United States.

But in order to impose upon the credulity of the American people, constant reference is made to the fall in prices in this country (while not a word is said about the drop from $3.96 to 50 cents for English quinine, from $3.78 to 48 cents for French, from $3.60 to 30 cents for German and Italian in London), and the cause assigned is the removal of the duty, and this is the only explanation given.

It is indeed to be hoped, not so much for ourselves as manufacturers of quinine, as for the sake of the good name of the American people, and for the cause of justice and truth, that so disreputable a course of misrepresentation and vilification may cease.

The duty, which was a moderate one (20 per cent.), was removed. The act was hurried through, under suspension of the rules, at the very close of the session, with undue haste, without debate, and it went into immediate operation. Special legislation, unlike that applied to all other industries in this country, was directed against one single manufacture. Surely that should satisfy the most violent opponent, and further injustice might reasonably be expected to stop.

The drug trade of the United States can not be ignorant of the real cause of the decline in price of quinine in this country and in Europe, but for the information of others not so well advised we will state that the cause of the decline was the reduced cost of cinchona bark, i. e., the crude material employed.

The reduction in the price of bark was caused by the largely increased supplies. This in turn, was brought about by the action of the British and Dutch Governments in cultivating the cinchona trees in India and Java.

The United States is conspicuous by its absence in the whole business of bringing down the price of bark and quinine the world over. The American people and the American Government were as innocent of influence as were the Chinese or the Japanese, the Turks or the Egyptians.

Formerly all cinchona bark came from South America, and the trees were not under any system of cultivation. Fearing an eventual failure of supplies of bark, the European governments named commenced the cultivation of the cinchona trees in India, Java, etc.

After a lapse of years, necessary to the growth of the plants, exports commenced, from India first and then from Java.

In February, 1861, the first installment of seeds arrived in Ceylon from South America.

In 1869 the export was but 23 ounces of bark.
Season 1882–'83, Ceylon, etc., exported 6,925,595 pounds of bark.
Season 1883–'84, Ceylon, etc., exported 11,500,000 pounds of bark.
Season 1885–'86, Ceylon, etc., exported 15,225,000 pounds of bark.
Season 1886–'87, Ceylon, etc., exported 14,007,500 pounds of bark.
The above statistics apply to one of the sources of supply only, namely, East Indies (Ceylon, etc.).

To this is to be added the Java exportation, say—
July 1 to June 30, 883–'84, 1,104,534 pounds of bark.
July 1 to June 30, 1884–'85, 1,105,970 pounds of bark.
July 1 to June 30, 1885–'86, 1,531,156 pounds of bark.
July 1 to June 30, 1886–'87, 2,230,275 pounds of bark.
These sources of supply were unheard-of factors until comparatively late years, as South America alone supplied the world prior to the cultivation of the cinchona trees in the East.

It may also be properly stated here that the East India barks are uniformly richer than those heretofore and at present received from South America.

The solution of the question as to why the price of quinine has fallen is a very simple matter to those who desire to be enlightened. The wish must be father to the thought in the minds of such tariff reformers as draw the conclusion that the great reduction in the price of quinine all over the world was a natural sequence of the removal of the duty in this country.

The syllogism is very illogical when the high prices that ruled in England, France, Germany, and Italy enter as one of the premises, and without this premise it is not the happy illustration of tariff iniquity perpetrated in this country, so boastfully proclaimed, but is argumsnt degraded to the level of the lowest methods of reasoning—the argumentum ad populum and the argumentum ad ignoran iam.

It is an appeal to the prejudices of the multitude and an argument based on an adversary's ignorance of facts.

As to the prosperous condition of the quinine industry in the United States, and as to the increased production, we have only to say that the statements are so erroneous that it would be idle to attempt to answer them in detail. They are simply untrue throughout.

The industry has been unprofitable everywhere for a long time past, and this is due to excessive competition.

This country is flooded with foreign quinine, e. g., 2,180,157 ounces received from Europe in one year (fiscal year ended June 30, 1887). On the other hand, American manufacturers can not hold their home market nor export an ounce.

The reason of this is that we can not compete with Europeans, who have great advantages over us.

Were the contest an equal one it would be different. To illustrate: The Italian manufacturers pay very low wages, their general expenses of doing business, cost of plant, apparatus, machinery, etc., are far below those in this country, and the Italian Government pays a bounty on all Italian quinine exported.

In every respect we are fighting a very unequal battle.

The Star says that the business is so prosperous that the quinine manufacturers have had numerous accessions to their ranks. So rapid is the increase in the mind of the writer that twelve becomes fourteen in making up the itemized list.

The list itself fairly represents the nature of the entire Star article.

Of the fourteen concerns named we find—

Three only are now manufacturing quinine.

Two have relinquished the business.

Nine never made any.

Respectfully,

POWERS & WEIGHTMAN.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] who, taking the census figures a few moments ago, undertook to show the profit of lumber-manufacturing in Maine, and also the attention of other gentlemen who have used the census statistics to show the alleged profits of other manufacturing industries, to a serious error they have fallen into in drawing the inferences they have drawn.

The gentleman from Ohio has assumed the census statistics, correct in every particular, have covered points which they did not undertake to include. There are only four elements relating to manufacturing in the census figures: First, capital; secondly, the value of the product, thirdly, the value of the material; and, fourthly, the wages paid. Now the gentleman from Ohio and others who have used the statistics have assumed that the census statement of the cost of material gives the whole expense of manufacturing in any particular industry.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Walker so states.

Mr. DINGLEY. My friend is mistaken. Mr. Walker's tables and comments suggest nothing of the kind. Indeed, his tables show for themselves that he does not undertake to cover all the expenses of manufacturing. I have conversed with the census officials on the matter, and they are surprised that any one should so infer. The materials for the manufacture of lumber are mainly the round logs, and the value of those is estimated, with a certain sum for tools, chains, etc., requiring frequent renewal. For woolen manufactures the material is the raw wool and other fiber, with dye-stuffs, coal, etc. Now, given the cost of the round logs, tools, chains, etc., is there not something more required in producing the manufactured lumber from those round logs than simply the labor that is used?

There must be money hired for the time being in addition to the capital to carry on the business for the year which elapses before the lumber reaches the mill and is converted into boards and finds a market. Interest—a considerable item—therefore is not included in the census cost of manufacturing. Then there are taxes; and do not taxes go for something in a manufacturing establishment? They are not included. There is the cost of insurance.

Mr. GEAR. Four or five per cent.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does not insurance cost something—a large item, as gentlemen understand who know anything of the lumber-manufacturing industry, because of the combustible character of the mills. Then there are repairs, another element which is very large. And after the lumber is manufactured it must be freighted to the markets and commissions paid for its sale.

Now, as a matter of fact, ascertained after investigation into this matter, I want to state to the gentleman that there are extensive expenses of manufacturing industries, such as those to which I have referred, of which the census takes no account, varying from 15 to 30 per cent. And when my friend takes the lumber-manufacturing industry in Maine, and figures a profit of 27½ per cent., because 27½ per cent. is the difference between the materials and the labor combined, and the value of the products, he leaves out of the computation expenses aggregating not far from 20 per cent.

It should be borne in mind that the value of the product as given in the census is the value in the market. Freight is not deducted, commissions are not deducted, repairs are not deducted, taxes are not deducted, insurance is not deducted, interest on money borrowed is not deducted, many other items of expense are not deducted. Instead of the lumberman's profits being 27½ per cent., I want to say to my friend from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] that last year the lumber-manufacturing mills in my State did not make a profit of 6 per cent., and on the average for ten years they have made no more than other industries.

Gentlemen will see that when they use the census figures in this careless way—and those figures have been used in such a way in other manufacturing industries all through this debate—they reach results which were never intended by those who presented those statistics. Those figures do not include the whole cost of manufacturing; only two elements in the cost—materials and labor—are included; and, while the figures are correct in themselves, when the gentleman adds the labor to the cost of materials and says that that is the cost of manufacturing, the cost of carrying on the industry, and this deducted from the value of product in the market gives the manufacturers' profits, he does himself and the manufacturers a great injustice. No such inference can be legitimately drawn from the figures of the census.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman two questions. First, I want to ask him whether these statistics were not furnished by the men themselves who are engaged in these industries?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, sir; and they correctly give the facts which they undertake to cover.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And you say now that the figures do not include the cost of supplies at the mills?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly not. They include nothing but the round logs.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This book says "value of logs, value of mill supplies," and there are given here thousands upon thousands of dollars for which they claim credit——

Mr. DINGLEY. But no such items as those which I have enumerated are included. "Mill supplies," as used in the census, means chains and other tools. They do not include insurance, nor taxes, nor freight, nor interest, nor repairs, nor commissions.

Mr. GUENTHER. I move to strike out several words, and I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] whether he calls insurance and taxes "mill supplies?"

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No.

Mr. GUENTHER. Then what do you mean?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I simply asked the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] if these figures did not include mill supplies, and he said they did not, and I showed him that they did.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, he who takes the statements made on the free-trade side of this House yesterday and to-day, including that of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] a few minutes ago, seriously must come to the conclusion that the American lumberman is the greatest rascal unhung, a veritable pirate, who for the last twenty-seven years has unmercifully robbed the people of the United States in a most outrageous manner.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If you choose to put it in that way, put it that way; I have no objection.

Mr. GUENTHER. You want to make the people believe that his profits have been excessive, outrageously excessive.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No; I only show what the census shows were his profits.

Mr. GUENTHER. But you want to create the impression upon the minds of the members of this House and of the people that the profits of the lumber manufacturers have been outrageously excessive, while the figures do not bear you out. Now I happen to know better. I live among the lumbermen, and I know something about saw-milling, and I say that this cry for free lumber, when not accompanied by some offer of just compensation to the people engaged in this industry, is an act of gross injustice, a virtual confiscation, at least a partial one, of their property and an unjust diminution of their earnings.

Logs and round unmanufactured timber and ship timber and ship planking are now on the free-list. I will accept the definition of the revenue reformers or free-traders and call these articles raw material for the manufacturer of sawed boards, planks, deals, hubs, posts, last-blocks, wagon-blocks, oar-blocks, heading-blocks, staves of all kinds, pickets and palings, laths, shingles, clapboards, etc. These articles, although certainly not raw material, are all placed on the free-list by this Mills bill, while heretofore and now protected by a duty of from 10 to 20 per cent. It certainly can not have been done under the plea of free raw materials. Why, then, I ask, is it done? Why do you take away all protection from the manufacturer of lumber and leave other industries protected on an average of about 38 per cent.?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Because I want the consumers of Ohio to buy it without paying tribute to those people.

Mr. GUENTHER. Oh, yes, you want the consumers of Ohio to buy lumber cheap because you do not produce it in Ohio, and you want to have all the articles that you produce protected, as is done in the Mills bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not at all. What about free wool?

Mr. GUENTHER. You probably do not represent much of a free-wool district, and you think you are safe.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I live in the district of the greatest wool protectionists in this country.

Mr. GUENTHER. Then they ought to send somebody else here to take care of their interests. [Laughter.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. They had the opportunity, but they did not see fit to do it.

Mr. GUENTHER. You place a tariff on almost everything the lumberman and the millman uses—on their axes, saws, machinery, clothing, sugar, rice, medicines, etc.—but you exempt the products of his labor.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Why, it is the laborer that uses all those things that you enumerate, and not the manufacturer.

Mr. GUENTHER. They are both using them. I want to tell you that the wages paid to-day in the woods of Michigan and Wisconsin are 22 per cent. higher than they were in 1872, while the price of lumber is about 22 per cent. less than it was in 1872.

Why should the lumberman and the millman be singled out? Where is your jewel-like consistency? [Laughter.] Placing manufactured timber on the free-list means free trade in all these many manufactured articles, for the Canadians with us, while we under this bill receive nothing whatever in return.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, I want to ask the gentleman a question in good faith.

Mr. GUENTHER. Well, if it is not too long, you may.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You take your ten dollars of product and divide it; you know all about that——

Mr. GUENTHER. I do not understand your kind of division.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Divide it between labor and capital and all the other elements——

Mr. GUENTHER. I do not understand your kind of division nor your addition, but I would like now to have some of your silence for a few minutes. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. GUENTHER. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for his courtesy, and I hope some of my other friends on the Democratic side will follow his example. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, the lumber industry of the United States, which is the largest of any, as I will show later on, when I will obtain the floor again, can not flourish if you place it in unrestricted competition with Canada, with her lower stumpage, her cheaper labor, and her lower taxation.

When I first saw this now so notorious Mills bill, and read the first twenty lines, I said to myself (and the person whom I addressed fully agreed with me [laughter]; yes, I usually agree with myself when I am right [laughter]), "This is a great scheme; a masterpiece of untutored political economy; the veriest raw material of enlightened statesmanship; a delightfully cool proposition for the annexation to Canada of at least four great States of this Union; in fact the greatest, never before precedented somersault of any disciple in either ancient or modern political stupidity. As a practical illustration of 'heads I win, tails you lose,' it takes the cake." [Laughter.]

Were it not for the serious drawback that we are the fellows who do the losing, we could join in the general merriment. Every million feet of lumber imported deprives fifty American workingmen of employment every year, and thereby directly injures two hundred and fifty people in our own country.

If you are bound to do something for the benefit of Canada, do it at least in such a way that we will derive some corresponding benefits. Negotiate a just and equitable reciprocity treaty with Canada, something like what my genial friend before me [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] advocates, so that those of our citizens living near the Canadian border can exchange the products of their labor on equal terms with Canadian citizens; but do not give all the advantage to them and nothing to us, as you do by this bill.

The average duty collected on Canadian lumber is less than 16 per cent. This percentage is less than the difference of the price of labor in the two countries. Wages are at least one-third lower in Canada than in the United States. Canadians come over every year to work in our mills and lumber camps, while nobody goes to Canada from here to get work.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would like to ask the gentleman, as Canada has a protective tariff, why it does not bring up the rate of wages in Canada.

Mr. GUENTHER. Canada has a protective tariff on her exports, but I am now speaking of the question of our imports.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I thought these gentlemen were in favor of home industry; yet they allow foreigners to come over and carry away our high wage-money,

Mr. KELLEY. Most of those who come over become citizens of this country.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. No; the gentleman from Wisconsin states that they come over to work and then return.

Mr. GUENTHER. I did not state that, although it is so in some cases; but that makes no difference with my argument.

But it is said that many lumbermen in Michigan and Wisconsin are advocating to place manufactured lumber on the free-list. Mr. Chairman, I know there are some, but I am glad to say there are not many of that class of patriots. I also know that whenever you scratch off the thin "free-trade coating" of such an individual you at once discover the peculiar metal from which he derives his magnetic, free-lumber attractions. [Laughter.] As a general rule, he used to be a pine-land operator in the United States or a saw-mill owner. He has made money—sometimes a good deal. His pine lands in the United States are gone. For a number of years he has bought standing pine in sleepy Canada at a very low figure. "Give me free trade in lumber," he says to his patriotic soul, "and I can double and treble the value of my Canadian investment."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection.

[Mr. BOUTELLE withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Inasmuch as I propose to make a few remarks in answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, if he is allowed to be recognized again, I would prefer to have him go on now. I am willing he should go on and complete his remarks before I take the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not give up my time if he is not to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can recognize the gentleman later in the day if he desires it; but the Chair has now recognized the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Inasmuch as we had a speech from one gentleman from Kansas yesterday [Mr. PETERS] on this lumber question I desire to have a few remarks read from what was said by another gentleman from Kansas in the Forty-seventh Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANDERSON. The Legislature of Kansas has passed the following resolution:

"That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby requested and instructed to use their best effort to have the duty upon lumber of every description removed so that the same may be placed on the free-list."

I shall obey these instructions, and I suppose it is not necessary to make any defense of the Republicanism of the State of Kansas, the State of John Brown, a State casting from 50,000 to 70,000 Republican majority in Presidential elections.

I wish to say in this connection that in the votes which I have cast upon this bill I have been influenced by a sincere adherence to the principles and practice of the Republican party. I have been in favor of lower rates than those presented in it. I have been and am in favor of a competitive tariff as a guard against monopolies. I am in favor of reducing the burden of taxation when the tariff is a tax. I am in favor of reducing the surplus. And now upon this question I stand upon the national platform of the Republican party of 1880, reaffirming that of 1876, which said:

"The revenue necessary for current expenditures and the obligations of the public debt must be largely derived from duties upon importations, which, so far as possible, should be adjusted to promote the interest of American labor and advance the prosperity of the whole country."

You will find the same thing affirmed in the platform of 1872:

"And that revenue, except so much as may be derived from the tax upon tobacco and liquor, should be raised by duties upon importations, the details of which should be so adjusted as to aid in securing remunerative wages to labor, and to promote industry, prosperity, and the growth of the whole country."

I stand there to-day, Mr. Chairman. I exercise the right of judging for myself and for those I represent as to what is requisite for the prosperity of the whole country.

Take now this case: You have the lumber region of Maine contiguous to a somewhat densely settled country in Canada. You then go West to Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, contiguous to a portion of Canada which is not settled at all. I admit all that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] has said in regard to the development of the lumber industry up to this time. I accept his statistics in full. Yet the question remains in my mind whether in order to preserve the present development of the lumber industry of Michigan we would be really promoting the prosperity either of the whole country or even of the larger part of the country.

This is a case in which you are not creating an original material. Whatever you do in the manufacture of lumber is based not upon a creative process, but upon a destructive process. It is not, as in the case of making cotton fabrics, or pen-knives, or steel rails, where you have the original material abounding inexhaustibly, so that your product will go to the development of the prosperity of your country. In this case you are stripping off the forests that God planted on this continent.

The question comes up whether it is really for the prosperity of the whole country, or even of the larger part of the country, that year after year you shall put a premium upon the starting of fires to destroy your forests——

Mr. HOAR. What is that?

Mr. ANDERSON. That you should put a premium on the cutting down of your forests in order to manufacture lumber. Then in the coming years what will be the result? You will have removed the original supply of lumber from your continent and placed yourselves inexorably in the hands of Canada.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Robinson, of Massachusetts). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to have five minute's more time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think that should be allowed him. He has to speak for a whole State on this subject. His State has instructed her Representatives on this question and should be heard.

Mr. BRENTS. He is not representing any timber State.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. BLAND. Now, I want to know from the gentlemen from Kansas on this floor whether they propose to obey the instructions of their

State Legislature, or whether they come here for the purpose of standing in not only with the lumber trust but with all the trusts and combines trying to defeat this bill?

There is another question in regard to which the farmers not only of Kansas but throughout the country feel a deep interest, and that is the effect our forests have upon the seasons, upon the rains which descend upon the earth, and which are so necessary to the success of agriculture. It is contended that the destruction of the forests is the occasion of the dry seasons year after year throughout the Northwest and West, and especially in Kansas, where they have been affected by drought which has cut down their crops one-half. I have read in the presence of the gentlemen from Kansas the views of their constituents, their voters on this question, to ascertain whether they are in harmony and sympathy with their people on this subject. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BURROWS. I ask by unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] be allowed five minutes in addition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HEARD. I have never yet objected to anybody being allowed to proceed and complete his remarks. [Cries of "Then do not do it now."]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, whenever an American citizen invests his money, the money he has made in this country, in a foreign one, he ceases to be a reliable counselor where American interests are concerned. [Applause.] He becomes an unsafe guide to show us the road to American prosperity. [Applause.]

He becomes an ally of foreign interests. In this case he joins in the cry of free access to our lumber markets, that was started in Montreal and by other fellows of his ilk. He bargains away the interests of his people, among whom and through whom he became wealthy.

He becomes another Benedict Arnold, an American Judas Iscariot. I have no sympathy whatever with that kind of American citizens who expect to make their investments in foreign countries profitable at the risk of injuring, aye, even destroying that industry at home, which, if left with the present moderate protection, will prevent them from realizing large profits abroad.

While I radically differ with the theories of the "out and out" free-trader, I can respect him for his convictions and for his consistency. But, taking an inventory of my different kinds of respect, I fail to find any for that person who is in favor of the Mills bill, protecting almost every home industry, although under vigorous protest, but places lumber and wool on the free-list.

If you insist upon such an unjust course, give us at least something to compensate us for this great injury and injustice. Give us at least free sugar, free rice, free woolens, and free medicines.

A MEMBER. And free molasses.

Mr. GUENTHER. Yes, and free molasses. [Laughter.]

Mr. MACDONALD. And taffy. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, there may be lumbermen who, by reason of their Democratic tendencies, indorse everything dictated by their party leaders (and you know what portion of our beloved country they hail from), men who would rather be Democrats than men of unbiased judgment and ideas of their own; men who from sheer force of habitual prejudice oppose everything Republicans advocate; men who dare not say that their souls are their own if so decreed by modern Democracy; men who delegate their thinking to the professional Democratic whipper-in; men who think more of a little Federal office than of the well-being of their community. I have no harsh words for them; it is not anger, but pity I have for them. I even do not hold them in contempt, although they seem to be justly entitled to it.

And I have no harsh words to utter. [Great laughter.] But in a Christian spirit I commend them and I say, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." [Laughter.] At the same time, however, for their own good I want to have a guardian appointed to prevent them from squandering that which the Republican protective policy gave to them. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. They are men who made their wealth under a protective tariff. [Applause.]

Mr. GUENTHER. Yes, and I trust you did too.

I want to prevent them from treating the Canadians to our good things, filling Canadian stomachs with substantial food and choice dainties on top of it, while our people have to regale themselves on Democratic free-trade fizz. [Laughter.] And when we complain that this kind of windy diet is neither palatable nor nourishing, you free-traders say, "But it is good old Democratic doctrine, and, besides, it does not overload your stomach, and thereby may save you a doctor's bill. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] And then you think that this old worn-out chestnut, this stale "Democratic doctrine phrase," will fill the vacuum in our digestive organs. [Renewed laughter.] You who advocate this lumber schedule, you poor deluded innocents, are made to pull the chestnuts from the coals for these unselfish patriots with large investments in Canadian pine.

But pass this bill, and you will soon learn that by placing manufactured lumber on the free-list, the consumer in the United States will not be benefited, but the owner of that Canadian pine will rake in the persimmons, while you, unsophisticated, verdant free-traders will scratch your poor little aching heads in pitiable astonishment and wonder with mouths wide open, eyes dilated, and ears turned down, why this is so. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. GUENTHER. Then I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had permission by unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, which time has expired; and the gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this is not a question of levity.

Mr. REED. Oh, no. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. It is a matter which touches the interests of somebody——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will interrupt the gentleman to state that debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted; and if there be no objection it will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Then I move to strike out the last word.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that this is not a matter of levity. Somebody is suffering from the state of things that now exists, or will suffer from the change proposed by this bill should it become a law. Let us see, then, what the question before the House really is.

On yesterday I asserted when I had the floor in debate in the presence of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER], who has just surrendered the floor, a gentleman who is well informed on this question, that within my own personal knowledge there had been in the last twenty-five years more millionaires who made their fortunes in the lumber business than he could point out in all the United States prior to that time.

I said further, Mr. Chairman, that within my own knowledge the pine lands of that region of country that he and I have the honor in part to represent on this floor had within the last fifteen years risen in value from 300 per cent. to 500 per cent., or even, in some instances, 1,000 per cent.

Mr. GUENTHER. How much is real estate property in St. Paul worth now, and what was it worth twenty years ago? How much has it risen in value?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That illustrates the argument that gentlemen deem it fit to submit in support of a grave question. But let us examine this question for a few moments without being distracted by suggestions that are hardly relevant.

As I have said, I stated that as a rule it would not be questioned that the pine-land property—the property of the lumbermen—had risen in value within the last fifteen years 300 to 500 per cent., and even in some cases as high as 1,000 per cent., and I stated in the same connection, and before the same gentlemen——

Mr. GUENTHER. Well, give me time to reply as you go on.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I stated that the property of the agriculturist in a district whose soil is as rich and good as there is to be found anywhere (and this statement applies not alone to my State but to the Northwestern States generally) during the same time had not risen in value 1 per cent.

The answer of the gentleman to the suggestion was this: That the increase of the wealth of the lumber-men has grown out of the rise of stumpage, out of the rise in value of the pine lands themselves, and not in the manufacture of lumber. Do I quote the gentleman correctly?

Mr. GUENTHER. Yes, sir, and that is a correct statement of fact.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. These premises being conceded, let us for a few moments consider them and the lessons which they teach.

If pine lands have risen so much in value for that period as is conceded here, why is it? And if agricultural lands have not risen in something like the same ratio, or at all, why is that so? The answer to these questions is not far to seek. When an industry is prosperous its plant and property rise in value, and the rise is a fair index of the degree of prosperity. When crops are bountiful and prices high, agricultural lands go up. When crops are poor or prices low, such lands go down.

When mining is profitable, mineral lands go up; when unprofitable, they go down. When the products of the dairy go up grazing lands go up. This is just as true in all such branches of industry as it is that when a bank or a railroad company is earning money rapidly the stock goes up, and goes up in proportion to the earnings. This is the surest touchstone that can be applied in such case to test the prosperity of any business. And by this sign it is seen that the lumber industry has been exceptionally prosperous for a long time, and that for the last fifteen years or more agriculture has been unprofitable.

To the people of that part of the Northwest in which I am acquainted it needs no evidence to establish these facts. It will be there conceded, as I understand my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] here to concede, that the lumberman and the pine-land owner have been exceptionally prosperous, while the agriculturists have been merely able to hold their own by industry and economy.

Now, I want some man to answer this question: Why should these men who are making not one farthing, but are merely holding their own, be forced to contribute $2 a thousand feet on any lumber consumed to an industry which is making millionaires of the men engaged in it? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Let somebody answer this question, and then he will have "touched the nub" of this issue. This deserves a serious answer. It will not do to go off and joke about this thing. I can well understand why a gentleman who represents a constituency who are making fortunes out of that industry can joke about it and how his constituents can laugh, but that the constituents of my friend from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] before me, the constituents of my friend from Illinois, and of my friends from Kansas and Missouri can laugh and joke about it is something I can not understand or believe.

It was shown here but a moment since that a few years ago the Republicans did not assent to the high-protection theories of to-day. But things have changed. The protectionists of this country have got the Republican party by the throat. They have the purse and the party organization, and no man is in good standing who does not subscribe to their creed.

When they can not meet the argument against that protection which compels the weak to protect the strong, the poor to protect the rich, they try to distract attention from the real issue. But the issue stands out so clear that it can not be obscured or misunderstood. It is whether the agriculturists and the masses of the people generally shall be compelled to contribute, not for the support of the Government, but for the enrichment of these prosperous protected industries.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. If I am recognized I yield my time to the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota be allowed to continue his remarks for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Now, after this, I hope the gentlemen from these great Northwestern States will answer the question why poverty should "protect" wealth. That is the question that touches the masses of the people and which they would like to have answered. Says the gentleman, our laborers are benefited. The man that stands up to-day and says labor in the lumber industry receives higher wages than in other like industries, protected or not protected, makes a statement that can not be sustained.

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. No one said that.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I am glad that you disclaim such a position. To say that laborers in the lumber protected industries receive higher compensation than in other industries is an absurdity.

Mr. FUNSTON. No one made that assertion.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The gentleman from Wisconsin made substantially that assertion, whatever may have been his particular words. He said protected labor now received so much per month, while years ago it received much less, and he attributed that to the protective tariff on the lumber industry.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the labor does not get it, who does?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The millionaires get it. [Applause.]

Mr. REED. If it were true that profits of a thousand per cent. were made by the imposition of a tariff of 18½ per cent., there might be some reason for the observations of the gentleman from Minnesota. But it simply needs the statement of it to pierce the absurdity of what the gentleman has just said.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. REED. I will if the House will give me ten minutes.

Many MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Did I say——

Mr. REED. Your statement was that the lumber lands had increased in value a thousand per cent.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. In fifteen years.

Mr. REED. I do not care in what time it was; but the inference which the gentleman would have the House draw from his statement was that owing to a tariff of 18½ per cent. the value of the forests of the United States had been increased a thousand per cent.

Now, what a preposterous statement that is. Why have values increased in the United States? It is on account of the prosperity of this country. A Kansas friend of mine said to me the other day, "I bought my land for $1.25 an acre only ten years ago." I said, "You will sell it to me at the rate at which you got it from the Government?" He said, "No, I want $10 an acre."

How did that land rise in price a thousand per cent? It rose on account of the prosperity of this country. Why is it that everything in this country has risen in value? It is because the system which has been adopted here has made the country prosperous beyond the utmost dream of any other land in the past history of the world.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. The increased value of the land that he speaks of has come from improvements; but I affirm that naked, unimproved lands are not worth as much per acre as they were years ago.

Mr. REED. That is what the gentleman from Missouri calls a question. [Laughter.] That is his idea of a question. I have had occasion time and again to point out the twisted ideas and the twisted uses of words which present themselves on the other side, and this is a very good illustration.

Mr. FUNSTON. What the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] says may be true of Missouri, but it is not true of Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, it does not need any argument to show that all this talk of gentlemen about "lumber kings" and about people who have made money has no relation to this question. This question is whether we shall continue to preserve the American market for the American people, and the reason we say that it ought to be preserved is because the whole history of the country shows such a state of prosperity under that system that bright, smart men have succeeded in making money, not only in the lumber trade or by the purchase of lands, but also by the upspringing of great cities, the value of the land of which has in some instances increased more that 10,000 per cent. The great population which has flowed into this country has come here because this country is prosperous. What makes land valuable? Did gentlemen even consider what is the foundation of the value of land? I have said it here before, and I beg leave to repeat it. What is the reason why land in the center of London is worth such incalculable sums of money? It is because that land is surrounded by five millions of people. Why is it that land is so very valuable in the city of New York? It is because it is surrounded by two millions of people. Why is land so cheap in Texas and in the very far West? Because there are fewer people there. As more people come to occupy this country the land of the individuals and the land of the nation increases in value, and the people come here because the country is prosperous, and we want to keep it prosperous.

We want to keep it prosperous by preserving all its industries, by keeping them all going. We want to preserve the wealth of this country and keep it here to be distributed among our own people. The gentleman knows, if he knows anything about this matter, that the introduction of lumber free into this country means an increase in the value of timber lands in Canada. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] put it very well. Many of our lumber men have gone over to Canada and bought timber lands, and you gentlemen, with your outcries against "monopoly," are endeavoring to increase the fortunes of the very men whom you undertake to denounce by giving them greater opportunities in the rise in value of their timber lands in Canada. Is land any less valuable now in Iowa at $35 or $40 an acre because it has risen from $1.25 an acre?

Mr. GEAR. From 80 cents an acre.

Mr. REED. Now that thing has happened; that thing has taken place; and the question is, land being of that value, what shall we as legislators do with regard to it? The gentleman, I suppose, would not venture to say that the United States ought to charge for new lands from $30 to $40 an acre because in the progress of ten years similar land in the State of Nebraska has increased to $30 or $40 or $50 an acre. That increase is the result of our prosperity.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS was recognized and yielded to Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the request for leave to extend the time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] was not submitted to the committee. The Chair endeavored to interrupt the gentleman in order to submit the question, but did not succeed.

Mr. REED. I will take my other five minutes later, after the gentleman from Minnesota gets through.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the formal amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I wish to ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] if he is through with his remarks.

Mr. REED. Oh, go right on.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I understand that the gentleman is through?

Mr. REED. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I move to strike out the last two words. I beg pardon of the committee for occupying further time, and I do not intend to take but a moment. This matter, however, should not be permitted to pass without an answer. If I know how to state a proposition clearly, I stated that within the last fifteen years the property of the lumber-men has risen in value from 300 to 500 per cent. and some as high as 1,000 per cent.; that within the same period in the section of country to which I referred the property of the farmer had not risen 1 per cent.

Having made those two statements, I asked somebody to tell me why the man who was barely making a living should be compelled to pay a tax or tribute for the enrichment of the man whose property had risen in this exceptional manner.

In reply to that question we have had the speech to which we have just listened. Has the question been answered? I submit to the Committee of the Whole whether it has or has not.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman [Mr. REED] has not said that my premises were false, but he has placed himself upon assumption. I have spoken here in the presence of gentlemen who know; and they have not only tacitly but verbally admitted that the facts are as I stated them. I see sitting near the gentleman from Maine the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], one of the most prominent men in this House. He lives in one of the finest countries on earth. I would not be afraid to ask him whether agricultural property in his district is worth more now than it was fifteen years ago. He will not say it is. I am not afraid to ask my friend from Iowa whether agricultural property in his district would sell for more to-day than it did fifteen years ago.

Mr. WEAVER. It would not.

Mr. STRUBLE. In my part of the State there has been a rise.

Mr. FUNSTON (to Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota). Ask me?

Mr. REED. Yes, ask a Kansas man.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The gentleman from Maine undertakes to put on the stand his own witness, and to put into his mouth just what he would have him say. Does the gentleman from Maine mean to imply that the testimony of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], who does not undertake to contradict my statement, is not worthy of acceptance.

Mr. REED (to Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota). Ask a Kansas man.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not know about Kansas. I am different from the gentleman from Maine. I do not deal in poetry, but in prose. I deal in facts of which I have some knowledge. The agricultural property of that great country to which I have referred, one of the richest to-day under the shining sun, has not risen. Now, let me state the exceptions, and I will state them fairly. The gentleman from Wisconsin, to answer me, says, "See how property in St. Paul and Minneapolis has risen." Yes, but who has gotten the advantage of that rise? The land-speculator and the rich man. The masses of the people who buy lumber to build their houses and their fences have not enjoyed any of the benefits of that rise.

Again, go out upon the frontier where the Government gives away land for nothing. A man goes there and makes a farm. That is enhanced in value of course. Would you therefore say that property generally has risen? Is that a fair argument? Is that meeting a plain proposition in fairness? It is as well as gentlemen can meet it. The necessity of their case requires such an answer. That is the reason for such prevarication. But I stated that where improved property in this country is now in the same condition in which it was fifteen years ago it is not worth any more than it was then, as a rule, unless you go to the suburbs of a city, or to the frontiers, as I have suggested.

Several MEMBERS. That is true.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Now, under these circumstances the question is, Why this industry which is growing wealthy beyond precedent should require that these men, who are merely making a living, shall contribute to the support of their wealthier fellow-citizens by paying $2 a thousand on lumber?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. We have now spent nearly all day on these two lines that bring to the Government revenue to the amount of $198.80. I think we might go on now to the next clause of the bill.

Mr. REED. I would like to make a few remarks before we leave this question.

Mr. MILLS. Let us go to the next paragraph, and we can continue the discussion. I would like to have a vote on these two lines. We ought to make a little progress.

Mr. REED. I would like to say a few words upon these two lines.

Mr. MILLS. I will yield for the present; but when the gentleman from Maine gets through, I must ask that we go into the House to close debate on these two lines.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to be recognized when the gentleman from Maine has concluded.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota thinks I have evaded his question, but as that question as been answered during the general debate more than fifty times I did not suppose it necessary to go into general discussion, nor do I intend to do so now. I have risen for the purpose of pointing out to him what is the fundamental error in his remarks. He says there has been a rise of 1,000 per cent. in the value of timber land, and he undertakes to insinuate to the House that this was on account of a tariff of 18½ per cent. He then says that he made a comparison between the rise of timber lands and the rise of agricultural lands.

Well, now, does he not know the agricultural lands which have already had their rise had it before the fifteen years commenced? If he would go back far enough he would find the rise of agricultural lands had as large a percentage as the rise of timber lands. I venture to say that in the State of Maine the timber lands have actually not risen in value at all in the last ten years. They had their rise before that. The lands when the country gets developed, when railroads are run through them, then reach their full value.

Now the gentleman asks about land in Iowa. He confines himself to the last fifteen years. Why there are lands in Iowa to-day that are selling and will sell for $50 an acre which were purchased for 80 cents.

A MEMBER. Under land warrants.

Mr. REED. A rise greater than the most productive of timber lands, allowing him his own figures. And he attempts to compare the timber lands and farm lands by taking the timber lands during that period of rise and taking the farm lands after they had their value raised. In other words, he insists the farming lands must not only rise when it is their turn, but they must keep on rising when it is the turn of the other class of lands. It seems to me that is an absurdity that needs no more demonstration. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 89.

Mr. KELLEY demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MILLS and Mr. BAYNE were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 104, noes 57.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MILLS. I would like when we go into committee the debate on lines 6 and 7 shall be closed in twenty minutes. Do the other side object to that?

Mr. MCKINLEY. I think the gentleman should not undertake to limit debate in committee this evening.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and pending that motion I move that all debate be closed on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto in one minute.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say a few words, and hope the gentleman will make it five minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I will move, then, that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to ascertain how that time is to be divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposes it will be divided equally between the friends and opponents of the measure.

Mr. MILLS. I demand the previous question on the motion to close debate. [Cries of "Division!" on the Republican side.]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107, noes 69.

Mr. BAYNE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MILLS and Mr. BAYNE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 107, noes 43.

Mr. BAYNE. No quorum.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 111, noes 52.

So the previous question was ordered.

The question then recurred on Mr. MILLS's motion to close the debate in ten minutes.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 44.

Mr. REED demanded tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House takes a recess, under the order, until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN, the Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.)

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we may take up bills upon the Calendar in the order in which they appear, their titles being read, and if the consideration is not asked for, that each bill as it is reached be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar, commencing where we left off on last Friday.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

L. J. M'GOFFIN.

The first pension business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. MORRILL) was the bill (S. 1146) granting a pension to L. J. McGoffin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of L. J. McGoffin, late a private in Company C, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

Your committee adopt the report of the Committee on Pensions of the Senate, and recommend the passage of the bill.

SENATE REPORT.

Lemuel J. McGoffin enlisted as a private in Company C, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, December 26, 1861, and was discharged with company, December 19, 1864.

On July 8, 1880, he made application for pension, alleging in his declaration that on or about June 20, 1862, he received a rupture of the left side of the abdomen, caused from lifting while building a block-house.

The Commissioner of Pensions rejected the claim June 28, 1885, on the ground of there being on record and of the claimant's declared inability to furnish evidence showing incurrence of the alleged hernia in the service.

The Adjutant-General United States Army furnishes the following military history: On muster-rolls from enrollment to April 30, 1863, present; roll to June 30, 1863, absent building a block-house; same to August 31, 1863; roll to October 31, 1863, present; same to October 31, 1864; mustered out with company December 19, 1864.

The claimant gives as a reason for his inability to furnish the testimony of his captain or lieutenants that they were not present at the time of the incurrence of the rupture; that he was detailed with others under charge of Corporal Trimbly to build a block-house at Bridgeport, W. Va., in June, 1863, under supervision of Lieutenant Carnico; that Corporal Trimbly, who had knowledge of the fact, is dead; that the addresses of the privates who were in the detail are unknown to him; that the surgeon who examined him for re-enlistment is dead; he refused to accept me; have had no medical treatment since discharge, except liniments and other patent medicines.

Capt. J. M. Godwin, in an affidavit, swears—

"The claimant enlisted as a veteran on or about the 20th day of March, 1864, and was examined by Surgeon John T. Wharton, and was by him rejected, and I understood he was rejected on account of hernia or rupture."

John C. Gartils and wife state that—

"They have known the claimant over forty years; that he worked for them prior to enlistment for about three yea s; that he worked on the farm, doing general work, and in the timber; that during all that time claimant was never sick a day or complained of any trouble, but that upon his return from the Army on furlough, in 1864, in the summer, he complained of a rupture that he claimed to have received while building a block-house in the summer of 1863."

The board of examining surgeons at Junction City, Kans., November 12, 1884, make the following report of their examination to the Commissioner of Pensions:

"We find left oblique inguinal hernia; opening large enough to admit index finger; varicose veins of both legs from knee down; skin in poor condition; muscles soft and atrophied. In the opinion of the board entitled to a one-half rating for disability caused by hernia."

Since his discharge his neighbors testify to his sufferings and its continuance, and agree that for more than seventeen years past he has been unable to perform one-fourth of a day's manual labor.

A numerously-signed petition of his fellow-citizens testify to his good character and habits, and straitened circumstances, financially.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

INFANT CHILDREN OF MICHAEL A. MORAN.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. PERKINS) was the bill (S. 1037) granting a pension to the infant children of Michael A. Moran.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of the infant children of Michael A. Moran, late of Company K, Seventeenth United States Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions in the Senate, in their report, submitted March 6, 1888, make a very full and complete statement of this case. It shows that this soldier enlisted March 28, 1861, and for over seventeen years served his country faithfully. His death was not directly the result of his service, though it is probable that had he not incurred the disability for which he was pensioned his death would not have occurred at the time and in the manner it did.

Your committee can not believe that there will be any hesitation in placing upon the pension-roll the helpless children of this soldier, and, adopting the report of the Senate committee, recommend the passage of the bill.

SENATE REPORT.

The soldier enlisted March 28, 1861, in Company A, United States Infantry, and was discharged January 22, 1864; re-enlisted January 22, 1864, in Company H, Fourth United States Infantry, and was discharged January 22, 1867; re-enlisted February 7, 1868, and was discharged February 7, 1871, by expiration of term of service as sergeant in Company K, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry; re-enlisted in the same organization February 7, 1871, and was discharged February 7, 1876; re-enlisted February 7, 1876, and was discharged April 2, 1878, as a sergeant, on surgeon's certificate of disability on account of varicose veins of left leg and general debility.

At the date of his death the soldier was drawing a pension at the rate of $18 per month.

Application for pension for John Francis, Mary Ann, and Louisa Moran, minor children of the late soldier, was rejected February 1, 1886, on the ground that the cause of the soldier's death originated since his discharge from the service, and is not shown to have been the result of the disease for which he was pensioned or the service.

The petition praying for the granting of pension recites that on the morning of July 23, 1882, soldier was proceeding with his family to church, and owing to the crippled condition of his limbs from varicose veins, he had a chair placed in his wagon in order to rest his limbs, and as the wagon proceeded the chair was upset, throwing soldier out, causing his death the next day, namely, July 24, 1882. Owing to the crippled condition of his limbs from varicose veins aforesaid, having to wear bandages and elastic stockings, it was necessary to have the chair in the wagon. Thus situated he was unable to prevent the fall, which was the approximate cause of his death.

A claim for pension for the minor children, namely, John Francis, born June 16, 1870; Mary Ann, born July 22, 1874, and Louisa Moran, born October 20, 1878, was filed December 28, 1885, and rejected February 1, 1886, on the ground that soldier's death was not due to varicose veins, for which he was pensioned, but to a fall from his wagon.

Dr. D. Frank Etter, of Yankton, Dak., testifies that he was the late soldier's family physician; that said soldier received an injury July 23, 1882, which resulted in his death; that said soldier, prior to his death, was greatly disabled by reason of varicose veins, and that the accident which resulted in soldier's death was due to his crippled and helpless condition.

Hon. Alexander Huges states that owing to the helpless condition of soldier, on account of varicose veins of legs, he was unable to prevent a fall from his wagon, which resulted in his death July 24, 1882; that he was a gallant soldier, and the claim of his minor children for pension ought to be favorably considered by the Government in whose cause soldier served long and faithfully.

Your committee believe this to be a meritorious case, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY E. WOODWARD.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. MORRILL) was the bill (S. 2167) granting a pension to Mary E. Woodward.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary E. Woodward, widow of Dr. James B. Woodward, late surgeon of the Tenth Regiment Kansas Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report of the Pension Committee in the Senate sets forth fully the facts in this case. Just what the connection was between the disability of the soldier and the cause of his death no human power can ever know. The conclusion is irresistible that had it not been for his weakened and debilitated condition his death would not have resulted from the slight accident.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

SENATE REPORT.

Dr. James B. Woodward, husband of petitioner, was surgeon of the Tenth Regiment of Kansas Volunteers, and while in service contracted disease which compelled him to apply for discharge. This was granted on the certificate of the medical director of the St. Louis district, of May 20, 1864, which stated that the applicant was suffering from dyspepsia and general debility of several months' standing; that on account thereof he was unfit for duty, and that discharge from the service was indispensable to his recovery. Dr. Woodward continued an invalid from his discharge to his death; and for three years after leaving the service he was unable to practice his profession or attend to business. Gradually he became strong enough to engage in a limited practice, in course of which, while performing an amputation, he received a slight cut, which produced blood poisoning, and which, in his weakened condition, ended his life.

On application for pension by his widow it was rejected on the ground that the fatal disease was not contracted in the service. That the weak and diseased condition of the system, however, enabled the poison to take deathly hold upon him, is shown by the fact that the two assisting surgeons in the amputation, receiving abrasions also, being healthy men, suffered only with slight sores. It is presumed that if the decedent had died of the simple wasting away of the vital forces, such death might logically have been referred to the "general debility" in which he left the service; but such "debility" having been continuous in a greater or less degree to his death, it is difficult to see that the intervention of a specific disease, which he was too weak to resist, should deprive his widow of the benefit of this original disability.

The committee report by bill granting a pension to petitioner, and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THEODORE F. CASAMER.

The next business on the Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. PETERS) was the bill (S. 2157) granting an increase of pension to Theodore F. Casamer.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Theodore F. Casamer, late of Company C, Tenth Michigan Volunteers, and pay him at the rate of $36 per month, in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2157) granting increase of pension to Theodore F. Casamer, submit the following report:

Your committee, after a careful consideration of the case, adopt the report of the Senate committee, and recommend the passage of the bill.

SENATE REPORT.

Theodore F. Casamer enlisted in Company C, Tenth Regiment Michigan Infantry, in September, 1861; was discharged February 5, 1864, to re-enlist as a veteran, which he did the following day; was shot through the right shoulder joint, shattering the scapula, at Jonesborough, Ga., September 1, 1864; lay in hospitals until June 30, 1865; was pensioned, first at $8 per month, and afterwards by successive increase at $15 and $18, until, under the act of March 3, 1883, it was raised to $24 per month.

The act of August 4, 1886, provides—

"That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension-rolls and all persons hereafter granted a pension who, while in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, * * * shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow or a leg at or above the knee, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension of $36 per month."

Under this act the pensioner applied for the increase to $36 per month, and at his request was examined on the 27th April, 1887, by a board of medical examiners, who, after giving a technical description of the nature of the wound, state its results to be—

"Complete anchylosis of shoulder-joint, the arm being close to the side, and bound and held there by adhesion and contraction of tendons inserted into upper part of humerus; complete atrophy of muscles of the shoulder and of the upper third of arm; arm can not be moved out-from side, but can be moved a little backward and forward by the sliding of the scapula; the right elbow is not anchylosed, but he can not completely flex or extend it on account of atrophy of muscles of arm; the muscles of forearm are also largely atrophied; wrist-joint not anchylosed, but flexor tendons on front of wrist and tissues there are contracted on account of a burn on lower part of forearm on its anterior aspect; the little and ring fingers are semi-flexed from the same cause, and the remaining fingers slightly flexed; the muscles of right hand are also atrophied, and movements of fingers are much restricted from above causes; none of finger or thumb joints are anchylosed; there appears to be no loss of sensation in hand or arm; there is almost complete loss of power and great loss of motion in the hand and the entire limb, to the extent that he can make no practical use of either, and in the opinion of the board, as it understands the term, there is total disability of the right hand and of the entire limb."

This testimony, which is official and ample, is supplemented by the evidence of near neighbors and intimate acquaintances, who testify that what the doctors say he is not and ought not to be able to perform as a matter of professional opinion, he does not and can not perform as a matter of fact. It is difficult to conceive a case coming more completely within the plain provisions of the act of August 4, 1886, which grants a pension of $36 a month to the soldier who, within its limitations, "shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow," "or been totally disabled in the same;" and it is still more difficult to conceive the indifference or the audacity of the official who, when the pensioner, having fruitlessly furnished the complete evidence above given, asks the privilege of further examination to substantiate his claims, is denied such privilege in the terms and for the reason following:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., February 15, 1888.

"SIR: In your pension case above described you are advised that you are not entitled to an examination looking to an increase, as the evidence recently filed (lay) fails to show that you are so disabled by reason of gunshot wound of right shoulder that you can do no manual labor.

"It may be that you can do no manual labor with the wounded arm, but there is no reason given why you can do no work with the other hand and arm.

"Your rating is believed to be correct.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

"THEO. F. CASAMER, Detroit, Mich."

In this impertinent communication to this crippled soldier the Commissioner fails to give any reason why he presumes to restrict and render inoperative the plain provision of the law enacted for this soldier's benefit. No justifying reason can be given. The law provides the specific pension for the specific disability, which is fully proven to exist, and so proven by all the official and lay testimony in the case; the Commissioner assumes the prerogative of disregarding the law in its application to a point so clear that it can receive no elucidation by argument or statement of fact; and in thus refusing to give the pensioner the rating to which the law entitles him the Commissioner is guilty of an inexcusable violation of its requirements.

The pensioner is entitled, by virtue of his officially-proved disability, to the pension of $36 per month, as provided in the bill, which is hereby reported favorably and recommended for passage.

Pending the reading of the report,

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, this report, so far as read, indicates why the pension was granted to this soldier, for the loss of an arm, and I ask that its further reading be dispensed with.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the report had better be read.

The report was read at length.

Mr. CARUTH. Mr. Chairman, I give notice to the gentleman who introduced this bill that I shall demand a quorum upon its passage, in view of the unwarranted attack that report makes upon the Commissioner of Pensions. There are reflections in the report upon a public officer, endeavoring to do his duty to the people and to the country, that I do not think ought to be sanctioned by this House.

Mr. MORRILL. I appreciate the criticism of the gentleman from Kentucky, but want to say this, that it is a Senate report, and that individually I should never have used such language in drawing the report myself.

Mr. CARUTH. But the committee adopted the Senate report, and unless it is withdrawn I shall demand a quorum. Unless the objectionable features of the report shall be stricken out, I do not propose to allow it to go upon the record if I can avoid it, certainly not without my protest.

Mr. NELSON. That report comes from the Senate. It is not a House report, and I am myself sorry for some of the statements embodied in it. This soldier now, although from a Michigan regiment, is a constituent of mine; and it is further a case where he is clearly entitled to the relief asked. Evidently there was a mistake here, but to hold the Commissioner of Pensions responsible for it we all know is unwarranted, because in consequence of the large mass of these letters from that Department, they are necessarily written by clerks, and he can not take time to read them all, although he must bear the responsibility. I would not think for a moment of charging it to him.

Mr. CARUTH. But that report does so.

Mr. NELSON. But I hope this soldier will not be made to suffer for that.

Mr. CARUTH. Let the report be withdrawn.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the report be not printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CARUTH. But the House committee adopted the report, and as it is I shall object to it.

Mr. WHEELER. It seems to me that it should be recommitted to the committee for a different report.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that will not be done. The report can be omitted from the RECORD.

Mr. CARUTH. I shall oppose, and if I can I shall prevent any such report being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to explain as to this, that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have had all the work that they could possibly do; and when we find a case meritorious and have before us a Senate bill we usually adopt, as in this case, the report of the Senate.

Mr. CARUTH. I regard this as a gratuitous insult to a faithful officer of the Government; and as long as I can help it I do not propose to allow any such charge to go uncontradicted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation, and that the report be not printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FORD. I presume the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH] does not want to punish this man because the Senate committee have made this comment upon the letter from the Pension Office.

Mr. McMILLIN. It occurs to me the gentleman from Kentucky can obtain the relief he wants by agreeing that the bill shall be recommitted and shall not lose its place on the Calendar when reported back.

Mr. MORRILL. That postpones the bill for a week.

Mr. CARUTH. I do not care if it should be postponed for a week or forever.

Mr. McMILLIN. I made that suggestion with the view of compromising this matter. If you act favorably upon the report you concede that the report is correct. Although you keep it from being printed in the RECORD, yet you found your legislative action upon it. I make the suggestion I have submitted as a means by which the case can be prevented from losing its place on the Calendar, and will be sure to be considered this session.

Mr. NELSON. I think this is standing upon a technicality. I think this soldier should not suffer because some gentlemen have seen fit to criticise a Democratic office-holder. If the gentleman is to be so technical as that, we might as well be technical in other directions. We have submitted a fair proposition to let this bill pass and not have the report printed in the RECORD. If that is not sufficient, I want to know why. I do not want this soldier to be punished because some gentleman thinks there is something here that might possibly reflect upon the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. CARUTH. We are asked to pass an act pensioning this soldier. On what ground? On the ground that the Commissioner of Pensions of the United States was false and derelict in the discharge of his duty. That is the record we are asked to make in this Congress as against this officer, whose record would defy any such charge as that. While I do not want to punish any soldier, and while the House will bear me witness that I have voted as cheerfully for pensions as any man on either side, still I do not propose to reward this man at the expense of a faithful officer of the Government. I therefore move that this case be laid aside with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. LAFFOON. The case not losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. CARUTH. Yes.

Mr. HUNTER. Without unanimous consent the case must lose its place on the Calendar if recommitted.

Mr. RYAN. If the gentleman from Kentucky insists on recommitting the bill it seems to me he does not accomplish anything about not having the report printed in the RECORD. The report has been read, and unless we agree by unanimous consent it must go into the RECORD and becomes a part of the record of the proceedings of this House. That can be avoided by gentlemen agreeing to let the bill pass. The course the gentleman from Kentucky is pursuing necessarily gets the matter into the RECORD, and it does an injury to an innocent person, the beneficiary of the bill.

Mr. CARUTH. I submit this proposition: The Committee on Invalid Pensions of this House have submitted this report, which has been read, and which comes before the House as the action of the entire committee. There is no minority report. Upon that report we are asked to found this legislation.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask leave by unanimous consent to withdraw that report. Then I will ask permission to make a statement of the case and will ask the Committee of the Whole to pass the bill on that statement.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I wish to say I never joined in a report censuring the Commissioner of Pensions. Still, I hope the beneficiary of this bill will have a favorable report, and I am glad the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] has proposed to withdraw the report.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the report and to be permitted to make a statement of the case.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas——

Mr. CHIPMAN. He has withdrawn the report.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is still pending. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question. I see it stated in the report that the disability for which this soldier has been pensioned entitles him by the examination of the medical board of the office to $24 per month, and he seems to be now rated on the pension-roll at $24 per month. The bill proposes to give him $36 a month.

Now, the question I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas is whether or not, according to the report of this medical board, $24 a month is not all that this man is entitled to under the law.

Mr. MORRILL. Strictly speaking, that is all that the Pension Office can give him; but I explained once before to the gentleman from Kentucky that the act of August 4, 1886, fails to provide for an equivalent rating. No provision is made by that act for a rating for wounds that are equivalent to the amputation of an arm.

Mr. CARUTH. And yet you blame the Commissioner for doing what he was compelled by the law to do.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not blame him at all.

Mr. CARUTH. Well, it is in the report.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, the facts stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] are correct. He and I had to do with the passage of that law, or with the action of the Committee on Invalid Pensions with reference to it, and I think he will agree with me that its failure to provide for an equivalent disability to the loss of an arm was due more to an oversight on the part of the committee than to anything else.

Mr. MORRILL. I think you are right about that.

Mr. TAULBEE. The gentleman will agree with me also that the passage of special acts giving a rating for disabilities equivalent to the loss of an arm has been frequent in this House. Now there is one feature in this case to which I invite attention in connection with statements of the committee in the Senate report based upon the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions which that report presumes to criticise. The point to which I invite attention is that this letter of the Commissioner of Pensions is in perfect keeping with the law, because there was no law authorizing him to give a rating for a disability equivalent to the loss of an arm. Hence the criticism in this report is unfounded.

Mr. MORRILL. Entirely so. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. TAULBEE. And I think the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] is correct in his statement as to the adoption of the Senate report, a practice which I know to have been common in the committee in the Forty-ninth Congress without a close and rigid scrutiny of its language. I think the committee inadvertently adopted that Senate report, which contained a reflection upon the Commissioner of Pensions, and so far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing that permission shall be given for the withdrawal of that part of the report, and that this bill shall be considered upon its merits; but I would not be willing to take action based upon a report like that criticising the Commissioner of Pensions discourteously and wrongfully, when he did all that he could under the law, especially as I feel that I am as responsible as anybody else for the failure of that law to provide for a proper rating of this pensioner.

I am willing to take my part of that responsibility, but I am unwilling to give any sort of sanction to such criticism as that contained in the Senate report (which has now become a House report) upon an officer who has discharged his whole duty. Therefore, sir, I hope the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] will be granted, that the committee will be allowed to withdraw the report, and that we shall act upon the facts as they appear in the case.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I hope the report in this case will be withdrawn, and the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH] adopted. I think that is the sense of the committee.

Mr. NELSON. To recommit the bill? I object to that.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we do justice to this report in speaking of it as a criticism of the Commissioner. It is a direct insult to one of the highest officers of the Government. I do not know, nor do I care, what Senator prepared the report. I am as anxious to see this claimant receive what the committee seem to think is due him and what I believe this House feels is due him, and I do not see any necessity for any great delay in granting it. We can agree that when the committee rises to-night this bill shall be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back by them this evening, and acted upon by the House this evening. By adopting that course there will be no necessity for any postponement, or any risk as to the case losing its place upon the Calendar, and at the same time we shall avoid giving any countenance to this report.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I have no feeling about this matter so far as this pension is concerned; but I think a more serious question is involved than the simple question of a few days' or a few weeks' delay in considering his case. That this report ought to go back to the committee seems to be conceded upon all hands. That the criticism contained in the report is discourteous, improper, not justified by the circumstances connected with the case is admitted on all sides, and, Mr. Chairman, it is due to other pensioners having claims pending that such a report as this be not permitted to come into this House to prejudice other pension claimants.

If this report stands—if the committee or any member insists on the report standing without being referred back to the committee and their judgment returned that they do not approve of this unjustifiable censure of the Commissioner of Pensions—it will certainly have a tendency to prejudice the cases of other pensioners whose claims ought not to be prejudiced in that way in this House. That this report has gotten in here through inadvertence is, I think, manifest. In justice to ourselves, to the Commissioner, to the pensioner, and all other pensioners who are seeking to get bills through here, I think it proper that the report be recommitted, and that the committee not only refuse to adopt the Senate report, but actually censure a report which is so utterly without justification in the facts of the case.

Mr. CARUTH. Mr. Chairman, I think there ought not to be any difficulty in this matter. Every member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions who has spoken here to-night agrees that the criticism passed upon the Commissioner of Pensions in this report of the Senate committee is unjust; that it inflicts a gratuitous insult and a great wrong upon a faithful public officer. The acting chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. CHIPMAN] agrees with me that this case ought to go back to the committee and that a new report should be made.

I do not want to delay the granting of the pension to this applicant. I want to treat him fairly; I do not want him condemned for what is the fault of somebody else. But I do want all this obnoxious matter to be expunged from this record. I do want the Commissioner of Pensions set right before the American people. I do not want the House to adopt any legislation based upon a report which embraces an allegation that an officer whom we all know to be faithful in the discharge of his duty has neglected that duty.

I do not care how soon this matter may come up; but I shall certainly insist that the case be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, so that this report of the Senate committee may receive the disapproval which it deserves.

Mr. WHEELER. The Committee of the Whole might rise now; the House might at once recommit the bill; and it might be reported back in a few moments.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, to insist on recommitting this bill is, as I have already suggested, standing too much on ceremony. It is doing injustice to the claims of a soldier in order to gratify a bit of sentiment in respect to the Commissioner of Pensions. I think this soldier should not be made to suffer in that way. While the Commissioner was undoubtedly right in this matter as a matter of law, I ask gentlemen to read the letter and say whether there is not in it something that treats this applicant for a pension in a cavalier manner.

Mr. TAULBEE. The gentleman from Minnesota should bear in mind what he is doubtless well aware of—that it would be utterly impossible for the Commissioner of Pensions to read all the letters that issue from his office over his signature.

Mr. MORRILL. He can not even sign them all.

Mr. TAULBEE. As the gentleman suggests, the Commissioner can not even sign with his own hand all such letters, much less read them.

Mr. NELSON. I have already conceded that the Commissioner is not to be blamed personally in this matter.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the additional fact that in nine cases out of ten these letters are prepared and examined by persons who are not in sympathy politically with the Commissioner of Pensions. Is that true or is it not?

Mr. CHEADLE. I think it is not true. I believe the clerks immediately about him are men of his own party.

Mr. TAULBEE. But it should be remembered that the clerks immediately about him in the Pension Office are not the persons who prepare and examine these letters; possibly they never see them.

Mr. NELSON. Assuming that these letters are written by Republican or "hold-over clerks" who were connected with the last administration—assuming that to be true, why all this "fuss and feathers" about this matter?

Mr. TAULBEE. Because the Senate has brought this question up. I know of no person in sympathy politically with the Commissioner of Pensions who has been instrumental in the agitation of this question. We simply propose to stand by the proper administration of the Pension Office; and if blame is to be attached to anybody in consequence of the phrascology of that letter, let the blame rest where it ought to rest.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] insist on his right to the floor?

Mr. NELSON. I insist on my right to the floor; but I am perfectly willing to yield to any gentleman for any question or statement. I simply insist on behalf of this Union soldier that after the committee has agreed to withdraw this report, his case ought to go on.

Mr. CARUTH. What right has the committee or any member of the committee to withdraw this report without the unanimous consent of the House? Will it not go into the permanent record as the report of the House committee?

Mr. MORRILL. Oh, no; not if unanimously withdrawn.

Mr. CARUTH. No individual member has a right to withdraw it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH] is so terribly anxious to make a fight upon a Union soldier, here is an old soldier who is ready for him. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I quote from the act of August 4, 1886, as cited in the report:

> That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension-rolls and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty * * * shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, or been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension of $36 per month.

That is the law as quoted in this report. Now, here is this letter of the Commissioner; and I want to call attention to its phraseology. While as a matter of law perhaps the Commissioner may be technically right, I say that the tone of this letter addressed to an old soldier seeking an increase of pension is, to say the least, discourteous.

Mr. CARUTH. Does the gentleman say that the Commissioner himself wrote that letter?

Mr. NELSON. Well, if it was written by a clerk without his knowledge, why all this fuss? If, on the other hand, the letter was written by the Commissioner, I say that he in his high position, drawing a pension of $100 a month and a salary of $5,000 a year, has no right to address a wounded Union soldier in this manner.

I want to read from this letter what is an insult to this old soldier, and it can not be got rid of by raising this tempest in a teapot. [Laughter and applause.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1888.

SIR: In your pension case above described you are advised that you are not entitled to an examination looking to an increase, as the evidence recently filed fails to show that you are so disabled by reason of gunshot wound of right shoulder that you can do no manual labor.

It may be that you can do no manual labor with the wounded arm, but there is no reason given why you can do no work with the other hand and arm.

If he can do no manual labor with the wounded arm, that is the language of the law and that is the spirit of the law. The spirit of the law was that if a man is disabled in one arm, or disabled to an extent equivalent to that, he is entitled to $36 a month. Yet this Commissioner writes to this old soldier that it may be he can not do any manual labor with the wounded arm, although he may be disabled from doing duty by using that arm, nevertheless it does not follow he is not able to do something with the other arm; and for that reason he would not grant him the humble privilege of going before an examining board. Is that your idea of courtesy? It is not mine. It is an insult on the part of the Commissioner to this old soldier which he had no right to indulge in.

Mr. CARUTH. Is that an insult for the Commissioner to say if you can not work with one arm you may be able to work with the other?

Mr. NELSON. It may not be from one equal to another, but for a man occupying the high position of Commissioner to use such language and to assign such reason for not granting the poor privilege to this old soldier of going before an examining board, it is an insult. It is not proper nor just for the Commissioner to indulge in any such tone.

Mr. CARUTH. Is it an insult to say he may be able to work with the other arm?

Mr. NELSON. If the gentleman wants to know it, I will say that if the Commissioner should address me as a private soldier in that way, if I were an applicant and had lost one arm, or was disabled in one arm in the late war, and he should tell me, "Mr. NELSON, you may be disabled in your left arm, but there is no evidence you can not do manual labor with your right arm, and therefore I will not allow you to go before the examining board," by heavens and the eternal God I should consider it an insult, and should answer it as it deserves. [Applause.] Are you satisfied? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Which one?

Mr. NELSON. I will yield to one or both.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to call your attention to the last lines of the report of the examination made by the Commissioner's own board——

Mr. ADAMS. That was my object.

Mr. CONGER. In which they say—

There appears to be no loss of sensation in hand or arm; there is almost complete loss of power, and great loss of motion, in the hand and the entire limb, to the extent that he can make no practical use of either, and in the opinion of the board, as it understands the term, there is total disability of the right hand and of the entire limb.

As the report of the committee states:

It is difficult to conceive a case coming more completely within the plain provisions of the act of August 4, 1886, which grants a pension of $36 a month to the soldier who, within its limitations, "shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow," "or been totally disabled in the same."

Take the law which gives a pension for an arm totally disabled; take this report of the examining board, made to the Commissioner, and it will be seen that he has not followed the law. No man can read the law and take that statement of the examining board and say that the Commissioner has followed the law.

Mr. NELSON. The gentleman is correct and I am immensely obliged to him. I feel like a man at camp-meeting. We read in the Holy Writ of how pious men were carried away by their emotions, and can it be expected, then, that we poor mortals in the Fiftieth Congress should not occasionally get excited?

The gentleman from Kentucky standing in the face of this law, standing in the face of the facts in this case, merely because the Senate committee saw fit to criticise in their report the action of the Commissioner in view of his action in going contrary to the report of the examining board, and in this matter there is no doubt the conduct of the Commissioner was susceptible of criticism on this account, I say the gentleman from Kentucky opposed the request of the gentleman from Kansas to withdraw this report.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. TAULBEE. Do you not know the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions as to the rating which he asks in the Pension Office, that the Commissioner's decision as quoted in the letter read was not based on the report of the examining board of that office, but is in perfect consistency with the rules of that office, the testimony being "lay" in its nature, which word the gentleman from Minnesota did not read, but which he pretended to read to the House; that because it was "lay" in its nature the re-examination was unauthorized under the rules adopted and carried out for many years in the Pension Office? I wish the gentleman in answering that would state why he omitted to read that portion of the report and attempted to create the impression upon the committee that the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions was based on the certificate of the examining board in the Pension Office.

Mr. NELSON. I yield now so much time as he may want to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE].

Mr. CHEADLE. I shall only want two or three minutes.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like first to hear an explanation of the gentleman as to why he left out a portion of that report.

Mr. NELSON. I want to answer the gentleman from Kentucky this: In the first place, the whole report has been read, and I did not undertake to read the whole report myself, but only to call attention to the substance of it, to which I wished to address my remarks. The report is already public property and before the House. In the next place, the private pension bills are passed here upon the theory that because of some technicality, because of some lapse in the law, or some missing link in the chain of evidence necessary to complete the claim it can not come within the strict meaning of the law, and hence the applicant must apply before this forum for relief; and if there ever was a case where the applicant should come and fairly ask relief, with the belief that it would be granted, this is just such a case.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now will the gentleman indulge me for a moment?

Mr. NELSON. For a question; but if the gentleman wants to make a speech he must take his own time.

Mr. TAULBEE. Very well; I will take my own time.

Mr. NELSON. If the gentleman wants simply to ask a question I do not object.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wanted to ask a question which the gentleman might construe as a speech, for it is in part a reiteration of my former question slightly enlarged.

Mr. NELSON. Very well; I shall be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to say that it is not competent for the gentleman from Minnesota to answer my interrogatory by saying that he did not read all of the report. He left out in the reading a part of that report, and a very essential part—one word, and one word only; but which word singularly enough absolutely changes the entire meaning of the letter in which it is embodied, and hence affects the whole report. Now I ask the gentleman the reason for that omission; and he attempts to evade the question by saying that the report is public property.

Mr. CHEADLE. Will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Chairman, I think there is enough in this case for us not to lose our temper and get out of humor in regard to it; and I want to say in the spirit of the greatest charity to the gentleman from Kentucky that the answer to the question submitted by him to the gentleman from Minnesota is contained in the report itself.

This man was examined, as the report shows, for an increase of his pension by the board of medical examiners; and the report was made by the board of the Pension Department, which is embodied in the committee's report also; and notwithstanding the fact that this report of the medical board states that there is a total disability of the right hand and of the entire limb, no increase was granted to the pensioner, and then subsequently——

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not presume the gentleman wants to be misunderstood by the committee, or to misunderstand the facts of the case himself. If he will reread the report he will find that the Commissioner of Pensions denies the claim for an examination which the pensioner seeks because the lay evidence filed in support of it does not show the disabled condition claimed, and on that very letter denying the examination the Senate committee makes the criticism of which complaint is made.

How can it be that the criticism is just when the examination has been had, and the report of that board is final, and the Commissioner acts upon it? If, then, the gentleman will examine again he will find that the examination is one that was had prior to the writing of the letter and upon which the Commissioner acted; and the purpose of that letter is to deny the examination, which the rules of the Pension Office and the circumstances did not justify or warrant.

Mr. CHEADLE. Let me say this to the gentleman from Kentucky, that he will find on an examination of this report that the act under which this man is pensioned is set forth in the report, and provides that any person on the pension-rolls, or person hereafter granted a pension, who was in the military or naval service and in the line of duty, and who, in the language of the law—shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow, or leg at or above the knee, or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension of $36 per month.

Now on the 27th day of April, 1887, a medical board of the Pension Department submitted a report, which it is not necessary to read in full, but the conclusion is in the following words:

There is almost complete loss of power, and great loss of motion, in the hand and the entire limb, to the extent that he can make no practical use of either, and in the opinion of the board, as it understands the term, there is total disability of the right hand and of the entire limb.

Subsequently thereto, when this increase was not granted, it is true the petitioner submitted lay evidence; but the point the committee of the Senate make is that under the finding and the report made by the medical board of the Pension Department there would be no question of fact that the pensioner is entitled to the rating of $36 a month, and because of the fact that on the 15th day of February, 1888, that is after the medical board of the Pension Department found he was totally disabled in the arm, and notwithstanding that there had been filed other lay evidence that he was totally disabled in the arm, and still the increase was refused, then this letter referred to here was written, and it was because of that fact that the report was couched in this language.

Mr. Chairman, I am very free to admit that there is not full and proper courtesy of expression in the report, such as there should be, and yet I want to state the fact that there is perfect heartlessness in the ratings of pensions under the law.

Mr. TAULBEE. I agree with you.

Mr. CHIPMAN. And I agree with you.

Mr. CHEADLE. And I say that it is only just that the attention of the country should be called to the fact that there is a perfect and utter disregard of the ratings under the law.

Mr. STRUBLE. Where do you locate the heartlessness?

Mr. CHEADLE. In the fact that when the medical board says a man is totally disabled, I say to this committee and the country that there ought to be but one thing for the Department to do, and that is to obey the law. When it does not, it is open to the criticism I have made.

Mr. STRUBLE. Where does the responsibility lie?

Mr. CHEADLE. It lies in the Pension Department. I want to say a word more.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CHEADLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I agree with the gentleman there is heartlessness; but in my judgment the heartlessness is in the law.

Mr. CHEADLE. It is not always in the law; it is in the utter disregard of the law. The Commissioner of Pensions himself draws a pension of $100 a month for physical disability, and in addition thereto this House accorded him a salary of $1,000 a year more than was authorized by law. The officers of a government by the people and for the people ought to be at least liberal in their construction of the laws of the land.

There are one hundred thousand pensioners of the number who are on the rolls to-day, as my colleague stated the other day, rated at from 3½ cents to 13 cents a day. This is a land flowing with milk and honey, and its Treasury is groaning beneath its weight of gold and silver, and the laws of the land, if liberally and faithfully construed, would have given this applicant $36 a month and kept this case out of the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CHEADLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. Of these one hundred thousand volunteers of whose rating the gentleman complains, I would be glad to have him state——

Mr. NELSON. I wish to interrupt this discussion.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to ask just one question.

Mr. NELSON. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky intends to make the point of no quorum on this bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. Not I.

Mr. NELSON. I mean the gentleman's colleague [Mr. CARUTH].

Mr. CARUTH. I say so long as we have this report, with these reflections upon a public officer, I do not propose to allow this bill to pass without my protest.

Mr. NELSON. Does the gentleman intend to insist upon a quorum?

Mr. CARUTH. I say that without a quorum it shall not pass.

Mr. NELSON. Do you mean to call a quorum?

Mr. CARUTH. I do.

Mr. NELSON. Under those circumstances, as there are other soldiers whose cases are on the Calendar and other gentlemen who have bills for soldiers which they desire to have passed upon, I am unwilling to stand in the way of those soldiers.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to say that I do not think the dignity of the Commissioner of Pensions if he were here present and could speak would demand the call of a quorum as against the sense of the House or the call of a quorum as against the sense of a majority of the members present. I do not think he would consider that necessary to vindicate his dignity.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORD. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FORD. What s the regular order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has the floor and is entitled to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise for the purpose of suggesting if the gentleman will agree to recommit this bill——

Mr. NELSON. That suggestion has been made before.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask the gentleman from Minnesota to yield to me.

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois five minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. When I read in the report the letter of the Commissioner I was struck by the word "lay," which I did not entirely understand at the time. I turned to the report and was informed that that expression referred to the testimony of neighbors and friends. But I wish the gentleman from Kentucky would take notice that the board of medical examiners had given the decision that this case came within the law; and in this report it is stated that this testimony, which is sufficient and ample, is supplemented by the evidence of mere neighbors and friends. To my mind the case comes very clearly within the law.

I object to a withdrawal of the report or a withdrawal of the bill. I do think we ought to guard ourselves against admitting the principle that a committee of either House of Congress has not the right to criticise an executive officer for a plain mistake or neglect of duty.

There is no question that the board of examiners did bring the case within the law. There is no question, in my mind, that when the Commissioner used that word "lay," intimating that the evidence was not the evidence of the medical board, as I understand it, he did overlook what had taken place in his office. There is no question, in my mind, therefore, that he is in some form and in some phrase amenable to criticism by either House of Congress that first takes cognizance of his action.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. ADAMS. Allow me to finish this point. The only question is, whether we shall, by our action, admit the theory that the House of Representatives or the other legislative body of Congress ought not to notice a clear dereliction of duty on the part of an executive officer. I am willing to admit there should be a certain decorum of language in all such criticisms, but that it should not be criticised and severely criticised, I shall never admit.

Mr. WASHINGTON. The gentleman says he thinks the House ought to reserve the right to criticise a public officer, and so do I; but does the gentleman think this fair criticism: "This impertinent communication?" Does the gentleman think that is fair and parliamentary criticism when applied to the chief of any division?

Mr. ADAMS. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the language which appears previous to that in the report, and I did not learn from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH] which particular phrase he objected to.

The committee criticised the Commissioner in this way:

> It is difficult to conceive a case coming more completely within the pla'n provisions of the act of August 4, 1886, which grants a pension of $36 a month to the soldier who, within its limitations, "shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow," "or been totally disabled in the same;" and it is still more difficult to conceive the indifference or the audacity of the official who, when the pensioner, having fruitlessly furnished the complete evidence above given, asks the privilege of further examination to substantiate his claims, is denied such privilege in the terms and for the reason following.

Now, I will admit that there should be a certain degree of decorum in all such matters, but I have not been informed either by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH], or anybody else, exactly what rules should be used in a report of Congress criticising an executive officer.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it not a fact that if, as you have stated, the medical board——

Mr. ADAMS. I have stated my impression. I have not pretended to perfect knowledge of the subject.

Mr. TAULBEE. If it is true that the medical board of the Pension Office has rated this claimant at $36 per month, is it not a fact that even though the Commissioner of Pensions should refuse to place him on the roll at that rate, it is perfectly competent for the claimant to appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it then becomes to take such jurisdiction of the matter on appeal as the Commissioner of Pensions originally had? And is it not true that that remedy has never been sought by this claimant?

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman answer a question in his turn?

Mr. TAULBEE. If I can; but ask me an easy one. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. Admitting that it is the right of the claimant to appeal, and even that in one sense it is his duty to appeal, yet if the medical board did bring his case clearly within the law, and the Commissioner of Pensions in his letter to the claimant clearly ignored that ruling, is not the Commissioner subject to criticism in some form? And does the fact that the soldier has the right to appeal take away from a committee of Congress the right to criticise the Commissioner?

Mr. TAULBEE. I will answer that question by stating——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] has expired.

Mr. NELSON. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish the gentleman would yield to me to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. NELSON. I have not the time. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] to make a request, and then we will end this discussion.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], but, not having the time, I of course submit to the rule.

Mr. MORRILL. It is very evident, Mr. Chairman, that we are wasting valuable time in this discussion and that we are accomplishing no good either for the soldiers of the country or for the Commissioner of Pensions. The request I desire to make is for unanimous consent that this report shall not be printed in the RECORD, and that all of this discussion which has taken place in regard to it shall also be withheld, so as to leave the matter as if the report had not been made, and then that the bill shall be considered upon a brief statement of the case which I will make. I think that ought to be satisfactory to all parties. It will let us out of this dilemma and let us go on with the regular business of the evening.

Mr. NELSON. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH] agree to that?

Mr. CARUTH. No, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. Why not? It is better for all concerned.

Mr. CARUTH. I will tell you why. This report is the report of a committee of this House. I will state what I want in this case and what I propose to stand by, not only now, but hereafter when the case comes up for consideration. That is that there shall be a report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions of this House withdrawing the language of this report, which I consider to be an insult to the Commissioner of Pensions. So long as that language remains unwithdrawn so long shall I fight this case.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the report.

Mr. CARUTH. The gentleman can take a vote of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and bring in a proper report here and I will not object to the passage of this soldier's claim.

Mr. MORRILL. That seems to be standing on a technicality.

Mr. CARUTH. It is not standing on a technicality. It is standing on right and on justice to a distinguished and faithful public officer.

Mr. NELSON. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I want to see whether I understand this case. I gather the facts to be that it is admitted upon all hands that it is the case of a soldier of the late war, honorably discharged and under the law probably, and in God's chancery actually, entitled to the relief proposed to be given by this bill.

Mr. CARUTH. If the gentleman will excuse me, I do not admit that proposition. I would like to have the record examined.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that it has been examined.

I understood it to be admitted, and it is so claimed on this side. But the gentleman says that this case shall not pass until some language in a report which he thinks reflects upon the dignity of the Commissioner of Pensions is modified by the committee. In the mean time the merits of the case are thrown aside and the soldier, who is entitled to this relief and to whom but for this criticism the relief would be granted, goes without the relief. If the gentleman wants to insist on that position, well and good.

Mr. NELSON. I am unwilling, Mr. Chairman, to take up further the time of the committee, so I move——

The CHAIRMAN. There is a motion pending.

Mr. NELSON. What is it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH] will please state his motion.

Mr. CARUTH. My motion is that this bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

Mr. NELSON. I object. That report, for the gentleman's satisfaction, will be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. NELSON. I withdraw the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is properly before the Committee of the Whole under the order.

Mr. CHIPMAN. The gentleman can not withdraw the bill; he is not on the committee.

Mr. NELSON. I then call the attention of the gentleman and the Chair to the fact that the motion to recommit is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is in error. The motion is that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. WHEELER addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield the floor?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, I yield the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] does great injustice to the gentlemen on this side of the House when he intimates—I might say asserts—that we are unwilling to pass the bill which allows a pension to the soldier whose case is now being considered.

The gentleman will remember that when it became apparent that the dignity of the House demanded that the improper language should be eliminated before action was had upon the report I urged that the committee should immediately rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, coupled with the request that said committee should immediately report it back, and that the bill should not lose its place on the Calendar.

I also called attention to the fact that a quorum of that Committee on Invalid Pensions was present, and they could make the report almost instantly, so that scarcely a minute would be occupied in the entire proceedings, and the bill could have been passed in half the time which has been consumed by the speech which he has made, and in which he will admit he has indulged in reflections from which he might with great propriety have abstained. But as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and other gentlemen have spoken on the bill—some insisting that the language in the report was entirely proper, some endeavoring to justify the objectionable wording of the report, and some having gone out of their way to criticise the distinguished soldier, General Black, who for three years has efficiently discharged the duties of Commissioner of Pensions—it has become necessary for us to examine the facts and circumstances which have brought about this unfortunate episode.

It seems to be admitted that the letter to the claimant was written by a clerk who is not in political sympathy with the Commissioner, General Black; that this letter, together with thousands of others, were placed before another clerk who with a stamp affixed General Black's name thereto, and that General Black never did, and in the nature of things, never could have seen the letter.

I presume every member of Congress knows that it is impossible for the Commissioner of Pensions to give his personal attention to this class of correspondence. To show the utter impossibility of the Commissioner signing these letters, I will state that I am informed that from 3,000 to 8,000 such communications leave the Pension Office every day.

Now, with these well-known and well-established facts before us, we are confronted with a report which sets out the letter to the claimant so as to convey the impression that the letter was written by and signed by the Commissioner in person, and that the verbiage was the language of his choice.

The report shows upon its face that the House committee adopted the Senate report, and the acting chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN], states that the objectionable language escaped the attention of the members of his committee, and he asks that the report be recommitted, so that a proper report may be prepared and submitted to the House. This is all that any man on his side of the House demands, and they will lend all possible aid in hastening this action.

Could any one ask us to do more for the pensioner, and would it be proper for us to do less than that to preserve the dignity of this House? Ought the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] do less than he proposes in preserving the dignity of his committee?

What is the language which some gentlemen call "mere criticism?" No one can deny but that the gentleman who is responsible for the report knew that, under all the circumstances of the case, General Black never could have seen the letter, and yet, immediately following the letter purporting to be signed by General Black, he proceeds to characterize it in these words:

> In this impertinent communication to this crippled soldier.

Will any gentleman say that such language is in keeping with the decorum which should govern Congress in referring to the action of prominent officials?

He then says:

> The Commissioner fails to give any reason why he presumes to restrict and render inoperative the plain provision of the law enacted for this soldier's benefit.

The report then proceeds to say that—

> No justifying reason can be given.

In other words, without any grounds or any evidence to justify it, he makes a grave charge against the official integrity of the Commissioner.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. What is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The question pending is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH] to lay the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Does the Chair entertain debate on that proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that debate is in order.

Mr. WHEELER. It is stated by the acting chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. CHIPMAN] that that report was adopted inadvertently, and he asks permission to have the report recommitted, because it is due to the dignity of the Commissioner and the dignity of this House that it be done.

Some gentlemen say there is nothing impertinent in this report made by a Republican committee of the Senate.

Mr. LIND. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir.

Mr. LIND. Is it not a fact that the chiefs of division in the Pension Office are in harmony with the Administration?

Mr. TAULBEE. No, sir.

Mr. WHEELER. Some are and some are not. It is stated and admitted by many gentlemen who are better informed of the facts than I am—and I am pretty well informed—that the clerks in the Pension Office who prepare these letters are very few of them in harmony politically with the Commissioner of Pensions. This case comes from what is called the middle division. I am told that all the clerks and all the chiefs of sections in that division belong to a political party not in harmony with the administration.

Mr. LIND. Is it not a rule in all the Departments that every letter written by an inferior clerk is read and approved by the chief of the division, and his initials marked in the corner of the letter before it is allowed to be placed before the head of the Department for his signature?

Mr. WHEELER. That may be the fact with regard to other Departments, but the gentleman knows that Commissioner Black has done more business since his accession to this office than any Commissioner who ever preceded him, and, besides, I am informed that the chief of the middle division also belongs to a party not in harmony with the administration.

Mr. LIND. That does not answer my question.

Mr. WHEELER. He has granted more pensions and done more for the soldiers than any Commissioner who ever held the office. The reports show that he has allowed some 56,000 more pension claims since he has been in office than any of his predecessors allowed in the same length of time.

Would gentlemen have a Commissioner who has supervised and directed this phenomenal amount of work forced to read and sign his name to each one of the thousands of letters sent out from his office every day?

Now, I say placing such a letter as that in a report coming before this House as though written by himself, and then criticising it as it has been criticised, is neither right nor proper to this officer; nor is it in harmony with the dignity and decorum of the House of Representatives.

But to return to the objectionable language of the report. After stating what the maker of the report asserts the law to be, it proceeds in these words:

> The Commissioner assumes the prerogative of disregarding the law in its application to a point so clear that it can receive no elucidation by argument or statement of fact; and in thus refusing to give the pensioner the rating to which the law entitles him the Commissioner is guilty of an inexcusable violation of its requirements.

This is a direct and unequivocal allegation that "the Commissioner has been guilty of an inexcusable violation of the requirements of the law." That is a direct charge against one of the highest officers of the Government that he has been guilty of an offense which is characterized as an inexcusable violation of the law.

Some gentlemen say it will obviate all objections if it be stricken out; but this has gone on the records of the House, and it can not be stricken out. It is a report coming from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. All the House asks is that the reports which are submitted to it for its action shall be proper, dignified, and worthy of the House of Representatives. That is all this House asks. They will be glad to be able to give the crippled soldier his pension, but it must be done in a regular and proper way.

Mr. NELSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Does the gentleman from Alabama propose to allow the dignity of this Democratic official at the head of the Pension Office to stand between the gratitude of the people of the United States and this crippled soldier?

Mr. WHEELER. No, sir; and no one here proposes to do so.

Mr. NELSON. Is he above criticism? Is he the sacred white elephant? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WHEELER. No, he is not above criticism. He is not above censure, nor does he desire to be so considered; but it is neither right nor proper nor just to him or to this House that such imputations as deface this report should be indulged in against him. To allow any such report to remain upon record would be a dereliction of duty on our part. For one I would not consent to it.

Mr. NELSON. But we will not consent to the old Union soldiers of the country being rebuked in the way they have been attempted to be in this matter.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman knows that in making the statement he does the gentlemen on this side of the House very great injustice. He is fully aware of the fact that those on this side of the House in sympathy with the Commissioner would be glad to pass this bill. All they ask is to have the matter presented in the regular and proper way. We do not want a report to be brought in this House containing charges which are equally uncalled for and unjust.

That is all we ask, that this officer shall not be insulted in this manner. If necessary I will move the committee rise so that the report may be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, so that the matter may be again reported to the House and we can pass the bill to-night. When the committee rises and we get into the House we can recommit this matter to the committee for immediate action, and if I can do so I will move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky. But as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] desires it, I will now yield him two minutes of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move that the committee rise?

Mr. WHEELER. I will withdraw that motion, and yield a minute to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I hope now, in the interest of peace and the saving of time, the report will be recommitted, as seems to be the desire on the other side.

I do not see that anybody is going to alter his position, or that anybody here is going to gain anything, by taking the other course.

If this committee has reflected upon the Commissioner of Pensions it is a Democratic committee, and a majority of his own party have sanctioned the reflection. I can not see, therefore, why there should be any division of party on this question. I do not see why the Republicans should interfere in this matter where a Democratic committee has sanctioned this report.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHEELER. I will yield another minute to the gentleman if he desires it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. A few moments longer.

Mr. CHIPMAN. If I can be recognized I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Now Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CARUTH. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Yes, if it is not a hard one. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARUTH. Was it not a Republican member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions who made the report to the committee in this case?

Mr. RYAN. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not know whether it is made by a Republican or a Democrat; but I will agree, if the gentleman wants me to do so, that it was a Republican. As I understand it the reports that come from that committee have to be authorized by the committee as a whole; and I do not presume that any member of any committee of this House would make a report to the House that was not authorized by the committee.

I have been informed, although I do not know personally whether that is correct or not, that this is the unanimous report of the committee.

What I was about to say, however, is this: That I can not see the least reason in the world why there should be the slightest partisan feeling, which seems to have cropped out on this question.

If a Democratic committee of this House has made such reflections upon a Democratic official as are improper, I do not see why we should grieve over it.

I do not see, I repeat, why there should be any division here at all on such a question; and I hope that my friend from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] will accept the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky to let the bill be recommitted and a new report made to the House.

Mr. WHEELER. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] who submitted this report to the House from the Committee on Invalid Pensions has stated his desire to withdraw it, and I think he should be permitted to do so.

Mr. CHIPMAN. He has no right to do so.

Mr. SPRINGER. The report is no part of this bill. It is the argument of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in support of its action in recommending the passage of the bill. If recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, it will be the duty of the committee to report it again; and they should give their reasons for the action they recommend, and in language that would not be objectionable, as the gentleman has indicated his desire to do.

I hope that will be done, but before that action is taken I desire to call the attention of gentlemen on the other side to the fact that this report is entirely inadmissible in a parliamentary sense, and ought not to have come into this House. I hope it was the result of inadvertence on the part of the gentleman who made the report, as I believe it was. It was certainly a manifest injustice to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. That committee can not be, and should not be, held responsible for the language of the report. The gentleman from Maine seems to assume that these reports are all authorized by the committee.

The fact is, as he well knows, that the committee authorizes the member to submit the report for a certain amount. That is agreed to by the committee, and the gentleman having charge of the case——

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. SPRINGER. Not now; I will complete my statement. The gentleman having charge of the case prepares the argument on it and brings it in here. That is the course of all the committees of this House, and the Committee on Invalid Pensions can not be held responsible for the particular argument which the gentleman supporting this case has submitted. That is my observation in all cases.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; for information.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does not the gentleman know, because he has been in Congress longer than I have and ought to know, that no member of a committee can make a report to this House without being authorized by his committee?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman has asked me a question which he can answer as well as I can. I had stated that before, and the gentleman if he had been paying attention to what I was saying would not have desired to ask this question. I stated the committee authorized the fact to be submitted and the amount to be allowed——

Mr. MILLIKEN. But the committee is responsible for every report submitted.

Mr. SPRINGER. And that the argument was supplied by the gentleman having charge of the case. The gentleman knows that is the practice in the House, and it was not necessary for him to interrupt me.

The report in which this objectionable language occurs is a Senate report; and as submitted to that body it was, I may say without being unparliamentary, in the language of the report itself, "impertinent." [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Gentlemen will pardon me. I think this is the first time this session that I have addressed the committee in regard to pension cases. I desire to address myself to this case, and am serious about it.

Gentlemen know well enough, every one who has had any experience with the Pension Office, that the number of letters from that office in a day goes into the thousand frequently, and it is utterly impossible for the Commissioner of Pensions to know the contents of the various letters that go out of that office. Gentlemen know, also, that cases based on rulings of officers of the Department come up to the Commissioner in a perfunctory way, and his name is signed by a stamp.

It is well known that it is impossible for the Commissioner of Pensions to understand the rulings upon all these cases. They come up from those constituted to make these reports, and his signing of them is merely official and perfunctory.

Now, who are the gentlemen in this office who make these decisions under the civil-service policy which has been adopted by this Government, and which has been carried out faithfully by this Administration? [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. STRUBLE. Now, you break us up!

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman will please be seated. I hope to wake you up. Of the officers in the Pension Office, more than 75 per cent. are Republicans, and were there when Commissioner Black took possession of the office; and under the civil-service system the Secretary of the Interior could turn every one of them out.

A MEMBER. He could not get along without them.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the old cry. There was a similar cry three years ago last fall, that we could not run this Government. We have proved we can. It is running well, and will continue in the same channel for the next four years. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Under this policy these gentlemen have been retained in the Pension Office when thousands of Democrats all over the country were fully competent and perfectly willing to take these places.

If there is any blame to be attributed to General Black it is that the subordinates in his office, who appear from this report to be incompetent, ought to have been removed long ago and competent Democrats put in their places.

Mr. ADAMS. Will my colleague yield to me——

Mr. SPRINGER. Not now, but later.

This letter, about which so much has been said, which seemed so impertinent to the Senate committee, was a ruling in rather forcible language to the effect that the claimant was receiving all the pension to which he was entitled. He was not denied an examination, but a re-examination. He had already had the examination provided by law. The report of that examination is set forth in this report. So it is not a case of denying him a hearing and examination. But he asked the re-examination of the case when no new evidence was brought forth to support it. That is all there is to it.

Now, if I had been writing the letter, or if the honorable gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] who brought in this report (a gentleman who is always amiable) had been writing it, either of us would perhaps have used several more polite phrases than are found in this letter; but we would have said substantially the same thing. There is really no ground of offense in the letter, and I hold that gentlemen are not justified, that this body is not justified, that the Senate is not justified in adopting such language toward a judicial officer as is found in this report.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, can not we have a vote without any more talk on this subject?

Mr. CHIPMAN was recognized, and yielded to Mr. DOCKERY.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that the discussion of this question has proceeded to sufficient length. The interests of other soldiers are to be considered and ought to be considered by this committee. Speaking frankly and candidly, I think there is nothing here but that can be easily explained and harmonized with proper respect to the Commissioner, to the Senate, and to the House of Representatives. I do not agree with some gentlemen who appear to find language that they esteem discourteous in the letter of the Commissioner to this claimant.

As a matter of fact, however, I do not imagine that the Commissioner ever saw that letter. We all understand that such letters are prepared by the clerks in the Pension Bureau, and that it is impossible for the Commissioner to have personal knowledge of the contents of all of them. But assuming that this is the letter of some clerk, I do not believe it warrants the criticism that has been made upon it by the Senate committee. But, Mr. Chairman, what is the situation here?

This is now the report, not of the Senate committee, but of a committee of our own body, presented by one of our most estimable members, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL], who, in my opinion, is incapable of intentionally doing an injury or an injustice to any man, whether in public or in private life. I do not believe that the Committee on Invalid Pensions intended to reflect improperly upon anybody. In other words, I think there is an entire absence of intention to wound or to offend anybody, except as it may appear in the report of the Senate committee, and of that I shall not speak.

So far as we are concerned here, I do not think there has been any intention to injure or to offend anybody. I do not believe there has been any intention, so far as this body is concerned, to reflect harshly upon the Commissioner of Pensions or unduly or unnecessarily to criticise him, and yet I think that the language of this report is not quite courteous. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in the interest of harmony, and in the interest of other pension bills that await consideration, I suggest that this case be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, the bill not to lose its place on the Calendar, and that the committee return it to the House with another report. I think this suggestion, if adopted, will settle this matter, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill take that course.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say this, that in all this debate there is one party who has been lost sight of; that is the soldier who wants this pension. I was perfectly astounded when my friend from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], a gentleman whom I consider without a peer intellectually in this Congress, stood up here and made the remark which he did.

The remark made by my legal friend from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] did not astonish me. I have seen men and I have seen men. [Laughter.] But that my friend from Minnesota should forget the soldier and think only of making a political point did astound me. It paralyzed me. [Laughter.] He is a man from whom I expect great things; great things in the enfranchisement of our trade and commerce; great things in favor of our great West; and I must say that after what took place here to-day, when we set up the chaplet of fame, the tribute of a country's gratitude and love, as the last thing upon which the eyes of that great hero who now lies dying may look upon, it astounded me that to-night any discussion, any irritation, any difference, should arise here upon the rights of the soldier.

Remember that General Sheridan lies dying, and remember that the day will come when General Black will lie dying.

Mr. NELSON. What about Casamer, this soldier?

Mr. CHIPMAN. I say give this man his pension.

Mr. NELSON. Let us give it to him to-night.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I say give it to him to-night. I do not care about this matter. General Black is so high, so good, so noble, that this report, which was not made by the majority of the committee or by the Democrats of the committee, will do him no harm.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is right.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Give him his pension now. I will vote for it. But why stop to spit venom on General Black? The day will come when you will be ashamed of your course in this matter. The day will come when you will stand over this man's tomb and pronounce eulogies on him.

Gentlemen, let us put this bill through. Do not take this soldier, who deserves a pension, and throw him back and forth in your political machine to be ground and destroyed. Let us give him his pension to-night.

Mr. WHEELER. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON].

Mr. GUENTHER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] has been recognized.

Mr. GUENTHER. I wish to know what has become of the request for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The request has never been stated, because the gentleman from Michigan took the floor.

Mr. GUENTHER. I thought it had been stated. Can it not be stated now? Mr. Chairman [Mr. DOCKERY in the chair], I renew the request that you made when on the floor.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The request, which will be stated when the gentleman from Tennessee yields the floor, was that the bill with the report be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, not to lose its place on the Calendar, and that the committee submit another report in lieu of the one now before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Before that question is put to a vote, I wish to state as a Democratic member of this House, and from what I have seen here, that there is no disposition among my brethren on this side to fail in doing justice to the soldier.

A MEMBER on the Republican side. We know all about that.

Mr. WASHINGTON. You may talk as much as you please; but the remark is true. I think we proved it pretty conclusively the other day when we passed one bill appropriating over $80,000,000 for pensions for the next fiscal year. But be that as it may, while the present bill is before us I want to enter my protest against its passage, even if the objectionable language which has been used in criticizing the Commissioner of Pensions be striken from the report. My reason for objecting to the passage of the bill is that this soldier has already had his pension under the law increased two or three times; and, as this report states, he is still entitled under the law, if he can prove a certain amount of disability, to a pension of $36 a month, which can be granted to him by the Commissioner of Pensions upon an examination by a proper medical board.

Now, if I understand anything about our special pension legislation, it is the intention that Congress should act specially on such cases only as are not provided for by general law. This case is provided for by law. This man has his opportunity under the law to have his pension increased to $36 per month. I say let him go to the Commissioner of Pensions and file his proof; let him go before a board of medical examiners; and let his case not be decided here on one-sided testimony or upon a sentimentality.

Mr. STRUBLE. Does not the gentleman understand that this man's case has already been presented in the Pension Office, and that the Commissioner has denied his application?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I do; but that does not put him outside of the law; that does not make this a special case. We had a similar case here one week ago—a case which came from this side of the House; and we did not find the members on the other side boiling over with enthusiasm to override the Commissioner and pass the bill.

Mr. STRUBLE. In view of a long line of precedents in this and prior Congresses, was not this claimant entitled to come here and ask for Congressional action?

Mr. WASHINGTON. While the general law upon the statute-book allows him an increase?

Mr. STRUBLE. But his application has been denied at the Pension Office.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Let him go and perfect his proof.

Mr. STRUBLE. A board of medical examiners has already declared him entitled to the increase.

Mr. WASHINGTON. But in the face of a letter of the Commissioner of Pensions which denies the application for an increase upon what seems to the Commissioner very good ground, you ask Congress upon this insulting report to override the action of the Commissioner——

Mr. STRUBLE. The point to which I am directing attention is that this man has the right to come here to Congress with his application for an increase, upon the denial by the Commissioner of the increase which he asks.

Mr. WASHINGTON. He has the right to come; but why should he not proceed in the regular way, and by making proof properly get the increase to which he may be entitled? Why should we in cases of this kind, where a man makes application for an increase, pass a special act in his behalf? In this case there is a law giving this man a pension of $36 a month, if he can prove a certain extent of disability; and upon this question the Commissioner of Pensions, with his able boards of examiners all over the country, is more competent to form a judgment than this committee and this House. I shall therefore protest against the passage of this bill in any shape.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

EMMA S. FREE.

The next business on the Private Calendar (which was called up for consideration by Mr. MORRILL) was the bill (S. 431) granting a pension to Emma S. Free, widow of Thomas S. Free, late major of the United States Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emma S. Free, widow of Maj. Thomas S. Free, deceased, late a major of the Tenth Regiment of Volunteers of the United States Army, at the rate of $25 per month, the same as was allowed by law to her husband at the time of his death.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 431) granting a pension to Emma S. Free, widow of Thomas D. Free, late major of the United States Army, respectfully report:

The report of the Committee on Pensions of the Senate sets forth fully the facts in this case as follows:

"Your committee, January 31, 1888, made the following report in this case:

"'The claimant is the widow of Thomas D. Free, whose rank was first lieutenant, Eleventh Regiment Colored Infantry. During his life the Pension Office allowed him a pension at the rate of $50 a month. After his death the widow was pensioned at the rate of $17 a month and $2 a month for each of her three children, commencing February 8, 1887. This bill is to pension her at the rate of $50 a month. It is stated that this amount is needed for the comfortable support of herself and family. What she is now receiving is the rate fixed by law and paid to all widows of first lieutenants.

"'The committee is not aware of any reason for a liberal discrimination in this case, and believing that as a precedent it would stimulate appeals for legislation of this kind, the bill is reported adversely, with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.'

"On the 9th of February, however, the bill was reconsidered and recommitted by reason of further information received by the committee.

"Major Free enlisted as a private in the Tenth Iowa Infantry July 31, 1861, and by exceptional and meritorious conduct won his way successively to the rank of major, which rank he held at the time of his discharge, March 22, 1866.

"The soldier served as first lieutenant from April 30, 1863, to July 30, 1865, when he was appointed major. The disability for which he was pensioned was incurred, in the language of the Pension Office, "about one month prior to his promotion to major, and while he was serving as first lieutenant and adjutant," so that, although he afterward served three years as major, his widow is only entitled under the present law to $17 a month, the pension allowed the widow of a first lieutenant.

"Major Free at the time of his death was drawing a pension of $50 a month on the ground of softening of the brain and insanity, consequent upon disease of the nervous system induced by wounds received at Milliken's Bend while in the line of duty. This loss of his mind occasioned heavy expense to his family for medical attendance, etc., and he was much of the time confined in the Dakota Asylum for the Insane.

"The widow is left without means of support with a family of three children, one of which is in an imbecile and helpless condition, the hereditary effect of its father's insanity.

"The Commissioner of Pensions in his last report makes the recommendation that 'rank subsequently acquired bona fide should be considered by the Commissioner in determining the amount of pension to be allowed.'

"Your committee, in consideration of the long and meritorious service of Major Free, who also was inspector-general of Mississippi, adjutant-general of the Vicksburg district, adjutant-general of Dakota, and who served in the Freedman's Bureau under General Howard, and in view of the terrible affliction that has been visited upon his child as a consequence of disabilities received in the service, and of the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions, recommends the passage of the bill as provided by its terms when originally introduced."

Your committee are unable to reach the same conclusions as the Committee of Pensions of the Senate and recommends that the bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting the words "twenty-five," and as amended that it do pass.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. HETTIE K. PAINTER.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 424) granting a pension to Mrs. Hettie K. Painter.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, as a similar bill has been already passed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

GEORGE PARK.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. MORRILL) was the bill (S. 1299) granting a pension to George Park.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Park, dependent father of William C. Park, Company H, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1299) granting a pension to George Park, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is adopted and the passage of the bill recommended.

SENATE REPORT.

The petitioner, George Park, alleges that his two sons, H. L. Park and William C. Park, both minors, enlisted in Company H, Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers. H. L. Park, the eldest, was killed in the battle of North Anna River, June 24, 1864, aged nineteen years. William C. Park was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness; returned to his regiment from hospital; was taken prisoner at the springing of the mine at Petersburgh, and sent to the prison at Danville, N. C., where he died January 6, 1865, aged eighteen years.

The mother is drawing a pension on account of the death of the eldest son, and the petitioner is advised that he can not be allowed a pension under existing laws because the mother is receiving a pension on account of the death of one of their deceased sons.

Petitioner is seventy-three years old; is unable to support himself without outside help; is troubled with varicose veins in his limbs and rheumatism in his shoulder-joints. The Commissioner of Pensions writes to the chairman of this committee in regard to this case:

"The parents had two sons, who were killed or died in the service. Unless the parents are living apart or at variance, the father can not be pensioned under the laws as they now exist."

F. Wessen deposes, August 22, 1886, that William C. Park worked for him for the last two years previous to enlistment, and that deponent paid his wages to the petitioner, amounting to about $40 a month.

October 13, 1866, said Wessen and one F. F. Hopkins made a joint affidavit; Wessen deposing that he employed William C. Park from July, 1860, to December, 1863, at which time he enlisted, and that he, Wessen, paid the father the son's wages, at the rate of $25 to $30 a month, the father being in delicate health and nearly dependent on the earnings of his son for the support of his family of wife and four children.

Hopkins deposes that he has known the father and family four years, and that the above statement is true in all respects.

Both deponents also state that the soldier left surviving one sister (Theresa), whose age on January 3, 1866, was five years.

This claim was rejected by the following indorsement:

"May 13, 1867. Rejected. The mother alive."

In view of all the facts in this case, your committee recommend the passage of the bill which is herewith submitted.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

VIRTUE SMITH.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. MORRILL) was the bill (S. 1957) granting a pension to Virtue Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law, the name of Virtue Smith, widow of David W. Smith, late a private in Company A, of the First Regiment of Minnesota Volunteers, and to pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1957) granting a pension to Virtue Smith, submitted the following report:

The claimant is the widow of David M. Smith, late of Company A, First Regiment Minnesota Volunteers. She filed an application for pension in 1880, which was rejected "on the ground that the soldier's death from disease of lungs was not a result of the alleged wound or of the service."

The soldier was pensioned in 1867 at $6 per month, for gunshot wound of right elbow-joint; increased from November 9, 1872, to $8; increased from August 4, 1875, to $10 per month; gunshot wound of right elbow, right thigh, and nervous debility, and prostration resulting from wounds.

His wounds were received in service in Minnesota, and he suffered greatly in consequence of a nervous shock, not only from his wounds, but from lying thirty-six hours in the grass under the fire of the Indians.

Mrs. Dr. Edson, a respectable physician of Washington, D. C., testifies to her acquaintance with him for many years prior to his death. His food did not assimilate, and he wasted away. There were several medical examinations, and the reports all refer to his nervousness, suffering, and physical depreciation in consequence of his wounds. There was a special examination had, at which Dr. St. Clair testifies that he died of softening of the brain, which was a result of his prostration and suffering, and there is a large amount of testimony corroborating this conclusion.

The conclusion of the special examiner is that the soldier was not suffering from phthisis pulmonalis, but that the death cause was white atrophic softening or degeneration of the brain, due primarily to defective innervation, as a result of the anchylosis of the elbow, and secondly to age and mental avocations of the soldier.

The report of the health department of Washington, where he died, is: "Cause of death, wounds in Army."

Dr. Reyburn says he died of consumption, and this is the basis of the Pension Office rejection.

The committee is at a loss to see how any one, reading a history of his case, could come to any other conclusion than that he died in consequence of his wounds, after years of suffering.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN LINSLEY.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. MORRILL) was the bill (S. 2332) granting a pension to John Linsley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Linsley, father of Robert Harrell, alias Harrid, deceased, late a private in Company E, Eighty-first Regiment of United States Colored Troops.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2332) granting a pension to John Linsley, submit the following report:

The claimant is the father of Robert Harrell, late a private in Company C, Eighty-first Regiment United States Colored Troops, who died in service of diarrhea December 4, 1864. The father is nearly eighty years of age, almost blind, and utterly destitute. The Pension Office rejected the claim on the ground that it was not shown that the claimant was dependent on the soldier at the time of death. He is now dependent. It might be further stated that claimant gave three sons to the Union Army.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES H. ORDWAY.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. GALLINGER) was the bill (H. R. 8762) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Ordway.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Charles H. Ordway, late a private in Company H, Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers, from $35 to $50 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The report of the committee (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8762) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Ordway, having considered the same, report as follows:

Charles H. Ordway was a private in Company H, Seventh New Hampshire Volunteers, and was wounded at the charge on Fort Wagner, Charleston Harbor, July 18, 1863, receiving a flesh wound from a shell, and also by being struck by a ball which entered the chest and lodged in the right lung, where it still remains. That lung is but little used, and the right arm is partially paralyzed, the wound remaining open.

Soldier was pensioned at $24 per month, which rate was increased by special act in 1882 to $36 per month. To give a clear idea of the present condition of claimant the following affidavits from two distinguished surgeons are given:

"239 BOYLSTON STREET, BOSTON, MASS., March 15, 1888.

"I attended Charles H. Ordway in the Boston City Hospital in October, 1887, for two weeks and four days. I operated on him for necrosis of a rib and removed a sequestrum from the pleural cavity. A sinus of 6 or 8 inches in length extended up into the lung; air and pus came from it. I was obliged to resect a sound rib to reach and remove the sequestrum. He had exhibited great endurance to have lived through this condition for twenty years.

"Now he has a slight necrosis of the edge of the excised rib; much pus still flows from the sinus. He holds up well, but the prognosis for complete recovery is long and indefinite.

"DAVID W. CHEEVER, M. D.

"COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
"Suffolk County, ss:

"BOSTON, March 16, 1888.

"Then personally appeared the within-named David W. Cheever and made oath that the foregoing statement by him subscribed was true.

"Before me,
"[SEAL.] GEORGE A. SAWYER,
"Notary Public."

I, Granville P. Conn, of Concord, in the county of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire, on oath depose and say: That I am a physician and surgeon, and have been in the active practice of the same in the city of Concord aforesaid since 1863; that I have known Charles H. Ordway, of this city, for more than fifteen years; that said Ordway has been under my care and supervision from time to time during this period; that said Ordway was wounded in the right side during his service in the United States Army, and now carries a ball in that side; that said bullet when it entered the side struck the edge of a rib, which became diseased, causing an open sore more than ten years since; that the abcess did not heal by reason of the diseased bone; that last October (1887), by my advice, said Ordway entered the City Hospital in Boston, Mass., and endured a severe and dangerous operation in having a portion of the diseased rib removed; that since his discharge from said hospital he has again come under my care; that the wound is still open, and, in my opinion, it will remain in substantially the same condition so long as he may live; that at present it discharges full 3 ounces of pus per diem; that the cavity is so situated that considerable portion of this pus must be removed by a tube and pump by his wife or some other attendant, and that he has and will require this aid and assistance from some one, not only to dress the wound, but also in many other ways in order to render him comfortable.

"I further depose and say that I have no interest whatever in said Ordway's claim for an increase of pension.

"GRANVILLE P. CONN, M. D."

"CONCORD, N. H.

"MERRIMACK, ss:

"Personally appeared before me, register of probate court, the same being a court of record within and for said county, Granville P. Conn, and subscribed and made oath that the foregoing affidavit by him so subscribed is true according to his best knowledge and belief, and I further certify that the said Granville P. Conn is a practicing physician in good professional standing, and that said affidavit is in his handwriting, and that I have no interest, direct or indirect, in the prosecution of said claim.

"Witness my hand and seal of said court this 19th day of March, A. D. 1888.

"[SEAL.] JOHN P. NUTTER,
"Register of Probate Court for Merrimack County, N. H."

The Pension Office is unable to give relief in this case, as soldier does not require the constant attention of another person, which would entitle him to $50 per month, but he does require attention a portion of the time, for which no provision is made in the general laws. Besides this he is a great sufferer, with a painful disability, incurable in its nature, and which makes life a constant burden.

Your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty" in the sixth line and substituting therefor the words "forty-five," and that as amended the bill do pass.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having taken the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House having had under consideration the Private Calendar under the special order, had directed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

The bill (H. R. 8762) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Ordway, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment, was considered, the amendment adopted, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendments, were severally considered, ordered to a third reading; and being read the third time, were passed; namely:

A bill (S. 1146) granting a pension to L. J. McGoffin;

A bill (S. 1037) granting a pension to the infant children of Michael A. Moran;

A bill (S. 2167) granting a pension to Mary E. Woodward;

A bill (S. 1299) granting a pension to George Park;

A bill (S. 1957) granting a pension to Virtue Smith; and

A bill (S. 2332) granting a pension to John Linsley.

The bill (S. 431) granting a pension to Emma S. Free, widow of Thomas S. Free, late major of the United States Army, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment, was considered, the amendment adopted, and the bill as amended read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 2157) granting an increase of pension to Theodore F. Casamer, reported from the Committee of the Whole with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was considered and the recommendation of the committee concurred in.

The recommendation of the Committee of the Whole that the bill (S. 434) granting a pension to Mrs. Hettie K. Painter be indefinitely postponed was agreed to.

Mr. CHIPMAN moved to reconsider the several votes taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is a motion to go into Committee of the Whole, or else a motion to adjourn.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to make a brief statement before withdrawing the demand for the regular order.

I am, as gentlemen know, a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and have not asked for recognition during these sessions, while a great many gentlemen whose bills I have reported have been recognized to get them considered.

The next bill on the Calendar is in behalf of a woman who is eighty-four years of age, and in extreme destitution, and I hope the House will allow me to call it up to be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL], but will endeavor to recognize the gentleman during the course of the evening.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

GRISWOLD ROGERS.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8984) granting a pension to Griswold Rogers, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws, the name of Griswold Rogers, late a private in Fourth Company, Third Regiment Connecticut Militia, in the war of 1812.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent now to make a brief statement embodying the substance of the report in order to save the time of the House, and let the report be printed in the RECORD.

This claimant is ninety-two years of age, and served in the war of 1812. The records of the War Department do not show service of sufficient length of time to entitle him to secure his pension under the general law; but there are affidavits of those who served with him in his company and in engagements to show that he did serve the length of time required. The trouble is that there is some defect in the records.

Mr. WASHINGTON. How long did he serve?

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut. He served seventeen days, and the law required only fourteen days' service.

Mr. DOCKERY. He can not live long to enjoy it, and I hope it will be granted.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut. He is now supported by charity.

The report (by Mr. BLISS), which was ordered to be printed, is as follows:

The records of the Departments show that the claimant served in Capt. J. Manwaring's Company, Connecticut Militia, war of 1812, and was paid by the United States Government for a period of eleven days, from August 15 to 25, 1814. He was granted a bounty-land warrant for 160 acres of land by the Pension Bureau, because of his military service. In addition to the above service he claims to have been in an engagement with the British at Rope Ferry Bridge, near New London, Conn., and to have assisted in the repulse of the enemy when an attempt was made to burn the shipping at Essex.

The Third Auditor, United States Treasury Department, reports that there is no record on file of either of these engagements, but an examination of the files of newspapers of that time shows that the engagements took place as alleged, and a full account of the repulse at Essex is given on pages 534 and 535 of Connecticut Historical Collections, by John Warner Barber (1836).

The fact that the claimant participated in the battle of Rope Ferry Bridge is testified to by Anson Smith, of Circleville, Ohio, who was present and took part in the engagement as a volunteer; he states that the claimant served with the members of Captain Manwaring's Company at the time.

The claimant is now ninety-two years of age, and is in need of assistance. He is represented to your committee as a man of credibility and truth, and in every way worthy of the assistance of the Government.

Your committee are of the opinion that the bill should pass, and return it to the House with such recommendation.

There being no objection, the bill was considered and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROBERT M'CLEAN.

Mr. GLASS. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1069) granting a pension to Robert McClean, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert McClean, late a private in Company F, Second Illinois Cavalry Regiment.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report may be dispensed with, and that it be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) is as follows:

Robert McClean was enrolled July 30, 1861, in Company F, Second Regiment Illinois Cavalry Volunteers, and honorably discharged June 22, 1865.

On April 28, 1879, he filed application for pension, alleging that he contracted bronchitis at La Grange, Tenn., November 30, 1862, and was sent to College Hospital, La Grange, Tenn., where he remained under treatment of Dr. McNeal, surgeon in charge, until June 25, 1863; also was in general hospital, Vicksburg, Miss., June 1, 1865, until discharge. The claim was rejected by the Pension Department on the ground of inability of claimant to furnish medical evidence showing treatment therefor in service or soon after discharge, and for the further reason that the lay testimony as to origin is unsatisfactory. The medical records are very imperfect and many of them are not on file. However, they show that he was in general hospital, Memphis, Tenn., January 19, 1863, and at La Grange, Tenn., December 2, 1862, to June 30, 1863, and at Vicksburg, Miss., June 11, 1865, and was discharged from service June 23, 1865.

There is abundance of evidence to show that the soldier was sound at the time he enlisted, and that he was sick a considerable of the time during his term of service; that he was in bad health at the date of his discharge, and that he has been troubled with bronchitis and general debility almost continuously ever since. Jones Green testifies that he was in hospital with soldier at Vicksburg; that he had very bad health, constantly coughing as though his lungs were badly affected. The doctor called his malady bronchitis.

While the medical evidence as to the disease having been incurred as stated is quite meager, yet the committee believe that there is sufficient evidence to justify a favorable report, and we therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GLASS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. ANNA BUTTERFIELD.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8761) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Butterfield.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Anna Butterfield, dependent mother of James A. B. Butterfield, late a lieutenant in the Second Illinois Cavalry.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 7 strike out "lieutenant" and insert "sergeant."

Mr. GALLINGER. I have myself considered this case, and the entire committee have acted upon it. It is the case of a dependent mother, and I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read in part.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I withdraw the request for the reading of the report in full.

The report in full is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8761) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Butterfield, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The beneficiary named in the bill is the mother of James A. B. Butterfield, who enlisted August 8, 1861, in Company A, Second Regiment Illinois Cavalry, and was discharged August 13, 1864. He remained in Louisiana, as the mother is advised, in the service of the Government, until April, 1865, when he took passage on the steamer Sultana, and with about 1,700 other sick and discharged soldiers he lost his life in the explosion of said steamer near Memphis, Tenn., April 27, 1865, while under charter by the Government.

In 1870 or 1871 she placed in the hands of Hon. James G. Blaine, letters and other papers from the soldier showing her dependence upon him, to be used as evidence in a bill he introduced in the House for her relief. Unfortunately these papers were lost or misplaced, and although Mr. Blaine and others have made search for the same, they have not been found. She is thus deprived of the proof usually required by Congress in the consideration of private bills, but the existence as well as their loss is shown by letters of Mr. Blaine and others.

The mother, while a widow, raised and educated the soldier out of her small earnings as a mill operative, having no other income from any property or otherwise. He contributed to her support while in the Army, and until his untimely death. She is now eighty-eight years of age, unable to support herself by labor, and is compelled to subsist on $1.25 a week, her only income from a small amount on deposit, which she laid up from her hard labor in her younger days, and which is rapidly growing less year by year.

Your committee are of opinion that the long services of the son, and her extreme old age, coupled with poverty, entitle her to favorable consideration at the hands of Congress, and therefore unhesitatingly report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "lieutenant" in line 7 and inserting therein instead the word "sergeant."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. JUDITH DEIG.

Mr. CARUTH. I ask unanimous consent to consider at this time the bill (H. R. 9364) granting a pension to Mrs. Judith Deig.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mrs. Judith Deig on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The Clerk commenced to read the report (by Mr. HUNTER).

Mr. NELSON (interrupting the reading). I wish to ask whether that report is courteous to the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. CARUTH. It is.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Let us hear it read.

Mr. NELSON. I think there is no necessity for that. I do not want to punish the soldier in this case in order to punish the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the report.

There was no objection.

The report in full is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9364) granting a pension to Judith Deig, submitted the following report:

Andrew Deig was a resident of the town of Lebanon, Ky., and joined the home-guard company of Lebanon. The rebel general John H. Morgan having invaded Kentucky, and threatening Lebanon, the company of which Deig was a member was called into action, and while fighting the battles of his country, although not regularly mustered into the service, the said Deig was, on the 12th day of July, A. D. 1862, wounded by a gunshot, and from this wound he next day died.

The widow, Mrs. Judith Deig, applied for a pension, but her claim was rejected on the ground that, while her husband was killed fighting the battles of his country, he had never been mustered into the Army, consequently there was no law under which the claim could be allowed. Congress has been in the habit of providing for such cases by special acts.

This is a meritorious case. The widow is poor and needy, and your committee report the bill favorably and recommend its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CARUTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10.30 p. m. having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to declare the House adjourned until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. ABBOTT: A bill (H. R. 10283) for the relief of J. Q. St. Clair—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BELDEN: A bill (H. R. 10284) for the relief of Mary A. Kelley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 10285) granting a pension to Rebecca Stone—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CANNON: A bill (H. R. 10286) for the relief of Richard Guilliford—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DAVIS: A bill (H. R. 10287) granting a pension to Sylvia C. Dunham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FINLEY: A bill (H. R. 10288) to remove charge of desertion against Rufus M. Kinser—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10289) granting a pension to Miss Emily Romine—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10290) directing the Secretary of War to correct his records in the case of Lieut. Joseph T. W. Barnitt—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HUNTER: A bill (H. R. 10291) granting a pension to Jane Jackson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PEEL: A bill (H. R. 10292) for the relief of John N. Hays—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10293) for the relief of Standwix H. Mayfield—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10294) for the relief of Andrew Deans—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HUNTER: A bill (H. R. 10295) granting a pension to George W. Prickett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PEEL: A bill (H. R. 10296) for the relief of S. S. Stearns—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROBERTSON: A bill (H. R. 10297) for the relief of William B. Smith—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PERKINS: A bill (H. R. 10298) granting a pension to James Radley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10299) granting an increase of pension to Michael Shirkey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROGERS: A bill (H. R. 10300) for the relief of Simon T. Irvin—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. D. TAYLOR: A bill (H. R. 10301) for the relief of Emily Cross—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. E. J. TURNER: A bill (H. R. 10302) granting a pension to Lucy A. Nicholson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURNETT: Petition of the Clinton-Turnverein, relative to foreign immigration—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CLARDY: Resolutions of the Missouri State Medical Association, asking for Federal control of the quarantine stations—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, protest of the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis, Mo., against House bill 4923, to create a national bureau of harbors and waterways—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: Petition of heirs of Fielding Kay, of Gordon County, Georgia, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to House bill 9817, granting a pension to William H. Reynolds—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRAIN: Petition of M. J. Mulcahy and 69 others, citizens of Galveston, Tex., for the investigation of certain charges against officials of the United States district court for the eastern district of Texas, etc.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, letter from M. J. Mulcahy, of Galveston, Tex., relative to the alleged murder of John P. Graham by W. R. McCullough on the high seas—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. A. C. DAVIDSON: Papers in the claims of William A. Kelley, of Robert Milling, of George M. Campbell, of Moody H. May, of John M. Leech, of Joseph H. Peples, of Joseph Blake, of John M. Hays, of S. H. Mayfield, of Andrew Deans, and of Philip S. Fulford, of Alabama—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. S. HENDERSON: Petition of J. R. Cline and others, citizens of Catawba County, North Carolina, for the passage of a bill to eradicate pleuro-pneumonia—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HOOKER: Petition of Mattie S. Whitney, administratrix, for payment of war claim—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LEE (by request): Petitions of Charles O. Embrey, for estate of Tabitha A. Waugh, and of W. A. Bickers and John Bickers, administrators of James Bickers, of Virginia, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition for the relief of Arthur Gunnell—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition in favor of House bill 8381—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LONG: Petition of Charles E. French, of Boston, Mass., concerning the public debt—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PEEL: Petition of Samuel Foster, of Rogers, Ark., for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of L. C. Moss, of Newton County, and of Mary A. Wisener, of Washington County, Ark., for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PHELAN: Petition of John Warren, administrator of James Pankey, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of W. T. Beard and others, for the passage of the Chace copyright bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Petition of W. S. Armitage, of Verona; of Mrs. A. E. Baron, and of the representatives of M. Coyle, of Croghan; of M. S. Wood, of Clinton; of A. Bickford, and of M. Tipple, of Camden; of W. H. Nelson, and of O. S. Kenyon, of Taberg; of G. Weldon, of Prospect; of representatives of S. R. Howe, of Oriskany Falls; of J. H. Wilcox, of Port Leyden; and of Fred. J. Glendale, and of F. J. Crandall, of Glendale, N. Y., for relief—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. W. L. WILSON: Paper in the claim of H. C. Worthington—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The following petition in favor of House bill 9716, for the better protection of free labor from convict labor, was received and referred to the Committee on Labor:

By Mr. RYAN: Of Knights of Labor of Kansas.

The following petitions for the repeal or modification of the internal-revenue tax of $25 levied on druggists were received and severally referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. JACKSON: Of druggists and physicians of Rochester, Pa.

By Mr. TOOLE: Of sundry citizens of Montana.

The following petition for the more effectual protection of agriculture, by the means of certain import duties, was received and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. YARDLEY: Of farmers of Montgomery County, Pennsylvania.

The following petitions, indorsing the per diem rated service-pension bill, based on the principle of paying all soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war a monthly pension of 1 cent a day for each day they were in the service, were severally referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

By Mr. CONGER: Of L. Gill and 45 others, members of R. L. Clingan Post, No. 203, Grand Army of the Republic, of Minburn, Iowa.

By Mr. PEEL: Of citizens of Newton County, Arkansas.

The following petitions, praying for the enactment of a law providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy, were referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. HALL: Of 180 citizens of Mercer and Crawford Counties, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. STEPHENSON: Of 27 citizens of Price County, Wisconsin.

The following petition for an increase of compensation of fourth-class postmasters was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads:

By Mr. ROBERTSON: Of J. M. Odom and other citizens of Louisiana.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 2, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CENSUS COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. WASHINGTON on the Select Committee on the Eleventh Census to fill existing vacancy.

FURNITURE OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the unexpended balance of appropriation for furniture and repairs of furniture in public buildings for 1888, and transmitting an estimate from the Supervising Architect of appropriation to be immediately available therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CREE INDIANS, MONTANA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with inclosures, a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommending legislation for the relief of the Cree Indians, Montana Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL STATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7222) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish agricultural stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the act supplementary thereto," with amendments by the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. HATCH]. The amendments which have been made to this bill by the Senate are merely verbal. The Senate requests a committee of conference. I think the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, will verify what I have said; and, if so, I ask that the amendments be concurred in.

Mr. HATCH. This bill is simply to correct an error or an omission in the original act in relation to the acceptance of the act known as the experimental-station act on the part of certain States whose Legislatures have been in session since the passage of the act. The original act allowed, under certain circumstances, the acceptance to be made by the governors of the State. Georgia and perhaps one or two States have had adjourned sessions of their Legislatures, and there has been some trouble about the construction of the act. This is simply to correct that; and the amendments placed upon the bill by the Senate, as the gentleman from Georgia has stated, are simply amendments. I hope the House will concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move concurrence.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to concur in the amendments of the Senate. Is the reading of the amendments requested?

The reading of the amendments was not requested; and the question being put, they were concurred in.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TENNESSEE NEAR CHATTANOOGA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7564) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Chattanooga, Tenn., with amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in. The bill contains all the usual provisions of a bridge bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the amendments demanded?

Mr. BURROWS. How do the amendments affect the bill?

Mr. CRISP. There is no material change. The amendments are not long, and if the gentleman desires they can easily be read.

Mr. BURROWS. I do not care to detain the House.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TENNESSEE NEAR GUNTERSVILLE, ALA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8623) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, one end of that bridge will be in my district. I have examined the bill and it is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in?

Mr. BURROWS. What bill is that?

The SPEAKER. It is a bridge bill.

Mr. BURROWS. The same one that was up a few minutes ago?

The SPEAKER. Another one.

There being no objection, the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS STATEN ISLAND SOUND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5929) to extend the time of the completion of a bridge across Staten Island Sound.

Mr. CRISP. I ask that the amendment of the Senate to that bill be read, and I ask unanimous consent that it be concurred in.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line —, after "eighty-six," insert "but this act shall have no other effect whatever than to operate as if the time herein mentioned had been embraced in the said act."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally read twice, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 287) to quiet the titles of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill (S. 2986) to incorporate the American Historical Association—to the Committee on the Library.

Joint resolution (S. R. 8) providing for the appointment of a commission to select a site for a naval station on the Pacific coast—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BOWDEN, for three days, commencing on Monday next, on account of important business.

To Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana, for three weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. SCULL, for five days, from June 4, on account of important business.

To Mr. GLASS, for two weeks, on account of business.

To Mr. MCCLAMMY, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. GALLINGER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to extend his remarks of yesterday in the RECORD.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WADE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw the evidence filed by E. R. Shipley, late postmaster in Springfield, Mo., in his claim for relief under special bill in the Forty-ninth Congress.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 615) for the relief of James B. Mitchell; and

A bill (H. R. 4735) for the relief of Douglas Chapman.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSON, MICH.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I ask unanimous consent to take from the files of the House for present consideration the bill (H. R. 8592) for the erection of a public building at Jackson, Mich.

Mr. HATCH. I must call for the regular order. I have had a few minutes yielded to me for the purpose of calling up the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I ask only one minute.

Mr. HATCH. I would be very glad to yield to the gentleman from Michigan and other gentlemen, but I have only a limited time under my control, and I am compelled to insist on the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HATCH. I ask to dispense with the morning hour for the presentation of reports.

Mr. WILKINS. I hope the gentleman will also make a request for general leave to file reports with the Clerk.

Mr. HATCH. I ask also that members desiring to present reports may file them with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] asks unanimous consent that the morning hour for the presentation of reports be dispensed with, and that gentlemen having reports may file them with the Clerk for reference to the appropriate Calendar. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

ISSUE AND REGULATION OF A NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10303) to revise and consolidate the laws relating to the issue and regulation of a national currency secured by United States bonds; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT DECATUR, NEBR.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8841) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Decatur, Nebr.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS TOMBIGBEE RIVER, IN ALABAMA.

Mr. CRISP also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9610) to authorize the Birmingham, Selma and New Orleans Railroad Company to build a bridge across the Tombigbee River, in Alabama; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. CRISP also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9619) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at some accessible point within 1 mile north and 1 mile south and east of the mouth of the Kansas River; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. CRISP also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with amendments of the Senate, recommending concurrence therein, a bill (H. R. 2528) authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the Red River of the North by the North Dakota and Pacific Railway Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, NEBRASKA CITY, NEBR.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2674) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Nebraska City, Nebr., and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS CUMBERLAND RIVER.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1525) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Cumberland River between Burnside, Ky., and Carthage, in Tennessee, or the South Fork of said river between Burnside and Tateville, Ky.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF CHIEFS OF DIVISION, GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Mr. HUDD, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9422) to regulate and increase the compensation of chiefs of division in the General Land Office; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH MOUNT VERNON ARSENAL RESERVATION, ALABAMA.

Mr. MAISH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 8632) granting the right of way to the Mobile and Birmingham Railway Company across the Mount Vernon arsenal reservation, in Mobile County, Alabama; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD BRIDGE, FORT SMITH, ARK.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 9816) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, Ark.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LUCY M. SWINNEA AND MARY E. HANSERD.

Mr. STOCKDALE, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8127) for the relief of Lucy M. Swinnea and Mary E. Hanserd; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

On motion of Mr. SOWDEN, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6100) for the erection of a public building at New London, Conn., and the bill was laid on the table.

WILLIAM GAFFER AND OTHERS.

Mr. MACDONALD, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9234) for the relief of William Gaffer and his legal representatives and assigns; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. STEELE. I demand the regular order, which I believe is the hour for consideration of bills called up by committees.

The SPEAKER. But the rule provides that immediately after the first morning hour it shall be in order to make a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills or revenue bills. If that motion be not agreed to, then the consideration hour will begin.

Mr. STEELE. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will allow us to have this morning hour, which we have not had since February 8. There are two or three very important matters from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman ought to make the request at some time when it will not delay the agricultural appropriation bill, which ought to pass at once.

Mr. STEELE. There can only be a delay of one hour.

Mr. HATCH. I have not an hour at my disposal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills.

Mr. STEELE. If this motion be agreed to, will it dispense with the morning hour for the consideration of bills from committees?

The SPEAKER. It will not, unless the House should again go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of some other matter.

Mr. STEELE. I hope, then, we may have the consideration hour after the agricultural bill is disposed of.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. MCCREARY in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the first general appropriation bill in order, being the bill (H. R. 10233) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with and that all general debate upon the bill may be considered as closed.

There being no objection, the order requested by Mr. HATCH was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the bill by paragraphs for consideration under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Laboratory—Chemical division: For chemical apparatus, chemicals, laboratory fixtures and supplies, purchase of samples, and necessary expenses in conducting special investigations, including necessary traveling expenses, labor, and expert work in such investigations, $6,000: Provided, That the accounting officers of the United States Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow credit to Norman J. Colman, Commissioner of Agriculture, in the sum of $1,809.16, on his account for "laboratory" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, disallowed by the First Comptroller as per his report of adjustment of laboratory account numbered 247504, dated December 19, 1885.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. I do this for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of this bill [Mr. HATCH] the reason for the proviso just read.

Mr. HATCH. My attention was diverted for a moment. What is the proviso?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I refer to the proviso giving a credit to the Commissioner of Agriculture, as I understand, against the ruling of the First Comptroller. It seems to be in the nature of a claim; and I would like to know the reason for the provision.

Mr. HATCH. This is not a claim at all. A portion of a fund appropriated to one division was expended in another. This is simply a transfer of the sum stated from the laboratory fund to another fund indicated in the decision of the Comptroller. The question is merely one of book-keeping; this is not a claim at all. There is not a doubt that this money was expended in good faith, though expended in the wrong division. The effect of this proviso is to remedy the difficulty which has thus arisen in the matter of accounts.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I renew the amendment for the purpose of addressing an inquiry to the gentleman in charge of this bill. I find that on page 15 there is noted an increase of salaries to the amount of $9,230. I would be glad to know what salaries are increased and the necessity for such increase.

Mr. HATCH. There has been an adjustment and rearrangement of some of the salaries. If the gentleman will read the report he will find that the increase as to a part of these salaries is apparent, and as to another part actual.

Mr. CANNON. I have the report in my hand, and have consulted it. It states:

> There has been a readjustment and partial equalization of salaries in several of the divisions, which show an increase on account of salaries of $9,230, a part of which is, however, now paid out of the general fund, and is therefore only an apparent increase in the actual expenditures.

Mr. HATCH. I will give the gentleman one instance. The Commissioner found that he had an inadequate force in the disbursing division of the Department, and he was compelled to transfer a $1,400 clerk to that division for the purpose of keeping up the work there. And in this bill we provide an additional assistant clerk at $1,400, and add this to the salary list, which assistant has been paid heretofore out of the general fund.

But I will state to the gentleman, generally, that there were several salaries that in the opinion of the committee ought to be increased, as they were two or three hundred dollars lower than similar salaries paid to officers doing like service in other Departments of the Government, and the committee as far as it could do so, equalized them with the amounts paid for similar services in other Departments.

Mr. CANNON. But the gentleman knows that it has been the policy of the Government ever since the Forty-seventh Congress to absolutely prohibit—in fact the law prohibits—the payment of any salaries out of the contingent or other funds appropriated to the Departments in Washington, except where they are specially provided for and where the appropriation is made specifically; and it does occur to me that this committee is entitled to know and ought to know, either from the report or by some statement by the gentleman who makes the report and which is to go upon the record, what specific salaries have been increased and what it is that makes up this aggregate of $9,230 increase.

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman had called my attention to this matter when that part of the bill which has been gone over was under consideration, I could probably have referred to these items in detail as we proceeded; but I will state generally as I recollect the matter now. The salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture has been increased $500, and the committee were unanimous in recommending that increase, because the Commissioner of Agriculture is the only head of a department or bureau of any consequence or importance in any Department of the Government whose salary is less than $5,000.

Mr. MORGAN. Permit me to say further that it was the opinion of the committee that it would not last more than three or four months.

Mr. HATCH. Probably not so long as that. We hope at all events that it will not go very far beyond.

Then the salary of the disbursing clerk has been fixed heretofore at $1,800. The present occupant of the position has been there for a number of years, and the amount of money that he now disburses has been increased almost tenfold, and his bond has been increased in a corresponding ratio. He has been paid this salary of $1,800 heretofore, which the committee think proper to increase to $2,000, which is still $500 less than salaries paid to officers performing similar duties in any other Department of the Government.

Then we increased by $250 per annum the salary of the superintendent of the grounds, Mr. Saunders, who has been in charge of that Department since its organization and done more to build up and increase the practical work of the Department of Agriculture, I think, than any ten men connected with the Department, and we thought he was entitled to this slight increase of $250 of salary.

That is, as I recollect it, the substantial increases in any salaries, except the statement which I have already made, where clerks have been simply detailed to perform this work and who are now upon the salaried list.

Mr. CANNON. That, Mr. Chairman, covers about one thousand out of the nine thousand and odd dollars of increase. Now I do not want to burden the gentleman, but I will ask him, when he comes to revise his remarks in this connection, to be kind enough to give us a detailed statement—a tabulated statement—showing the items which go to make up this increase.

Mr. HATCH. I will do that with pleasure. I will ask the clerk to make up a tabulated statement and incorporate it in my remarks. I will state as it now occurs to me, in the same connection, that the salary of the librarian is fixed by a provision in the Revised Statutes at $1,800; but for the last few years, for some reason, it has been reported in the appropriation bill at $1,400. The committee have restored it to the amount fixed by law, because of the importance of the position and the efficient and excellent work done by the present incumbent.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say now, Mr. Chairman, a word after what the gentleman from Missouri has stated. The other day in considering the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], bringing that under-jaw of his up with the strength that he can exhibit on certain occasions [laughter], announced in the presence of the House that this was "a bad year to increase salaries," and I think the loudest applause that I have heard during this session came from gentlemen on that side of the House, and some of us applauded on this side, being glad to know that another year was to run around when the officers of the Government were to have substantially the same salary as former officials had. You may judge then of my surprise after hearing that statement on taking up this bill——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HATCH. I will yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Judge of my surprise, Mr. Chairman, on taking up this bill to discover that these increases mentioned here had been made, not set out in the report or in the bill; in fact, sir, I would have missed them altogether had it not been that I struck it on the last page of the bill.

Mr. BIGGS. It is all in the interest of agriculture, my friend.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I am glad——

Mr. BIGGS. And I hope you will not make any fight against the producing element.

Mr. CANNON. Then I suppose now that the crops will grow better——

Mr. BIGGS. They will.

Mr. CANNON. And the rains will descend, and the refreshing dews fall, and the markets will be increased, and we will have peace and plenty and prosperity covering the entire country, because we have increased these salaries which were provided in former years as not only sufficient but ample, and especially in view of the announcement the other day that it was a bad year to increase salaries.

I merely wanted to show that your side of the House had been consistent for two days, but now the line of consistency is broken. It may be in some of these instances the increase was warranted. Then if you wanted to do equal and exact justice you ought to wander back to the long years past, when you did not appropriate these salaries, for the Librarian for instance, and perhaps give him a deficiency. I do not know whether that would help agriculture or not. I merely want to call attention to the fact that so far as salaries are concerned, notwithstanding your former and present professions of economy, it does make some difference whose ox is gored.

Mr. HATCH. I am not responsible for anything which is stated by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, nor for any position taken by the gentleman from Illinois or any member of the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Agriculture do not feel themselves bound by any precedent established by the Committee on Appropriations of this House; and when we think that it is for the best interest of the public service that certain salaries should be increased in the Department of Agriculture we are not afraid to do it in this year of our Lord 1888, or in any other year.

The Committee on Agriculture have reported this bill to the House after a careful investigation and examination of all these questions, believing that every single appropriation recommended is for the best interest of the public service; and we do not stand on two or three hundred dollars upon the salary of this man or that and try to reduce to a minimum the employés of the Government. The fact is that this is a great and growing Department, and most of the employés in it have been there for a great while. They have a reputation in the country as heads of their respective departments of being the very best men that can be employed for the salaries paid.

I want to state to the gentleman from Illinois that since the establishment of the experimental colleges throughout the United States it is difficult for the Commissioner to keep competent men in two or three of the divisions upon the salaries authorized. The States to-day are paying 20 or 30 per cent. more for chemists, entomologists, pomologists, etc., than the Government is paying for the same class of work in the Department of Agriculture. And I submit to my friend that the employés in the Department of Agriculture are entitled at any rate to such salaries as the States and colleges are paying for the same work throughout the country.

The following will show the increase and additions of salaries for the Department of Agriculture as compared with the appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1888, which I submit in reply to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]:

Commissioner of Agriculture	$500
Librarian	400
Disbursing officer	200
Superintendent of folding-room	200
Fireman and steam-fitter	180
Assistant microscopist	200
Superintendent experimental garden and grounds	250
Chief of seed division	200
		$2,130
New offices created by reason of the growth of the several divisions in the Department of Agriculture:
Assistant disbursing officer	1,400
Assistant botanist	1,400
Artist pomological division	1,200
Assistant pomologist	1,000
Assistant of forestry	1,200
Clerk of division of forestry	900
		7,100
Total increase		9,230

Mr. WASHINGTON. I dislike very much to disagree with my good friend, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, on any subject or any point connected with this bill. But I feel compelled, inasmuch as the increase of salaries in the Agricultural Department commences with the head of the department and not with the underpaid class of employés in the lower divisions, whose services are worth more than they are getting, who are perhaps, as the gentleman says, underpaid—and I have no objection to their being paid a sum equivalent to the services they perform, whether scientific or clerical—but I feel compelled to make the point of order on the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

This bill raises his salary $500. When he went into the office his salary was fixed. He has performed the service for that salary, and we have not heard that he is complaining. I suppose he has been well paid. In conformity with rulings of the Chair on other occasions, I make the point of order.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that the point of order of the gentleman from Tennessee comes too late. The paragraph in which the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture is fixed has been passed, and no point of order was made when that was reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], that the point of order of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] is now too late, is sustained.

Mr. WASHINGTON. When the Clerk commenced reading the bill I supposed he was reading it the first time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair distinctly stated that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] had asked unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill; and there was no objection to that request.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If I can not make the point of order, I now move to amend the bill by reducing the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture $500.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that we have passed that paragraph, and that the amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to ask, were not all points of order on the bill reserved?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not remember; but if they were, they should be made when the paragraphs to which they apply are reached.

Mr. HATCH. Points of order were reserved.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand the bill is all in one section.

Mr. HATCH. No, sir; not in one section nor in one paragraph.

Mr. BURROWS. It is all in one section, and the gentleman from Tennessee made the point of order against this provision. All points of order having been reserved, I do not see why the point of order should not be made now.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I am also loth to disagree with the Chair on this matter, but I call attention to the fact that this bill is composed of 344 lines, and if 344 consecutive lines without a break do not constitute one section, what in the name of common sense does? This whole bill is one section.

The CHAIRMAN. The decision of the Chair is not governed by the question of sections. This bill is being read by paragraphs, and the paragraphs relate to different subjects, and the Clerk has already read paragraphs relating to a number of subjects. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] made the point of order that the point of order of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] was too late, because the paragraph to which it related had been passed, and the Chair sustained the point of order of the gentleman from Missouri in accordance with the uniform rulings in such cases.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, my time is quite limited, and I trust that the gentleman from Tennessee will not consume any more of it upon this point, but will let the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting and disseminating information relating to silk-culture; for purchasing and distributing silk-worm eggs, and for conducting at some point in the District of Columbia experiments with automatic machinery for reeling from the cocoon, and for expenses incurred in collecting, purchasing, preparing for transportation, and transporting the cocoons necessary therefor, and for necessary traveling expenses, $15,000. And the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to sell in open market any and all reeled silk and silk waste produced in these experiments, and to apply the proceeds of such sales to the payment of the legitimate expenses incurred therein; and the Commissioner of Agriculture shall make full report to Congress of the experiments herein provided for, and also of all sales and purchases made under this paragraph, with the names and residences of all producers of cocoons of whom purchases are made.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My object is to get some information from the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, who has charge of this bill. I call his attention especially to the language in lines 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, and 169. Provision is there made for an appropriation of $15,000 for certain specific purposes. What are they? I read, commencing in line 164:

And for conducting at some point in the District of Columbia experiments with automatic machinery for reeling silk from the cocoon, and for expenses incurred in collecting, purchasing, preparing for transportation, and transporting the cocoons necessary therefor.

Now that all relates to the purchase, preparation for transportation, and transportation of the cocoons "necessary therefor." Necessary for what? For "conducting at some point in the District of Columbia experiments with automatic machinery for reeling silk from the cocoon."

Under that provision the Department of Agriculture would not have authority to purchase a cocoon for any other experimental station, and, as the gentleman well knows, there is in my State—perhaps in his State also, but certainly there is in mine—an experimental station which promises very satisfactory results. If this language will confine the purchase of cocoons for experimental purposes to a station in the District of Columbia, of course none can be purchased for the other experimental stations, and I therefore suggest to the gentleman that, in order to obviate that difficulty, he agree to strike out in line 168 the words "necessary therefor." That will remove the restriction.

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection. I will accept that amendment on behalf of the committee. I think the gentleman is somewhat particular about the point, but rather than take up time in discussing it I will move to strike out the words "necessary therefor," in line 168, so that the provision may have the broadest latitude.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RYAN. Now I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture whether there will be sufficient funds to purchase all the cocoons necessary for experimental purposes before the commencement of the next fiscal year.

Mr. HATCH. I will state to the gentleman that a subcommittee of the Committee on Agriculture (of which the gentleman from California [Mr. BIGGS] was chairman) was appointed to investigate that subject. They had a conference with the Commissioner and with the superintendent of the sericulture division of the Agricultural Department, and they reported unanimously that no additional appropriation was necessary for this fiscal year, because there would be a sufficient amount to pay for all the cocoons that would be ready for market.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I renew the formal amendment. There has been no general debate and this bill has not been read in full, and therefore I do not think I need to apologize for taking up a few minutes in getting some information from the committee. I am interested in the subject under discussion, but I am not thoroughly informed. I notice that the words in lines 162 and 163 indicating the object to which the appropriation is directed are "for collecting and disseminating information relating to silk culture," and I notice that in line 178 the language is "for the encouragement and development of the culture of raising raw silk."

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman will notice the difference. The first paragraph to which he calls attention makes an appropriation of $15,000 for the Department of Agriculture. The other one is "for the encouragement and development of the culture of raising raw silk, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Woman's Silk-Culture Association of the United States, located at Philadelphia," which is the exact language of the law of the present fiscal year, and, so far as I know, the character of the work which that association is doing is very satisfactory.

Mr. ADAMS. Is the language in line 162 exactly the language that is in the act making appropriations for the current year?

Mr. HATCH. It is.

Mr. ADAMS. And does it, as the more general term, include "the culture of raising raw silk?" I desire that it should be a more general term and should include the more specific term below.

Mr. HATCH. It is; and the Commissioner is buying all the cocoons raised in the United States that he can get. That is exactly what he is doing.

Mr. ADAMS. All right.

Mr. RYAN. The amendment already made renders it necessary to strike out the word "the" in line 168.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; the word "the" in line 168 before the word "cocoons" should be struck out.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that amendment will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the encouragement and development of the culture of raising raw silk, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Women's Silk Culture Association of the United States, located at Philadelphia, and to be paid directly to said association; and said association shall make a full and detailed report of the expenditures and results obtained under this appropriation, and also under the appropriation to said association made for the fiscal years 1887 and 1888, as provided by law, if not already made, to the Commissioner of Agriculture, who shall transmit the same to Congress, and $2,500 for the same purposes and under the same restrictions and conditions, to the California Ladies' Silk Culture Association of California, and for the continuation of the study and experiments, by Joseph Neuman and associates, of the wild native silk-worm of California, $2,500; and the said Joseph Neuman shall report the results of such work to Congress through the Commissioner of Agriculture on or before the 1st day of January, 1889.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Reserving a point of order on line 192 and the following lines to the end of the paragraph, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture something about this specific appropriation to Mr. Neuman—whether it is a new thing or an old one; if an old thing, what is he doing, and if a new thing, what he proposes to do. The only evidence that I have seen of his activity is a room down on Pennsylvania avenue which has a very nice sign in front, but which is evidently visited by nobody, cared for by nobody, and which interests nobody. I suppose there is more active, intelligent, and valuable work back of that; but I would like to know something about it.

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman from New Jersey will step into that establishment which he has described, down on Pennsylvania avenue, he will get a great deal of information. The discovery of this native cocoon growing in its natural state in the open air in certain portions of California is regarded by the Representatives from that State as a very valuable discovery and well worthy of an appropriation of $2,500 for the purpose of further investigating and reporting to this House at the next session or at the end of the next fiscal year, the probabilities of making that a great industry of this country. The gentleman from California on this side [Mr. BIGGS] or either of the gentlemen from California on the other side can enlighten the gentleman from New Jersey on this subject to a greater extent than I can; they have more information about it. But I will state that the majority of the Representatives from the State of California were present in our committee-room, and it was upon their suggestion that the sum of $5,000 given to the State of California in connection with this subject was divided in this way. As it is entirely satisfactory to the Representatives of that State, I hope the gentleman from New Jersey will not make any objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have not made any point of order and will not do so.

Mr. BIGGS. That is right.

The Clerk read as follows:

Seed division: For the purchase, propagation, and distribution, as required by law, of seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expenses of labor, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal-cards, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $100,000.

Mr. LIND. For the purpose of asking a question, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture whether this appropriation of $100,000 includes a sufficient amount of money to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture in the future to make purchases of seed wheat for distribution.

Mr. HATCH. It unquestionably does.

Mr. LIND. I will state what my experience was last year—not for the purpose of criticising the Commissioner, but simply as a matter of fact. As the gentleman is aware, wheat is the great staple of our State, and I had probably a thousand inquiries for seed wheat, particularly for Russian wheat. I went to the Commissioner soon after coming to Washington and requested him to procure some Russian seed wheat. He complained that the appropriation was insufficient; that he had not the means. The commissioner of agriculture of Canada, however, imported a cargo of Russian wheat, and I wrote to him asking for some. He very courteously sent some to me for my own use, and sent some to my friends.

Now, it does seem to me that it is hardly proper or in good taste to compel an American citizen, if he wants to get a desirable quality of seed, to apply to a Canadian official in order to secure it. If the gentleman has any doubt about the sufficiency of the appropriation for this purpose, I ask to offer an amendment to increase the appropriation.

Mr. HATCH. I think the gentleman will not offer his amendment when he hears my explanation. I agree with everything he has said. It is simply a criticism upon the kind and character of seeds which have been purchased under the direction of our Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. LIND. I did not so intend it. I understood the appropriation was insufficient.

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman calls again upon the Commissioner, and the Commissioner states that $100,000 is not a sufficient sum to enable him to carry out the provision of existing law which requires him to purchase for distribution rare and valuable seeds, I hope the gentleman will suggest to the Commissioner that Russian wheat is a rare and valuable seed for distribution throughout the Northwest, and will tell the Commissioner to buy less turnip and radish seed and more Russian wheat-seed.

We have simply in this bill to give to the Commissioner the authority to carry out the law, as that law on the statute-book requires him to buy only rare and valuable seed which will benefit the agriculturists and farmers of the United States, and $100,000 is every dollar that ought to be appropriated, and a large portion of it should be used in the purchase of seed such as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] has indicated.

Mr. LIND. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ENLOE. I move to amend in line 233 by striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$50,000," and I do it for this reason: I understand the object of establishing the Agriculture Department, but I understand the object for which it was established has been perverted and that it has become a sort of political machine for the purpose of electioneering in a cheap way by members for their return to Congress.

A great deal of the time of members of Congress which ought to be devoted to public business is taken up in answering requests for garden seed such as can be bought in any store of the country. I say it is a perversion of the public funds to use them in buying common seed which can be purchased anywhere and distributing them all over the country for the purpose of securing the return of members of Congress to this House.

If the money should be used as the chairman of the committee suggests, to buy rare and valuable seed, and new varieties, such as will have the effect to promote the interests of agriculture, then I say the appropriation would be a proper one. I object to the administration of the law as it is administered, and I object to the present use of this fund because I believe that it can be applied to better purposes. I say, furthermore, if we are not going to reduce the appropriation or change the administration of this law, then we ought to increase the appropriation, so that every member on this floor can send to each one of his constituents a portion of the seed. As it is, a Democratic member finds nearly all the good farmers in his district belong to the Democratic party, and therefore distributes to them the packages of seed which have been sent to him from the Department, and the Republican farmers get very few, or none. [Laughter.] And when the Republican member of Congress comes to distribute his seed he does not find many good Democratic farmers in his district, and he distributes nearly all of his packages of seed to the Republican farmers, and the Democratic farmers get none. [Laughter and cries of dissent from various parts of the House.]

Mr. HATCH. I do not know how it is with the gentleman from Tennessee, but I wish to say that his remarks have no application to many members on this side of the House.

Mr. ENLOE. I am glad I have thrown a rock which has hit somewhere, and to judge from the effect it has produced it struck all around. [Laughter.]

I wish to say that so far as I am individually concerned I have distributed seeds to all who applied for them, as long as I had any to distribute, regardless of the politics of the applicant, and I am satisfied that my experience is the common experience. Most of those who applied were Democrats, and of those sent without application I have generally sent them to my friends, who I thought would make proper use of them. So it followed that in my district most of the seeds went to Democrats, and I have not a doubt that in Republican districts most of the seeds go to Republicans for the very same reasons. They are necessarily distributed to a greater or less extent on political lines; and often designedly so. I am firmly of the opinion that this appropriation should be restricted so as to provide only a sufficient fund for the purchase of such rare, new, and valuable varieties of seeds as are necessary to the proper tests in different sections of the country, as contemplated in the creation of this Department; or it should be increased as I have said, to a sufficient sum to give every citizen an equal showing in the distribution of such common varieties of seeds as are used by every farmer and gardener in this country. The present system is a palpable fraud on the agricultural interests of the country. If the method of administration can not be changed, the law providing for this distribution ought to be wiped from the statute-books.

Mr. BIGGS. I do not like to interrupt the remarks of my friend from Tennessee, but I can not permit them to go out without entering my protest against them. They do not apply to me in the distribution of packages of seed which I receive from the Agricultural Department. I send them to the postmasters of my district, and they are distributed by those postmasters amongst the farmers so as to do the most good in the promotion of agriculture. Therefore I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his sweeping charge about these seeds being distributed merely for electioneering purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. ENLOE. I am very sorry I did any injustice to my friend from California. It may be different in his State, but I think members generally will admit the distribution of these seeds is made throughout the country as I have stated.

Mr. BIGGS. You have no right to impugn the motives of any member upon this floor.

Mr. ENLOE. I certainly do not intend to impugn the motives of any gentleman here, and especially I do not intend to impugn the motives of my distinguished friend from California, for I do not know what they do in California; but I do know how the distribution of these seeds is generally made. I merely wish to add that, in my judgment, if the appropriation is made these seeds should be distributed through the commissioners of agriculture in the several States, and not through Senators and Members of Congress.

Mr. YOST. I agree to some extent with what was said by the gentleman who has moved the amendment to reduce the appropriation. Some six thousand packages of seed are distributed to each member of Congress. There are some fifty thousand families in each district. It is necessary for the purpose of accomplishing any good to send six packages to each family. These six thousand packages therefore would only supply a thousand families, while the other forty-nine thousand are left without seeds. Either the system of distribution ought to be abolished or the appropriation should be made sufficient to give to every member of Congress enough seed to distribute to every family in his district, and thereby avoid the discrimination he is now compelled to exercise.

I distribute the seeds allotted me, so far as I can, to the poor people in my district. That is the only rule I have, and I do it irrespective of politics. I know there are more than one thousand families in my district who want these seeds. I know there are more than ten thousand poor families in my district, as there are in the districts of other gentlemen on this floor, and my contention is that a member should be enabled to supply the reasonable demand made upon him, or else that the present system of distribution be abolished.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully submit to the members of the committee that the entire theory and purpose of this appropriation appear to be misunderstood. It is not for the purpose of furnishing every man who chooses to apply to the Department with a supply of seed for ordinary domestic purposes.

Mr. HATCH. That is right.

Mr. MORGAN. It is for the purpose of distributing seed of superior quality and of different varieties amongst the people in order that they may get a foundation or root; and after establishing the value of the class of seed that then thereafter they may be distributed generally amongst the people from the usual sources of supply—not that the Agricultural Department should supply everybody by any means.

Mr. WARNER. Then, of course, you want to put them in the hands of the most intelligent people; and in that way you would send the great bulk of them to my Republican constituents. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN. The theory is to send these seed to such leading persons, agriculturists, and gardeners who may understand the best mode of using them, and demonstrate their adaptability to the soil or climate in which they are used, and not for the special benefit of the persons so using them, but as an experiment for the benefit of the whole people.

Now, we send to Russia for Russian wheat, for instance, and get the seed here. When that seed has been tested and found to be adapted to the climate or soil in which it is to be used, it can be generally distributed throughout the land; and so it is with rare and valuable seeds of all kinds.

It is a mistake, then, to come here and say that the purpose of this law was for the benefit of individual constituents of any member of this House. It is an entire misunderstanding of the purpose. These seeds should be distributed in the manner that will produce the best results for all the people and place the seed by actual reproduction in the reach of all.

Mr. HATCH. I hope now, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will come to a vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. I do not want to make a motion to limit debate, but the time I am allowed to occupy with this bill is limited, and this question has been discussed so often that it is scarcely necessary to go over the ground again.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman will not cut off amendments.

Mr. HATCH. I do not want to cut off amendments, but simply to cut off debate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have an amendment I wish to offer.

Mr. HATCH. Then I ask unanimous consent that debate be closed now, and that we may vote upon such amendments as are offered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I must object, because I want to offer an amendment, and will need a minute or two to explain it.

Mr. HATCH. Then I ask a vote on the pending amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. ENLOE, and it was rejected.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word; and I make this motion for the purpose of calling the attention of the Committee of the Whole, as well as the Committee on Agriculture, especially to the fact that we have appropriated already over $500,000 for the purpose of establishing agricultural-experimental stations in each of the States and Territories of the Union. It has been suggested by my friend from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] that the great desire of the Northwest is to experiment with Russian wheat, wheat growing being their great industry.

It does seem to me, after we have established these experiment stations in each of the States and Territories, that the experiments should all be made at the stations themselves. The advantage of such an arrangement is obvious. Suppose the Commissioner of Agriculture should purchase some of this Russian wheat for the purpose of experimenting with it in the Northwestern States. He can send this wheat to the experimental stations, instead of being distributed generally throughout the Northwest among the citizens, where the benefit, if any arises from the test, will not become generally known. But by sending it to these stations, in Minnesota, for instance, it can there be tested under the best conditions, and the results made known to the people generally, not for the benefit alone of the State of Minnesota, but for the whole Northwest. If it is desired to send a package of it to each of the experimental stations that can be done, and the experiment made in different climes, with different kinds of soil and different modes of treatment; and so on with every valuable class of seed which is purchased and distributed by the Department. This arrangement would save this sending out promiscuously of seed all over the country, from which the Agricultural Department gets no benefit or return from the experiments which have been made.

Mr. STEELE. Why would it not be better to allow the superintendents of these institutions to exercise their own judgment in buying the seeds adapted to their particular localities?

Mr. BREWER. This question, it seems to me, had better be under the guidance of one person, and should all be done from one place here in the city of Washington, and by the Commissioner of Agriculture. He can procure the seeds and send them where he thinks fit, or as may be requested by the experimental stations themselves.

These stations, after making experiments, publish their reports of all experiments, and, as I have said, the people of Minnesota and all of the other States will have the benefit of the experiments made there. In this manner we can obtain the advantage of all the tests of every new variety of seeds. This is why we have appropriated $500,000, the very purpose of which is to secure these experiments, made under the most favorable circumstances, in order that everybody may have the benefit. That was the plan in view in the adoption of the stations; but, as stated here on the floor, we now simply send the seeds out to poor people all through the country, and in the district from which a Representative comes to any one who asks for them—I know I do—and the result is that not one single report comes in from any one who has received seeds in my district; and I apprehend that the same occurs in all districts throughout the country as to the result of the experiments made in them. Why have we made these great appropriations except that the people of the whole country should have the results of the experiments? It seems to me that it was the intention and object of the appropriation of this large sum to enable the people to have the benefit of the experiments made at these stations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. I desire to say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BREWER] that the Committee on Agriculture are satisfied that probably within the next year this amount of $100,000 can be very materially decreased because of the work which will be done by the different experimental stations; but he will remember they are just established. They have not raised any crop, and will not be able to raise any crop probably before the expiration of the next fiscal year so as to distribute valuable seeds.

The Commissioner has the distribution of one-third of all the seeds provided under this paragraph, and it is his duty, and he will do it, to distribute to each of these stations such rare and valuable seeds as may come into his possession for trial in different sections and latitudes of the country. I am satisfied that in time this appropriation can be largely reduced, if not entirely done away with.

Mr. BREWER. And the experiments made as I suggested?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BREWER. Have the Committee on Agriculture considered this question in the line I have suggested?

Mr. HATCH. They have, in every shape of it. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. LAIRD. I want to make this suggestion to my friend from Michigan and the House. It can not escape the attention of the House that the entire discussion so far which obstructs the passage of this bill is addressed to matters of administration alone, and not to matters of legislation. I am bound to say from my investigation of the Department, having been on that subcommittee—and I do so cheerfully—that the present head of it has administered it so practically that he is a monument in certain respects and aspects of the administration of the office of merit.

Witness the conduct of the business of his Department concerning the suppression of diseases among domestic animals. These things can not escape Mr. Colman; they do not; they will not. And I submit the important thing for the House and the business of the country is to proceed to dispatch this business.

I am perfectly willing to trust my interest and the interests of my constituents to the matters exclusively of administration which belong to the Commissioner of Agriculture. If the country is not satisfied with that administration they know how to secure their remedy.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of making an inquiry and a suggestion. The object of this distribution of seeds throughout the country is to secure the introduction of new and valuable varieties.

Mr. HATCH. The words of the law are "rare and valuable varieties."

Mr. DINGLEY. That object I commend. I do not know any other plan can be adopted that will work on the whole more successfully than the present one. I wish there could be, because it brings to all of us a great deal of inconvenience.

But I want to call attention to one point in connection with the administration of this office. It is often the case that rare and valuable seeds and plants are purchased by the Commissioner and the fact goes into the newspapers. Members of Congress are immediately besieged by letters calling attention to the fact that the Agricultural Department has such and such seeds and plants and desire they should be sent to them, and when the inquiry is made it is found that they have all been distributed.

I call attention particularly to one article, Chapman's honey plant. Early in this session I received letters calling attention to the fact that the newspapers had announced that that valuable seed or plant was in the Agricultural Department for distribution. Having received several letters, I sent them to the Agricultural Department, asking that the seeds or plants might be distributed. After a time I received a notice that the Department had had such plants, but that they were all distributed; and, so far as I can learn, not a single package of that seed or plant has gone to the State of Maine, although they have been distributed in many other directions.

Now, my inquiry is, what is the use of those plants if we can not receive them? What I particularly object to is that public notice is not immediately given that such and such plants are ready for distribution. When I applied for those plants and received the answer that they were distributed, it appeared to me that when there are any seeds or plants of a rare character to be distributed they should be distributed in a way that will carry them into various parts of the country, in order that their value may be tested and the seeds sent to the various localities throughout the various States suitable for their cultivation.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the gentleman from Maine, can we not effect that through agricultural colleges when they come into operation?

Mr. DINGLEY. Very likely. I am now speaking of the present administration.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Maine is simply criticising the administration of the law; and I submit to him that has nothing in the world to do with the adoption of this paragraph.

Mr. DINGLEY. I admit that.

Mr. HATCH. If there has been any dereliction on the part of the Commissioner or any of the authorities there in regard to the fair and equal distribution of seeds under the existing law, the gentleman ought simply to make a statement of the facts to the House and send the matter to the Committee on Agriculture for investigation.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is just what I am doing.

Mr. MORGAN. And I hope that the committee will go the whole length with the gentleman.

Mr. DINGLEY withdrew his pro forma amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR was recognized.

Mr. HATCH. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAIDLAW].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have the floor to offer an amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I ask the gentleman to withhold that for a moment, in order that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAIDLAW] may make a brief statement.

Mr. LAIDLAW. Mr. Chairman, so far as the honey-plant is concerned, I can give the committee all the light they require on that subject. All of that plant that the Department got was obtained from a constituent of mine at my suggestion. The Bee-Keepers' Association of the United States have been canvassing the question of this honey-plant, which, in the opinion of bee-keepers, is a plant of very great merit, and is indorsed by the Bee-Keepers' Association of the United States. The Department, as I have said, got only a very small quantity of the plant, and got it from a gentleman in my district, but of course the Bee-Keepers' Journal immediately announced that the Department had the plant for distribution, and the consequence was a great multitude of applications for it. I received a number of letters myself from my own district asking for the plant, but I knew the Commissioner did not have it to give, and I know that many, many applications were denied for that reason.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add at end of line 233 the following:

"Provided, That it shall be unlawful for the Commissioner of Agriculture or any subordinate of the Department to buy for or furnish to any member of Congress or other person any seed beyond the regular quota of seed allotted to such person or to pack or put up or mail to or for any person any such extra seed; nor shall it be lawful for such Commissioner or any subordinate to act as agent for any seedman or other person either in buying or selling any seed beyond the amount allowed by this bill."

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order upon that amendment that it changes existing law—that it is new legislation, and is not in order upon this bill. I do not want to take the gentleman from Ohio off of the floor or prevent him from making his statement, but I make the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will speak to the point of order. Mr. Chairman, does the law of the United States authorize the Commissioner of Agriculture to be the agent of a seedsman to buy seeds for members of Congress? Is that the point of order? Where is the law which authorizes the abuse which this amendment seeks to correct?

Mr. HATCH. The provision of the bill which has just been read and is now under discussion is an exact copy of existing law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But it is silent upon this subject. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] makes the mistake of supposing that because this amendment proposes an enactment, it proposes to change existing law. I know of no law upon this particular subject, and it seems very strange to me that the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture seeks to prevent putting into this bill so simple and salutary a provision as this.

Mr. HATCH. I do not want to discuss the merits of the matter, but if the gentleman will reflect for a moment, he will see that while the law as it stands to-day is as broad and comprehensive and as binding on the Commissioner as it is possible to make it, there are cases occurring between members of this House when an allotment of seeds which is made to one member is more valuable to some other member, and there are members from city districts, who, from time to time, have quantities of seeds allotted to them which they can not use in their districts and which are distributed among other members.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish the gentleman would listen to this amendment which I have offered, because it does not affect that matter at all.

Mr. HATCH. I listened to it very attentively, and I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It does not affect that at all. The amendment I have offered is intended merely to interdict the matter described and nothing else. It does not affect the right of the Department to issue to my friend on the other side the quota of myself and as many other members as will assign their quotas to him.

Mr. HATCH. I think there is no necessity for a provision of this kind in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The third paragraph of Rule XXI contains this language:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or any amendment thereto.

The Chair thinks that the amendment sent up by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] changes existing law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What law?

The CHAIRMAN. It adds to the law as it now stands; it qualifies the existing law in such a way as to change it.

Mr. HATCH. In other words, it makes new law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ENLOE. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "culture," in line 233, the words "through the State experimental stations," so that these seeds shall be distributed through the State experimental stations instead of by members of Congress.

Mr. HATCH. I raise the point of order that the amendment changes existing law by taking it out of the power of members of Congress to distribute these seeds; it changes the whole system of distribution.

Mr. ENLOE. That is exactly what I have been wanting to do—to change the present method of distribution. For that reason I have offered this amendment, my first amendment being presented with a view of calling attention to the matter.

I will say that I had no intention of making any reflection upon the Commissioner of Agriculture in his administration of the law in the purchase of seeds, for he purchases what the constituents of members of Congress call for and what members want to distribute. I am satisfied, however, that a stricter adherence to the law would be better, and that a distribution through the agricultural commissioners of the different States or through these experimental stations would insure a much fairer distribution of the seeds, and would tend to promote the interests of agriculture. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

An equal proportion of two-thirds of all seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents; and the person receiving such seeds shall inform the Department of results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates to Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for at the end of the fiscal year shall be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture: And provided also, That the Commissioner shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase. But nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Commissioner of Agriculture from sending flower, garden, and other seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of improved and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants: But provided, however, That the Commissioner shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each member may have seeds of equal value, as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether that portion of this paragraph from line 246 to line 249 is not the authority by which the Commissioner of Agriculture is enabled to distribute seeds to those who directly apply for them; and is it not the authority which enables a member of Congress to have seeds sent directly from the Agricultural Department to persons whose names he may furnish to the Department?

Mr. HATCH. The language is just as broad as it can be made. It gives the Commissioner power to distribute one-third of all these seeds to parties who may apply for them in person or whose names may be furnished to the Department by members of Congress.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. While upon my feet I wish to remind members that most of the Representatives here from city districts have not a single acre of agricultural land in their districts. In the districts, for instance, represented by my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] and myself there is not one acre of such lands; but in each of those districts there are persons who have country seats, and persons living less expensively who have little gardens adjacent to their humble residences. These are the persons who apply not only for flower-seeds, but for garden and vegetable seeds; and I want to say that no one who has applied to me for any kind of seeds has been refused so long as there were seeds subject to my distribution. Those who first apply get them, just as in the distribution of documents. According to the plan of distribution which experience has suggested to me, whoever writes to me for a document gets that document, if I have it.

One word in justice to the Commissioner of Agriculture, upon whom there have been some reflections cast here to day. I want to say that in all my intercourse with him I have been treated as one gentleman should treat another; and I can say the same in regard to all the officers of that Department. I am glad to have had an opportunity to make this statement in justice to the administration of the Department.

Mr. KERR. When I received, as a farmer, packages of seed there was printed on each package a request from the Department to the party receiving those packages of seed to make report of his success in using those seeds. I notice that none of these packages contain any such request at the present time. I ask the gentleman, therefore, why that requirement of the law has been discontinued under the present administration of the Agricultural Department?

Mr. HATCH. I have not been advised it had been discontinued. I understand that with each package of seeds the Commissioner sends out a circular requesting report in reference to the use of the seeds, and that in hundreds and thousands of instances such reports had come to the Department, and that they have been exceedingly valuable in their results.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of forestry: For investigations into the structural differences of important timbers and the factors that influence their quality, their biology; miscellaneous reports; expense of experimental grounds; collection, purchase, and distribution of forest-tree seeds and seedlings in aid of forest culture; and for ascertaining the area, amount, and condition of the remaining white-pine supplies in the Northwestern States; and for working collection and apparatus, traveling and other expenses, $10,000.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the words "and for ascertaining the area, amount, and condition of the remaining white-pine supplies in the Northwestern States."

The appropriation for forestry this year is $10,000. Last year it was $8,000. I am glad it is increased. I wish it were more. But I should be sorry to see a single dollar wasted in work, the result of which, as any one familiar with the country knows, will be utterly futile. You can not, by any Government official, with a sum of $2,000 or $10,000, ascertain the remaining white-pine supplies in the Northwestern States. The white-pine tree grows on the same ground with the hard pine, and even experienced lumbermen can not tell, until their agents are sent in to cover almost every acre of the ground, what their supplies are.

The lumber business for the last ten years has been carried on where the white pine grows with the hard pine. It is scattered pine. That is the most valuable part of the pine product of the Northwestern States. A person of great experience, of great aptitude for the work, can only tell after a very careful investigation of a forty-acre tract how many thousand feet white pines are standing on that land. And to suppose a Government official can do good to any portion of the people of this country by spending any part of that sum in that way is utterly futile. An official in that Department might, perhaps, by collating statements made by State authority, make a report, but it would not be reliable and would have no practical value whatever. And I would rather see this appropriation or a larger appropriation devoted to ends which are practical than to see a portion of it wasted for a purpose out of which there could be no valuable result.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. I would state to the gentleman from Illinois that the chief of the division of forestry and the Commissioner asked to have additional authority in the use of this appropriation. I am under the impression that it is for the collection and collation of local statistics on this subject. It is not a large expenditure of money, and is simply for information to be used in the forestry report.

The Treasury Department is so particular about expenditure of public money that unless it comes exactly under the description of the appropriation there is difficulty about it. When we go into conference on the bill, I will tell the gentleman that if I find there is no necessity for this appropriation I shall certainly be in favor of reducing it or strike it out altogether.

Mr. ADAMS. My object is to have the appropriation used for a legitimate purpose.

Now, I wish to make this further statement. The first part of this paragraph reads as follows: "Division of forestry: For investigation into the structural differences of important timbers and the factors that influence their quality, their biology," etc. In the latter part of the paragraph it is for the purpose of enabling the Commissioner of Agriculture to experiment and continue an investigation and report upon the subject of forestry.

An investigation into the structural differences of important timbers, is not a matter which applies to the Department of Agriculture, and I would rather see this appropriation, or, as I have said, a much larger appropriation for forestry proper, than to see any portion diverted for objects which belong to other departments hereafter to be formed.

Mr. HATCH. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois, and when the Book of Estimates came in with this provision in it I objected to its incorporation in the bill, and had a conference with the Commissioner of Agriculture, and received a statement from the superintendent or the chief of this forestry division bearing upon this question. The present chief of that division is, I am informed by gentlemen who know him and are competent to speak of the facts, a man of the very highest reputation throughout the United States, and eminent in this particular branch of science. He is regarded as a very practical man and perhaps one of the best that has ever presided at the head of such a bureau, and I yielded to his better knowledge after hearing his explanation.

If the gentleman from Illinois will read the report submitted by him, which is now in press, and I understand will soon be out, he will find that a large portion of it is devoted to information upon this very subject.

Mr. ADAMS. I will follow the example of the chairman of the committee, and yield to his better judgment. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill as amended to the House.

Mr. LAWLER. Before that I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what provision is made for the pay of laborers in the bill?

Mr. HATCH. I would be very glad to gratify my friend from Illinois if I had the list before me, but I can only refer him now to the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the past fiscal year for a detailed statement of such payments. The law compels him to report to Congress once a year every single item of expenditure of his Department. The gentleman is probably as familiar with the labor-roll there as I am.

I know one thing, however, that the Government pays its laborers there well; indeed, so well in that Department, taken in connection with the number of hours they work and the pay, that they are not only entirely satisfied with their positions, but every member on this floor has from one hour to three hours of his time every day taken up by answering applications for positions in the Agricultural Department; and if the gentleman can find one person over there on that roll who is dissatisfied and wants to resign, and he will give me his name and photograph, I would be very much obliged to him, because I would like to have it hung up in the committee-room as a curiosity. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAWLER. I ask the gentleman, before we pass this bill, to permit me to offer this amendment, which is in conformity with the general provisions of the bill, and I am sure will not be objectionable.

Mr. HATCH. I will hear the amendment read, and reserve the right to object.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the pay of laborers provided for in this act shall not be less than $2 a day.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order on the proposed amendment that it changes existing law.

Mr. LAWLER. I would like the chairman of the committee to point out to me any provision of law that this changes. I have asked the gentleman for information as to the amount paid there. The pay of laborers and charwomen in this bill is provided for in a lump; and I wanted to know before offering the amendment what amount is to be appropriated specifically for this item. Failing to get the answer, I offer the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I gave the gentleman all the information I had, and I hope he will withdraw the amendment and let this bill go through without further delay.

Mr. LAWLER. I hope the gentleman in charge of this bill will not object to the insertion of this amendment on the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I have very serious objection to the amendment, because it is not in harmony with the existing law; and the gentleman knows that the laborers in that Department are paid from time to time, at different seasons of the year, for different hours' work, and all that; and I do not propose, as far as I have anything to do with it, to incorporate any provision in this bill that is not strictly in harmony with existing law and for the very best interests of that Department. The gentleman knows that some of these laborers are already getting over $2 a day. Nobody is dissatisfied with the compensation, and there is a great clamor for places there. There is no necessity for such an amendment even if it was strictly within the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the agricultural appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill and amendments. I will state that there are but two amendments, and they were simply verbal amendments adopted in committee, and I presume the vote can be taken on both of them at once.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Pending that motion——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I do not want to debate it; but pending that I move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion would not now be in order. The Chair will recognize the gentleman hereafter to submit it.

The previous question was ordered; under the operation of which the amendments were adopted, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill as amended.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture, with instructions to strike out in line 10 the words "five thousand" and insert "four thousand five hundred." I wish to state——

Mr. HATCH. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I am only going to make a statement, not debate it.

Mr. HATCH. But it is not debatable at all.

Mr. WASHINGTON. All right.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The bill was passed.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. STEELE demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX). The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to limit debate on the pending paragraph of the tariff bill and amendments thereto to ten minutes.

Mr. STEELE. I submit that the regular order is the call of committees for reports, followed by a consideration hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question was ordered on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to limit debate.

Mr. STEELE. As soon as this vote is taken I will call for the regular order.

The question being put on the motion to limit debate to ten minutes, there were—ayes 107, noes 75.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of revenue measures.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to submit a couple of conference reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Conference reports are privileged.

ROCK CREEK RAILWAY COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Clerk read the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 2017, to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, and agree to the same.

That the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11; and the Senate recede from the same.

JOHN T. HEARD,
JONATHAN H. ROWELL,
BARNES COMPTON,
Conferees on the part of the House.
ISHAM G. HARRIS,
CHARLES B. FARWELL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. Is there no statement to be made in explanation of this report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rules require a written statement to accompany the report.

Mr. BURROWS. If there be no explanation no one knows what the report means. If there be a written statement I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed there is no written statement. The gentleman can withdraw the report and submit it at a future time.

Mr. ADAMS. I would be content with a verbal explanation.

Mr. HEMPHILL. My recollection is that the amendments were nearly all verbal.

Mr. ROWELL. All but one.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I withdraw the report for the present.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering revenue measures.

Mr. STEELE. I hope the gentleman will give way for a morning hour.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am sorry I can not yield to the gentleman. I regard this as being second to no other matter that can come before the House.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to make may file them with the Clerk.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. STEELE. My reason for calling for a consideration hour is this: I hold in my hand a bill that we would thereby be enabled to bring before the House, the bill (S. 671) which provides for the sale of the site of Fort Omaha and for the purchase of a new site. The property proposed to be sold, I am credibly informed, would bring $300,000 at least, and four times as much land could be bought in a more eligible location and buildings constructed thereon superior to those at Fort Omaha for $200,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 87.

Mr. STEELE. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, 33 members voting therefor.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 93, noes 70.

So the motion was agreed to.

TARIFF.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 6 and 7, namely, these words:

"Timber, hewn and sawed, and timber used for spars and in building wharves."

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto is limited to ten minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understood correctly the effect of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE], it is to continue logs on the free-list and to permit them to be sided and squared, and in that condition to come in free, remitting unmanufactured timber further advanced than that to be rated upon the dutiable list.

I am free to say all my early impressions favored the placing of timber on the free-list, both as it related to the destruction of our forests and as it related to the enormous consumption of timber in the United States. But a principle involved to cover the difference in labor cost abroad and the labor cost in the United States checked me in that connection. The only warrant, in fact, the only necessity, for any tax upon foreign lumber is to cover the cost of production in this country and Canada, including Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The present duty is $2 per thousand feet. Let us try and reach, if we can correctly, what is the difference between the cost of lumber in the United States and its cost in the places to which I have referred.

I am, perhaps, not conversant with the wages paid in all sections of the country, but I am apprised, I think correctly, of what has been the average rate of payment in Pennsylvania for a number of years. In the field or woods the pay is $30 per month and board; while at the mills it is about $2 per day. An examination establishes the fact, I think, that the wages in Canada for like work are about one-half. I think it may be safely assumed that the labor cost of a thousand feet of lumber in the United States is about $6, while the cost in Canada and the provinces named is about $3 per thousand. It is natural that the Canadian should come to this country; first, because he desires work, and secondly, because he receives better remuneration on this side of the line than on the other. But, after all, what we want to do is to cover the difference in labor cost between Canada and the United States. The present duty of $2 per thousand feet is not equal to the difference. The question whether we should remit this form of lumber to the dutiable list, as I propose, at 15 per cent. ad valorem, or, as I understood the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] to propose on yesterday, at 10 per cent. ad valorem, should be determined by the difference in cost in the two countries.

I think 15 per cent. is a sufficient sum to cover that difference, which is at some point between $2 and $3. I shall, therefore, so far as my vote on this question is concerned, cast it in favor of this amendment, hoping to have an opportunity to put lumber farther advanced than logs squared and sided on the dutiable list at 15 per cent. ad valorem, which is a very decided reduction from the present rate of duty.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the reduction of the tariff on lumber; first, because it strikes a blow at an important industry in my district, and, secondly, because I believe that it strikes the same blow, only heavier, at the same industry throughout the United States. In the census of 1880—that much-abused, but also much-used document since this discussion began—I find that we had in my district in that year 307 lumbering establishments, having a capital employed of about $1,300,000, and that they furnished employment to 1,800 hands, or, in the aggregate, furnished a living to about six or seven thousand persons. The yearly payment of wages in that single industry in my district amounted to $348,561.

Now, it is admitted in this discussion so far that our competitors in this industry are Canada and British Columbia. It is further admitted that the wages paid in the United States in lumbering average from 25 to 40 per cent. greater than the wages paid to laborers in the same business in Canada and British Columbia. It is safe to assume—and here what I have to say is in line with the statement of the gentleman who has just preceded me [Mr. RANDALL]—it is safe to assume that we pay an average of 30 per cent. higher wages in the United States than they pay in those countries in the lumbering industry. In 1880 we paid out in wages in the lumber industry in my district $348,561. Reduce that 30 per cent., and you have stricken from the labor in this one industry, in that one district in a single year, the sum of $104,568. Now, what are you going to give these laborers in place of the employment of which you thus deprive them? You say to them, "Go out of the business if you can not stand it; go into something better." But, Mr. Chairman, where are they to go? They will be compelled to go into agriculture, and thus they will thenceforth labor to increase the already glutted cereal markets of the world. As it is now, they supply a home market for the farmers in my district; but drop them out of this business, or transfer the business to some other place, and to that extent you take away the farmers' home market.

Since 1880 the lumber industry has doubled in my district. And now just broaden the view a little and look at the same industry throughout the United States. By the same census report of 1880 I find that there were then in the United States 25,708 lumbering establishments, employing 147,956 men. They had a capital invested of $181,186,122. They paid in wages in that year $31,845,974. They made an annual product of $233,268,729. Knock off 30 per cent. of the wages paid and you knock off in one year from the laborers employed in that industry alone $9,553,792. It is to be presumed that the capital invested in this business is not going out of it; it is going to stay, because we have the timber from which to make the lumber. Therefore, if this cut is made, who is going to lose it? Where will it be first felt? In a manufacturing establishment you have four elements to consider, the plant, the raw material, the cost of labor, and the cost of repairs. Those constitute the elements of cost in any manufacturing establishment. Now, I ask again, where is the cut coming first if the duty is taken off lumber? It is coming upon labor. American wages must conform to the Canadian standard or else the American manufacturer must go out of the business. They will conform to the Canadian standard. Now, let us see whether the existing tariff is too high to make up the difference between the American and the Canadian standard of wages. In my own district the proportion of wages to the amount of the annual output is 16 per cent. Take it in the whole United States and the proportion of wages to the amount of annual output is 14 per cent.

Take the rate of duty at $2 per thousand, which includes the rough lumber which is most generally used by lumber consumers, and the ad valorem equivalent is 16.18 per cent., and considering all wood products but 15 per cent.; so that the duty is simply large enough to cover the increased cost in labor; and to remove it is to strike a blow which would destroy the home market of our farmers and cut down the wages of the laborers engaged in this business to a point that they can not stand.

The plea for free lumber is especially placed upon the ground that it would benefit the farmers, and the argument is urged and urged again that if we make lumber free it will benefit the farmer very greatly; and it is sought by this means to call to the aid of the free-trade view the agricultural interest of the nation. I deny the proposition that free lumber would greatly benefit the farmer. Let us see, by a close inspection of the question, the amount of benefit which the farmer could obtain under the most favorable condition of affairs.

No ordinary farmer will use in the course of a lifetime more than 30,000 feet of lumber. But say for argument sake he may use 60,000 feet. The duty on this—if he paid it all, which protectionists deny—would be $120, at $2 per thousand feet, or an average per year of $4, extending the computation over a series of thirty years. Now, to save this $4 per year, the farmer is asked to strike down the wages of one hundred and fifty thousand laborers—not $4 per year—but at the average rate of more than $66 per year. At the same time he is asked to kill his home market furnished by this one hundred and fifty thousand laborers, and the five hundred thousand or more persons dependent upon their labor. Gentlemen of free-trade proclivities are banking upon the inability of the farmer to see the point of this attack upon the protective system.

They say if we can get the farming element alienated from the protective idea, by holding up to them this immense cost—averaging $4 per year—which they are compelled to pay for lumber, because of protection, and at the same time conceal from their view the benefits they derive from protected wheat, corn, meats, oats, barley, other cereals, and wool, we can then induce them to believe that they are abused; and we will thus alienate from the ranks of the protectionists a large number of their most staunch supporters. But gentlemen thus reasoning make a mistake, in that the nine million farmers of America know more than they credit them with.

The farmer knows that to have a diversity of industries and a home market, and better wages and a more prosperous country, we must not have men all farmers or all anything else. That the system of protection makes the nation richer and more prosperous, because it balances the advantages and the disadvantages of a tariff in such way as to make the average amount to practically the same thing, and thus confines the trading of a great nation largely to exchanges between its own citizens, and keeps the money at home to enrich our citizens instead of scattering it in foreign lands to enrich those who neither care for nor in any way support our Government.

The farmer knows that if, by reason of the tariff, he pays $4 per year more for lumber, he for the same reason makes $30, $40, or $50 more per year on his wool, and more than that on his other farm produce.

And gentlemen who are deceiving themselves as to what the farmers of America think and feel upon this subject may rest assured that the man who buys the American farmer for a fool has "dropped his money." They are not fools. They are not ignorant upon the true bearings of this question. They know that this is a blow at their interests just as truly and certainly as "free wool" is such a blow. They realize that when the wage question is assaulted a reduction there is to that extent a destruction of their home market and a sure increase of the force of farmers and by just that much a decrease of their profits, by increasing the number of farmers and consequently the cereal products, and so depressing market prices for cereals.

Again, why should we not protect and foster this lumber industry? Gentlemen say because to do so is to destroy our timber, and we will soon have no timber and must then depend upon a foreign market for our lumber. Well, who should use our present amount of timber supply? Shall it be this generation or the next? Shall it be our people now living, or shall we save it for those who shall inhabit our country a hundred years hence? I take it that should we follow the sentimental cry of "Woodman, spare that tree," rather than the injunction "cut and use such timber as you now have and need," we would find that we have left to our posterity exceedingly high-priced lumber. For, suppose we take the "free-trade in lumber" theory, throw down our tariff and go to Canada for our lumber until that is exhausted, what have we done? Saved a supply of timber to satisfy an export demand of a hundred years hence? No! We have only preserved a timber supply of limited amount and of few years' duration for a few thousand Americans of that day, then owning it, to sell to other Americans of the same day and generation at a greatly advanced price. The true economy is to properly use the timber now while we have it, and have it cheap, and trust to new growth and new means of supply for the future American.

Gentlemen say that our protective system in lumber, and generally, encourages trusts, and they go into a perfect frenzy of righteous indignation against "trusts." Well, they are to be deplored; but the "trust" cry, as against the protective system, is a man of straw; and it has been set up and knocked down so often that it is like cruelty to animals to notice it. Will not gentlemen take counsel of their common sense? Will they not let go of their free-trade theory long enough to consult the most common kind of commonly understood history? Do they not know that from the time of the adoption of the Twelve Tables of the Roman law down to the present, "trusts" have existed at all times and among all peoples in some form or other? They will not go out with a protective tariff, because they never came in with it or because of it. And if any man is so foolish as to think otherwise, let him ask himself why does the "oil trust" exist? There is no duty on petroleum, and yet we are told an "oil trust" exists, as deadly, as octopus-like, and as formidable as ever disgraced a people or plundered a populace.

The "trust" cry is no more a valid argument against a protective tariff than is that other silly argument that men get rich in the lumber business, and therefore the duty should be removed. The same, or greater, duties on lumber have existed since 1846 as now exist. Why has not their tendency to create "trusts" and "millionaires" been discovered before this? I suppose that when enacted by Democrats and under Democratic rule a tariff on lumber was as obnoxious in these regards as now; then, why should the majority of this House deny the paternity of the child of their own creation? Men get rich in any well-chosen and properly-followed avocation. We do not want it otherwise. It is the boast of our American life that the opportunity of acquiring a competency—and wealth, if you choose—is greater among us than with any other people on earth. Let us keep it so. Let us stand first for the American citizen and his welfare before all the rest of the world. Thus shall we preserve and send down to our children's children this goodly heritage, the founding of which cost so much of suffering and hardship, and the preservation of which has, since its founding, required such an infinite effort on the part of our people.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has two minutes remaining.

Mr. RANDALL. I only wish to add that I do not believe the consumer will get the benefit if this duty is taken off. I believe the advantage will be divided between the lumber-dealer in the United States and the Canadian, and that in the end the effect will be to reduce to Canadian rates the wages of those in the United States engaged in this business. In other words, we can not compete against Canada lumber in our common markets except by a reduction of our wages to a price corresponding with those paid in Canada, or one-half now received by our field and mill wage-earners.

I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have but a minute, and I must decline to yield. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but of course I can not hope to say much in a minute.

I regret that the gentlemen having the management of this bill did not see fit to allow a fuller discussion on this question, which certainly involves the merits of paragraphs which we are subsequently to consider. As I announced yesterday, I shall vote for this amendment with the understanding that when we reach a subsequent paragraph I shall, if the present amendment be carried, move an amendment levying a duty of 10 per cent. upon the articles enumerated, which will be 50 per cent. of the present rate of duty.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph is now closed by order of the House. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] to strike out lines 6 and 7.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not understand that to be the amendment. I understood it was a proposition to strike out and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no proposition to insert.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I submit as an amendment to the amendment the proposition which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 6 and 7, and in lieu thereof insert "timber not further manufactured than hewn, squared, or sided."

Mr. DINGLEY. Is not the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Iowa first in order—the amendment to strike out?

Mr. RANDALL. The object of my amendment is to put on the free-list timber which is hewn, squared, or sided, but not timber which is sawed.

Mr. DINGLEY. You propose to put on the free-list lumber which is not farther advanced than hewn, squared, or sided?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; my proposition is that lumber in the condition of logs hewn, squared, or sided be placed on the free-list.

Mr. STRUBLE. Is it not in order now to have a vote on my motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, after consideration, is of opinion that the motion to strike out takes precedence; but if that motion should be carried, it will then be in order to insert the words proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. STRUBLE. My theory about this matter differs from that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I seek, as I have already stated, to strike out not only these lines, but all the following lines in this section relating to lumber.

Mr. RANDALL. We have not reached those.

Mr. STRUBLE. My purpose is later, when we reach the second section of the bill, to move to insert the present lumber schedule with the proposed reduction of 50 per cent. I call for the question on my motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to strike out lines 6 and 7.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Before the question is taken on striking out, is it not in order to perfect the paragraph by way of amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Any motion to perfect the paragraph would be in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I understood such to be the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is to strike out the whole clause and insert another. The Chair thinks the motion to strike out is first in order. If it be carried, it will then be in order to insert the words proposed, or if it should not be carried, the motion to strike out and insert the words suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania would be in order.

Mr. TAULBEE. Would it not be in order, whether the paragraph be stricken out or not, to insert the words suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania? I think, according to the gentleman's statement, the words he proposes to insert are as foreign to this paragraph as are the subsequent clauses of the bill enumerating different things to be put on the free-list. I do not know but his proposition would be obnoxious to a point of order if made. I presume the subsequent paragraph, which reads "timber squared or sawed," is to be regarded as an independent paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. The object of my amendment is to specify the particular class of lumber named in the amendment as a part of the free-list. We are now considering the free-list clause. I do not want to embarrass those in charge of the bill or to confuse this paragraph relating to the free-list.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have a vote.

The question recurred on Mr. STRUBLE'S amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 108.

Mr. STRUBLE demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to know, where gentlemen are paired, whether they are entitled to vote. To illustrate: Suppose I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. NORWOOD], am I permitted in Committee of the Whole to vote under my standing pair which reads that we are paired on all political questions until a certain date, and that date has not arrived? Now, while that pair is in existence can I be permitted to vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that that is not a parliamentary question.

Mr. BURROWS. But it is a very important question.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter which is left to each member to determine for himself. Each member is to settle it in his own way.

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to know for my own information, and I think every member of the committee ought to know, for gentlemen are paired pretty generally on the one side and the other, whether they are permitted to vote in committee or not?

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman from Michigan stated, I understand, that he was paired with my colleague [Mr. NORWOOD].

Mr. BURROWS. I used it merely as an illustration.

Mr. CRISP. I understand my colleague regarded his pair as extending to all questions on this bill whether in the committee or in the House.

Mr. BURROWS. I merely used it as an illustration. This is an important matter. I do not know whether it has ever been decided before or not. Are gentlemen who are paired for a certain time permitted to vote in committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there ought to be no question about that where a pair has been entered into.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a point of order. I demand the regular order of business. The gentleman from Michigan certainly knows this debate has nothing to do with the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that this is an important matter.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the Chair indulge me?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has indulged the gentleman, but wishes to make a statement now himself.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to make my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has made his point of order.

Mr. TAULBEE. I was proceeding when interrupted by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Allow the Chair to make a statement.

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly, with pleasure. I can not keep him from it.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an important matter, and if a determination can be reached which is satisfactory to both sides of the House, the Chair desires to hear what can have the effect of reaching such a determination, and therefore is willing to entertain suggestions on the part of gentlemen.

Mr. KELLEY. I have heard this question raised many times, and always with the decision that pairing relates to record votes, unless when arranging the pair it shall be agreed to cover proceedings in committee where no record could be made. Therefore I have always, in accordance with that usage, felt myself as complying with my agreement to pair in the House as free to vote on any question of which a record shall not be taken.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. My question of order is that there is nothing pending before the House which is debatable, and that this debate is out of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to say a word just here, in view of what I have known to be the custom in this connection. In my judgment, and so far as I remember, there has been an unvarying rule——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks a question has arisen which is now to be settled. We are about to take a vote, and the gentleman from Michigan has asked whether certain gentlemen who are paired shall have the right to vote in committee or not. That is the regular order, and the Chair will hear gentlemen on it.

Mr. TAULBEE. I hope the Chair will not insist that the gentleman from Michigan has raised a point of order. If the gentleman made a point of order when he rose I certainly misunderstood him.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman raised a question of order, which has not been disposed of.

Mr. TAULBEE. What is the regular order?

The CHAIRMAN. To determine the question whether certain gentlemen are entitled to vote or not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. No, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. TAULBEE. How was I taken off the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman rose to a question of order, and the Chair decided it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania then took the floor to speak to the subject-matter before the committee.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand how the Chair decided my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Whenever the gentleman from Kentucky is ready to allow the business of the committee to proceed we will go on with the public business.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not wish to obstruct the business here, nor do I wish to be taken off the floor ad libitum. I rose to address myself to the point of order which I had raised, and on which I have not yet heard a decision of the Chair. If the Chair has not understood the point of order I would be glad to be allowed to restate it, and would do so briefly. I want to be in order, but I want to be distinctly understood at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to hear the point of order of the gentleman.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I will restate it. It is this: that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] did not present a question of order, nor did he assert that he did; but he rose, as he said, to make a parliamentary inquiry, which consisted in asking the question as to whether or not members who were paired would be allowed to vote in committee. He then proceeded to discuss that question in connection with other gentlemen. I rose to a point of order, which was this: that under the order of the House closing debate, nothing which was debatable was then pending before the House except what I had presented, and I demanded the regular order. Thereupon the gentleman from Pennsylvania rose, as I understood, to address himself to the question raised by the gentleman from Michigan, and the Chair decided against my objection to his proceeding, that he was in order, and that I did not have the floor. Now, I repeat, my point of order is that I had the floor at that time on the only question which was debatable, being the point of order I had made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can entertain but one point of order at a time. The gentleman from Kentucky seeks to make the point of order that the point made by the gentleman from Michigan is not a question of order at all. The Chair begs leave to state that that is a question which should be submitted to the Chair; and for the purpose of having a correct understanding on the question, which the Chair regards as one of importance, the Chair will entertain it as a question of order.

Mr. TAULBEE. With all due deference to the opinion of the Chair, I must submit, because I can not, of course, hope to convince him against his preconceived opinion. Hence I yield the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I only desire to say in this connection a word as to what has been the result of my own experience. The rules, as every member of the House well knows, and as I read them, make no provision for pairs. They do not regulate pairs; and hence it is a matter of personal convenience only to the members themselves, and in that manner have been allowed to be matter of record—the rules not further recognizing and do not regulate pairs in any way. It is a question that is remitted necessarily to the individual Representatives themselves, and there is, of course, where it should rest.

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. I concur in the conclusion reached by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, except to the extent that the rules do not recognize pairs. It does recognize them by providing that they shall be announced from the desk after each roll-call.

Mr. REED. But the rule only recognizes the announcement of the pair.

Mr. RANDALL. And for the convenience of the House and the members themselves.

Mr. REED. It simply substitutes the announcement by the Clerk for the announcement by the individual members, which was heretofore the custom.

Mr. RANDALL. That is correct.

The whole matter, whether in committee or in the House, as to pairs must rest upon the understanding and honor of the members who have entered into such an agreement. It is a matter which the House has no authority to regulate, but must, in the very nature of things, be remitted to the individual.

Mr. DINGLEY. And presents no question of order.

Mr. RANDALL. And I may add that nobody else has any right to interfere.

Mr. BURROWS. Upon the question of order I quite agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and others that the point I raise may not possibly be a point of order at this time for the decision of the House. We have a list of gentlemen who are paired——

Mr. TAULBEE. I hope the gentleman will not make that question.

Mr. BURROWS. If my friend from Kentucky will not interrupt me now I will be obliged to him.

We have a list of pairs, as I have said, and I might have deferred the inquiry until one of the gentlemen on that list had attempted to pass between the tellers and vote, at which time, of course, the question could be raised as to his right to vote. But I thought it better to call the attention of the committee to it at this time in order that there may be an understanding, or, at least, that attention might be drawn to the question, because I firmly believe that when two members are paired generally, neither member has a right, under that pair, to vote in committee, unless, of course, special exception be made.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is entirely correct, I should say.

Mr. BURROWS. I find that some of the pairs, as I have examined them, announce that the members are paired both in the House and in committee. Others read that the members are paired on all political questions, and several other forms are used. But I simply call attention to this because I believe that when a man is here present who is paired with another who is absent, he has not the right to vote in committee on any question that is manifestly involved in the pair.

Mr. KELLEY. I believe the uniform usage allows the vote of a member who is paired to be given in committee, unless the written pair stipulates, as some of these do, that it covers both the committee and business of the House.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say a word upon the subject-matter as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. The uniform custom has been to allow pairs, and it has been recognized, and pairs are read, for the purpose of indicating to the House that two gentlemen have agreed that neither one shall vote in the absence of the other. Now, in reference to the point made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania on my right, Judge KELLEY, it was very evident, sir, that when this tariff bill was a matter of discussion all the voting upon it would necessarily be in Committee of the Whole, because it would have to be considered by paragraphs in committee; and therefore gentlemen would not make a proposition to pair unless it extended to the vote in committee as well as in the House.

Mr. KELLEY. It would be very easy to express that.

Mr. HOOKER. It would be easy to express it, but if it is not expressed it must be assumed that both parties intended to consent and did consent there should be a pair, especially on this question, in committee as well as in the House itself. If it were restricted to the limit which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] suggests, then there would be a pair when the record would show there was a vote; whereas the intention and purpose of gentlemen making pairs is to pair on all questions.

Another point. It will be seen that the pair of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] and the gentleman with whom he is paired extends to all political questions. I think the doctrine is well settled that each gentleman must determine for himself when paired whether the question coming up is a political question or not. If he determines it is not he has a right to vote. But if he determines in his own conscience and judgment that it is a political question, I hold the proper rule is that he can not vote more in committee than he can in the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think it is generally received here that there is nothing in the Constitution, the laws of the land, or the rules of the House regulating the subject of pairs. The object of pairing is that the gentleman's constituents may suffer no disadvantage or injury by his absence. That is the purpose of a pair. There are pairs at that desk now between gentlemen on the tariff bill for one week. It is well known to us all that this bill is not to be disposed of in that time. We can easily understand what was meant by such a pair.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as this matter of pairing has always rested on the good faith of honorable Representatives on this floor, I think we can safely rest it there, believing that no gentleman on this floor who is associated with another gentleman in a pair will permit him to suffer under it. I trust we shall do in this matter as we have always done.

Mr. FELTON. Treat it as a question of personal honor.

Mr. McCREARY. Pairs are announced in this House under Rule VIII, which declares that—

Pairs shall be announced by the Clerk after the completion of the second roll-call from a written list furnished him and signed by the member making his statement to the Clerk.

They are further recognized by a subsequent portion of the same rule, which requires them to be published in the RECORD as a part of the proceedings immediately following the names of those not voting.

There was a long time in this House when pairs were not recognized. It was not until the Forty-sixth Congress that the rule I have just referred to was adopted.

Now the question is raised as to how far a member is bound when he is paired. I hold that when a member is paired, if he expresses no condition about it, he is paired as regards every vote taken in the House or in Committee of the Whole; that if he desires any limitation or any condition as regards the pair he must state it at the time and in writing, and that when a member is paired generally, as expressed in Rule VIII, he is paired as regards every vote in the House and in Committee of the Whole, standing or passing between tellers.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. If he is paired and votes in the committee, and anybody seeks to challenge his vote, how can he do it? It rests with him alone. It is not a question to be decided by anybody else. Particularly is it a matter which appeals to his honor and sense of right, and nowhere else.

As regards my own case, and I judge for myself alone, when I and another pair generally for a given period, I am paired everywhere. If I pair on those terms with anybody else he is paired everywhere in the committee and in the House. But it is a matter between him and me, and nobody else has any business with it. I can not challenge his vote nor can he challenge mine. But if he votes in the House or in the committee once I will never pair with him again, because he will have forfeited his honor.

Mr. MILLIKEN. While it is true, as my friend from Ohio states, that the question of faithfully keeping a pair is between the two parties and rests on their honor, still it is not improper that there should be some general understanding as to what rule should be observed. I think the question resolves itself into this, whether you desire to make an honest, genuine pair, one that shall take care of your constituents when they do not see you as well as when they do see you, or whether you shall simply pair that they may know you are here to vote or that you are paired with somebody. They are as much interested in a vote that does not go into the RECORD as when it does go in, and when a man wishes to make an honest pair that will take care of his constituents at all times why limit it to those votes that go into the RECORD and which they can read at home. If it be an honest and genuine pair it will affect a man's vote as well in committee as in the House, and as much where our constituents have no record of the vote to read as well as where they have.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that this is a matter resting entirely with the members who make the pair.

Upon this question tellers have been ordered. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] will take their places and act as tellers.

Mr. MILLS. Will the Chair state the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon striking out lines 6 and 7 of the bill.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 6 and 7, and insert: "Timber not further manufactured than hewn, squared, or sided."

The question was taken by a rising vote; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANDALL. The last vote makes it unnecessary to insist upon a division.

The Clerk read as follows:

Timber, squared or sided.

[Mr. TAULBEE withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, the people I represent are not interested directly to any considerable extent in the manufacture of lumber. Here and there throughout the district there are mills for the manufacture of hard-wood lumber, but the great lumbering interest of Michigan is located in the north. I have been waiting for days to hear the gentlemen on the other side, my colleagues who are the representatives of that constituency which is more deeply interested in the lumbering industry, make some observations upon this part of the bill, but up to this time they have remained silent. I therefore feel constrained, sir, to read to the committee a communication which I hold in my hand, signed by five gentlemen residing in the Saginaw Valley, and of different political affiliations, which presents in a very succinct form, and very much better than I could present them, the reasons for not placing lumber on the free-list.

The names appended to this paper are those of Arthur Hill, W. C. McClure, P. A. O'Donnell, Max Heavenrich, A. T. Bliss, and F. C. Stone, gentlemen of high standing, well known to my colleagues who represent the Saginaw Valley and throughout the State.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BURROWS. Not at this time. With the permission of the committee I will read this communication.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 12, 1888.

Hon. J. C. BURROWS, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: The Saginaw Board of Trade recently presented to Congress a memorial setting forth in general terms the injustice of putting lumber and salt on the free-list.

We had desired, as representatives of that organization, to appear before the Ways and Means Committee to present for its consideration further information which might assist in guiding it to just and intelligent action relating to these industries.

But as we are not to be granted a hearing by that committee, we place in your hands, as the Michigan member thereof, this statement for such use as will, in your judgment, best serve these interests.

One defense of the proposition that lumber should be put on the free-list is that the lumbermen of this country are destroying the forests, and that this so-called destruction should be stopped in the interest of arboriculture. It is proposed by a repeal of the lumber tariff to invite Canadian competition to the end that the American lumbermen shall be driven out of the business and the forests thus remain uncut.

We do not believe that the magnitude of the industry that it is proposed to strike down is generally understood and appreciated.

The conditions of the lumber industry of Michigan are substantially the same as in 1882 as relates to the amount and cost of production.

I beg the careful attention of the committee to this statement.

The annual output of lumber is about 4,000,000,000 feet, valued at $52,000,000. Referring to the Tariff Commission Report of 1882, page 956, it will be found that in producing this lumber, besides the timber investment, there is invested in saw-mills and lumbering apparatus $40,000,000; that the average number of men employed is 28,000; that there is paid annually on account of labor $17,585,500; that there is paid annually for men engaged in transporting same $4,000,000; that there is paid farmers annually for produce $6,000,000.

In addition to these sums are the many millions paid annually to manufacturers and merchants, all of which, with the above, tend to give employment, within our borders, both to capital and labor, and swell the tide of State and national activity.

These are the details for lumbering in Michigan alone. In the entire country there are produced annually not less than 20,000,000,000 feet of lumber, involving an investment in mills and lumbering apparatus of at least $200,000,000.

The amount paid labor annually is not less than $90,000,000, and to farmers for produce $30,000,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. If I can be recognized I will yield my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. BURROWS. Possibly the Committee of the Whole, by unanimous consent, will grant me a few moments more to complete this statement.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I hope that will be done.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] asks that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] be allowed five minutes more.

Mr. DOCKERY. And I ask that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] be allowed a similar extension when he shall take the floor to reply to the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] be allowed five minutes, and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] when he takes the floor shall be allowed a similar extension. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURROWS (reading):

According to the census report of 1880 but two industries lead lumber in the amount of capital employed in manufacturing.

Here are some of the important industries:

Industries.	Capital.	Duty per cent. ad valorem.
Iron and steel	$250,900,000	41
Cotton	219,500,000	40
Lumber	181,100,000	16
Flour and grist mills	177,300,000	20
Woolen	96,000,000	67

These tables further show that one man for each fifteen employed in the leading industries is now engaged directly in the manufacture of lumber.

If this plan for transferring the cutting of timber to Canada, by legislation, could be effected, it would involve then the destruction of the third largest industry in the country and throw out of work one man in fifteen of those employed in the trades.

In the words of our memorial, "Where would these losses be made good and in what new field would this labor be employed?"

But, as has many times been pointed out by the forestry experts, even if we stop cutting our white pine and hemlock timber it will not be saved, but rather lost, from being consumed by forest fires.

The Forestry Report of the United States Census of 1880, pages 490 et seq., presented maps and statistics illustrating the continual prevalence of and damage to timber by these forest fires.

Gentlemen may have forgotten that map prepared under the direction of my friend from New York [Mr. COX], showing the extent of forest fires in the United States, according to the census of 1880.

[Mr. BURROWS here exhibited the census map of 1880, showing the extent of the destruction of American forests by fires.]

They sweep through the forest and kill the timber. If cut at once and before bored by grubs this burned timber makes good lumber. If left standing for a year it is unfit for all but the most common uses, and at the end of, say, five years, is worthless. The testimony of Messrs. Rust, Van Schaik, and Hotchkiss before the Tariff Commission (see report, page 955 and seq.) sets forth very fully the manner and extent of these losses from forest fires.

With railroads traversing every portion of the State, and homestead settlers clearing land in the midst of pineries, the strictest statutes against the careless and criminal burning of our forests have been ineffectual to prevent it. Fires prevail every year, and during especially dry years, like 1871 and 1881, they not only damage millions of dollars worth of timber, but destroy the homes and even the lives of settlers, arresting the attention and evoking the charity of the whole nation.

It is sometimes claimed that the lumbermen of Michigan buy their lumber for $1.25 to $2.50 per acre, and that when they realize $4.50 per thousand for stumpage the return is exorbitant. If this statement were true the conclusion would be sound, but the statement is not founded on fact.

At least 80 per cent. of the pine timber held by the men engaged in manufacturing lumber in Michigan was originally included in a series of immense grants to canal companies and to aid in the construction of railroads and military roads. These grants were held by Eastern capitalists until the timber had been substantially cut from the cheap lands; and to provide in advance timber for their mills the lumbermen have been compelled to pay such prices therefor that they can not now profitably sell lumber at less that the prevailing prices.

There is no import duty on saw-logs, and the Michigan lumbermen have never asked for one, showing that they do not desire to protect the American timber owner, but rather the American manufacturer.

We have attempted to show that the way to save our forests from destruction was to utilize them, and that to compel lumbermen to cease cutting timber would bring great loss to the industrial community.

We will now present a few facts as to the extent of our forests and the sufficiency of the home supply of lumber, and the impolicy and injustice of removing the tariff from the Canadian product.

I desire to call the attention of Southern Representatives to the statement which now follows:

The forestry statistics of the census of 1880 show that in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas there was claimed to be 237,000,000,000 feet of pine, and it is stated that these are in fact underestimates. The cut of the Northwest, as was developed at the January session of the forestry convention of Michigan, will exceed the census estimates by at least 50 per cent., so that we may safely call—

	Feet.
Pine in above States	300,000,000,000
Cypress (estimated)	50,000,000,000
Pine and allied woods in States north of the Southern States and east of the Rocky Mountains (estimated)	100,000,000,000
In States and Territories west of the Rocky Mountains (census)	350,000,000,000
Total	800,000,000,000

It appears, then, that we have in this country to-day 800,000,000,000 feet of timber belonging to the coniferous family, against only 50,000,000,000 feet according to the accepted estimates (see Tariff Commission Report, pages 1023 and 1024) in Canada.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to have five minutes longer, but I dislike to trespass so much on the patience of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to permitting the gentleman from Michigan to occupy the floor for five minutes longer? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURROWS (reading):

A review of the forestry statistics shows that the pine timber supply of Canada, east of Manitoba, lies next our border; that the upper waters of the streams which supply this timber flow through treeless barrens and morasses with here and there a worthless and stunted growth of fir. They further show that the pine timber of Canada, like that in the Northwestern States, does not renew itself when cut; other timber taking its place, while the timber from Maine down the entire Atlantic coast, along the Gulf of Mexico, and the timber of our western slope is naturally reproduced after being cut, and will be unless prevented by fires.

Our great coast belt, then, suited in soil and favored by humidity, constitutes therefore our natural timber preserve, and it will continue to supply building material to our people long after the pine forests of Canada and the Northwest are swept away.

With this 350,000,000,000 feet of pine and cypress in the South, and with probably 150,000,000,000 feet of deciduous timber valuable for construction, such as poplar, gum, etc., why should we turn to Canada for our timber supply? Especially why should we do this when we can not find a market in our own country for the lumber which we now produce?

The revenue tables show that the export of lumber and timber during the last fiscal year was 643,000,000 feet, mainly from the Southern States; while the import was only 443,000,000 feet from Canada. And this Canadian lumber comes into direct competition with the Southern product.

At a large government sale of timber berths at Toronto, December 16 last, an effort was made by the Canadian lumbermen to have the stumpage dues in certain cases reduced. Mr. Charleton, member of the Canadian Parliament, publicly addressed the council which has these matters in charge, and urged as a reason for such action that the Southern pine and poplar were invading the Northern market so that they could not compete with it unless they had relief. He claimed that 150,000,000 feet of Southern pine came into New York City in direct competition with the Canadian product.

I have here a letter stating the amount of Southern pine brought into New York City, and also the statement of a Canadian official that he desired some latitude by which he could reduce certain charges for Canadian lumber, so that the Southern product might be driven out of this Northern market.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Was he asking for protection against Southern pine?

Mr. BURROWS. I can not yield because I do not want to trespass too far upon the patience of the committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am asking for information, not to interrupt the gentleman. I wish to know whether that was a Canadian request for protection against Southern pine. Did the gentleman state that a Canadian official asked protection against Southern pine?

Mr. BURROWS. The paper to which I have just referred asks that the stumpage may be reduced in Canada so that the Canadians can furnish their lumber more cheaply; and the reason assigned is that the Southern pine is invading the Northern market, and unless some reduction of the stumpage be made so that the Canadians can produce their pine more cheaply, the Southern people will control this Northern market. The Canadian official to whom I referred desires latitude to reduce these charges.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That establishes our superiority, about which I have had no doubt.

Mr. BURROWS. If the Canadians hope to drive you out of the Northern market when there is a duty of $2 a thousand, how easily might that hope be realized if the duty was removed?

[Reading:]

We have learned the exact amount of Southern pine arriving in the New York market during the year 1887, and we find it to be 220,599,294 feet, besides 50,000,000 feet of what is known as North Carolina pine.

This lumber, as well as the poplar, comes North on a very narrow margin of profit, not to exceed, say, $1 per thousand, and it is impossible to stand a reduction of $2 per thousand and meet this avowed Canadian competition.

It is impossible to understand on what principle of tariff legislation lumber can be placed on the free-list, unless the protective principle is to be entirely abandoned, which is not now proposed.

The lumbermen pay high taxes, employ protected labor, use protected manufactures, and are as much entitled to consideration as the iron or steel worker or the cotton and woolen manufacturer.

The lumberman is now protected against Canada lumber by a duty of only 16 per cent., while his labor costs him 30 per cent. more than in Canada.

The average duty on our dutiable goods which he uses is over 47 per cent. Even under the Walker tariff, from 1846 to 1857, which was called relatively a free-trade period, the tariff on lumber was 20 per cent. ad valorem.

But what is known as the Mills tariff bill provides in substance that Canada shall remit her export duty on logs in consideration of our letting her lumber come in free.

This is not a proper consideration. We have always admitted Canadian logs free of duty, and Canada recently placed an export duty thereon of $2 per thousand.

We hold that an export duty is an obsolete and indefensible means of raising revenue, and considering that it is prohibited by our Constitution, we certainly are not called upon to make concessions to Canada in order that she may abandon an improper practice.

If lumber were made duty-free, so that logs and lumber would be, as now, on the same footing, the logs would be, as now, manufactured in Canada, as they are nearer their natural market, which is in the Eastern States, than in Michigan, as a glance at the map will show. We should compel Canada to repeal this export duty.

As to export duties generally we would respectfully suggest that in all new treaties they should be prohibited, and that Congress should enact legislation providing that when an export duty is charged by any nation upon any article coming to this country an additional import duty shall be collected upon such article, its products, and all manufactures into which it enters, to the extent of, say, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

There is another view of this question of free lumber which can not be overlooked by any Representative from Michigan.

Hon. Perry Hannah said at the recent forestry convention that the hard woods of the State would bring more money to the people than the pine forests, and that this money would be distributed among those who most need it, the farmers and settlers. This distribution has only fairly begun, yet the comparatively recent demand for hard-wood lumber has already brought millions of dollars into the State. To surrender this trade to Ontario, lying, as this province does, between Michigan and our main market, the East, would compel the settler to burn his timber as he cleared his lands, as he has done in the past, instead of turning it into lumber at a profit.

To conclude. The facts here stated and the evidence referred to we think plainly shows—

First. That if the forests of the Northern States are not cut and utilized they will be burned and wasted.

Second. That on account of the magnitude of the lumber business, serious interference with it will give a shock to the entire industrial system.

Third. That the ultimate forest resources of this country relatively exceed those of Canada, and that we are now seeking a market abroad for timber which we should be able to use at home.

Fourth. That the principal timber supply of this country lies in the South comparatively untouched, yielding less than 4,000,000,000 feet in 1880, while it is capable, under proper conditions of forest growth, of producing 10,000,000,000 feet annually without impairment.

Fifth. That the present duty on lumber is much less than on any other article where labor is employed to a similar extent in its production.

Recognizing the necessity for the reduction of the current revenue, we point first to the burden of internal taxes, which bear directly upon our own people, as a proper subject for at least a partial removal.

To meet the balance of the reduction necessary we stand ready to accept such proportionate reduction in the duty on lumber as is made in the entire dutiable schedule, and we can not in justice or safety be compelled to go further.

And in any new adjustment of duties Canada and all other countries should be compelled, by some form of retaliatory legislation, to abolish export duties, so they shall be on the same footing as ourselves, who are not permitted to impose them.

Yours, respectfully,

ARTHUR HILL,
W. C. McCLURE,
P. A. O'DONNELL,
MAX HEAVENRICH,
A. T. BLISS,
F. C. STONE,
Committee.

Now, I will ask to have printed the balance of the statement, Mr.

Chairman, because I feel embarrassed by trespassing upon the attention of the committee so long.

I present this statement not from my district but from the Saginaw district, represented by my friend Mr. TARSNEY, and also from the district of my friend Mr. FISHER, neither of whom I now see in the House.

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes; I am here.

Mr. BURROWS. My friend from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] will be able to state whether these gentlemen are reliable and worthy of the fullest confidence, as I believe them to be.

Mr. TARSNEY. Who are the gentlemen?

Mr. BURROWS. I will read the names: Arthur Hill, W. C. McClure, P. A. O'Donnell, Max Heavenrich, A. T. Bliss, and F. C. Stone.

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes; these gentlemen are personally known to me, and they are respectable gentlemen.

Mr. GUENTHER. Are they Republicans or Democrats?

Mr. BURROWS. I ask to have the balance of the statement printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GUENTHER. Are these men Democrats or Republicans?

Mr. TARSNEY. Both Republicans and Democrats.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. That statement is signed by gentlemen no doubt respectable, as they are indorsed by my friend from Michigan [Mr. TARNSEY]. [Laughter.] They are the names of millionaires. They are the names of men who have got rich by bringing these forests of Michigan to utmost desolation. They are men who made fine fortunes with the aid and hire of 90 per cent. of their labor from Canada, and thereby displacing American labor. Above all, sir, they are men who got rich at the expense of the consumers of this country, for whom I speak more than for any other class.

Why, to hear gentlemen on the other side talk and to see the gentlemen from Maine sneer one would suppose——

Mr. REED. Did the gentleman refer to me?

Mr. COX. I am speaking in my own time.

Mr. REED. Did the gentleman refer to me?

A MEMBER. There is another member from Maine.

Mr. REED. Oh, you referred to Governor DINGLEY. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. COX. I generally take a man of my own size. [Renewed laughter and applause.] The gentlemen make their arguments always in favor of the producers. They are for the producer—the producer—the producer—never for the consumer. The statement read by my friend from Michigan——

Mr. BURROWS. Pardon me, statements are made by others who are not producers.

Mr. COX. I did not interrupt you. We gave you time. I was gentle about it.

Where there is one producer of lumber in this country there are at least five hundred consumers; and are we to forget the consumers always and forever in legislating? Must we ignore always those who have to use every form and shape of wood, from a box to a barn, from a fence to a desk, from a clothes-pin to a house, everything required for their convenience, comfort, and shelter? Does it come with good grace or fair reason for any one, I do not care whether he comes from down East or from out West, to sneer at any argumentation on behalf of the great body of the people who are consumers, and against the few who do not even parcel out to their employés a fair share of their enormous gains?

Moreover, I may say on this subject that I favor the protective system. I want to protect our forests and underbrush in Maine, in Michigan, all along the Pacific coast, and in the Appalachians and Adirondacks. Let us "protect" them not merely from forest fires, from cattle, and the scourge of monopolies, who, by perjury and fraud, absorb our timber land, but from all other destructive agencies. Among these agencies the worst is the tariff, with its $2 a thousand feet, to which conspirators have added by their "trusts" twice as much more, to fleece the consumers of lumber.

Every one knows that petitions have been filed here from the forestry committees and societies and persons interested in the preservation of our rivers and lands by equable water distribution. These petitions show that our timber lands—70,000,000 of acres in extent—are, under such ruinous schemes, becoming absolutely waste places—moribund——

Mr. REED. Moribund!

Mr. COX. Yes, moribund, sick, dying, almost dead. History, geography, and sanitary science show such results. In all ages and in all countries where the forests have been denuded climatic disturbances affect the desolated lands, as if it were calcined by fire, and render it uninhabitable and uncultivable.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be permitted to proceed for the same length of time that was allowed to me.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I hope that will be done.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman will be permitted to proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen upon the other side have emphasized this lumber question. I am glad that they have fought this measure of putting lumber on the free-list at the threshold of their contest for protection. Of all the objects next in importance to a reduction of the surplus is the reduction of the duty or freedom from taxation of lumber. Its tax should be dispensed with, as it is among the least dispensable articles of human need and comfort.

I may except clothing, which is its analogy, as they are closely related. This is a happy coincidence growing out of the arrangement of the tariff bill.

Gentlemen upon the other side, by their special pleas for delays in the consideration of this bill and by objections of all kinds urged in general debate against any revision of the tariff, have antagonized the great body of the people in an interest where the logic and facts are plain. It makes the demand for revision more imperious from the people who bear the burden. It may, sir, make it urgent for the majority here to so amend the rules as to pass this bill before the heats of August shall come, in despite of this dilatory action of the minority.

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. COX. I wait for the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I have been in the habit of having the gentleman from New York yield——

Mr. COX. I yield to you always. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED resumed his seat.

Mr. COX. Now I want to make a protection speech, and I suspect I will have to go over on the other side to do it.

[Mr. COX here walked across the aisle amidst laughter and applause.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. It is needed worse on that side.

Mr. COX. Oh, well; I will take care of myself. I come over here near my distinguished friend from Philadelphia [Mr. O'NEILL]. He comes from the home of the Friends—the Quakers. I speak near him, where I am not in danger of being assaulted [laughter] in order to say that I am in favor of the doctrine of "protection" as properly used in the order of good government. I do not mean the kind of protection referred to by Shakespeare when he puts in the mouth of one of his sovereign Tudors a protest against the practices of his time which took one-sixth of all values from the people?

> We must not rend our subjects from our laws,
> And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each?
> A trembling contribution! Why we take
> From every tree lop bark, and part of the timber;
> And though we leave it with a root, thus hacked
> The air will drink the sap!

I do not believe in the similar protection that you gentlemen have been so strenuously advocating here. I would protect our forests—every tree lop, bark, and part of the timber, all over the country—not only against the inroads made by the unscrupulous selfishness of speculators, but against a policy which promotes the insatiate greed of a class who, under the incentive of high tariffs and monopoly of timber-lands, cut down the forests, and after converting them into money, leave nothing but charred and hideous, hacked and sapless ruins.

Let us be warned, sir, against the inevitable. Eventually these splendid wooded mountain ranges of our country will be converted into arid wastes, unless we cease to give a legal premium and moneyed bounty for these ravages. They will become the lair of malaria and the abode of desolation. Such has been the fate of all other countries in past ages that have been reckless of the priceless blessings of their wooded treasures. We will only value our forest riches when we shall have lost them.

Therefore I favor the "protection" of the forests, but not the protection which you gentlemen would have, which raises the cost of lumber to the multitude for the enrichment of the few. I am for the genuine sovereign remedy—not the pretended and specious quackery. I am reminded of the difference between the real sovereign and the pretender. Who is the pretender in this matter of protection? The power which would take care of your forests and thereby promote those sanitary and climatic influences and arrangements which give rains to our soil and health to our people, or the power which pretends "protection" by spoliation? It reminds me of the old distich, for as I see my friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] listening eagerly, I am compelled to quote a little poetry to illustrate the genuine and the pretended sovereign over these matters of economy:

> God bless the king, who is the faith defender.

That is our side of the House. [Laughter and applause.]

> God bless—no harm in blessing the pretender,
> Who that pretender is, and who that king—
> God bless us all is quite another thing!

[Renewed applause and laughter.]

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, in the letter I read I was repeating the views of gentlemen familiar with this great branch of national industry. The gentleman from New York says in reply that it is simply a plea for the interest of the great moneyed kings and millionaires. I am very certain he must have lost sight of statements embodied in that paper. It discloses the fact that outside of the value of pine lands there is invested in mills and appliances for lumbering in the State of Michigan $40,000,000. He forgets that we are producing in these mills in the State of Michigan more than 4,000,000,000 feet of lumber every year, and that this is not produced without the employment of a large amount of labor.

Mr. COX. Canadian labor.

Mr. BURROWS. Now do not, my friend, raise any side issue. The value of this product is $52,000,000 per annum. The gentleman from New York forgets the disclosure in this communication that we employ in these mills an average per year of 28,000 laboring men. He forgets that this paper discloses the fact that we pay not to millionaires, but to the laboring men in the State of Michigan engaged in the lumbering industry, every twelve months, $17,585,000. He forgets that during the year the farmers of Michigan sell of the products of their farms to the men engaged in the lumber camps and mills $6,000,000 worth.

In the country at large there is invested in saw-mills and appliances, as shown by this paper, $200,000,000. It is shown that we are producing in the United States 20,000,000,000 feet of lumber annually, for which we pay to labor engaged in its production the sum of $90,000,000 every twelve months.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Where do you get that statement?

Mr. BURROWS. I get these figures from the communication which I have just read to the committee, signed by five gentlemen, whose statements my colleague affirms are entitled to the fullest credence.

More than that, the farmers of the United States sell annually to the men working in the mills and lumber camps $30,000,000 worth of the products of their farms. It will not do to say that if you destroy this industry you affect no other interests. It will not do for the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to say that the millionaire is the only one to be affected. Besides the destruction of the farmers' market for $30,000,000 worth annually of the products of the farm, it will rob labor of an annual princely sum of $90,000,000. Let me say, therefore, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that the statement to which he refers shows that when you sweep away this great industry by opening the flood-gates of Canadian importations you not only assail the millionaire, but the farmer and laborer go down in the common ruin. [Applause.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] submits figures of the amount of capital engaged in the lumber industry and of the number of men employed in that industry, and assumes without any demonstration that that capital and those men are benefited by and need the existing duty upon lumber.

The gentleman states, and doubtless correctly, that there are perhaps 800,000,000,000 feet of lumber left in this country, or timber suitable for making lumber. I will say to the gentleman that nearly one-tenth of that estimate is in the State which I have the honor in part to represent. We have exceeding 70,000,000,000 feet of lumber, or timber suitable for making lumber, in my State. Since 1880 there has been a remarkable development of this industry with my people. When you travel on the railroads the hum of the saw-mills is like the hum of the locusts. We sell our lumber under the very shadow of the forests of Michigan. We reach out to Chicago, to Omaha, to Iowa, and Kansas, and we cover the State of Texas. We sell to Boston and Cincinnati of selected kinds, and push our commerce from the Gulf to the British line.

Only on yesterday I saw a statement in regard to additional parties from the gentleman's own State who have come to the growing and enterprising little city where I live. They are said to have acquired some 200,000 acres of our pine lands and to be about to build 28 or 30 miles of railroad to add another to the gigantic lumber enterprises we have in our State. They are welcome to a condition of equal rights and fair play.

Now, sir, our people are making and selling lumber at eight and nine dollars a thousand, and they are making money very handsomely upon that basis. As yet, with great skill and energy, they are nevertheless but partially organized. Profitable as their business is they are still selling lumber at $5 a thousand less than its export price. They are almost rioting with joy in the midst of our virgin and splendid forests. This will not long continue. They will soon come together and organize. Our official reports show that at the Southern seaports we command $13 a thousand for rough plank and scantling. This is a free-trade price. The interior can command this and more by reason of natural advantages. These natural advantages we may neither begrudge nor deny capitalists. But shall we add to them?

Let us inquire into this. What will be the effect of putting up lumber from $8 and $9 a thousand to $13 a thousand? What will be the effect of putting it up from $13 to what the tariff, when by combination its benefits are reaped, will make it, which is $15 per thousand feet? Both changes make lumber that much dearer to the people of Chicago, to the people of Iowa and Kansas, and to millions of others of our people. That restricts the consumption of lumber, and that restricts the employment of labor.

The effect of each advance will be oppressive to the farmer, to the citizens in the cities, and to the laboring men engaged in the mills in my State.

I have met this question before the people in my State, and I have got without dissent the votes of our laboring people, because they see that the continuation of a tariff on lumber is class legislation, it is unjust to our toiling millions, and it means an ultimate curtailment of the consumption of the products of their labor by high prices of which they will receive not one dollar. Moderate profits require a large output to make material gains upon capital. Here comes a demand for many men to speed the mills. A demand for labor to do this makes good wages. Our people know this. Nature holds out to us large profits yet unreached, and that no country on earth can deprive us of. Our capitalists would be foolish indeed to invoke the resentment and wrath of a free and high-minded people by asking that their rich and lawful advantages be tainted by ill-gotten gains.

These, sir, are the truths about lumber. If a duty be desirable to some it is obnoxious to us. We have a fair and easy mastery of the situation, and you gentlemen have the same within all reasonable, considerate, and humane limits. Let us not seek to corrupt our capitalists or to corrupt or deceive our workingmen, or to oppress our good people seeking shelter and homes for purposes that make decay alike for society and the state.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] is recognized.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I yield time to the gentleman from Michigan to ask a question.

Mr. BURROWS. What explanation does the gentleman make of the statement of Mr. Charlton, of Canada, when he desires to have authority to lower the price of stumpage that the lumber may be produced more cheaply on the theory that Southern pine has invaded the Northern market; and what would be the effect in addition of taking the duty of $2 off when to-day Canada can put her lumber in Chicago cheaper than we in Michigan can put ours in Buffalo?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman mistakes the necessity for an explanation. He is the one who needs to explain the statement which he has cited and which is so contradictory of his own position. It shows that we have the mastery. You say they need that to keep us out of the market. If they are weak and need help to keep us out, we, who are the stronger, certainly do not need help to keep them out.

Mr. BURROWS. That is under the existing tariff of $2 per thousand. Now, if you take that off, will they not drive you out of the New York market? They expect to do so and say they will do so.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Very well; let us look at that. We are now selling near by at $4 and $5 less than Canadian near-by prices. We can advance two and three dollars with the duty off. Do you insist that we shall charge the farmers $5 more than now? Look at the export tables. We have nothing to fear from them. Look at the exports from the Southern States exposed as we are, not along the seaboard. We are meeting the Canadians in England, France; we have driven them from Spain; and we ask them no odds in the North Sea, the Baltic, the Mediterranean, or in any part of the world. We are meeting them on a free-trade basis and have been for many years without any diminution of our exports. Can we not meet them also in Boston and New York? Of course we can oppress our people. We have cheaper access. We are the masters of the situation. All we ask for American nerve and American energy and American skill and our natural advantage is to get a fair chance at the half-breeds of Canada. We can run the year around; they can not. Neither can you, but you are better fixed than they are. We are the ones you need to fear in competition; but you can not have a tariff against us. If times get hard, come down and join in with us.

Mr. BAYNE. Do you refer to lumber?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do.

Mr. BAYNE. We are exporting lumber to Europe largely.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. Do you refer also to sugar?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We are talking about lumber now, but I am perfectly ready to discuss sugar with you when the proper time comes.

Mr. BAYNE. The things we produce in abundance you do not want any protection on; but the thing which we produce in insignificant quantity you want protected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Oh, we will take up the sugar question in due time, and I will help you to hurry on to that schedule.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, there have been a good many reasons given here why lumber should be put on the free-list; and I have certainly been surprised at some of them. My friend from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] desires it to be done because he says that if the tariff remains, the manufacturer, where he now gets $9 for his lumber, will then get $15, and that will crush the workingman who is engaged in producing the lumber.

By what logic the gentleman argues that the laborer who works for an employer who receives $15 per thousand for his product is not to get as large an advantage as when he works for an employer who receives but $9 per thousand, I can not understand. There is no doubt, sir, that as between labor and capital the laboring man in this age of the world is going to get his fair share of the profits, and if the profit on the product be $5 instead of $2 a thousand, the laboring man is going to get more money out of the $5 than he would get out of the $2; while, on the other hand, if there is no profit at all, there will be none for either the employer or the workman.

My friend from New York [Mr. COX] desires to have lumber put on the free-list as a "protective" measure. In his great generosity of heart—for he is generous toward nature as well as toward man—he looks with sadness upon the slaughter of American forests. Well, sir, if the picture which he painted had any real foundation in truth, I certainly would shed tears with him; but I desire to ask the gentleman, of what utility are these forests of ours if we make no use of them? And if Canada has but fifty billions of lumber now, where are we going to get lumber for use in this country when, by putting lumber on the free-list, the Canadian forests shall have been exhausted? Are we to go houseless and barnless? Are we going without shelter rather than touch these great American forests that are being destroyed by fires and by maturity and decay as well as by the act of man? He says that there are fifty times as many consumers as there are producers to be regarded in dealing with this question. Let me remind the gentleman with reference to sugar, upon which this bill leaves a duty of more than 60 per cent., that there are sixty millions of consumers of that article while there are but two thousand producers in this country.

My friends on the other side who are so anxious to protect the consumers of this country seem to be entirely blind to the enormous duty of 78 per cent. now existing upon an article which goes into the consumption of every family in this land. My friend from New York wants to provide shelter and clothing for the consumer; but does not the consumer want food as well? We may live with very poor shelter, we can get along with ragged clothes, but we must fare very badly indeed when our food is interfered with. Yet here is an article of prime necessity, an article used by every person as food, and it pays a duty of 78 per cent. While our friends on the other side are so anxious to protect the consumer they forget this matter altogether.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I now ask that debate on the pending clause be closed. I think we had better go on with the next paragraph. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. BAYNE. I object.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee rise to close debate.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 89, noes 70.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of House bill No. 9051; and pending that motion I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes. On this motion I call the previous question.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 99, noes 1.

Mr. BAYNE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to suggest to the gentlemen on the other side that it is very bad policy to undertake to apply a gag rule to the discussion of the propositions in this bill. Thus far we have been debating these propositions upon pro forma amendments. But gentlemen desire to offer substantial amendments and to support them in debate. It would be very unfair towards this side of the House to cut off debate in explanation of such amendments.

Mr. MILLS. We have now spent two days on this bill, and have made no progress whatever. Gentlemen have insisted on speaking and speaking and speaking all the time. We have been liberal with them. Here is this lumber schedule, embracing a number of lines. I think now, toward the close of the second day, we have reached about the eighth line. Some one submitted the other day in a newspaper a mathematical problem, which I think a very good one—if it takes one day not to pass two lines of this bill, how long will it take to pass one thousand lines? Our friends on the other side should treat us fairly in this matter. We want to be liberal in regard to debate, but we want to make a little progress. Since disposing of the agricultural bill this morning, we have spent the entire time on one or two lines; we have not even passed them.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Will the gentleman agree to allow forty minutes for the discussion upon the pending paragraph?

Mr. MILLS. I will accept the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Texas will allow me to say that he has been long enough a member of this House to understand that a bill of this character is very sure to elicit in the early stages of its consideration a great deal of discussion, discussion covering a great deal of general ground; but the time spent in discussing these earlier propositions is no indication whatever of the length of time it will take to pass the bill. Members have their ideas on the general subject fresh in their minds, and desire to discuss them. I think the gentleman will really make quite as much progress by allowing the House to go on its own way as he will in any other manner. In discussing the lumber question we are also disposing of the general question.

Mr. MILLS. I appreciate the suggestion of my friend from Maine. But I want to remind the House that we have spent this day in discussing a clause involving in revenue to the Government the sum of $3.

Mr. ADAMS. The discussion is worth a great deal more than $3.

Mr. MILLS. Yesterday was spent in discussing a clause involving revenue to the amount of $198.80. Let us continue the discussion on the next clause of the bill, which relates also to lumber. We have not yet reached the important part of the lumber question. I ask unanimous consent that debate in Committee of the Whole on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to forty minutes.

Mr. MACDONALD. I object.

Mr. MILLS. I move, then, to limit debate in Committee of the Whole to forty minutes on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto; and on that motion I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. MILLS to limit debate in Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. MILLS that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill No. 9051, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the tariff bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and all debate on the pending paragraph by order of the House has been limited to forty minutes. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted, but if there be no objection the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make the usual pro forma amendment in order to submit a few observations touching the proposition to admit lumber free of duty,

Mr. Chairman, the most distinguished of all the leaders of the Republican party (Mr. Blaine) in the course of debate in this Hall, June 10, 1868, used the following language in opposition to the policy of laying an internal tax on lumber. I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

Mr. BLAINE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I desire to discuss briefly the amendment which the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means so vigorously opposes. And in the first place let me say that during the entire war, when we were seeking everything on the earth and in the skies and in the waters under the earth out of which taxation could be wrung, it never entered into the conception of Congress to tax breadstuffs—never. During the most pressing exigencies of the terrible contest in which we were engaged neither breadstuffs nor lumber became the subject of one penny of taxation.

What was the reason of this? Let me tell my friend from Ohio that it was not because of the influence of the rich grain-dealers at Chicago, or Toledo, or Milwaukee. It was because if anything be universal breadstuffs are universal, for they constitute literally "the staff of life." If you impose on them a tax ever so small in amount it will be made a pretext by the very speculators of whom gentlemen talk for adding an appreciable amount to the cost of a barrel of flour. I do beseech this House not to sanction the principle of subjecting such an article to taxation for the sake of the paltry amount that is to be gained from this source.

Mr. WELKER. Does the gentleman expect to secure an exemption for lumber by advocating an exemption for breadstuffs? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. I am referring to breadstuffs, because it illustrates a principle. I beseech this House not to sanction a tax on breadstuffs which will simply build up a mountain of prejudice for the sake of a mole-hill of revenue.

But, sir, I have said enough on that point. Now, as to the article of lumber. I again remind this House that there has never been a tax upon this article. The gentleman from Ohio may talk of this question as he pleases, but I say that wherever the Western frontiersman undertakes to make for himself a home, to till the soil, to carry on the business of life, he needs lumber for his cabin; he needs lumber for his fence; he needs lumber for his wagon or cart; he needs lumber for his plow; he needs lumber for almost every purpose in his daily life.

Mr. KERR. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have but five minutes and can not yield to the gentleman.

Sir, there is no point in the effective argument of Mr. Blaine in opposition to an internal-revenue tax on lumber that does not apply with equal force to a tax on imported lumber. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that when a great party throws itself like a lion in the path of a proposition to strike the tax from this article of almost universal consumption, there ought to be some substantial reason given for the faith that is in them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] opposes the "free-lumber" clause of this bill although he admits that it will strike off $20 from the cost of every car-load of lumber, but justifies his opposition by the statement that his constituents will not get any part of the reduction. If the gentleman will get out of the way of the passage of this measure I will guaranty that the Kansas farmer will get his share of the $20 in the scramble. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], it seems, differs somewhat from the gentleman from Kansas, and rests his opposition upon the declaration that it will destroy the lumber industries. In this view of the case it is evident that he is of the opinion that the consumer will get a large share of the $20 and that the effect will be to reduce the price to the men who need lumber for the construction of houses, fences, and barns.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to attempt to reconcile the conflicting views of the opponents of this just measure, but will proceed briefly to notice the labor question as it relates to the lumber industries; but before doing so will say that the people of the West and many States of the Northwest, without party distinction, have for many years favored free lumber. The great Republican State of Kansas prior to the revision, so called, of 1883, instructed her Representatives upon this floor in the following terms:

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby requested and instructed to use their best effort to have the duty upon lumber of every description removed so that the same may be placed on the free-list.

Mr. Chairman, this is the voice of a great State whose Representatives, in part, refuse to obey the request, on the assumption that such action would imperil the interests of labor.

Sir, where lies the real interest of labor in this connection, and what policy will most certainly contribute to its prosperity? The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks that the duty on lumber be made sufficiently high to cover the increased cost of labor in this country as against foreign countries.

Mr. BURROWS. The argument used on your side of the House is that if lumber is put on the free-list we will save our forests. We would save our forests if we went out of business.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Michigan only states our position in part and not in its entirety; and I may also add favors a policy the effect of which is to bring Canadian labor in competition with American labor, and drive it from the field with lower wages.

Let me come to the labor question, because you insist that you are the special friends of the workingman. I desire to read your confession as it appears in the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings. Here it is, wrung from you in a colloquy with the very able gentleman from Minnesota:

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Now, after this, I hope the gentlemen from these great Northwestern States will answer the question why poverty should "protect" wealth. That is the question that touches the masses of the people and which they would like to have answered. Says the gentleman, our laborers are benefited. The man that stands up to-day and says labor in the lumber industry receives higher wages than in other like industries, protected or not protected, makes a statement that can not be sustained.

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. No one said that.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I am glad that you disclaim such a position. To say that laborers in the lumber protected industries receive higher compensation than in other industries is an absurdity.

Mr. FUNSTON. No one made that assertion.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The gentleman from Wisconsin made substantially that assertion, whatever may have been his particular words. He said protected labor now received so much per month, while years ago it received much less, and he attributes that to the protective tariff on the lumber industry.

Mr. DOCKERY. If labor does not get it, who does?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The millionaires get it. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. And they did not answer that question.

Mr. DOCKERY. They did not.

Mr. Chairman, I was surprised for the moment at the admission, and was curious to hear an explanation from some of our Republican friends, who were willing to concede that those laborers received no higher wages than those employed in the non-protected industries. But when I heard the statement to-day by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], made as it was on the authority of reputable gentlemen from the Northwest, that 90 per cent. of the laborers employed in the lumber industries were Canadians, I began to understand why it was that they did not receive any greater compensation. The same result that is manifest in the lumber industry appears along the whole line of protected avocations. American labor has been driven out by cheap foreign labor until to-day 33 per cent. of the employés of the manufacturing industries of the United States are foreigners, the larger per cent. of them imported to compete with the laborers of America. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS. Can my friend state the rate of wages paid to lumbermen in Michigan?

Mr. DOCKERY. I can not; I made the statement that I did on the authority of a gentleman from your own State.

Mr. BURROWS. Do you know what amount is paid to a single laborer?

Mr. DOCKERY. No, sir, I do not; do you?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes, sir, I do.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, then, you have the advantage in that respect. I have not assumed to have any personal knowledge of the wages paid, but have stated that 90 per cent. of the laborers employed in lumber industries are Canadians; and that in debate yesterday it was conceded that their wages were not in excess of the non-protected avocations.

Mr. BURROWS. I know that as high as $1 a day is paid there.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I regret that this bill, known as the "Mills bill," has not the same merit throughout as is shown by placing lumber on the free-list. If it had I should feel like congratulating the other side on the measure presented.

In my judgment, the true theory of protection is not involved when it comes to this question of lumber. Why do I say this? Because the supply is limited. I will admit that a tariff of from two to three dollars per thousand will temporarily stimulate the industry, but the more you stimulate the sooner you destroy your supply. If we had the timber, which is so desirable for building purposes, in unlimited quantities, I should feel very differently on this question. We know as a matter of fact that we have only a limited supply of white-pine timber—the timber so essential for building purposes.

In this country it is estimated that we destroy 2,500 square miles of timber each year. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] tells us that the output is 20,000,000,000 of feet annually. He tells us that they have $40,000,000 invested in lumber mills in the State of Michigan. I ask him how long it will be, if this condition of things exists, before they have succeeded in killing the goose that lays the golden egg in the State of Michigan? I want to call the attention of the gentlemen who represent the timber kings of Northern Wisconsin and Northern Michigan to the fact that there is the great State of Illinois, the State of Iowa, Southern Minnesota, Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas, forming the very garden spot of this country, susceptible of a greater population than any other portion of the United States, that are now using this lumber millions upon millions each year in making permanent improvements; and this lumber must be paid for by the people through agriculture; and there is no question, and no well-informed man will dispute the proposition, that 75 per cent. of this protection on lumber goes to the lumber kings who own four-fifths of the white pine of our Northern region east of the Rocky Mountains. [Applause.]

The day is not far distant when we shall be obliged to seek other sources than our own for pine lumber. We should not forget the interests of the people who have to pay an increased price by reason of the tariff on lumber. It is a short-sighted policy to hasten the destruction of these forests. I have not the time to discuss the question from a climatic standpoint. I will simply say that our scientific men inform us that large areas of forest are necessary from an agricultural point of view as well as climatic. Our Government has recognized the importance of looking out for a timber supply in the passage of the timber-culture act. The fact is that the day is near at hand when we shall be obliged to take steps in the direction of systematically renewing our forests or be forced to use other material than lumber in the erection of buildings.

And then again the benefit derived from the tariff on lumber goes into the hands of comparatively a few men. A few hundred men own about all the valuable pine lands of the North. They have become immensely wealthy, and the fact is beyond dispute that the protection of $2 and $3 per thousand is largely the cause of their fortunes, the value of the stumpage being increased nearly to the amount of the tariff. There are some branches of industry which are not materially stimulated by a tariff; for instance, sugar. We have demonstrated that no amount of protection will develop the sugar industry from cane proper. Hence sugar should be free. Protection will stimulate the lumber industry temporarily, but in the end your supply is exhausted and industry destroyed. We have not enough white-pine timber in this country to last many years at the present rate of destruction; and it is admitted by statisticians that in Lower Canada, taking the entire white-pine lumber district of the entire province, it will afford a supply to last this country not more than ten years.

Gentlemen talk about markets. I admit if we had a permanent industry in this business as now carried on, there would be something in the argument. But at most it is temporary, and in a few years what will become of the laborers employed? You will have destroyed the industry, and they will be forced into other channels. We should look at this question in a business way and from a business standpoint. If we do it seems to me that the conclusion will be reached that the time has come to place lumber on the free-list. [Applause.]

[Mr. TAULBEE withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, my friend, Judge WILSON, of Minnesota, who followed me on yesterday, replied to my remarks by asking a number of questions that have already been answered fully and well by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. There is one point, however, to which I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota.

With remarkable pertinacity he insists upon it that the rise in the value of pine lands in the last fifteen years is due to the tariff on lumber. Then it follows that had we had free trade no such advance in the value of pine lands would have occurred.

Now, I know that ever since the Mills bill was introduced speculators of the American species, whom I described yesterday, rushed to Canada to buy more pine lands in anticipation of the passage of the Mills bill; forests advanced by the President's message, and the price per acre has doubled, trebled, quadrupled, and I am credibly informed in some instances is now fivefold from what it was a year ago. Forties then selling for $400 now bring $2,000. Now I presume, if my good friend Judge WILSON happened to live in Canada, seeing that free trade in lumber with the United States, even only threatened, had the result of raising the value of pine lands 500 per cent. and make these speculators rich, fervently and eloquently (as he always does) he would pray that lumber should be stricken from the American free-list. How much would they rise if free trade in lumber actually takes place? Now, I, for my part, advocate that kind of a tariff that will benefit Americans in America, rather than Canadians or Americans in Canada.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have the highest regard for the sincerity of the gentleman from Minnesota. I can not say less, especially as he has assured me of the same state of feeling on his part. It is a pleasant instance of mutuality of respect between two antipodes on the tariff.

I am firmly of the opinion that while you, my free-trade friends, are so sanguine that the result of this wonderful bill will be to strew our path with roses and compel prosperity to enter every hut, put a stop to all trusts (perhaps with the only exception of the Democratic public trust) the result will be the very contrary from what you anticipate.

It will be free trade and universal distress and lumber at the same old rate, but less money to buy it with. You will then have to solace yourselves with that last resort of people who are the opposite of wise men, that your intentions were good. That perhaps will then call to your troubled brain the picture of a certain place where we are sure to go if you do not mend your ways and defeat this bill, a place that is not renowned as a favorite summer resort, the road to which is paved with that kind of material you call good intentions. That is the place where we will land with swiftness and dispatch if you pass this bill. There you will behold large forests of pitch pine; but these trees are not felled for the purpose of converting them into free lumber. Every branch and every knot will be used for fuel, not for the purpose of raising revenue, but to raise the temperature to at least 600 degrees above zero, Fahrenheit. You will then consent not only to a revenue duty on wood, but you will even vote for a prohibitory tariff on that article of commerce.

Mr. Chairman, I yesterday paid my compliments to these unselfish American capitalists who have invested in Canadian pine and are now ready for free trade.

Mr. Chairman, there is another class of American capitalists, and these I commend to the favorable consideration and respect of the American people. They are the men who by their enterprise and energy have made the United States a beehive of industries; men who have utilized the bountiful resources with which kind Providence has blessed our beautiful country.

Northern capital has lately been largely invested in pine lands in Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida, and Texas, and on the Pacific coast. I have here a notice from the market reports of the Chicago Times, May 24, 1888. Under the heading "Lumber" appears the following:

I read:

Henry Hewett, jr., of Menasha, Wis., one of the pine-lumber barons of Wisconsin, has just returned from an exploring trip to the Pacific coast, the immediate result of which is the purchase by himself and a few others of 160,000 acres of Washington Territory fir and spruce timber, every acre of which Mr. Hewett, who is an experienced land-looker, says will cut 100,000 feet of timber. It is the intention of the buyers to begin developing this property at once.

Complaints of the inroads that yellow pine is making in the Southwest upon the trade of the jobbers in Northern wood, who, not long since, found good customers there in plenty, prove, says Lumber, that the ground it is gaining is such that it can permanently hold. The market there for dimension lumber and bill timber of all sorts is practically controlled by the Southern producers, and in flooring and ceiling, and largely in inside finish they have all the advantage. It seems likely now that a few years hence white pine will be almost entirely withdrawn from the trans-Missouri country, that important field being practically given up to the lumber from the South and that from the West. The competition seems likely to be rather between the Southern and Pacific coast manufacturers than between the former and their erstwhile only competitors.

Mr. Chairman, I rejoice over the flattering prospects of the people of the Southern States. Let them enter into a vigorous competition with their Northern fellow-citizens; let them utilize what nature gave them; let them devote their energies to build up their lumber as well as all other industries. They are part and parcel of this great country; their interests are ours; their prosperity benefits the whole country. They are not foreigners to us, like the Canadians. We in the North ask no protection against the South. We welcome your coming, my Southern friends, into a great industrial race, and we will cheerfully submit if an impartial jury awards you first prize.

The forest resources of the United States are ample for all times to come for our people.

There are two hundred and thirty-five thousand millions of pine standing in the Southern States. Develop this immense source of raw material by protecting those who engage in this industry against Canadian invasion of our markets. The Canadians, even now under protection, ship about one-half of their lumber product to the United States to compete with the home supply.

Do not allow your free-trade theories to elope with your practical sense. For every million feet of lumber imported to this country you will ultimately sell 1,000,000 feet less, and nobody but foreigners will reap any advantage whatever. I said some time ago that the lumber industry is the largest manufacturing industry in the United States. I will not weary your patience by long statistics and many figures. A very few will suffice to verify my statement.

According to the census of 1880 the value of the products of the lumber industry in 1879 was $542,788,657, employing 326,197 men; the value of sawed lumber was $233,268,729. Fully 70 per cent. of the value of sawed lumber is labor. At this low estimate you have an annual expenditure of $165,000,000 paid in wages for lumber alone.

A free-trader may consistently say, "Place lumber on the free-list along with everything else;" but he should at least impose a tariff on it for revenue. And if you are sincere in your declaration that you are tariff reformers with incidental revenue, then do not take the incident away from us.

Nobody can justly claim that an average of 16 per cent., as it is on lumber now, is excessive, especially when the Mills bill carries an average of 38 per cent. Do not proscribe this enormous industry, but in the name of equal justice, of political prudence, of enlightened political economy and true Americanstatesmanship, unterrified by the cry of foreign pine-owners and demagogues and deluded theorists and doctrinaires at home, give the lumber industry something of an equal chance with other American enterprises.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I certainly beg pardon of the committee for taking a moment's time, but I think there is one point that ought to be understood; and I supposed it was.

I did not say yesterday that the fortunes made by lumbermen in such a short time were on account of the tariff. I said nothing about that. I made a proposition that I thought could not be misunderstood, to wit, that lumbermen had within a few years made, and are now making, fortunes in their industry. The gentleman from Wisconsin, who has just taken his seat, and who is the especial champion of this lumber tariff, assents to this. He is familiar with the facts and knows this to be the truth. I stated at the same time that in the part of the country to which I referred, which is as good a country as there is under the sun, agriculturists had recently been barely able to hold their own. The gentleman does not question that. I believe no gentleman has questioned that. And I said, these two facts conceded, I wanted some man to tell me why we were compelling the poor to pay tribute to the rich.

Mr. REED. That is, you wanted them to tell you why a thing was happening which was not happening at all. Of course nobody could answer that question.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] himself tried yesterday to answer my proposition, but in just such a way as he does it to-day.

Has any man on this floor answered the question, why is poverty continuously compelled to pay tribute to wealth, as the present tariff compels it to do?

Mr. LONG. But we do deny that poverty pays tribute to it.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Do you deny that we are compelled to pay $2 extra per thousand upon lumber?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Yes. That is the very point at issue.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen say they deny that proposition.

Mr. REED. Nobody here admits it.

Mr. LONG. You have not established your proposition. Establish your proposition first.

Mr. REED (to Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota). You do not seem to see that you beg the question and assume a fact which does not exist, and then want to know why it is so. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I supposed, Mr. Chairman, that our statute settled that question. On every thousand feet of lumber imported there is imposed a tariff tax of $2. This, of course, raises the price of the imported lumber by that amount. And as this lumber and that manufactured in the United States are sold in competition in the same market, the increased price of that imported enables the domestic manufacturer to raise the price of his lumber by the amount of the tariff. This is why the tariff is called a "protective" tariff. It gives the domestic lumberman "protection" to the amount of the tariff; that is, it enables him to raise the price of his lumber in the market by that amount, and yet to sell in competition with the imported lumber. It would be just as reasonable to deny that the price of the groceries or dry goods of the merchant is increased to the consumer by the amount of the freight as to deny that this enhanced cost of the lumber by reason of the tariff is borne by the consumer.

It is conceded that the lumbermen have made for a number of years exceptionally large profits, and the argument of the gentlemen on the other side amounts to this: "If you lessen our profits we will go out of business;" that is, if they are reduced to a reasonable remuneration they will abandon the industry.

Mr. Chairman, no man can show, nor do I believe that the removal of this tariff will make a reduction of 1,000 feet a year in the lumber products of the United States. The industry will still be a prosperous one.

Mr. LONG. Do you think that is a fair statement of the argument by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] this morning?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I can not answer all these gentlemen at once. I am not answering the gentleman from Michigan now. I am answering the other gentleman. When it is argued that the farmer is benefited by the tariff because he is enabled to sell his products to the lumbermen, it is implied that if the tariff were removed the business of manufacturing lumber would cease. This is an unjustifiable assumption.

Mr. LONG. You are not answering the argument of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not pretend to answer the gentleman from Michigan. The gentleman from Michigan did not, I believe, pretend to make an argument. He read an ex parte statement made by a number of wealthy men in their own interest.

Mr. LONG. He made a very substantial argument, compressed into five minutes. That I did not hear.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LONG was recognized, and offered to yield to Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota.

On motion of Mr. REED, by unanimous consent, the time of Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, was extended to five minutes.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that no gentleman will hereafter misunderstand the proposition I made yesterday, and when any gentleman attempts to argue in opposition to it I hope he will answer the question which I propounded.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman allow me to answer it right here?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. You know I have not the time to spare. Mr. Chairman, they will not answer that question, but they will answer some other question which they propound themselves. I wish they would answer, too, whether the repeal of this tariff law will lessen the price of lumber. If it has not that effect it will not injure the lumbermen.

Mr. Chairman, since this discussion began the statements on the other side of the House have been in direct contradiction of each other. The gentleman from Pittsburgh [Mr. BAYNE] has argued that this is a sectional bill, that it is gotten up for the benefit of the South, and that the North will receive no benefit from it, whereas the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] rises this morning and states directly the opposite of that proposition, arguing that the South will be greatly injured by the repeal of this tariff.

One says that this tariff helps labor, and another that it does not. One that taking the tariff off lumber will lessen the price of lumber and injure the laborers employed in the business, while another says, on the contrary, that it will not lessen the price. No two seem apparently to agree except in prophesying disaster to the country if this bill passes.

Mr. REED. If the discourse of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] did not illustrate a great many more things, I should not feel it at all worth while to reply to his oft-repeated question. He wants to know why poverty is taxed to pay money to wealth; he wants to know why it is so; and he has been unable after two days of consideration to comprehend that the question implies a statement, namely, that poverty does so contribute. He assumes that it does, and then wants to know why. Can he not see the absurdity of asking me to tell him why a thing is so when I asseverate with all my voice that it is not so? If he believes it is so, he ought to give the reason for it—not I. I believe it is a lie; and therefore I am unable to give any reason for it.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, rose.

Mr. REED. Now, I sincerely hope the gentleman from Minnesota can comprehend a proposition so plain as that, especially when it is dissected into its two parts. But there are some minds that seem to be incapable of comprehending that a question may involve an assertion; and he has paraded that proposition here, in season and out of season, until he actually believes it himself, which is astonishing, he being an intelligent man; and he has actually got some of the other people on that side to believe it, which is far less astonishing, judging by what I have heard from them. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Do you affirm, or do you not, that the tariff increases the price of lumber?

Mr. REED. If the gentleman will do me the honor to read a discourse which I delivered in this House on the 19th day of May he will find a very plain and simple answer to that question; and if he will keep quiet I will repeat some of it so that he may be instructed, because I perceive that he is one of the class that require not only the statement of a proposition but iteration, and "damnable iteration" at that. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Can you not answer that question?

Mr. REED. Now, will the gentleman keep quiet and peaceful a moment? I do not wonder that he does not like this, but the dissection was absolutely necessary to the peace of the country; for he would have been still repeating that question day after day if he had not discovered the answer by the same surgical operation which seems to be necessary to get a joke into a Scotchman's head. [Laughter.]

Now, this famous free-trade dilemma——

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, rose.

Mr. REED. Oh, there he is again!

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The gentleman stated, as I understood, that he would answer my question—does or does not the tariff raise the price of lumber?

Mr. REED. The question which the gentleman asked me just before, which, now that I am about to answer, he seems anxious not to have answered, was whether the tariff does not necessarily raise prices, and, if it does not, what is the good of it? Now, that is a pet remark of gentlemen on the other side. I have heard it as many times as I have heard some of the witty remarks of the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.] It has the same sanction of universality and antiquity.

The proposition which we make is that by the encouragement of an industry engaged in the production of a necessary of life, the result in a long series of years will be good wages and low prices, and we prove it by facts and figures; we prove it by the general consensus of mankind; we prove it by the fact that every civilized nation on earth, except one, which is exceptionally situated, is in favor of the principle and practice of protection. Now, if we prove it by figures, if we prove it by theory, if we prove it by the common sense of mankind, as shown by the general adoption of the doctrine, it seems to me that even the gentleman from Minnesota might, by giving days and nights to the matter, get some glimmering of the idea connected with it. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph is now closed by order of the House. The Chair will assume that the pro forma amendment submitted by the gentleman from Minnesota is withdrawn. The question is therefore upon the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE], to strike out the lines which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Timber squared or sided.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TAULBEE, there were—ayes 73, noes 70.

Mr. TAULBEE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. TAULBEE and Mr. MILLS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 101.

So the amendment of Mr. TAULBEE was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wood unmanufactured, not specially enumerated or provided for.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out this clause. The gentleman from Missouri some time ago cited several questions which had been put by the gentleman from Minnesota to our side of the House, and remarked that no answers had been given to those questions. That statement is hardly fair in view of the fact that under the five-minute rule very few gentlemen will submit to interrogatories. But we were quite ready to answer the gentleman's questions if he insisted upon it.

The allegation has been made that unprotected industries pay as good wages as the protected industries. I deny the allegation, and say that the protected industries pay better wages as a rule. In connection with this, I say that if in Alabama, Georgia, Arkansas, and other States which are now shipping their lumber to the Western markets, as high wages were paid as are paid in Maine, Michigan, or Wisconsin, you gentlemen on the other side would take as good care of the lumber industry as you do of your sugar, your rice, and your pig-metal.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The same lumber men who work in Michigan are brought down to our country, and they receive there the same wages that they do in Michigan.

Mr. BAYNE. That may be so as to men employed for certain purposes, where you require a superior order of skill. But the wages that are paid for the drudgery, the real hard work, and the wages that are paid——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Just the same wages are paid there.

Mr. BAYNE. Are lower than the wages of labor in corresponding branches of industry North.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. You have the same force employed, doing the same class of work, and the same wages are paid as would be paid in Michigan. The mills largely bring their crews down with them.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like my friend from Arkansas to produce a statement of the wages paid there in that section of Arkansas, which is intimately connected with the lumber industry.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will say again that we pay as good wages as anywhere. Do you suppose that the same men you spoke of would come down there to work for less wages than they got at their old homes?

Mr. BAYNE. Can the gentleman produce a statement of the wages? I would like my friend to produce such a statement.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Of course I can not recite offhand a table of wages, but I can and do state enough to settle the question. I do know that these same men have been brought down there, and that they are satisfied with the wages that are paid them.

Mr. BAYNE. Well, I suppose climatic influence has had something to do with that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Oh, you need not bring in the question of climatic influences. That is side play. You have run against a fact and you are trying to get around it.

Mr. BAYNE. That was brought up by your own side of the House as one of the reasons and one of the advantages that that country possessed.

Mr. HOOKER. We beat you altogether on the subject of climate. Just come down there and we will take great pleasure in showing you what a delightful climate we have.

Mr. BAYNE. I know that it is a lovely climate, and I know that men might be tempted to go down there and work for less wages because of that delightful climate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is not the question at all, and the gentleman should know that it has nothing to do with the subject before the committee.

Mr. BAYNE. But I do say that the line of wages paid in the States producing those things, for instance in mining coal, producing iron ore, hauling it, paying teamsters, and the pay of men engaged in these various occupations in these States, shows a difference of 25 to 33 per cent. higher than the rate of wages paid in Southern States.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is a mistake. Railroad men and others requiring the most vigorous laborers tell me they have to pay higher wages than in the North. Such labor is scarce with us.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that his colleague, Judge KELLEY, went to Alabama last year, and when he came back stated on this floor, if I am not mistaken, and if I am he will correct me, that the wages paid in Alabama in the iron works compared favorably with wages paid for the same character of work in Pennsylvania.

Mr. BAYNE. Undoubtedly that is skilled labor, you have to pay for that; but when it comes down to the men who have to do the drudgery, the real workers who do the ordinary labor, which any laboring man can do, there the rates are different.

Mr. HERBERT. That is a very different statement from that made by the gentleman's colleague.

Mr. BAYNE. I think you will find it is not.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman spoke of the industries generally in that section, taking all classes of labor engaged in the manufacture of iron; and if I am mistaken he will correct me. But my recollection is he made that statement, and made it very clearly and forcibly.

Mr. BAYNE. Can the gentleman from Alabama furnish me with a list or statement of the wages paid there? I challenge the gentleman to produce the statement of the wages paid to the workmen in these different branches of industry, and I will point out to him the difference. I say that the men who are engaged in digging coal, in working in the mines, driving teams, hauling ore, in all of these branches of industry where the cheaper grades of labor can be used, are not paid equivalent wages to those paid North. And at the same time this class of labor amounts to far more in the aggregate than the skilled labor, but which is necessary as an adjunct to the skilled labor. Without it the skilled labor would be valueless. All of those men are paid far lower wages than in the Northern States.

Mr. HOOKER. As a refutation of that, we have never had a strike in the whole history of the country from the beginning to this time.

Mr. LAIDLAW. They are too poor to strike.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MACDONALD. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we have a tariff against Alabama.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I just want to add one or two words in answer to what has been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE]. Ever since this tariff debate commenced we have heard the same sneers from gentlemen on the other side about the wages paid in the South——

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, no; not sneers.

Mr. WASHINGTON. And in the different industries in the South. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I live there and know from experience, for I have employed labor myself, and know of others who do, that we pay them all they can earn and in proportion to what they do. It is the amount of work that a man does that gauges the rate of his wages, without regard to locality, whether he lives South or North.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Permit me to ask the gentleman a question. Have we any different tariff system in the South from that prevailing in Pennsylvania?

Mr. WASHINGTON. None whatever. Exactly the same conditions apply.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And yet one would infer from what the gentleman from Pennsylvania says that there is a very different system prevailing; that one section is living under free trade and the other under a tariff.

Mr. WASHINGTON. The amount that our labor produces in a given number of hours gauges the amount of the wages of labor, because we pay them every cent that they can earn and for everything that they produce; and if the amount of the day's wages in our Southern industries is the gauge of a man's salary, while it would not be so much in dollars and cents as the statistics show to be the case in other parts of the country, yet I will venture to assert that when other considerations are taken into account it is more, because, Mr. Chairman, a very different system prevails in that country from what prevails elsewhere. We furnish our laborers with their rations, with their houses, with garden spots, and all these things taken into consideration afford a higher rate of wages in the aggregate, I will venture to assert, than men receive in the same line of industries pursued in Northern localities.

Mr. BAYNE. Let me ask——

Mr. WASHINGTON. And we have no strikes, no riots.

Mr. BAYNE. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. It was stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. O'NEALL] that in Alabama, Tennessee, and elsewhere in the South you could produce a ton of pig-iron for $8. We can not do that our way. We can not produce a ton of pig-iron for less than $12 or $14. Now, how does it come that you pay as good wages if the gentleman from Indiana has proved that you could produce a ton of pig-metal for $8?

Mr. WASHINGTON. In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say that I do not know precisely what a ton of pig-iron is produced for at Birmingham, Ala.; I believe for $9. The reason why it can be produced cheaply there is that our coal, our ore, and our limestone are almost side by side; and God Almighty has given us a protection which your tariff can not give.

Mr. BAYNE. Therefore you do not want any protection for that industry.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Yes. We do not want to add to what God Almighty has given as an additional bonus. We can work on that on which you fellows would starve.

Mr. BAYNE. Why then do you keep a tariff of $6 a ton on pig-iron?

Mr. WASHINGTON. Simply to keep you gentlemen from starving.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to explan to me one point. I understood him to say that labor in the protected industries was paid better wages than it was in the non-protected industries.

Mr. BAYNE. I said as a rule that was the case.

Mr. BLAND. Why is it so?

Mr. BAYNE. Because the manufacturers are able to sell their goods at a good price, and because they have the assurance that in a country like our great country, which can supply everything, and can make a supply equal to the demand, there is not that fear of overproduction which you see to exist when you look abroad.

Mr. BLAND. You do it because other people are taxed?

Mr. BAYNE. Not at all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KERR. I move to strike out the last word.

I wish to say in regard to the point that has just been made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] that wages are as high in the South as they are in the North, that in my town there is published a Democratic paper conducted by a Democratic editor named Bly. That gentleman has just returned from a visit to Tennessee and has been in the iron works down there, and he says there they pay boys sixteen years of age 50 cents a day. And that has been published in the Democratic paper in my own town.

I am not prepared to dispute the gentleman's proposition, but if the statement of that Democratic editor is not true I would like to hear it answered from that side.

I believe there may be some truth in the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee. I believe that intelligent labor demands a good price. In order that laboring men may secure good wages it is necessary that labor should be made intelligent; and the converse of that proposition is true, that by paying labor well you thereby increase its intelligence.

There has been a great deal said by gentlemen on that side of the House about low prices in the West. We heard something about that three or four years ago. We heard more about it from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] than from any other man in this House. We have had a suggestion a short time ago from a gentleman on that side about silver certificates. It was said that the state of the currency was considered a sufficient reason why prices of farm produce and farms in the West were lower than they were before. The gentleman then argued that the prices of farm products, of farms, of everything in the United States had been decreased one-half by the demonetization of silver, and I think there is some little truth in that statement.

Mr. BLAND. And I still argue that farm products have decreased greatly in value on account of the lock-up of money in this tariff system.

Mr. KERR. Then let not the gentleman hereafter say that the lowering of the price of farm products and the lowering of the price of farms in the West is to be attributed to the protective tariff, as has been asserted here in this debate all the time.

I hold, Mr. Chairman, that the protective tariff—and it has been illustrated over and over again by the gentleman from Maine and other gentlemen in this House—that the protective tariff does not increase the value of a single article produced in America in the long run, but it secures to American labor all the time a steady, continuous market for its products. It secures them a protection against foreign labor, and in the end secures to us every article in this country cheaper than we would get it without this protection.

I would say, in reply to my colleague from Iowa [Mr. FULLER], that we have to-day as cheap lumber as we ever had. The gentleman from Wisconsin says we have abundance of lumber, abundance of trees in this country to sustain this country for all time; and this tariff will not only benefit Northern lumber districts, but it will benefit the lumber districts of the South.

We want to secure to the American lumber men, North and South, the protecting influence of our American tariff, and then our farms and our lumber interests will take care of themselves; then the very fact that lumber is a valuable product will induce greater care and caution as to the destruction of our forests, and will make every American man a friend of the American tree. I have myself planted with my own hands 10 acres of American forest, and the trees that I planted ten years ago are now, some of them, a foot in diameter, and protection to American forests will develop American forestry.

Mr. WEAVER. If you let the people of your district know that you are opposed to free lumber you will not be "a foot in diameter" at the next election. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KERR. I will take care of my constituents. I am not trimming on this subject. I am for protection because it is an American duty. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] is not present in order that I might call him as a witness to testify in answer to his colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE]. My recollection is very distinct that after a visit to Alabama, in which he examined into the question for himself for several days, nay, even for weeks, Judge KELLEY came back and said in the city of Philadelphia, and I think printed in the Manufacturers' Record, published in Baltimore, his opinion that labor engaged in the manufacture of iron in Alabama and Tennessee was as well paid in all its departments as in Pennsylvania, and he said in addition to that—or if he did not say it the gentleman who was with him, and whom I saw at Anniston, did say in my presence, and he was an expert, that the highest skilled labor was a little better paid there than in Pennsylvania.

Gentlemen ask how it is that we can pay the same wages and yet produce iron so much cheaper than they make it in Pennsylvania. Let me state right here another fact, which, though it may be known to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], will, I have no doubt, astonish other gentlemen in this House, and that is that in Birmingham, Anniston, and other places in Alabama, and also in Tennessee, iron is made and shipped and sold at a profit in Pittsburgh, the gentleman's own town. My recollection is that during last year over 100,000 tons of iron were shipped from Alabama and Tennessee to the North, some of it to Boston, some to Pittsburgh, some to Philadelphia, and much of it to the West.

The simple fact is that we have superior natural advantages for the manufacture of iron. We can make more cheaply than anywhere else on this continent. Business men are finding it out, and millions of dollars have gone from the North for investment in the South, especially in Alabama and Tennessee. Some gentleman a moment ago asked whether we wanted any tariff at all. That is not the issue. Nobody advocates free trade. What we are advocating here is the Mills bill. That is the proposition before us. We say that the $6 a ton given in that bill is protection enough for Alabama, and it is protection enough for Pennsylvania also, and as high as the people of this country ought to pay.

The gentleman from Iowa, who has just taken his seat [Mr. KERR], wants to know how it is that farm values in this country are continually shrinking, as they are in the West, and as they certainly are in the North. Only this morning, in the last report on the condition of the crops issued officially from the Agricultural Department, I saw it stated that farm lands in the State of New York are continually shrinking in value, that there are many more farms to rent than there are tenants, because agriculture does not pay. To some extent that is true of the South also. Why is it? The answer is that this boasted American market, which gentlemen iterate and reiterate is the best in the world, is not sufficient for the farmers. It never can be sufficient to take the grain and the provisions of the North and the West and the cotton of the South.

Year after year we are shipping more and more cotton to foreign markets; year after year more flour; year after year more wheat; year after year more cheese and other dairy products. Your high tariff has existed in this country practically unchanged since 1862; all that time you have been prating to us about relying upon the home market protection was to furnish us, and yet more and more every year have we been forced to rely upon the foreign market.

The farmers of the North and the farmers of the South are compelled to send their products abroad to compete with the products made by the pauper labor of the whole world, and all the while we are paying high prices on everything that we consume. It is this foreign market that regulates the prices of the wheat and the meats of the West, for the merchant who ships abroad is bidding against the merchant who buys to sell at home. It is the foreign market that regulates the price of the cotton in the South, and yet the farmers are to buy at home and pay prices fixed by high tariffs. That is the condition of the American consumer.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The formal amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the reasons given for and against the provisions of this bill are as varied and contradictory as the individuals on the two sides of the House. It was said by one gentleman on the other side that farm lands do not increase in value, while timber lands do; and therefore the conclusion would be that the tariff benefits the timber-owners and injures the farmers. Now, in the section of country where I live farm lands have increased in value, while timber lands have diminished; therefore, by the same method of reasoning, the conclusion follows that the tariff benefits the farmer, while it injures the owners of timber lands.

I remember when the prairie lands in my own district, the richest lands in all the world, went begging at $1.25 an acre while the timber lands adjacent sold for $50 an acre. To-day prairie lands which were then worth $1.25 an acre are worth $50 an acre; and the timber lands are worth $25 an acre. The reason is that we have ceased to have use for the timber as we used it some years ago. Then we split walnut trees into rails to make fences; now we make fences out of hedge or wire.

The gentleman from Iowa took it for granted that trees never grow but once; that when we once exhaust the trees which stood upon the lands when this country was discovered we exhaust the supply of timber. Yet, sir [Mr. SPRINGER in the chair], the State which you and I in part represent has more timber standing upon its soil to-day than it had forty years ago; and every year the quantity is increasing. So that my friend from New York [Mr. COX] need not be frightened about our lands being denuded of their timber. Everywhere in all the prairie country the farmers have been and are planting trees, not for timber purposes, but with reference to health and ornament; so that where once the eye could see nothing but extended prairies everywhere, there may now be seen trees and hedges growing upon every farm for the purposes of health and beauty.

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, the passage of this bill, so far as it affects lumber, can have but two results: First, it will diminish the amount of revenue that we receive; secondly, it will increase the profits of Canadian timber-owners by the amount of revenue that we lose. Outside of that I do not believe it will affect anybody. There is just about a certain demand for lumber each year, there are just so many mills to cut it, and 5 or 6 per cent. of our supply will come in, as now, from Canada. You can not increase the supply immediately. Lumber will sell for about the same price. The wages of the lumberman must keep pace with the wages of other people. I do not believe they will be diminished. Canada will supply in our markets about the same amount of lumber that she now supplies, and as we shall produce the principal part of our supply we shall fix the price as we do now, so that you will succeed in taking off a little revenue and in enriching a few men who own timber lands in Canada. Is that your object?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it is stated that the retention of the tax of $2 per thousand feet on lumber should be retained in order to cover the difference in the labor cost of cutting the thousand feet and preparing it in some form for the market. It is said the tax should be retained for the protection of American labor against the competition of the cheaper labor of Canada. The question presents itself to me from several points of view.

I suppose there is some difference, but is it true that there is any such pronounced and marked difference in the price of labor in the United States and Canada as is claimed by the opponents of free lumber? Do the statements made on this floor as to the great difference in labor-wages in the two countries rest in fact or assumption? The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] says the labor-cost of a thousand feet of lumber in the United States is $6 and in Canada $3, a difference of 100 per cent. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOOTHMAN] affirms that the wages of laborers employed in the lumber business are 30 per cent. higher in the United States than in Canada. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the difference 100 per cent. The gentleman from Ohio makes it 30 per cent.

Mr. BAYNE. What gentleman makes the difference 100 per cent.?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, no.

Mr. RANDALL rose.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] said that the labor-cost of a thousand feet of lumber in the United States is $6.

Mr. RANDALL. As I am informed, that is about correct as applied to my own State.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The difference between these two distinguished gentlemen, both of whom speak with the assurance of perfect knowledge, I suspect is greater than the difference in wages between Canada and the United States. It is only a small matter of 70 per cent. Now, which of these two is wrong? Both? I suspect so. Where do these gentlemen get their figures, and why did they not get them from the same source? Is it not true that all this is largely a mere phantom of the mind conjured up for the occasion?

In one breath we are told this tax is to protect American labor against Canadian labor, and in the next we are told that every year the Canadian cheap laborers pour into New England to supplant American workmen. Why do they come? Gentlemen on the other side say, because they can get better wages in the United States. But why do you employ cheap Canadian labor? Why do you gentlemen in Maine allow it to displace American labor? Is it not because you get it cheaper? You stand here and shed crocodile tears over the American laborer and denounce this bill with a flaming vocabulary as a menace to his prosperity, and then go chuckling from here to turn your back upon the American laborer in the forests of New England to welcome and embrace these so-called miserable lazzaroni from Canada. The laborers of the United States are displaced at their own home by adventurers from abroad, and whatever difference there is in the price is pocketed by the employer.

In the mean time the consumers of lumber are wholly ignored. There are several large prairie counties in the district I represent. The county I live in is a fair example of them all. When I went there, less than twenty years ago, the county was a wild waste of fertility and beauty. The entire population was only about 10,000. The city in which I live then had a population of 1,000. Now that city has a population of 10,000 and the county a population of over 40,000. The greater part of this growth has occurred within the last ten years. Homes for 25,000 people have been built in that time. Dwellings, barns, business houses, fences, improvements of all kinds have been built. Millions have been expended in these improvements, and $2 has been paid on each 1,000 feet to the lumber kings.

This fitly illustrates the situation everywhere throughout the West and Southwest. It is time this farce was ended. Millionaires are multiplying, while labor limps along with faltering step, bending under burdens that are ever accumulating. In the name of labor the seed is sown from which an ever increasing harvest of millionaires is reaped. It is abominable.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Formal amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I move to strike out the last word.

Now, Mr. Chairman, after considerable investigation and correspondence I can speak for the State of New York and for the State of Pennsylvania that it is exactly an average of $6 of labor that enters into a thousand feet of lumber. The wages paid in both States are $30 a month and board. The general average of mill wages is $2 a day. In both States the present tariff just about makes the difference between the American workingman's wages and the wages of the Canadian workman.

Mr. RANDALL. Not up to it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says not up to it, but I think it is within a dollar or a dollar and a half if we take competing grades of lumber per thousand. That settles the wage question so far as my State is concerned, or the State of Pennsylvania. I have asked gentlemen engaged in the lumber business and they have informed me the average in the West is a little more. I have not been able to verify that statement.

Now, the wage question having been settled, one of the arguments this afternoon has been a remarkable one to me, and that is this: That these millionaires who have made their millions during the last fifteen years out of American stumpage are now satisfied after they have made their fortunes not to come in here and ask more protection, but Democrats of the House throw open to them the whole of the Canadian stumpage for those American millionaires to go in there with all their plants for another fifteen years to make still further fortunes. It is to me a most remarkable thing that after we get rid of those bloated millionaires the Democratic party must now by legislation open to them a new field to skin the Canadians as they have skinned the American farmer. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DUNN rose.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If the House would only extend my time the gentleman from Arkansas can ask me fifty questions, and he knows I would pleasurably answer if he asked them.

Mr. Chairman, I am talking business. I have no politics in this matter. I represent a district that is wholly business in character. It is more interested in the lumber business than the whole State of Texas. It has more money in it—hard cash.

The average of stumpage in America is $4 at present. I think I am correct in the figure. You may go into Canada, where the average of stumpage is $2, but say it is $2.50 or $2.75; you get Canadian labor less 20 per cent., and you get the advantage of the difference of the American price of stumpage. I can see, under this condition of things, why American lumbermen would forsake their own forests and go there. It does not need American forestry laws to drive them out of this country.

Now, a good lumber plant costs two hundred or three hundred thousand dollars. Money placed in Canada does not come back. When you establish a lumber plant you establish your village, you establish your tramways or railroads, you put your money in there, and the American workingman will certainly have to follow the American capitalist.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman withhold that motion for a few minutes, as I should be glad to have consent to proceed for a little while longer?

Mr. MILLS. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman from New York will be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish now, Mr. Chairman, to supplement what I have said, and to supplement also the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], by submitting an argument, not my own, but I think one intensely practical on this free-lumber question. I hold in my hand a letter from one of the greatest lumber firms in America; and I want to say further that the members may be accounted as millionaires. That I do not care to discuss. I will say, however, that they are divided in politics, as the members of the firm are of both parties, and all stand very high as representative men. This letter, outside of politics, speaks for itself. I desire to ask the attention of the committee for a minute or two while I read it.

TONAWANDA, N. Y., March 7, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We notice the progress of the Mills tariff bill in Congress, and observe that lumber is therein placed upon the free-list. As business men, and in a position to know thoroughly whereof we speak, we beg to bring to your careful consideration several reasons why the bill in its present shape as regards lumber should not pass:

First. Everything necessary to procure lumber in Canada is at least 25 per cent. cheaper than in the United States.

Second. Three hundred million dollars and one million men are engaged in the business, and a tariff reduction, if made, would be a direct blow at both the labor and capital therein represented.

Third. The average value of lumber to the consumer may be placed at, say, $20 per thousand. The present duty of $2 per thousand is therefore only 10 per cent., and as probably nine-tenths of the people who use lumber are people above the laboring classes, the duty is not in any sense a burden upon the community.

Fourth. The Canadian lumber mills being situated nearer the Eastern States than the mills of the producing pine regions of the United States, they have an advantage in the item of freights of at least one-half of the present duty; and if such duty were removed it would give to the Canadians control of the markets of the Eastern States, whither their product is most largely imported; so that the present rate of duty is absolutely necessary in order that Western pine lumber may be shipped to Eastern markets.

Fifth. Careful estimates by practical lumbermen show that there is enough standing timber in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin to last twenty years, thus showing the Government's forestry bulletins to be entirely erroneous.

Sixth. There can not possibly be any scarcity of lumber for a century after every tree has been cut in Michigan and Wisconsin, for the reason that there are larger tracts of yellow pine and other timber suitable for building purposes in the Southern States than ever existed of white pine in the Northern States. This can all be used where white pine is now used; and the duty on lumber should be retained, so that the Southern States may have the benefit of Northern capital to develop this vast industry, which will not be done for years if Canadian lumber is admitted free.

Seventh. Consider the difference it will make to the States having these large tracts of yellow pine, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Mississippi, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, and North and South Carolina, whether they are developed or left comparatively untouched, as they certainly will be for years if Canadian lumber comes in free of duty.

We certainly hope you will use your influence and vote to prevent the consummation of such a glaring injustice to this large industry as would be involved in the removal of the present lumber tariff.

Very truly yours,

GRATWICK, SMITH & FRYER LUMBER COMPANY.

Hon. JOHN M. FARQUHAR.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the tariff bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2882) to pay Aaron Friedheim the rebate due him under the act of March 3, A. D. 1883; and

A bill (S. 1580) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, to the bill (H. R. 9788) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 8565) making an appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; which, on motion of Mr. PEEL, were ordered to be printed with the bill, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OTTUMWA, IOWA.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9771) for the erection of a public building at Ottumwa, Iowa, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSON, MICH.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 8592) for the erection of a public building at Jackson, Mich.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill which he has indicated. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw the objection I made to the other bill.

Mr. WEAVER. It is now too late; it is near 5 o'clock.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for ten minutes.

Mr. MILLS and Mr. McMILLIN objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has just been read.

Mr. McMILLIN. If there is a report let it be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report, but before completing it (the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived) the Speaker pro tempore declared the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BURNES: A bill (H. R. 10304) granting a pension to J. M. Berkey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10305) for the relief of Jacob Mettier—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10306) for the relief of James Nickels—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: A bill (H. R. 10307) for the relief of Antoine Campan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COX: A bill (H. R. 10308) for the relief of employés and late employés in the Post-Office Department—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. DUBOIS: A bill (H. R. 10309) granting to the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company the right of way through the Nez Percé Indian reservation—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10310) authorizing the construction of railroad bridges across the Snake River and across the Clear Water River by the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HUNTER: A bill (H. R. 10311) granting a pension to Nancy E. Adams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OSBORNE: A bill (H. R. 10312) granting a pension to Joseph Weidel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROGERS: A bill (H. R. 10313) granting a pension to Sarah Brashears—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE, of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 10314) for the relief of S. M. Grace—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YOST: A bill (H. R. 10315) for the relief of Henry Sniteman—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10316) to remove the charge of desertion against Addison C. Stanton—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH (by request): A bill (H. R. 10317) for the relief of J. F. Richardson—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McCREARY: A bill (H. R. 10318) granting a pension to Mary C. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. A. R. ANDERSON: Petition of Typographical Union No. 2, of Philadelphia, for the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BOUND: Petition of Typographical Union No. 2, of Philadelphia, favoring the passage of the Chace bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CARLTON: Petition of Alf. Davis, Frank Leverett, and others, citizens of Putnam County, Georgia, urging the passage of the international copyright law—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: Petition of Typographical Union No. 2, of Philadelphia, for international copyright—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. COX: Petition of employés of the post-office for compensation for extra hours of work, etc.—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. A. C. DAVIDSON: Papers in the claims of Mrs. Martha A. Works, of William Wilson, of Martha A. Sherer, of John Sherer, of Thomas B. Pierce, of Reuben Price, of Robert M. Martin, of Sarah J. Harrison, of Aquilla M. Goodwin, of William B. Gill, of Sarah A. English, of James M. C. Ball, of Jasper N. Barnes, and of Benjamin Barnes, of Alabama—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DORSEY: Resolution of the Board of Trade of Stromsburgh, Nebr., favoring the Outhwaite bill for the extension of payment of debt of Union Pacific Railway Company—to the Committee on Pacific Railways.

By Mr. FARQUHAR: Resolutions of the Buffalo Merchants' Exchange, favoring the passage of the Nicaragua Canal bill—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GALLINGER: Petition of Typographical Union No. 2, of Philadelphia, in favor of the Chace international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: Petition of Myers, Tice & Co., of Dubuque, Iowa, in respect to internal-revenue tax on tobacco—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, paper from the "American party," in relation to immigration, etc.—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. HOOKER: Papers in the claim of Elias Unger, of Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McCORMICK: Petition of Typographial Union No. 2, of Philadelphia, for the passage of the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. MERRIMAN: Petition of A. Hildebrand and others, asking that the duty on flax and hemp may not be reduced—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. POST: Petition of Gilbert Tompkins, of Avon, and of F. W. Latimer, heir of William W. Latimer, of Tennessee, Ill., for relief—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. RANDALL: Memorial of Typographical Union No. 2, of Philadelphia, in behalf of the passage of the Chace international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: Petition of S. M. Hawkins, of Franklin County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROWLAND (by request): Petition of H. J. Booker, of Osgood, N. C., for relief—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. T. G. TURNER: Petition of Mrs. Sarah O. Wade, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: Petition of Thomas J. Whittaker, of Maury County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YARDLEY: Petition of 41 citizens, of 55 citizens, of 25 citizens, of 56 citizens, and of 51 citizens of Bucks County, Pennsylvania, against the admission of Utah so long as Mormonism remains in the Territory—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. YOST: Petition of Joseph Welch, for Typographical Union No. 2, of Philadelphia, for the passage of the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

The following petition in favor of House bill 9716, for the better protection of free labor from convict labor, was received and referred to the Committee on Labor:

By Mr. FORNEY: Of Knights of Labor Assembly No. 10206.

The following petition for the repeal or modification of the internal-revenue tax of $25 levied on druggists was received and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. LEE (by request): Of physicians and druggists of Virginia.

The following petition for the proper protection of the Yellowstone National Park, as proposed in Senate bill 283, was received and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

By Mr. McKINLEY: Of citizens of Youngstown, Ohio.

The following petition for the more effectual protection of agriculture, by the means of certain import duties, was received and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. WILBER: Of 32 citizens of Schoharie County, New York.

The following petition, indorsing the per diem rated service-pension bill, based on the principle of paying all soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war a monthly pension of 1 cent a day for each day they were in the service, was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

By Mr. McKINLEY: Of citizens and soldiers of Ohio.

The following petitions, praying for the enactment of a law providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy, were severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. FLOOD: Of 21 citizens of Tompkins County, New York.

By Mr. POST: Of 47 citizens of Stark County, Illinois.

By Mr. ROBERTSON: Of Charles Morgan and 45 others, citizens of Louisiana.

SENATE.

MONDAY, June 4, 1888.

Prayer by Rev. E. GRAHAM, of Chico, Cal.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of April 11, 1888, a list of officers of the Army placed on the retired-list since the creation of that list by the act of Congress approved August 3, 1861, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior in relation to Cree Indians (British refugees), now in Montana Territory; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indians Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens of Galveston, Tex., praying for an investigation into alleged misconduct of officials in the eastern judicial district of Texas; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of citizens of McCook, Nebr., praying for the passage of Senate bill 283, for the better protection of the Yellowstone National Park; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Fairbury (Nebr.) Board of Trade, praying for the passage of what is known as the Outhwaite Pacific Railroad funding bill; which was referred to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission.

Mr. DAWES. I present a resolution of the Boston (Mass.) City Council in favor of the passage over the President's veto of the joint resolution to grant the use of Castle Island to the city of Boston for park purposes. I should like to have the resolution accompany the veto message. Is it upon the table? I believe the veto message is in the other branch.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that as the bill originated in the House of Representatives, the veto message has probably been returned to that body.

Mr. DAWES. Then let the resolution lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of H. D. Robinson and 38 other citizens of New Bedford, Mass., praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COKE presented petitions of citizens of Williamson and Parker Counties, Texas, praying for certain amendments of the interstate-commerce law; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate-Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8771) to place the name of Mrs. Flora C. Andrews on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 6545) to increase the pension of Henry T. Bridges;

A bill (H. R. 7466) granting a pension to Hannah H. Grant;

A bill (H. R. 6996) to place the name of Rebecca E. Shoemaker on the pension-roll; and

A bill (H. R. 8496) to increase the pension of Albert E. Magoffin.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon; which were agreed to, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 2412) granting a pension to Haskell A. Evarts;

A bill (S. 2850) granting a pension to Harriet M. Smith; and

A bill (H. R. 7719) granting an increase of pension to George Kincaid.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary M. Shattuck, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 3076) granting a pension to Mary A. Shattuck; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL. I am authorized by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill the bill (S. 2752) for the establishment of a zoological park in the District of Columbia. I move that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 2174) granting a pension to Lewis Fichthorn; and

A bill (H. R. 5378) for the relief of Tillman Faux.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2662) for the erection of a public building at Salt Lake City, Utah, reported it with amendments.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 14) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes, reported it adversely, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3077) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2680) releasing the estate of Asher R. Eddy, late lieutenant-colonel and quartermaster-general United States Army, deceased, and George W. Gibbs and R. L. Ogden, sureties on his official bond, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I report from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and I give notice that I shall endeavor to call it up to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Meanwhile the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3078) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James S. Vaughn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 3079) for the relief of the citizens of the State of Oregon and the Territories of Idaho and Washington who served with the United States troops in the war against the Nez Perces and Bannock and Shoshone Indians, and for the relief of the heirs of those killed in such service, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 3080) granting arrears of pension to William Foot; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 3081) to remove the charge of desertion against Horace E. Ball; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3082) for the relief of Thomas Purcell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3083) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Florian Lischewsky; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3084) granting a pension to Joseph H. Mason; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3085) restoring to the pension-roll the name of James Monohan, minor child of Richard Monohan, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3086) granting a pension to Victor, Gertrude, Margaret, and Helen, minor children of Lieut. George R. McGuire; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3087) granting a pension to Mary A. Pfeiffer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3088) granting a pension to Mary S. Carr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, introduced a bill (S. 3089) making May 30 a holiday in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3090) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept the resignation Maj. D. H. David, of the Fourteenth Regiment Kansas Cavalry Volunteers, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3091) granting a pension to John Corr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 3092) granting a pension to Mrs.

Augusta Kalb; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3093) for the relief of A. N. Kimball and sureties on his official bond as receiver of public moneys; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 89) amending and re-enacting joint resolution approved June 14, 1879, directing the erection of a monument to mark the birthplace of George Washington, as amended and re-enacted February 26, 1881; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. DAWES introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 90) granting leave of absence to certain persons employed in the service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 91) declaratory of the meaning of certain acts of Congress; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2992) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Shoshones, Bannocks, and Sheep-eaters of the Fort Hall and Lemhi reservations in Idaho, May 14, 1880, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPOONER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

STREET PAVING IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to inform the Senate the cost of extending the concrete pavement on each of E, F, and G streets to Fifth street east.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire into the propriety of inserting an amendment in the District of Columbia appropriation bill providing for making an appropriation for paving that portion of New Hampshire avenue between I and R streets northwest.

ACCOUNTS OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTION.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence, statements of accounts, and inclosures which, during the incumbency of the office of First Comptroller of the Treasury by the present occupant, such officer, or his deputy, has had with any United States commissioner or any chief supervisor of elections, and of all replies thereto received by said First Comptroller; and also to inform the Senate whether the several supervisors of elections appointed by the respective circuit courts at and for the election of 1886, at which Representatives in Congress were chosen, or for any registration held prior thereto and for said election, were paid for the respective number of days, not exceeding ten, for which their accounts were presented; and if such payments were not made, the reasons therefor, and for what number of days they were not allowed and paid; and also to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence upon such subject-matter had between the First Comptroller of the Treasury and the Attorney-General, or any United States marshal.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. The only question is as to calling for a copy of the accounts. I do not know how voluminous the accounts may be. That might cause a great deal of unnecessary labor when a mere statement of the amount would be sufficient. I suppose, though, these accounts are not very long in their form.

Mr. SPOONER. I think they are not; they are only for ten days in each case, I understand.

Mr. MORGAN. Let the resolution be printed and lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule, and be printed.

NAVAL STEAMER TENNESSEE.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish to the Senate copies of the following records of the Navy Department concerning the United States naval steamer Tennessee: All reports of the trial of the machinery made in the year 1866; the report of the trial of the machinery in 1867; the steam-log for the first quarter of 1867; all other reports of the performance of the ship or machinery in the year 1867; and all reports or other papers relating to the trial at which the maximum speed was made in the year 1875.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say that on a former day I gave notice that I should address the Senate to-day upon the bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887. I find that nearly all the members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce are absent, and I now therefore announce that I shall not address the Senate to-day; but on my return from West Point I shall ask that the bill be taken up for consideration, at which time I shall have something to say.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there is none, that order is closed and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 1101, a bill (S. 2762) to provide for the erection of public buildings for post-offices in towns and cities where the post-office receipts for three years preceding have exceeded $3,000.

Mr. COKE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 1393, Senate bill 2929.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be reported.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought the order of business to-day was the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had announced the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII, but the Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent to have a bill considered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the reading of the title of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2929) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct and operate a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. COKE. It will take but a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the Senator has got the right of way, after his bill is taken up I shall insist, and I suppose gentlemen upon the other side will insist also, upon having the regular order of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill asked for by the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before action upon the pending bill, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that during the remainder of this week, unless otherwise ordered, the Senate will proceed to the consideration only of bills favorably reported on the Calendar and appropriation bills, and that all special orders assigned shall be continued without prejudice until next Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that for the remainder of this week the Senate proceed to the consideration of appropriation bills and other bills favorably reported upon the Calendar, the special orders assigned to stand over until Monday, the 11th instant.

Mr. SHERMAN. Without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. Unless otherwise ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. And that appropriation bills shall have the right of way whenever reported and their consideration is asked.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is proposed that we shall proceed with the unobjected cases on the Calendar, beginning where we left off?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, to commence where we left off.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. Under the five-minute rule?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; under Rule VIII.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have no objection. I am certainly in favor of the order; but before we proceed with the Calendar I shall ask the Senate at the conclusion of the pending bill to take up a House bill that is on the Calendar, simply to make Inauguration Day a holiday in the District of Columbia. I shall ask the Senate to consider that bill, which may be regarded outside of the general rule, it not being on the Calendar.

RAILROAD IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2929) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct and operate a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. COKE. In section 9, line 4, after the word "built," I move to insert:

And it shall not be necessary in such case for a forfeiture to be declared by judicial process or legislative enactment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the bill in section 3, by striking out after the word "for," in line 47, the words "a larger sum than the award of the referees," and inserting the words "the complainant;" so as to read:

If, upon the hearing of said appeal, the judgment of the court shall be for the complainant, the costs of said appeal shall be adjudged against the railroad company.

And also, after the word "company," in line 49, by striking out the words:

If the judgment of the court shall be for the same sum as the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the appellant. If the judgment of the court shall be for a smaller sum than the award of the referees, then the costs shall be adjudged against the party claiming damages.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INAUGURATION DAY.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the Senate now consider the bill (H. R. 8843) to amend section 993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for the District of Columbia, so as to make Inauguration Day a holiday within said District.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1069) granting a pension to Robert McClean;

A bill (H. R. 8761) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Butterfield;

A bill (H. R. 8762) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Ordway;

A bill (H. R. 8984) granting a pension to Griswold Rogers; and

A bill (H. R. 9314) granting a pension to Mrs. Judith Deig.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1037) granting a pension to the infant children of Michael A. Moran;

A bill (S. 1136) granting a pension to L. J. McGoffin;

A bill (S. 1299) granting a pension to George Park;

A bill (S. 1957) granting a pension to Virtue Smith;

A bill (S. 2167) granting a pension to Mary E. Woodward; and

A bill (S. 2332) granting a pension to John Linsley.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 431) granting a pension to Emma S. Free, widow of Thomas S. Free, late a major of the United States Army, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 5929) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across Staten Island Sound;

A bill (H. R. 7222) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish agricultural stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto;"

A bill (H. R. 7564) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Chattanooga, Tenn.; and

A bill (H. R. 8623) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 615) for the relief of James B. Mitchell; and

A bill (H. R. 4735) for the relief of Douglas Chapman.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS FOR POST-OFFICE PURPOSES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII will now be proceeded with.

The bill (S. 2762) to provide for the erection of public buildings for post-offices in towns and cities where the post-office receipts for three years preceding have exceeded $3,000 annually was announced as first in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the pending amendment to the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST], I believe, is in charge of the bill, and is necessarily absent. I think under the circumstances, as it will lead to considerable discussion, we had better let the bill retain its place on the Calendar and be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, if there be no objection.

THOMAS CONROY.

The bill (S. 506) to remove the charge of desertion against Thomas Conroy, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment to add to the bill "as of date November 14, 1862, for disabilities received in the service in the line of duty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to remove the charge of desertion against Thomas Conroy, late of Company I, Sixty-ninth New York Infantry Volunteers, and issue to his widow an honorable discharge from the Army of the United States as of date November 14, 1862, for disabilities received in the service in the line of duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMANDER GEORGE M. BACHE.

The bill (S. 1169) for the relief of Commander George M. Bache, United States Navy (retired), was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that the United States gunboat Cincinnati, under the command of Lieutenant George M. Bache, United States Navy, while engaged in bombarding the Confederate batteries at Vicksburg, on the Mississippi River, during the late war of the rebellion, was struck by a shot from the Confederate batteries on May 27, 1863, which caused her to immediately sink and become a total loss; that the bombardment was commenced at the instance and under the order of Admiral David D. Porter, then in command of the Mississippi squadron; that the conduct of Lieutenant Bache on that occasion was highly commended in a special letter from the Secretary of the Navy; and that by the sinking of the gunboat Lieutenant Bache (now commander) lost his entire personal outfit.

The bill therefore provides that to reimburse George M. Bache for the losses incurred by him in the sinking of the gunboat Cincinnati, while under his command, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to him or his legal representatives $1,500.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ALLEGED NAVAL DESERTIONS.

The bill (H. R. 1508) to relieve certain appointed or enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps from the charge of desertion was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is quite an important bill, and I have not had time to examine the language of it closely and the report; but my impression is that it would have the effect to relieve the regular sailors and appointees in the Navy and Marine Corps from the charge of desertion—that is, those in the regular service of the Navy. The legislation in regard to the soldiers to relieve them of the charge of desertion has only been made applicable to the volunteers, and not to the soldiers in the regular Army, who are sworn in for the period of five years. I am inclined to think it would be proper to let the bill pass over until we can have time to examine it, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. The Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. STANFORD] is not present. The object of the committee was to secure a bill covering precisely the field contained in the Army provision, which everybody agrees to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see that.

Mr. HALE. It was not intended to go any further than that.

Mr. COCKRELL. But I am satisfied the language here used would make it applicable to the regular sailor, whereas our bills from the Military Committee only apply to the volunteer soldier.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill stand in its place until the Senator can examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The bill (S. 784) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to this bill. There is, I believe, a House bill on the same subject.

Mr. PLUMB. I was about to move that the House bill be substituted on the Calendar for this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the Order of Business of the House bill?

Mr. PLUMB. Order of Business 1422.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, Order of Business 1422, being House bill 8191, will be considered in lieu of this Order of Business. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear the other one read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (H. R. 8191) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an Executive Department to be known as the Department of Agriculture; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 3, after the word "Senate," to strike out the word "and;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That there shall be in said Department an assistant secretary of agriculture, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall perform such duties as may be required by law or prescribed by the secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 1, after the word "shall," to strike out "hereafter;" so as to read:

That the secretary of agriculture shall receive the same salary as is paid to the Secretary of each of the Executive Departments.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know whether there is a quorum in the Senate to-day or not, but I should like to record my vote on the yeas and nays upon this bill, and if there is not a quorum it had better go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall Senate bill 784, on the same subject, take the same order, or shall that be indefinitely postponed?

Mr. PLUMB. I think it had better not be indefinitely postponed. But is there objection to the consideration of the House bill?

Mr. PLATT. I shall desire to have the yeas and nays called.

Mr. PLUMB. It might as well be done now as any other time.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection if there is a quorum.

Mr. PLUMB. I think a quorum will be found.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, in section 3, line 3, before the word "Assistant," to strike out "First," and in line 5, before the word "Assistant," to insert "First;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall receive the same salary as is paid to the Secretary of each of the Executive Departments, and the salary of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture shall be the same as that now paid to the First Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 1, before the word "relating," to strike out "law" and insert "laws;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That all laws and parts of laws relating to the Department of Agriculture now in existence, as far as the same are applicable and not in conflict with this act, and only so far, are continued in full force and effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Weather Service of the United States Signal Service Bureau is hereby transferred to the Department of Agriculture, to take effect July 1, 1888, and shall consist of one chief and such subordinate officers and employés as may be necessary to efficiently manage said bureau. Until otherwise provided by law, the present organization of the subordinate force of said bureau, including the second lieutenants now in service, shall continue as at present: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as altering or affecting in any way the present status in the Army of the commissioned officers of the Signal Corps. The chief of said bureau shall receive an annual compensation of $4,500, and be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, in addition to his strictly military duties, may be assigned to the charge of the Weather Bureau until a chief shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate; and the compensation now paid to the employés and enlisted men of said service shall continue as now; and the moneys appropriated for said service and hereafter appropriated shall be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture.

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed, within thirty days after the passage of this act, to appoint a board of three Army officers, of which the Chief Signal Officer shall be a member. The duty of said board shall be to make an inventory of all property now in the control and posesssion of the Signal Service Bureau, and shall separate and turn over to the Department of Agriculture such portions of the property as the said board may determine to be suitable for the work of the Signal Service Weather Bureau. The remainder of the property shall remain in the control of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was declared to be agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Is that amendment to strike out all that provision about the Weather Bureau?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is to strike out section 5 of the bill, being what has just been read by the Secretary. The Chair will treat the question as not having been taken. Shall the amendment of the committee be agreed to?

Mr. MORGAN. It occurs to me that the amendment now proposed is denying to this measure one of its chief provisions. We have enough of bureaus which are practically independent and irresponsible growing up in this Government; and while we are creating a department of agriculture, I think it would be very wise, indeed, to congregate or assemble some of those outstanding bureaus under the control of that department.

A commission that was presided over by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] had this subject in charge a few years ago. I had the honor of being a member of that commission, and it took a great deal of evidence and examined the subject very thoroughly indeed. That commission, as I remember now, reported in favor of taking the Signal Service and putting it under the civil department of the Government. To characterize that as a branch of the military service of the United States is simply a misnomer. The duties to be performed by the Signal Service are not in any sense military. They are no more military than the Life-Saving Service. They have no relation at all to the military service of the United States, except that part of it which General Sheridan and the Secretary of War have wisely organized out of the Army itself and have located at different camps of instruction where large bodies of troops are assembled for the purpose of training military men in military signals, and that has the slightest possible connection with the weather service.

I remember the report made by General Sheridan and his testimony on that subject before that commission. The weather-service part of this establishment has grown into very much the larger part of it, in fact has now become all that there is of it of any use. It has not been of any benefit to the Army or to the signaling service of the Army; it has come to be a mere incubus upon it, something that can not be very well controlled by the head of the Army, and that belongs in every essential particular to the civil side of the service of the United States.

Now we have an opportunity here, the House having passed this bill, to reform this legislation, and it needs reform. We shall never get a reform of this legislation as long as there is a question of military rank to come in between the Chief of the Signal Service and some civil officer to whom he may be made a subordinate. It is very true that the Secretary of War is only in name a military officer, and his office has more control of civil affairs concerning the Army of the United States than it has, I believe, of military affairs; nevertheless the head of the Signal Service has always been found opposed to a transfer of that service into the civil department of the Government.

This Signal Service ought really to be reformed from the bottom to the top. It ought to have no military feature in it at all. It has no military function to perform. It is connected only with the information of the agriculturists of the country and the men engaged in commerce on the seas, and it has no real reference to anything that is military, concerning the management of the Army in battle or in time of peace. It is not in any way connected with it, and, as I observed before, General Sheridan has made his military signaling service entirely independent of this, and does not rely on this for the training of the men that is necessary to qualify them for signaling in the Army and between different branches of the Army in time of war or in time of peace. It has no connection with it at all.

I was very much in hopes that inasmuch as the other House had taken the subject up, and, I believe, discussed it pretty fully and passed upon it with considerable unanimity, the Senate would agree to allow this feature of the bill to remain. It seems to me it is a matter worthy of very serious consideration; and while this is not as great a step as I would like to see taken in the reformation of this peculiar and new branch of the service here that has sprung up within the last few years, it is still one step in the right direction, and we ought instead of rejecting it to encourage it. Let this service go into the control of the Agricultural Department, with which it is most nearly allied. If there are a set of people in the United States who derive any advantage at all from this weather service, it is the agriculturists. Next to them, I believe it is advantageous to the men who go down upon the sea in ships.

I hope that the Senate will not reject this section. I hope that the matter will have further consideration, and with the view of gaining time for further consideration of it—I think the subject ought to be carefully inquired into—I ask that the bill shall go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama objecting, the bill goes over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB. Before it goes over, I ask the Senator to withdraw his objection for a moment.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. I was acting, in reporting the bill with this amendment to which the Senator from Alabama objects, as the organ of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I sympathize entirely with what the Senator from Alabama has said about the propriety of transferring the Weather Bureau to the Agricultural Department. I would be glad also to have transferred to it the Bureau of the Geological Survey. Both of these bureaus belong more properly in the Department of Agriculture than anywhere else. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who presided for several years over the Department of the Interior, knows very well that that Department already has superabundant and widely separated duties, more than any Secretary can properly and satisfactorily look over.

The Signal Service Bureau was made a part of the War Department because it was supposed to be connected with the military service. Gradually it has grown until it has come to assume public relations to agriculture, and it ought to assume very important relations to that great interest. I have no doubt myself that the present head of that bureau is entirely competent for the position, but he has not been long enough in it yet to have thoroughly organized it, and the bureau is not rendering the service it ought, and I think myself if it were put under the Department of Agriculture in the proper way, with the excrescences taken away, it would respond readily and usefully to the interests with which it is identified.

As a sample of what gets out of that bureau now in the way of information, or alleged information, I want to read a recent dispatch which was sent out to the district composed of Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska, in order that the people there might know what kind of weather to expect. This is the dispatch:

For Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska: Warmer southerly, shifting to cooler, fresh to brisk northerly winds; light rain or snow, followed by fair weather.

That is about as deceptive as anything could be, and the farmers of that section of country who read that would be like the darkey who ran to the brush. It applies to a section of country embracing 200,000 square miles, in which as a matter of course every day there are various kinds of weather, and the information that it will rain somewhere or snow somewhere, and that a brisk northerly wind will blow somewhere else, and a brisk southerly wind somewhere else, is of no consequence in that area unless a particular kind of weather is located at some particular point. The department might be organized a great deal more comprehensively than it is now in order to maintain the service. I do not mean to say that it ought to take any more money; indeed, for some years I have been inclined to think that a great deal of money has been uselessly expended in that department.

Certainly, if it is to be the hand-maid of agriculture it ought to be a part of the Department of Agriculture. It is a misuse of terms to talk about its being a branch of the War Department. It undoubtedly renders some service; but more, it contains a suggestion of great service, and it can be made very useful, the people believe, and they ask at the hands of Congress, not that it shall be abolished, but that it shall be made more perfectly to answer the purpose of its creation. One of the first steps to this, in my judgment, would be to put it under the charge of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and for similar reasons the Geological Survey ought to be there. There are enough duties now being performed by what the Senator from Alabama describes as substantially independent bureaus, which, while acknowledging a nominal authority in the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of War, practically are not under the authority of those Secretaries, which ought to be brought under the Commissioner of Agriculture, and the addition of which would make that Department one equal in dignity and authority and power with any other Department of the Government.

I shall, I give notice now, at a very early day move that the Senate take up this bill, and when it is up shall, as far as I can, insist on its being disposed of before its consideration is dropped.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator from Alabama will still further withdraw his objection, so that I may make a remark or two, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly; I withdraw the objection temporarily.

Mr. PLATT. It is very probable that when this bill shall come up again for consideration I may not be present, and therefore I should like at this time to express the reason why I would vote against the bill in its present shape.

I think, Mr. President, that the Chief Executive officer has perhaps advisers enough in his Cabinet already, and I have very great doubt about the propriety of creating a new executive department with an officer at its head, whom we call a Cabinet officer, to be another adviser of the President. Perhaps in a multitude of counselors there is safety, but it seems to me that the chief executive office is one which a great many advisers will only hamper.

But though I might be willing to forego my objection to a new executive department and another Cabinet officer if the emergency required it, I do not think we ought to erect the Department of Agriculture alone into such an executive office. Agriculture constitutes, to be sure, a great portion of the business of the country, but it does not constitute the entire business of the country, and other branches of business are just as much entitled to be represented in the Cabinet and among the executive officers of the United States as is the business of agriculture. If a new department is to be created it ought to be a department which should not be limited, as this is if you create it, to being a Department of Agriculture, but it ought to be an executive department which should embrace within its purview all of the great business interests of the country.

There is no reason why those people interested in agriculture should be represented in the Cabinet, and those who are interested in manufactures, or mining, or transportation, or commerce, should not be; and while I do not wish in any way to disparage the agricultural interests of the country, while I would go perhaps a great way in fostering them, in protecting them, and in giving them representation in the public councils of the nation, I think that any bill which is passed should go further than that.

And when we go outside of what may be called the actual business interests of the country there is another greater interest which is as much entitled to be represented in an executive office as any of the great branches of business of which I have spoken, and that is the labor interest of the country. Why should agriculture be promoted to the dignity of having a Cabinet officer, and labor employed in other branches of business and in the diversified industries of our people be shut out from being represented in the Cabinet?

So, as it seems to me, if we are going to have a new executive office, it ought to embrace and represent not only agriculture, but all the other great branches of business of which I have spoken—manufactures, mining, commerce, transportation—and it also ought to embrace and represent the interests of labor in this country, of work pure and simple as distinguished from capital. It ought to be as well a statistical department. It ought to have charge of taking our census, which is taken every decade, and to understand that as the new decade approached it would be the business of such a department to make ready for the taking of the next census, so that when the next census should be taken it should be by a deliberate plan and largely from information which had been collected from time to time during the whole ten years; so that the census should be accurate, should be reliable, should be something which the people could rely upon, instead of being what it is when taken in a hurry and with the lack of preparation with which it is now taken.

It will thus be seen that my objection to this bill is not leveled against the agricultural interests of the country by any means. I would stand by them; I would do everything for those interests; but it is that this bill, if another executive office is to be created, does not embrace enough. The Department of the Interior is overloaded. Many of the things that are done there—some of them have been alluded to—would be naturally embraced within this new department.

Possibly it may be replied to this that if the Department of Agriculture is once established it will be easy to add to it these other matters of which I have spoken; but it is not easy to add matters to a department which has itself been created with special reference to a particular interest of the country, and if it is going to be done it seems to me it ought to be done at the start. I am sorry that the committee to which this bill was referred did not consider the project of embracing all these great industries and branches of business and the interest of labor, of the workingmen of this country, within the department which it was proposed to create.

Mr. TELLER. Would it be in order to move to recommit this bill to the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would not. The bill having been passed over under objection it is on the Calendar under Rule IX, not subject to motion now.

Mr. TELLER. If the objection is withdrawn can that be done?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be done if the objection is withdrawn.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw the objection for that motion.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that if there is to be a new executive department, the name "Department of Agriculture" is indefinite. Some other name should be selected, like "the Department of Industry," which has been suggested, or "the Department of Labor," or some of the other names which have been suggested; and then we should transfer to this new department a great many things that are already in the existing Departments, more particularly in the Interior Department.

The Interior Department, as everybody knows, is overcrowded with various bureaus that do not properly belong to it, and which are not particularly appropriate to a mere agricultural department. So great is the labor there that it is utterly impossible for any head of that Department to examine the current business of the Department. It was stated here the other day and truly that the Secretary of the Interior, day by day, can not read, let alone digest or consider, all the papers that are presented for his signature. He relies almost entirely upon the subordinates. He must rely absolutely on the heads of bureaus. There could be a number of bureaus of the interior, without infringing on the usefulness or impairing the dignity of the Interior Department, transferred to this new department when it is created. Therefore I move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PLUMB. The chairman of the committee [Mr. PALMER] is not here, and I would not like to take responsibility in regard to the matter in his absence. I do not like to make objection, but I should be glad to have the motion also embrace the proposition that the bill when reported back should take the place on the Calendar of Senate bill 784, which is Order of Business 1151, so that it will not be put at the foot of a large Calendar and possibly not be reached for consideration.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to that, but I will say to the Senator that I do not think there will be any trouble in getting up the bill at any time. I think there is a general feeling that another Department can be created properly and ought to be created, and it ought to be made in law equal in importance and dignity with every other Department, and to do that we should transfer to it something besides what is proposed to be transferred by this bill.

Again, if we create a department it would not be fair to create a department with very little business and leave an overburdened Department like the Interior Department to-day. I do not care about what particular bureaus shall be put in this new department. The committee can see that many would be in harmony with the general idea and purpose of this new department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MANDERSON. Does that mean the House bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to state that if that course is pursued the order of substitution had better be reconsidered and both bills referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the understanding being that when reported back, as suggested by the Senator from Kansas, they shall resume their numerical places on the Calendar. Is there objection? If there is none, it is so ordered.

MRS. FRANCES MARSHALL.

The bill (H. R. 326) for the relief of Mrs. Frances Marshall was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill being adversely reported will be passed over.

STATUE OF EX-PRESIDENT TAYLOR.

The bill (S. 2787) for the erection of an equestrian statue of ex-President Zachary Taylor was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS FOR POST-OFFICE PURPOSES.

Mr. SPOONER. What disposition was made of Calendar No. 1101, being the bill to provide for the erection of public buildings for post-offices, etc.?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It went over under objection without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I stated that my colleague [Mr. VEST] was not present.

Mr. SPOONER. That is all right. I simply wanted to know whether the bill had lost its place.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2551) to amend section 993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for the District of Columbia, so as to make inauguration day a holiday within said District.

The message further announced that the House had receded from its amendments to the following bills:

A bill (S. 300) granting a pension to Mrs. Juliet G. Howe; and

A bill (S. 393) for the relief of Frances Anne Pyne Ricketts.

JOURNALS OF CONGRESS.

The bill (S. 2802) to fix the number of unbound and bound Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives, and to provide for their distribution, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CALL. This subject has been before the Senate several times. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has taken great interest in it, and I do not think that the bill ought to be considered in his absence.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not think that it will be necessary to postpone it on that account. This matter has been very carefully investigated by the Committee on Printing, and after this bill was reported to the Senate I called the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the bill, and it met with his entire approval, and meets the difficulty of which he complained.

Mr. CALL. I would rather he were here when this subject is considered.

Mr. MANDERSON. I can assure the Senator from Florida that the Senator from Missouri is as anxious for the passage of this bill in this form as any member of the Printing Committee. If the Senator desires that it shall go over, of course I shall make no objection; but I can assure him that it meets the approval of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CALL. Does it reach the difficulties to which he referred?

Mr. MANDERSON. It reaches those difficulties and reduces the number of Journals of both the Senate and House very materially.

Mr. CALL. I make no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator explain exactly what changes this bill makes, and whether each Senator will still be furnished with a copy of the Journal?

Mr. MANDERSON. Each Senator will still be furnished with one copy of the Journal of both the Senate and the House, and this distribution is made after consultation with the officers of both the Senate and House. It reduces by nearly 1,600 the number of both the Senate and House Journals printed. I think perhaps it might be well to print in connection with the bill in the RECORD the report of the committee. It is quite short and it explains the matter very satisfactorily.

The report, submitted by Mr. MANDERSON April 26, is as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having made full investigation into the matter stated in the foregoing title, recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

It was learned by your committee that there were more of the unbound Journals of both branches of Congress printed and distributed in signatures or parts, semi-monthly, than were needed, and hence the number has been reduced. Since the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has been made so complete by its index, there seems to be little demand for the semi-monthly issue of the Journals, the former containing the same information in better form.

Your committee, by correspondence and personal interview, endeavored to ascertain the exact number of bound Journals required for the good of the public service and to meet every reasonable demand. The result of this investigation is presented in the bill. By a mistake in the revision of the United States Statutes of 1878, the number of bound Journals was increased 1,550 copies. There being no need of continuing this duplication of the usual number, it was deemed in the interest of economy to cut it off. Wherever the committee has found it possible to reduce the number of Journals printed under old law or custom by fitting the issue to the exact requirements, it has been done. The following tables will show in convenient form the distribution of the number of copies of the Journals proposed to be printed in the bill:

Unbound copies in signatures.

	Senate.	House.
Office of the Secretary of the Senate	6	6
Office of the Clerk of the House	5	25
Document-room of the House	5	5
Public Printer	4	4
Library of the House (file copies)	5	5
Library of the Senate (file copies)	5	5
Total	30	50

Bound copies of Journals.

	Senate.	House.
Office of the Secretary of the Senate (for Senators)	78	78
Senate library	36	36
Senate document-room	25	25
Senate folding-room	43	43
House document-room (for members)	337	348
Department of State	10	10
Department of the Interior (for States)	435	435
Clerk of the House (for governors of States)		123
Library of Congress (for foreign exchange)	52	52
Court of Claims	2	2
Library of the House of Representatives	7	15
Total	1,025	1,124

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if one copy of the Journals will be furnished hereafter to each of the depositories?

Mr. MANDERSON. The printed volumes pass in very large numbers—to the extent, perhaps, of 1,500 copies—to the Interior Department; and that is a surplusage beyond what is needed to supply all the depositories, the libraries, and the governors of all the States, and they seem to accumulate there without demand from any source for them. These 1,500 or 1,550 copies that have been printed for some years seem to have been printed as the result of a misunderstanding. By a change of the law made in 1878 this number in excess of the real demand of the country was ordered to be printed, and this bill reaches to the repeal of that law, and makes a new and better distribution, in the opinion of the Committee on Printing, of the Senate and House Journals.

Mr. HOAR. Will the librarian of the Interior Department still have charge of the distribution? Has he been consulted?

Mr. MANDERSON. That is not changed by any means. The clerk of the committee has been in consultation with that officer.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know particularly about the details of this bill; but I am satisfied that the number of public depositories of these documents ought to be very largely increased, and that every document of this kind which relates to the legislative or the administrative history of this country should be placed certainly in every considerable public library throughout the country. There are to be found in every neighborhood, certainly in those parts of the country with which I am familiar, and in those parts of the country with which you, sir, are familiar, jurists, persons connected with the press, persons in every department of public business and political life, who feel an interest in keeping up with current politics, and who ought to have access to the original sources of history.

There are, I suppose, ten or twelve—I do not remember the exact number—of these depositories of public documents in the State of Massachusetts. There ought certainly to be three hundred in that single State. There ought to be three hundred copies of the Journals of the House and Senate and three hundred sets of the debates placed in the public libraries for the reasonable wants of that State alone. The copies are almost valueless unless the collections are complete, as the Senator knows as well as I do.

Mr. MANDERSON. The important document, as it seems to me, for the purposes suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD rather than the Journals of the Senate and House. Necessarily the Journals of both the Senate and House are mere skeletons of their proceedings. The debates referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts are to be found, of course, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and these have a much more extended distribution than either House or Senate Journal. Under the old practice we had about as many unbound copies of the Senate and House Journals as we had bound copies, and they were simply wasted. They were not needed in that form. The only need for unbound copies of the Journals of the two Houses is for use during the progress of the session, and therefore for that purpose, for the purpose of indexing, for the use of the clerks and committees, etc., we have reduced the number of unbound copies to 50, leaving of the bound copies 1,025 for the use of the Senate and 1,124 for the use of the House of Representatives; and by this method of distribution it will be ascertained that there go to the Department of the Interior, to be distributed by the superintendent of documents, 435, which number supplies all of the depositories allowed by law. In addition to that there go to the Clerk of the House for governors of States 125 copies, and to the Library of Congress for foreign exchange 62 copies.

This is in addition to the number that are retained in the House document and folding rooms, and the Senate document and folding rooms, and in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, and in the office of the Clerk of the House for distribution to Senators and to members of the House.

Mr. HOAR. What is the number for depositories?

Mr. MANDERSON. Four hundred and thirty-five, or very near that number.

Mr. HOAR. I believe I shall object to the consideration of the bill until I can have further opportunity to inquire into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHACE in the chair). Objection being made, the bill goes over.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF MARY H. PIKE.

The bill (S. 1191) for the relief of the legal representatives of Mary H. Pike was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the legal representatives of Mary H. Pike, deceased, late of Little Rock, Ark., $35, for rent of a building in Little Rock, occupied by the military authorities of the United States, under contract, from October 1 to October 30, 1864, and for which vouchers were given her by those authorities.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED PEORIAS AND MIAMIS.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the bill (H. R. 8074) to provide for allotment of land in severalty to United Peorias and Miamis in Indian Territory may be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

ESTATE OF JOSEPH FENNO.

The bill (S. 1190) for the relief of the estate of Joseph Fenno was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the legal representatives of Joseph Fenno, deceased, late of Little Rock, Ark., $580, for rent of buildings owned by him in Little Rock, which were occupied by the military authorities of the United States, under contract, from July 1, 1864, to January 30, 1865, and for which vouchers were given to Busby by those authorities.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SEDALIA, MO.

The bill (H. R. 1599) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Sedalia, in the State of Missouri, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALARIES OF DISTRICT JUDGES.

The bill (S. 407) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COKE. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill, being objected to, will go over without prejudice.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MONROE, LA.

The bill (H. R. 1483) for the erection of a public building at Monroe, La., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments. The first amendment was, in line 4, after the word "purchase," to insert "acquire by condemnation;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise procure a suitable site, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 22, after the word "exceed," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to read:

The plans and estimates for said building shall first be prepared, examined, and approved as required by section 3734 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the cost shall not exceed $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 31, after the words "sum of," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to read:

And no purchase of site nor plan of said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $75,000, which sum is hereby appropriated for the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would call attention to the fact that there is a verbal amendment necessary in line 27, to strike out the word "same" and insert "sum."

Mr. COCKRELL. That correction ought to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY.

The bill (S. 194) to increase the endowment of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural College was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 5, after the word "entries," to insert "or under any law of the United States;" and in line 7, after the word "selections," to insert "for the purposes of this act;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any legal subdivision of land to which the right of homestead entry or pre-emption shall have attached in favor of any person who is entitled to such homestead and pre-emption entries, or under any law of the United States, and who is occupying and claiming such subdivision of the public land in Louisiana at the time when such selections for the purposes of this act are approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and in cases where it is found that such claims are superior to the rights of the State of Louisiana herein granted, the said State may select other lands in lieu thereof, and in like quantity, elsewhere in the said State, from the public lands of the United States, so as to make up as nearly as may be the total number of acres of land granted in this act to said State.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is there any report in that case?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no report, the Chair is informed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I object, unless some statement can be made of the reasons for the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire makes an objection, and the bill goes over.

Mr. CHANDLER. Retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Retaining its place on the Calendar.

INAUGURATION DAY.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senate this morning on my motion passed the bill (H. R. 8843) to amend section 993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for the District of Columbia, so as to make inauguration day a holiday within said District. Since the passage of that bill by the Senate the House of Representatives have passed a Senate bill on the same subject and it has been received here. I therefore move that the vote by which House bill 8843 was passed be reconsidered, and that that bill be indefinitely postponed. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the vote by which House bill 8843 making inauguration day a legal holiday in the District of Columbia was passed may be reconsidered. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. MANDERSON. I also move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move to take up the other bill now?

Mr. MANDERSON. No, sir; the bill formerly passed the Senate and has now passed the House of Representatives.

BRIDGE ACROSS OCONEE RIVER.

The bill (H. R. 8279) to authorize the county of Laurens, in the State of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Oconee River at or near Dublin, in said county and State, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WATERBURY, CONN.

The bill (S. 2319) for the erection of a public building at Waterbury, Conn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 12, after the words "one hundred," to strike out "and fifty;" so as to read:

The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 21, after the words "one hundred," to strike out "and fifty;" so as to read:

And no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $100,000 for site and building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as a new section:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purpose provided in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIENS OF JUDGMENTS.

The bill (H. R. 8180) to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 4, after the word "court," to insert "of the United States;" in line 5, after the word "property," to insert "throughout such State;" in line 6, after the word "conditions," to insert "only;" in the same line, after the word "as," to insert "if such;" and in line 7, after the word "decrees," to strike out "of the courts of such State" and insert "had been rendered by a court of general jurisdiction of such State;" so as to read:

That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court of the United States within any State shall be liens on property throughout such State in the same manner and to the same extent and under the same conditions only as if such judgments and decrees had been rendered by a court of general jurisdiction of such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 12, after the word "attach," to strike out "such regulations shall apply to the judgments or decrees of the courts of the United States" and insert "this act shall be applicable therein;" so as to read:

Provided, That whenever the laws of any State require a judgment or decree of a State court to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or any other thing to be done, in a particular manner, or in a certain office or county, before a lien shall attach, this act shall be applicable therein whenever and only whenever the laws of such State shall authorize the judgments and decrees of the United States courts to be registered, recorded, docketed, indexed, or otherwise conformed to the rules and requirements relating to the judgments and decrees of the courts of the State.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the bill may go over. It seems to me that it establishes quite a new rule.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not object to the consideration or the passage of this bill While it may establish a new rule, it is certainly a rule that is very greatly needed, particularly throughout the Western States.

This is simply the establishing of a principle for which many of us have contended for many years, and it seems to reach the remedy that is sought very completely. It is that the judgments of the United States courts shall not only be of record in the office of the clerks of the United States courts, but that there shall also be a record of the judgments that are liens upon real estate in the counties where the land is situated, thus rendering it unnecessary where one seeks to obtain information as to incumbrances by way of judgment-lien, that, being in an interior or outside county, he shall be compelled to communicate, within the Senator's own State, for instance, at Denver, but that he can simply go to the records of his own county and ascertain the fact whether there is a judgment of the United States court.

I know that this bill has received the very careful consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary, and that it applies a remedy which certainly is desirable in most of the States in the Union, if not all of them.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that the bill go over so that it may be looked into. It is a new idea to me. While I have great confidence in the committee that reported the bill, I know they worked some very disastrous results in a bill which we allowed to pass here in the last Congress. I shall take an opportunity to look at it, and the Senator can call it up again. It will not lose its place.

Mr. MANDERSON. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado objects, and the bill goes over without losing its place on the Calendar.

USE AND SALE OF OPIUM.

The bill (S. 375) to restrict the use and sale of opium in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that every person who, within the District of Columbia or any of the Territories of the United States, or other place within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, shall sell, lend, or give away, or offer to sell, lend, or give away, any apparatus or device or instrument whereby opium may be smoked or used in any manner whatsoever, or who shall permit or allow persons to assemble upon any premises in his or her control for the purpose of smoking opium, or shall lease, hire, or rent any buildings or premises, or any part thereof, to be used, occupied, or employed for the purpose of smoking opium or of using opium in any manner, shall be guilty of misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not less than one nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned not exceeding one year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANT ASTRONOMERS.

The bill (S. 653) defining the positions and salaries of assistant astronomers at the United States Naval Observatory, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was to add to section 1 the following words:

And such officers to be removable by said Secretary whenever the public interests may require such removal upon the recommendation of the Superintendent of the Observatory and a majority of the professors of mathematics on duty at such Observatory.

So as to make the section read:

That there be, and hereby are, permanently authorized the positions of five assistant astronomers at the United States Naval Observatory, who shall receive a compensation per annum of $1,800 during their first three years of service, of $2,100 during their second three years of service, of $2,400 during their third three years of service, of $2,700 during their fourth three years of service, and of $3,000 after twelve years of service, the appointments to these positions to be made by the Secretary of the Navy; and such officers to be removable by said Secretary whenever the public interests may require such removal upon the recommendation of the Superintendent of the Observatory and a majority of the professors of mathematics on duty at such Observatory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "that," to strike out "this act shall take effect upon its passage, and that;" in line 2, after the word "compensation," to strike out "thereafter" and insert "after the passage of this act;" in line 5, before the word "section," to insert "the preceding," and after "section" to strike out the word "one;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the compensation after the passage of this act of the three assistant astronomers now attached to the said Observatory shall be reckoned according to the terms of the preceding section by adding to their terms of service under this act their previous terms of service at the said Observatory as assistant astronomers, assistant observers, or aids.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 1, after the word "two," to strike out "remaining" and insert "additional;" in line 2, before the word "section," to insert "the preceding," and after "section" to strike out the word "one;" in line 5, after the words "consist of," to strike out "two professors" and insert "one professor;" in line 6, after the word "Navy," to strike out "who shall at the time be on duty at the Naval Observatory, and of;" in line 8, after the word "astronomer," to insert "and one other competent examiner, who may be either naval or civilian;" in line 22, after the word "least," to strike out "one month" and insert "two months;" and in line 25, after the word "date," to strike out "or dates;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That to fill the two additional positions authorized in the preceding section, and to fill any vacancies that may hereafter occur in the positions of assistant astronomers, the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint an examining board, which shall consist of one professor of mathematics in the Navy, one assistant astronomer, and one other competent examiner, who may be either naval or civilian, and this board shall examine all candidates who request permission to appear before it, in astronomy, mathematics, astronomical physics, and knowledge of and experience in practical astronomy, and the said board shall report to the Secretary of the Navy the names of such persons as they shall find qualified for the position of assistant astronomer in the order of their standing as developed by the examination, and from this number the Secretary of the Navy shall fill the vacancies that may exist; and no person shall be appointed to fill such vacancy without such favorable report from such examining board; and the Secretary of the Navy shall cause to be circulated to the principal observatories, universities, colleges, and schools of technology and engineering throughout the United States, at least two months before such examination, a circular announcing the number of vacancies existing, the compensation attached to the position, and the place and date of the examination to be held.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 2, after the word "appropriated," to strike out "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000, or as much," and insert "such sums;" and after the word "for," at the end of line 5, to strike out "such part of the two fiscal years ending June 30, 1889, as is unexpired at the time of the passage of this act," and insert "the current fiscal year and for the fiscal year next succeeding."

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That, to carry out the provisions of this act, there is hereby appropriated such sums as may be necessary to pay the salaries of the assistant astronomers authorized in section 1 for the current fiscal year and for the fiscal year next succeeding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LYNCHBURGH.

The bill (S. 2277) to provide for the extension of the public building at Lynchburgh, Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $30,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the extension of the public building at Lynchburgh, Va., upon such plans and specifications as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. Any amount not necessary for the purpose aforesaid shall be covered into the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO JUDGES.

The bill (S. 2470) to repeal section 714 of the Revised Statutes, allowing pensions to judges in certain cases, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill, having been reported adversely, will go over under Rule IX.

ESTATE OF ISAAC P. TICE.

The bill (S. 987) for the relief of the administrators of the estate of Isaac P. Tice, deceased, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that bill go over. I should like to make some inquiry in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island objecting, the bill will go over.

PEARSON C. MONTGOMERY.

The bill (S. 750) for the relief of Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TELLER. I do not see why that bill should come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is evidently a mistake in the printed Calendar. The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was referred to the Committee on Claims, and reported by that committee.

Mr. TELLER. Then it is a mistake in the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a mistake in the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know anything about the bill; only I knew that it did not belong to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was reported by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] from the Committee on Claims with an amendment.

The amendment of the Committee on Claims was, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "three;" and in line 7, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "two;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, State of Tennessee, the sum of $3,200, in full compensation for property taken from him for the use of and used by the Army of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The bill (S. 2851) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. That, I suppose, should go over, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is not here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine objecting, the bill will go over without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to that at all. I suppose it is the bill the Senator from Illinois referred to this morning, stating that he would call it up when he returned from West Point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will not lose its place on the Calendar.

CLARA B. DAVIDSON.

The bill (S. 2852) granting an increase of pension to Clara B. Davidson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Clara B. Davidson, widow of John W. Davidson, late colonel of the Second Cavalry, at the rate of $70 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL ARMY RETIRED-LIST.

The bill (S. 1100) to retire certain disabled officers of the Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that there are about eighty officers now borne on the active-list of the Army who, in consequence of wounds received in action or exposure in the line of duty, are incapacitated for active service; and that the present limitation upon the number of officers on the retired-list will not permit their retirement, although the efficiency of the Army would be greatly increased by such a measure.

The bill authorizes the President of the United States to retire those officers of the Army who, by retiring boards as now constituted by law, have already been recommended for retirement, or may be so recommended prior to January 1, 1889, and provides that the names of all officers retired in accordance with this proposed act shall be placed upon an additional retired-list in which vacancies occurring by reason of death, resignation, or dismissal shall not be filled. But this additional retired-list shall cease to exist and the act shall have no further effect when those officers of the Army retired under its provisions shall all have died, resigned, or been dismissed from the Army of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ALFRED PLEASONTON.

The bill (H. R. 2972) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasonton with the rank and grade of colonel was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 8, after "United States," to strike out "a brevet major-general in the Army of the United States;" so as to read:

That the laws regulating appointments in the Army be, and they are hereby, suspended, and suspended only for the purpose of this act, and the President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Alfred Pleasonton, late a major-general of volunteers in the Army of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 11, after the words "grade of," to strike out "colonel" and insert "major;" so as to read:

And thereupon to place him, the said Alfred Pleasonton, upon the retired list of the Army with the rank and grade of major, without regard and in addition to the number now authorized by law of said retired-list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. PLATT. How does the bill stand? With what rank does it retire General Pleasonton?

Mr. CAMERON. With the rank of major.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it makes him a major.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was going to state that there was an oversight in reporting the bill. The word "major" should be inserted after the words "United States" in line 8 to make it correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that amendment will be made.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would then read:

And the President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Alfred Pleasonton, late a major-general of volunteers in the Army of the United States, a major, and thereupon, etc.

Mr. CAMERON. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be made.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the House of Representatives gave by the bill the rank of colonel, and I regret very much that our Committee on Military Affairs did not see fit to report it as the House passed it. I understand the Senate Committee on Military Affairs have adopted a rule that they will confine these retirements to the rank that the officer held in the regular Army when he retired from the Army, and that I understand in this case was major. I should insist, if I believed it would do any good, upon passing the bill as it came from the other House, but I am pretty well satisfied that it can not be passed in that shape from some examination I have made, and believing that a little is better than nothing, and that this is an act of justice in part towards a gallant officer, which has long been deferred, I shall not make any objection to the bill being passed as amended by the committee.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasanton, with the rank and grade of major."

Mr. CAMERON. I move that a conference with the House of Representatives be requested on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CAMERON, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

POTTAWATOMIES OF MICHIGAN AND INDIANA.

The bill (S. 2176) for the ascertainment of the amount due the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in line 12, after the word "Indians," to insert the words "nor by the receipt in full given by said Pottawatomies under the provisions of said resolution;" so as to read:

That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized to take jurisdiction of and try all questions of difference arising out of treaty stipulations with the said Pottawatomie Indians, of Michigan and Indiana, and to render judgment thereon; power is hereby granted the said court to review the entire question of difference de novo, and it shall not be estopped by the joint resolution of Congress, approved July 28, 1866, entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of certain Chippewa, Ottawa, and Pottawatomie Indians," nor by the receipt in full given by said Pottawatomies under the provisions of said resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. This seems to be, from what I can hastily see of it, a repeal of the final action had under a former law of Congress, and I think probably we had better let the bill pass over.

Mr. PLATT. Why not let the report be read and then perhaps the Senator will be satisfied?

Mr. COCKRELL. The report contains 42 pages.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut ask to have the report read?

Mr. PLATT. No, I do not. The Senator who reported the bill is not present. However, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over, without losing its place on the Calendar.

MICHIGAN CITY BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 2097) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Trail Creek, in the city of Michigan City, Indiana, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was to add to section 1 the following additional proviso:

Provided also, That if tolls shall be collected for passage or transportation across said bridge, the rates thereof shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, who shall have power to fix said rates at reasonable amounts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as section 2:

SEC. 2. That if the construction of the bridge hereby authorized shall not be commenced within one year from the time this act takes effect, and be completed within three years after its commencement, then this act shall be void, and all rights hereby conferred shall cease and determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

LONGEVITY PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

The bill (H. R. 8809) to provide for the promotion of officers of the Army after twenty years' continuous service in one grade was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri objects, and the bill goes over without losing its place on the Calendar.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT HICKMAN.

The bill (H. R. 7340) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Hickman, Ky., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 3, line 2, after the word "spans," to strike out:

Having at least one channel span of the width to be prescribed by a board of engineer officers constituted to examine and determine the same with the approval of the Secretary of War, and all other spans over the water way shall have a clear channel way of not less than 650 feet, and a clear head room of not less than 85 feet, above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, and the bridge shall be at right angles to, and its piers parallel with, the current of the river.

And to insert:

Before approving the plans for said bridge the Secretary of War shall order three engineer officers from the Engineer Bureau to be detailed to the duty of examining, by actual inspection, the locality where said bridge is to be built, and to report what shall be the length of the main channel span and of the other spans: Provided, That the main channel span shall in no event be less than 700 feet in length, or the other spans less than 650 feet each in length; and if the report of said officers shall be approved by the Secretary of War, the spans of said bridge shall be of the length so required. The lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge shall be at least 85 feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, and the bridge shall be at right-angles to and its piers parallel with the current of the river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FRANCES ANNE PYNE RICKETTS.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 393) for the relief of Frances Anne Pyne Ricketts having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment to said bill.

C. K. DAVIS,
ALGERNON S. PADDOCK,
RUFUS BLODGETT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. LOGAN CHIPMAN,
JOHN LYNCH,
J. G. SAWYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The other House having receded from its disagreement, the report requires no action on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1241) to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 9788) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 1069) granting a pension to Robert McClean;

A bill (H. R. 8761) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Butterfield;

A bill (H. R. 8762) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Ordway;

A bill (H. R. 8984) granting a pension to Griswold Rogers; and

A bill (H. R. 9314) granting a pension to Mrs. Judith Deig.

The bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EMMA S. FREE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 431) granting a pension to Emma S. Free, widow of Thomas S. Free, late major of the United States Army.

The amendment of the House was, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. BLAIR, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. FAULKNER were appointed.

RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS FORT M'CLARY RESERVATION.

The bill (H. R. 7509) granting to the York Harbor and Beach Railroad Company a right of way was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to grant the right of way, four rods in width, across the military reservation at Fort McClary, in the town of Kittery, Me., to the York Harbor and Beach Railroad Company, a corporation created by the laws of Maine, and the company is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate its railroad on the right of way, according to the location thereof, as recorded in the office of the commissioners of the county of York, Maine, and described in the temporary revocable license issued by the War Department to the company June 10, 1887.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS MOUNT VERNON ARSENAL RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 2477) granting the right of way to the Mobile and Birmingham Railway Company, the successor to the Mobile and Alabama Grand Trunk Railroad Company, across the Mount Vernon Arsenal Reservation, in Mobile County, Alabama, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, after the word "hundred," to strike out "and fifty," and in line 4, before the word "feet," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

That a right of way of 100 feet in width, being 50 feet on either side of the center line of the said railroad as the same was constructed by the Mobile and Alabama Grand Trunk Railroad Company, and now maintained and operated by the said Mobile and Birmingham Railway Company across the arsenal reservation at Mount Vernon, Ala., be granted to the said Mobile and Birmingham Railway Company across the reservation aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the said company, in addition to the right of way for its tracks and sidings as above granted, shall also have the right to construct and maintain a freight and passenger depot and platform for their freight and passengers, and also a turntable and "Y," at some suitable point on said reservation: Provided, That the location of such depot, platform, turntable, and "Y," shall be approved by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN NASHUA, N. H.

The bill (S. 385) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 4, after the word "purchase," to insert "or acquire by condemnation;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase, or acquire by condemnation, a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with commodious fire-proof vaults, for the accommodation of the post-office, internal-revenue office, and other Government offices, at the city of Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to read:

The site, and the building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $75,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purpose provided in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF JAMES L. DAY.

The bill (S. 1245) for the relief of Nancy E. Day, administratrix of the estate of James L. Day, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay Nancy E. Day, administratrix of the estate of James L. Day, deceased, late of Norwich, Conn., $3,041.66 in payment and satisfaction of the amount found due from the United States to Nancy E. Day by the Court of Claims upon a reference of her claim to that court by the Postmaster-General.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN E. FENIMORE.

The bill (S. 355) for the relief of John E. Fenimore was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is an adverse report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was adversely reported and will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

WILLIAM SCHAUS.

The bill (S. 1632) to refund moneys collected from William Schaus at the port of New York on an oil painting not subject to duty was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY IN VIRGINIA.

The bill (S. 515) for the relief of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary and High School in Virginia was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. FAULKNER. That claim has been passed by the House of Representatives in another bill, which has been brought over and presented to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, with a number of other claims included in the same bill. The House bill was ordered to be reported favorably by the Senate committee, and it has been suggested by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], who is specially interested in this Senate bill, that it be passed over, so that the claim may be passed in the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

WEST VIRGINIA MILITIA.

The bill (S. 1807) to refund to the State of West Virginia the money paid to officers of the One hundred and thirty-third Regiment West Virginia Militia for services rendered during the rebellion was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the State of West Virginia $2,019.57, the amount paid by the State to certain officers of the One hundred and thirty-third Regiment West Virginia Militia for services rendered by them in the war of the rebellion, being the difference between $13 per month received by them and the amount they should have received as such officers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

B. M. PARISH.

The bill (H. R. 322) for the relief of B. M. Parish was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay B. M. Parish, of Barren County, Kentucky, $635, for property taken and used during the late war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLLIN ADAMS.

The bill (S. 2849) for the relief of Collin Adams was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill was adversely reported, and will go over to the Calendar under Rule IX.

DAVID MERIWETHER.

The bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "appropriated," to strike out:

One thousand nine hundred and twenty-nine dollars and forty cents, being arrears of his salary as governor of the Territory of New Mexico; also, $3,602.55, being the amount due him as disbursing agent of public moneys; also,

And in line 12, after the word "part," to strike out the words:

Amounting in all to the sum of $6,086.60, all.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to David Meriwether, of Louisville, Ky., out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $525 for loss of public moneys sustained without fault on his part, as found and set forth by the Court of Claims in its findings of fact dated the 14th day of December, 1885.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LAND OFFICE AT FOLSOM, N. MEX.

The bill (S. 2040) to establish a land office at Folsom, in the Territory of New Mexico, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES V. MESLER.

The bill (H. R. 2695) for the relief of Charles V. Mesler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Postmaster-General, in adjusting the accounts of Charles V. Mesler, postmaster at Gasport, N. Y., to allow him a credit of $39.88 for postal-cards, stamps, and envelopes stolen from him at the post-office on the night of the 25th or 26th of April, 1880, without any negligence or default on the part of the postmaster.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAIL ROUTE IN LOUISIANA.

The bill (H. R. 8965) to authorize the Postmaster-General to cancel mail contract on route No. 30100, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALTOONA, PA.

The bill (S. 1318) for the erection of a public building at Altoona, Pa., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 4, after the word "purchase," to insert "or acquire by condemnation proceedings;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or acquire by condemnation proceedings, a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices, at the city of Altoona, State of Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five," and after the word "dollars," in the same line, to insert "which sum is hereby appropriated;" so as to read:

The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $75,000, which sum is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 194) to increase the endowment of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural College. When the bill was reached on the Calendar the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] objected to its consideration, but he is now, I understand, disposed to withdraw his objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am willing to withdraw the objection if the Senator will explain the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read at length, and the amendments of the Committee on Public Lands were agreed to. If there be no objection, the bill is again before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, this is a college which was founded mainly upon the act of July 2, 1862, donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agricultural and mechanic arts. Its buildings and its apparatus were destroyed by fire, and it is to-day supported mainly by the State of Louisiana and partially out of the proceeds of the scrip of the public lands which were granted by the Government of the United States. It now occupies the United States barracks and property at Baton Rouge. But the sum derived from the public lands was greatly diminished on account of the large indebtedness of the State of Louisiana, which was scaled in 1874–'75 40 cents in the dollar, so that this institution lost its main source of revenue.

It is a very good college as conducted to-day. The first president of it was General Sherman, and he has always taken very great interest in it. It is a meritorious college.

It has always been the policy of the Government to assist education by grants of public land. I had the pleasure a few days ago to visit this institution, and I can say to the Senate that it is well conducted. The young men are regular in their attendance. The course of study is appropriate to such an institution, and it is doing good work.

This bill has already passed the Senate, I think, once or twice. Several other bills of a similar character have passed the Senate, and I trust there will be no objection to it.

Mr. PLATT. Let the bill be read once more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as amended by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended, as follows:

That 25,000 acres of the public lands in Louisiana are hereby granted to the State of Louisiana, to be applied, as far as may be necessary, to the erection of suitable buildings for said university, and to the restoration of the library and scientific apparatus heretofore destroyed by fire, such application to be made in such manner as the Legislature of said State may direct, or may empower the trustees of said university to direct: Provided, That the State of Louisiana shall pay the expenses of agents appointed by the governor thereof to select such lands, to be reimbursed out of the proceeds of the sales thereof.

SEC. 2. That the governor of Louisiana may appoint one or more agents to select the lands granted in this act, from any public lands within said State not included in some subsisting grant made by the United States; and such agent shall make report of such selection to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any legal subdivision of land to which the right of homestead entry or pre-emption shall have attached in favor of any person who is entitled to such homestead pre-emption entries, or under any law of the United States, and who is occupying and claiming such subdivision of the public land in Louisiana at the time when such selections for the purposes of this act are approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and in cases where it is found that such claims are superior to the rights of the State of Louisiana herein granted, the said State may select other lands in lieu thereof, and in like quantity, elsewhere in the said State, from the public lands of the United States, so as to make up as nearly as may be the total number of acres of land granted in this act to said State.

SEC. 4. That when the selections of said lands are so made and are approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the title to the same shall vest in the State of Louisiana, to and for the use and benefit of said Louisiana State University and Agricultural College, to be applied to the uses and purposes declared in the first section of this act, and then to the endowment of said university, and to no other purpose whatever; and patents shall issue to said State for the land so selected and approved. And the State of Louisiana shall by law direct the sale of such lands, and the money arising from such sales shall be paid into the treasury of the State of Louisiana; but no expenses that may be incurred in making such sale after the selection of lands made under this act are confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior and entered on the township maps of the proper land offices shall be paid by the United States.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior is empowered to make all needful and proper regulations and rules for carrying this act into effect, and for the decision of all questions that may arise as to the right of the State of Louisiana to any lands that may be claimed under the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senate to go back to a bill which has been passed, Order of Business 930, being the bill (H. R. 8393) to protect lands belonging to Indians from unlawful grazing, and for other purposes. This bill was passed in the absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] and myself in the Committee on Appropriations. The Senator from Kansas had prepared certain amendments to it. I entered the motion to reconsider on my return to the Senate Chamber so as to enable the Senator from Kansas to offer his amendments. I now ask that the motion to reconsider be acted on so as to give him the opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote by which the bill was passed will be reconsidered by unanimous consent, if there be no objection, and also the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, and the bill is now open to amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend by inserting in line 5, after the word "conveys," the words:

For pasturage, transit, or other purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move now, in line 6, to strike out the words "to range and feed;" so as to read:

Every person who drives, or otherwise conveys for pasturage, transit, or other purposes, any stock of horses, mules, or cattle on any land belonging to any Indian or Indian tribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out section 2 and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior may make and enforce such rules and regulations concerning the transit of cattle across Indian reservations as he may deem necessary to prevent the spread of disease among cattle lawfully on such reservations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DAWES, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. PLUMB were appointed.

JAMES L. ALSIP.

The bill (H. R. 6575) for the relief of James L. Alsip was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of James L. Alsip, late of Company A, Third Regiment Kentucky Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID STRUNK.

The bill (H. R. 417) granting a pension to David Strunk was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of David Strunk, late private in the Eighteenth Battery of New York Light Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NELLIE PALFREY GOODWIN.

The bill (H. R. 7913) granting a pension to Nellie Palfrey Goodwin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Nellie Palfrey Goodwin, the invalid, dependent, and pauper daughter of William H. Goodwin, late of Company K, Second New Hampshire Volunteers, at the rate of $18 per month, payable to her legally constituted guardian.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES F. WARD.

The bill (H. R. 6520) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Ward was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Charles F. Ward, formerly of the ship Vermont, United States Navy, a pension of $30 a month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANVILLE A. RICKER.

The bill (S. 2646) granting a pension to Danville A. Ricker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Danville A. Ricker, father of Henry G. Ricker, late private in Company K, Seventh Regiment Maine Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY S. MAYNARD.

The bill (S. 2459) granting a pension to Mary S. Maynard was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary S. Maynard, mother of George S. Maynard, late a member of Company K, Twenty-first Massachusetts Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GERTRUDE K. LYFORD.

The bill (S. 2500) granting a pension to Gertrude K. Lyford was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Gertrude K. Lyford, widow of the late Maj. and Bvt. Lieut. Col. Stephen C. Lyford, United States Army, at the rate of $40 per month, in lieu of the pension which she now receives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. HOPKINS.

Mr. CAMERON. I understand that Senate bill 1914, Order of Business 927, was passed over some time since. I should like to have the Senate take it up for consideration now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1914) for the relief of Mary E. Hopkins. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mary E. Hopkins, widow of Alfred Hopkins, late a captain in the Navy, $5,156.64, being for the salary of Alfred Hopkins, on leave pay, from the 21st of November, 1882, to the 24th of September, 1884.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH DOMM.

The bill (S. 2454) placing the name of Elizabeth Domm on the pension-rolls was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-rolls the name of Elizabeth Domm, widow of John L. Domm, deceased, late member of the Eleventh Ohio Battery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLOTTE T. ALDERMAN.

The bill (S. 2439) granting a pension to Charlotte T. Alderman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Charlotte T. Alderman, widow of James Alderman, who was a private in Company E, Forty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN SMITH.

The bill (S. 2705) granting a pension to Ellen Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ellen Smith, widow of James Smith, late a private in Company C, Eighty-eighth Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIANA J. NICHOLS.

The bill (S. 2728) to grant a pension to Indiana J. Nichols was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Indiana J. Nichols, widow of Henry H. Nichols, late private of Company K, One hundred and thirty-third New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIJAH MARTIN.

The bill (H. R. 5522) for the relief of Elijah Martin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elijah Martin, late a private in Lieut. James Whelpley's company of the Twenty-sixth Regiment United States Infantry in the war of 1812, at the rate of $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY M. SWEET.

The bill (H. R. 955) granting a pension to Mary M. Sweet was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary M. Sweet, widow of George W. Sweet, late a private in Company A, Seventy-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE E. OLIPHANT.

The bill (H. R. 2167) for the relief of George E. Oliphant was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of George E. Oliphant, late a private in Company I, Seventeenth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. GEN. W. W. AVERELL.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the Senate to consider Order of Business 683, which was passed over without prejudice a few days ago.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1650) for the relief of Maj. Gen. W. W. Averell.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, in line 10, after the words "positions of," to strike out "colonel" and insert "captain;" so to read:

That in view of the long and faithful services of Bvt. Maj. Gen. William W. Averell, United States Army, before and during the late war, and of severe wounds received by him in battle, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint William W. Averell, brevet major-general United States Army and late brigadier-general United States Volunteers, to the position of captain in the Army of the United States, and to place him on the retired-list of the Army as of that grade, the retired-list being thereby increased in number to that extent; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are suspended for this purpose only.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act no pension shall be paid to the said William W. Averell, nor shall any compensation be paid to him for any period prior to his appointment under this act; but this proviso shall be no bar to any claims for pension that the widow or children or other heirs of the said William W. Averell may have after his decease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIDNEY W. WHITELOCK.

The bill (H. R. 7490) for the relief of Sidney W. Whitelock was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sidney W. Whitelock, late a private in Company K, Eleventh Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACKSON CHAPMAN.

The bill (S. 2721) granting a pension to Jackson Chapman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jackson Chapman, late a member of Company E, Forty-fifth Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN E. ALGER.

The bill (S. 1162) for the relief of Susan E. Alger was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Commissioner of Pensions to examine the claim of Susan E. Alger, of Worcester, Mass., for a pension on account of the death of her son, Warren A. Alger, late of Company D, Fifteenth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers, and to allow or reject the claim as if Warren A. Alger had left no widow; and if he shall allow the claim, to cause the amount to be paid Susan E. Alger which would have been due her if the pension had been granted at the time when the widow ceased to receive a pension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM S. GROW.

The bill (S. 2884) granting a pension to William S. Grow was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William S. Grow, late of Company I, Second Minnesota Volunteers, and deputy provost-marshal of second district of Minnesota, at the rate of $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY A. HAWLEY.

The bill (S. 2885) granting a pension to Henry A. Hawley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Henry A. Hawley, late hospital steward, United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH BURR.

The bill (H. R. 488) granting a pension to Elizabeth Burr was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Burr, widow of William Burr, late of Company F, One hundred and seventy-second Regiment of Ohio National Guards.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CASPER SEIBEL.

The bill (H. R. 3922) to place the name of Casper Seibel on the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Casper Seibel, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment of Kentucky Calvary, on the pension-rolls.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOLLY BLAZER.

The bill (H. R. 3959) granting a pension to Dolly Blazer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Dolly Blazer, widow of Richard Blazer, deceased, late captain of Company A of the Ninety-first Regiment of Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN WITHAM.

The bill (H. R. 6845) granting a pension to John Witham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-rolls the name of John Witham, late a member of Company C, Thirteenth Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. CLARISSA G. GREEN.

The bill (H. R. 8266) for the relief of Mrs. Clarissa G. Green was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Clarissa G. Green, dependent mother of James F. Green, late of Company D, One hundred and twenty-ninth New York Volunteer Infantry, afterward the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM CLARK.

The bill (H. R. 5844) to increase the pension of William Clark was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of William Clark, a veteran of the war of 1812, from $16 per month, the amount now allowed him, to $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. LOANDA SHERMAN.

The bill (S. 2604) granting a pension to Mrs. Loanda Sherman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Loanda Sherman, widow of Urial Sherman, who was a private in Company A, of the One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CANCELLATION OF MAIL CONTRACTS.

The bill (S. 2647) regulating the practice in certain cases in the Post-Office Department was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads reported an amendment, to add to the bill, "and in any case where the contractor is willing to perform the increased service at pro rata pay;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for the Postmaster-General to cancel any valid and subsisting contract between the United States and any of its contractors for the performance of mail service over any given route for no other reason or upon no other ground save and except the fact that it is for the purpose of increasing the frequency of the service on such route, and where no change in the means of transportation is intended, and in any case where the contractor is willing to perform the increased service at pro rata pay.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation of that bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it had better go over as the Senator who reported it is absent.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a peculiar bill. It prohibits the Postmaster-General from rescinding a contract when the service is expedited although he might get it for a great deal less than the increased rate of pay pro rata would be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection and takes its place on the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. PLATT. The bill does not seem to be very clearly expressed.

EMILY J. STANNARD.

The bill (S. 2657) granting an increase of pension to Emily J. Stannard was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Emily J. Stannard, widow of the late George J. Stannard, brevet major-general of volunteers, at the rate of $100 per month, instead of the pension she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WIDOW OF JOHN SCHAFER.

The bill (S. 2710) granting a pension to the widow of John Schafer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-rolls the name of the widow of John Schafer, late private in Company H, Ninth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SETH F. MYERS.

The bill (S. 2595) to increase the pension of Seth F. Myers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Seth F. Myers, late surgeon of the Seventy-third Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, from $30 to $50 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH B. SELLERS.

The bill (S. 2886) granting increase of pension to Joseph B. Sellers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Joseph B. Sellers, late of Company I, Twenty-seventh Indiana Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSON, MISS.

The bill (S. 785) to provide for an addition to the United States building at Jackson, Miss., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HOBOKEN, N. J.

The bill (H. R. 7265) for the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT VIRGINIA CITY, NEV.

The bill (S. 2788) for the erection of a public building at Virginia City, State of Nevada, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 11, after the words "sum of," to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or acquire by condemnation, a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices, at Virginia City, State of Nevada. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $25,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treaury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for the purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States.

Mr. BLAIR. Is the amount reduced from $150,000 to $25,000? I have no knowledge of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is reported as the amendment appears on its face.

Mr. BLAIR. It strikes me as remarkable that an appropriation of $150,000 should be so much reduced. It must have been designed to strike out the "fifty" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make it $125,000. I have no knowledge of the matter, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Perhaps the bill had better stand over informally until one of the Senators from Nevada appears. The Chair will order that dispositsn of the bill if there be no objection. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is now here. The amendment will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11, after the word "of," it is proposed to strike out the words "one hundred and fifty" and to insert the words "twenty-five."

Mr. STEWART. Let it go.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT RENO, NEV.

The bill (S. 2789) for the erection of a public building at Reno, State of Nevada, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, which was, in line 11, after the word "of," to strike out the words "one hundred" and insert "sixty;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or acquire by condemnation, a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices, at the city of Reno, State of Nevada. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building compete the sum of $60,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF COAST SURVEY.

The bill (S. 2487) to transfer the survey of the coasts of the United States to the Navy Department, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over to the Calendar under Rule IX.

STATE NATIONAL BANK OF LOUISIANA.

The bill (S. 205) for the relief of the State National Bank of Louisiana was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be placed on the Calendar under Rule IX.

CARL M. SCHWANTES.

The bill (S. 2716) granting a pension to Carl M. Schwantes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Carl M. Schwantes, late private Company K, Fifty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL MILLER.

The bill (S. 2707) granting a pension to Samuel Miller was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Samuel Miller, late a private in Company C, Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN K. EVANS.

The bill (S. 2717) granting a pension to John K. Evans was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John K. Evans, late lieutenant Company C, Second Eastern Shore Maryland Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN B. ROSS.

The bill (S. 2720) granting a pension to John B. Ross was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John B. Ross, late of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTRIX OF WILLIAM WARD, DECEASED.

The bill (H. R. 611) for the relief of Mrs. P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to P. L. Ward, executrix of William Ward, deceased, of Norfolk, Va., $2,075.13 in full satisfaction of all claim for beef and vegetables furnished by Ward to the United States Navy, and in full satisfaction for hay sold to the quartermaster of the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORMAN MATHEWS AND DAVID STOUT PARKER.

The bill (S. 2013) for the relief of Forman Mathews and David Stout Parker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Court of Claims shall retain jurisdiction of the claim of Forman Mathews and David Stout Parker, of Ocean County, New Jersey, for recovery of the value of their schooner, the Twilight, sunk by collision with a public vessel of the United States, and, upon full hearing of said cause, shall enter such judgment therein as right and justice may require.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABEL G. RANKIN.

The bill (S. 2866) granting a pension to Abel G. Rankin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Abel G. Rankin, late of Company F, Tenth Maine Volunteers, at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD PROPERTY IN HANDS OF COURTS.

The bill (S. 231) to provide that where any railroad property is taken into the possession of any United States court, and such railroad shall not have been completed, the net earnings of said railroad be applied to the completion of the same, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill, being adversely reported, goes over to the Calendar under Rule IX.

WILHEMINA HOSBAND.

The bill (S. 2260) restoring the name of Wilhemina Hosband to the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of Wilhemina Hosband, widow of the late Sandy Hosband, deceased, private in Company K, Eighty-second Regiment United States Colored Volunteers, of the city of New Orleans, La., and to pay her on pension certificate numbered 177761 the original amount allowed her from the date her name was dropped from the roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH B. BURTON.

The bill (H. R. 2151) for the relief of Joseph B. Burton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Joseph B. Burton of the pay and allowances of a private soldier from July 21, 1862, to June 26, 1865, he having served as a private in Company A, Seventy-second Indiana Regiment, deducting therefrom any sum of money heretofore paid him on account of his service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL INFORMATION.

The bill (H. R. 1844) to promote agriculture, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend sections 1712 and 1713, in chapter 2, under Title XVIII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to consuls and commercial agents, so as to read:

SEC. 1712. Consuls and commercial agents of the United States in foreign countries shall procure and transmit to the Department of State authentic commercial information respecting such countries, of such character and in such manner and form and at such times as the Department may from time to time prescribe; and they shall also procure and transmit to the Department of State, for the use of the Agricultural Department, monthly reports relative to the character, condition, and prospective yields of the agricultural and horticultural industries and other fruiteries of the country in which they are respectively stationed; and the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby required and directed to embody the information thus obtained, or so much thereof as he may deem material and important, in his monthly bulletin of crop reports.

SEC. 1713. Every consular officer shall furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury, as often as shall be required, the prices current of all articles of merchandise usually exported to the United States from the port or place in which he is situated; and he shall also furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury, at least once in twelve months, the prices current of all articles of merchandise, including those of the farm, the garden, and the orchard, that are imported through the port or place in which he is stationed; and he shall also report as to the character of agricultural implements in use, and whether they are imported to or manufactured in that country, as to the character and extent of agricultural and horticultural pursuits there. That part of the information thus obtained which pertains to agriculture shall be transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, as soon as the same shall have been received by him, to the Commissioner of Agriculture, who shall include the same, or so much thereof as he may deem material and important, in his annual reports, stating the said prices in dollars and cents, and rendering tables of foreign weights and measures into their American equivalents.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALIEN LABOR ON PUBLIC WORKS.

The bill (H. R. 8724) to prevent the employment of alien labor upon public buildings or other public works and in the various Departments of the Government, etc., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have the first section read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first section of the bill will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the first section of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all advertisements for the erection or construction or completion of public buildings or other public works, and in all contracts made under or in pursuance of such advertisements, there shall be inserted a condition that no person who is not a bona fide resident within the limits of the United States, and who is not a citizen, or who has not declared his intention to become a citizen thereof, in the manner provided by law, shall be employed in the erection, construction, or completion of any public building or other public work.

Mr. PLATT. There ought to be an amendment inserting the word "or" there.

Mr. COCKRELL. The word "or" is in.

Mr. PLATT. It has not been read so. I mean between "citizen" and "who has not declared his intention."

Mr. COCKRELL. The word "or" is there. I will show it to the Senator.

Mr. PLATT. I see now that it is in the printed bill, which I have examined, but it was twice read and not so read.

Mr. TELLER. I have not read the bill. I only judge from the reading at the desk, and as I gather from what I heard, it is to prevent aliens from taking contracts to erect public buildings or doing any work thereon.

Mr. PLATT. It does not prevent them taking contracts, but prevents them from working.

Mr. TELLER. I want to inquire if an alien may make a contract and be prohibited from doing the work? I suppose if he may make a contract, he may contract to have all the stone cut in Canada, all the iron made in Belgium, and the wood-work made in some other country, and every particle of the labor may be done in foreign lands, and all the profits that may arise from the construction of the building, except what the contractor himself gets, who may be a Canadian, or an Englishman, or a Belgian, or some other foreigner, goes abroad.

I heard to-day of a public building being erected in the State of Kansas, the iron beams for which are being purchased from a Belgian firm, transported across the ocean, sent out to Kansas and put into the building, because, I suppose, they could be got somewhat cheaper than if they had bought the beams from some American manufacturer.

The House of Representatives is wrestling with the question whether American labor is entitled to protection or not. This bill, I suppose, is intended to be a sort of tub thrown to the whale. I presume it is intended to say to the laborers, "See what we have done for the American laborer. We do not intend to let you come in contact with a man who is not a citizen of the United States; we are looking out for your interests, and when a public building is to be built you shall have the privilege of working on it."

That will not be true if this bill passes in this form. There will be, of course, some labor about a public building in putting together the parts and pieces that may be done by American laborers, but it will be quite possible in any of the great seacoast cities, or anywhere in the United States, to put up buildings upon which there has been no American labor, save and except what there may be in handling the pieces as they come from the wharf or in putting them together.

I do not know but that there may be some propriety in this bill; but it does not seem to me that there is very much. It does not seem to me that a House, a majority of which or the political party that controls it insists that it is not a wise policy to look after the interests of the American laborer, as we should do by giving a preference to American manufactured goods and giving them an opportunity to make a fair profit, cares very much for American labor. It seems to me that they are not going to answer the public interest on this subject by passing a bill of this kind.

While I do not know that I object to the bill, I simply want to put in my suggestion that this kind of legislation will not answer. The American laborers will not be fooled by it. They can not be deceived by the House saying, "We sent over to the Senate a bill of this kind." I think it would have been a good thing for the Senate to have legislated on this subject, if they desired to protect American laborers; it they had said when a public building is to be erected in the United States it shall be constructed out of material manufactured by American laborers. If there was opportunity now, I should like to offer that amendment, and I ask that the bill be passed over until I can prepare such an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over on the suggestion of the Senator.

Mr. BLAIR. While the Senator is preparing his amendment I wish to say, having charge of the bill, that this is a measure which was pending in the last Congress. It originated in the Senate the Congress before, as I recollect. It has been the habit of the Senate to pass this bill and send it to the House, and the House has heretofore ignored it entirely.

I have found, as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, that the true way to pass a bill that does anything whatever for the laboring people of this country is to let the House send it here, and then we can pass it. A Senate bill goes there to death and destruction, just like a pension bill. So for some time I have quietly taken what has come from the House and done my best to get it through the Senate, and then, with the concurrence of the President, it could become a law.

This bill in substance went through the Senate at the last session of Congress, and went to the House. It failed to become a law because it was received by the Executive too late for consideration, as was said. It went to the Executive, I think, on the 1st of March, and here it is again.

There is some little need of this bill. All along the line of Canada, wherever it is convenient for aliens or foreigners to cross the line, get employment, and go back home at nights, living in Canada, working here for American wages and going back there and living on the Canadian scale of expenditure, they do so, and thus take the money of the United States. That is done to a considerable extent. Of course, so far as the interior of the country is concerned, it is much better that there the money derived by taxes from the people of the United States should be paid out in the form of wages to citizens, or to those who have declared their intention to become citizens. I believe in going that far, and the bill does go that far; and that is about all there is in it; but that is a good deal, it seems to me. I have thought we had better take the bill and pass it and get what we can. Perhaps at the next Congress we can get more.

I wish to say, in regard to the matter of compelling the use of American materials in the construction of our public buildings and public works, that it does not seem to me at least to be so important in reality as it at first might appear to be, for all foreign material that gets in here comes under the protection of the tariff. There is nothing so far as I now recall or know that is used in the construction of public buildings or any form of public work which is not subject to tariff duties. All stone work certainly is. Lumber is subject to duty, being manufactured generally. If it comes here as a mere log it is raw material, which requires labor before it can be used in a public building or any other public work.

So we have the protection of the tariff upon the materials coming from foreign countries and used in and about the work of the public precisely the same as though they were employed and applied to some private use, and whether on the whole it be not better for the American laborer that is an American or one who has declared his intention to become a citizen, that the foreign materials employed in the public works should simply be protected like other material employed in private uses, is a question which, it seems to me, may be open to discussion, and perhaps there is no real point in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado. I should say myself that it would be better policy to let this bill pass and let it go to the President and get it through, if we can, and then by a separate bill attempt to accomplish the end the Senator has in view.

The amendment, of course, will raise other questions and send the bill back to the House of Representatives, and under the circumstances it may prevent any legislation. I should dislike very much to take the responsibility, on the idea of a tub-throwing business, to defeat the bill; but I am not aware that we are engaged in any such business.

Mr. TELLER. I offer the following amendment, to come in immediately after the enacting clause:

That all public buildings or public works, for which an appropriation shall have been made by Congress, shall be constructed wholly of material made and prepared within the limits of the United States. No bid shall be received or accepted for the construction of any such public building or public work from any person who is not a resident and citizen of the United States, or who has not declared his intention to become such.

Mr. CALL. I hope that amendment will not prevail. There is such a thing as carrying any proposition to an extreme point, and while I suppose every one will concur in the policy of the Government acting for the benefit of our own people and to encourage them in every pursuit that it is practicable for them to follow, we may carry that idea to an unjustifiable extent. We may go so far as to declare by law that we shall use no discovery, no idea, no invention but such as is produced on our own soil and amongst our people, and that is the character of this proposition. Every people has sought to make their public buildings the expression and monument of the highest art.

We regard them as an evidence of civilization, refinement, power, and progress, and especially of the architectural progress of the people of this generation. Now, to say that nothing that may come from abroad, however important it may be as a matter of art, shall be in a public building of this country upon the pretext that it is going to benefit American labor, when it will not benefit them, when it will not increase the compensation of our laborers, but, on the very contrary, will diminish their employment and their wages, for as you diversify the productions of art by the importation of foreign material you may give great additional employment and impetus to American labor and greater compensation. It does not follow that by excluding the ideas and the productions of foreign countries universally and without discrimination or difference we are going to add to the employment of the laborers of our own country.

But however that may be, upon a public building we should use every method of decoration, everything that can increase its architectural excellence, and while it may be very proper that the policy of encouraging our own labor should be pursued, certainly it is not right to say that we shall exclude all the material and all the productions of a foreign country, because we may thereby prevent the excellence and beauty of the structure either in its exterior or interior decoration.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, this is not a new idea at all. It has been adopted with regard to the building of our naval vessels after somewhat deliberate discussion here in the Senate, with a single modifying clause, which I think there is no need of, in the matter of the construction of public buildings; and it will be remembered that in that discussion the modifying clause was put in because it was supposed there might be some machinery needed which could not at that time be produced in the United States. But so far as I am aware the United States is capable of producing every species of material and property that is required for the erection of our public buildings. In the Forty-ninth Congress, in the act for the increase of the Navy, on page 593 of volume 24 of the Statutes, Congress enacted this:

That the material used in all naval structures provided for in this act, and the armament for the same shall be, so far as practicable, of American production and furnished and manufactured in the United States.

It is the same idea which is now proposed to be carried into the matter of erecting public buildings.

Mr. CALL. I say to the Senator from Connecticut that there is an edifice in my own State, built by a broad-minded and liberal man, not as a matter of private or personal emolument, but that it may be transmitted to the future as a specimen of the architectural skill and genius of this age in which he has been eminently successful. The ancient structures of Greece and Rome exceed it but little if at all in beauty. The structure to which I refer, the Ponce de Leon Hotel in St. Augustine, Fla., was built by an eminent Northern gentleman of great wealth and enterprise and of great intelligence.

That building contains largely, I am informed, the productions of foreign artists, and gave employment, to a great amount, to American labor. Probably more than a million dollars have been expended in compensation to American laborers in that building.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator tell us what foreign production has gone into it?

Mr. CALL. I was just going to state that there are in that building specimens of architectural skill in various kinds of material, one of them a mantel made of Mexican onyx, a most costly and beautiful species of stone, obtained at immense cost, and it adds greatly to the beauty and perfection of the building. I remember that especially.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say to the Senator that I referred to the tariff.

Mr. CALL. Of course that is a consideration which largely enters into the matter and prevents the importation of foreign material except where the artist wishes to produce some special architectural effect in the structure which requires a foreign material. Art is free, and, like thought, traverses the universe to find new and original forms of expression and material, and can not be bound to one country nor made subordinate to the personal wants and necessities of labor. It gives employment and compensation to labor, but can not be made subservient or inferior to it. To make it so would be to kill it.

Mr. TELLER. We are not likely to indulge in those fancies in constructing public buildings. There is not anything but what we can manufacture on the American soil that needs to go into a public building, and I think it would be quite as well to confine the public buildings to the use of the material we can furnish at home. If there is any necessity for this bill it should go to its logical result, as we did with the shipping. I have no objection if any Senator desires the words "as far as practicable" to be inserted, but it is certainly not necessary with reference to constructing public buildings to go abroad for anything. They are built of stone, brick, and iron, and wood, and plenty can be had in this country, and of workmanship equal to that of any in the world. It is not necessary to go abroad for anything of that kind.

Mr. MANDERSON. As this bill is one of very great importance, and the amendment that is proposed is one that involves perhaps some issues, and deliberation is probably necessary over both amendment and bill, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 5, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 4, 1888.

The House was called to order at 11 o'clock a. m., by Mr. MCMILLIN, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 4, 1888.

SIR: Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is hereby designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House to-day.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

PRINTING OF CERTAIN TESTIMONY.

On motion of Mr. FORD, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to the Committee on Military Affairs to have printed the testimony taken in the Fort Brown investigation.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PENINGTON, until the 6th instant, on account of sickness.

To Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, etc.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER, LA.

Mr. BLANCHARD introduced a bill (H. R. 10319) to authorize the Natchitoches Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Red River, in Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

H. B. KEFFER.

Mr. WILKINS submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That H. B. Keffer be paid from the date of his appointment and during the remainder of the Fiftieth Congress the difference between his present compensation as folder at the rate of $720 per year and that of messenger at the rate of $1,200, and that the said difference in compensation be paid out of the contingent fund.

COFFEE.

Mr. BOUND submitted the following resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Whereas it is well known that nearly all the coffee used in the United States is imported from Brazil, and that in order to cheapen the cost of this product to our people coffee was placed upon the free-list under our existing tariff; and

Whereas it is equally well known that the price of coffee to the consumers in this country has been very little reduced, if at all, by placing coffee on the free-list, for the reason that an export duty on coffee was imposed by Brazil as soon as coffee was admitted into this country free of duty, nearly equal, if not altogether, to the duty imposed upon Brazilian coffee by our tariff laws; and

Whereas it is in like manner well known that an import duty of 75 cents per barrel is imposed upon all flour exported from the United States to Brazil by the latter Government, in consequence of which the farmers and millers of this country are greatly injured; and

Whereas it is currently reported that English capitalists have been, and are now, engaged in the erection of extensive mills at Rio Janeiro for the manufacture of flour by and with, as it is believed, the aid and encouragement of the Brazilian Government; and

Whereas it is also well known that a very small duty, if any, as compared with that upon flour, is imposed upon wheat and other grain imported into Brazil by said Government; and

Whereas it is well known that the soil and climate of Brazil are not adapted to the cultivation of wheat—a product in which the farmers of this country are so largely interested—and that when the extensive flouring mills heretofore alluded to are completed they will be mainly supplied with wheat and other cereals from the Argentine Confederation, a country whose soil and climate are well adapted to wheat-raising, to be manufactured into flour to the great disadvantage of American millers and American farmers, and to the serious detriment of our trade and commerce with Brazil: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to inquire into these things, and if found to be true to report the same to the House in order that the injustice complained of may be speedily remedied.

ADULTERATION OF FOOD, ETC.

Mr. LEE introduced a bill (H. R. 10320) to prevent the sale, manufacture, or transportation of adulterated articles of food, drink, or drugs, manufactured or made in one State and intended to be sold in another or intended for export or sale in the District of Columbia or any Territory or reservation of the United States, and to prevent the exportation or importation of adulterated food, drink, or drugs, and for creating a pure-food division; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This completes the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions. In the absence of objection the Chair will recognize gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called.

PAGE FOR ENROLLING-ROOM.

Mr. BURNES (by Mr. DOCKERY) submitted a resolution authorizing the Clerk of the House to appoint a page for the enrolling-room; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

COMMERCE.

Mr. BLANCHARD introduced a bill (H. R. 10321) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IMMIGRATION OF FOREIGNERS.

Mr. OATES introduced a bill (H. R. 10322) to restrict the immigration of foreigners into the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

Mr. DINGLEY submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries:

Whereas the treaty of Washington, between the United States and Great Britain, provides that "citizens of the United States shall have the use of the Welland, St. Lawrence, and other canals in the Dominion of Canada on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the Dominion," in return for which citizens of the Dominion of Canada were given the use of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal at the foot of Lake Superior on the same terms of equality: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury inform the House (if compatible with the public interest) whether any order has been issued by the authorities of the Dominion of Canada and is now in force, by which vessels from ports of the United States laden with wheat or other merchandise for export, or otherwise, are required to pay a less toll in passing through the Welland Canal when they pursue their voyage by the way of the St. Lawrence and Montreal than when they pursue their voyage by way of Lake Ontario and American ports; and if so, what steps have been taken to secure the removal of such discrimination against American ports in violation of the spirit of the treaty of Washington; and whether any further legislation is required to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to impose tolls upon vessels passing through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal and bound for Canadian ports, in case the Dominion authorities should continue to discriminate against vessels passing through the Welland Canal and bound to ports of the United States.

AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION.

Mr. PHELAN introduced a bill (H. R. 10323) to incorporate the American Historical Association; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

INAUGURATION DAY.

Mr. LEE. I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration at this time the bill S. 2551. It is in identically the same language with the bill which passed the House some days ago. It proposes to make inauguration day a legal holiday in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2251) to amend section 993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for the District of Columbia so as to make inauguration day a holiday within said District.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, be, and the same hereby is, amended, by adding to the days therein declared to be holidays within the said District that day upon which the President of the United States is inaugurated, otherwise called inauguration day, and that such day shall be a holiday for all the purposes mentioned in said section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia to bring this bill before the House for present consideration?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JENNIE D. RICE.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3722) for the relief of Jennie D. Rice.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Jennie D. Rice, sole surviving daughter of Richard T. Lurvey, late a private in Company K, Thirteenth Regiment of Maine Volunteer Infantry, the amount of pension which had accrued to the said Richard T. Lurvey, deceased, at the time of his death, December 30, 1882, by virtue of certificate numbered 34553, restoration and reissue, dated July 5, 1887, subject to deduction for any amount that may have been paid for reimbursement of the expenses of the last sickness and burial of the deceased, the said Jennie M. Rice having had the care and contributed to the support of her father, the said Richard T. Lurvey, who was totally blind, from July 1, 1877, to the time of his death, December 30, 1882.

Mr. OATES. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3722) for the relief of Jennie D. Rice, having considered the same, report:

The claimant is the surviving daughter of Richard T. Lurvey, late a private in Company K, Thirteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, deceased, and she claims arrears of pension due her father at the time of his death, by reason of having devoted her time and means to his care and support for more than five years prior to his death, during which time said soldier was totally blind, in consequence of a sun-stroke received in the service.

From the evidence presented to the committee it appears that Lurvey was pensioned in 1864 for disability contracted in the service, and that subsequently he was dropped from the pension-rolls—improperly, as it was afterwards decided by the Pension Office. Lurvey applied for restoration and increase of pension, and this application was pending when he died, December 30, 1882, from a fall occasioned by a misstep on account of the fact that he was then and had been totally blind from the sun-stroke received in the service since July 1, 1877.

During these five years and a half the daughter had the entire charge of her father, gave her whole time to his care, and spent what little means she had, leaving her in penury.

After the decease of her father, measures were taken to satisfy the Pension Office that a great wrong had been done the soldier in dropping him from the rolls and rejecting his application for increase, and on investigation that department recognized this by issuing to said Lurvey on the 5th day of July, 1887, four years and a half after his death, certificate numbered 34553, restoration and reissue, granting a pension at the rate of $2.66⅔ per month from April 10, 1862, and $10.66⅔ per month from September 16, 1881, to the time of death, for disease of eyes as the result of sun-stroke and chronic bronchitis, former payments during any portion of the time before he was dropped from the rolls to be deducted. Justice was done to the poor soldier at last, but not until he had died.

There being no widow, or child under sixteen years of age, living to receive the arrears of pension allowed the soldier, the daughter, who had cared for him during five long years and spent her little all, applied for reimbursement for her expenses and services in supporting the soldier during these years, supposing that she would be entitled to the few hundred dollars of pension arrears due her father, but was informed by the proper officers that the law allows the person who cared for a deceased soldier to whom arrears of pension were due only the expenses of the last sickness and burial out of such arrears; and it must be held that, inasmuch as the soldier died from a fall, the expenses of taking care of him during his five years of total blindness up to the time of his fall could not be allowed, notwithstanding the fall was the result of his blindness. An offer was made to pay the expenses of the soldier's burial, but it is stated that kind neighbors came forward and contributed the burial expenses, so that this has not been drawn.

While the decision of the proper officers is technically correct under the law, yet it seems so clear to your committee that justice and patriotism demand that Congress, as an ultimate tribunal not bound by merely technical rules, should make the only restitution possible in this case by paying to the daughter who so heroically and self-sacrificingly gave all of her little means and five years of her life to the care of the blind soldier who lost his eye-sight from injuries received in the service of his country, the few hundred dollars of arrears of pensions which it is confessed ought to have been paid while the soldier was living.

Your committee therefore report back the bill with a favorable recommendation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the consideration of this bill, and that it be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to withhold that motion for a moment to give me a chance to ask unanimous consent to take up a bill.

Mr. MILLS. I will yield to the gentleman.

DEPOSITS IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 1241, to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits in the harbor and adjacent waters of New York. A similar bill has been reported from the Committee on Commerce of this House, and I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill and be put upon its passage.

The Senate bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the placing, discharging, or depositing, by any process or in any manner, of refuse, dirt, ashes, cinders, mud, sand, dredgings, sludge, acid, or any other matter of any kind, other than that flowing from streets, sewers, and passing therefrom in a liquid state, in the tidal waters of the harbor, of New York, or its adjacent or tributary waters within the limits which shall be prescribed by the supervisor of the harbor, is hereby strictly forbidden, and every such act is made a misdemeanor, and every person engaged in or who shall aid, abet, authorize, or instigate a violation of this section, shall, upon conviction, be punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, such fine to be not less than $250 nor more than $2,500, and the imprisonment to be not less than thirty days nor more than one year, either or both united, as the judge before whom conviction is obtained shall decide.

SEC. 2. That any and every master and engineer, or person or persons acting in such capacity, respectively, on board of any boat or vessel, who shall knowingly engage in towing any scow, boat, or vessel loaded with any such prohibited matter to any point or place of deposit, or discharge in the waters of the harbor of New York, or to any point or place elsewhere than within the limits defined and permitted by the supervisor of the harbor hereinafter mentioned, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act, and shall, upon conviction, be punishable as hereinbefore provided for offenses in violation of section 1 of this act, and shall also have his license revoked or suspended for a term to be fixed by the judge before whom tried and convicted.

SEC. 3. That in all cases of receiving on board of any scows or boats such forbidden matter or substance as herein provided, it shall be the duty of the owner or master, or person acting in such capacity, on board of such scows or boats, before proceeding to take or tow the same to the place of deposit, to apply for and obtain from the supervisor of the harbor appointed hereunder a permit defining the precise limits within which the discharge of such scows or boats may be made; and any deviation from such dumping or discharging place specified in such permit shall be a misdemeanor within the meaning of this act; and the master and engineer, or person or persons acting in such capacity, on board of any tow-boat towing such scows or boats, shall be equally guilty of such offense with the master or person acting in the capacity of master of the scow, and be liable to equal punishment.

SEC. 4. That all mud, dirt, sand, dredgings, and material of every kind and description whatever taken, dredged, or excavated from any slip, basin, or shoal in the harbor of New York, or the waters adjacent or tributary thereto, and placed on any boat, scow, or vessel for the purpose of being taken or towed upon the waters of the harbor of New York to a place of deposit, shall be deposited and discharged at such place or within such limits as shall be defined and specified by the supervisor of the harbor, as in the third section of this act prescribed, and not otherwise. Every person, firm, or corporation being the owner of any slip, basin, or shoal, from which such mud, dirt, sand, dredgings, and material shall be taken, dredged, or excavated, and every person, firm, or corporation in any manner engaged in the work of dredging or excavating any such slip, basin, or shoal, or of removing such mud, dirt, sand, or dredgings therefrom, shall severally be responsible for the deposit and discharge of all such mud, dirt, sand, or dredgings at such place or within such limits so defined and prescribed by said supervisor of the harbor; and for every violation of the provisions of this section the person offending shall be guilty of an offense against this act, and shall be punished by a fine equal to the sum of $5 for every cubic yard of mud, dirt, sand, dredgings, or material not deposited or discharged as required by this section.

SEC. 5. That a suitable office for the meetings of the board shall be provided in some building of the General Government in New York City or its vicinity.

SEC. 6. That a line officer of the Navy shall be designated by the President of the United States as supervisor of the harbor, to act under the direction of the Secretary of War in enforcing the provisions of this act, and in detecting offenders against the same. This officer shall receive the sea-pay of his grade, and shall have the personal charge and supervision under the Secretary of War, and shall direct the patrol boats and other means to detect and bring to punishment offenders against the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. That the sum of $30,000 is hereby appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay that sum from moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order, for the purpose of trying to learn something about this bill. I do not want to object at this time, but I would like to know what committee reported this bill.

Mr. COX. A bill for this purpose has been reported by my colleague [Mr. BRYCE] from the Committee on Commerce. Several times in several Congresses this measure substantially has been reported. The Senate bill which I ask to have substituted is almost identical with the House bill reported by my colleague. A bill almost similar with this—introduced by myself—passed this House in the Forty-seventh Congress. It was upon a river and harbor bill, and was eliminated from it in the Senate as being rather incongruous upon that bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Has it passed the Senate?

Mr. COX. It has.

Mr. ROGERS. What committee reported it there?

Mr. COX. The Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ROGERS. Let me make another inquiry: What court has jurisdiction of the offenses described in the bill?

Mr. SPINOLA. Any district court of the United States.

Mr. COX. I will state for the information of the House that a Federal bill, like this, is rendered necessary, because these waters come within the jurisdiction of two States—New Jersey and New York; and unless we have Federal jurisdiction over them we can never protect the harbor from the continual dumping that is shoaling it to its ruin. The Committees on Commerce of the House and of the Senate have approved and reported this bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In what respect does the Senate bill, which the gentleman proposes to substitute, differ from the House bill?

Mr. COX. It does not differ except in the situation—the Senate has passed the bill and we have not.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Does it not differ also in respect to the commission? The original bill proposed a commission. The Senate bill puts the matter under the control of the supervisor of the harbor.

Mr. COX. The House bill introduced by myself struck out the commission, and left the matter under the control of the supervisor of the harbor. He is to be under the control of the War Department, because the engineers have control of harbor improvements, and harmony of action is a desideratum.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is undoubtedly very laudable, and I am in favor of it so far as I understand the measure; but I think this is a most important matter and that we ought to hear the Senate bill read. I make that suggestion because of the great confusion that was in the Hall while the bill was being read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was the Senate bill that was read.

Mr. ROGERS. Then I have got the wrong bill. I still reserve the point of order until I can hear further from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED. What is the meaning of section 5?

Mr. SPINOLA. Section 5 is wrong in the Senate bill.

Mr. REED. Section 5 can not mean anything.

Mr. COX. I desire to have the Senate bill pass.

Mr. REED. But the Senate bill has a section, section 5, providing for the meetings of a board, and there is no board provided for in the bill.

Mr. COX. That has been stricken out in the Senate. It has no place in the bill before us. It is a mistake.

Mr. BLAND called for the regular order, but subsequently withdrew the call.

Mr. SPINOLA. I ask that section 5 of the Senate bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That a suitable office for the meetings of the board shall be provided in some building of the General Government in New York City or its vicinity.

Mr. COX. That has been stricken out.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the amendment relating to that section be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that there is no amendment relating to that section.

Mr. COX. What we want is the Senate bill in its entirety.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does section 5 provide for a commission?

Mr. COX. It does not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then what is the meaning of the language which has been read?

Several MEMBERS. It ought to be struck out.

Mr. COX. I desire to move to strike out section 5 if it is in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not before the House.

Mr. COX. I am aware of that. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill and this amendment be considered as pending.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, what I am most interested in with reference to this bill is a point which has recently come before the Judiciary Committee of the House and has had a most careful consideration by it. It is the question whether or not Congress has constitutional power to confer upon the courts of the United States criminal jurisdiction over the inland waters of the country. If we have complete jurisdiction it must extend, I take it, to every navigable river of the United States upon which there is any interstate commerce. It certainly goes this far, if it does not extend to all the navigable waters. Now, I regard this as an exceedingly doubtful power. Our Government has now been in existence a hundred years, and we have never until the present Congress undertaken to exercise criminal jurisdiction over the Great Lakes.

Mr. COX. This bill has reference to maritime cases—to Federal waters.

Mr. ROGERS. I am referring to criminal jurisdiction. The maritime jurisdiction of the United States extends over the Great Lakes, of course.

Several MEMBERS. No doubt of that.

Mr. COX. This bill only proposes to extend jurisdiction over tidewater.

Mr. ROGERS. But you say "the harbor of New York or its adjacent or tributary waters or those of Long Island Sound."

Mr. COX. Those are tide-waters. The tide runs nearly a hundred miles up the Hudson, certainly as far as Poughkeepsie.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not profess to be very familiar with the geography of that part of the country, and upon the assurance of the gentleman from New York I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. COX. I move to amend by striking out section 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Several amendments to this bill have been reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were read, as follows:

After the word "waters," in line 8, section 1, insert "or in those of Long Island Sound."

At the end of section 1, add "one-half of said fine to be paid to the person or persons giving information which shall lead to conviction of this misdemeanor."

After the words "harbor of New York," in line 6, section 2, insert "or in its adjacent or tributary waters or in those of Long Island Sound."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the question on these amendments will be taken in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SPINOLA. I move to amend the fourth section by adding the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any boat or vessel used or employed in violating any provision of this act shall be liable to the pecuniary penalties imposed thereby, and may be proceeded against summarily by way of libel in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to that amendment. It strengthens the bill. It gives it a vigorous penalty which will assist its enforcement.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And makes it more clear.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 1, section 7, the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. COX. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. My observation has been that the prescribing of minimum terms of imprisonment very often prevents conviction. I therefore move to amend section 1 by striking out, in line 17, the words "less than thirty days nor;" so that the clause will read "and the imprisonment not to be more than one year," etc.

Mr. ROGERS and others. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, House bill No. 8947, now on the Calendar, and similar in substance to the Senate bill just passed, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

POST-OFFICE, ETC., FOR WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. HEMPHILL, by unanimous consent, introduced (by request) a bill (H. R. 10324) authorizing the purchase of square 489 in the city of Washington, for the purpose of erecting thereon a building for the accommodation of a city post-office and offices of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. HALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10325) amending the interstate-commerce act, approved February 4, 1887; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LAND OFFICE AT FOLSOM, N. MEX.

Mr. CONGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10326) to establish a land office at Folsom, in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar and have passed at this time the bill (H. R. 7776) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Monona, in the State of Iowa, and in the county of Burt, State of Nebraska, and to make the same a post-route.

The bill was read.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The following amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce were read and agreed to:

Insert after the word "river," in line 25 of section 2, the words "and the bridge itself at right angles thereto."

At the end of section 5 add "and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph companies."

The following amendment, reported by the Committee on Commerce, was also read:

Add to the bill the following as a new section:

"SEC. 8. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof."

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. I move to amend the amendment just read by striking out the word "one" and inserting "two," and by striking out "three" and inserting "four."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will explain the effect of this amendment.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. It simply extends the time in which to commence the bridge from one year to two years, and the time in which to complete it from three years to four years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House will, on the days mentioned below, take a recess at 5 o'clock p. m. until 8 o'clock p. m., and that the evening sessions shall be devoted exclusively to bills and measures reported from the committee indicated in the order to be designated by such committees, namely:

On Saturday evening, June 9, to the Committee on Public Lands.
On Monday evening, June 11, to the Committee on Military Affairs.
On Tuesday evening, June 12, to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.
On Wednesday evening, June 13, to the Committee on the Territories.
On Thursday and Saturday evenings, June 14 and 16, to the Committee on Commerce.
On Tuesday evening, July 10, to the Committee on the Territories.

And that, if at the adjournment of the House on either of the evenings indicated any bill called up should remain undisposed of, such bill shall be considered in the House on the succeeding legislative day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, and, after one hour's debate thereon—except on Wednesday, June 13, when three hours' debate shall be allowed—to be equally divided between those in favor of and those opposed to the bill. The House shall proceed to vote upon all pending amendments and on the final passage of the bill without any intervening motion or business.

Mr. CANNON. Before demanding a second, I ask the gentleman from Texas to withhold the resolution a moment, in order to permit an amendment giving two days to the Committee on Invalid Pensions for the consideration of general pension bills.

Mr. MILLS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CANNON. I demand a second.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker——

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on ordering a second on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BURROWS. But I want to ask a question——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let a second be considered as ordered by unanimous consent.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to know if this resolution proposes to fix any days for the consideration of general pension legislation. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HATCH. It is not the fault of Representatives present that the gentleman was not in his seat. If he had been he would have heard the resolution read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution having been read once it can only be read a second time by unanimous consent, and the demand for the regular order cuts that off.

Mr. BURROWS. I want to ascertain, if possible, if the resolution fixes any day for general pension legislation. [Continued calls of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BUCHANAN. The resolution does not provide any time for pension legislation, and they seem determined that we shall not make that fact known.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Texas, Mr. MILLS, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 95, noes 2.

Mr. CANNON. No quorum.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the resolution.

JULIET G. HOWE.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I desire to submit a privileged report from a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 300) granting a pension to Mrs. Juliet G. Howe, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment to the said bill.

J. LOGAN CHIPMAN,
CARLOS FRENCH,
E. N. MORRILL,
Managers on the part of the House.
A. S. PADDOCK,
C. K. DAVIS,
DAVID TURPIE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has the statement accompanying the report been filed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only report submitted by the conference committee has been read.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the report was adopted.

Mr. CHIPMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. FRANCES ANNE PYNE RICKETTS.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I desire to submit a further conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate No. 393 for the relief of Mrs. Frances Anne Pyne Ricketts, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment to said bill.

J. LOGAN CHIPMAN,
JOHN LYNCH,
JOHN G. SAWYER,
Managers on the part of the House.
C. K. DAVIS,
A. S. PADDOCK,
RUFUS BLODGETT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I demand the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. ROGERS. I think there should be in all of these cases a written statement accompanying the report, as required by the rule. I make no point on it in this case, but hope the statement will be made to go into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the rules require such a statement to be submitted.

The report of the conference committee was adopted.

Mr. CHIPMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill No. 9051; and pending that I move that all debate on the paragraph under consideration and amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes, on which I demand the previous question.

Mr. McKINLEY. I desire to make an inquiry before proceeding with the consideration of this question. When the resolution offered by the gentleman from Texas a few moments ago——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That has been withdrawn. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. McKINLEY. I wish to submit a question in reference to that matter before proceeding——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is not in order pending this motion, on which the gentleman has demanded the previous question. That cuts off all debate, and the resolution mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio is not before the House.

Mr. McKINLEY. I do not rise to debate the question, Mr. Speaker. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the demand for the previous question.

Mr. McKINLEY. I rise to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McKINLEY. And it is in the interest of the orderly business of this body. If, when the resolution offered by the gentleman from Texas is disposed of——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That has been disposed of. [Loud calls of "Regular order!"]

Mr. McKINLEY. I desire to inquire of the Speaker if, when that is disposed of, he will recognize some gentleman to offer a resolution fixing a day for the consideration of general pension legislation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair will decide questions of recognitions as they arise.

Mr. McKINLEY. I wish to get a statement from the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think the gentleman presents a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McKINLEY. The Chair, then, declines to say that he will recognize any gentleman for the purpose of moving to fix a day for the legislation I have suggested?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decline to answer what is not a parliamentary inquiry when propounded as a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McKINLEY. I move to amend the motion by making it forty minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. REED. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. If this proposition of the gentleman from Texas to go into Committee of the Whole is voted down, will it then be in order for the Chair to recognize some gentleman for a motion to suspend the rules and fix days for the consideration of pension legislation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The recognitions of this day are within the discretion of the Chair, the subjects upon which the recognition will be given and the time of the recognition, and the Chair states that on this day it is in order under the rules to move to go into Committee of the Whole, which motion is now pending.

Mr. REED. Will it be in order for the Chair, if the Chair is so disposed, to recognize a motion to suspend the rules and fix a day for pension legislation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already answered the gentleman.

Mr. REED. Will the Chair answer that parliamentary inquiry squarely and fairly?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has answered the gentleman's inquiry. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REED. Will the Chair answer a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question being put, the Speaker pro tempore stated that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for a division.

Mr. REED. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is dividing.

Mr. REED. The House is dividing because the Chair is overriding parliamentary law.

Mr. DUNN. But the gentleman from Maine can not override the Speaker.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 97, noes none.

Mr. MCKINLEY. No quorum.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 115, nay 1, not voting 208; as follows:

YEAS—115.

Abbott,	Dibble,	Lawler,	Russell, Mass.
Anderson, Miss.	Dockery,	Lee,	Sayers,
Bankhead,	Dunn,	Lynch,	Seney,
Barry,	Enloe,	Macdonald,	Shaw,
Biggs,	Fisher,	Maish,	Smith,
Blanchard,	Foran,	Martin,	Sowden,
Bland,	Ford,	McCreary,	Spinola,
Bliss,	Forney,	McMillin,	Springer,
Blount,	French,	McRae,	Stahlnecker,
Breckinridge, Ark.	Grimes,	McShane,	Stewart, Tex.
Breckinridge, Ky.	Hall,	Mills,	Stewart, Ga.
Burnett,	Hare,	Montgomery,	Stockdale,
Bynum,	Hatch,	Moore,	Stone, Ky.
Carlton,	Heard,	Morgan,	Stone, Mo.
Caruth,	Hemphill,	Morse,	Tarsney,
Catchings,	Henderson, N. C.	Neal,	Taulbee,
Chipman,	Herbert,	Newton,	Thompson, Cal.
Clardy,	Holman,	Oates,	Tillman,
Clements,	Hooker,	Outhwaite,	Tracey,
Cobb,	Hopkins, Va.	Peel,	Townshend,
Cothran,	Howard,	Perry,	Turner, Ga.
Cowles,	Hutton,	Phelan,	Walker,
Cox,	Jones,	Randall,	Weaver,
Crain,	Kilgore,	Rayner,	Wheeler,
Crisp,	Laffoon,	Rice,	Wilkins,
Culberson,	Lagan,	Richardson,	Wilkinson,
Dargan,	Landes,	Robertson,	Wilson, Minn.
Davidson, Ala.	Lane,	Rogers,	Wilson, W. Va.
Davidson, Fla.	Lanham,	Rowland,

NAY—1.

Goff.

NOT VOTING—208.

Adams,	Brumm,	Davenport,	Guenther,
Allen, Mass.	Bryce,	Davis,	Harmer,
Allen, Mich.	Buchanan,	De Lano,	Haugen,
Allen, Miss.	Buckalew,	Dingley,	Hayden,
Anderson, Iowa	Bunnell,	Dorsey,	Hayes,
Anderson, Ill.	Burnes,	Dougherty,	Henderson, Iowa
Anderson, Kans.	Burrows,	Dunham,	Henderson, Ill.
Arnold,	Butler,	Elliott,	Hermann,
Atkinson,	Butterworth,	Ermentrout,	Hiestand,
Bacon,	Campbell, F., N. Y.	Farquhar,	Hires,
Baker, N. Y.	Campbell, Ohio	Felton,	Hitt,
Baker, Ill.	Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Finley,	Hogg,
Barnes,	Candler,	Fitch,	Holmes,
Bayne,	Cannon,	Flood,	Hopkins, Ill.
Belden,	Caswell,	Fuller,	Hopkins, N. Y.
Belmont,	Cheadle,	Funston,	Houk,
Bingham,	Clark,	Gaines,	Hovey,
Boothman,	Cockran,	Gallinger,	Hudd,
Bound,	Cogswell,	Gay,	Hunter,
Boutelle,	Collins,	Gear,	Jackson,
Bowden,	Compton,	Gest,	Johnston, Ind.
Bowen,	Conger,	Gibson,	Johnston, N. C.
Brewer,	Cooper,	Glass,	Kean,
Brower,	Crouse,	Glover,	Kelley,
Browne, T. H. B., Va.	Cummings,	Granger,	Kennedy,
Browne, Ind.	Cutcheon,	Greenman,	Kerr,
Brown, Ohio	Dalzell,	Grosvenor,	Ketcham,
Brown, J. R., Va.	Darlington,	Grout,	La Follette,
Laidlaw,	Morrill,	Reed,	Thomas, Ill.
Laird,	Morrow,	Rockwell,	Thomas, Wis.
Latham,	Nelson,	Romeis,	Thompson, Ohio
Lehlbach,	Nichols,	Rowell,	Turner, Kans.
Lind,	Norwood,	Russell, Conn.	Vance,
Lodge,	Nutting,	Rusk,	Vandever,
Long,	O'Donnell,	Ryan,	Wade,
Lyman,	O'Ferrall,	Sawyer,	Warner,
Maffett,	O'Neall, Ind.	Scott,	Washington,
Mahoney,	O'Neill, Pa.	Scull,	Weber,
Mansur,	O'Neill, Mo.	Seymour,	West,
Mason,	Osborne,	Sherman,	White, Ind.
Matson,	Owen,	Shively,	White, N. Y.
McAdoo,	Parker,	Simmons,	Whiting, Mich.
McClammy,	Patton,	Snyder,	Whiting, Mass.
McComas,	Payson,	Spooner,	Whitthorne,
McCormick,	Penington,	Steele,	Wickham,
McCullogh,	Perkins,	Stephenson,	Wilber,
McKenna,	Peters,	Stewart, Vt.	Williams,
McKinley,	Phelps,	Struble,	Wise,
McKinney,	Pidcock,	Symes,	Woodburn,
Merriman,	Plumb,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio	Yardley,
Milliken,	Post,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio	Yoder,
Moffitt,	Pugsley,	Thomas, Ky.	Yost.

The following-named members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. MCCOMAS.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. ATKINSON.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. SAWYER.

Mr. BACON with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. GIBSON with Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. SIMMONS with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL with Mr. LAIDLAW.

Mr. DOUGHERTY with Mr. PETERS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. NORWOOD with Mr. COOPER.

Mr. GREENMAN with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. WHITE, of New York, with Mr. COCKRAN.

Mr. WISE with Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. HUDD with Mr. CLARK.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. CUTCHEON (until June 8).

Mr. MERRIMAN with Mr ARNOLD.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. BOWDEN.

The following-named members were announced as paired on all questions until further notice in the House and in Committee of the Whole:

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. KEAN.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi, with Mr. WILBER.

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE.

Mr. CUMMINGS with Mr. MCCORMICK.

Mr. MATSON with Mr. OWEN.

Mr. BARNES with Mr. BAKER, of New York

Mr. MAHONEY with Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. MCCLAMMY with Mr. BROWER.

Mr. SHIVELY with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana, with Mr. LYMAN (until June 25).

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. WEBER.

Mr. YODER with Mr. BOOTHMAN.

Mr. VANCE with Mr. WEST.

Mr. HOGG with Mr. POST.

Mr. ELLIOTT with Mr. JACKSON.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. MCKINNEY with Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan.

Mr. HAYES with Mr. GEAR.

Mr. MANSUR with Mr. WARNER (except Oklahoma and Union Pacific funding bills).

Mr. SCULL with Mr. ERMENTROUT (until June 9).

Mr. GLASS with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. PENINGTON with Mr. YARDLEY (until June 6).

The following-named members were announced as paired on all political questions for this day:

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. BELMONT with Mr. DE LANO.

Mr. LATHAM with Mr. NICHOLS.

Mr. MCADOO with Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois.

Mr. WHITTHORNE was announced as paired with Mr. HARMER on this vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall when his name was called?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I was not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman is not permitted by the rule to vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I desire to state that if present I would have voted "ay."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understood that another gentleman had been substituted for myself in the pair with my colleague General HENDERSON. But in any case it would be proper for me to vote, in order to make a quorum; and I have voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas are 115, nay 1. A quorum has not voted.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MILLS. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

Allen, Mich.	Cockran,	Hogg,	Patton,
Allen, Miss.	Collins,	Holman,	Penington,
Arnold,	Compton,	Hopkins, N. Y.	Pidcock,
Atkinson,	Cooper,	Houk,	Post,
Bacon,	Crouse,	Hudd,	Rockwell,
Barnes,	Cummings,	Jackson,	Rusk,
Belden,	Cutcheon,	La Follette,	Sawyer,
Belmont,	Davenport,	Lagan,	Scott,
Bingham,	Davis,	Latham,	Scull,
Boutelle,	De Lano,	Maffett,	Shively,
Bowden,	Dunham,	Mahoney,	Snyder,
Bowen,	Elliott,	Mansur,	Spooner,
Browne, Ind.	Ermentrout,	Mason,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Brown, J. R., Va.	Fitch,	Matson,	Thomas, Ill.
Brumm,	Gaines,	McAdoo,	Vance,
Bryce,	Gay,	McClammy,	West,
Burnes,	Gibson,	McComas,	White, Ind.
Butterworth,	Glass,	McKinney,	White, N. Y.
Campbell, F., N. Y.	Glover,	Morse,	Whiting, Mich.
Campbell, Ohio	Greenman,	Norwood,	Whitthorne,
Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Hayes,	O'Ferrall,	Yardley,
Candler,	Henderson, Iowa	O'Neall, Ind.	Yoder.
Clark,	Hires,	O'Neill, Mo.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now call the roll a second time, when gentlemen desiring to present excuses for themselves or for other members will have an opportunity to do so.

The Clerk proceeded to call the absentees, as follows:

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan: No excuse offered.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi: No excuse offered.

Mr. ARNOLD: No excuse offered.

Mr. ATKINSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. BACON: No excuse offered.

Mr. BARNES: No excuse offered.

Mr. BELDEN: No excuse offered.

Mr. BELMONT: No excuse offered.

Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. FELTON. Mr. Speaker, General BINGHAM has been called away by the death of a very near relative, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BOUTELLE: No excuse offered.

Mr. BOWDEN: No excuse offered.

Mr. BOWEN: No excuse offered.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana: No excuse offered.

Mr. J. R. BROWN: No excuse offered

Mr. BRUMM: No excuse offered.

Mr. BRYCE: No excuse offered.

Mr. BURNES: No excuse offered.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH: No excuse offered.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL: No excuse offered.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio: No excuse offered.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL: No excuse offered.

Mr. CANDLER: No excuse offered.

Mr. CLARK: No excuse offered.

Mr. COCKRAN: No excuse offered.

Mr. COLLINS: No excuse offered.

Mr. COMPTON: No excuse offered.

Mr. COOPER: No excuse offered.

Mr. CROUSE: No excuse offered.

Mr. CUMMINGS: No excuse offered.

Mr. CUTCHEON: No excuse offered.

Mr. DAVENPORT: No excuse offered.

Mr. DAVIS: No excuse offered.

Mr. DE LANO: No excuse offered.

Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. DUNHAM, has been called away by the death of his wife, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ELLIOTT.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. ELLIOTT, is absent from the city, and I ask that he be excused from further attendance on the session of the House to-day.

Mr. ERMENTROUT: No excuse offered.

Mr. FITCH: No excuse offered.

Mr. GAINES: No excuse offered.

Mr. GAY: No excuse offered.

Mr. GIBSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. GLASS: No excuse offered.

Mr. GLOVER: No excuse offered.

Mr. GREENMAN: No excuse offered.

Mr. HAYES.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HAYES, is absent from the city on business, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HENDERSON, is unable to be here on account of sickness. I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HIRES.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HIRES, has been called home by sickness in his family, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOGG: No excuse offered.

Mr. HOLMAN: No excuse offered.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HOPKINS, has been called home by the very serious illness of his children, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOUK.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. HOUK, who is unwell, be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HUDD: No excuse offered.

Mr. JACKSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE: No excuse offered.

Mr. LAGAN: No excuse offered.

Mr. LATHAM.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. LATHAM, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MAFFETT.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. MAFFETT, who has been called home on account of sickness, be excused and be given indefinite leave of absence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be excused. The indefinite leave of absence can he obtained at another time.

There was no objection, and Mr. MAFFETT was excused.

Mr. MAHONEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. MANSUR.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MANSUR, has been called home on business, and, if his leave of absence has expired, I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MASON: No excuse offered.

Mr. MATSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. MCADOO: No excuse offered.

Mr. MCCLAMMY: No excuse offered.

Mr. MCCOMAS: No excuse offered.

Mr. MCKINNEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. MORSE: No excuse offered.

Mr. NORWOOD: No excuse offered.

Mr. O'FERRALL.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. O'FERRALL, is confined to his bed with an acute attack of rheumatism, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. O'NEALL, of Indiana, be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. O'NEALL, has leave of absence.

Mr. SHIVELY.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SHIVELY, is absent on account of sickness, and I ask that he be excused until Saturday next.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri: No excuse offered.

Mr. PATTON: No excuse offered.

Mr. PENINGTON: No excuse offered.

Mr. PIDCOCK: No excuse offered.

Mr. POST: No excuse offered.

Mr. ROCKWELL: No excuse offered.

Mr. RUSK: No excuse offered.

Mr. SAWYER.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. SAWYER, is absent on account of illness. I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SCOTT: No excuse offered.

Mr. SCULL: No excuse offered.

Mr. SNYDER: No excuse offered.

Mr. SPOONER: No excuse offered.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR: No excuse offered.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois: No excuse offered.

Mr. VANCE: No excuse offered.

Mr. WEST: No excuse offered.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana: No excuse offered.

Mr. WHITE, of New York: No excuse offered.

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan: No excuse offered.

Mr. WHITTHORNE: No excuse offered.

Mr. YARDLEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. YODER.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, Mr. YODER has been called from the city on extremely important business. I ask that he be excused until Saturday.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MOFFITT. I ask that my colleague, Mr. FITCH, have leave of absence until Saturday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, does the roll-call show a quorum present?

The SPEAKER pro temproe. The roll-call shows the presence of 233 members.

Mr. MILLS. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the motion I made to limit debate and for the previous question on that motion; and I now demand a vote on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question) said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. REED and others called for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 101, noes none.

Mr. MORRILL. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] makes the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays none, not voting 212, as follows:

YEAS—112.

Abbott,	Davidson, Ala.	Lee,	Russell, Mass.
Anderson, Miss.	Davidson, Fla.	Lynch,	Sayers,
Anderson, Ill.	Dibble,	Macdonald,	Seney,
Bankhead,	Dockery,	Maish,	Shaw,
Barry,	Dougherty,	Martin,	Simmons,
Biggs,	Dunn,	McCreary,	Smith,
Blanchard,	Enloe,	McMillin,	Sowden,
Bland,	Fisher,	McRae,	Spinola,
Bliss,	Ford,	McShane,	Springer,
Blount,	Forney,	Merriman,	Stahlnecker,
Breckinridge, Ark.	French,	Mills,	Stewart, Tex.
Breckinridge, Ky.	Grimes,	Montgomery,	Stewart, Ga.
Buckalew,	Hall,	Moore,	Stockdale,
Burnett,	Hare,	Morgan,	Stone, Ky.
Bynum,	Heard,	Morse,	Stone, Mo.
Carlton,	Hemphill,	Neal,	Tarsney,
Caruth,	Henderson, N. C.	Newton,	Taulbee,
Chipman,	Herbert,	Oates,	Tillman,
Clardy,	Hooker,	Peel,	Tracey,
Clements,	Hopkins, Va.	Perry,	Turner, Ga.
Cobb,	Howard,	Phelan,	Walker,
Cothran,	Johnston, N. C.	Randall,	Weaver,
Cowles,	Jones,	Rayner,	Wheeler,
Cox,	Kilgore,	Rice,	Whitthorne,
Crain,	Landes,	Richardson,	Wilkins,
Crisp,	Lane,	Robertson,	Wilkinson,
Culberson,	Lanham,	Rogers,	Wilson, Minn.
Dargan,	Lawler,	Rowland,	Wilson, W. Va.

NAYS—

None.

NOT VOTING—212.

Adams,	Caswell,	Granger,	Lind,
Allen, Mass.	Catchings,	Greenman,	Lodge,
Allen, Mich.	Cheadle,	Grosvenor,	Long,
Allen, Miss.	Clark,	Grout,	Lyman,
Anderson, Iowa	Cockran,	Guenther,	Maffett,
Anderson, Kans.	Cogswell,	Harmer,	Mahoney,
Arnold,	Collins,	Hatch,	Mansur,
Atkinson,	Compton,	Haugen,	Mason,
Bacon,	Conger,	Hayden,	Matson,
Baker, N. Y.	Cooper,	Hayes,	McAdoo,
Baker, Ill.	Crouse,	Henderson, Iowa	McClammy,
Barnes,	Cummings,	Henderson, Ill.	McComas,
Bayne,	Cutcheon,	Hermann,	McCormick,
Belden,	Dalzell,	Hiestand,	McCullogh,
Belmont,	Darlington,	Hires,	McKenna,
Bingham,	Davenport,	Hitt,	McKinley,
Boothman,	Davis,	Hogg,	McKinney,
Bound,	De Lano,	Holman,	Milliken,
Boutelle,	Dingley,	Holmes,	Moffitt,
Bowden,	Dorsey,	Hopkins, Ill.	Morrill,
Bowen,	Dunham,	Hopkins, N. Y.	Morrow,
Brewer,	Elliott,	Houk,	Nelson,
Brower,	Ermentrout,	Hovey,	Nichols,
Browne, T. H. B., Va.	Farquhar,	Hudd,	Norwood,
Browne, Ind.	Felton,	Hunter,	Nutting,
Brown, Ohio	Finley,	Hutton,	O'Donnell,
Brown, J. R., Va.	Fitch,	Jackson,	O'Ferrall,
Brumm,	Flood,	Johnston, Ind.	O'Neall, Ind.
Bryce,	Foran,	Kean,	O'Neill, Pa.
Buchanan,	Fuller,	Kelley,	O'Neill, Mo.
Bunnell,	Funston,	Kennedy,	Osborne,
Burnes,	Gaines,	Kerr,	Outhwaite,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Ketcham,	Owen,
Butler,	Gay,	Laffoon,	Parker,
Butterworth,	Gear,	La Follette,	Patton,
Campbell, F., N. Y.	Gest,	Lagan,	Payson,
Campbell, Ohio	Gibson,	Laidlaw,	Penington,
Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Glass,	Laird,	Perkins,
Candler,	Glover,	Latham,	Peters,
Cannon,	Goff,	Lehlbach,	Phelps,
Pidcock,	Scull,	Thomas, Ky.	West,
Plumb,	Seymour,	Thomas, Ill.	White, Ind.
Post,	Sherman,	Thomas, Wis.	White, N. Y.
Pugsley,	Shively,	Thompson, Ohio	Whiting, Mich.
Reed,	Snyder,	Thompson, Cal.	Whiting, Mass.
Rockwell,	Spooner,	Townshend,	Wickham,
Romeis,	Steele,	Turner, Kans.	Wilber,
Rowell,	Stephenson,	Vance,	Williams,
Russell, Conn.	Stewart, Vt.	Vandever,	Wise,
Rusk,	Struble,	Wade,	Woodburn,
Ryan,	Symes,	Warner,	Yardley,
Sawyer,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio	Washington,	Yoder,
Scott,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio	Weber,	Yost.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan, with Mr. DUNHAM, on all political questions, until further notice.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. LA FOLLETTE, for the rest of the day.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California, with Mr. MCKENNA, for the rest of the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 111, the nays none. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. MILLS. Is that point raised?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair it is his duty to recognize the fact that no quorum has voted.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 88, noes 60.

Mr. REED and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 114, nays 93, not voting 117; as follows:

YEAS—114.

Abbott,	Dargan,	Lawler,	Sayers,
Anderson, Miss.	Davidson, Ala.	Lee,	Seney,
Anderson, Ill.	Davidson, Fla.	Lynch,	Shaw,
Bankhead,	Dibble,	Macdonald,	Simmons,
Barry,	Dockery,	Maish,	Sowden,
Bayne,	Dougherty,	Martin,	Springer,
Biggs,	Dunn,	McCreary,	Stahlnecker,
Blanchard,	Enloe,	McMillin,	Stewart, Tex.
Bland,	Foran,	McRae,	Stewart, Ga.
Bliss,	Forney,	McShane,	Stockdale,
Blount,	French,	Mills,	Stone, Ky.
Breckinridge, Ark.	Grimes,	Montgomery,	Stone, Mo.
Breckinridge, Ky.	Hall,	Moore,	Tarsney,
Buckalew,	Hare,	Morgan,	Taulbee,
Burnett,	Hatch,	Morse,	Tillman,
Bynum,	Hemphill,	Neal,	Tracey,
Carlton,	Henderson, N. C.	Newton,	Townshend,
Caruth,	Herbert,	Oates,	Turner, Ga.
Catchings,	Hooker,	Outhwaite,	Walker,
Chipman,	Hopkins, Va.	Peel,	Washington,
Clardy,	Howard,	Perry,	Weaver,
Clements,	Hutton,	Phelan,	Wheeler,
Cobb,	Johnston, N. C.	Randall,	Whitthorne,
Cothran,	Jones,	Rayner,	Wilkins,
Cowles,	Kilgore,	Rice,	Wilkinson,
Cox,	Lagan,	Robertson,	Wilson, Minn.
Crain,	Landes,	Rogers,	Wilson, W. Va.
Crisp,	Lane,	Rowland.
Culberson,	Lanham,	Russell, Mass.

NAYS—93.

Adams,	Ford,	Laird,	Plumb,
Allen, Mass.	Fuller,	Lehlbach,	Reed,
Anderson, Iowa	Funston,	Lind,	Rowell,
Anderson, Kans.	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Ryan,
Baker, Ill.	Gest,	Long,	Seymour,
Bound,	Goff,	Lyman,	Sherman,
Browne, Ind.	Grout,	Mason,	Stephenson,
Brown, Ohio.	Guenther,	McCullogh,	Stewart, Vt.
Bunnell,	Harmer,	McKinley,	Struble,
Burrows,	Haugen,	Milliken,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio
Butler,	Hermann,	Moffitt,	Thomas, Ky.
Cannon,	Hiestand,	Morrill,	Thomas, Wis.
Cheadle,	Hitt,	Morrow,	Thompson, Ohio
Cogswell,	Holman,	Nichols,	Vandever,
Conger,	Holmes,	Nutting,	Wade,
Dalzell,	Hovey,	O'Donnell,	White, Ind.
Darlington,	Hunter,	O'Neill, Pa.	Whiting, Mass.
Dingley,	Johnston, Ind.	Osborne,	Wickham,
Dorsey,	Kelley,	Parker,	Williams,
Farquhar,	Kennedy,	Patton,	Woodburn,
Felton,	Kerr,	Payson,	Yost.
Finley,	Ketcham,	Perkins,
Fisher,	La Follette,	Peters,
Flood,	Laidlaw,	Phelps,

NOT VOTING—117.

Allen, Mich.	Brumm,	Davenport,	Heard,
Allen, Miss.	Bryce,	Davis,	Henderson, Iowa
Arnold,	Buchanan,	De Lano,	Henderson, Ill.
Atkinson,	Burnes,	Dunham,	Hires,
Bacon,	Butterworth,	Elliott,	Hogg,
Baker, N. Y.	Campbell, F., N. Y.	Ermentrout,	Hopkins, Ill.
Barnes,	Campbell, Ohio	Fitch,	Hopkins, N. Y.
Belden,	Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Gaines,	Houk,
Belmont,	Candler,	Gay,	Hudd,
Bingham,	Caswell,	Gear,	Jackson,
Boothman,	Clark,	Gibson,	Kean,
Boutelle,	Cockran,	Glass,	Laffoon,
Bowden,	Collins,	Glover,	Latham,
Bowen,	Compton,	Granger,	Maffett,
Brewer,	Cooper,	Greenman,	Mahoney,
Brower,	Crouse.	Grosvenor,	Mansur,
Browne, T. H. B., Va.	Cummings,	Hayden,	Matson,
Brown, J. R., Va.	Cutcheon,	Hayes,	McAdoo,

McClammy,	Penington,	Shively,	Warner,
McComas,	Pidcock,	Smith,	Weber,
McCormick,	Post,	Snyder,	West,
McKenna,	Pugsley,	Spinola,	White, N. Y.
McKinney,	Richardson,	Spooner,	Whiting, Mich.
Merriman,	Rockwell,	Steele,	Wilber,
Nelson,	Romeis,	Symes,	Wise,
Norwood,	Russell, Conn.	Taylor, E. B., Ohio	Yardley.
O'Ferrall,	Rusk,	Thomas, Ill.	Yoder.
O'Neall, Ind.	Sawyer,	Thompson, Cal.
O'Neill, Mo.	Scott,	Turner, Kans.
Owen,	Scull,	Vance,

So the motion was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. WHEELER, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. MASON with Mr. O'FERRALL, for the rest of the day.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. LATHAM, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. SYMES, for one week, on account of illness.

To Mr. MANSUR, indefinitely, on account of important business.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4920) for the protection of the officials of the United States in the Indian Territory;

A bill (H. R. 5929) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across Staten Island Sound;

A bill (H. R. 7222) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish agricultural stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto;"

A bill (H. R. 7564) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River, at or near Chattanooga, Tenn.;

A bill (H. R. 8623) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River, at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 9788) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BURROWS: A bill (H. R. 10327) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Alonzo Higley"—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHEADLE: A bill (H. R. 10328) granting a pension to Nancy E. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10329) granting a pension to Maria Youngs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARUTH (by request): A bill (H. R. 10330) for the relief of Jane Green, alias Cheatham—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GRANGER (by request): A bill (H. R. 10331) to remove the charge of desertion against Horace E. Ball—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOVEY: A bill (H. R. 10332) for the relief of George A. Linton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LYMAN: A bill (H. R. 10333) for the relief of William H. Howell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MACDONALD: A bill (H. R. 10334) to grant a pension to Elizabeth O'Laughlin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCREARY: A bill (H. R. 10335) for the relief of James D. Bastin—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McKINLEY: A bill (H. R. 10336) granting a pension to Almooreen Eidenire—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OUTHWAITE: A bill (H. R. 10337) granting a pension to John Ebert—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEELE: A bill (H. R. 10338) for the relief of James B. Sparks—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TAULBEE: A bill (H. R. 10339) for the relief of Eliz. J. Richardson—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10340) for the relief of Mary A. McGinnis—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10341) for the relief of John Spurlock—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. A. C. THOMPSON: A bill (H. R. 10342) granting a pension to John Dauper—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10343) granting a pension to Sarah Perkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10344) granting a pension to Simon W. Ratcliff—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10345) granting a pension to Catherine Ward—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BLANCHARD: Petition of James E. Keegan and 110 others, citizens of Robeline, Louisiana, for an amendment to the interstate commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BROWER: Petition of Elizabeth Brockwell and William C. Mason, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committe on War Claims.

By Mr. BUTLER: Petition of Alexander McClanahan, of Joseph C. Sloan, and of William McNish, of Tennessee, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CARUTH: Petition of Paul Denver, of Michael Denver, and of Valentine Ault, of Franklin County, Ohio, and of Mary Leissing, of Jefferson County, Kentucky, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CROUSE: Petition of wire-drawers and manufacturers, in favor of a reduction of duty on wire rods—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FORNEY: Petition of citizens of Cullman County, Alabama, for amendment of the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FUNSTON: Petition of citizens of Allen County, Kansas, for amendment of the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HAYDEN: Petition of the mayor and council of Boston, Mass., to pass the bill granting the use of Castle Island for park purposes notwithstanding the President's veto—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of J. Q. A. Brackett and others, citizens of the United States, for the passage of the bill for the relief of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay, that their claim may be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LANHAM: Petition of citizens of Weatherford, Tex., asking an amendment of the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LODGE: Petition of the city government of Boston, Mass., in favor of passing Castle Island resolve, notwithstanding the President's veto—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MACDONALD: Petition of citizens of Goodhue County, Minnesota, in favor of amendment of the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NEAL: Petition of Robert Pearce, for pension, to be considered in connection with House bill 9193—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE, of Missouri: Petition of Hugh G. Glenn, of administrator of John Hammontree, and of E. N. Peyton, of Cass County, Missouri—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TAULBEE: Petition for the relief of George S. Steele—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Letcher County, Kentucky, for the improvement of North Fork of Kentucky River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WHEELER: Papers in the claim of Joseph Commons, of Huntsville, Ala.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition for the relief of Isaac N. Hollingsworth—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petition for the repeal or modification of the internal-revenue tax of $25 levied on druggists was received and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. HAYDEN: Of the Massachusetts Pharmaceutical Association.

The following petition, indorsing the per diem rated service-pension bill, based on the principle of paying all soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war a monthly pension of 1 cent a day for each day they were in the service, was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

By Mr. McCULLOGH: Of C. G. Koechlin and others, ex-soldiers and sailors, of Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania.

The following petitions, praying for the enactment of a law providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy, were severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. G. A. ANDERSON: Of 127 citizens of Adams County, Illinois.

By Mr. DINGLEY: Of 93 citizens of Sagadahoc County, Maine.

By Mr. FUNSTON: Of 139 citizens of Douglas County, Kansas.

By Mr. GALLINGER: Of Alonzo W. Smith and 14 others, citizens of Grafton County, New Hampshire.

By Mr. LANE: Of 55 citizens of Shelby and Moultrie Counties, Illinois.

By Mr. MACDONALD: Of 67 citizens of Renville County, Minnesota.
By Mr. ROMEIS: Of 119 citizens of Sandusky County, Ohio.

The following petitions for an increase of compensation of fourth-class postmasters were severally referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads:
By Mr. BLANCHARD: Of A. S. Taylor and 55 others, citizens of Louisiana.
By Mr. COBB: Of N. C. Ellis and others, of Good Hope, Alabama.
By Mr. TAULBEE: Of citizens of Bloomington, Kentucky.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 5, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that an additional appropriation be made for clerk-hire for that Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of March 16, 1888, certain information as to the amount due commissioners for examining damage from erecting dams in the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers; which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting the findings of law and fact in certain spoliation claims; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of Lone Star Grange, at Cedar Ford, Butler County, Kansas, remonstrating against the passage of the bill to create a new Bureau of Animal Industry; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Jamestown, Kans., praying that a pension be granted to Robert W. Compton, late quartermaster Thirty-third Regiment Kentucky Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of James M. Miller, a citizen of Kansas, late of Company H, Third Regiment Missouri Mounted Volunteers, praying for an equalization of pension from June 4, 1862, to June 4, 1881; which was referred to the committee on Pensions.

Mr. FAULKNER presented the petition of William B. Jackson and 250 other citizens of Washington, D. C., praying for the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac, from the foot of South Capitol street to Giesborough, Maryland; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia,

Mr. CALL presented a petition of citizens of Florida, praying that an appropriation be made to deepen and straighten the channel of Indian River from Grant's Farm to Jupiter, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of the Lake Carriers' Association of Buffalo, N. Y., and a petition of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the purchase by the United States of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship Canal; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of Silas G. Goss and 26 other citizens of Lehigh, Iowa, praying for the passage of the bill for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Omaha, Nebr., praying for an extension of the time of the Union Pacific Railroad to pay its indebtedness to the Government; which was referred to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission.

He also presented petitions of posts of the Grand Army of the Republic located at Logansport, Albany, Ossian, and Greentown, in the State of Indiana, praying for the establishment of a branch of the National Home for disabled soldiers and sailors at Marion, in Grant County, Indiana; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon; which were agreed to, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 2943) granting a pension to Henry Chamberlain;
A bill (S. 2926) for the relief of Madison V. Boeitnight; and
A bill (S. 2676) granting an increase of pension to Capt. Francis M. Work.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Miss Emily Luttrell, praying to be allowed a pension, reported adversely thereon, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3021) granting a pension to Carrie V. Miller;
A bill (S. 2945) granting a pension to J. S. May;
A bill (S. 2938) granting a pension to James McDonald;
A bill (S. 2995) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Stewart;
A bill (H. R. 6840) for the relief of Hiram M. Goss;
A bill (H. R. 6245) for the relief of William Burk;
A bill (H. R. 3706) granting a pension to Henry C. Richardson; and
A bill (S. 2979) granting a pension to Laura J. Ives.

Mr. CHACE, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 463) for the relief of Jacob D. Felthousen and the heirs of William H. Akins, deceased, reported it without recommendation.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2726) granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Heintzelman, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2747) for the relief of John W. Keating, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2711) restoring Phebe McLaughlin to the pension-roll; and
A bill (S. 2724) for the relief of H. H. Helper.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2861) granting a pension to David A. Hall;
A bill (H. R. 9682) increasing the pension of Jesse Dickey;
A bill (H. R. 3690) granting a pension to Penelope Morton, widow of Lieutenant Morton;
A bill (H. R. 780) granting a pension to James H. Darling; and
A bill (H. R. 5177) granting a pension to Pleman Cook.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2665) granting a pension to Charles J. Esty;
A bill (H. R. 4103) granting a pension to Edna M. Hildreth;
A bill (H. R. 7829) granting a pension to Thomas McGuire;
A bill (H. R. 2413) granting a pension to Mrs. Mercy Knight; and
A bill (H. R. 7471) granting a pension to Moses L. Chase.

Mr. COKE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2930) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct a bridge across Red River at or near Hook's Ferry, Red River County, Texas, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5903) for the relief of Lewis Davis, a soldier of the war of 1812, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2890) granting a pension to Fannie A. Kimball;
A bill (H. R. 8798) granting a pension to Nettie Ellicott;
A bill (H. R. 432) granting a pension to Columbus Bosteder;
A bill (H. R. 3016) granting a pension to Mary F. Harkins;
A bill (H. R. 5756) granting a pension to David Gibbons; and
A bill (H. R. 2215) granting a pension to Charles Glamann.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3722) for the relief of Jennie D. Rice;
A bill (H. R. 7776) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Monona, in the State of Iowa, and in the county of Burt, State of Nebraska, and to make the same a post-route; and
A bill (H. R. 10233) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 4920) for the protection of the officials of the United States in the Indian Territory;

A bill (H. R. 5929) to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across Staten Island Sound;

A bill (H. R. 7222) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish agricultural stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto;"

A bill (H. R. 7564) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Chattanooga, Tenn.; and

A bill (H. R. 8623) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCPHERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3094) for the relief of Morton C. Warren and Elizabeth C. Torrey; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3095) granting a pension to Hubert Hendrickson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COLQUITT introduced a bill (S. 3096) to amend section 907 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3097) to place Henry Zell on the retired-list of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT. I introduce a bill for an act concerning the settlement of the boundary line between Connecticut and Rhode Island, and with the bill I present a certified copy of the action of the commissioners of the two States appointed to settle the boundary line, and also the action of the Legislatures of the States of Connecticut and Rhode Island. I ask that the bill, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 3098) concerning the settlement of the boundary lines between Connecticut and Rhode Island was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHACE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3099) to regulate and license pawnbrokers in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3100) to correct the military record of David C. Spears; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3101) for the relief of William Mackey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3102) granting a pension to James Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3103) granting a pension to Clara B. Hoyt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3104) granting an increase of pension to Albert H. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER introduced a bill (S. 3105) for the suitable and adequate protection of American fishing interests; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 92) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Northwest Soldiers and Sailors' Association of Iowa, for reunion purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PATENT OFFICE CLERICAL FORCE.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate at as early date as is practicable a copy of Order No. 339 of the Commissioner of Patents, dated June 26, 1886, and the report made in pursuance of said order; also a copy of a report made to the Commissioner of Patents in June, 1887, in regard to the clerical force of the Patent Office, signed by the chief clerk and chiefs of divisions of that office.

ACCOUNTS OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day that was objected to yesterday by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. SPOONER, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence, statements of accounts, and inclosures which, during the incumbency of the office of First Comptroller of the Treasury by the present occupant, such officer, or his deputy, has had with any United States commissioner or any chief supervisor of elections, and of all replies thereto received by said First Comptroller; and also to inform the Senate whether the several supervisors of elections appointed by the respective circuit courts at and for the election of 1886, at which Representatives in Congress were chosen, or for any registration held prior thereto and for said election, were paid for the respective number of days, not exceeding ten, for which their accounts were presented; and if such payments were not made, the reasons therefor, and for what number of days they were not allowed and paid; and also to transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence upon such subject-matter had between the First Comptroller of the Treasury and the Attorney-General, or any United States marshal.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the resolution, but it appears not to have been printed as yet. I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "incumbency"——

Mr. PLUMB. I understood that the resolution was offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] who is not now in his seat, and I would suggest, if agreeable to the Senator from Alabama, that the resolution go over, retaining its place, until the Senator from Wisconsin appears.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over subject to be called up, and will not be placed upon the Calendar.

ASSISTANT ASTRONOMERS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday passed the bill (S. 653) defining the positions and salaries of assistant astronomers at the United States Naval Observatory, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the vote by which the bill was passed and also the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading will be reconsidered, and the bill is open to amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 2, after the word "preceding," it is proposed to strike out the word "section" and insert "sections."

Mr. ALLISON. How will the section read as proposed to be amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That to fill the two additional positions authorized in the preceding sections and to fill any vacancies that may hereafter occur in the positions of assistant astronomers, the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint an examining board, which shall consist of one professor of mathematics in the Navy, one assistant astronomer, and one other competent examiner, who may be either naval or civilian, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the word "sums" and insert the word "sum," and in line 5 to strike out the words "section one" and insert "this act;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That, to carry out the provisions of this act, there is hereby appropriated such sum as may be necessary to pay the salaries of the assistant astronomers authorized in this act for the current fiscal year and for the fiscal year next succeeding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. HALE. I move to take up the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year 1889.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill. It is so ordered, there being no objection.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in "Schedule A," in the appropriations for "salaries of ministers," in line 25, after the name "Colombia," to strike out "and;" in line 26, after "Turkey," to insert "Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, and Venezuela;" and in line 28, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-two" and insert "fifty-two;" so as to make the clause read:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, the United States of Colombia, Turkey, Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, and Venezuela, at $7,500 each, $52,500.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I would be pleased to inquire of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who has charge of the bill, why Portugal was not included in that list of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary at $7,500 each. It seems to have been transferred to the heading "ministers resident and consuls-general."

Mr. HALE. The only change that the amendment in line 26 covers is in transferring the ministers at Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, and Venezuela, which are now ministers resident at $7,500 each salary, to the same class as the Argentine Republic, the United States of Colombia, and Turkey, which are termed envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary; but it makes no change in the salary. It only does the same by them that has been done by the Senate and House of Representatives before with the Argentine Republic, United States of Colombia, and Turkey. It does not take Portugal, because that is in another class with a smaller salary, and therefore it has not been changed. The amendment recommended by the committee changes no salary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to strike out the clause from line 29 to line 32, inclusive, as follows:

Ministers resident in Belgium, Hawaiian Islands, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, and Venezuela, at $7,500 each, $37,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 32, to insert:

Minister resident in Hawaiian Islands, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 34, to insert:

Minister resident and consul-general in Corea, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 39, after the name "Bolivia," to strike out "Corea" and insert "Paraguay and Uruguay;" so as to make the clause read:

Ministers resident and consuls-general in Bolivia, Paraguay and Uruguay, Denmark, Hayti, Persia, Portugal, Siam, and Switzerland, at $5,000 each, $40,000 (and the minister resident and consul-general in Hayti shall also be accredited as chargé d'affaires to San Domingo).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out lines 48 and 49, as follows:

Chargé d'affaires to Paraguay and Uruguay, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "salaries secretaries of legations," in line 73, after the name "Chili," to strike out "and;" in the same line, after "Peru," to insert "Argentine Republic and Venezuela;" and in line 75, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

Secretaries of the legations in Chili, Peru, Argentine Republic, and Venezuela, at $1,500 each, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 76, after the word "legation," to strike out "and consul-general;" so as to make the clause read:

Secretary of legation at Corea, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 84.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the apparent defect or omission in line 84, on page 4.

Mr. HALE. The blank should be filled by inserting "thousand dollars;" so as to read "one thousand dollars." It is an error of the type.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction will be made.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Schedule B," in the appropriations for "salaries, consular service," after line 184, to insert:

Consul-general at Nuevo Laredo, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 186, to insert:

For salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, and commercial agents, $375,000, as follows, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to yield to me for a moment to have a change made in a conference committee.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BAY CITY, MICH.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senate appointed as the conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill 965 for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Mich., among others the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] who has gone abroad. The conference committee is ready to meet, and I ask that the Senator from California be excused from further service on the conference, and that another Senator who is present be appointed in his place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to have substituted?

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] be substituted in place of the Senator from California.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year 1889.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Salaries consular service," "Class V," in line 276, after the name "Acapulco," to strike out "and Matamoras" and insert "Paso del Norte, and Piedras Negras;" so as to make the clause read:

Mexico:
Consuls at Acapulco, Paso del Norte, and Piedras Negras.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Salaries consular service," "Class VI," in line 327, after the words "consuls at," to strike out "Paso del Norte" and insert "Matamoras, Nogales;" so as to read:

Mexico:
Consuls at Matamoras, Nogales, and Tampico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Schedule C, Class VII," at the beginning of line 370, to strike out the word "consuls" and insert "consul;" and in the same line, after the name "Guaymas," to strike out "Nuevo Laredo, and Piedras Negras;" so as to read:

Mexico:
Consul at Guaymas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 383, to insert:

And in the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, there shall be estimated for specifically, under classified consulates, all consulates and commercial agencies where the fees collected or compensation allowed for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, exceed $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Allowance for clerks at consular offices," in line 401, after the word "consulates," to strike out "fifty thousand three" and insert "fifty-one thousand nine;" so as to make the clause read:

For allowance for clerks at consulates-general and consulates, $51,920, the sum to be allowed at each not to exceed the rate herein specified, as follows.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 418, before the name "Tunstall," to strike out the word "and;" after "Tunstall," to insert "Toronto and Brussels;" and in line 419, after the word "each," to strike out "twelve thousand" and insert "thirteen thousand six hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Antwerp, Bordeaux, Calcutta, Colon, Dresden, Glasgow, Leipsic, Melbourne, Nuremberg, Panama, Port au Prince, Sheffield, Singapore, Sonneberg, Tunstall, Toronto, and Brussels, at $800 each, $13,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 421, after the name "Leith," to strike out "Matamoras" and insert "Nuevo Laredo;" so as to make the clause read:

Barmen, Belfast, Dundee, Halifax, Leith, Nuevo Laredo, and Victoria, at $640 each, $4,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Have the committee further amendments to offer?

Mr. HALE. From the Committee on Appropriations there are no further amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer an amendment to come in on page 8. I have the assent of so many members of the Committee on Foreign Relations as are present to the amendment. It is now pending in that committee, and rather than postpone the bill by asking the Senate to let it go over until to-morrow I will submit the amendment now. I have no doubt it will meet with general approval.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 165, on page 8, it is proposed to insert:

For salaries and expenses of a scientific commission of three persons, to consist of one officer of the Army or Navy competent for such service, a geologist and mineralogist, and a naturalist, to visit and report upon the commercial resources of the Upper Congo Basin, its products, its minerals, its vegetable wealth, the openings for American trade, and to collect such information on the subject of that country as shall be thought of interest to the United States, $25,000; and the President may fix the salaries and compensation of the members of this commission at such sum, not exceeding $6,000, as he may deem proper; and said commission shall expire on the 30th day of June, 1889.

Mr. HALE. Will the Secretary read again that portion of the amendment which defines the qualifications of the commissioners? I did not catch it as it was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of a scientific commission of three persons, to consist of one officer of the Army or Navy competent for such service, a geologist and mineralogist, and a naturalist, to visit and report upon the commercial resources of the Upper Congo Basin,

Mr. HALE. The geologist and mineralogist are one, making three commissioners in all?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, three.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On page 3, line 46, I move to strike out the words "Paraguay and Uruguay," and to insert after the word "San Domingo" in the forty-fourth line, the words:

For minister-resident and consul-general at Uruguay and Paraguay, $7,500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the importance of the countries of Paraguay and Uruguay to the United States in the extension of its commerce requires, I think, that a minister resident should be there with an adequate salary. The incumbent of the office, Mr. John E. Bacon, is a man of very remarkable ability and adaptation to the performance of the duties of the office. It is within my knowledge that American interests there to a large amount and of great importance have received his attention and have been largely benefited by him; but I am informed by those who represent these interests that owing to the fact of his inadequate compensation and of the official character he has borne of a chargé d'affaires only, he has not been able to have that access to the different offices and departments of that government which would enable him efficiently to represent American interests there.

The committee have remedied this difficulty in part by making him a minister resident and consul-general, but they have left him with the small and inadequate salary of $5,000, which although he has a small family is not sufficient, within my knowledge, to pay the most economical expenses of living in a person required to maintain some degree of respectability of appearance and style of living in order not to be contrasted unfavorably with the representatives of other governments. A consul of France, or England, or Germany, is provided by his government with the means of making a better impression on the people and Government of Uruguay and Paraguay than the minister of the people of the United States.

If we will consider what those countries are and what their future relations to this country may be under a wise and intelligent policy in the consumption of American products, both of manufacture and agriculture, we will see the importance of the United States being represented there by a person of suitable position in the sense in which rank and position are regarded by that people, and with means sufficient to live in a style at least equal to that of the representatives of other governments.

I find the returns of Montevideo made to the Department of State by the consul at that place in 1881:

In a report made to the Department of State, dated February 23, 1881, I gave the exports to the United States from the River Plate, i. e., all that part of South America, including Paraguay, Uruguay, and the Argentine Republic, drained by the Rio de la Plata, for the year 1880. In a subsequent report, dated February 28, 1882, I gave a similar statement for the year 1881. I now give a table of the shipments from the River Plate for the year ending December 31, 1882. As heretofore, it has been compiled from the official returns of exports declared at the consulates of Montevideo, Paysandu, Rosario, and Buenos Ayres, for the first three of which I am indebted to the courtesy of the United States consular officers at those places, respectively.

The table exhibits a shipment of $4,753,925.56 for the year 1882 to the United States from the River Plate through Montevideo, the consular residence of this minister. The productions of Paraguay are only estimated as a portion of this gross amount.

I find by further reference to these reports that it is one of the richest countries in the world. The exports of British cottons to Uruguay during the year 1880 were as follows: The total exports, value $3,081,000, an increase of over 16,600,000 yards of piece goods and of $1,392,000 on the exports of 1879. The exports of cotton goods from France to Uruguay amount to $225,000 per annum, the French goods therein amounting to $170,000. The exports of American cottons to Uruguay during the fiscal year 1880 were only $52,524. Our representative there writes as follows:

It can not be questioned that steam communication between New York and the River Plate, established and conducted by steamers judiciously constructed for the trade, with due regard to cost, carrying capacity, and passenger accommodation, would prove a success. Americans coming to this country from New York would certainly prefer to travel under the folds of an American flag, as would also citizens of the United States homeward bound. A "through line," it is believed, would also invite European travelers in this country to make their return voyage via the United States; but on inquiry they learn—Americans with mortification, Europeans with surprise—that no steamer carrying the American flag clears from any port of the River Plate. It would also greatly relieve the postal service of present intermediate hindrances and delays, and thus greatly promote not only commercial interests, but the social comfort for the people of both countries. There is, too, an outspoken preference here for the markets of the States. Farming implements and manufactured articles generally are highly appreciated, coming, as they say, from the mother Republic.

We find there a country with an area in one of these states of 45,000,000 acres of land, and with a production already very large and capable of being made twenty or thirty times (according to the reports of our officers there) its present capacity, with an inclination to favor American productions, and we have not made use of the advantages which we have in the favorable dispositions of those people. While other nations are represented there by men of capacity and with adequate salaries and with adequate rank, which, whatever we may say about it, carries its weight and influence with it and gives efficiency and power to our representatives, we have neglected our opportunity of improving our advantages, and our export trade to those countries has been steadily decreasing to the present time, while the import trade to the United States has been growing.

Mr. President, there came within my observation, as I stated, a very large American interest that had been created in those states, and which had been in the time of their troubles confiscated by the authority which was in power for some years. The American Government made a demand for compensation to the citizens of the United States who had lost their property by the proceedings of the arbitrary government of these states. That demand is still pending.

The present diplomatic representative of the United States, Mr. John Bacon, now a chargé d'affaires with a salary of only $5,000, in his dispatches to the State Department gave great satisfaction to all those who were connected with the American interests that had grown up under the commercial relations between the two countries; and the statement has been made to me by them that while they complimented him for his great ability and efficiency, and the services that he had rendered, he had been embarrassed all the time in the representation of these American interests and the protection of American citizens by the niggardly salary which he received, disabling him from extending the courtesies, and living in the style, not of extravagance, but of ordinary respectability and comfort of well-to-do persons in that country.

I was requested to ask of Congress the adoption of this amendment in behalf of this trade growing up between these states of Paraguay and Uruguay, which are to be very soon rich and populous states, having a delightful climate, one of the most fertile soils in the world, and a capacity for the most diversified agricultural productions, with a commerce now of between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 with the United States, and differing from the Argentine Republic less than a million dollars in the total amount of their exports to this country in 1880.

While we give to the Argentine Republic a full minister with a large salary, and give to Corea a salary of $7,500 and a minister, and to various other countries which are absolutely insignificant as compared with the future of these two immensely rich states of South America, disposed to create a commerce between their people and ours, we give to them nothing but a chargé d'affaires, now a minister resident by the favorable provision of this bill, with a salary entirely inadequate to defray even his moderate expenses of living.

I therefore hope, Mr. President, that there will be no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. HALE. I feel constrained to make a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. CALL. I do not see how the Senator can make a point of order. The amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no objection was made on a point of order heretofore. There was no objection made in committee on that ground.

Mr. HALE. I was going to give my reasons for making the point of order.

The Committee on Appropriations considered this subject and rejected this proposition. The general statements that the Senator has made as to the extent of the trade with the La Plata region do not apply to Paraguay and Uruguay. Years ago, after Paraguay was obliterated in the sanguinary contest with Brazil, this mission was abolished entirely. Again it was thought desirable to have some diplomatic relation there, and Paraguay and Uruguay were joined and a chargé d'affaires at $5,000 was placed there. There has been no complaint from the State Department that this officer had not such magnitude of designation as was necessary to attend to what nominal duties come under his eye and charge there. They are very light, as I have occasion to know, because the place was at one time filled by an acquaintance and townsman of mine.

The commerce of the La Plata that in any way comes either in the charge of our minister or our consul there is such that the last year the fees collected at the consular office at Montevideo, which is the central point in Uruguay, were but $1,119.50. The truth is that our representative there has little or nothing to do. He may search ever so closely and he may go forth to stir up business for himself and he can find little or nothing to do, and there is no reason why he should be placed upon an equality with the minister at the Argentine Republic, who lives at Buenos Ayres, where there is a large trade, which is increasing, and where there is communication that needs the interposition of a minister.

We have a consul at Montevideo, and probably, strictly speaking, that is all that is needed there, but we give a minister at that point with $5,000 salary, and the committee did not deem it advisable to raise this salary.

As the amendment is subject to the point of order that it raises an appropriation in the bill, under these circumstances, it not being a new question, but having been submitted to the committee and voted down, I feel constrained to make the point of order.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Maine will withdraw the point of order when he considers how entirely wrong his statements are, and how entirely without any foundation in fact. I am very much surprised that the chairman of the subcommittee who reported this bill should have made such statements. He says that we collect only $1,100 in consular fees at Montevideo. What has that to do with it? Are our foreign affairs to be conducted upon propositions of that character?

Mr. HALE. The Senator has made a pretty broad statement that I do not think is customarily made on the floor of the Senate. Does he deny my statement that the consular fees are $1,119?

Mr. CALL. I do not, but I deny the inference drawn that that signifies that no great American interest is there.

Mr. HALE. What statement did I make which justifies the Senator in declaring that it is without ground?

Mr. CALL. The statement that there are no great American interests and no large commercial interests there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine insist on his point of order?

Mr. HALE. I am willing that the point of order——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is not debatable.

Mr. HALE. I am willing that the Senator from Florida should go on and discuss it if he wants to do so. I do not withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate may proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. CALL. The committee has refused to consider it, and therefore the argument is that the Senate must refuse to consider it. I do not propose to discuss the point of order; it has been so often discussed. It seems when the Senate is disposed to consider a thing it is in order, and when it is not, following the lead of the committee, it is not in order; but, as I have said, the whole proposition of the Senator from Maine on this point is a mistake. I understand him to state that there are no American interests, either present or prospective, of sufficient importance in Uruguay and Paraguay or the river La Plata which require a representative—from the United States.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is entirely mistaken. I said nothing whatever about there being no interests of importance on the river La Plata. I say that when you come to Uruguay and Paraguay the business that in any way comes there under our minister or consul is so small that it does not justify the increase of the salary of the minister.

Mr. CALL. And you read the receipt of $1,100 fees by the consul.

Mr. HALE. That applies to the consulate at Montevideo. I do not go into the question. I, in fact, stated that the case of the Argentine Republic is entirely different. There we have a minister who is made an envoy extraordinary. We have a consul, and we have other Government officers there, because there is something there to foster. I was confining my remarks to this particular region.

Mr. CALL. You have said that at Uruguay and Paraguay American interests needed no representation. You contrasted these with the Argentine Republic. Now I propose to show that the interest at Uruguay and Paraguay is very nearly equal to that at the Argentine Republic, and that there is exactly the same necessity for a minister and a representative in those countries that there is at the Argentine Republic. That is the point I make. This arrangement by the Committee on Appropriations for the development of American interests and their representative abroad has nothing whatever in point of fact to justify it. Now let us see.

In the consular report, made on the 23d of February, 1881, we find the following:

Shipments from the River Plate to the United States during the year 1880.

Montevideo.	Paysandor.	Buenos Ayres.	Rosario.

We find from Montevideo $5,456,891.62 of total value. We find from Buenos Ayres $5,994,169.07, being a difference between Montevideo and Buenos Ayres of $500,000 in round numbers.

What justification is there, when the commerce of this country in productions imported from Uruguay and Paraguay to the United States is very nearly equal to that of the Argentine Republic, for giving an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to that country and sending to Uruguay and Paraguay, as the Senator says, no representative whatever? It is true it is one of the regions recently opened to American immigration, enterprise, manufacture, and investment; and they exhibit the most favorable disposition towards our people and our productions under the influence of our present able and accomplished diplomatic representative there. It was at one time made a desolation by arbitrary, cruel usurpation and tyranny, but they are recovering from it under institutions like our own. There are Americans resident there, and with its fertile soil and ingenious people it promises a commerce for which we pay annually five million four hundred-odd thousand dollars, nearly the same amount that we pay the Argentine Republic in money and exports, while we export to Uruguay and Paraguay in return little or nothing.

United States interests require protection by a representative of our Government there. Our people have so requested, and the Department of State has recommended $10,000 for two ministers—one to Paraguay and one to Uruguay—but I think the evidence shows that it will be much better to give this one able and accomplished minister, who has done so much and made so favorable an impression, $7,500, instead of $10,000 for two representatives asked for by the Department of State.

Then, again, why should we send representatives anywhere? Of what use are they? Because Americans are going there and commerce always seeks extension and they want protection. They want this Government visibly and ably represented there. They want some person armed with the authority, the dignity, and the power of the Government, and with the right of access to the foreign government to protect them and their business interests, or how can they trade? Enterprising people in my own State from the ports of the Gulf are seeking trade towards and in Central American and South American ports.

We have lines of steamers established by Northern gentlemen, Mr. H. B. Plant and his associates, and we have brave and hardy Southern sailors from Pensacola to Key West—brave and enterprising as any in the world—trading in their small vessels, who are increasing our trade between the Gulf ports and these countries, and they desire that we should have a representative there; and are we to sit still here with bills like this affording no adequate support for our foreign representatives, with niggardly salaries, forbidding men of character and enterprise to continue to represent and forward this promise of a great commerce, and really disgracing and discouraging the American business men who seek to carry their money and their enterprise into these ports. This is a case in point which has come within my observation from people in my own part of the country, men with money, and brave and hardy sailors without money, who are building up trade and commerce with that country. I know the facts. They are certified by the statements in consular reports here, the last that we have. These show that as between these two fertile states, with so large an area of unoccupied soil, having gone through the throes of revolution, American and European intercourse is developing their great resources and is making their trade valuable and of great promise. They desire increased trade and commercial relations with our people. Every year they increase their business largely and they are nearly equal in every respect to the Argentine Republic, to which we give an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at a salary of $10,000 a year.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Florida I will not say, as he did, was making a false statement, but he was mistaken in the fact.

Mr. CALL. I never used such language as saying that a Senator made a false statement.

Mr. HALE. We do not give the minister at the Argentine Republic $10,000; we only give him $7,500. This is not a question which ought to detain the Senate at all, whether the United States should have any representative with a fitting and proper rank applied to him in Uruguay and Paraguay. He already stands with the same rank as a minister resident under this bill with the ministers to Denmark, Hayti, Portugal, Bolivia, Siam, and Switzerland, $5,000. The only question is whether that shall be raised, as reported in the bill, to $7,500. I do not think that is justified. I do not think the situation justifies it. I do not go back to 1881 to read reports of that year. The last report given out for the year 1887 shows all the business that came under the control of our consul there to have been such that the fees only amounted to $1,119 and some odd cents. That is the whole question, whether this position shall be raised in salary above what is reported in the bill. Under the facts, I feel constrained to make the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement in connection with the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. There are many incongruities in the diplomatic service, it seems to me, and many irregularities in the pay of the diplomatic agents of this Government abroad. It comes within my knowledge that this official at Montevideo is very inadequately paid. It is getting to be an extremely important diplomatic office. The tendency is to enlarge the trade and commerce with the country, and the present diplomatic officer of the United States has been instrumental in creating a favorable impression on the people, and I trust that his pay will be something like equal to the responsibilities of the position he occupies. His position has been changed in this bill from chargé d'affaires to minister resident and consul-general, with a salary of $5,000. I find in the same bill an amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate:

Minister resident in Hawaiian Islands, $7,500.
Minister resident and consul-general in Corea, $7,500.

Then I find in the bill:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, the United States of Colombia, Turkey, Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, and Venezuela, at $7,500 each.

It seems to me that the countries of Paraguay and Uruguay are cotainly as important in any aspect of the question, whether commercial or otherwise, to the United States as some of those I have just mentioned, and I can not understand, I confess, why it is that the minister resident at the Hawaiian Islands should be given $7,500 salary, and the minister resident and consul-general at Corea $7,500, and the minister resident to Uruguay and Paraguay only $5,000. Corea is almost terra incognita. It is of very recent date that the outside world has had any transaction whatever with the Corean Islands. I can not for the life of me see the consistency or the wisdom or the propriety of giving the resident minister and consul-general to Paraguay and Uruguay $5,000, and giving those others $7,500. The city of Montevideo is one of the most expensive cities for residence certainly in South America, and the salary is entirely inadequate for the support of the minister there in anything like a respectable position in the position he occupies. I trust, therefore, that the Senator from Maine will withdraw the point of order and permit the minister at Uruguay and Paraguay to be paid as similar officers to the Hawaiian Islands and to Corea and the Netherlands, and Sweden and Norway, and Venezuela.

I see that these officials are graded from the four first-class missions at $17,500 each to the missions to Austria, Brazil, China, Italy, Japan, Spain, and Mexico at $12,000 each; and then come Chili and Peru at $10,000; Costa Rica, Honduras, Nicaragua, and San Salvador at $10,000. And yet it is proposed to pay the minister resident at Uruguay and Paraguay but $5,000.

I take it for granted, of course, if the point of order is insisted upon it is fatal to this amendment. It will be remembered that at the last session of Congress, when it was proposed to make this salary $7,500, the point of order was raised then; but I trust my friend from Maine will not insist on the point of order.

Mr. HALE. If I had my way, if this was left in accordance with the real needs of a minister there, I would strike it out entirely. There is no reason in the world why this minister should receive any more than the minister to Bolivia, Denmark, Hayti, Portugal, Siam, or Switzerland. It is not to be compared with the mission to the Hawaiian Islands. Our relations with that people are delicate, liable at any time to involve the whole question of annexation, a people that is sensitive about the representatives that are sent there. Everybody for years has understood that at the Sandwich Islands it was proper that we should keep an important minister, an able man, in view of what may arise at any time involving questions there. There are no such questions in relation to Paraguay and Uruguay.

Perhaps it is because I have not the same personal interest in this man who is there that the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Florida have that it follows that I do not believe his place is of such extravagant importance. There is not, in my judgment, any need of a minister there at all; but I am willing that he should remain at $5,000. I am not willing for one that he should remain there with any more.

Mr. BUTLER. It is not a question about personal interest in regard to the incumbent of the place; but I am conscientious and clear in my belief that he is inadequately paid. I think the Senator from Maine belittles the importance of the post. I think he is entirely misinformed geographically and commercially.

Mr. HALE. It is a curious thing that until the change was made and the present minister went down there nobody ever heard of the importance of this place and the necessity of increasing his salary. Just as soon as a new man gets in he can not wait until the old man is put out; he not only wants to have the place with the old salary, but he wants the salary increased, wants more money, wants to get more out of the Treasury. We have had a minister there for years who was content with $5,000, and nobody was hurt when the place was abolished. But now there is a new man in who has gone down there in hot haste, turning the old man out, and his salary must be raised. I am opposed to it not only on the point of order, but as a matter of principle.

Mr. BUTLER. The old man was not turned out, and I do not think the present minister ought to be responsible for the sins of somebody else. The new man has been there now for two years, and I take it that, like everybody else, he wants to do the best he can. But apart from that I really and sincerely think he is inadequately paid. He has been there as chargé d'affaires up to this time, and the salary has been $5,000. Now the committee have raised him to a minister resident. They have thought the position of sufficient importance to make him minister resident and consul-general, and yet the Senator says the post might be abolished.

Mr. HALE. That was done on the request of his friends, because it would give him a better chance to get audience with whatever government there is there. It was done as a matter of favor to him, that he might have the title of minister resident, so that he should not have to get a special dispensation for an audience with a minister of foreign affairs, if there is any such officer in this place. But now, because that has been done as a matter of favor to increase his accommodation, not in any way adding a penny to his expenses, it is argued from that that he ought to have the increased salary.

The committee would have done better to have left him where he was, but it was willing to make him minister resident as is our representative to Portugal, to Siam, and to Bolivia, and other countries in order to give him a chance to see "the powers that be" and not have to get a dispensation in order to have a personal interview; but it does not add a cent to his expenses.

Mr. BUTLER. I take it for granted that this very additional opportunity he has to receive this special dispensation from somebody—I do not know who; I did not know these things had to be disbursed by special dispensation, if I may use the expression, but if that be true and he now has access within a circle to the presence of royalty, as he has to wear royal robes, etc., I take it for granted his expenses are increased.

Mr. HALE. He could get there before, but he had to go a roundabout way. This carries him straight.

Mr. BUTLER. Then it would require, as a matter of course, some additional expense to buy these royal robes and so on.

Mr. HALE. No. The Senator must know that our ministers abroad, unlike those of other countries, do not wear royal robes. That was settled years ago. They appear in a very plain, modest, and nonpicturesque garb; and whether they are chargés d'affaires, ministers resident, or of the higher grade of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, they wear the same clothes exactly and are not allowed to wear royal robes. That is a matter fixed by regulation, and, for aught I know, by statute.

Mr. BUTLER. I am aware of that, but I had supposed that by reason of what the Senator from Maine said some additional paraphernalia was necessary in order to get into the presence of royalty.

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not know but that that might be true, and hence I made the suggestion of additional expenses. It is very true that our ministers abroad find it very difficult to distinguish themselves from the head-waiter of a hotel or of a royal house. I have no doubt about that. They go in very simple garb; they are republicans. I have no quarrel to make with them on that account; but there are certain expenses which it seems have to be incurred by this gentleman, and which ought to be allowed by the Government.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine withdraw the point of order?

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the Senator proceeding.

Mr. MORGAN. I had hoped that opportunity would be furnished to the Committee on Foreign Relations to examine this bill before it was brought before the Senate for action. The bill was brought in here from the House of Representatives on the 22d of May, which was on a Tuesday, when it was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That was two weeks ago to-day. Since that time, owing to the absence of Senators, we have not been able to have a quorum of the Committee on Foreign Relations; in fact there has been no meeting of the committee since that time and no quorum attending.

I desired to bring up before that committee the subject of our diplomatic relations with the South American states. We have had the matter before the committee during the present session of Congress, and reported a bill, which has become a law, providing for a conference with the South American and Central American states, I believe next spring, for the purpose of looking over the general field of our relations, monetary and commercial, and political as well, and arriving or attempting to arrive at some general line of policy by which the intercourse and trade between the United States and the Central and South American states may be increased. The proposition which is made here to increase the salary of the minister resident to Uruguay and Paraguay is in that direction, and it is really a proper part of that movement.

I understand—I am perhaps not very accurately informed about it—that the estimates sent in by the Secretary of State were for two missions, one to Uruguay and the other to Paraguay, at $5,000 each. I ask the Senator from Maine if I am correct about that.

Mr. HALE. There have been several estimates of that kind.

Mr. MORGAN. Sent in at the present session?

Mr. HALE. There are several estimates for increasing missions and salaries. None of them were incorporated in the House bill.

Mr. MORGAN. That does not affect the question of order. The House bill combines the two missions into one, and I take it that, equitably at least, the estimate of $10,000 for the two missions would cover $7,500 when they are consolidated and put into one mission, and the point of order probably would not be well taken if that be true.

Mr. HALE. There has been no consolidation of these missions in this bill. The law at present gives a joint mission to Uruguay and Paraguay, and the House committee have not consolidated them in this bill. That has been the law for some time. I stated that the law at one time abolished entirely and then restored the joint mission to this place, with a chargé d'affaires at $5,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On what proposition does the Senator make the point of order?

Mr. HALE. The proposition of increasing the salary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On what provision of the rule?

Mr. HALE. It increases the appropriation as reported in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator insist on the point of order because it has not been reported by the committee?

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that it does increase an appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It still might be in order.

Mr. HALE. It is a fact that it has not been reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It still might be in order although it increases an appropriation.

Mr. HALE. Not unless the committee reported it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If estimated for by the head of a Department.

Mr. HALE. But there is no estimate for increasing this salary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to be informed in order that he may know what division of the rule the Senator from Maine relies upon in making his point of order.

Mr. HALE. There is no recommendation either of the Department or of the committee that the salary of this minister be raised.

Mr. MORGAN. I was under a misapprehension about the form in which this estimate came here. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] informs me that there is an estimate here for a salary of $10,000 for a minister to Uruguay and Paraguay sent in by the State Department.

Mr. HALE. There is an estimate for two ministers at $5,000 each, but there is no estimate for raising the joint mission. That would involve another question, as of course the Chair sees.

Mr. MORGAN. There seems to be a great deal of confusion about that. I do not understand now that there are two ministers estimated for by the Secretary of State, one to Uruguay and the other to Paraguay.

Mr. HALE. That is precisely what the Department estimate for.

Mr. MORGAN. If that is the state of the case, and the House and the Senate conclude that it is better to hold to the old arrangement, and have the Government of the United States represented by one minister to both these governments, then I say again, equitably, if not technically, the estimate for $10,000 would cover the $7,500 provided for in the amendment, the House and Senate disagreeing with the Secretary of State as to the form of the mission merely, a saving of $2,500 by cutting down his estimate.

It seems to me that the point of order comes in rather a peculiar shape. I have never seen it before in the Senate in a shape like this.

I have not any authority to speak for the Committee on Foreign Relations, but knowing the views of that committee, as I think I do, on questions of this kind, particularly in reference to the South American missions, I feel very confident that we should have their recommendation, their very earnest recommendation, for the raising of this minister resident to that sort of dignity and that sort of position which is common to all ministers representing the United States in South American States, none of whom gets less than $7,500, except the minister to Paraguay and Uruguay. It would be a very great mistake if we should fail to recognize the growing prosperity of the countries along La Plata River, that pour their tribute of wealth now with such wonderful rapidity into the Bay of Montevideo. That is a port receiving the chief products of both these republics, lying one, I believe, on one side and one on the other of this great river.

There is not any part of the civilized world that now excels the countries occupied by the Argentine Republic and Urnguay and Paraguay in progress and development of every kind and character. There is no country where the German and English Governments seek commerce with greater avidity than they do in that portion of South America. The capacity of that region for growing stock of every description—horses, cattle, and sheep—is really unparalleled. It is becoming also a very fertile country in the cereals. They are exporting wheat now from that region to Buenos Ayres and from Buenos Ayres to Rio de Janeiro and to various other ports of South America, of which we have had heretofore almost exclusive control as to flour.

The truth is that the resources of that country are unparalleled. It is said to be a country with elevated table-land, very much resembling that portion of the United States which covers the area between the lakes and the northern boundary of our country, extending from the Atlantic Ocean toward the Mississippi River, a region of unexampled fertility, into which they are introducing a very large amount of agricultural machinery from the United States. We happen to excel in that branch of manufactures, and the people throughout that whole region of the world are taking our products in the way of agricultural machinery very rapidly, and exchanging for them hides, tallows, and other productions of that part of the earth.

The latest statistics I have been able to obtain in regard to Uruguay and Paraguay are found in the "Statesman's Year Book" for 1887. I have seen a later and very much better account written by some gentleman in Harper's Magazine, which is a very excellent article. I forget his name, but he is a gentleman well known to many persons. I extract from this Statesman's Year Book some data in regard to the value of that country. Speaking of Paraguay, it is said—

An enumeration made by the government in 1857 showed the population to number 1,337,439 souls.

It must be twice or perhaps three times that number now, for the influx of population by immigration has been very great in all that section of country.

The chief article of foreign commerce of Paraguay is the yerba maté, or Paraguayan tea, made of the leaves of the Ilex Paraguayensis tree, dried and reduced to powder, which are extensively consumed in all the States of South America. The value of this export in 1881 was 910,925 pesos; in 1882, 964,800 pesos, and in 1884, 729,351 pesos; the other chief export being tobacco, in 1881, 658,650 pesos; in 1882, 410,380, and in 1884, 248,900 pesos. The total exports in 1881 amounted to 1,928,545 pesos, in 1882 to 1,650,676 pesos, in 1883 to 1,766,457 pesos, and in 1884 to 1,572,297 pesos. In 1881 the imports were valued at 1,294,465 pesos, in 1882 at 1,320,125 pesos, in 1883 at 953,076 pesos, and in 1884 at 1,148,120 pesos. The chief imports are textiles, valued at 596,564 pesos in 1884, 35 per cent., from Great Britain; foods and drinks, 384,524 pesos. About 48 per cent. of the total imports come from Britain.

That is one of these two countries to which we are sending this minister. I will refer now to some statistics of the other country, Uruguay. The imports in 1885 of Uruguay were $25,275,476 and the exports $25,253,000. Of the total Great Britain exported to Uruguay $7,381,860 in value, while the United States exported to that country $2,045,107. The imports of Great Britain from Uruguay during that year were $4,885,456, and of the United States $4,370,591.

The principal articles of export are animals, 762,000 pesos, in 1885; preserved meat and extract, 4,960,000 pesos; skins and hides, 7,760,000 pesos; tallow, 2,215,000 pesos; wool, 7,338,000 pesos. The total export of animal products (besides live animals) in 1885 is valued at 23,462,518 pesos, and of agricultural products 633,797 pesos. Nearly the whole of the exports and imports of the Republic pass through Montevideo, the capital, at the mouth of the Rio de la Plata.

I need not go any further to present statistics, although our own statistical tables are important to be considered in this connection; but enough appears from what I have already read to show that we have a very important traffic that we ought to be cultivating with Uruguay and Paraguay.

I understand one of the best ways of arriving at it is, first of all, to send an honorable representative in the diplomatic branch to those governments whose trade and commerce we desire to cultivate; and in order to have a man of proper character, and to have him properly respected and in proper position, he ought to have a salary sufficient, at least, to enable him to live with some degree of comfort.

Now, let me ask why it is that we should make a discrimination in the salary of our minister to Uruguay and Paraguay, as between those countries, two of which are combined in this mission, and the other republics of South America. Buenos Ayres lies just across the bay from Montevideo, perhaps 150 or 200 miles, and across a bay that is almost entirely landlocked. The two places have a large correspondence in commerce. The number of ships entering the port of Montevideo in 1885 is stated as follows:

There entered at the port of Montevideo in 1885 1,249 foreign vessels of 1,222,962 tons, and cleared 1,161 vessels of 1,221,223 tons; over 60 per cent. of the tonnage was British. In the river and coasting trade there entered 3,326 vessels of 1,163,283 tons, and cleared 3,419 vessels of 1,189,434 tons.

There were railways of a total length of 271 English miles open for traffic in 1885. The telegraphic lines in operation at the end of June, 1883, were of a total length of 1,405 English miles, including 295 miles of coast cables.

The post-office carried 3,147,370 letters, 28,811 post-cards, and 9,027,200 samples and printed papers in the year 1885. The receipts of the post-office in recent years were insufficient to cover the expenditure.

These statements show a very active state of business, and the facts are not given here fully because that country is outgrowing the records of the past with great rapidity. What would measure the prosperity of that country in 1885 would scarcely be accepted as a fair measure of its prosperity in 1888, and we ought to progress in the means through which we communicate with that country somewhat in a parallel movement with the progress of the country itself.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to suggest to him, speaking of the progress of this section, particularly of Uruguay, that the recent improvement there, as shown by the latest financial statements from Europe, is that the value of their lands, their banking capital, and all that, is three times what it was in 1885.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no doubt about that, and I was about to observe that the city of Montevideo, in which this minister resides, is a health resort. It is a place to which the people of Buenos Ayres, who are very rich and have an enormous commerce extending with wonderful progress and rapidity—the people of Buenos Ayres, where the location is not quite so healthy and pleasant as at Montevideo, go up there on a line of steamers which run between the two cities in a very few hours and spend their winter season (which is our summer season) at this place of refreshment and resort, bringing to Montevideo a very enlightened and splendid population. I doubt, sir, if you can find on the Atlantic coast of this country, outside of our great cities, a population that is superior to that which assembles in Buenos Ayres and Montevideo. If we have a minister there at all, that man ought to be able to live in something of a style becoming the fact of his being the minister resident and consul-general of the United States. This Government is not so poor that it can not afford to honor a man who is sent to a country like this with which we have such growing commercial connection, by giving to him a compensation the equal at least of that of our representatives to other South American republics. This is a narrow piece of legislation, it is not worthy of the condition of this country, and I am quite satisfied that if the Committee on Foreign Relations had had an opportunity to express themselves on this question, which they have not had, they would present very strong reasons to the Senate why this salary ought to be increased at least to $7,500 a year. The bill puts it at $5,000 a year, every other South American mission being $7,500.

Mr. HALE. The ministers resident at Bolivia, Denmark, and Hayti receive $5,000. Bolivia is in South America.

Mr. MORGAN. I ought to have excepted Bolivia; I remember now that mission is $5,000. I do not know the gentleman who is there. I know nothing about him. I hope he is a good representative. He ought to be if he is not, because he is representing us at a very interesting country. He is brought into contact with prospects that the merchants and agriculturists and manufacturers of this country must look to with considerable interest because of the market which is there afforded to our people for productions of every kind.

I may say here that if there is one view of American policy in which I feel more interest than I do in all the balance so far as it regards foreign intercourse, it is that we shall cultivate the most amicable and intimate commercial relations with the people of South America. That is the kitchen-garden of the United States. In almost the entire area of South America, except the particular country about which I am now speaking, the products are not those which are made in this part of the hemisphere. Our products are naturally interchangeable with their productions, and commerce with South America can be carried on with a less use of money for the purpose of paying balances than with any other countries that we trade with at all. It is very largely a barter trade, almost exclusively a barter trade, and we should have in that an advantage which is, I think, very great in all commercial transactions. I will illustrate with the case of Cuba. We take from Cuba, I believe, about $80,000,000 of sugar, and we send to Cuba, I will say, $15,000,000—I believe not exceeding that—of our own productions. The difference of course between what we take from them in sugar and send to them in our products must be settled in money. It is a very great drain upon the finances of any country to have money circulating back and forth to pay the balances between us and Cuba. If by some commercial arrangement we could interchange productions with Cuba, I should say that that would be very greatly to the advantage of the people of the United States, and that this money that goes abroad to that island for the purpose of paying balances would be employed here in the activities of industry, and it would be something of immense value to our people if this arrangement could be made, or some arrangement of the kind.

Well, we are tending in that direction. We are all anxious, I know, to get the trade of South America. More than that, these people in South America have with heroic purpose adhered to the system of government established by the United States, which overturned the traditional ideas and affections of every Spanish descendant in the world, for if there is a natural-born monarchist that man is a Spaniard. But these people accepted our example, commencing as far back as 1822 or 1824, have spread with their independence the republican system of confederated states, with a national union all over the whole continent of South America excepting Brazil and a few possessions that mainly belong to France, Germany, and Great Britain, a very small area indeed.

They have had very great difficulties, very great struggles to overcome their own prejudices against free constitutional government. They have also been loaded down there by constitutional provisions which fastened upon them a fixed church polity, while we in the South had a constitutional provision that fastened on this country a slave policy. They have been warring against it year after year, and their efforts to throw it off have been really heroic and entitled to the commendation certainly of all the people of the United States. They have held on to this little flickering light of constitutional liberty in the midst of storms and darkness, and when a people with less heroism and less determination would have given up their purpose and relinquished it and lapsed back under the rule of some great monarch or king, who would have made the hidalgos rich; but, as I said before, these people have held on to their ideas of American constitutional liberty.

My sympathies for these people are very much akin with that sort of sentiment which animated our people in the years 1820 to 1825, when we came forward and upheld the hands of Bolivar and other great South American patriots and statesmen and soldiers, and enabled these people to plant upon that hemisphere in the South two very important things—one, republican institutions organized under constitutional forms of government, and the other the Christian religion. So I feel all the time as if I were willing to spend some money, as if I were willing to take a step in advance, although it might not be strengthened perhaps by the most practical sort of economy in every instance, in order to encourage and meet these people in their efforts to build up the South American states. I shall welcome them to Washington City with perfect joy when they come here next year to participate with us in our centennial anniversary of the establishment of the Constitution of the United States, which is the foundation after all of their own governments, and I shall be delighted if that shall be the occasion when more liberal views shall pervade all these states and unite much more closely in commerce and every other way, in all the national affections if we may call them such, which ought to characterize the association of republics with each other.

I hope the Senator from Maine will not take the view that the question in this case is so narrow a one that it only relates to the advancement of some gentleman, whom I do not know, from a smaller to a higher salary. If I knew him he might not be a worthy man; but being the representative of my country in the states of Paraguay and Uruguay, and at the great capital of Montevideo, amongst that enlightened and splendid population, I should still insist that he should have out of the Government of the United States a somewhat decent living to maintain the state and dignity of his mission at that very important point.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have no question as to the decision of the point of order by the Chair, but as the discussion has run largely into the general features of this amendment I want to make a brief reply to the Senator from Alabama.

There never is a time in the Senate when it is not pleasant to listen to that Senator. His general information on all subjects that he investigates—and he investigates almost every subject that comes up here—makes his remarks and his views on general subjects of importance and well worthy of consideration; and listening to him now as he brings up the question of encouraging South American trade and of the growth of our trade with those countries, if it were not for the question whether that argument applied to this particular case nobody would have any dispute with him. I am as much in favor of encouraging trade with the South American Republics where it is possible to increase it, as any member of this body. I have always voted and spoken in that direction and taken great interest in the subject-matter. But the question of increasing South American trade is not involved in the question which now arises on the point of order whether the Senate can increase the salary already fixed by law of the minister to Paraguay and Uruguay.

A few facts which I get from the last report of the Treasury Department on the commerce and navigation of the United States, make a complete answer to what has been said by the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Florida as to the increase of our trade with these countries, and they show a distinction that I have made all the while between the Argentine Republic, equally watered, fed, and dependent upon the La Plata River with Paraguay and Uruguay. The two are entirely distinct.

This report shows that the trade by importation from Uruguay with this country has decreased from 1882 to 1887 from $6,800,000 to $2,400,000, and it is running smaller and smaller all the time. These are the imports that we receive from that country; I am coming later to the exports. So that instead of the general view which has been urged here that it is increasing—the Senator from Alabama says you can not tell anything about what there was a few years ago, because it is very much more now—it is precisely the reverse in this case. Our imports from there have run down from almost $7,000,000 to less than two millions and a half. Now, turn to the exports. Our exports in the last six years to the Argentine Republic, represented largely by Buenos Ayres, below the bay, have increased from $2,258,000 to $5,600,000, while those to Uruguay have decreased from $1,536,000 to $1,300,000, and the trade with Paraguay, which is the other country that is represented by this mission, is so insignificant that it is included in "all other countries in South America," the aggregate of which embraces only $106,000, having run down from $700,000 in 1882 to $106,000 now.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the Senator refer to the productions of that country?

Mr. HALE. I refer to our exports and our imports.

Mr. MORGAN. I know that there has been a falling off unquestionably.

Mr. HALE. But it has not been falling off with the Argentine Republic. Our exports to that country have increased from two million and odd up to nearly $6,000,000. The truth is that the trade we have, or are likely to have, is not with these two countries. The general considerations that apply do not apply to Uruguay and Paraguay any more than do the considerations that the Senator last mentioned, that republican institutions have been planted in South America, and that it is our duty to nurse them. There never was a greater violation of the whole republican system, never a greater despotism existed on either continent than existed in Paraguay when she was almost struck from the face of the earth as a nation in the Brazilian contest. It was a dictatorship without limit and had been so for years. The planting of republican institutions, sowing the seed and encouraging it, watering it, increasing it, does not apply to these countries. Paraguay and Uruguay do not stand to-day with the United States on that mark, either by sympathy or by traffic, as compared with the other South American states.

I might go on and amplify upon this and show that the general considerations urged by the Senator do not apply here. I only give the figures as shown by the official reports submitted to us by the Secretary of the Treasury in the annual report on commerce and navigation for the very last year that has been reported to us.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose the Senator, however, may know that Montevideo is situated on the shores of the mouth of the river La Plata, and we have very little intercourse by steamer.

Mr. HALE. There is a large distance between Buenos Ayres and Montevideo. Montevideo lies more directly at the mouth of the river, and Buenos Ayres lies across below on the bay. The two countries are entirely different. The Argentine Republic is the growing republic of the South.

Mr. MORGAN. They are about 150 miles apart, right across the mouth of the river; as the two countries are on the opposite sides of the river, the Argentine Republic and Uruguay and Paraguay being on the opposite sides of the same river. I want to call the Senator's attention to this fact, that the apparent falling away in our commerce with Montevideo is due in a considerable degree, as I am informed, to the fact that our intercourse with that part of the world through the vessels that we have which go there is directly with Buenos Ayres, and the commerce that is really absorbed in Uruguay and Paraguay is credited to Buenos Ayres, so that there is shown a very large increase at Buenos Ayres, while at Montevideo there is a falling away. The truth is that our actual interchange of commodities with Paraguay and Uruguay has been increasing for the last three or four years; otherwise, gentlemen familiar with the country are very incorrect in their statements.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know the minister to either of these countries by name, and I never did know personally any minister that ever was there, and I do not expect to have any personal interest in any minister to South America. In fact, I never did have any personal acquaintance, I believe, with any man that went to South America as a minister of the United States; but I think it is a mistake to suppose that we can afford to let go a country like this, growing as it is more rapidly perhaps to-day than any other portion of South America, especially Uruguay I now speak of having made progress in the last two or three years that is phenomenal and astonishing to everybody, and treat it as a matter of no concern in its commerce and its interests and its welfare and its connection with us.

The Senator from Maine says we are losing some trade. I have not looked up the statements very carefully, but I find that in 1887 the exports were $1,393,000. I have before me the Statesman's Year Book, published in England, and from that it appears that our exports to that country were 1,246,000 pesos. A peso is nearly a dollar—96½ cents—which may be considered practically a dollar. Their exports to this country were something over twice that amount. They furnish, as stated by the Senator from Alabama, very many things that we desire. These South American regions are large producers of cattle, and we have purchased from them a very large amount of hides and a considerable amount of wool within the last few years. We have a great many things that they desire. To-day 48 per cent. of all they buy they buy from Great Britain. Sixty per cent. of all the tonnage that goes into their ports goes from Great Britain, and I find that of all that went into Montevideo 60 per cent. of the tonnage that enters the port is British tonnage, and 48 per cent. of all they buy is of British goods, and they buy of Great Britain much more than they sell to Great Britain. The balance of trade is the other way. There is no reason why we should not have trade with these South American countries, and why we should not have a considerable amount of trade, excepting the fact that we have neglected to secure it.

A few years ago we sent a commission to South America for the purpose of determining what we could do, what steps could be taken to bring us in closer commercial relations with those countries. That commission reported. The report is a very valuable one, and yet since that report was made there has been practically no effort at all made by the Government to take advantage of the information furnished. We have not increased our diplomatic relations with them in any shape that I know of, and without meaning to say anything about the men who have gone there, because, as I say, I do not know them and presume that they are all right, we have not sent the class of men we should have sent, because we have not paid the proper salaries that would induce the proper class of men to desire these places. Every consul that we send to South America ought to be the agent of the manufacturers and producers of this country. There ought to be a close relation with every South American and Central American nation. If there had been attention directed to this and an effort had been made, we might have made our silver dollar the silver dollar of every one of those South American republics without difficulty and without trouble. They are a silver-using people, producing but little themselves of that metal, and would have been glad to have this arrangement with us for trade and commerce and for the interchange of money in that way.

Mr. President, I find on the same page of this bill—

Minister resident and consul-general to Greece, Roumania, and Servia, $6,500.

Will the Senator who has the bill in charge, or anybody else, tell me what our trade with Greece is, or what our trade with Roumania or Servia is, or what our relations are or are likely to be with those countries, that we require $6,500 there to pay the agent of the Government, while $5,000 is sufficient at this place? I doubt whether any man in the Senate can give me a reason why the consul-general to Greece, Roumania, and Servia should get $6,500, while in these South American countries he gets $5,000. Nobody expects to create any traffic, and we have no such relations with those countries as requires so much. There is no reason why there should be this difference—why the one should be paid $5,000 and the other $6,500.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will allow me a word. I do not want to make a speech in the midst of his.

Mr. TELLER. That might help mine.

Mr. HALE. All that the Senator says about increasing trade is entirely true. It never has been said so well as he is saying it now; but it has been gone over repeatedly before. I have had the honor of making speeches going into this whole question; but trade is not going to be built up by increasing the salaries of ministers. They have very little to do with trade. The consuls have to deal with trade, and many Senators believe that the ministers should be abolished and the consular feature advanced. Ministers have nothing to do with trade. We shall never get any trade with these countries until we take hold of other subjects besides increasing the salaries of ministers. We have got to do what other nations have done; we have got to give subsidies and aids to commercial lines, mercantile ventures, so that we may build up a trade, as Great Britain and France and Germany build up their trade. It is not in any way, it is not even remotely, connected with the question of our diplomatic establishment. So the questions which the Senator asks are not pertinent to the consideration of the important subject he has in mind.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Colorado will yield to me a moment. The designation of this officer is "minister resident and consul-general."

Mr. HALE. That never has been so until the present time. There is no necessity of his being a consul-general. He has nothing to do with that. It is put on, and I shall move to strike it off if it be necessary.

Mr. BUTLER. It is there.

Mr. HALE. We have a consul there who attends to all the consular duties connected with trade.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator is mistaken. Governments like Uruguay and Paraguay of course have assigned to them a consul-general in addition to the local consul at Montevideo.

Mr. HALE. They never have had.

Mr. BUTLER. This gentleman as chargé d'affaires had charge of the diplomatic as well as the consular and business part of the mission, and so he has now.

Mr. HALE. He had charge of the diplomatic part, but not the consular part.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, yes, he has.

Mr. TELLER. I do not agree with the Senator from Maine that the ministers have nothing to do with trade. I do not understand, of course, that a minister is the agent of our manufacturers or is allowed to be; but in establishing good relations between the countries he is invaluable. Why do we keep ministers to these countries if they are of no advantage? We want to have ministers there who have skill and ability and who can live in such a way as will give them standing in the community to which they are accredited, in order to bring to us the good-will, the respect of these nations. It is their duty to oversee and to some extent direct the consuls, to bring about the direct results of missions of this kind in the way of trade.

The trade of this South American country is not very valuable; it is worth to us somewhere in the neighborhood of $2,750,000, nearly $3,000,000. We buy of them; they sell to us. They have an army. This little country has an army of 20,000 men, a national guard armed with rifles made in the State of New York. They are not Indians. They have at the capital of the country an institution of learning upon which they spend a half million dollars a year; they have all the civilization that belongs to the age; and I repeat again what I said in reply to a remark made by the Senator from Alabama, I do not think there is any country in the world that has made more progress than it has in the last three years if published European reports are to be accredited. They have increased their banking system; they have increased their commercial relations with the interior of the country and with other countries.

Mr. HALE. The Argentine Republic?

Mr. TELLER. No; I do not mean the Argentine Republic. I mean this little people, less than 600,000 population. They have made a progress and development that are astonishing and almost without parallel. I know it is said by some of the European financiers that they are going too fast and will break down. Possibly they may, but it shows that they have arrived at a stage where they propose to get their part of the world's progress and the world's goods; and it is for us to see whether these people are to be allied to us, as they ought to be, as our neighbors in sympathy with us in form of government and in every other way; and to stand and haggle about $2,500 a year seems to me to be absurd.

We ought to make a determined effort to bring every South American and Central American state in close alliance with us, commercially and politically. Their interest ought to be our interest, and our interest ought to be theirs, and when any nation, whether it be Great Britain or any other, moves upon their territory without their consent it ought to be the duty, and I believe it to be the duty, of this great Government at least to enter a very earnest protest. That would bring these people to us in commercial relations, would make a market for us that can be had in no other place in the world.

We talk about a market for our surplus goods. All Europe is closed against us to-day either by their tariffs or by their cheap labor. If we can send our goods anywhere to find a reasonable market to-day it is to the South American and Central American countries, and nowhere else; and to haggle over whether we shall give $7,500 or $5,000 a year to a minister is, in my judgment, unworthy of a great nation like ours. I would not waste any money on anybody or for any purpose, but I would send men to these countries who are capable of representing this Government in such a way as to command the respect of all the people there, and whose business it should be to bring them to us in close alliance, and when the Government of the United States shall enter upon that career it will provide markets for the surplus that we are producing of our manufactures, and in a thousand other ways that will contribute to the prosperity of the whole country.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, if this were a proposition to really strengthen or increase the trade of the United States, I would very cheerfully vote for it. But it is not such a proposition. In all this matter of ministers plenipotentiaries and envoys extraordinary, and so on, we simply copy from the pattern set by Great Britain and other European countries, and have sent men to foreign posts representing the United States, not to promote the trade of the country, but for the purpose of keeping up a certain show. We think at home that the United States is a good deal of a government; and yet it is a fact that those who represent Hayti, San Domingo, and other countries of the pumpernickel kind outrank the minister from the United States. When the minister of the United States to London is invited to a dinner he goes, if he goes at all, knowing that he is to sit at the foot of the table, while sitting above him are the persons who represent the inferior states, and that is because they are dubbed with a greater title; that is to say, they have greater rank by denomination or designation than is given to the person who goes with the authority of the United States. This only shows that all this is simply playing with what may be called the interests of the country.

We send a minister to London to do what? Simply to dine with the other dignitaries that he meets there, to perform a mere social office around the august court of Queen Victoria. He does no other thing whatever save now and then introduce a person like my friend from South Carolina to the Queen or to some of the lords in waiting. But when it comes to matters concerning the substantial and material interests of the United States he is without consequence. We are simply keeping up in the framework of our diplomatic service the pattern which we copied from Great Britain. We have done nothing more and done nothing less, and all this talk about the minister to Paraguay and Uruguay being of consequence to the commerce of this country is, in my judgment, entirely without foundation.

If instead of a minister to Paraguay, if instead of a minister to London, if instead of a minister to Berlin and to other countries to which we now send representatives of this Government, we were to send strong, wise, intelligent American business men, with ample salaries, we should do something that would return to the people of the United States a benefit by increasing their foreign trade. As it is we send men to perform the social service of which I have spoken, and to revolve as satellites around the central orb of a monarchy to the effect of casting discredit upon republican institutions.

Whoever will look at our treaties, of which we ratify a half dozen at every session of the Senate, will find that they deal not with trade relations, but with an entirely different class of subjects, in which the people of the United States have practically no interest whatever. There has not been any treaty of trade or commerce with Great Britain in thirty years; there has not been a treaty ratified by the Senate for the past twenty-five years which has enlarged the trade horizon of the people of the United States one single iota. The only treaty I can recall which related to that subject even remotely during my term in the Senate is the treaty negotiated with Mexico, which has never been carried into effect. It is because we have based our entire system of intercourse with foreign peoples upon a false basis that we have had such meager results.

I do not object to high salaries. I would be glad to pay a consul to Liverpool $10,000 a year, and similar salaries to consuls at all principal points reached by the trade of the people of the United States or which might possibly be reached by it. It is not a question of money. But as it is we send to these places decayed, broken-down politicians.

There is not a man connected with the State Department to-day who knows anything about the trade or manufacturing interests of the United States. I do not speak of that as a ground of offense at all, but as simply an illustration of the fact that in the matter of our intercourse with foreign people we have got up into what Mr. Conkling so felicitously called the "upper air and solar walk" away from the every-day affairs of life and away from the business concerns of our people, into a domain of society and politics the chief characteristic of which is lying and insincerity. The politics of the outside world is of little consequence to us, consequently we have no need of sending anybody to deal with political relations with those people; but, on the contrary, we ought to send men there to deal with relation to our trade interests, our manufacturing supplies, the products of our soil which are to be exchanged for the products of their soil and the products of the loom and the shop.

This whole bill is based upon a false idea. We give $1,500 for a consul to an important point, and if we have occasion for a minister to that place we give him, as we have given him here, from $5,000 to $7,500, perhaps $10,000 a year. The consul is supposed to do the work. By reason of the limited salary we pay him, we can not get the right kind of a man. The work, therefore, is imperfectly done. But nobody expects the minister to do anything. No one ever did and no one ever will do anything. We never have had a treaty of any consequence negotiated with a great foreign power that was not negotiated in Washington. Our minister to England undertook a few years ago some negotiations about the fisheries business. The moment he got to the essential point everything was taken away from him and the negotiation was carried on by a special commission on the part of both powers sitting here in Washington.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think it would have been better to have left the minister to negotiate the treaty? Does he not think he would have got along better?

Mr. PLUMB. Perhaps he might. I think on the whole the steps he took indicated that he had a more patriotic comprehension of the issues involved than those by whom the treaty was subsequently negotiated. But the fact is that he can not be anything more than a mere pawn upon the chess-board. When it comes to close quarters, when it comes to that which is important, he will undoubtedly be superseded by the agency of the Secretary of State himself, or the President of the United States, or some one appointed for the particular purpose in view. So when it came to the adjustment of our relations with Great Britain after the close of the civil war it was the Joint High Commission which made the treaty that resulted in the Geneva arbitration which made what is known as the Alabama award.

What we want is a thorough reconstruction of the entire business of our intercourse with foreign peoples. I believe it is wise that we should abolish the office of minister to England and minister to all these foreign powers. We should substitute men to be called consuls, or what not, but who should have special charge of the material interests of the people of the United States among the people to whom they are accredited. They ought to be men of the highest ability.

In order to get them, of course we must pay higher salaries. We may get a good consul at London who can do all our business there for $10,000—for less than we pay to the minister whom we send there, because the man whom we send as consul, or as trade agent, or as commercial agent, or by whatever name he might be known, would not be obliged to spend $10,000 or $15,000 a year in entertaining people who are of no more consequence to us than the summer fly. It is the merchants who distribute for the common people, the middle-men generally, and all the agencies that relate to the distribution and exchange of the productions of one country with those of another whom we want to reach. Those people are never reached, they are never seen by the men whom we send as ministers to London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, and St. Petersburg.

We rely upon the underpaid men, the men who are willing to take a foreign position at $1,500 or $2,000 a year to do this business for us. Of course they are inferior people, and these positions have come to be regarded as the rewards of political service. They are filled naturally with a class of inferior persons, with those who are worn out and belated, of no account at home, because no self-respecting American would go abroad for a salary of $1,200 or $1,500 a year; that is to say, the salary would be no inducement when he could make more than that at home. Consequently we take the valetudinarians, the played-out people, and send them abroad at insufficient salaries to perform these great and important functions for the people of the United States.

Mr. President, if we are to have better trade relations with Paraguay and Uruguay, and with South America generally, we do not need to send down there men bearing the commission of the United States as ministers plenipotentiary with a large salary or with any salary at all. We want to abolish that office, and to put in place of it an office having a plain, straightforward duty connected with it, in which the people of the United States have some interest, and which can be filled, as it will be, by some man who is keenly alive to the interest of the people of the United States, thoroughly conversant with them, and not some one who is concerned in the mere tinsel, in the frills and furbelows of the kind of intercourse which those indulge in whom we send abroad as ministers plenipotentiary.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Kansas can not be serious when he means to say that we shall dismiss our ministers to foreign countries and rely upon commercial agents and consuls for all communications with those governments.

Mr. PLUMB. And the telegraph.

Mr. TELLER. If we have trouble with a foreign power we must approach that foreign power according to a regular system which has grown up among civilized people. We can get at them in no other way; and while it is probably true that some of our ministers are of very little consequence (probably the minister to Persia has very little to do, and the minister to Greece has very little to do, and so in some other regions in the world), yet nobody can say but that the minister to Great Britain, ever since we have had a minister there, has not occasionally had the most delicate and important duties to perform, duties that nobody, not even the Senator from Kansas, would think of intrusting to a commercial agent or a business man, duties which are only to be handled and treated by either born or trained diplomats—questions with which the brightest and best business man would be as little qualified to deal as an infant.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas that trade must be largely sought, if at all, through the commercial agents and through the consuls; but the very minister whose salary it is proposed to raise is a consul-general. He has to act in the double capacity, performing the delicate functions of a minister, if occasion requires, and he has to perform the more important sometimes, and sometimes less important, functions of a commercial agent or consul-general.

The only question is whether the best men in the country can be obtained and can afford to go away from this country, leaving their business, and stay for the limited period unfortunately that our ministers and commercial agents have been allowed to stay abroad at the salary proposed to be given.

I wish to say one other thing with reference to what the Senator from Kansas said about the class of men we have sent abroad. As a general rule the ministers we have sent abroad from this country have been men who have been no discredit to us. That has been proved. It has not been the policy of preceding administrations, whatever it may be now, to remove commercial agents and consuls who are business officers upon a change of administration. So there had grown up in all the great European cities a system of commercial agencies and consulships that was creditable to the Government. A change in the administration may have made some difference. Undoubtedly it has; that is to say, some of them were removed when the terms expired for which they had been appointed, and others filled their places with less experience and with less knowledge of the subjects with which they were called to deal. The Senator is a member of the subcommittee which considered this bill perhaps.

Mr. PLUMB. Not of the subcommittee.

Mr. TELLER. He is a member of the general committee at least which passed upon this bill; and I think the committee ought to have inquired why we should give to the minister at Corea $7,500 when the total exports of that country last year were less than the trade between the United States and Uruguay. All that they bought and all that they sold was less than the trade both ways between Uruguay and the United States. I know of course that it is important to have a man of sense and of ability there, for he may have delicate missions to perform in looking after the welfare of American citizens in that foreign land, and that is a part of every minister's business. A ship manned with American sailors gets into trouble with some foreign ship, and to whom do they apply? First to the consul. If it is a matter which ought to be brought to the attention of the Government the consul applies at once to the minister, and the minister to the foreign power. There is no waiting to send over to this country. It is worth something that an American citizen abroad shall know to whom he may apply—not a mere commercial agent, not a mere seller of goods or buyer of wares, but a man who understands the law that should govern the treatment of the subjects or citizens of another nation. It is worth something to them that they can appeal to a man who knows what the law is and what the usages and customs have been among civilized nations, and what is demanded and what will be demanded not only by his Government but by the civilized world of the nation whose citizen it is supposed has committed some infraction of international law.

Mr. PLATT. Have we that kind of representatives abroad?

Mr. TELLER. A Senator inquires whether we have that kind of representatives abroad. I do not know. I am not now speaking of what we have, but of the system. I do not know whether the foreign offices are filled with the men they ought to be filled with. Upon that point I am not qualified to speak, because I have given no attention to it. I only speak of what ought to be the rule; of what ought to be the character of the men who represent this great nation.

But I can speak with some degree of pride as to the character of the men who have heretofore filled the high offices at least, like ministers to these great powers. The Senator from Kansas says that our minister sits at the foot of the table. Very well; he sits there because we will that he shall sit there, because simply three or four words put into an appropriation bill creating him an embassador instead of a minister would give him rank equal to that of the copper-colored Asiatic who goes to the English court as an embassador.

I have propounded the question for ten years to the men who are charged with this branch of the public service, and the only reason that I have ever heard given was given the other day in another body, when it was said that the republican simplicity of this country would be embarrassed by receiving a man of so high rank who was in international law and theory the immediate representative of the throne. If there was ever anything that deserves to be called "bosh" in a public place like this, that kind of reasoning deserves it. Why should we not have an embassador, if the Emperor of Germany should send an embassador here? If we had embassadors there, it is said we should have to receive embassadors. Why should we not receive embassadors? Who are more fit and who have a better right to receive embassadors than the 60,000,000 people in this country? Why should we not receive them, and why should we not receive them with the American simplicity with which we receive the ministers? Could we be expected to put on any extra service or to do anything that we had not done when we received the ministers? That is all nonsensical. It is barely possible if we gave them this high rank that we might be required to spend a little more money in order to be equal with the other embassadors. But suppose we did. Can we not afford it? If it is worth while to keep a minister to England, what difference does it make to us whether we pay him $17,500, or $25,000, or $35,000, or $40,000? If it is worth while to keep him there at all, it is worth while to keep him there in dignity, so that he will command the respect of the people.

I know it was said by the Senator from Kansas that negotiations are usually concluded here. I am free to say that I believe it would have been better if the recent negotiations between our country and Great Britain had been left to the American minister in London. I have looked carefully over every line and every word that he has said on that subject, and I have not yet found a single line that any American citizen need find fault with. It is commendable that he at least, whatever others may have done, understood the rights of the American people, and proposed, so far as he was concerned, to maintain them. I believe that has been the history of our foreign ministers through all time, and I think it is as indispensable that we should have foreign ministers as it is that we should have consuls.

There are very many other things that we ought to have which we do not have in reference to the creation of trade, with regard to which I do not propose to speak upon this bill, but I may upon some other at some future time.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, there are two questions involved in the amendment which I have presented. One is the comparative, direct importance of Paraguay and Uruguay to the business and commerce of this country. I read from the commercial reports of our consuls for the year 1881–'82. I understood the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to say that as compared with the Argentine Republic, where it is admitted that it is advisable to have a diplomatic representative of the highest rank except one, and of adequate salary, the business of the two countries was largely in favor of the Argentine Republic; that that had increased, while that of Uruguay and Paraguay had decreased. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has shown by an examination of the special facts of the case that that is an illusory statement; that the trade of Buenos Ayres has a large portion of the Paraguayan and Uruguayan production included in it.

But the statement is not correct that the trade with the Argentine Republic has increased. It has decreased a million dollars. From the statement which we have of foreign commerce made to the Treasury Department on the 30th of June, 1887, we find that the gross amount of trade with the United States of the Argentine Republic for 1882 was $5,234,000, and in 1887 it was $4,100,000, a decrease of a million dollars.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator look at the export trade on page 37?

Mr. CALL. This is the aggregate value of the imports.

Mr. HALE. Now look at the export trade, which is our own trade, which is of much more importance than the import trade, on page 37 of the same report. Look at the trade of the Argentine Republic and also look at that of Uruguay.

Mr. CALL. I find there is an increase in our exports to the Argentine Republic from $2,258,000 in 1881, to $5,671,729 in 1887, and that in Uruguay there was an export trade in 1886 of $1,536,000, and in 1887 of $1,393,000, there being a difference of some $200,000.

Mr. HALE. Did the Senator give the export trade of the Argentine Republic? I did not hear.

Mr. CALL. Yes; I gave that of the Argentine Republic.

Mr. HALE. There is a very large increase?

Mr. CALL. Yes; there is a large increase in our export trade.

Mr. HALE. In our own products?

Mr. CALL. Yes; in our own products, and there is a decrease of $200,000 in Uruguay and Paragnay; but there is a total decrease in the amount of the importations from that country to this, which, of course, involves trade of an absolute amount of $1,000,000 since 1881 by this table.

Mr. HALE. Taking the aggregate together the increase more than balances the decrease.

Mr. CALL. No; that can not be.

Mr. HALE. The amount of decrease in imports from the Argentine Republic is about a million dollars. The amount of increase of our export trade of our own product, which, of course, is much more important, is between two and three million dollars, so that, taking the two together, there is an aggregate increase of nearly $2,000,000.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to inquire if this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I give notice that upon the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Florida I shall ask for the regular order. I should like first to ask the Senator from Maine whether he proposes to withdraw the point of order?

Mr. HALE. No, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I shall call for the regular order upon the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. As I stated, there was a decrease of $1,000,000 in the amount exported from the Argentine Republic in that period of time, and there was a large decrease also in the importations from Uruguay and Paraguay. But what does that import? If it imports anything it is that we have neglected, by the absence of any diplomatic efforts, the trade of the states of Uruguay and Paraguay, just what we are seeking to supply now; and that is vindicated by the fact that in the absence of any communication, direct and diplomatic, between this country and Uruguay and Paraguay this decrease in our trade and intercourse with them has occurred, while the total production of these two states, with their limited population, was nearly equal to that of the Argentine Republic, and therefore an object to be sought for.

Of what kind of value is the proposition that we shall make no efforts to acquire close relations with a country producing equally as much as another country, the importance of whose connections is urged upon us because we have some kind of trade with them? The proposition upon which this motion to amend the bill is made is that Paraguay and Uruguay are valuable producing states; that they have a population capable of consuming and paying for American productions; and that its capacity is equal to that of the Argentine Republic. That comprehends the whole question. If it is so it is an object worthy of seeking to acquire.

I have evidence here by the statements of our consular agents that the disposition of those people is favorable to it. What is it? Our trade in leather, which is a great American industry with the Argentine states and with Uruguay and Paraguay, is about the same. Hides are imported from Uruguay and Paraguay, and the leather interest of this country is largely connected, according to these statistics, with making close relations with Uruguay and Paraguay.

It is said that there is no function for a minister to perform. What foundation is there for that idea? Is it reasonable? Is it based upon a proper analysis of the necessities which have demanded between civilized states various grades of diplomatic representation and intercourse? Let us see. General statements are always delusive; they import nothing. There can be no reasoning upon a mere general affirmation, which is merely an assertion of opinion by some one. But what is the fact? What does a minister do? He has two functions. One is to establish definitively the principles of official intercourse, of alliance, or of enmity and hostility, the relations which belong to peace or war. These are questions which concern the international relations, the public law of the world. You can not have a business man who has never devoted himself to investigating these questions deal with diplomatists upon a code of international law which has recognition among the nations of the earth as the means of intercourse and of peace or war.

What is the other function? Is it possible that this relation between nations and this intercourse for these thousands of years has been based upon a fatuity, upon a mere visionary idea, upon a something that has no existence? We should revise our ideas upon that subject and see what it is that we have been dealing with in governments, in congresses, and in nations in all time.

A citizen of a foreign country finds himself in another country. He needs protection; he needs the just administration of the laws of that country; his property needs protection. What is the minister sent for but to be the representative of the government which accredits him, and to speak in their name, and for them to demand that the flag of his country shall give that citizen protection, and to inform officially and advisedly his own people that a citizen has a right to have the power of the government exercised for his protection, and the protection of his property? And he must be a man learned in the laws of intercourse between nations, that he may creditably and intelligently represent the interests of his people in respect to persons and property and demand recognition for them.

Mr. President, there can be nothing but barbarism to result from these ideas which seek to do away with the means of civil and amicable intercourse and relationship between nations. The Senator from Kansas says, and it is the effect of his argument and proposition, that we should have business men. That is a very good title, if other nations will recognize it, instead of embassador. He proposes to vest all the functions of a minister in a man called a business man, and to give him a good salary. I have no objection to that, nor is the argument against it, if foreign nations will consent to recognize that title as giving a man the right to represent his own nation. But the functions of a minister are one thing. He is to represent the country which accredits him in the protection of the persons and the property of his own nation under a foreign flag, to assert and demand their rights in the name of his Government, to speak for the people and the property interests which by treaty are allowed to go there.

Now, Mr. President, here are the facts. The states of Uruguay and Paraguay have a business of imports from this country of from a million and a half to two million dollars, the amount not being fixed with absolute certainty for the past year. They have an import trade which is paid for in American money to the United States of something like $3,000,000 or $4,000,000. They have a foreign trade of more than $7,000,000 or $8,000,000. Other countries are getting the advantage of this country.

Mr. BUTLER. It is twenty-odd million dollars, speaking of the imports in the aggregate.

Mr. CALL. They have a total foreign trade, as suggested by the Senator from South Carolina, of upwards of $20,000,000. That is what we ask to be encouraged, to be increased. I have spoken here in behalf of American merchants who are trading from the United States to Uruguay and Paraguay, who are building ships to sail from the ports of my own State of Florida to the Central American states, representing the difficulties under which they have labored for the want of proper compensation and a proper rank, which give credit and respectability even in a republic, and access, according to the laws to regulate the intercourse of nations, to the authorities of those countries. I have spoken in behalf of men actually engaged in the extension of this commerce, investing large sums in the construction of ships, and asking in the light of actual experience in that business that this method of relief should be afforded to American interests now establishing themselves in the states of Uruguay and Paraguay.

I agree with much that has been said in regard to this niggardly policy in reference to our foreign relations and our foreign ministers. I think this bill had better not be passed at all than to leave those who represent the majesty of the people and its power in rags, presenting a disreputable appearance by contrast with the representatives of a foreign and aristocratic power. My idea of the dignity of the American people is that those who represent them shall be equal in all respects to those who represent absolute power, and that they shall not be required to present themselves in such a manner as to be discreditable to the people and render them incapable of performing the functions with which they are intrusted, which require a certain degree of respect and a certain degree of decent appearance in the performance of their duties.

Mr. President, I shall not say anything further upon this subject except that it appears to me, while I do not propose to discuss the question of order, that the amendment is strictly within the rule upon the subject. The estimate of the Secretary of State is for an increase of $5,000 for this ministry. It is not in exact words for the minister to Uruguay and Paraguay. It differs in the one respect of making two ministers instead of one of this embassy, but it is to give to the representative of the United States at the states of Paraguay and Uruguay $10,000. It is made in pursuance of a resolution, an amendment, an act adopted at this session in this bill, which makes the representative or the embassy at Uruguay and Paraguay minister resident instead of chargé d'affaires. Therefore it seems to me to be within the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine insist on his point of order?

Mr. HALE. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CALL. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. PLATT. Let the rule be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The sixteenth rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

1. All general appropriations bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation, or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish to have a little attention to the language of this rule, which is, I think, very clear. No increase of an appropriation "already contained in the bill" is allowed "unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law." That affirms that if there be an existing law establishing a diplomatic function at Uruguay and Paraguay an amendment increasing the appropriation to carry out that law may be made. If it does not mean that, what does it mean? The rule requires that there shall be an existing law. Is there an existing law for a diplomatic function at Uruguay or Paraguay? Unquestionably there is. In that event an amendment to increase the appropriation in the bill may be made. It seems to me language could be no plainer than that. But what further does the rule say: Or to carry out an "act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session."

What is in this bill? It is an act and a resolution of the Senate to establish a minister resident at Paraguay and Uruguay. That can not be denied; it is too plain for argument. That is the language of the rule, and here is an act or resolution of the Senate passed at this session to establish a minister resident at Uruguay and Paraguay, and here is an amendment to increase the appropriation to carry out that act and resolution of the Senate. Who shall say that that increase of appropriation to carry out an act or resolution of the Senate shall be of one kind or another kind? Who shall limit it? What course of reasoning are you to find which shall construe that language into some other meaning? What other meaning can be given to it? The action of the Senate already taken has made this a minister resident. That was done by agreeing to the amendment of the committee, and that action having been taken by the Senate, my amendment proposes to increase the salary by giving to the minister resident the usual and customary and necessary salary to carry out that act of the Senate.

Now, instead of assertion, let us have some argument and reasoning on the subject. Is there an existing law for a diplomatic function at Uruguay and Paraguay? If there is, then the rule expressly affirms that an increase of the appropriation in the bill may be made to carry out its provisions. If you wish to answer or avoid this argument, you must prove either that there is no law for a diplomatic function at Uruguay and Paraguay or you must prove that the increase of appropriation will not carry it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt that the amendment is subject to a point of order under section 3 of Rule XVI:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

All of these salaries are fixed by the general law, and aside from the question of raising an appropriation in the bill under the second clause of Rule XVI, if there is any difference between one point of order and another, it is subject to the more serious objection of being general legislation in changing the general law.

But I do not suppose that any Senator has any doubt that the ruling of the Chair in this case is correct. It is a question whether Senators, after the Chair has ruled upon a subject, choose to overrule it because they want to vote for the amendment. That is all there is of it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the assertion that no Senator has any doubt about the correctness of the ruling is not an argument. That is more than any Senator can know. The Senator from Maine can not look into the hearts of Senators and know it to be true; and even if he did know it, it would not be an argument. If every Senator here had no doubt on the subject it would not answer the proposition. The question is not whether Senators have doubts or confident opinions about it, but what is the truth in reference to it?

I say there is no law, and the Senator from Maine can not find such a law, fixing the salary of the minister resident to Uruguay and Paraguay. In what sense is it true that this whole subject is regulated by general law? What is the subject? It is a proposition to give the minister resident created by this bill $7,500, and the Senator from Maine says that the salary is fixed by general law.

There is no such law, we know. We need not look at the law-books to find it, because this bill has created the minister resident, and it has given him a salary, and it is not yet a law; but it is "an act or resolution of the Senate." So there is not the slightest foundation for the proposition of the Senator from Maine. There is no law upon the subject; it can not be referred to. The very bill before you shows that there is no law, but there is "an act or a resolution of the Senate," which the rule requires, establishing the office of minister resident, so far as this bill is concerned, at Uruguay and Paraguay; and the question now is as to providing a salary for an office that is created by this bill, and which is of course not provided for by law. There can be no question about that. There is no law on the subject, and this amendment is to create a salary for an office created by this bill and not by any antecedent law—an office for which there is now no salary.

The salary provided by this bill is for a minister resident at Paraguay and Uruguay. This is an office, and this bill which has been adopted by the Senate—by an act or resolution of the Senate—is an act of the Senate, not a law, but an act of the Senate. If it is not, let the Senator define it and say what is the action of the Senate on agreeing to this amendment; and the rule expressly says that an appropriation to carry out an act orresolution of the Senate, not a law, may be increased—and this is an increase. Now let the Senator from Maine or others, instead of asserting one thing or another, take their several elements of the question and deny the mseparately and prove them to be untrue.

Mr. HALE. I think on the whole I had better make the point of order on changing this official from a chargé d'affaires to a minister resident. That is clearly new legislation. It is in the bill as reported from the committee, but I think I had better make that point of order, and send him back to the place where he is now by law as a chargé d'affaires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has not that amendment been agreed to?

Mr. HALE. The clause has not yet been completed.

Mr. CALL. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Is it in order to make one point of order when an appeal from the decision of the Chair on another point of order is pending?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly it is not, but I can give notice. He was simply made minister resident to help him out and give him the additional rank which he wanted. When that is used as an argument why we should increase his salary, it shows that the committee were too good-natured. They ought to stick to it just as it was, and leave him where he has been for years, a chargé d'affaires.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that the point of order can be made when the bill reaches the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope it will be made then.

Mr. HALE. We will put him back where he belongs.

Mr. BUTLER. It is scarcely worth while, I take it, to argue a motion after the judge has decided against you, as has been done in this case. I understand the Chair to have decided that the point of order is well taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But an appeal has been taken. The question now is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. BUTLER. That is debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is debatable.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know that I care to go into that. I must say, however, that I think there is a good deal of force in what was said by the Senator from Florida; and there is much force in the idea that this amendment is taken out of the rule which makes it liable to a point of order by reason of the fact that it has been estimated for by one of the Departments of the Government. Not in terms, perhaps, but for all practical purposes it has been estimated for, so that I really do not think that it is amenable to the point of order.

Mr. HALE. This item has not been estimated for.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that it has been estimated for. If not, I have been misinformed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. "Ministers to Uruguay and Paraguay" have been estimated for separately.

Mr. BUTLER. I say the estimate has been made for two places—Uruguay and Paraguay—$5,000 each.

Mr. HALE. On page 89 the Department estimate for minister resident in Paraguay, $5,000; minister resident in Uruguay, $5,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Precisely; that is what I said.

Mr. HALE. It does not follow, of course, that the Department is in favor of this increase.

Mr. BUTLER. That is a matter of argument. I say that for all practical, essential purposes this amount has been estimated for, not in terms, it is true, but the two missions have been estimated for at $5,000 each. To hear this omnipotent, infallible, and amiable committee, for which the Senator from Maine speaks, as embracing within its jurisdiction all of the wisdom and economy and judgment of the Senate, and that nobody outside of it shall have an opinion because the Committee on Appropriations have said so and so, is somewhat novel. I have great respect for the wisdom, judgment, patriotism, honesty, and integrity of that illustrious body of American citizens bearing the commission of United States Senators, but still I beg and trust that they will permit some of us who are not within the reach of that circle—that sacred circle, I was about to say—to have an opinion at least, and to express it upon this floor.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Appropriations do not make the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. No, they do not make them; but they seem to reserve the entire right to construe them to suit themselves.

Mr. HALE. It was rather the construction of the Chair than of the committee. The committee have a right to appeal to the Chair.

Mr. BUTLER. The committee have given us their version, at least, in a rather dictatorial manner, in the Sir Oracle style. "This is what the rule means; it does not mean anything else; it can not mean anything else. The court has decided against you; take your seat." That is about the style of the Committee on Appropriations, it seems to me, upon this and upon all other subjects.

Mr. HALE. It is a very novel thing to hear the Senator from South Carolina complain of dictatorial ways.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON rose.

Mr. BUTLER. Now here comes my amiable friend from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator should not hammer the Presiding Officer of this body under the guise of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not hammering it.

Mr. ALLISON. The Chair has made this decision.

Mr. BUTLER. I am bowing with the utmost respect to the decision of the Presiding Officer.

Mr. HALE. I thought you were going to vote against him.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not said that I was going to vote against him. I was going to appeal to the Senator from Maine to permit the Senate to settle this question for itself. That would be the fair manner of disposing of this matter, and not interpose a mere technical point of order. If a majority of the Senate think it is wise to give this gentleman, or this mission (I am not going to recognize any personalities) $7,500, why not let us have the opportunity to do it?

Mr. HALE. The Senate has a right to overrule the Chair if the Senate believe that the decision of the Chair is wrong and that he does not know what the rule means.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not prepared to say that the Chair is wrong, but I am prepared to say that the Senator from Maine is wrong in making the point of order. There is where I am trying to fasten the fault.

Mr. HALE. Then clearly the Chair is wrong in sustaining the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. Not at all. I think the point of order well taken, but I do not think the Senator from Maine ought to make it. That is the point I make with him.

Mr. HALE. I am sorry to disagree with the Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. You see, Mr. President, it was upon that particular question that I was trying to appeal to the good nature and the amiability of my friend from Maine; but whilst I am doing that, up rises the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], looking fiercely at me, as if I had said something unpleasant to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. He always looks fierce. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. He always looks fierce. So I think the best solution of this question would be for the Senator from Maine to withdraw the point of order and let the Senate settle it. Notwithstanding the opinion of that august body, the Committee on Appropriations, I beg leave to differ with them.

Mr. CALL. I should be glad if the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] or the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] would inform me, as well as the Senate, whether this is not "an act or resolution of the Senate" by which this officer is made a minister resident to Uruguay and Paraguay, and if it is, whether this amendment is not to carry out that existing "act or resolution of the Senate" passed at this session. I should like to have those two statements answered for the enlightenment of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Let us take the Senator's own reasoning on that point. He says that the Senate having made this man a minister resident already, and having put it in the bill, this increase naturally follows. If the Senate has done anything, it has made this man minister resident and consul-general to Paraguay and Uruguay at $5,000. If it has done anything, it has done that; and if it has made him a minister resident at $5,000 it clearly is not carrying out that by putting him up to $7,500. I do not think the point is good for anything; but adopting the Senator's basis with whatever logic there is in his point, that is a complete answer to it. If the Senate has done anything, it has fixed this man's salary at $5,000 as minister resident.

Mr. BUTLER. How does the Senator get around the estimate?

Mr. CALL. The Senator from South Carolina will pardon me for a minute. I agree to all that, but does it not still leave it to be an existing act of the Senate passed at this session which has done that, and does not the rule say expressly if the amendment be to carry out the provisions of "an act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session," it shall be in order?

Mr. HALE. What is that act?

Mr. CALL. Creating a minister resident.

Mr. HALE. At what?

Mr. CALL. At Uruguay and Paraguay.

Mr. HALE. At how much salary?

Mr. CALL. Giving him $5,000. If we gave him $10,000, would it not be carrying out that existing law?

Mr. HALE. No, sir.

Mr. CALL. If we gave him $2,000 would it not be still carrying out the existing law for the minister resident at Uruguay? The office is one thing, and the pay of the officer another.

Mr. HOAR. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the appeal of the Senator from Florida from the decision of the Chair lie on the table.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. The question is upon laying the appeal on the table?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on laying the appeal upon the table. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I do not know how he would vote on this proposition if here, and I shall withhold my vote, for the present at least.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL].

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER]. If his colleague [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE], who, however, I believe is absent, thinks I may be permitted to do so, I will vote to make a quorum, as there is probably not a quorum present. This does not seem to be a political question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina desire to have his vote recorded?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir; if it be necessary to make a quorum, I will take that liberty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The want of a quorum is not yet developed.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that by unanimous consent the appeal may be withdrawn, and let the bill be laid aside, so that we may take up the Calendar. I do not choose to state the reasons.

Mr. CALL. I am entirely willing for that. I do not want to embarrass the business of the Senate. I am entirely willing to let the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to me the best way to relieve the Senate of any embarrassment is to adjourn; and therefore I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain the motion while the Senate is dividing.

Mr. BUTLER. I give notice that after the announcement of the vote I shall make that motion.

Mr. BATE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. SHERMAN. I again ask unanimous consent that the bill may be laid aside so that we may take up the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the pending proceedings on the bill, and the bill, may be informally laid aside.

Mr. HALE. No, I understand the Senator's proposition is that the appeal shall be withdrawn.

Mr. CALL. I will withdraw the appeal and let the bill go over.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the bill go over until to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the appeal from the decision of the Chair is withdrawn.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the bill go over until to-morrow, and let us take up the Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. If that is done, I submit a motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the attitude of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am informed that there are on the Calendar a number of pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, then, will stand on the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CALL. I suppose that would not prevent me from renewing the motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. You can renew it to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, then, would ask leave, if these proceedings are to be submitted to the Senate, to withdraw his decision upon the point of order, and submit it to the Senate to be voted upon, which will determine the whole question. If there be no objection the Chair will withdraw his decision upon the point of order and will submit it to the Senate, and upon that the question will be taken to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to consent to the withdrawal of the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The result will be the same in either event.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to consent to it upon so plain a question.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, I submit that the Senator from Maine is making an issue with the Chair and is hammering the Chair somewhat over the shoulders of Senators. The Chair has withdrawn the decision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks unanimous consent to withdraw his decision upon the point of order, and that the same may be submitted to the Senate for its decision.

Mr. HALE. I object.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. A motion to adjourn can not legally and properly be entertained until the result of the vote is announced. I hope that by unanimous consent we may go on with the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These proceedings have all been by unanimous consent, no motion being in order while the Senate is dividing, or while the question is being taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. What has happened by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Nothing has happened.

Mr. HALE. Nothing is likely to happen.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the appeal, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further suggestions for unanimous consent, the Secretary will announce the result of the vote.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the appeal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submitted the request for unanimous consent to withdraw the appeal, and it was refused.

Mr. SHERMAN. I again ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that without the announcement of the vote the bill be laid over until to-morrow, and that the Calendar be proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What, then, shall occur to-morrow, the resumption of the roll-call?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, the resumption of the roll-call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resumption of the roll-call on the appeal?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina objects. The Secretary will announce the state of the vote.

Mr. MITCHELL (after having voted in the negative). I inadvertently voted. I now remember that I am paired for the week with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

Mr. VANCE. I vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon withdraws his vote. The result of the vote will be announced upon the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to lay the appeal of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] upon the table.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 29th of May approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 87) authorizing and directing the payment of the salaries of the officers and employés of Congress for the month of May, 1888.

The message also announced that the following acts were presented to the President May 18, 1888, and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which they originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, they have become laws without his approval, namely:

An act (S. 38) granting to the Washington and Idaho Railroad Company the right of way through the Cœur d'Alene Indian reservation; and

An act (S. 269) to grant to the Fort Smith and El Paso Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2901) granting to the Milwaukee, Lake Shore and Western Railway Company the right of way through the Lac de Flambeau Indian reservation, in the State of Wisconsin;

An act (S. 325) granting to the Billings, Clark's Fork and Cooke City Railroad Company the right of way through the Crow Indian reservation;

An act (S. 339) granting a pension to Eliza Douglass;

An act (S. 737) granting a pension to Berry Day;

An act (S. 1298) granting a pension to Mary Gammell;

An act (S. 1300) granting a pension to Cordelia R. Jones;

An act (S. 1477) granting a pension to Harlow B. Hyde;

An act (S. 1478) granting a pension to George W. Peavey; and

An act (S. 626) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Franklin, alias McKee.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3722) for the relief of Jennie D. Rice was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 7776) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, in the county of Monona, in the State of Iowa, and in the county of Burt, State of Nebraska, and to make the same a post-route, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 10233) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

The result of the vote on Mr. HOAR'S motion to lay on the table the appeal taken by Mr. CALL from the decision of the Chair was announced—yeas 13, nays 13, as follows:

YEAS—13.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Platt,	Sherman.
Allison,	Dolph,	Plumb,
Blair,	Hale,	Riddleberger,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Sawyer,

NAYS—13.

Bate,	Chandler,	George,	Vance.
Blodgett,	Coke,	Hampton,
Brown,	Colquitt,	Stewart,
Call,	Eustis,	Teller,

ABSENT—50.

Beck,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Berry,	Frye,	Manderson,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Butler,	Gray,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Cameron,	Harris,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Chace,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Vest,
Cullom,	Hearst,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Daniel,	Hiscock,	Payne,	Walthall,
Davis,	Ingalls,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa.
Edmunds,	Jones of Arkansas,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.
Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Farwell,	Kenna,	Reagan,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 6, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 5, 1888.

The House was called to order at 11 o'clock a. m. by Mr. MCMILLIN, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1888.

SIR: Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is hereby designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House to-day.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. LANHAM, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1935) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

BARRACKS AT FORT SNELLING, MINN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a modified estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation for the erection of barracks at Fort Snelling, Minn.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PEORIA, ILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Supervising Architect of an additional appropriation for finishing the public building at Peoria, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

NEW YORK AND ROCK ISLAND ARSENALS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting an estimate for the erection of a set of officers' quarters at the New York arsenal, and for a hospital building at the Rock Island arsenal; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SANDY HOOK SHIP CHANNEL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report upon the work of deepening the Sandy Hook ship channel; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. MCKINNEY, on account of important business.

STATE NATIONAL BANK, NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3713) for the relief of the State National Bank of New Orleans, formerly the New Orleans State Bank, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. This is a very important bill, and should be fully discussed when there is a full opportunity.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment, to hear a brief explanation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am familiar with the facts of the case, as it was before a committee of which I was a member. I have no objection to its consideration when there is opportunity for full discussion.

Mr. SPRINGER. Regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

ADDITIONAL MODE OF TAKING DEPOSITIONS.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (S. 832) to provide an additional mode of taking depositions of witnesses in causes pending in the courts of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FORT HALL RESERVATION, IDAHO.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8662) to accept and ratify an agreement made with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of a portion of the Fort Hall reservation, in the Territory of Idaho, for the purposes of a town site, and for the grant of a right of way through said reservation to the Utah and Northern Railway Company, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REBECCA RHODES.

Mr. CHIPMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 9541) for the relief of Rebecca Rhodes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. SUSAN BATES.

Mr. CHIPMAN also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9370) granting a pension to Mrs. Susan Bates, widow of Thomas Bates, late private Company A, Twenty-sixth Regiment Michigan Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES M'INTYRE.

Mr. CHIPMAN also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7713) granting a pension to James McIntyre; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EUGENE SULLIVAN.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6254) granting a pension to Eugene Sullivan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY P. MULLIN.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10223) for the relief of Mary P. Mullin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CENTENARY REFORMED CHURCH, WINCHESTER, VA.

Mr. LAWLER, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 609) for the relief of the trustees of the Centenary Reformed Church of Winchester, Va.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF ALFRED ROBINSON.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 114) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Alfred Robinson, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CARL F. KOLBE.

Mr. CROUSE, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7458) for the relief of Carl F. Kolbe; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FIRE-ESCAPES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ROMEIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. 8860 a bill (H. R. 10346) providing for fire-escapes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 8860 was laid on the table.

INAUGURATION OF GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Mr. OATES. I desire to make a report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Clerk read the resolution referred to the committee April 23, as follows:

Whereas the committee on the centennial celebration of the inauguration of George Washington as President of the United States, by a memorial this day presented by the Speaker, requests the House of Representatives of the United States to participate in the celebration to be held in New York City on April 30, 1889: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That this House hereby accepts the invitation tendered, and that the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the committee of the said centennial celebration of the action of the House in the premises.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report submitted by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the resolution, submitted April 23, 1888, proposing that the House of Representatives accept the invitation of the committee on the centennial celebration of the inauguration of George Washington as President of the United States to participate in said celebration, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

The resolution proposes the acceptance by "this House" of the invitation extended by the committee on the centennial celebration of the inauguration of George Washington as President of the United States, to be held in New York April 30, 1889. Your committee and doubtless every member of this House most heartily indorses and applauds the patriotic purpose of the promoters of the celebration on the spot where one hundred years ago occurred one of the most notable events in the history of our country, the inauguration of the first President of the United States. It is an occasion which elicits the profoundest sympathy and respect of every citizen of our common country.

But "this House" of Representatives ceases to exist by the expiration of the term for which its members were chosen, on the 4th day of March preceding the date of the proposed celebration, which alone prevents the acceptance of the invitation so generously extended. As we have no right to accept the invitation for the House of Representatives of the Fifty-first Congress, we are constrained reluctantly to report against the adoption of the resolution and the acceptance of the invitation.

This House of Representatives, as such, will at that time be functus officio, and can not participate in said celebration, though its members may as individuals.

The Clerk of the House is hereby requested to transmit to each member of the committee whose names are signed to the memorial a printed copy of the resolution and this report thereon.

Mr. OATES. The report is adverse. I ask that it be printed, and that the resolution be laid upon the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MARTHA F. WOODRUM.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California, reported back the bill (H. R. 2805) granting a pension to Martha F. Woodrum, widow of James Woodrum, deceased, with amendments by the Senate and a request for a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection the amendments of the Senate will be non-concurred in and the request for a committee of conference will be agreed to. The Chair will appoint the committee later.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ALLENTOWN, PA.

Mr. DIBBLE. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The committee recommend that the bill (H. R. 4357) to erect a public building at Allentown, Pa., be passed notwithstanding the objections of the President.

The bill and report were ordered to lie on the Speaker's table.

JESSE M. STILLWELL.

Mr. CHEADLE. A bill (H. R. 3671) granting a pension to Jesse M. Stillwell has been reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions with an adverse recommendation. I ask that the bill and report be placed upon the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 2068) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain citizens of Chicago, employés of the custom-house, for extra-time service;

An act (H. R. 8006) to amend section 5388 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to timber depredations;

An act (H. R. 4909) for the relief of the estate of C. M. Briggs, deceased;

An act (H. R. 108) for the relief of John C. Weaver;

An act (H. R. 4908) for the relief of the heirs of A. Gates Lee and heirs of B. P. Lee, deceased;

An act (H. R. 1540) to establish a port of delivery at Grand Rapids, Mich.;

An act (H. R. 6098) authorizing the construction and repair of the roads from the entrance to the reservation of the Presidio at San Francisco, Cal., to the national cemetery on the same, and the fencing and protection of the said reservation and the cemetery thereon;

An act (H. R. 8394) to authorize United States marshals to arrest offenders and fugitives from justice in Indian Territory;

An act (H. R. 314) authorizing the Secretary of War to place the name of James L. Henderson on the roll of Company B, Sixteenth Kentucky Volunteers;

An act (H. R. 2161) for the relief of Thomas J. Taylor;

An act (H. R. 92) for the relief of Morgan Rawls;

An act (H. R. 335) granting a pension to General W. E. Woodruff; and

An act (H. R. 8489) granting a pension to Abial G. Chamberlain.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. McSHANE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10347) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, at or near the city of Plattsmouth, Nebr., and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LIND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10348) for a public building at Mankato, Minn., which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering revenue measures; and pending that I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments be limited to ten minutes; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. McKINLEY. I move to amend by making the time thirty minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I accept that as a modification of my motion.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to limit debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto to thirty minutes was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair, and resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wood unmanufactured not specially enumerated or provided for.

The CHAIRMAN. When this paragraph was under consideration the last time the House was in Committee of the Whole a formal amendment was pending. In the absence of objection that will be considered as withdrawn. By order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto is limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. PARKER. I move to strike out the last three words. Mr. Chairman, it would seem proper in the consideration of a bill of this kind——

[At this point the waving of a red pocket handkerchief in the Press Gallery attracted the attention of members and excited repeated manifestations of applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The Chairman can not see the waving of an object in the Reporters' Gallery which has been mistaken by gentlemen upon the other side for the red bandana handkerchief of Ohio, when, in fact, it is a telegram from the State of Oregon. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect, in introducing the remarks which I have to make this morning, that I should encounter the first flutter of that flag which I suppose is to wave in the coming campaign. It seems to be perfectly well understood that the man who is not yet nominated and who is to be placed at the rear of the ticket shall be the man who will carry the flag and lead in the campaign. [Laughter.] If that is a matter of solace and consolation to the gentlemen who are cheering the bandana they are welcome to it. I suggest, however, to the gentleman in the gallery who flaunts it, that it would be in better taste and have a better effect if he would use it for the purpose for which it was originally intended. [Great laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that a committee of three be appointed to remove the red flag which the Reporters' Gallery is flaunting in the faces of our irritable friends.

Mr. BLAND. You will have to stand it for the next four years. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair reminds gentlemen that this is not a political convention. The Committee of the Whole is proceeding to consider an important bill, and the Chair requests that gentlemen will come to order and cease conversation or else retire to the cloak-room.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, it is proper that I should say, before proceeding with my remarks, that my venerable friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], in his remark made just now, did not refer to any one upon this side of the House, but did refer to many upon the other side.

Mr. KELLEY. Certainly; red is not gray.

Mr. PARKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, to come back to the business of the occasion, I wish to ask attention to some of the arguments presented by my excellent friend from New York [Mr. COX] the other day upon the pending bill. He referred to the complaint which is sometimes made that the lumbermen are working in opposition to the friends of forestry preservation and forestry culture, and, elaborating that idea, he said, among other things, this:

I want to protect our forests and underbrush in Maine, in Michigan, all along the Pacific coast, in the Appalachians, and the Adirondacks.

And then he says:

Every one knows that petitions have been filed here from the forestries committees and societies and persons interested in the preservation of our rivers and lands by equable water distribution. These petitions show that our timber lands, 70,000,000 acres in extent, are, under such ruinous schemes, becoming absolutely waste places.

Then he passes on to other points. Now, in response to that, I wish to say that it is well known in our lumber regions that timber lands can be recut every fifteen or twenty years; that, as a rule, when the cut is originally made—certainly that is the rule in the regions to which he refers—only from fifteen to twenty trees per acre are cut. The underbrush which the gentleman so feelingly alludes to, and the small trees, and all of the hard-wood timber, the great mass that constitutes the forest, is left untouched, so that a few years after the cutting over of any of those forests a forester from a city going there would be unable to tell that the ground had been lumbered upon at all. It would require an expert to ascertain that the country had been cut over. Therefore merely lumbering over a region does not have the effect which the gentleman supposes. Nature takes care of that. Where a tree is cut down nature replaces it with another, and in a very short time the growth of the small trees and the continued growth of the larger ones more than supply what has been taken away and leave scarcely a scar to show that the lumberman has struck a blow there. I know of a marked case illustrating this where not many years ago a cyclone passed over a region in the northern Adirondacks, sweeping in its path absolutely every tree, cutting a swath as though it had been cut by a scythe. The trees were all taken by the great whirl of the air and laid in one direct line, leaving the edges upon both sides as straight as though they had been cut by the chopper.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCKINLEY was recognized, and yielded to Mr. PARKER.

Mr. PARKER. I am obliged to the gentleman. Now, Mr. Chairman, a man passing through that region and crossing the whirlwind's path to which I have just referred, unless he were one familiar with the signs and features of the woods, would not know that that forest had ever been destroyed there.

I refer to the cyclone track extending across Jefferson, St. Lawrence, and Franklin Counties, and known by all the hunters and sportsmen there under the name of the "great windfall."

But the gentleman from New York contends that in this matter of lumber and forestry protection we are "pretenders," and he quotes to us a bit of poetry which he gave in his own fine style. He says:

I am compelled to quote a little poetry to illustrate the genuine and the pretended sovereign over these matters of economy:

"God bless the king, who is the faith defender."

That is our side of the House. [Laughter and applause.]

"God bless—no harm in blessing the pretender;
Who that pretender is, and who that king—
God bless us all—is quite another thing."

[Renewed applause and laughter.]

We are not the pretenders in this case, nor in any other. We represent the interests of the people in this matter, and not those of the king. The gentleman from New York, it is well known, represents a city made up very largely of men born upon other soils and within other jurisdictions, and he may, if he sees fit, say, "God bless the king!" and have it responded to in his locality in many different languages. But as for us who guard American interests, we will personify and treat as sovereign our industries; and we will join with Robert Burns, where he contrasts the king and the people, saying:

Who will not sing "God save the king"
Shall hang high as the steeple;
But while we sing "God save the king"
We'll not forget the people.

[Applause.]

We protect our industries and thus remember the people.

Mr. Chairman, any bill drawn with even assumed fairness would not leave the tariff duty off one item and put it on others which go to make up the expense of the very item declared to be free. I call attention now to some of the items which enter into the cost of lumber. These items embrace the cost of supplies, the expenses of the men employed, and which go to create the lumber cost. If, as our opponents claim, the duty is added to the cost of a thing in making up its price, why should not all industries be borne upon alike?

By this Mills bill, which assumes to make lumber free, I find that flannels are dutiable at 40 per cent. ad valorem; blankets, 40 per cent. ad valorem; wool hats, the same; and woolen cloths, the same, while, upon some theory of free trade, shoddy is admitted free. But shoddy does not last long in the forests. Chains, which have to be used of course, are dutiable under this bill at from 1¼ to 1½ cents per pound. Axes for the lumbermen are dutiable at 40 per cent. ad valorem. Crosscut saws are dutiable at 8 cents per linear foot. Mill-pit and drag-saws are dutiable at 15 cents per linear foot; circular saws, 30 per cent. ad valorem; files to file the saws, 35 per cent. ad valorem. Iron and steel rails, over which the lumber is conveyed, are dutiable at the rate of $15 per ton under this bill. Leather belting and Spanish sole-leather are dutiable at 15 per cent. ad valorem; manufactured leather, 30 per cent. ad valorem. Cleaned rice, such as is raised in South Carolina, is dutiable, if brought in from abroad, at 2¼ cents a pound, or 100 per cent. Sugar I find dutiable at the rate of about 2 cents per pound, or about 78 per cent. Imported salt fish is dutiable at 50 cents per hundred pounds; and so on through the list. Almost every item that makes up the expenses of the more than 90 per cent. of labor of which lumber is composed is taxed under this very Mills bill. And yet the product, when turned out at last, the lumber itself, which may be said to be mostly labor in a new form, is declared to be free of duty and is made subject to the competition of our Canadian competitors. Hence the plain injustice done to the makers of sawed boards and lumber by the provisions and discriminations of this Mills tariff bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I will occupy one minute in reply to my honored friend and colleague. He says a forest will be renewed within fifteen years after the besom of destruction has swept through it. Nature is so prodigal, it so constantly helps civilization——

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman does not cite my statement quite correctly. I say that where a lumber forest is gone over, taking out the trees proper to be cut, the pine and the spruce, that timber can be cut again in from fifteen to twenty years.

Mr. COX. Then why do you want a duty of $2 a thousand feet when nature is so kind to you?

Mr. PARKER. Because in Canada they can get their land and their labor so much cheaper that we can not cut off this little percentage that we take away every ten or fifteen years and make it pay to do it.

Mr. BLAND. Does not Canada protect everything? How does it happen that prices are so much cheaper there?

Mr. COX. Yes, Canada is a protective country. I am in favor of reciprocity, like some of my friends on the other side.

But I desire simply to print in connection with these remarks the basis of my former statement. I referred to the memorial of the American Forestry Congress and other citizens to the Fiftieth Congress.

Memorial of American Forestry Congress and other citizens to the Fiftieth Congress, United States of America.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the American Forestry Congress and citizens of the United States, respectfully represent:

Whereas the present laws in regard to the public lands, so far as they relate to the disposal of timber lands, or of the timber from the same, are entirely inadequate to the requirements of the present state of our civilization, are unreasonable, pernicious, and prejudicial to the best interests of this country, and have a tendency to induce fraud, theft, and perjury;

Whereas, especially in the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Slope region, the mining interests, in regard to material supplies, and the agricultural interest, in regard to a favorable distribution of water supply, are threatened with danger, or have already been endangered, by the thoughtless and unnecessary destruction of the forests and brushlands on the mountain slopes and hillsides;

Whereas by ax, by the teeth of cattle, and by fire, many millions of dollars' worth of public property have been destroyed without benefit to any one, owing to the neglect on the part of the Government to protect the property of the people;

Whereas favorable agricultural and climatic conditions of a country are largely dependent upon a proper amount of well-distributed forest areas, and especially upon the preservation of the forest cover on the mountains;

Whereas such preservation can not be had under the existing laws, nor can be expected at the hands of private individuals;

Whereas by the disposal of the timbered areas now in the hands of the United States, and by their devastation under present conditions, the power to insure proper forest legislation passes from the people:

Therefore, the undersigned memorialists, imbued solely by a desire to further the best interests of the country at large, most respectfully and urgently pray that you will, without delay, give consideration to and enact as a law the subjoined bill, which provides for the withdrawal from entry or sale, classification, and proper disposal or administration of public forestry lands, or that you provide such other legislation in the same direction as may appear best to your honorable body.

On behalf of the American Forestry Congress:
B. E. FERNOW, Secretary.

On behalf of the Southern Forestry Congress:
A. O. LANE, President.
Hon. MOSES HALLETT,
Professor J. S. NEWBERRY,
And many others.

This memorial shows that in the regions where the forests have been so large and luxuriant they are being destroyed; and I would not add to their destruction by giving an encouragement and premium to it in our tariff. At the same time I would cut down items which enter into the cost of the lumbermen's living and which the gentleman enumerated. So far as I am concerned I would reduce the tariff on sugar and on the other articles which the gentleman mentioned, so far as it can be done justly, in view of the reduction which we propose, some $78,000,000.

I would also like to have printed in this connection, from the office of the corresponding secretary, American Forestry Congress, 1882, Washington, D. C., a letter as to what becomes of our timber lands.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. COX. It is as follows:

AMERICAN FORESTRY CONGRESS, 1882,
OFFICE OF CORRESPONDING SECRETARY, Washington, D. C.

WHAT BECOMES OF OUR TIMBER LANDS?

You are part owners of about 70,000,000 acres of land, more or less stocked with timber and not considered agriculturally valuable, held by the General Government and lying mostly on the Western mountains.

There are five ways in which a citizen may acquire either the land or the timber on it:

1. In California and on the Pacific Slope generally we allow him to get as much as 160 acres "for his own use," at $2.50 per acre, a price from ten to thirty times less than the true value. The use to which most owners put their purchase is to relinquish it to some large lumbering corporation, which in fact has paid men to perjure themselves in taking up such lands.

2. In the Southern States you can buy at $1.25 per acre, in any quantity, as much Government timber land as you may still be able to find, the most having gone at that price to speculators and lumbermen.

3. Every land-grant railroad, in addition to its share of the land grant of 75,000,000 acres and the right of way, is permitted to cut timber "for first construction," "adjacent to the line of its road." But the railroads do not construe "construction" and "adjacent" exactly in the sense in which the lawgivers did, and they have cut wherever, whenever, and for whatever purpose they chose.

4. Those who take up a homestead or pre-emption claim upon timber land are also given the right to clear as much timber as is necessary for the development of their claim and improvements before they have acquired title. We are told that most settlers on such lands do not exert themselves to procure the title after they have got the timber off.

5. Lastly, any resident citizen may cut all the timber he needs for mining and domestic purposes upon lands which are designated as "mineral lands." Oh, for the power to know what "mineral lands" are!

Shall we pride ourselves on our liberality? Or shall we rather feel ashamed of our niggardliness? Not only have we allowed the most valuable part of this class of our property to be fooled away to a few speculators, largely upon fraudulent entries, but we have criminally permitted the depreciation of the remainder, and, besides, have compelled the population of two States and seven Territories to become trespassers and criminals on account of taking the timber they needed because we would not sell it to them. In the years 1881 to 1887 there was reported timber stolen from the public domain to the value of $36,719,852, probably a small fraction of the actual depredations; there was recovered, mostly by compromise, $478,073, and expended for protection, $455,000. To this add an annual loss from fires valued at $8,000,000.

The charity which we have extended to the pioneer settlers in allowing free use of our property under certain conditions, has worked more harm than good; the settled community would gladly exchange the privilege for a fair bargain in which the consumer pays for what he uses.

The present settlement and disposition laws are the cancers that destroy the public timber lands, leaving a sick, dying, dead mountain desert, and impairing the agricultural and industrial interests adjoining.

If you feel an interest in having this property administered in a more reasonable manner, for the benefit of the settlers, as well as for the rest of the nation, write to E. B. Fernow, secretary of the American Forestry Congress, at Washington, D. C., for memorial and bill to be presented and urged in the Fiftieth Congress.

To these frauds, perjuries, and spoliations is it not monstrous to add the incentive of a tariff for protection.

Books have been written—they are in the Library—written during the last two years by scientific men, about our climatic influences looking to the safety of our forests. The conclusion of these books, drawn from history—drawn from data irrefragable—is this: That unless we protect our forests now, as some of the States are doing, by statute and police; unless we protect them against the insidious influences by monopoly and tariff, which uproot them; unless we give them additional longevity, we will become what other nations have become which have lost their forests.

From my observations in other countries, such as Turkey or Asia Minor, or such as Spain—in fact all the countries along the Mediterranean, who in time have lost their forests, and who sank precisely as they have lost them in the scale of nations, I would be derelict if I did not warn legislators here to avert the inevitable catastrophe of a treeless land.

My friend and colleague in front of me [Mr. SPINOLA] says that the people of Northern New York, represented by my colleague [Mr. PARKER], have stolen nearly all of the Adirondacks. Our best men believe that the Hudson River, which has its source in those forests and mountains, is in process of failure as a stream and as a sanitary element. Destroy the underbrush which holds the snows and you fail in your water supply! Those forests in Northern New York are indispensable to the commerce and agriculture, as well as to the health of New York. All that these gentlemen care for at present is to kill the goose that produces the golden egg.

Is it not short-sighted to seek present benefit out of these forests in the hurry of getting out their lumber and making it dear at home to the consumers because they are aggrandized by the enhanced price?

Nevertheless, the time will come, sir, when the American people will find out when they have lost their forests that they have lost that which will take ages to replace. We will never know the value of our forests until we shall have lost them. We are fast exhausting these timber lands, because of the greediness of a few and against the interest of the many. If we continue to do it we will suffer in the long run.

I do not favor the proposition to cut down our forests simply because of the economies of our future, nor of the peril to our land as a health resort for the outworn people of the world; but are we not entitled in our big cities and little towns, for houses, and fences, and every wooden thing, and in whatever form lumber is used—whether for a boat in Maine or a toothpick in New York—to lumber as free as the air we breathe?

God Almighty has planted the forests. He gave the sun to shine and the early and latter rain to fall upon them; He has arrayed the earth in its garniture of greenery, and He intended it all for the well-being of His creatures. It is a beautiful utility as well for their shelter as for their health. I will never vote in this House to restrict or limit His benefactions; I will not vote to add a burden to our people by keeping up a selfish tariff on a commodity like lumber, which the great body of our people demand should be within the reach of the humblest cottager. [Applause]

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I suppose this is the last expiring note on the subject of the preservation of our forests. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. No; it is just begun.

Mr. REED. There was a time when a great many people actually believed what the gentleman from New York said, and actually thought that as we presented the case it was an argument against the preservation of the American markets for American lumber. Now, that forestry excitement has served its purpose. Its object was to increase the number of acres of land which could be obtained in the West. It certainly has had a good effect in settling the country. I am glad the gentleman from New York has had an opportunity to say the last morsel of oratory that probably will be dedicated to that subject. [Laughter and applause.]

Why, what an idea! Think of it for a moment—the forests are to be preserved simply on account of the rivers, and they are to be preserved, not at the expense of the community at large, but at the expense of the individual owners thereof, who are to be treated differently from the rest of the people of this country on that account.

The great value of our forests is to furnish lumber for the people. The gentleman from New York demands cheap lumber for the benefit of all the people, and then, in one and the same breath, he advocates not cutting down the trees of the forest on account of the alleged injurious effect upon the flow of the rivers!

If the gentleman knew anything about the effect of the forests, the effect of the breaking up and settling of the country, he would not join in this jeremiad about the rivers drying up and the country becoming an arid waste in consequence of cutting down the trees.

The settlement by human beings of all the new countries of the earth, the necessity for their subsistence, their effect upon the soil, their turning up the soil, devoting it to the purposes of civilization—to human purposes—in themselves by the laws of God promote a rain-fall steady and permanent, which gives the rivers their natural flow; and there is no more reason to refuse to cut the increase of the forests than to refuse to cut the increase of the farms. And I say to the gentleman from New York that he is taking up the eloquence of a by-gone time and devoting it to the consideration of a present subject. It has no applicability here. Further facts and further history have shown the absurdity of this argument, which had its largest currency in order to add another section of land to the amount that could be purchased or taken up in the growing Western States and Territories.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman state what his experience is in Maine? Is it only the increase of the forest that has been taken?

Mr. REED. Precisely.

Mr. COX. Only the increase?

Mr. REED. I say to the gentleman that the timber lands of Maine are to-day used in precisely the same fashion as the farming lands; that is to say, that the timber lands proper are cut for their increase, and the size of the logs cut being limited, it is just as legitimate, just as reasonable and proper a business as any on earth; and to refuse to pursue such an occupation on the idea suggested by the gentlemen here, that some day or other these lands will be denuded, the rain-fall checked, and our rivers dried up, would be just as appropriate as an argument which would refuse to catch whales because we would have to live in darkness after we got through with them. [Laughter.] The truth of the matter is that the most of the things of this world have been provided by God for the happiness of human beings, and for human beings to exploit—to increase the riches, the comfort, and the happiness of the people of the world. And when people proclaim that it is injurious to the world for human beings to reap the riches thereof, as nature provided they should, they are doing something for a special purpose, of which, when they become better informed, they will be duly ashamed. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will assume that the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I doubt if there is a change proposed by this bill which is more universally approved by the people than by this schedule, which places timber, lumber, etc., upon the free-list. I confess that I have been considerably surprised at the opposition to this change by Representatives upon the other side, especially those from Illinois, Nebraska, Kansas, and Iowa who oppose this provision. It occurs to me that, representing constituencies wholly at the mercy of the lumber trust, which unquestionably is in copartnership with the transportation companies, they would be the last to rise here and defend a law which enables these monopolies to fleece their constituents out of millions of dollars. What are the facts? In Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota there are large quantities of white pine. It makes a valuable lumber. We have but little elsewhere. The pine lumber of the Southern States is valuable, but does not come into competition with the white-pine lumber of the North. The yellow pine is filled with turpentine and resin. The white pine is adapted to all finishing purposes. It can be used where you desire to paint. Large quantities of yellow pine are shipped all over the world, but is not used for the same purposes as the white pine. Consequently there is but little competition between the pine lumber of the South and that of the North, whether they meet in the markets in the North or in the South.

Much has been said about the wages paid by the lumber manufacturers of Michigan and other States. It is claimed that if lumber is placed upon the free-list wages in this industry will be reduced. It will require more than mere assertions; it will require more than the testimony of interested parties to convince me that wages are higher in the lumber regions of Michigan than they are in close proximity in Canada. Such a statement the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] would say "everybody knows is absurd." The laborers of Canada are not going to work for 30 per cent. less if by crossing an imaginary line they can get 30 per cent. more wages. They will come over and keep coming until wages have so fallen in the United States and so risen in Canada as to be upon an equality. What has the tariff done? That it has put one penny into the pockets of the wage-workers no one has dared to claim. Every member upon the other side when pressed has admitted that the wages paid by the lumbermen are no greater than those paid in other avocations in the same locality. Who, then, has received any benefit?

The price of white-pine lumber has advanced several dollars per thousand in the last two years. The price in Saginaw, Mich., in 1876 was $9.67 per thousand; in 1877 it was $9.73; in 1878 it was $9.66; in 1879 it was $9.50; in 1880 the stumpage, that is the timber, had been so reduced that the same had come under the control of a few men, who, organizing a combination, advanced the price to $11.63. In 1881 it was further advanced to $13.92, and in 1882 it was sold as high as $14 per thousand, and still sells for about that price; that is, good common white-pine lumber. This advance was brought about by a combination of the owners of the stumpage, who were principally the lumbermen. The lumber barons having gotten hold of all the timber, advanced the price of stumpage from an average of $1 to an average of $4.50 per thousand. This was the cause of the advance in the price of timber lands of from 300 to 1,000 per cent., as stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON]. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] attempted to answer this in his usual style, declaring that the increase in value was solely on account of the wonderful growth and progress that had taken place throughout the country. The truth is that the best farming lands in Ohio, Indiana, and the Western States, which had been improved, have during this period fallen instead of risen in value.

This argument is upon a par with all the sophistry that has been made use of by gentlemen upon the other side during this debate. Why should white-pine stumpage have advanced so marvelously, while the stumpage of all other kinds of timber remained stationary? Why should this class of stumpage be worth $4.50 per thousand in the United States and only $1.25 per thousand in Canada? The reason is perfectly apparent: a few men own the timber in the United States; they have combined to realize every dollar they possibly can out of it. They have an advantage over their Canadian competitor of about $1 per thousand in the cost of transportation, and $2 per thousand in the duty, and these they have added to the value of their timber and estimate it as a part of the cost of lumber. Every dollar goes to the owners of the stumpage. Let us see what their profits amount to. The Government sold the lands upon which the timber stands at from $1.25 to $2.50 per acre—a section, at the highest price, costing $1,600. These lands according to the lowest estimate contain, upon an average, a stumpage of 5,000 feet per acre. A section, therefore, contains a stumpage of 3,200,000, which, at $4.50 per thousand, brings $14,400.

The land, after the timber has been removed, sells for from $2.50 to $10 per acre. Upon an average it brings more than the original cost. The lumbermen therefore realize a clean profit off of each section of land purchased by them of over $15,000.

Here is where the $2 per thousand duty has gone. Here is where your protection protects. It has not gone into the calloused hands of the wage-worker, but into the price of the timber, before labor has touched it, and afterwards into the bank accounts of the timber or lumber barons. Shall we uphold and sustain this monopoly, or shall we release the people from its grasp?

The manufacturers of Michigan, Minnesota, and Wisconsin produce about 8,000,000,000 feet per annum. The $2 duty per thousand, which they have placed upon the value of their lumber in the tree, amounts to $16,000,000 annually. Who pays this bonus? The farmers of the West; the wage-workers in our cities who are struggling by the aid of building and loan associations to get a little home of their own, from which their families can not be driven when they are out of employment.

Mr. O. R. Bishop, of Chicago, an iron worker representing the Knights of Labor before the Tariff Commission upon the subject of lumber, said:

It was stated yesterday by the lumber interests that they had paid in wages to 56,000 workers $17,000,000. Truly a large sum, but if divided by 56,000 it gives to each worker the insignificant sum, for a year's hard toil, amid snow and ice in winter, and malarial fever in summer, $304 with which to clothe, feed, and educate himself and family, while the few employers cleared, by their own figures, nearly $4,000,000 net, and still have $40,000,000 worth of mills and tools on hand. Why should they not wish a continuance of the monopoly when it pays so well? And your attention is called to the action of the Lumbermen's Exchange (a trade union). The other day they met and raised the price of all grades of lumber $1.50 per thousand, which, if made general on the 3,919,500,000, will increase the profits to $8,000,000—a very mild species of robbery.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] talks about the number of establishments in this industry, the amount of capital invested, and the number of laborers employed as if these were all to be extinguished by the passage of this bill. The number of establishments will not be decreased, the wages of the laborers will not be reduced, nor the capital invested be diminished by placing lumber upon the free-list, but the power of the trust to extort from the people $16,000,000 annually, over and above a fair and legitimate profit, let us hope will be forever destroyed.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to strike out lines 9 and 10, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wood unmanufactured, not specially enumerated or provided for.

The question being taken, the Chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GUENTHER. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 100.

Mr. GUENTHER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. GUENTHER and Mr. MILLS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 96.

So the motion to strike out the paragraph was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

Sawed boards, planks, deals, and all other articles of sawed lumber.

Mr. MOFFITT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph just read.

Mr. MOFFITT. Mr. Chairman, representing as I do constituents who annually manufacture 150,000,000 feet of lumber I offer this amendment in good faith and solely in the interests of those engaged in this industry in my district without regard to party.

On the 18th day of March last I presented to the House a memorial from certain lumbermen in Northern New York protesting against any reduction in the duties on lumber, which by unanimous consent was printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. As the majority of that committee have failed to favorably consider the memorial thus presented, I now send it to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read in my time for the information of the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

The undersigned, manufacturers of lumber in the county of Franklin and State of New York, respectfully present for your consideration the following statement in regard to this important industry, with an earnest protest against any change in the existing tariff on lumber.

We are situated so near to the Canadian frontier that a reduction of the small duty now exacted would take away all the profit now enjoyed, unless it could be saved by a reduction of the wages paid the laborers engaged in the work. Fully four-fifths of the cost of lumber is in the wages paid, and these wages are based upon giving a fair return for the labor expended, and are from 50 to 75 per cent. in excess of those paid by the Canadian lumbermen with whom we compete, and in the aggregate amount to at least $3 per 1,000 feet more than paid to the Canadians for the same work. Should the duty be removed and the rates of wages in this country be maintained as at present, we, in common with others, would be compelled to shut up our mills. This would throw out of employment a vast army of workmen, and drive them into other occupations, thereby creating a fresh competition in the labor market, and tending to diminish the income of all wage earners. This in turn would take away their purchasing ability and curtail the market for other producers, thus throwing still other laborers out of employment, and yet further deranging the entire business of the communities, and so of the nation. In time the pangs of hunger would compel a resumption of labor in some field, but at the starvation wages paid in other lands, and in the distant future, on the basis of lower wages, the lumber industry might be resumed, but after a complete demoralization and the ruin of hundreds of men engaged in it to-day.

If the reduction in price claimed by the advocates of the removal of the duty should be made, who would get the benefit of it? The Canadians have millions of feet of lumber awaiting a favorable time for shipment, and would get the opportunity of supplying the immediate demand. That accomplished and the home manufacturers being driven from the market, the citizens of our neighboring Dominion would hold absolute control, and our builders would be at their mercy. Then, with a wasted trade, demolished mills, and lack of properly trained laborers, our manufacturers could again seek to supply the demand which a careless act of legislation had taken from them.

The supply of timber in our Adirondack forests is in no danger of being exhausted by those who operate according to the plan pursued by your petitioners, for they cut only the large timber, leaving the smaller trees for further growth. In this way the preservation of the forests as regulators of moisture is not injured, and the sources of water supply are maintained. The hemlock timber on most of the tracts is cut for the use of tanners, and the logs are saved for the lumbermen. The spruce supply is in some sections dying rapidly, and to prevent great loss to the owners this must soon be cut. The supply of pine is not large, and the hard word can not be manufactured to any considerable extent at a profit with present railroad facilities and at present prices.

The discontinuance of the lumber business in our county would entail serious consequences on a host of other industries dependent on the consuming power of the fifteen thousand people supported by this industry. The store-keepers, produce dealers, millers, machinists, farmers, railroads, all depend largely upon the prosperity of the lumbermen. Such discontinuance would entail upon the manufacturers who have been for years engaged in establishing their business and locating and preserving their vast forest possessions an almost irretrievable ruin. The cost of the mills in this country is upwards of a quarter of a million of dollars, and the value of the timber lands, if the tariff is maintained, is reckoned by millions.

The conditions existing here are not very different from those in other States, and when the great aggregate of laborers employed is taken into account, the disastrous effects of a repeal of the present small tariff duty, which is felt by no consumer of lumber and yields a comparatively insignificant revenue to the Government, are so appalling that we are constrained to enter our vigorous protest against so ruinous a measure.

Respectfully submitted, February, 1888.

Name.	Residence.	Annual capacity of mills.
		Feet.
A. B. Parmelee & Son	Malone, N. Y	4,000,000
A. A. Wood	St. Regis Falls	4,000,000
McFarlane & Ross	do	9,000,000
R. P. Lindsay	do	1,000,000
J. W. Shanley	Shanley's Station	5,000,000
The Deecey & Backus Lumber Company	Brandon	15,000,000
St. Regis River Lumber Company	Santa Clara	30,000,000
F. A. Cutting, per D. M.	St. Regis Falls	1,000,000
David Mitchell
C. J. Adams	Bangor	2,000,000
Ladd & Smallmann	Malone	4,000,000

Mr. MOFFITT. I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that if the majority of the committee who presented this bill will use their honest judgment in the matter, and throw aside their set method of figuring the profits upon lumber by theory, and examine more carefully this business from a fair and unprejudiced standpoint that the amendment will be agreed to. [Applause.]

[While Mr. MOFFITT was delivering the foregoing remarks his five minutes expired. By unanimous consent, his time was extended for five minutes.]

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, the communication prepared by the lumber men of Michigan, and read on the floor of the House the other day by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], states that the annual output of lumber in that State is 4,000,000,000 feet, which is of the value of $52,000,000; that $17,585,500 is paid to labor in its production; that $4,000,000 is paid to labor in its transportation, and about $6,000,000 is paid for farm productions. This statement shows that the cost of producing is about $4.25 per thousand feet, and that the value of the lumber at the mill is $13 per thousand. Hence, after deducting the cost of production from the value of the product, the remainder will show the value of the lumber in the tree to be $8.75 per thousand feet. This calculation is based upon the statements made in the communication read by Mr. BURROWS. For, if $17,585,500 of labor will produce $52,000,000 in value of lumber from the stump, then $4.25 of labor will produce $13 in value of lumber from the stump, which is 1,000 feet.

Therefore, for every 1,000 feet of lumber the Michigan lumberman manufactures and sells at the mill at $13 per thousand he receives $8.75 per thousand feet for his lumber in the tree. It costs to cut down and saw the tree into logs 16 feet long on an average 50 cents per thousand feet; the average cost of hauling the logs from the stump to the water course is 75 cents per thousand feet; for rafting them to the mill 10 cents per thousand feet; and for sawing the logs and piling the lumber on the dock at the mill the cost will not exceed $1.90 per thousand feet, making the total cost of production in Michigan of $3.25 per thousand feet. This gives the manufacturer a profit of $1 per thousand for sawing at the mill, and he has the further profit of 20 cents per thousand feet on his teams that haul his logs; total profit in manufacturing the lumber of $1.20 per thousand feet. Add this sum to the enormous price of $8.75 the Michigan lumberman gets per thousand feet for his lumber in the tree, it will make $9.95 per thousand feet which is left in the pockets of the lumberman for every foot he manufactures and sells at $13 per thousand. The Michigan lumbermen can not go back on these figures, because they state in their memorial read by Mr. BURROWS that the 4,000,000,000 feet annually produced in Michigan is of the value of $52,000,000, which is just $13 per thousand. They further state that the amount paid to labor in producing the 4,000,000,000 feet is $17,585,500. This will make each thousand feet cost $4.25. But in this labor account of $17,585,500 are included the team account and the mill account, with the profits thereon, and not more than one-third of that sum goes to the actual laborer; the balance is retained by the lumberman himself for the use of his teams, mill, and machinery used in the production of the lumber.

The memorial of the lumbermen of Michigan has served one good purpose; it has given the amount of feet of lumber annually produced in that State, its value, and cost of production, which has enabled us to arrive at the foregoing conclusions by mathematical calculations. It is also made apparent that in the production and sale of 4,000,000,000 feet of lumber in the State of Michigan the lumberman receives for the timber in the tree and the profits on its production $39,800,000, leaving $12,200,000 for the cost of production, less the value of the timber in the tree; but out of that $12,200,000 the teams are fed, the horses are shod, wagons, harness, and sleds kept in repair; fuel and oil for the mills are purchased, and the necessary repairs upon all the machinery and appliances at the mills are kept up; so that not to exceed one-third of the $12,200,000 is paid to the laborer. Yet this is the industry our Republican friends tell us will be broken down and trampled under foot in the State of Michigan if the tariff of $2 per thousand feet upon foreign lumber is repealed. Is there a man upon the floor of this House that honestly believes it?

The repeal of the tariff could possibly do no more than to reduce the value of the lumberman's timber in the tree from the enormous sum of $8.75 to $6.75 per thousand feet; his profits on the production would still remain the same, and he would still have to pay the market value for the labor, and the question whether the lumberman is to get $8.75 or $6.75 per thousand feet for his timber in the tree over the cost of production will neither stop its production nor decrease the price of labor. It has been said during this debate that the average yield of lumber per acre in the tree is 5,000 feet. This statement is calculated to mislead those not familiar with the method used in arriving at such conclusion. In making these estimates the timber belt, comprising half of the State (more or less), is taken and the quantity of standing timber upon the whole area estimated, and the average per acre is made by taking all the land included in that section of the State, when perhaps four-fifths of the land embraced in the calculation is not timber land at all nor entitled to such appellation.

The fact is that in the wild timber portions of Michigan the unculled forests will average 30,000 feet of lumber per acre if you will count out the lakes, swamps, and prairies, if any. This will give to the lumberman for his 30,000 feet of timber on an acre of his ground, after the proposed reduction of the tariff, $6.75 per thousand feet. Thus we see the lumberman whose land is thus rich with timber—and no one dare deny that many thousand acres are—realizes for his timber per acre $202.50 besides all the profits he makes upon the manufacturing of the lumber. But as the tariff now stands the lumberman will get $60 more per acre for the timber in the tree, making $262.50. This extra $60 per acre the consumer has to pay in the name of protection. This is the business (which is making more millionaires than any other business in the United States) we are called upon, in the name of labor, to protect.

The Michigan memorial further states that the annual production of lumber in the United States is 20,000,000,000 feet; that the whole amount of timber in the tree in the dominion of Canada is 50,000,000,000 feet. Now, if the United States consumes 20,000,000,000 feet of lumber annually, as is stated in the Michigan memorial, Canada, with her 50,000,000,000 feet, could not supply the United States to exceed two and one-half years. The estimated quantity of coniferous timber in the United States is 800,000,000,000 feet, of which 350,000,000,000 is west of the Rocky Mountains, leaving east of the Rocky Mountains 450,000,000,000 feet. Now, if the United States should in the future only produce annually, as she now does, 20,000,000,000 feet of lumber, all the timber in the United States east of the Rocky Mountains would be consumed in twenty-two and one-half years, and the whole quantity in the United States would be consumed in forty years.

Of the 450,000,000,000 feet east of the Rocky Mountains, 350,000,000,000 is in the following-named States: North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas, leaving but 100,000,000,000 feet, or one-eighth of the whole, in the twenty-six other States of this Union, to wit: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and Nevada, with a population of over 45,000,000. This statement shows at a glance the interest these great barren Northwesten States have in this timber question, and the folly of insisting that there is a necessity for protection to our lumber industries by continuing a duty on foreign lumber, when, at the rate the United States are now manufacturing lumber, every stick of timber now standing in the twenty-six great States last named would be consumed in five years.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment, and send to the desk the Public Ledger, of Philadelphia, of this date, that the Clerk may read the dispatch I have marked, and show the Democratic members of the House what wickedness they have aided me in perpetrating.

The Clerk read as follows:

MR. SHEARMAN ON THE TARIFF.

[Special to the Public Ledger.]

NEW YORK, June 4.

Thomas G. Shearman delivered an address on the tariff question in Brooklyn to-night. In beginning his address he said he had received a dispatch from Washington, in which it was stated that President Cleveland had just signed the bill of Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, putting a duty of $12 a ton on all pig-iron imported from England.

"Now," said the speaker, "as we import 2,000,000 tons of pig-iron from England every year, and as this duty is absolutely prohibitory, let us see how it will benefit or injure the workingmen of the United States. It takes 700 large steamers to bring this amount of pig-iron to the United States, and their stoppage will throw the men who handle the pig-iron on board out of employment for the time being, or say, 10,000 men. It would take 3,000 longshoremen a year without a holiday to take the iron from the 700 ships that would bring it across. It would take 6,000 men with horses and carts to remove it to the depot to be transferred to the different railroads, and, taking into account the sailors, longshoremen, railroad men, molders, stove-makers, and other men engaged in the manufacture of iron, 150,000 men would be thrown out of employment altogether."

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have had that dispatch read for the purpose of illustrating to the innocent gentlemen on the other side of the House, who believe all the statements they hear made on this subject of the tariff by their leaders and party friends, and to show them how dangerous it is to trust the statements of gentlemen like Mr. Shearman or my friend from New York [Mr. COX], who has just delighted us by showing in his cheerful way how the lumber trade is denuding our country of its forests and subjecting its people to the dreadful perils he depicted with so much hilarity, or like Augustus Mongredien, who some years ago prepared for the Cobden Club a pamphlet addressed to the American farmer, of which the club sent 50,000 copies for distribution among our farmers.

The distribution was begun, but Mr. Mongredien's statements were found to be so wonderfully exaggerated and so much like the imitations of Munchausen contained in Mr. Shearman's address of Saturday evening, that it was soon discovered that it would not do to bring them to the attention of practical farmers. The pamphlet was therefore withdrawn from the agricultural portions of the country for which it had been intended, and is now from time to time sent into our manufacturing towns where the people do not know very much about farming. These gentlemen, Mr. Shearman and my friend from New York, are gentlemen, as was Mr. Mongredien. It has been my privilege to know all of them. Mongredien is dead; but with the survivors of the trio he had read Bastiat long ago, and, knowing as they all thought they did, that Bastiat uttered nothing but pure philosophic truth, none of them ever thought it important to investigate facts. To their minds anything that harmonizes with Bastiat's theories is true and anything that does not is not worth knowing, because, being out of harmony with Bastiat's aphorisms, it can not be true. [Laughter.]

Mr. Shearman is a gentleman of intelligence. He is the eminent lawyer who was said to have shed tears when testimony bearing against his client was brought out during the protracted trial of the late Henry Ward Beecher. He is eminently pious, too, and he is a most agreeable man, as is my friend from New York [Mr. COX], on all subjects except his lunacy that the facts of history, to be accepted, must square with the theories of Bastiat. [Laughter.] Mr. Shearman is a gentleman in all respects. His home, of the hospitalities of which it has been my privilege to partake, is one of the most delightful homes in all the City of Churches. He is, as I have said, a very agreeable gentleman, almost as agreeable, if it were possible, as my distinguished friend from New York. [Laughter.] He is, however, more pious than my friend from New York. [Renewed laughter.] This is probably because he has not been in Congress. I mention his piety to show that the misstatements the dispatch discloses, that you gentlemen had helped me to put a duty of $12 a ton upon pig-iron, and had gone up with me, with a brass band before us, to get President Cleveland to sign the bill, are not deliberate attempts to injure us or to mislead his hearers. Mr. Shearman did not think he was stating what was not true a bit more than Mongredien did when he represented our farmers as suffering so terribly that they ought to send over written pledges to the Cobden Club that at the next Congressional election they would not vote for any candidate who would not promise to favor the repeal of the duties that were destroying them and their farms. Let us look a little at this statement. The gentleman who made it is really a sensible man, an educated man, a leader of prayer meetings, a gentleman who is delegated every few years to represent the New York and Brooklyn free-traders at the Cobden Club dinners. Yet listen to what stuff he utters:

First. Here is a statement that the President has signed, you gentlemen having at my instigation passed, a bill to impose a duty of $12 a ton—on what? Why, on the 2,000,000 tons of pig-iron which he says we import annually. Just think of it! Two million tons annually! The duty $12 a ton.

Now, what have you and the President done by being thus seduced and deluded by me? You have thrown out of work "6,000 men with horses," each of whom—that is if there are 6,000 men with horses employed in distributing those 2,000,000 tons, each of whom with his horse lived by handling thirteen tons and a half of pig-iron a year.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I trust I may have my time extended a little.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] may be permitted to continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY. First, we import 2,000,000 tons of pig-iron, and this importation requires "seven hundred large steamers" to bring it to this country, and the awful consequence of stopping those seven hundred steamers would be to—

Throw the men who handle the pig-iron on board out of employment for the time being, or, say 10,000 men; it would take 3,000 longshoremen a year without a holiday to take the iron from the seven hundred ships that would bring it across. It would take 6,000 men with horses and carts to remove it to the depot to be transferred to the different railroads, and, taking into account the sailors, longshoremen, railroad men, molders, stove-makers—

You see how intimately Mr. Shearman is informed on all branches of business connected with these imports of 2,000,000 tons of pig-iron annually—and other men engaged in the manufacture of iron, 150,000 men would be thrown out of employment altogether.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask, what would be the effect on our labor market of admitting 2,000,000 tons of pig-iron? How many men are employed in digging the ore, quarrying the fluxes, digging the coal, coking it and handling it? Forty miles is the average that material has to be hauled in England. Four hundred miles, upon the highest British authority, that of Sir Isaac Lothian Bell, is the average that American ore, flux, and fuel have to be hauled. Look, too, at the effect upon our railroads of drawing our lumber from a British province or our iron from Britain herself. Look at the thousands of American men employed on the ships on our lakes, and on our railroads, whose lines are now longer on land than Britain's lines have been on sea since the opening of the Suez Canal. But, happily for our wage-earning countrymen, Mr. Shearman's sketch is but a figment of the brain, a pure work of imagination. During the four fiscal years closing June 30, 1887, we imported 1,299,530 tons or an average not of 2,000,000 but of 324,883 tons, or less than one-sixth of the amount on which Mr. Shearman based his appeal for free trade.

In submitting this extraordinary statement of Mr. Shearman's, I call attention to these vagaries to show gentlemen that they can not rely upon the statements of fact which are made by theoretical free-traders who draw their facts from their "inner consciousness" or from practical jokers, who probably deceived him and perverted my friend Shearman's Saturday night address.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has quoted something in reference to our friend, Brother Shearman, and associates me quite pleasantly with him. I find a little quotation about Judge KECLEY——

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, I could furnish the gentleman a volume of them.

Mr. COX. I find a quotation about Judge KELLEY which is very good——

Mr. KELLEY. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. COX (reading):

Judge KELLEY's talk to the people about the benefit of protection to them reminds one of the conduct of the hunter who cut off his dog's tail, roasted the tail, picked off the meat from the tail, and gave the bone of the tail to the dog for his share.

[Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. Is that from Mr. Shearman?

Mr. COX. That is perhaps a theoretical exaggeration——

Mr. KELLEY. Is it from Mr. Shearman, or is it original?

Mr. COX. It is original with a San Francisco paper.

Now, I want to make one remark, so as to emulate the good temper of my friend from Pennsylvania, who is always so kind toward me, as he has been, lo! these thirty years. The gentlemen on the other side who find fault with this bill, which is brought here really for the purpose of reducing the surplus——

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. COX. As the principal idea, with me, it is the surplus; the tariff being the incident. Gentlemen find fault with the committee's bill without yet giving us any remedy. They say, if they say anything at all, "Keep to the old tariff." This is no remedy. It is a continuance of the mischief; and yet the body of the political followers of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] say in their platforms, "Revise the tariff." How revise it? If you can not revise it on lumber, on what can you revise it?

A MEMBER. On sugar.

Mr. COX. On sugar? We propose to do that to some extent.

A MEMBER. On rice.

Mr. COX. Well, wait till the vote comes.

Mr. MILLIKEN. How much do you propose to leave on sugar after you reduce it?

Mr. COX. I want to say a word in reply to the gentleman's colleague from Maine, whom I always delight to hear speak on account of the music of his voice—I will not mention which one of the gentleman's colleagues. [Laughter.] He gave us a fable the other day—a very good fable, which brought down the House. It had some appositeness. And now I will give a fable to illustrate as well the "antiquity and universality" of Æsop's humor, as the terrible results of fault-finding. While you gentlemen on the other side clamor for a revision of the tariff, you find fault with every proposition looking that way. You find fault with placing lumber on the free-list as you find fault with every other item in this bill. I send up the fable to the Clerk's desk to be read. It is full of meaning. Besides, it is an answer to the gentleman from Maine who gave us another fable in the general debate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Jupiter, Neptune, and Minerva (as the story goes) once contended which of them should make the most perfect thing. Jupiter made a man; Pallas made a house; and Neptune made a bull; and Momus—for he had not yet been turned out of Olympus—was chosen judge to decide which production had the greatest merit. He began by finding fault with the bull, because his horns were not below his eyes, so that he might see when he butted with them. Next he found fault with the man, because there was no window in his breast that all might see his inward thoughts and feelings. And lastly he found fault with the house, because it had no wheels to enable its inhabitants to remove from bad neighbors. But Jupiter forthwith drove the critic out of heaven, telling him that a fault-finder could never be pleased, and that it was time to criticise the works of others when he had done some good thing himself.

[Applause and laughter.]

Mr. COX. Jupiter drove the critic out of heaven; and I do not know where he went, but I suspect where he must have gone. I have never heard of him since. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. He went below.

Mr. COX. I do not know. I give it up. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. ADAMS. If the amendment is withdrawn I renew it.

Mr. KELLEY. I will withdraw it if the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. ADAMS. I renew the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, so far as we have now gone, it does not appear that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is correct in saying that the particular purpose of this bill is to reduce the revenue. I do not know exactly what the total receipts from the lumber duty were last year, but I remember very well the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] pointed out the other day that the items we have discussed produced only an insignificant amount. Therefore, so far as those items are concerned, or the items we have had the opportunity to discuss in this five-minute debate, the main object of the bill is not to reduce the revenue, but to revise the tariff according to certain principles entertained by gentlemen on the other side. They believe it will permanently furnish cheaper lumber to the American consumer. We believe, or at any rate I believe, that although for six months after this law takes effect it will produce cheaper lumber, that saving to the consumer will not be permanent.

But my purpose was not to discuss that question; I wished to point out what I regard to be an exaggeration in the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX]. Whatever good argument may be made for the abolition of the lumber duty it can not be found in the proposition that the abolition of the duty is necessary to the protection of our forests. Yet that argument has been made time and again on the floor of the House—once or twice by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], and several times by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX]. I am inclined to think the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] on this question does not show his usual accuracy. He draws his facts confessedly, or almost confessedly, from his reminiscences of the Orient.

Mr. COX. I drew them from the report of the forestry congress.

Mr. ADAMS. He referred to his experiences of oriental countries.

Mr. COX. Yes, I did. I am not a theoretical person; I made practical observations.

Mr. ADAMS. He seems to be of the opinion the lumber business is so carried on that when the lumberman gets through with a certain piece of land he leaves it naked land; that the sun strikes down upon it and dries up the soil; evaporation increases and the climate changes. Now, I do not believe that that is true of the lumbering business in any part of the United States. It is certainly not true of New England.

Mr. COX. Northern Pennsylvania is almost destitute now because the timber was cut off. I remember gangs of sixteen saws running.

Mr. ADAMS. Where?

Mr. COX. At Williamsport.

Mr. ADAMS. When?

Mr. COX. Thirty years ago.

Mr. ADAMS. That brings me to what I was about to state.

Mr. COX. All that lumber went west, west to Chicago, to be used on the prairie, but now it all comes from Chicago east. We are destroying the forests of the Northwest as they were destroyed in Pennsylvania.

Mr. ADAMS. We are destroying them in the Northwest. There has been a change in the method of carrying on the lumber business since the gentleman from New York, who is not a theoretical but a practical observer, made his observations in Pennsylvania thirty years ago, on which he bases his references of to-day.

So far as New England is concerned we have the information from Representatives of that section on this floor that it is not so. They say that they cut only the increase of the forests, and it is further stated that there is more timber standing to-day in New England as a result of this system than there was forty years ago.

So far as the South and Southwest is concerned I am inclined to think from information received that the same is true to a certain extent.

So far as the Northwestern States are concerned, a great change has been made in the method of lumbering within the last twenty years. Twenty years ago lumbering was carried on upon the lower portions of the logging streams exclusively. It was necessarily the case and could not then be changed. There were no appliances in use at that day to get to the upper waters of the streams and get the logs out; and hence the lumber upon the lower streams which was accessible was taken. These forests, which were pine, were exclusively consumed by the business. The argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] might fairly apply to lumbering as it was then carried on.

There has since that time been a great change, and his argument does not so fairly apply. By the use of dams the lumbermen are now enabled to reach the upper courses of the streams and take the finest pine timber, selecting the best and largest where it grows amongst the hard timber, leaving the latter standing.

The gentleman from New York, therefore, who is a practical and not a theoretical observer, will see the difference at once. You may take a single pine from a 40-acre tract; it will increase to a certain extent the evaporation of the soil, and in a limited way dry up the land; but as a practical question it does not have any material effect. It makes a great difference whether you take every tree from a 40-acre tract or take only the scattered pine standing in such a tract and leave the rest of the growth standing; and I think I am in a position to state as a matter of fact that a very large part of the lumbering in the Northwest is carried on in that way. I have, of course, no practical familiarity with the business except in so far as excursions for recreation have made me familiar with the country where it is carried on. But I know that that is the way it is carried on to a great extent.

I am sure that when an argument is made by a gentleman so intelligent as the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], which is based on an erroneous impression, he will willingly accept the correction of the exaggeration into which he has been betrayed.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, in 1854 we entered into a treaty with Canada by which the Canadian lumber was brought into the United States free of duty. The Commissioner of Revenue, in 1869, tells us that at the expiration of that treaty in 1866, when lumber became dutiable, the price of lumber in Chicago, where my friend [Mr. ADAMS] lives, was $14.80 per thousand feet; but as soon as the treaty expired and the tariff took effect upon Canadian lumber the price jumped instantly up to $17.30 per thousand feet.

That was an increase of just about the amount of the duty—cent per cent. of the average rate of duty that was placed by the lumber dealers in the United States upon all lumber. Now that, Mr. Chairman, is a very singular fact.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. WEBER. Of course the gentleman wishes to be entirely correct, and I would like to ask if this was manufactured lumber within the terms of the reciprocity treaty?

Mr. MILLS. I will read from the article itself.

Timber and lumber of all kinds, round, hewed, sawed, and unmanufactured in whole or in part——

Mr. WEBER. I thought so, "unmanufactured."

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir. That is the class of lumber the Commissioner spoke of.

Mr. WEBER. Then, of course, the gentleman's argument does not apply.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman's argument applies exactly. The Commissioner was recommending Congress to take the duty off of lumber, and he said take the tariff off of the Canadian lumber, and it will be money in the pockets of the consumers of lumber in this country.

Now, then, if the tariff has been added to lumber, and it has in a great measure—in some localities it has not—because every gentleman who is posted upon the subject knows that a tariff is inoperative in a locality where the product is exported, for the simple reason that an article never comes from one point to another except it goes from the point where it is produced at a less cost of production to the point where it is produced at the highest, and therefore when it goes from the point where it is produced at the least cost of production to another point where it is consumed it has no advantage from a tariff at the place of production.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Will the gentleman permit an interruption, to ask him how he can reconcile his statement with the statement of Sir Charles Tupper, who says that if you take the duty off of lumber it will be worth one and one-half millions a year to Canada?

Mr. MILLS. Oh, I do not pretend to reconcile all the statements of these high-tariff people. Sir Charles Tupper is a high-tariff man, and I do not undertake to make his statement fit with those of other high-tariff people. Why, you can not reconcile the statements of your high-tariff friends on that side of the House on this very question. The venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] stated at the opening of this debate that the preservation of the Southern forests should be one of the great aims of this Congress, and said that this bill, instead of preserving these forests, aimed at the destruction of Southern interests. That remained until his colleague came along and took the other view of the question—that the whole theory of the bill was sectional, and it was aimed at the destruction of Northern industries. Now I cannot reconcile these; I do not undertake to do it. I give the question up.

Mr. KELLEY. I can reconcile it.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, yes; you can reconcile impossibilities. [Laughter.]

Mr. KERR. The gentleman from Texas says it was an internal-revenue officer——

Mr. MILLS. No, I said the commissioner of revenue.

Mr. KERR. Well, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Now, I ask——

Mr. MILLS. It was not the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. KERR. I ask if the opposition to the abolition of the internal-revenue system does not come almost unanimously from the people who hold offices under that system?

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman can determine that question for himself. It is only necessary to say that it was not the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but the revenue commissioner of whom I spoke.

Mr. KELLEY. David A. Wells, the Commissioner of Revenue, the counsel for the Cobden Club in the United States of America.

Mr. MILLS. Now, I want to give you a little of what Sir Charles Tupper said. Sir Charles Tupper made a speech in the Canadian Parliament a few days ago. As he has been quoted on the other side of the Chamber several times in this debate, and his wise sayings have been specially recommended to me, I also may quote him. He reminds the free-trade people in Canada that they are complaining against the measures reported in the Canadian Parliament, and that their friends on the south side of the line, the Democrats, are doing something for free trade. He speaks of the iron interest. He takes this very bill and finds that with an existing duty on iron and steel of 43½ per cent. the bill proposes to reduce it to 41½ per cent. And he asks, "Do you call that free trade?" Yet gentlemen on the other side do so, and say we are trying to ruin the industries of the country. He says Canada does not impose half the duty that we propose in this bill for the United States. Yet his policy in Canada is called a protective policy, because it imposes a 23 per cent. duty on iron and steel, when you charge us with being free-traders when we propose making it 41 per cent.

But let us go back to lumber. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], who is well posted on this matter, read an article from some friend of his in which he stated there were $250,000,000 worth of domestic product of lumber in this country per annum. He stated that there was a product of 4,000,000,000 feet of lumber in Michigan. He stated in the whole country it was 20,000,000,000 feet and worth $250,000,000.

Now the average rate of duty on the lumber we import into this country, $8,000,000 worth, is something about 18 per cent. Mr. Wells, Commissioner of Revenue, said in 1869 it took $16,000,000 out of the pockets of the people of the United States. If that was true in 1869 it is true to-day. If the tariff takes 18 per cent. out of the pockets of the people, that is $35,000,000 taken out of the pockets of the people that go into the pockets not of the laborers, but of the timber-owners. The laborer works for whatever he can get for the market price of his labor.

[By unanimous consent the time of Mr. MILLS was extended for five minutes.]

Mr. MILLS. Among the strange things which I find impossible to reconcile is to see gentlemen standing up all the time, and when presented with arguments by gentlemen on the other side, telling us labor is 30, 40, or 50 per cent. higher than it is on the other side. They have a tariff in Canada on sawed lumber of 20 per cent., while ours on an average is 18 per cent. If the tariff makes high wages, why does it not make high wages in Canada as well as here? I want to know if there is something in the atmosphere of Canada, if there is something exceptional in her laws, notional or economic, that paralyzes their system and prevents it from protecting their laboring people?

Mr. WEBER. Does the gentleman want an answer now?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEBER. It is because the current of trade is this way instead of going the other way.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman should get a patent for that expression. He might claim a monopoly of it.

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman will allow me I will demonstrate it. From my own personal experience I know there is a less demand for the employment of labor in that country. If there was a greater demand the labor would be higher.

Mr. MILLS. But my friend from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] a few moments ago punctured the whole of this bubble with the statement that if labor across the line is 30 per cent. less than in Maine a man would have nothing to do but go across the border in order to get additional pay. But suppose you say the labor is away up in Canada in the pine forests; then your transportation charges protect you, and I believe you could put your lumber in the market at a lower price than that man can put his lumber, paying transportation charges.

It is not for the benefit of the workmen. It is not for the benefit of the man who puts his arm to the log and rolls it on the wagon. It is for the benefit of the man who wears the leather wallet. The profit which comes to him he divides with no one. Such is the truth. You may cover it with sophistry as much as you please, but the fact still stands that the man who gets the benefit is the man who holds the lumber.

What means has the laborer of exacting this additional price from his employer? What power has he over it? The property has increased in price, but it is not the property of the laborer. It belongs to the owner of the timber. Then why do you say that a man, because he has the capacity to pay more, will, out of mere charity, do it, when you know that that is not human nature?

Mr. DOCKERY. Men do not go around looking for high-priced labor.

Mr. MILLS. No, sir. Mr. Chairman, before the tariff can take the benefit of this tax out of the pocket of the man who owns the property and put it into the pocket of the laborer who performs the work, it has got to change the constitution of the human heart, and no legislation can do that. Man is to-day what he was when he was created. He is governed by the instinct of self-preservation. The moving impulse, the controlling power that causes him to accomplish anything in this world is the motive of self-interest; and in order to take an advantage from the employer and give it to the workingman, you must have some compulsory power of law to take it out of the pocket of the employer and transfer it to the pocket of the employés; just as the law now puts its hand into the pocket of the consumer and transfers this money from his pocket to the pocket of the protected monopolist. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, with becoming modesty I hope, I beg to extend to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, as well as to the assembled St. Louis convention, the compliments of the people of Oregon, and to accompany this expression with this message from her people: "Oregon has voted for protection by 3,000 majority." The lumber interests and the wool interests have spoken. The producer as well as the consumer in one common voice send forth this defiant protest. The wage-earner has spoken. The pending bill has been in issue and carefully and intelligently considered. The people are willing for those to have free trade who desire it, but denounce the attempt of those who impose free trade on others while retaining protection for themselves.

Sir, this is the first signal gun from that great moving column of the people, who, realizing the threatened danger to American industries, are rising up all over the land to testify their indignation at this mischievous interference with our onward progress to national as well as individual prosperity. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I say—and I say it with regret—that if the Committee on Ways and Means or the majority of them had designed with malicious intent to injure the best interests of the people of the Pacific coast, they could not have done it more effectually than by the provision in this bill which is now under consideration. The three great industries of that wonderful section of the Union which has made such marvelous strides in greatness and prosperity may be said to be wool, lumber, and grain, together with fruit. Lumber it is proposed to slaughter; wool receives a common fate with lumber. Fruit is also placed under the common guillotine, with other industries which affect every man, woman, and child upon the shores of the great Pacific.

Mr. Chairman, coming directly to the paragraph at issue, and speaking not merely from a general study of the subject, but from some personal experience in the business, I desire to say to the gentlemen who advocate this provision that, so far as the Pacific coast is concerned, there is no industry which is so precarious as the lumber industry. More failures have occurred among the lumber manufacturers of the Pacific coast than among gentlemen engaged in any other business.

Let me say further to those who have taken up the idea of the immense profits which go to the millionaire lumbermen, that at least 75 per cent. of the proceeds of lumber manufacture, so far as the business has come under my knowledge, goes directly to the laborer, the wage-earner. Look for a moment, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, at the extent of that great industry and the corresponding injury which must be inflicted upon us by anything which disturbs it, and then you will appreciate the indignation which has spread over that land like an immense cyclone, and brought forth the result which was announced at the polls in the State of Oregon on yesterday evening. The lumber product of the Pacific coast for the year 1880 amounted to 692,000,000 feet. So rapid has been the increase of the business, that last year, 1887, our lumber product amounted to 1,370,000,000 feet.

[Here the hammer fell.]

On motion of Mr. MILLS, unanimous consent was given to Mr. HERMANN to continue his remarks for five minutes longer.

Mr. HERMANN. I thank the gentleman from Texas for his courtesy. Speaking for my own State, which has over 300 miles of coast-line bordered by forests for the whole distance, and extending inland from 50 to 100 miles, along the western slope of the Cascades, as well as the Coast Range, are found the mightiest forests, the most magnificent timber that ever grew upon American or any other soil. In 1880 the product was 177,171,000 feet, whereas last year it had risen to 300,000,000 feet. Twenty-five thousand people upon the shores of the Pacific are supported directly by the lumber industries. Gentlemen speak of the effect upon the consumers of combinations among the lumber manufacturers. I desire to say that so far as the commodities which make up the ordinary course of the lumber trade on the Pacific coast, the Oregon pine, the ash, the sugar-pine, etc., our resources are too immense ever to be affected for more than a very brief period by any combination of manufacturers that can possibly be formed. Look at the situation; from Monterey, in the State of California, up to the boundary line of British Columbia, over 1,000 miles, not including the wonderful timber resources of Alaska, the forests extend, and through all that vast forest region you will find the lumbermen engaged in their busy traffic. I differ with the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], who always entertains the House with so much information upon every subject of which he treats—I differ with that gentleman when he speaks of the great danger to the forests of this country from the lumber trade. I do not agree with him that they will be entirely denuded so that those who succeed us will have to resort to foreign lands for lumber.

I can not speak with any definite knowledge as to the character of the forests on the Atlantic coast or in the States east of the Rocky Mountains; but as for the Pacific coast our forests are reproductive. They are very similar to those of Norway, and under our humid atmosphere are constantly being reproduced. Cut off the forests there this year, and in a quarter of a century or in thirty years you will find there trees of almost the diameter of those which preceded them. So that I apprehend that the time will not come in centuries when those forests will cease to afford lucrative employment to all the people who may be engaged in them. Such is the character of those great forests. As to their immensity, I might suggest to gentlemen that the acreage of the timber forests of the Pacific coast equals almost one-half of the aggregate forestry resources of the entire Union.

That recently high prices have prevailed upon the Pacific coast I must admit. But let me say that these are more to be attributed to the great "boom" in the building industries in Lower California, in San Diego, Los Angeles, Pasadena, and other cities which have grown up like mushrooms in the night time, than to any combination. That is the history of our experience so far as the Pacific coast is concerned.

Let me ask gentlemen what shall we do with these immense forests? If we are to invite the industry into the Canadian borders and transfer our busy traffic from the American shores to the communities of British Columbia and Canada, what are we to do with these great resources? Allow them to lie there unused for generations? Or does not the case rather appeal to us in a business point of view that we shall utilize those great natural resources, give employment to our wage-earners, give markets to our producers and farmers, and offer resources for the investment of idle American capital?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERMANN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with attention to the remarks of the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. HERMANN] because I know he is well informed about the lumber question of the Pacific Slope. That is his business. He is a large lumber dealer and producer there. I have had the pleasure of some very interesting conversations with the gentleman on the lumber question, and I have found him well informed.

Now, in numerous petitions which have reached us from that coast, certain reasons have been stated why competition would be feared with British Columbia. None of those gentlemen have stated that they feared that the lumber of Wisconsin or Michigan or Eastern Canada could be transported to the Pacific coast by railroad or by water to successfully compete with them. None of them complain that they fear cheap lumber from any part of Asia. They say they do, however, fear cheap lumber from British Columbia, where there is Chinese labor. But, sir, in the very papers which they have sent to us they have laid particular stress upon the fact that "vigorous manly labor is required for and stimulated by the prosecution of the lumber industry." Every gentleman on this floor knows that this work requires the most muscular service. I ask the gentleman who has just taken his seat whether there is not a redundancy of Chinese labor on the American side of the line, and whether he and other lumbermen can not employ that labor when they desire it, and whether they do not refuse to employ it because it is not profitable, being too feeble for this heavy work? I have myself been somewhat in the lumber business; I have worked a solid crew of Chinamen, and discharged them as being utterly worthless around a saw-mill. Will the gentleman from Oregon reply to my inquiry?

Mr. HERMANN. With great pleasure. The facts of the case, I think, are such as should entirely destroy the erroneous impression which seems to prevail in the gentleman's mind in reference to this matter. In the first place, the people in our part of the country are opposed, constitutionally, socially, morally, and otherwise, to the employment of Chinese labor. While it is true that such labor can be employed at from 25 to 50 per cent. less than American labor, and in many departments will perform as much service to-day as the white labor, still we have reached the conclusion, in the interest of the white laborer, that "the Chinese must go." That is the verdict of the people; that is the verdict of this Congress; and will forever prevent that class of Chinese labor from again obtaining a foothold on American soil.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman with his comments is taking up a good deal of my five minutes. I only asked a statement of facts. He knows that those Chinamen are there. There are many thousands of them on that coast; and they are employed. I do not believe the gentleman can successfully say that there is any more heart, or humanity, or patriotism in the people who are in the lumber business than there is in any of the other classes of our citizens on that coast who to-day are employing the resident Chinese wherever they can be profitably employed. If they could be profitably employed in the lumber business, I am sure the gentleman would employ them just as quickly as those who now employ them in other branches of business.

Mr. HERMANN. Pardon me a moment. I take especial pleasure in replying to the gentleman's last remark. I can say, Mr. Chairman, and it is of record in connection with my brief operations in the milling business, that I have positively refused at any and all times to employ a single one of the Mongolian race, although they offered to perform the same service for 50 per cent. less than white laborers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Precisely.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROGERS took the floor, and yielded his time, by unanimous consent, to his colleague.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Oregon, in the remarks which he has submitted to the House, occupied some very curious industrial positions, but it must be remembered that he is also in politics, and we all know that the Chinaman is not a favorite feature in politics on the Pacific coast. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HERMANN. Has the gentleman from Arkansas also discovered that?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, and I have discovered another thing.

Mr. HERMANN. I suppose that was before the gentleman went into politics.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, and I have discovered another point, that your people who are in the lumber business do not employ Chinamen because that kind of labor does not pay. It is not every mill owner who is in politics, and yet none of them employ Chinese crews. The Chinamen who are found in my State are occupied in light employment, but when it comes to heavy work on plantations or clearing up ground, to plowing, to work in the forests, they are utterly unprofitable at almost any price.

Mr. HERMANN. I presume those who have had experience in reference to Chinese labor are the best judges of it. The gentleman from Arkansas will not pretend to say he is as well acquainted in Arkansas with that class of labor as the people upon the Pacific coast.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is not what we have in hand. But you admit my statement, and my own experience and observation further prove it. I am answering the argument put forward by gentlemen on the Pacific coast that what they have to fear from British Columbia is the cheap Chinese labor which is employed there in the lumber business. I am trying to show that Chinese labor in this industry is unprofitable labor, and that this is no just ground of fear on the part of those engaged in the lumber business on the Pacific coast.

Now, sir, there is one other feature about the lumber trade in the gentleman's own section of the country. From that lumber region from which he comes there were exported last year over 92,000,000 feet of lumber, such as plank and boards alone. It went into the markets of the world in competition with the lumber of British Columbia, and if it had not gone through profitably it would not have gone at all. And yet gentlemen have the effrontery to stand here in the face of this immense export trade of lumber from the Pacific coast and of the other evidence and say they can not compete with worthless Chinese labor in British Columbia. It is a gratuitous putting of high prices on our own people for purposes of subsidy and nothing else.

There is one thing it might affect, however, and that is the profits on stumpage. Those gentlemen who have bought up the vast areas of lumber land and got large profits on stumpage would possibly in some cases have to reduce stumpage charges, and that is the feature uniformly left out by you gentlemen in the discussion on this floor.

Mr. HERMANN. So far as Chinese labor is concerned, is not the gentleman aware of the fact that the building of the Union Pacific Railroad and of the Northern Pacific Railroad would have been postponed for years if it had not been for the employment of Chinese labor in the construction of those roads? Is he not aware that they would not have been completed within two or three years of the time they were but for the fact of the employment of Chinese labor?

And now as to the employment of Chinese labor around saw-mills, the gentleman certainly must admit there are portions of work in the lumbering business where Chinese labor is employed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes; I suppose they are good for picking up chips. [Laughter.]

Mr. HERMANN. They make good teamsters, and they make excellent cooks.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Oh, yes; that may be so.

Mr. HERMANN. They are preferred to white cooks in the lumber camps. They are employed to haul sawdust.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Oh, yes; they do very well to haul sawdust, pick up chips, and boil soup. [Laughter.] Experience has shown that where you do employ them for heavy work it is unprofitable in competition with vigorous, manly labor." You admit now that you do employ them for light work wherever it will pay. I admit their service on the two railroads you cite. It was Chinamen or nothing at that time and under the then existing circumstances. Are they so employed now? No; better and hence cheaper labor can be got now. Where else with our 150,000 miles of railroad has this been done? You know it was an exception and of dire and expensive stress. The world over, railroad men say and show by their acts that the vigorous labor they can employ at almost any price is the cheapest labor they can get. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I understand the pending amendment to be to strike out lines 11 and 12 of the bill under consideration, and that it is not a pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is a pro forma amendment, but in the absence of objection it will be withdrawn. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. McCORMICK. Then I renew the pro forma amendment.

I do this, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of discussing briefly the two lines constituting the paragraph under consideration. All that has gone before in this bill is of minor consideration, and all that follows these two lines is likewise of minor importance, as compared with the paragraph now before us. This paragraph strikes at the entire lumber industries of the United States. It includes sawed boards, planks, deals, and all other kinds of sawed lumber and puts them all on the free-list.

Under existing law hemlock, white-wood, basswood, sycamore, and the cheaper grades of lumber are admitted upon the payment of a duty of $1 per thousand feet, while all other sawed lumber, which includes pine and hard wood of all kinds, pays a duty of $2 per thousand feet.

Much has been said, sir, in this debate upon the subject of pine lumber; but as I recollect it neither in the general debate nor in the discussion now taking place upon the several paragraphs of the bill as they have been reached and considered has any attention been paid to the great hemlock-lumber industry.

I have the honor to represent a district which comprises a distinct hemlock belt representing an area of country averaging in length 250 miles and in width about 50 miles. There was manufactured in that district during the last year some 500,000,000 feet of hemlock lumber and more than 300,000,000 of white-pine lumber; and when I heard the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] inform the House a few minutes ago that the lumber of Pennsylvania had been destroyed by the gang-saws that he saw there in operation more than thirty years ago, I inferred, and very naturally, that he intended the committee to understand that the lumber regions of Pennsylvania are in that condition that he described the other day as the scene of "calcined desolation."

And yet, Mr. Chairman, that region of country produced—and I refer to the district which I represent—nearly one thousand millions of feet of lumber last year, and five hundred millions, or about one-half of it, was hemlock. Why, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is no proper appreciation, if we may judge from the expression of opinion we hear from the other side of the House, of the extent of the lumber industry of this country.

It stands third in magnitude of the great industries of the country, and I am surprised that the gentlemen constituting the Ways and Means Committee, whose business it is to understand the question, should come upon the floor of this House and gravely tell us that the lumbering industries of the country are confined solely and exclusively to the Pacific coast and the Southern States. A business which pays $5,000,000 annually in wages in the State of Pennsylvania alone, it strikes me, is a very considerable industry, and one which deserves at least a passing consideration at the hands of this committee.

But it is said, sir, that the wage-earner is not to have and does not receive the benefit of the duty which is imposed upon imported lumber. I want to say, and I speak within my own knowledge when I assert it to be true here, that in the locality which I represent, and in the industry of which I speak the difference of wages between Canada and in that region is greater than the amount of the duty. It costs the manufacturer for every thousand feet of lumber that he manufactures, in labor alone, $5.50 to $6. This varies, to a certain extent, according to locality, the proximity of the timber to the streams, and other existing difficulties in the way of carrying on the business.

That lumber is worth at the mills about $7 per thousand feet. The labor-cost of a thousand feet of lumber in Pennsylvania, as already indicated, is from $5.50 to $6, and the labor cost in Canada is about one-half of that sum. The statement of my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] as to the difference in the wages paid in Canada and Pennsylvania are in exact accord with the facts. The Ways and Means Committee were furnished with the proofs that such were the facts not only by the petition of the West Branch Lumbermen's Exchange, of Williamsport, Pa., but the difference between the wages paid in Northern New York and Canada, right on the Canadian border, were proven by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MOFFITT] by a like petition to be just as great.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McKINLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMICK. The lumber product piled up in the rough at the mill is only worth, as I have said, about $7 per thousand feet on the average, leaving only $1.50 to represent the stumpage, the investment in plant, etc., and the profit of the manufacturer. The stumpage is worth from 50 cents to $1 per thousand feet in the tree, leaving to the manufacturer for all of his outlay and investment, after he pays his employés and the price of stumpage, but from 50 cents to $1 per thousand feet as the margin out of which he is to get his profit. When we take into consideration the depreciation of the plant by use, the constantly recurring expenses, and the necessary losses in the course of trade by reason of bad accounts, I think all will agree that this is indeed a very narrow margin.

Yet we are told that the lumbermen are getting rich, that their profits are simply enormous. I undertake to say here, and without fear of successful contradiction, that of every thousand feet of hemlock lumber, when it gets to market, not less than 90 per cent. is labor. The profits realized by the manufacturer are therefore very inconsiderable.

Now a word as to the destruction of the forests, which it is said the present tariff tends to encourage. Why, Mr. Chairman, so far as the hemlock industry is concerned, the matter of tariff or no tariff can have no appreciable effect, and for this reason: that not a single hemlock tree in Pennsylvania is ever cut by the lumbermen.

They are cut by the tanners for the bark, and lumbering in hemlock is incidental to the tanning business. If you take the duty off lumber the cutting of the timber will go right on, but you cripple or destroy the business of lumbering because the hemlock of Pennsylvania comes into competition with the hemlock and spruce of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the Eastern markets of this country. The great bulk of the hemlock will be cut down for the bark, and allowed to lie in the woods and decay as it did ten years ago, because there was not sufficient margin of profit to warrant the manufacture of it into lumber.

Not a single tree has been cut in ten years in the State of Pennsylvania, so far as I know, for lumbering purposes alone. If you take this duty off you wipe out the narrow margin that now exists in favor of the American lumberman, unless he maintains the margin by taking that much from wages of the labor employed. You certainly cripple and may destroy the whole lumber interest of Pennsylvania. With a margin of but 50 cents a thousand feet, and with hemlock in great quantities in Nova Scotia and elsewhere reaching New York by cheaper transportation than we can reach it from Pennsylvania, there will not be much to encourage the manufacture of hemlock lumber in my State. There is not a member of this House from the State which I in part represent—and I see some of them listening to my remarks—but will agree with me; and I challenge contradiction when I say that the margin of profit on hemlock does not exceed the figures I have stated.

One thing more. I desire to call the special attention of the Committee on Ways and Means to the legal effect of enacting into law this provision—putting sawed lumber on the free-list. It goes further, perhaps, than the committee intended. The present law provides that—

Sawed boards, planks, deals, and other lumber of hemlock, whitewood, sycamore, and basswood, etc.,

Shall pay a duty of $1 per 1,000 feet.

And the existing law provides further that—

When lumber of any sort is planed and finished, in addition to the rates herein provided, there shall be levied and paid for each side so planed or finished 50 cents per 1,000 feet, board measure.

Now, the paragraph of this bill at present under consideration uses this language:

Sawed boards, planks, deals, and all other articles of sawed lumber.

These are put upon the free-list.

[Here the hammer fell.]

By unanimous consent, the time of Mr. MCCORMICK was extended.

Mr. MCCORMICK. The point I make is this, that if this paragraph is enacted into law it covers not only boards in the rough, but boards planed on one side or on two sides as well; the effect of enacting this paragraph being not only to admit lumber sawed, but lumber planed as well. Will not the language "sawed boards" and "all other articles of sawed lumber" cover lumber planed on one side or both sides? It is certainly still "sawed" lumber even though it be planed in part or in whole. But, in truth, there is no greater reason for protecting the labor engaged in planing lumber than that engaged in sawing, and hence I assume that it may have been intended to admit it all free of duty.

Mr. MILLS. I ask for a vote.

The question was on the motion to strike out lines 11 and 12, namely, these words:

Sawed boards, planks, deals, and all other articles of sawed lumber.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 76.

Mr. GUENTHER. No quorum.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I hope my friend from Wisconsin will not insist upon the point of no quorum; but I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. MCKINLEY and Mr. MILLS.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 85.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Hubs for wheels, posts, last-blocks, wagon-blocks, oar-blocks, gun-blocks, heading-blocks, and all like blocks or sticks, rough, hewn, or sawed only.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the paragraph which has just been read. We have heard some very peculiar arguments with relation to the tariff bill. One gentleman from the State of Minnesota, and a very learned gentleman he certainly is, argued that the tariff had resulted in depreciating the value of farm lands, while land producing timber had risen to a very high figure. I recall the period of time when the depreciation of the farms in the country was attributed to the contraction of the currency by the withdrawal of the greenback notes, and at a later period of our history I recall the fact that that depreciation was attributed wholly to the demonetization of silver.

And now we have the spectacle presented of that depreciation in the value of farm lands being attributed to the tariff. The depreciation of the value of farm lands is thus made to serve so many purposes that one becomes rather skeptical whether sufficient reason is presented or not.

But the people, I believe, can not be so easily misled as many gentlemen seem to suppose. I do not know whether our Democratic friends have heard the news from Oregon or not.

A MEMBER. What is it?

Mr. BAYNE. The Representative in Congress is elected by over 3,000 majority. The Legislature is overwhelmingly Republican. It had been said there were dissensions there in the Republican party which would probably result in the election of a Democratic Legislature and that the present Republican Senator might be superseded. There may have been dissensions in the Republican party there, but they have not been manifested thus far, because the Legislature is overwhelmingly Republican.

But let me tell you one fact, that although there may be local dissensions in the Republican party at different points, when it comes to the question of protection there is no dissension. The Republicans of this country stand as a unit for the protection of American industry. Can the Democratic party say so much for their side of the House? No; there are dissensions there that will tell in the fall election. I have heard that my friend from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS], who had been misrepresented to his constituents as being opposed to the Mills bill, received letters of congratulation from his constituents because he had taken that attitude.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BAYNE. You will have five minutes of your own. If I can have my time extended five minutes I will yield.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, let the correction go in now. [Laughter].

Mr. BAYNE. Very well, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I wish to say that that is like other rumors which have been quoted by gentlemen on the other side of the House. I think I have received one letter from a protectionist gentleman, which has been magnified in the way illustrated by the remarks of my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BAYNE. One letter; well, that showed dissent to some extent, and it came, too, from one of the gentleman's constituents who is able to write. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. Which was a large proportion.

Mr. CLEMENTS. And as against that one letter I have received dozens taking the opposite view.

Mr. BAYNE. I know myself of such communications coming from Virginia. I met a very intelligent Democratic lawyer the other day who had looked into the Mills bill and found great fault with it. He thought that it put iron ore on the free-list. Some of the gentlemen who prepared the bill have denied that, but he took that view and he adheres to it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

By unanimous consent Mr. BAYNE was allowed to proceed for five minutes longer.

Mr. BAYNE. In addition to that, the Democrats of New York, in their State convention, do not seem to be able to swallow the Mills bill. They do not seem to be willing to indorse the President's message, and I understand that reports are coming from St. Louis that a straddling plank is to be prepared for the platform of that convention——

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Not just now—not until I have finished my sentence. That plank is to be prepared so as to straddle the issue in such form that Democratic speakers may go, as they have gone heretofore, into New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, and other States, and represent to the people thereof that the Democrats are just as good protectionists as the Republicans are.

Mr. MORSE. That is right.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion the President has made the issue squarely and fairly. He has done it in a manly way, for which he is to be commended; and I do not think that even the resolutions of the St. Louis convention will prevent the issue from going before the country in that form. I understand that our distinguished friend, Judge Thurman, is forging ahead as the nominee for Vice-President, and is likely to receive that honor.

Mr. MORSE. That is good.

Mr. BAYNE. And that the shibboleth of the Democratic party is likely to be "Cleveland and the Red Bandana." [Enthusiastic applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that my suggestion meets the approval of gentlemen. I am glad to see that it causes the hearts of my Democratic brethren to rejoice to-day, for I do assure them that within a day or two after the election takes place in November they will not clap their hands so heartily as they do now. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Because, with the issue of protection squarely before the people, the Republican ticket will carry the day. There are already straws which show how the wind blows, and no stronger manifestation of that character has been seen of late than the result of the election in Oregon yesterday. [Renewed applause on the Republican side.] In Oregon the issue was plainly made and the battle was fought upon the issue of protection to American industries, and Oregon responded with no uncertain voice and said, "We want the Republican party to win and the doctrine of protection to American industry to survive," and it is going to do it and "don't you forget it." [Renewed laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MILLS. What has all that to do with hubs, the subject we are discussing?

Mr. BAYNE. I will tell you. I have insisted all along that this Congress should not revise the tariff, because in 1884 my colleague, Mr. RANDALL, and other Democrats, went into New Jersey and Pennsylvania and Connecticut and other States, and insisted before the people that the Democratic party was as good a friend of protection as the Republican party, while you gentlemen down South and in some of the Western States took ground substantially like that which you take here in this bill. Now, I say fair play requires that this issue shall go to the people next November, and if the people then elect a Democratic President and a Democratic House of Representatives, and they come in here and choose to revise the tariff, I will offer no objection or obstruction to their managing that matter in their own way.

Mr. COX. I would like to have read a dispatch just received from St. Louis.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be read as a part of the gentleman's remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. LOUIS, June 15, 12.54 p. m.

Cleveland's name, when mentioned by the temporary chairman, took the convention by storm, and the applause was deafening. He got another round of applause when he referred to tariff reform.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLS. I call attention to the fact that the question now before the Committee of the Whole is in relation to hubs.

Mr. MILLIKEN obtained the floor and said: I yield for a moment to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER], who desires, I believe, to read a dispatch.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, as campaign enthusiasm seems to be the order of business, I wish to read the following newspaper paragraph in that connection:

A STRIKING DIFFERENCE.

The Buffalo Sunday News, which was an earnest and enthusiastic supporter of Grover Cleveland in 1884, in fact, one of his most persistent and untiring newspaper advocates, in great display type, makes this comparison:

88!

This is the number of Grover Cleveland men "Who Marched Behind the Band" yesterday afternoon to take the train for St. Louis.

In 1884 there were 2000!

Who went to Chicago, clamorous for his nomination.

Quite a difference, isn't it?

Why?

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the St. Louis convention. If by "applause" or otherwise the Democratic party assembled in that convention will make the issue sharply and clearly between protection on the one side and free trade on the other, I shall be glad to have the issue thus presented. We welcome that issue. We will go into the campaign and honestly fight it out on that line, and as good citizens of the Republic will accept the result.

But what I desired to say was this: My friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] the other day—endeavoring, I suppose, to show that the duty on lumber does not go to the benefit of the workman but to the manufacturer—asked the question whether Canadians were not imported into Maine to be employed in the manufacture of lumber, and I answered him in the negative. So far as concerned the proposition he was then making, that answer was correct. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that there are some Canadians who come across the border and work as axmen in our woods.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is what I had heard.

Mr. MILLIKEN. They fell the trees and perhaps help to haul them, and there the matter ends, so far as they are concerned.

Mr. MCMILLIN. They bring their teams also, I believe.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Now, my friend undoubtedly knows and will not fail to recognize the fact here to-day, that there is no import duty imposed by the United States on round logs. There is a Canadian duty. Canada places an export duty of $2 a thousand feet, if I recollect aright, on round logs, in order to keep the manufacture of lumber within her own dominions and to give the labor to Canadians, recognizing in that way the principle of protection.

But so far as the Canadian labor goes in producing the log, that labor is not protected at all by the duty upon lumber, for the duty does not commence to operate until the manufacture of the log into finished lumber has been commenced. And here, Mr. Chairman, is where the American begins to work. You may go through the mills of Maine, from one end of the State to the other, and you will find that the manufacture of lumber from the round log into the plank, the deal, the joist, the finished stock, up to the form in which it goes into the structures for which it is designed, is done by Americans; and this duty upon lumber protects the American manufacture of lumber, and protects American labor—no other.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine be allowed five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, with whom does the American laborer have to contend? Our friends here have very well said that on the Pacific coast he has to contend in the lumber business with the cheap Chinese labor. In Maine he has to contend with the cheap Canadian labor. I know the fact (for I have had the opportunities of observation) that the Canadian laborer works more cheaply, works more hours a day, and is satisfied with fewer of the comforts of life than the American laborer.

You may ride on the railroad across the State line into New Brunswick. There is no guide-board set up to tell you when you cross from your own country into Canada; the State boundary is an imaginary line. Yet the least observant traveler sitting at the car window will not pass the second station after crossing the State line without noticing by the character and dress of the people that he sees and by the houses along the line that he has gone out of this country of protection and into a land whose prosperity is not so great.

You may ride up the line of separation between the two countries and see upon one side the American, on the other the Canadian homes. On one side you will see white houses with green blinds, neat, clean door-yards, everything tidy, with all the evidence of thrift and comfort about them. On the other side unpainted houses, broken windows, shabby surroundings, without any evidence of the thrift and comfort on this side.

And Canada, at last recognizing this condition of things, has begun to imitate her great neighbor, the American Republic, and protect her people by duties on imports.

It was well said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] yesterday, in his remarks on this subject, that the duty should be equal to the difference at least of the cost of labor which enters into the production of lumber on this side of the Canadian line and the cost of labor on the other side, and that while this difference is $3 per thousand, the highest duty on manufactured lumber is but $2, so that the present law hardly protects the American workman in his present rate of wages. Do gentlemen on the other side of the House wish to deny him this meager protection? Do they desire to reduce the $6 per thousand which he receives for his work in the manufacture of lumber to the pittance of $3 per thousand which the Canadian workmen in New Brunswick receive?

This would be the direct effect of the provision of this bill now under discussion. If the Democracy shall succeed, as it here proposes to do, in placing lumber on the free-list, never hereafter let that party pretend that it does not favor the reduction of the wages of American workingmen to the low standard of poorly-paid foreign laborers.

Then it should be remembered that the manufacturers of lumber in Maine and the other Northern States find their competitors at their own doors. The Canadian possesses forests and mills contiguous to our own, and has not the disadvantage of long transportation in reaching American markets. The sugar producer of Louisiana has no competitor except across the water and in the islands of the sea. The rice growers of South Carolina and Georgia contend in the American market against those who bring their product from far away Japan, and the coal and iron miners, the duty upon whose product is not reduced in this bill, have little cause to fear competition on this side of the Atlantic.

And yet with these advantages which amount to some degree of protection at least, these industries are touched either tenderly or not at all by the Mills bill, which strips the Northern lumbermen entirely of protection.

Mr. TARSNEY. Can the gentleman state the amount of wages paid in Maine and the amount of wages paid in Canada?

Mr. MILLIKEN. It was stated the other day by my colleague [Mr. BOUTELLE]. I believe it amounts to a little less than 100 per cent. of difference against American manufacturers of lumber.

Mr. TARSNEY. How much is that a day? How much is the difference a month?

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the gentleman will refer to the debates he will see it fully stated by my colleague in his remarks made a few days ago. It averages $2.40 to the American workman in Maine and $1.38 to the Canadian in New Brunswick, or about $6 per thousand feet of lumber manufactured on this side of our boundary line, while it is a little more than $3 on the other side, while the highest duty is but $3. It will be seen, therefore, that the duty does not cover the difference between labor on this side and the other.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have patiently listened to the discussions which have taken place upon this important subject, just as others have been doing. When the President's message on the tariff question was delivered to Congress our Republican friends on the other side said they were willing to go to the country on that issue. After carefully considering the President's message and investigating the matter, the Committee on Ways and Means reported to the House what is known as the Mills bill, and again our Republican friends responded that they were willing to go to the country upon that issue. Now, there must have been something radically wrong in this country in 1884, when this grand old Republican party, in possession of the offices of the country and still in possession of the Presidency, induced the people to rise up and drive them out of office by the election of Grover Cleveland as President of the United States.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will tell you what was wrong. That was the failure to count the votes in the South. That is where the wrong was.

Mr. LAWLER. Now, I have not interrupted any gentlemen who have addressed the committee. Let me go along; I do not interrupt anybody.

It occurred to me, Mr. Chairman, there must be something radically wrong with the country when it became necessary to enter into the formation of Knights of Labor organizations to prevent combines and trusts against the interests of labor.

I am a little surprised sitting here to find that a plain proposition to business men, such as this presented here, is not taken up and acted upon as a business proposition ought to be. I can not sit here quietly as a member of this House and allow political matters to come in on a question of a bill affecting, as this does, the interests of all classes and so important to the people of this entire country. I say it does not become us as business men, in the face of the stagnation which is known to exist all over the United States, to delay further action upon this matter.

Mr. MASON. Stagnation caused by the pendency of this bill, do you say?

Mr. LAWLER. No, sir. We have a large number of Congressmen who are professional men in this House on both sides; we have got them in all classes of professional life, and this mode of retarding legislation and avoiding to put it before the people for a vote on the bill as a fair, stand-up, open question, is not the way to deal with a great public measure. These gentlemen are very apt to app'y the word "demagogue" at times when any person rises here and champions the cause of the laboring masses, though you well know that there has been hardly a speech made on either side on this question but we hear that our hearts are outpouring for the hardships of the toiling masses of the country. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see some of the good works that these men claim to champion. The people of this country will be very apt to judge of the truthfulness of their statements by the measure of the performance. Do you not understand, gentlemen, that the trusts have within the past six months, during the pendency of this question—the settlement of the tariff question here—suspended in part the operations of their industries, throwing laboring men out of employment, and the only answer when complaint is made is that they were waiting until they see what Congress will do? And yet we hear it said by gentlemen here that they are the friends of the masses of the people of this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say let us stop this delay and let this bill go to the people. Our Republican friends believed that they could beat the men who are nominated on the platform of this bill. They believed, as they asserted, that Cleveland's message was just what they looked for, a great political issue. They are willing to go to the country on that. As business men let us drop this thing [cries of "All right!" on the Republican side] and continue the work that is before us in this session. We have many important matters to bring up here, and this question ought to be settled in a business way and in a business view.

We have on both sides members who would like to be heard on this question. They have not taken the time of the House or occupied its attention in the debate. But we all know it to be a fact that those who took up a great portion of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with their remarks continue to come in here day by day and present speeches on every line of this bill. I say, gentlemen, that that is not a fair way to treat the people. It is not a fair way to treat the members of Congress and those gentlemen who did not intend and have not taken up any time in the debate. I speak for the city of Chicago, representing it as I do in part, when I make an appeal to you to press this matter to a conclusion; and the leading Republican newspaper there is in favor of the position taken by this side of the House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GROUT was recognized.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent to extend the time of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LAWLER. I do not ask anything further. I am very much obliged to the gentleman. I merely appeal to this House that we may go along and consider this bill as business men and take a vote on it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, a word on the subject of lumber before passing from this part of the bill——

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment to respond now to what has been said by my colleague from Illinois?

Mr. GROUT. Very well.

Mr. MASON. My friend and colleague, and my immediate neighbor at home, says that there is a stagnation of business throughout the country which we all know about. No one knows it better than he, and if he will stop and think for a moment he will remember that every man who is about to enter into a new enterprise of any kind, and who is about to invest any of his money in new plans, and even has his hand at the plow, whether in the field or manufacturing or otherwise, is standing waiting to see what this Congress will do in reference to this bill.

Mr. LAWLER. Then let us do it and do not keep them waiting. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MASON. That is just what we propose to do. The only difference between us is that we want to do it in the proper way.

Mr. LAWLER. And do not let us be filibustering about it either.

Mr. MASON. Then the gentleman admits he has been filibustering?

Mr. LAWLER. No, sir; that side is filibustering.

Mr. MASON. I do not admit anything of the kind. The gentleman may be filibustering: I am not. I have not been engaged in filibustering on this bill at all.

Mr. LAWLER. Well, you are under the lash. It amounts to the same thing.

Mr. MASON. Nor am I under the lash. I smart under the lash of no man or party. If the gentleman feels that he is under the lash, he knows how it is; but he can not apply it to this side.

Mr. LAWLER. No, I do not know how it is.

Mr. MASON. Now, I represent the city of Chicago, or a part of it. I sit here responsible to my constituents, and will submit the matter to them—to the people of my district, as my colleague will submit to the people of his district in the future; and the people there will deal with this question, when it is submitted to them, in such a way as to demonstrate the accuracy of the position assumed by either of us.

The gentleman speaks of "professional men" sitting here. Now, there may be and are professional men sitting here as members of Congress. I am myself a member of a profession. I make my living in that way. I am a professional lawyer. I do not know what the gentleman's profession is, nor do I care. I simply say this: that we are not measured here by the standard of what we may promise or pretend to be. We will be measured by our constituents by what we do; and when he says that a leading Republican newspaper of Chicago is in accord with the sentiments of this bill, and in favor of its passage, then I state that the editorials of that paper do not warrant the gentleman's assertion. The Chicago Tribune has time and time again been standing, just as the Republican party stands, in favor of a tariff reform; and still it stands to-day striking at the Mills bill as a direct and living monument to the incapacity of the members of the committee that produced it, and a standing menace to the best business interests of the people of this country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LAWLER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAWLER. Has that been the case with the Tribune right along since this bill came into the House?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir; since the first day the bill came into the House it has not had the approval of the Chicago Tribune. While in favor of putting on the free-list certain raw materials it is opposed to the Mills bill and to free trade, as you will find out.

Mr. LAWLER. The four leading Democratic papers are opposed to the gentleman's position on this question. Is not that a fact?

Mr. MASON. I will say this, that while I am a Republican and prima facie can read, I do read the papers, but I do not know what the gentleman considers the leading papers in that city. Nor do I go to the editorial columns of any paper for my position on this or any other bill. I say that certain men editing papers if they could be in Congress could settle up the great questions that agitate the American people in fifty minutes, at least to their own satisfaction.

Mr. LAWLER. It would be well to send one of them here to settle this question before the summer is over.

Mr. MASON. I have a suspicion that they will do so from your district, my friend. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to amend the motion to strike out. I suppose that is in order. I move to amend, in line 15, by striking out the word "hewn."

Mr. Chairman, although it may be a novelty on the morning's discussion, I propose to confine my remarks to the subject immediately in hand. The paragraph under consideration provides for placing upon the free-list hubs for wheels, as well as gun-blocks, etc., rough, hewn, or sawn; and when it is proposed to strike out hubs I favor it for this reason, that especially in the matter of hubs for wheels, these blocks are sawed, and then they are hewn, and under the provisions of this act they will be admitted into the United States free of duty ready for the turning-lathe, ready to be at once made into hubs. Now, so far we have provided simply for the importation into this country of manufactures of wood, sawn, but this paragraph goes one step further and provides not only that they may be sawn, but also that they may be hewn into shape. That involves an additional amount of labor expended upon them, and it seems to me that it is one step further than, upon any argument which can be adduced, we ought to go. For these reasons I ask that this provision be stricken out.

Mr. GROUT. I thank the Chair for recognizing me again so soon after yielding my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], who was desirous of replying at once to his colleague [Mr. LAWLER], who it seems is now an ardent champion of this bill, but who before the recent Democratic caucus was understood to have been opposed to it. It seems the Democratic caucus fixed Mr. LAWLER by agreeing not to put glue on the free-list, as proposed by the bill, but to leave the duty on it undisturbed; and now he sticks by the bill closer than a brother. Glue did it. [Laughter.]

When I yielded I was about reminding the other side of the House, who cheered so lustily over what some have spoken of as the red bandana, which was hung out from the press gallery a little while ago, that really that bandana was more yellow than red, and that in the late unpleasantness the yellow flag was always the sign of a hospital.

[Laughter.] That flag always said, "Here somebody is sick or hurt," and sometimes badly hurt. [Laughter.]

Now, I suppose this yellow flag signifies that the Democratic party is sick and in hospital [laughter], and that the leaders are looking to the noble old Roman from Ohio as the physician who is to help them out, and so cheer hopefully the bandana as the sign of their deliverance. The Democratic party may survive its present predicament—it has survived many other very sick spells—but it is certain to be marked by the American people next fall as unfit for duty for a very long time. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word with reference to the merits of the bill. The fact that we have been now four days, I believe, upon these first few lines, which put lumber in its various forms upon the free-list, would indicate that this is an important question, as it really is; and very good reasons, I think, have been given here why this provision of the bill should not be retained. But ever since the first vote in this committee upon the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] to extend the time when this first section of the bill should take effect, it has been very apparent that argument and reason were to have but little to do with the disposition of this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, every fair-minded man will admit that in justice to those business men in this country who have put their money into stocks of lumber and wool and the other commodities which by this first section will be put upon the free-list, and have done so upon the faith of the present duty upon it, that Congress ought not to do anything to affect the value of their investment. We have no moral right to, without giving the investors reasonable time in which to turn themselves and dispose of those stocks so purchased. That is what this amendment proposed to do. But the other side coolly voted it down, and thereby demonstrated not only their willingness to strike down these industries, but at the same time to ruin those who may now be engaged in them.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] spoke approvingly this morning of the attitude of certain gentlemen from Kansas and Iowa and other Western States towards this bill. For one, sir, I want to say that I like the position of the gentleman from Kansas, Judge PETERS. I like it because of its intelligence, its fairness, and its consistency, as the position of a protectionist.

It must be admitted that in Kansas, Iowa, and, I presume, in some parts of Minnesota where lumber is scarce, this argument of "free lumber" is a very plausible and captivating one when addressed to the consumer of that article. But the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], who is well acquainted with all the circumstances of the case, tells us that he can not understand how the Kansas farmer will be in any certain degree benefited by free lumber. But suppose that he would be benefited to a slight extent, he certainly could not expect to get the full advantage of the duty removed, because gentlemen on both sides have told us of a transportation trust which has its greedy grip on lumber; and it seems to me that they would do better to direct their batteries against that trust than against the tariff.

But suppose, for the sake of argument, that making lumber free would help the Kansas consumer a little, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] sees, and sees clearly, too, that if the lumber camps and the saw-mills of this country were broken up and the thousands, nay, the tens of thousands, of woodsmen and millmen who are now eating the bacon and the beef and the wheat and the corn which the Kansas farmer produces, were to go over into Canada, then, to the extent of the consumption of these products by this very considerable army of men, the Kansas farmer and every other American farmer would lose the benefit of his good American market, and their surplus of farm products, already forced abroad for a market, would be increased, and would have to go to England or some other free-trade country for sale, for they can not follow these lumbermen into Canada without first paying a high duty for the privilege; and so to the extent of the transfer of this business to Canada, where timber-lands are cheap and where labor is cheap, as is recognized by all, to that extent the Kansas farmer is a sufferer.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GROUT. I would like a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there unanimous consent that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] continue his remarks for five minutes? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GROUT. I say that not only would the Kansas farmer and every other farmer in the country be injured, but the Canadian farmer would be benefited. A home market would be established near by him for the sale of his agricultural products, and there would be a greater demand for them; they would bring a better price. But every American farmer would suffer.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, every other industry and interest, both commercial and manufacturing, which in any way attends upon the lumber interest, would also be injured, because this army of lumbermen have not only to be fed, but they must be clothed, and if in the United States clothed with American fabrics. They must have axes which American manufacturers can furnish; they must be furnished with crosscut saws and cant-hooks and calipers or caliper-compasses, and chains and sleds and expensive mill machinery for cutting out the lumber when once delivered to the mill. Now, to the extent that this business would go over into Canada, to that extent all these attendant industries would also go there, and thus our people would be prevented from supplying them. There would be less employment for labor, which would also be unfavorably affected.

This is the way the gentleman from Kansas looks at the question, and though his constituents might be benefited just a little perhaps in the price of lumber, he is unwilling to surrender his consistency as a protectionist and join hands with gentlemen on the other side of the Hall whose philosophy is fashioned according to that Democratic discovery that the tariff is a local issue, that each man must take care of the interests in his own section, and let others take care of themselves.

But, Mr. Chairman, would this lumber business go to Canada? Beyond all question it would, and to a large extent, too. In the Ottawa valley timber lands are worth about one-third what they are in the United States. Back from both sides of that great river, the Ottawa, which has its rise away in the far North, there extend forests which are simply interminable. We were told the other day, and it has been reaffirmed several times to-day, and not denied, that the labor cost per thousand of lumber in Canada is just about one-half what it is here—$3 per thousand.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is not conceded or believed on this side of the House.

Mr. GROUT. It has not been contradicted before. The gentleman from Texas said that with this lumber two or three hundred miles in the interior, the cost of transportation would prevent Canada from absorbing the business. Let me say that lumber from those vast forests of the upper Ottawa, as any one in that country knows, could be brought down that river and across the St. Lawrence, through a canal system into Lake Champlain, through the Champlain Canal into the Hudson, and so to the Atlantic Ocean, coming every single inch of the way by cheap water transportation. And I tell you the lumberman, if frozen out in the United States, would go to Canada. He would not go down into Arkansas, as he now does—a fact upon which the gentleman from Arkansas was congratulating himself the other day; but he offered no congratulations upon the fact that there is now a duty of $2 a thousand on lumber to protect the Arkansas manufacturer, which is all that now takes him to Arkansas instead of Canada.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We do not need it, and do not want it.

Mr. GROUT. But you are sending your lumber into our country for sale there, and it is protected by this $2 duty. The very fact that you send it North shows that it yields a better price there than you get "in the markets of the world," else, liking them so well, you would certainly go there. I remember the gentleman said the other day that they were competing on a free-trade basis with all the world and had conquered several countries on this lumber business. Why, then, do they send their lumber up into our country for sale? Because, Mr. Chairman, it is the best market for it, and they send their surplus abroad.

There is hardly a town in the little State from which I come, which is back from the seaboard, in which pine from the South is not used every year for building purposes, and it is protected there by the present duty against this influx from the North. I say to the gentleman from Arkansas, and to every other citizen interested in the manufacture of lumber, that the removal of the duty would affect the value of his product in our markets, and affect it materially. It would let a flood of lumber in from Canada with which Southern lumber could not successfully compete, as it now does aided by this $2 duty.

The removal of this duty would of course affect more unfavorably the lumber interests in the whole tier of States bordering on Canada when timber lands on this side the line abut upon timber lands on the other side. The product in my own State would be surely overwhelmed by cheap Canadian lumber. The injury to the industry in the Northern States would be greatest, but Southern lumbermen would also very soon learn the difference in the value of their yellow pine throughout all the Middle and Northern States when met by Canadian lumber admitted free of duty.

One word in reference to the argument advanced by my friend from New York [Mr. COX] in regard to the destruction of our forests. I do not know that there is any need of replying to him after the remarks of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. But I want to say that this talk about the destruction of our forests is simply a bugaboo, at least in all our northern section of country. The people there have learned to husband their forests. They go in and take out the larger trees, thus letting in the air and the sunlight, so that there follows a more rapid growth of the trees which are left, and within a few years there is another crop. There are thousands of acres along the Connecticut valley—good lands, too—that stand thick with the growth of sapling pine, high and thick, not very large yet, nor can it ever be because of the density of the growth, but still valuable as a timber product.

Another consideration: As our country grows older we are constructing our buildings more and more of brick and stone and iron, so that we do not need lumber for such purposes to the same extent as formerly. Brick is now almost as cheap as lumber; so that there is constantly less demand for lumber. I say, then, the cry which is raised that this wooden country of ours, having millions upon millions of acres of forests extending from the Lakes to the Gulf, is in danger of being denuded of timber-lands, thus making timber high, and the country uninhabitable, is simply preposterous.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that there is on the other side of the House a member who is willing to see himself so completely written down as an unabridged ass, and I think I am using "dictionary language" now [laughter], as to say he believes that taking off this slight percentage of the profits of the manufacturers of lumber is going to destroy that great and magnificent industry in this country. I do not think any one believes it will have any other effect than to slightly reduce the profits of the manufacturer and possibly reduce somewhat the pay of the laborer.

It has been said here frequently during the discussions, this is a sectional bill, sectional as emanating from the South. I hold in my hand a petition, the original of which has been sent to the Pacific coast Congressional delegation, which closes with a paragraph in which I find the following language:

> Finally, from a sectional standpoint, etc., we therefore most respectfully beg of you that your every effort will be used to the end that no change shall be made in the existing duty on manufactured lumber.

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The sectional feature of this discussion comes from the few States which are locally interested in this industry, although the discussion has spread abroad through the other States. It is this industry, sectionally distributed, which is chiefly forward in opposing this revision.

I want it understood that I desire not to injure any industry, and I do not believe this reduction of taxes will have the effect of injuring this industry. I do believe it would materially injure the percentage of its profits. I stated the other day that the statistics, those drawn from the Compendium of the Census, showed that the profit which went to the manufacturer of lumber in Maine was 28.5 per cent.; in Michigan, 33.07 per cent. I have since examined and find my own State of Ohio in this lumber interest fares a little better than Maine.

At that time my attention was called to the fact I had given no consideration to certain other elements which ought to be considered. I am frank to say, having taken up the subject while the discussion was going on, and made a re-examination of it, having studied further the statistics, I have come to the conclusion that a portion of my argument is too unfavorable to the State of Maine in this: I discovered the mills there which manufacture sawed lumber are in a larger degree water power than those in my own State or Michigan. For instance, in the State of Maine one-sixth of the power is steam, while five-sixths is water power. In the State of Ohio one-twelfth is water, while eleven-twelfths is steam power. In the State of Michigan the proportion is about one-tenth water and nine tenths steam power.

But I want to say something as to those other elements which it is claimed should be considered in any estimate of the division of net profits between the laborer and the capitalist.

Mr. DINGLEY, in his remarks, said mill supplies, as used in the census, means chains and other tools; that they did not include insurance, or taxes, or interest, or repairs, or commission, or freight. I think I make a fair statement when I allow 1 per cent. on the entire capital; not 1 per cent. on that invested in water saw-mills or in lumber, but 1 per cent. on the entire capital for taxes. I defy any man to show these interests pay for taxes yearly as high as 1 per cent. upon all of their capital. Then, there is 1 per cent. disposed of. Take away 2.5 per cent. for insurance; 2.5, not upon the total capital in mill investments, but the total capital, the whole six millions invested in the business, and I think that is a liberal proposition—2.5 per cent. off there, and thus you have 3.5 per cent. to be deducted from the 28.5 per cent. in Maine, so far.

But the gentleman says we ought to deduct commissions. Commissions for what? The value of this product is generally estimated at the mill, and if you will examine the statistics you will find it is given as the mill price. Then there is no commission to be deducted.

Then he says we should make some deduction for interest. Very well, I am going to give the benefit of a deduction for interest. I will take one-sixth of the capital, $1,000,000 of the $6,000,000 invested in this business, I will take $1,000,000 during the year and pay 6 per cent. on it; that is 1 per cent. on the whole capital. Will any one claim that those manufacturers of sawed lumber in Maine borrow annually and for the whole year more than one-sixth of their entire capital, or pay interest upon more than that portion of it?

Now, we have 4½ per cent. to take off; nothing for commissions and nothing for freight, because there should be no commissions to pay yet and there is no freight. The value is taken in the product at the mill, hence there is no freight. But some gentlemen may say, as Mr. DINGLEY does, you must take off something for repairs. Very well; then, give the capitalists an amount equal to 3 per cent. on their whole capital for repairs, which is nearly as much as they use for mill supplies, and still you have a net result of 20 per cent. to capital, or $200 annually upon each $1,000, and $170 to the man who makes the whole of this profit by his labor. That is the position exactly, and figured out, as I think, upon the facts and figures given in the census, and a fair estimate of the others.

Let me now call attention to something in this connection in regard to the farmers.

Mr. REED. Do you mean to have us understand that you believe now in your revised figures?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly: for they justify me in the belief.

Mr. REED. Well, there has been an improvement; you come in originally with the belief of 28½ per cent.; now you have reduced that to 20 per cent., and we may be permitted to hope that to-morrow or the next day on further consideration you will be induced to come in with something else that is a little less unfair and unreasonable than your last figures. [Laughter.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Your speech is much more unfair than any figures that I may have now presented, because the first figures that I submitted were hastily collected and presented in the heat of debate.

Mr. REED. But you are giving these figures now in the heat of debate; and I do not know how we can trust you in the heat of debate to-day, when we could not trust you in the heat of debate at another time.

Mr. GROUT. But this is deliberate.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. These figure are reliable, I am convinced, and as such they are deliberately submitted here and you can not refute them.

Mr. REED. Oh, you think so.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am satisfied that they are correct. Gentlemen have been requested time and again to come here and present figures to show how much is labor, how much is capital, how much is protection, and how much is the general result; and you do not present anything in support of your argument but general estimates of figures. Now, I have given you in detail the figures that make up these items, not estimates.

I now call attention to some remarks of my friend from Ohio [Mr. BOOTHMAN], and I will take his own figures as an illustration and for the argument. He has presented us with a statement showing the earnings of the wage-workers connected with the lumber industry of his district, and he figures up that this industry furnished employment to 1,800 hands in 1879, as shown by the census. He shows that the yearly payments to be divided among that body of workers is $348,561; so that taking his own statement, which any school-boy can figure out, we find the average earnings of each worker so employed during that year is $194 per annum.

But, says the gentleman—

> No ordinary farmer will use in the course of a lifetime more than 30,000 feet of lumber. But say, for argument sake, he may use 60,000 feet. The duty on this—if he paid it all, which protectionists deny—would be $120, at $2 per thousand feet, or an average per year of $4, extending the computation over a series of thirty years. Now, to save this $4 per year the farmer is asked to strike down the wages of one hundred and fifty thousand laborers.

Four dollars per year for each farmer in this country, taking his own figures as the standard, giving the total at seven millions of farmers in the country in 1879, would amount to $28,000,000, which is the tribute that this industry extorts from the farmers, according to his calculations. The farmers, according to this statement, pay the whole of this tribute, while the whole wages paid in the sawed-lumber industry itself amounts to only about $3,000,000 more than the $28,000,000.

But I am going to deal fairly with the gentleman from Ohio. I intend to do so. Perhaps the word "farmers" was not what he intended, but that he intended to use the word farms. Let us see what the result will be on that basis. We will say that there are 4,000,000 farms in the United States, as the census shows, and 4,000,000 farms, each one paying this annual tribute of $4 to this protected industry, makes a total of $16,000,000 so paid, or over one-half the whole amount of wages paid in the sawed-lumber industry is paid by this tax upon the farms of the country.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. How much per day of the wages in your computation are you allowing to the American lumbermen?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In the State of Maine an average of $170 for the whole time that he works during the year.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But how many days?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not know, but I assume it to be at least six months of the year.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Where do you get your figures from?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. From the Compendium of the Census just before me.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do you not know that the lumberman gets more than $2 a day on the average?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not. I know that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] said that he knew of men who got $4 a day. I know also that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] said that he knew some men who got one and a half, two and a half, or three dollars——

Mr. BOUTELLE. And $4 a day.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, and here is given a report of a manufacturer who states how much he pays to the men in the aggregate and how many men he has employed, and it is a mere question of calculation to show that for every one of them who gets $4 a day out of that total there must be a number who do not get anything like it.

Mr. REED. That is it exactly. That is just like the rest of the argument. [Laughter].

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If every man gets $4 a day, and so many men are employed, any person can calculate what the total expense of that labor would be. But if the average wages are but $1 a day, and one man gets $4 a day, then of course some men must get less than $1 a day.

Mr. REED. That is it, exactly. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do you know that to be so, or do you suppose it to be so?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is a statement that is not susceptible of dispute.

Mr. BYNUM. A mill-owner in East Saginaw gives a list of the wages there, showing an average of only $2 a day.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If two thousand men get an average of $2 a day the year round, whether you compute their wages by the day or the month or any other period, and one thousand of these men get the whole amount paid in wages, does it not follow that the other one thousand could get nothing?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then you believe that, do you?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Believe it! Do you ask me whether I believe that twice two are four?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then you believe that half those men work for nothing?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have not said so.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is what you are telling the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have said that, if your claim that one-half of them get $2 a day is correct, and the average is only $1, then the other half get nothing.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And if the facts do not square with your percentage, I suppose you think it is so much the worse for the facts.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have not undertaken to state the facts; but I do say that if your claim is correct, that the average is $1 a day, then for every man who gets more than $1 a day there must be some other one who gets less than $1 per day.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The trouble with the gentleman from Ohio is that he is dealing with generalizations and percentages without regard to the actual facts of the case.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am dealing with figures that you can not answer.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I told you the other day what the actual rates of wages were, and the statement which I then made can be substantiated.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That was the actual wages of some individuals. [Here the hammer fell].

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the committee to indulge me for five minutes longer, because other gentlemen have occupied so much of my time.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to a portion of the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] the other day.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope that in this second five minutes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] will proceed to demonstrate that the other half of those men work for nothing. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have not said that. I have only said that if your claim be true that the average wages is $1 per day, and if a certain proportion of those men get $2 per day, their excess over $1 must be taken off the others, and I say that if you gave $2 a day to half the men who are doing this work, the other half would have to work for nothing. Now, is that plain?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It seems to be to you.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I have here in the RECORD a statement which was made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER], and I want to show the committee just how figures can be juggled with. [Jeers and laughter on the Republican side.]

A MEMBER. You have shown that already.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You people who boast of your greater intelligence, you people who boast of having the better schoolmasters, had better go home, some of you, and take a few lessons in arithmetic.

Mr. REED. If we are to get them at all we must go home. We do not get any here. [Laughter.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] says:

According to the census of 1880 the value of the products of the lumber industry in 1879 was $542,7<8,657—

That is not in the census—

employing 326,197 men.

That is not in the census.

The value of sawed lumber was $233,268,729.

That is in the census, page 1163 of the Compendium.

Fully 70 per cent. of the value of sawed lumber is labor. At this low estimate you have an annual expenditure of $165,000,000 paid in wages for lumber alone,

That is not in the census; but I will tell you what is in the census in the same line from which the gentleman from Wisconsin got his figures. In the Compendium of the Census you find under the head of sawed lumber "total value of product" so much, and then across the page "wages paid during the year." Instead of being 70 per cent. of $233,268,729, as the gentleman said; instead of being $165,000,000, as he said, they are just one-fifth of that amount, namely, $31,845,974. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. What payments do those figures cover?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. They come from this book.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What part of the cost of producing lumber do they cover?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Please take the book and look at it for yourself.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Ah! But I would rather you would look at it a little more carefully before you give us your deductions.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. These figures are from the page giving the statistics of sawed lumber, and they show the wages paid.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But those are the wages for doing what?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This shows the number of hands employed, males above sixteen years of age, females above fifteen years of age, children and youths.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Employed in doing what?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In the industry of sawed lumber.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In sawing lumber?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In the industry of sawed lumber; the industry which the gentleman from Wisconsin said yielded an annual product of $233,000,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does not the gentleman understand that that statement does not cover the whole cost of producing the lumber? Sawing is only one item of the cost.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This does not say "sawing;" it deals with the whole industry.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Oh, you are mistaken about that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am not mistaken; but you gentlemen will try to make it appear that I am; and the book also.

Mr. MILLIKEN. You do not count cutting the logs, hauling them to the streams, running them down the streams, and thence to the mill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That may be another industry entirely. Now do you please keep quiet. [Laughter on the Republican side.] If that is another industry, where are the statistics showing that the items you mention are to be considered as affecting this question differently from the way I have presented it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] has expired. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, strike out the word "hewn."

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to submit a proposition to close the debate on this paragraph.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] has made some statements which require a reply.

Mr. REED. Yes; he has started some new points that ought to be answered.

Mr. MILLS. You can go on with that discussion on the next paragraph.

Mr. REED. We might as well do it on this.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not think it would be so lucid on the next paragraph as on this one.

Mr. REED and Mr. BAYNE. Let us have twenty minutes on each side.

Mr. MILLS. Very well; twenty minutes on each side, and it will be understood that then we are to have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes on each side. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I sought the floor some time ago to discuss some of the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] in regard to the amount of money paid to labor in this country. The gentleman quoted the other day from a Chicago paper a statement in which a man, who was represented to be a large owner of timber lands, said that he put all the profits into his own pocket. Now, I ask the gentleman from Texas whether it is not true that every man on the other side who has discussed this question has admitted that the laboring men in this country are paid more than they are in other countries? If that be true—assuming that there is an increase of price arising from the tariff—is it not tacitly admitted that a part of this increased price has gone to labor?

But I rose particularly to call attention to some of the gentleman's philosophy. He says that it is a rule of human nature as old as the world that men always get their labor as cheaply as they possibly can. That is his proposition. I will admit that, so far as the individual is concerned, the proposition is true. But in society the theory of our age, the theory of our Government, the theory of our institutions, is that the common sense of the many, the general conscience of society, is better than the selfish instincts of the individual, and that it is the duty of society to concrete and crystallize into the form of law the general sentiment of the masses in order that the selfishness of the individual may be restrained. That is the whole theory of protection. It is the duty of society to take care of all the members of the community and to protect them against the selfishness of individuals.

A number of years ago there existed in this country the institution of human slavery. The average man who owned a slave would not free him. He insisted that he had the right to get all he could out of the slave's labor. But the great heart of the country revolted against that theory. The mass of the people said "We believe that slavery is wrong;" and that sentiment became finally crystallized into the form of law, and the selfishness of the individual was restrained in the interest of society. I ask the gentleman from Texas to take that thought into consideration when he is discussing this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in discussing the merits of this bill both sides of the House, it seems to me, lose sight of the main question involved. Gentlemen on both sides plead for the laborer, the workingman; but neither of them has presented any method whereby the evils existing may be redressed.

It is true that under a policy of protection the working classes in this country suffer a great many evils; but the next question that comes home to us is this: Will a change of policy help us out of this dilemma? Will free trade redress the grievances from which the working classes now suffer? That is the main question before the people of this country; it is the question which confronts this Congress; and this Congress, or some other in the near future, will have to solve it in the interest of the working people, or the working people will take the matter in hand and solve it for themselves.

I am sure there is a method by which the existing evils can be redressed. I think that if the President had studied the labor problem, had studied the interests of the masses of this country as much as he has studied the free-trade theories which he has embodied in the message sent to this House, that message would have been more opportune and more in keeping with the wants of the people. Of all the measures which the President has proposed to Congress in his message, there is not one that does not tend to favor the wealthy. I take the ground that the prices paid by the working classes of this country, the farmers, the laborers, and the mechanics, for the commodities required for their subsistence and comfort, are not affected one iota by the tariff.

I do not care what the commodity may be, whether lumber, wool, cotton, or any other article, the competition among the manufacturing interests is such that prices are reduced to so low a point that even in the face of the tariff our working people get the articles that they require for their subsistence and comfort just as cheaply as they would if the tariff were removed. If, then, the tariff be removed, what follows? Simply that there is no revenue collected from those commodities, and the people of Canada, of Europe, and of Asia pour their products into this country. There is simply that much less produced by our working people here. They do not purchase the commodities they require a particle cheaper, because the competition existing among manufacturers, merchants, and dealers reduces the price of any commodity to a minimum, so that even the foreign importation does not lessen the price.

Now, a word as to the solution of this labor problem. Why is it that the other side, in presenting this bill, has not introduced any feature which would remedy the trouble in this respect? I say they should have done it, and it lies with this side to do it if the other side does not.

I had hoped in this bill that efforts would be made in favor of the working classes; that gentlemen would seek to correct some of the methods for the protection of labor as well as for the protection of the products of labor. I mean, sir, I was in hopes that something would be done in favor of the protection of the wages of the laborer.

Now, it may be asked how can this be done? I say it can be brought about by legislation just as other results have been brought about; that the same means which have been used for the purpose of protecting the capitalists can be adopted with the view of the protection of the interests of labor.

I wish to show why the bill is not exactly formulated to correct that evil in reference to labor and the wages of labor. I think myself of presenting a measure with a view of accomplishing that purpose, and I intend to bring it forward for consideration, and as both sides of the House are in favor of the protection of labor, of course I shall expect the assistance of both sides of the House in carrying that measure through.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I hope there will be no objection to the extension of my time so that I may add to my remarks a few extracts which I have cut from the journals of the country. They are as follows:

A HUNDRED THOUSAND UNEMPLOYED IN NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, December 5.

The Daily News, which claims to be the organ of the laboring classes, says:

"It is estimated that there are 50,000 skilled workers of both sexes out of employment in this city, and with the army of common laborers and men who do all sorts of odd jobs it is believed that the total number of persons who are willing to work, but can not obtain employment, is 100,000.—Washington Post, December 6, 1887.

A PROBLEM FOR LEGISLATORS.

An exhaustive inquiry into the condition of some 40,000 female workers in New York has been made, and this is the melancholy conclusion which it reaches: "The sewing women of this city do skilled labor for fifteen hours a day for so little pay they must accept charity or starve." We hear so much glib talk about the pauper labor of Europe, and are treated to so many comparative tables showing the great superiority of American wages that such a decision as this will probably come with the force of a revelation to the majority of readers. But any one at all familiar with those who obtain aid from any one of the numerous charitable organizations of this city will recognize its truth.

Nor does the dangers to society end with the pauperization of so large a body of working women. The tenement houses in which they are herded are nests of contagion, and no proper precautions are taken to prevent the work which they do there from carrying with it the seeds of pestilence. The problem is a grave one—perhaps the gravest that the foremost manufacturing city in the Union has to face—and it is a service of no small value to have its character thus clearly and truthfully set forth.—New York Epoch, March, 1888.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I rise for the purpose, Mr. Chairman, of making a correction. In my remarks I attributed to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] the use of the following language:

According to the census of 1880 the value of the products of the lumber industry in 1879 was $542,788,657, employing 326,197 men; the value of sawed lumber was $233,268,729. Fully 70 per cent. of the value of sawed lumber is labor. At this low estimate you have an annual expenditure of $165,000,000 paid in wages for lumber alone.

This language was not used by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], but by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER].

Mr. BURROWS. The remarks the gentleman from Ohio attributed to me were made in fact by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER].

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is the correction I have made.

Mr. KERR. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask gentlemen on that side of the House, why should lumber come in free? The lumber manufacturers in the country they say own millions of dollars. They pay taxes at the rate of 1½ and 2 per cent. on all they own. Those taxes are used by the State and national authorities for carrying on the Government. They support our schools, our institutions of learning, and our charitable institutions. Every American interest is supported in part by taxes on our lumber interests in the Northern and Southern States. I ask, then, why should these men be taxed and men who do not contribute one cent to support these institutions of the Government which do so much to build up the character of our people, that American character of which we are so proud, why should these men particularly, who do not contribute a cent, why should they take possession of the American market without contributing one dollar to the support of our American institutions? Why do they call it revenue reform? If they are revenue reformers why should they give the advantage to the foreign producer to the disadvantage of the American producer? [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I was entertained this morning by a statement of the value of the pine stumpage in the northern lumber regions of Wisconsin by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM]. That gentleman estimates the value of stumpage to be $4.50 a thousand feet, and seems to wish to have it inferred that this value is largely the result of the duty on lumber. I wish to compare the value of stumpage in Wisconsin as given by the gentleman with its value as considered by the Interior Department of the present Democratic Administration.

There are some Indian reservations in the northern part of my State, and the pine upon those reservations is certainly as valuable on the average as is the stumpage in the same vicinity outside the reservations. The pine upon them is as accessible to driving streams and has been better preserved than the average of pine outside. There is an investigation going on at present at the other end of the Capitol to ascertain whether or not the present administration has treated the Indians fairly and properly guarded their interests in the sale of the stumpage on those reservations. We find by the testimony given before the committee investigating that matter that the present Secretary of the Interior and his predecessor do not and have not considered that stumpage to be as valuable as the estimate given by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BYNUM. Is that accessible?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is considered very desirable by our lumbermen, and is undoubtedly as accessible as is pine on the average outside the reservations. Lumbermen all understand that the value of stumpage varies according to its proximity to driving streams.

Now, when the gentleman puts the value of stumpage at $4.50 a thousand feet I suppose he means the average value. This pine has been considered very desirable to the lumbermen up there, as would appear from their anxiety to enter into contracts with the Indians. The present administration has indorsed contracts made by the lumbermen with the Indians whereby the timber has been sold for from $1.25 up to $2.50 per thousand feet, the latter price being exceptional. I think the gentleman from Indiana ought to go to the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain whether the Indians under his guardianship have been receiving a fair price for their stumpage under this administration.

The Democratic Secretary of the Interior and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] do not seem to fully agree as to the value of stumpage in Wisconsin. The lumber has been fully as well preserved on these reservations, I repeat, as a rule as it has on the average in the lumber regions adjacent, and it is equally as accessible to the streams. The present Secretary is somewhat of a lumberman himself, and some of this lumber, the testimony of the Senate investigating committee shows, has found its way into the mills of a corporation of which he is a large stockholder; and it looks a little suspicious on the face of it, if the gentleman from Indiana is correct in his statement that the value of this stumpage averages $4.50, to find this lumber going to the mill-yards of the Ashland Lumber Company, of which I believe Mr. Vilas is a large stockholder, the Indians receiving nothing like that price, but only from $1.25 to $2 per thousand feet.

The other gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOWARD] goes into this question of profit to the lumbermen somewhat, and claims that the cost of cutting and hauling the timber to the streams is only $1.50 a thousand feet. Now, if that be so, the Secretary of the Interior must be permitting frauds to be perpetrated upon these Indians, for the testimony shows that these lumbermen are permitted to charge them $3 to $3.50 per thousand feet for this cutting and hauling, and I think it would be well for this reform administration to look into the matter if the testimony of these Indiana gentlemen is correct. I think it would be proper for them to go and see the Secretary of the Interior and get an explanation as to why these things are permitted.

Mr. Chairman, we have been told repeatedly during this discussion that the endeavor of the Committee on Ways and Means has been to place raw material on the free-list as far as possible, so that manufacturers could have free raw material, and thereby lessen the cost of their product. Logs seem to have been made an exception to the rule that no obstacle should be placed in the way of the free admission of raw material into this country. Logs and shingle-bolts are at present admitted into this country free of duty, and are the only lumber product so admitted; but Canada has an export duty on logs and shingle-bolts. This bill would leave that export duty just as it is at present, and it would be as much hinderance to free importation of logs as at present. We learn also from reliable sources that many of our own citizens own timber lands on the Canadian side of the line. If the bill passes in this form it is a direct bid to border lumbermen owning pine lands in Canada to transfer their manufacturing plants from the soil of the United States to the soil of Canada.

On page 2, after enumerating the different forms of lumber which this bill places upon the free-list, it continues as follows:

Provided, That if any export duty is laid upon the above-mentioned articles, or either of them, by any country whence imported, all said articles imported from said country shall be subject to duty as now provided by law.

Now, as there is no duty "provided by law" on logs imported into this country, the result of this proviso would be that the unmanufactured lumber would be imported here free; but the Canadian export duty on the logs—the unmanufactured article—would still continue and would not be affected by the passage of the bill, because it is a duty imposed by Canada. It would be an inducement to Canada to retain her export duty, for that would necessitate the manufacture of Canadian pine on Canadian soil in order to avoid the duty which the logs would have to pay if shipped in an unmanufactured state.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The twenty minutes allowed on this side have expired.

Mr. WEBER. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means if I may be allowed to proceed, not perhaps exceeding five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman on the next paragraph. Debate on the pending paragraph under the order of the House is exhausted.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I shall occupy the attention of the committee but a moment. In giving the value of stumpage I only stated the prices fixed by the lumber manufacturers in their statements before the Tariff Commission in 1882. Mr. J. A. Whittier, of East Saginaw, Mich., president of the Saginaw Board of Trade, and other gentlemen representing the lumber interests of Michigan, in their statement as to the cost of making lumber, gave the stumpage at $4.50 per thousand. Commissioner Kenner propounded to Mr. Whittier the following interrogatory: "Are your trees worth $4.50 in the stump?" to which he responded, "Yes, taking that as the average quality that we have adopted."

Whether the lumbermen have succeeded in getting the timber belonging to the Indians at a less rate I do not know; but if that is a fact it is only another reason for placing lumber upon the free-list.

Mr. BURROWS. Will my friend advise the committee of the time when the transaction took place to which reference has been made in this debate, when the lands were bought at $2.50 per acre?

Mr. BYNUM. For stumpage?

Mr. BURROWS. Yes; this occurred some years ago.

Mr. BYNUM. The stumpage sold for less than $1 per thousand in 1870.

Mr. BURROWS. That was eighteen years ago.

Mr. RYNUM. True; but why should the stumpage be worth $4.50 per thousand now as against $1 per thousand eighteen years ago? Either timber is getting scarce or the whole industry is in the hands of a trust. If timber is getting so scarce as to run up the price from $1 to $4.50 per thousand, we should certainly avail ourselves of timber of Canada; if our timber lands are under the control of a few men, and they have combined and put the price up to this enormous rate, then we should break up the trust, and not to do so would simply be to stand idly by and see the people robbed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] to strike out the word "hewn," in line 15.

The question being put, there were—ayes 49, noes 96.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to strike out the three lines which have been read.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 98.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. CHEADLE and Mr. MILLS.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 89.

Mr. CHEADLE. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next paragraph.

The Clerk read line 16, as follows:

Staves of wood.

Mr. WEBER. I move to strike out that line, my purpose being chiefly to answer the query put by the distinguished gentleman from Texas a few moments ago. He asked why the tariff levied by Canada does not raise the wages of labor?

So far as their tariff on lumber is concerned it is not a difficult matter to answer that from a practical business standpoint. It is about as useless as the fifth wheel to a wagon.

The tariff, as I understand, is for the purpose of preventing an inundation of articles from foreign countries. Inasmuch as there is no importation of lumber into Canada, they do not need a tariff for the purpose of preventing its entering into that country.

Our friends on the other side have persistently attempted to pose as not being free-traders. I ask them whether, so far as this item of lumber is concerned, it is not absolutely free trade in that particular article. I do not intend to make any statement in respect of this matter simply as an assertion, but I desire to prove my observations by analogy and practical business experience.

We have had absolute free trade so far as wheat, so far as cattle, and so far as flour are concerned. We had that for nearly twelve years during the existence of the treaty of reciprocity between this Government and Canada. That treaty was abrogated in 1866 by the action of the Republicans, it having been inaugurated by the Democrats, I believe; the Republicans taking the earliest opportunity in abrogating that treaty, which worked so injuriously to our interests.

At that time I was in business in the city of Buffalo, just before the abrogation of the treaty and just after. My correspondence westerly was almost entirely with Canadians. The business was selling flour and wheat. I heard before the abrogation of the treaty some of the same arguments I have been listening to here for weeks and the same that are laid down by the President in his message. It was said by the Canadians that the duty would be added to the article and would be paid by the consumer, which proposition, plainly enunciated by the President in his message, has since been amended by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] so as to apply only to articles on which there is foreign competition. I heard those same arguments day in and day out from my Canadian friends who insisted that when the treaty expired we would pay the 20 per cent. duty levied on flour and wheat. And I want to say to the gentleman from Texas, who is honoring me by not giving attention to a practical statement, that I bought the same flour just after the treaty for precisely the same amount as before, less the amount of duty. In other words, I bought it laid down on our side of the water——

[Here the hammer fell.]

On motion of Mr. BAKER, of New York, by unanimous consent, the time of Mr. WEBER was extended.

Mr. WEBER. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] suggests that the statement I have just made was not quite clear to him. I desire to repeat the flour I had been in the habit of buying at $5 a barrel I bought after the termination of the treaty at $5, less the duty. I bought it for $5 laid down on our side.

A MEMBER. Who paid the duty?

Mr. WEBER. The Canadians paid the duty. The reason I submit is that the quantity coming from Canada is so insignificant that it does not appreciably affect our prices. A little rivulet trickling down the mountain side makes no appreciable increase in the volume of the great stream into which it empties, but if by any process of art or nature the larger stream could be turned back into the other it would regulate and control the smaller. And so the great volume of trade flowing regularly and irresistibly from West to East is not affected in prices by the little stream which in accordance with the natural laws of trade flow into it from Canada.

The same thing is even more true in regard to lumber, because it is heavy and bulky compared to its price, and because the cost of transportation is great in proportion to its value; and our Canadian friends must come over to our market with their lumber whether the duty be off or on.

The same logic conversely applied relates to the article of sugar, because the amount produced in this country is relatively so small that it does not affect the price to the consumers; and yet our free-trade friends have taken the one article which, so far as the duty is concerned, is purely a tariff for revenue only, and removed the duty off that article, while in the case of the other they allow it to remain on. As my genial friend from New York, the poet laureate of the New York delegation, stated it a few moments ago, the bill reduces it on sugar "pro hac."

The trouble is we want a bigger "hac" than the committee gives us.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the tariff is to be revised for the purpose of reducing the revenue that reason should not apply to this article of lumber, because I hold that making lumber free will simply reduce the revenue and put the difference in the pockets of the Canadian manufacturers or their laboring men. If the "robber barons" over there are as piratical as ours have been pictured to us by gentlemen on the other side, the only possible effect of it will be to transfer millionairism to the other side of the line, and, as between a home millionaire and a foreign millionaire, I believe in the home product. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 16, add to the line the words "in the rough, as split and not shaved."

The CHAIRMAN. This being an amendment designed to perfect the text, it takes precedence of an amendment, to strike out.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to say a word in support of this amendment, which, as will be seen by the committee, is a substantial one. It will also be observed that it makes a material change in the paragraph. The paragraph as it stands proposes to admit to the free-list staves of wood. My amendment provides that that shall only be done when those staves are "in the rough, as split and not shaved." I offer this amendment for these reasons: As soon as you begin to shape these staves that moment you put additional labor into their production; and if it be said that this paragraph is designed to save our home wood supply, this amendment does not interfere with that object. These billets, as I may call them, would be admitted free, but if this amendment were adopted the moment they were shaped into staves they would become dutiable; and in that stage of production, I say, they ought to carry some rate of duty, because whatever may be said about raw material, whilst we may claim that wooden blocks are raw material, no one will claim that the finished stave is raw material. To the maker of staves it is his finished product, and it ought to be eliminated from the free-list and put upon the dutiable list at a low rate of duty, but at some rate of duty, in order to make things equal.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose this amendment will be adopted. I suppose it will meet with the fate of the amendment which I offered to the preceding paragraph, against which not one word was uttered, against which not one word could be uttered, but which the other side, rallying their forces to a man, voted down. They defeated it not by reason but by the brute force of numbers; and I want to say to those gentlemen and to this House that although ay-and-no votes will do very well here, the matter does not end here, and if we can not have a dispassionate and calm discussion and vote upon the merits of these propositions, there is a forum outside of these walls to which we will appeal.

I now ask that this amendment be considered upon its merits, and if any gentleman on the other side has a word to say against its merits, I want to hear him.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must first recognize any gentleman who desires to oppose the pending amendment.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] very felicitously suggested to the House a while ago that he proposed to show how figures could be juggled with. I have no idea that the gentleman intended to deceive the House or to misrepresent facts. I know that he has great zeal in this matter, and that he probably searches the census reports with a very earnest desire to find there things that will make arguments for the side which he advocates, but he ought to know, and I think he does know, that there is nothing more unsafe than to take figures relating in a general way to any technical occupation and make deductions from them, without some familiarity with the business itself. I do not know how I could illustrate this more forcibly than by calling attention to the figures which the gentleman gave us of the aggregate amounts in the business of sawed lumber as divided between the manufacturers and the workingmen.

The gentleman from Ohio takes the proceeds of the product of the mill and subtracts from that the amount he finds set forth in this book as paid for labor, and then, making what he calls a liberal allowance for interest and insurance, he deduces therefrom the inference that a very small percentage of that product is paid to the laboring man. I want to say to the gentleman and to the House that these census tables, except as to certain lines of statistics in which there is little opportunity for error, are liable to be very misleading, and if the gentleman had examined this statement with a little more care I think he would have escaped some of the errors into which he has fallen.

But even these figures here do not purport to be what I understand the gentleman takes them for. They purport to be reports of statistics upon the sawed-lumber interest. The heading is, "Lumber sawed;" and the different columns embrace a list of the establishments, the amount of capital, the number of males, females, and children employed, and the wages paid during the year. I undertook to fasten my friend down at that point to find out for what the wages to which these statistics refer were paid. I find upon examination that the statistics refer entirely to just what the caption shows—to the sawed-lumber interest. The amount of wages paid is the amount paid for sawing lumber in the saw-mills.

Now, how do I know that? I know it in the first place in a general way, and I have the absolute proof of it on this printed page, which proof would have made itself obvious to the gentleman from Ohio if he had been familiar with the lumber business; because immediately after the column showing amount of wages paid during the year I find a column devoted to the value of logs. What does that mean? Why, sir, it means the greater part of this entire problem. It means that in the figures given by the gentleman from Ohio he made no allowance for the great item of cost in producing lumber.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. My friend will excuse me. In my figures I deducted the cost of the logs, in order to get the wages of the men engaged in the sawed lumber industry.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How could you get the rate of wages?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. After taking from the value of the whole product, first, the cost of the logs, some $133,000,000; second, the mill supplies, and, third, the interest, insurance, and taxes——

Mr. BOUTELLE. How did you arrive at the cost of the logs?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is a separate thing. I am getting at the sawed lumber industry. Those are the wages paid in that industry. The item of wages must have been included in the value of the logs.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How much do you allow for the wages paid?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not allow anything, because in my calculation I have included the value of the logs.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a few minutes longer, as other gentlemen have been granted the same indulgence.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. As I have interrupted the gentleman, I hope the consent will be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to allowing the gentleman from Maine to continue for five minutes longer? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, the best way——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. My friend will allow me to say that perhaps the wages earned by the laborers in the logging industry go into the value of the logs.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly; but do you allow in your statistics the whole value of the logs?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, I allowed the whole value of the logs.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think not.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. My figures show that I did.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman must certainly have made a mistake in his figures, because the first item in the cost of the lumber is the value of the tree as it stands in the forest. That varies according to locality. In my part of the country stumpage for spruce would be, I should say, from $2 to $2.25 per thousand; that is what the operator pays for the standing tree. When that has been paid men are sent into the woods; they cut the tree down; they trim it; they haul it to the water. I am not going into the minutiæ, but simply state the principal operations. They put it in the stream; they make rafts, which they drive down the river to the mill. The logs, when they reach the mill in my country, will average a value of $9 per thousand. Subtract the cost of stumpage and you have something like $7 or $7.50, every penny of which has been paid to labor—the labor put upon the log up to the time it reaches the mill.

Mr. McSHANE. Does the gentleman know how many men are employed in logging in this country?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Enough to supply all the mills with logs.

Mr. McSHANE. Does the gentleman know how many?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Forty to fifty thousand, I should say. I do not know what bearing that question has upon the matter I am discussing. I am trying to find out who gets the money that comes from the sale of lumber in the market.

We have now carried the log to the mill, where it has assumed a value of about $9 per thousand. To-day spruce sawed boards are worth at the mills in my State, I should say, from $10 to $11. Of course the value varies somewhat with the fluctuations of the market. The difference between the cost of the log at the mill and the value of the lumber per thousand as it lies at the mill ready for shipping represents the cost of milling, which is a very small part of the aggregate cost of taking the tree from the forest, carrying it to the mill, and making it into lumber. A thousand feet of lumber, valued at $10 to $11 or $11.50, represents to the extent of eight-tenths or nine-tenths what has been paid to labor to produce it.

As to this fabulous amount of profit which gentlemen here have figured up as being realized in the lumber business, it is a very easy thing, as has been said here, to juggle with figures; but I suppose among practical lumbermen in this country, especially those in the Eastern States, and more particularly those in my own State, where we are subjected to close and sharp competition with Canadian labor—paid, as I said the other day, from 25 to 50 per cent. less than we pay our laborers—nothing is better known than that the lumber business has been carried on upon the closest possible margin for years, and that men engaged in this business are only able to get out of it without loss by reason of the advantage which they get in the manufacture of what is known as short lumber, working up the refuse with a care and economy unknown in former years—working slabs into pickets, palings, laths, and every conceivable form in which this class of lumber can be fitted for the market.

I have been told by an old lumberman, within the last six months, that within the past five years he has been simply saved from absolute loss by working up all the refuse into this class of what is known as short lumber.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will ask two or three minutes more.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not object, but I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You give the price now of the labor in the logging industry at from $7 to $7.25 per thousand feet.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have never figured it in that way.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What did you give as the cost?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The entire cost?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, the cost of labor in logging. Did you not put it at from $7 to $7.25 per thousand feet.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have not figured it in that way.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The question I was going to ask is this: Do you know as a matter of fact that the cost of the logging multiplied by production, the number of thousand feet produced in this country at the rate you give would be as much as the whole cost of the logs as shown by the statistics, not allowing anything for stumpage?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not know that, and I do not agree to what you undertake to prove from a few selected statistics or carelessly gathered figures in regard to this industry. I wished to say this to the gentleman when up, that I do not believe he knows, and I am very well satisfied I do not know, the statistics of the lumber interest of this country, and he is a bold man who assumes to know it. I know in my State we have established a bureau of statistics recently, and we do not know the aggregate statistics of our lumber business. They have not been able to ascertain them. They are not given in the census.

But I do know what is paid in the lumber market. I know what is paid men in the camps. There is no doubt about it. I know what is paid to the men in the mills. I know it from the men; I know it from the pay-rolls of the men who pay it. I know that, and knowing the cost of stumpage, and knowing what lumber brings in the market, I do not need your census statistics. You go into indefinite nothingness when you attempt to generalize about a business like this of lumber.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Do you know that Mr. Ralph Beaumont, the chairman of the executive committee of the Knights of Labor, has stated that he visited your district and found men working there in the lumber business from 5 o'clock in the morning to 7 o'clock in the evening at 95 cents a day?

Mr. BOUTELLE. If Mr. Ralph Beaumont said that I should regard it as without authority.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That he found men in the lumber business working at from 75 cents to 95 cents per day.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not wish to be led into specific contradictions of statements made by anybody else. I do not wish to be drawn into controversy with anybody. I do not propose to hold a controversy with Mr. Ralph Beaumont or anybody else. I stand here as the representative of a great constituency, and in respect to their business interest on my responsibility I undertake to give and have given the figures as to the average wages paid in my district to-day to men employed in the lumber business. There may be some persons connected with some portion of the work around the mills who get their board, but I have given the regular scale of schedule wages, and these wages speak for themselves.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question recurred on Mr. BUCHANAN'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 85.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the present duty on staves is 10 per cent. We import something over $300,000 worth in value, upon which duty to the amount of $30,000 is collected, and I want to say that I think it extremely unfortunate that the Committee on Ways and Means did not before reporting this bill permit gentlemen who are familiar with the various industries embraced in the bill to be heard before the committee. This debate demonstrates the fact that we know nothing whatever about this industry with any certainty, certainly not with that degree of accuracy with which to formulate legislation. No gentleman of the House of Representatives asserts that wages are higher in the United States than in Canada in the lumber regions but what it is denied, and nobody has been able to furnish the proof that the wages are higher in the United States than in Canada. And so upon every single proposition we are all afloat as to the facts, whereas if we could agree upon the facts probably we could arrive at unanimity of opinion upon the result.

Upon this question of staves I know nothing about it personally, and I venture to say that other gentlemen are in the same condition; and yet I hold in my hand a communication from nine firms engaged in the manufacture of staves taken from the National Press of yesterday that I would like to have read. It will take but a moment to read it. If these gentlemen had been heard before the Committee on Ways and Means we would have had some information upon the subject, but as it is we have to rely upon this evidence in Committee of the Whole.

Before that is read allow me to state that Michigan manufactures annually 199,000,000 staves, valued at $50,000,000; and I hold in my hand a table embracing thirty-five States and Territories engaged in this industry, showing the amount and value of this production upon which there is a duty of 10 per cent. I shall be glad if the committee will listen to what these gentlemen say who are largely engaged in this industry. I ask the Clerk now to read the extract I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

If the duty were to be taken from hoops, staves, and heading, we fail to see where (in the end) it would benefit the American people. We think it would be a temporary advantage to the American consumers, resulting in the duty received by this country being placed upon the timber in Canada, and thus an injustice to the American manufacturer, and tending to drive them from the country.

D. B. & D. C. SWEET, Buffalo, N. Y.

If staves are placed on the free-list we will all be obliged to shut down, as the percentage now on staves is all we make. Millions of dollars' worth of property would be rendered worthless, and thousands of families would be thrown out of work. The percentage now on staves is just enough to keep us alive. I hope Congress will see this; if it does not, disaster will follow.

HENRY C. SCHUNOR,
Superintendent Fair Haven (Mich.) Stave Co.

We think the price of staves is as low as they can be manufactured for. Putting them on the free-list will, in our opinion, have the effect of driving the border manufacturers into Canada, thereby benefiting Canadian labor at the expense of labor in the States, and would enable the Canadian manufacturer to advance his prices with consequent greater profits. It is certainly very poor policy to drive capital and labor from the country, and by so doing greatly benefit some foreign country.

DETROIT STAVE AND HEADING WORKS.

Our opinion is, with the small profit on staves here, by putting them on the free-list three-quarters of the manufacturers will have to stop, and many of the largest plants along the Detroit River would go to Canada, where labor and timber are cheaper.

ST. LOUIS (MICH.) HOOP AND STAVE COMPANY.

We believe the effect would be to put down the price of cooperage stock in the States. It would be a boom for Canada, but disastrous to the timber-owners and wood-working interest of the United States.

E. C. BRADFORD & BRO.,
Detroit, Mich.

To admit lumber and staves free would lead to the closing up of our mills and factories. Canada is now, under the present tariff, flooding our country with all kinds of lumber and staves. We are now selling our stock as low as it can be made and leave a profit.

SKIDMORE & THACHER,
Toledo, Ohio.

We believe that putting lumber, staves, and salt on the free-list will be a great damage to this State, as they are a large product of our State, and we think it would have a tendency to prostrate those industries and work injustice to those having money invested in machinery and timber.

BUTTERS & PETERS SALT AND LUMBER COMPANY.
Ludington, Mich.

In our opinion it would be ruinous to the manufacturers of cooperage stock in the United States, and plants that are now valuable and paying a fair percentage on cost would not be worth 50 cents on the dollar.

THE DEWEY STAVE COMPANY,
Toledo, Ohio.

Mr. BURROWS. I stated that the value of this industry in Michigan was $50,000,000 annually. That includes, however, the manufacture of shingles and laths as well as staves, these three items combined aggregating the $50,000,000. I desired to have these letters read in order that the majority of the committee might know something of the industry they are about to destroy, in addition also to the fact that upon this question of lumber, as I intimated in the beginning, but one petition was filed before the Ways and Means Committee asking that the duty on lumber be disturbed. That petition was read by the chairman of the committee, but he did not read all of those which were against the bill, sixty in number, which were exclusively on the other side in the shape of a firm protest against disturbing this industry. I call attention to this merely because these gentlemen whose communication I have had read are thoroughly familiar with the industry.

Mr. MILLS. I want to say that the number of petitions the gentleman speaks of as being opposed to disturbing this duty were by those people who are interested in receiving the tax; and the one I read was by gentlemen who were interested in paying the tax. There is just the difference between them.

Mr. BURROWS. I did not discuss the character of the men who signed that petition.

Mr. MILLS. Well, I am discussing it.

Mr. BURROWS. I said that but one petition was filed in this Congress asking that the duty on lumber should be disturbed.

Mr. MILLS. And it is well known that all of these others were from gentlemen interested in receiving the tax.

Mr. BURROWS. But in the line of this cry for free lumber I repeat there has been but one petition, one demand, while sixty petitions are filed against it, and the members of the Committee on Ways and Means closed their doors against men having knowledge of this industry, who were told they should not be heard. Now, the course of this debate shows conclusively that the committee have not heard men who knew something about it.

Mr. MILLS. The gentlemen on the other side contend, it seems to me, that nobody has any right to be consulted about taxation except the parties who are putting their hands into the pockets of other people and taking the money out. No one has any right to be consulted here or spoken of on the floor when a law is to be made, except the man who is to determine how much of that money he will take from the people. The Committee on Ways and Means could not agree to the doctrine that the only question to be considered when you are taking their money is, how much will the people bear?

We are here, sir, to represent the consuming people, to represent the people who are paying the taxes. We are here under the solemn pledge that we will reduce this taxation. We are here with a surplus and an excess of $80,000,000 a year coming into the Treasury, and when we present a bill to reduce the taxation we are confronted with the determined opposition of the gentlemen on the other side of the House at every stage of its progress. They are constantly refusing to reduce the taxation on a single article. Not an item of the bill has yet been read on which there has not been a motion to strike it out from the free-list and restore the taxation.

We are told nobody is asking for this. I know that one hundred and sixty-eight members of this House have pledged themselves to the country and to their constituents that they will reduce taxation. And the gentlemen on the other side come here with the provision in the platform of their party at the last national convention pledging themselves also to revise the taxation and reduce the surplus. But there are two ways of revising taxation. The Democratic way is to revise the tariff by reducing taxation; the Republican way is to revise it by raising the taxation.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has never debated this question in this House without begging the question. His whole talk has been for the reduction of taxation with the assertion that this side of the House is engaged in an effort to keep taxation up while he desires to reduce it. Now the gentleman knows, because he is a man of intelligence, that this is an absolutely unfair, unjust, and incorrect statement of the case. He knows that this side of the House is quite as eager as he is to reduce taxation, only they are not ready to reduce it in his particular way.

The gentleman has formulated his bill, has brought it into the House, and says he desires to reduce taxation by cutting down the duties on imports, which would affect the interests of certain sections of the country and destroy the industries in those sections.

Mr. BLAND rose.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If I had time I should be glad to give it to the gentleman from Missouri to repeat that same old speech he has made in this House any time for the last five years. I always did like that speech.

But what I have to say is that the gentleman from Texas formulated a bill to take the duty off lumber, thereby affecting the Northern industries; and while the duty on lumber to-day is only 16 per cent. he leaves more than 60 per cent. on sugar and more than 100 per cent. on rice. Because we will not agree to the injustice to the Northern section of the country, and because we do not agree to take off a duty on lumber, which is less than half the revenue duty, he stands up with the air of a Sir Oracle, and says that we are opposed to reducing taxation.

When I rose I intended to speak on another point brought before the committee by the very line under consideration. There is nothing in this bill which shows its injustice in a clearer light than the attempt to reduce the duty upon staves. What will be the effect of reducing that duty? To-day there are more than twenty vessels carrying staves from the Penobscot and adjacent waters of Maine to ports on the Hudson. While we had the late reciprocity treaty with Canada that industry did not exist, although it had existed prior to that reciprocity treaty. That treaty took away from us the benefit we had hitherto enjoyed. That industry under the reciprocity treaty went to New Brunswick. The staves were manufactured there, and carried from there to our ports, and carried by Canadian vessels. Now to take the duty off staves would place us right where we were during the reciprocity treaty. It would not only destroy the production of staves in the State of Maine, but a large portion of the carrying trade. In New Brunswick they build their vessels cheaply, their sailors live cheaper, and, as I have said, if this duty is taken off it will not only take this industry from us, but will take the carrying trade from us, too.

Gentlemen on the other side have shown their willingness to attack our domestic carrying trade, and they do it insidiously in this bill when they attack those industries which require our vessels to carry their products to the places where they are disposed of. For when this industry is transferred to New Brunswick by the unpatriotic provisions of this bill the American vessels which it employs will be supplanted by cheaply built, cheaply manned, and cheaply provisioned Canadian craft.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] divides his complaint into two parts—one as to the articles that we do strike, and the other as to the articles that we do not strike. His complaint as to the articles upon which we reduce taxes, viewing the matter, as he does, from a sectional standpoint, includes two items. One is the wood products, which we put on the free-list. Why, sir, have we not heard the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] plead here for the Southern forests, and say that this measure would be destructive of the Southern timber interests? I trust the gentleman will take some occasion to answer his protectionist friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I did not hear that statement, and therefore I do not discuss it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It was made just as I have stated it. You have discussed it in conflict with Judge KELLEY when you charged that we thus favored our section. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said this measure would paralyze the Southern timber trade. I trust the gentleman from Maine will pay attention to the tears shed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania on behalf of the Southern forests, and will get his bowl ready to catch those tears, and will endeavor to reconcile his views and those of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on that point before he repeats his reckless charges.

Then as to wool, does not the gentleman know that since 1875 New England and Pennsylvania and New York and Ohio have fallen off 10 per cent. in the number of their sheep, while the South has increased nearly 100 per cent.? Where is the production of wool a growing industry? Where is the limit of Southern development? We have more territory for wool-growing, sir, in the single State of Texas alone than you have in all the States I have enumerated. There is the growing industry, there is the infant industry; and yet when we put wool on the free-list you fly in the face and teeth of all the facts and say we do it to favor ourselves and to hurt you. You would call that a sacrifice, only that for partisan purposes you choose to go contrary to the official facts. We furnish the wool and your people wear the woolen clothing; and yet if we seek to reduce our protection on wool, to give your mills cheap wool, as you put it, and your working people cheap, warm clothing for winter, you say we are sectional and selfish. Why do you not measure your words?

Then gentlemen talk of staves, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] talks about a lot of data which he brings in here from gentlemen who speak of industries that exist and express the opinion that they will be stricken down, but not one line of argument is even attempted in all that miserable rot, either in this House or in the Committee on Ways and Means, and when we ask them to give the bottom facts, to measure the taxes we should lay on the people, to prove their needs, they gather around them the insolent garb of a subsidized industry and say that it is their private business. Now, what is the fact about staves?

We have the broad, bottom fact that we are competing successfully in foreign markets. From Baltimore we shipped last year $114,600 worth of staves; from Boston and Charlestown, we shipped $138,000 worth; from New Orleans, $637,000 worth; from New York, $532,000 worth, and from Philadelphia, $142,000 worth. We sent abroad from this country over $2,000,000 worth of staves to foreign ports, and we are successfully competing with foreigners in the markets of the world. If we can do that abroad with difficulties to overcome, we can certainly command the market at our own thresholds. It is subsidy you want—needless subsidy, at the cost of our own people. These, sir, are the facts about these things. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BAYNE. I move a pro forma amendment. It will not do, Mr. Chairman, to take the position taken by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and charge that we on this side of the House are not in favor of a reduction of taxation. We are. [Derisive cheers on the Democratic side and cries of "Name!" "Name!"]

Mr. BAYNE. I will name what I would do and what I believe the majority of this side of the House would do. I would take off entirely the tax on domestic tobacco, amounting to $30,000,000 a year, and I would take off three-quarters of the duty on sugar, amounting to $45,000,000. That would make a reduction of $75,000,000; which is as much as the revenue of this country ought to be reduced.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. You are always ready to take the duty off articles that do not yield a subsidy. What article that yields a subsidy are you willing to take the duties off?

A MEMBER. How about rice?

Mr. BAYNE. I have named what I will do and what I hope the House will do and what I hope will be done, if any tariff legislation is to be enacted in this Congress.

Mr. DUNN. That is not sectional at all.

Mr. BAYNE. No, it is not sectional, because the sugar industry does not come within the legitimate range of protection at all. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

You may laugh at that, but it is a fact; and for this reason: The idea of protection means that we shall supply or be almost able to supply the wants of our country by the home production. Anything the home production of which falls ten-elevenths short of the wants of the country can not be said to fall within the theory of protection.

Now, gentlemen on the other side of the House have been looking a great deal to-day at dispatches; and I am a little surprised that no more enthusiasm is manifested over those dispatches.

Mr. MACDONALD. May I ask——

Mr. BAYNE. I can not be interrupted further. I glanced at some of those dispatches and discovered that they come from St. Louis, and related to the nomination of President and Vice-President. As those dispatches have reference to nominations, I want to read a few dispatches with regard to an election. [Cries of "Go on."] Here is a dispatch from the State of Oregon—from a wheat-growing county in that State which has been Democratic since the war. The dispatch is addressed to the honored Representative from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN]:

I congratulate you on your election. We probably elected nearly the entire Republican ticket in Lane.

A Democratic MEMBER (derisively). "Probably!"

Mr. BAYNE. That is from a wheat-growing county, built up by farmers whom you gentlemen on the other side are so anxious to relieve from the "intolerable burdens of taxation."

Here is another dispatch. It comes from Baker County, in Eastern Oregon, largely engaged in wool-growing and mining. Two years ago it gave 250 Democratic majority.

A Democratic MEMBER. How much four years ago?

Mr. BAYNE. They have heard there of the Mills bill and of the free-wool clause in that bill, and they send this dispatch to Mr. HERMANN:

Your majority in this county will reach 150.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

A Democratic MEMBER. Is that all?

Mr. BAYNE. It is not all. Here is a dispatch from Columbia County, a lumber county on the Columbia River, with only 400 voters, and which gave 50 Republican majority two years ago. What majority does it give now?

Columbia County gives you 200 majority.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

The people out in Oregon are against the Mills bill, against free lumber, free wool, and everything of that kind. They have just voted on that question out in Oregon.

Here is a dispatch from another county——

Mr. BIGGS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Wait a moment. These are facts. I am not dealing now with problematical questions. Here is another dispatch from another county out there—Douglas County.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. I would like a minute or two more.

[Cries of "Go on!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from Pennsylvania to continue his remarks for five minutes? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BAYNE. Douglas County is a large wool-growing and lumbering county in Southern Oregon—the home county of the Representative from that State [Mr. HERMANN]. That county gave 186 majority two years ago. What does it do now?

Your majority in the county 300; over 3,000 in the State. Victory everywhere in the State.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, what I have asked for and insisted upon all along has been that the people of the United States should have a chance to vote upon this issue, squarely presented to them in the Mills bill and the President's message. They will have that fair, square opportunity this fall; and I have commended the President over and over again for his manly, outspoken position on the tariff question.

Mr. WASHINGTON. And the people are going to sustain him, too.

Mr. BAYNE. If they do so, all right.

Mr. WASHINGTON. They will.

Mr. BAYNE. But until the people shall have had an opportunity of voting on this square issue, I insist that the free-traders in this House of Representatives ought not to have an opportunity of revising this tariff in the interest of free trade and for the destruction of the industries of the country.

I regret very much, Mr. Chairman, that I have made my friends on the other side so happy, for they seem to be enjoying themselves; but there was a controversy a short time ago on that side of the House, and they were discussing the subject without eliciting facts. I thought I would simply present a few facts which were recorded by the sovereign voters of the State of Oregon as bearing upon this question.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read a short extract from a paper published at Albany, Oregon, bearing upon this very subject.

A MEMBER. What is the date?

Mr. LAWLER. It is of recent date. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The high tariff cry of protection to American labor—a cry which is the inspiration of this delusive bill—is the most offensive piece of humbuggery advocated by demagogues in the United States to-day. The purpose of the high tariff is not to maintain the high wages of labor, but to maintain the high profits of protected manufacturers. The cry about labor is a mere stalking-horse under whose shelter protected interests trust to be able to keep up a fiscal system which is for their exclusive benefit, and which robs everybody outside their pale.

Mr. LAWLER. I would ask my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to take that, and put it in his pipe and smoke it.

Mr. GUENTHER. But have not the people of Oregon been heard from since then? It seems to me that they had a vote the other day.

Mr. MILLS. I hope now that we will have a vote on this line, as I want to move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn, if there be no objection, and the question is on striking out the line, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 16: "Staves of wood."

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 59, noes 87.

Mr. GUENTHER. No quorum.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that, as I want to move that the committee rise.

Mr. GUENTHER. With that understanding I will withdraw the point of order.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 17: "Pickets and palings."

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the tariff bill had come to no resolution thereon.

VETO MESSAGE—PUBLIC BUILDING, BAR HARBOR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill 4467, entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Bar Harbor, in Maine.

The entire town within which Bar Harbor is situated contained in 1880, 1,639 inhabitants, as appears by the census of that year. There is no pretense that there is any need of a public building there, except to accommodate the post-office.

This is a third-class office, and the Government does not pay rent for offices of that class. The gross receipts of the office for the year ended June 30, 1887, are reported by the Postmaster-General at $5,337. The postmaster reports that he employs five clerks in the summer and three in the winter. The fact that Bar Harbor is a place of very extensive summer resort makes its population exceedingly variable, and during a part of the year it is quite likely that the influx of pleasure seekers may make a more commodious post-office desirable, though there does not seem to be much complaint of present inconvenience. The postmaster pays a rent of $500 per annum for his present quarters.

The amount appropriated by the bill is quite moderate, being only $25,000, but the postmaster expresses the opinion that a proper site alone would cost from twenty thousand to thirty thousand dollars.

I am decidedly of the opinion that if a public building is to be erected at this place, of which at present there appears to be no necessity, it should be done under a system which will not give the post-office and the postmaster there an advantage over others of their class.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 5, 1888.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What action will the House take with the message?

Mr. MILLS. I move its reference to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

The message was accordingly referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and, with the bill, ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had excused Mr. STANFORD from service as a manager on the part of the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7263) for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Mich., and that Mr. MORRILL had been appointed in his place.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 385) for the erection of a public building in the city of Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire;

A bill (S. 785) to provide for an addition to the United States building at Jackson, Miss.;

A bill (S. 1318) for the erection of a public building at Altoona, Pa.;

A bill (S. 2277) to provide for the extension of the public building at Lynchburgh, Va.;

A bill (S. 2319) for the erection of a public building at Waterbury, Conn.;

A bill (S. 2788) for the erection of a public building at Virginia City, State of Nebraska;

A bill (S. 2789) for the erection of a public building at Reno, State of Nevada;

A bill (S. 194) to increase the endowment of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural College;

A bill (S. 375) to restrict the use and sale of opium in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States;

A bill (S. 506) to remove the charge of desertion against Thomas Conroy, deceased;

A bill (S. 653) defining the positions and salaries of assistant astronomers at the United States Naval Observatory, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 750) for the relief of Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn.;

A bill (S. 1100) to retire certain disabled officers of the Army;

A bill (S. 1169) for the relief of Commander George M. Bache, United States Navy (retired);

A bill (S. 1190) for the relief of the estate of Joseph Fenno, deceased;

A bill (S. 1191) for the relief of the legal representatives of Mary H. Pike, deceased;

A bill (S. 1245) for the relief of Nancy E. Day, administratrix of the estate of James L. Day, deceased;

A bill (S. 1632) to refund moneys collected from William Schaus at the port of New York on an oil painting not subject to duty;

A bill (S. 1650) for the relief of Maj. Gen. W. W. Averell;

A bill (1807) to refund to the State of West Virginia the money paid to officers of the One hundred and thirty-third Regiment West Virginia Militia for services rendered during the rebellion;

A bill (S. 1914) for the relief of Mary E. Hopkins;

A bill (S. 2013) for the relief of Forman Mathews and David Stout Parker;

A bill (S. 2040) to establish a land office at Folsom, in the Territory of New Mexico;

A bill (S. 2477) granting the right of way to the Mobile and Birmingham Railway Company, the successor to the Mobile and Alabama Grand Trunk Railroad Company, across the Mount Vernon arsenal reservation, in Mobile County, Alabama;

A bill (S. 2787) for the erection of an equestrian statue of ex-President Zachary Taylor;

A bill (S. 2929) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct and operate a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 1162) for the relief of Susan E. Alger;

A bill (S. 2260) restoring the name of Wilhemina Hosband to the pension-roll;

A bill (S. 2439) granting a pension to Charlotte T. Alderman;

A bill (S. 2451) placing the name of Elizabeth Domm on the pension-rolls;

A bill (S. 2459) granting a pension to Mary S. Maynard;

A bill (S. 2500) granting a pension to Gertrude K. Lyford;

A bill (S. 2595) to increase the pension of Seth F. Myers;

A bill (S. 2604) granting a pension to Mrs. Loanda Sherman;

A bill (S. 2646) granting a pension to Danville A. Ricker;

A bill (S. 2657) granting an increase of pension to Emily J. Stannard;

A bill (S. 2705) granting a pension to Ellen Smith;

A bill (S. 2707) granting a pension to Samuel Miller;

A bill (S. 2710) granting a pension to the widow of John Schafer;

A bill (S. 2716) granting a pension to Carl M. Schwantes;

A bill (S. 2717) granting a pension to John K. Evans;

A bill (S. 2720) granting a pension to John B. Ross;

A bill (S. 2721) granting a pension to Jackson Chapman;

A bill (S. 2728) to grant a pension to Indiana J. Nichols;

A bill (S. 2852) granting an increase of pension to Clara B. Davidson;

A bill (S. 2866) granting a pension to Abel G. Rankin;

A bill (S. 2884) granting a pension to William S. Grow;

A bill (S. 2885) granting a pension to Henry A. Hawley; and

A bill (S. 2886) granting increase of pension to Joseph B. Sellers.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 322) for the relief of B. M. Parish;

A bill (H. R. 417) granting a pension to David Strunk;

A bill (H. R. 488) granting a pension to Elizabeth Burr;

A bill (H. R. 611) for the relief of Mrs. P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 955) granting a pension to Mary M. Sweet;

A bill (H. R. 1599) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Sedalia, in the State of Missouri;

A bill (H. R. 1844) to promote agriculture, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 2151) for the relief of Joseph B. Burton;

A bill (H. R. 2167) for the relief of George E. Oliphant;

A bill (H. R. 2695) for the relief of Charles V. Mesler;

A bill (H. R. 3922) to place the name of Casper Seibel on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 3959) granting a pension to Dolly Blazer;

A bill (H. R. 5522) for the relief of Elijah Martin;

A bill (H. R. 5844) to increase the pension of William Clark;

A bill (H. R. 6520) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Ward;

A bill (H. R. 6575) for the relief of James L. Alsip;

A bill (H. R. 6845) granting a pension to John Witham;

A bill (H. R. 7265) for the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J.;

A bill (H. R. 7490) for the relief of Sidney W. Whitelock;

A bill (H. R. 7509) granting to the New York Harbor and Beach Railroad Company a right of way;

A bill (H. R. 7913) granting a pension to Nellie Palfrey Goodwin;

A bill (H. R. 8266) for the relief of Mrs. Clarissa G. Green;

A bill (H. R. 8279) to authorize the county of Laurens, in the State of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Oconee River, at or near Dublin, in said county and State; and

A bill (H. R. 8965) to authorize the Postmaster-General to cancel mail contract on route No. 30160, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 8393) to protect lands belonging to Indians from unlawful grazing, and for other purposes, requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. PLUMB as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1483) for the erection of a public building at Monroe, La.;

A bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether;

A bill (H. R. 2097) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Trail Creek, in the city of Michigan City, State of Indiana; and

A bill (H. R. 7340) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Hickman, Ky.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 2972) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasonton with the rank and grade of colonel, requested a conference, and had appointed Mr. CAMERON, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. COCKRELL as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 431) granting a pension to Emma S. Free, widow of Thomas S. Free, late major in the United States Army, asked a conference with the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. BLAIR, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. FAULKNER as conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE APPOINTED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the House on the bill S. 2805, Mr. THOMPSON of California, Mr. CHIPMAN, and Mr. HUNTER.

VETO MESSAGE—PUBLIC BUILDING AT COUNCIL BLUFFS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and, with the accompanying bill, ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 1334, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the accommodation of Government offices in Council Bluffs, Iowa."

A new public building at Council Bluffs will be completed in a short time. The ground upon which it is located has a frontage of 192 feet and a depth of 106 feet and 10 inches. The proposition is to add 30 feet to its depth. The act under which this building has been thus far constructed provides that the ground purchased therefor shall be of such dimensions as to leave the building unexposed to fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys. The building is located on land now belonging to the Government, sufficient in size to comply with this provision, and in point of fact more than the open space required is left on all sides of the same. There is no pretense that any enlargement of the building is necessary or contemplated.

The report of the committee to which the bill was referred in the House simply states that "the grounds on which said building is situated are inadequate for its proper accommodation and safety."

If this is so I can see no reason why additional ground should not be purchased for "the proper accommodation and safety" of a large proportion of the public buildings completed and in process of erection, since the provision that there shall exist 40 feet of open space on all sides is, I think, contained in all the bills authorizing their construction. In this view the proposed legislation would establish a very bad precedent.

It is provided in the bill that the additional 30 feet mentioned shall be purchased for a sum not to exceed $10,000. The adjoining 106 feet and 10 inches, located on the corner of two streets, were purchased in the year 1882 by the Government for $15,000. The permission to purchase this addition at a price per foot greatly in excess of that already owned by the Government seems so unnecessary, except to benefit the owner, that I am of the opinion that it should not be granted.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 5, 1888.

JOHN T. HIGGINS.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 8307) for the relief of John T. Higgins. It is a little bill, and carries only $130.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay John T. Higgins, of Lincoln County, Kentucky, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $130 for necessary expenses as general storekeeper in the revenue service of the eighth district of Kentucky.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Claims with the following amendment:

And a gauger for two months and six days.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, called for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. LANHAM) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8307) for the relief of John T. Higgins, have had the same under consideration, and make the following report:

On the 1st day of December, 1885, John T. Higgins was designated by Hon. Thomas S. Bronston, collector of the eighth district of Kentucky, to act as general storekeeper and gauger during the necessary absence of B. M. Burdett, a general storekeeper and gauger.

John T. Higgins performed the duties of said position for the period of two months and six days, during which time his necessary traveling expenses amounted to $130, which amount he has never been paid.

The written statement of Collector Bronston shows that he appointed John T. Higgins temporary general storekeeper and gauger during the necessary absence of General Storekeeper and Gauger B. M. Burdett, and that said John T. Higgins faithfully performed the duties required of him for the said period of two months and six days, and that his necessary traveling expenses while thus engaged amounted to $130, and Collector Bronston recommends the payment of said amount.

B. M. Burdett was not allowed anything for necessary traveling expenses during the said period, but if he had discharged the duties performed by John T. Higgins he would have been allowed, under the law, his necessary traveling expenses. At the time that John T. Higgins was designated as temporary general storekeeper and gauger he was not in the revenue service.

He was paid his per diem during the time that he acted as temporary general storekeeper and gauger, and the Department ruled that there was no fund out of which his necessary expenses could be paid.

It is believed that as he lawfully performed the duties of the absent general storekeeper and gauger he should receive the pay and expenses that the absent storekeeper and gauger was entitled to when performing the same service.

Therefore the committee recommend that the bill do pass, with the following amendment: Amend the bill in line 7, after the word "storekeeper," by inserting the words "and gauger for two months and six days."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McCREARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROCK CREEK, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendment to the bill H. R. 1184. It is merely a formal amendment.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek, at Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 18, page 1, strike out "six" and insert "eight."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I object.

Mr. ROWELL. It is merely a verbal amendment changing a date and inserting "1878" instead of "1876."

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If it is merely a correction of date I shall not object, the bill having already passed the House. I am utterly opposed, however, to the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POSTAL CRIMES.

Mr. DOCKERY. I rise to present a report of a conference committee.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7052) relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same.

A. M. DOCKERY,
S. R. PETERS,
Managers on the part of the House.
ELI SAULSBURY,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
E. K. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The explanatory statement by the managers on the part of the House was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 7052, beg leave to make the following statement: The amendment of the Senate makes non-mailable all envelopes or postal-cards, on the outside of which appears "libelous, scurrilous, or threatening delineations," or envelopes or postal-cards on which appears language "reflecting injuriously upon the character or conduct of another."

S. R. PETERS,
A. M. DOCKERY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the amendment of the Senate?

The amendment of the Senate was read.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all right.

The report was adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUPREME COURT OF UTAH.

Mr. CAINE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Territories be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1507) providing for an additional associate justice for the supreme court of the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes; and that it be brought before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, when, the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the Speaker pro tempore declared that, pursuant to order, the House stood adjourned until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. G. A. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 10349) granting a pension to John Ackles—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. E. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 10350) granting an increase of Pension to Eliza J. Alexander—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DARLINGTON: A bill (H. R. 10351) granting a pension to John W. Armstrong—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORD: A bill (H. R. 10352) granting a pension to Sarah J. Clayburg—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GEST: A bill (H. R. 10353) granting a pension to Eliza Richardson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUNTER: A bill (H. R. 10354) for the relief of Daniel F. Gann—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10355) granting a pension to Ruth Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10356) granting a pension to J. T. Vincent—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCULLOGH: A bill (H. R. 10357) for the relief of James B. Grooms—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McSHANE: A bill (H. R. 10358) granting a pension to Webber S. Seavey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROGERS: A bill (H. R. 10359) for the relief of Sarah Ann Vaught—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SIMMONS (by request): A bill (H. R. 10360) to place Henry Zell on the retired-list of the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STONE, of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 10361) for the relief of Charles Wilkenson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10362) for the relief of Isaac Spurr—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10363) for the relief of Stephen Williams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAULBEE: A bill (H. R. 10364) for the relief of Richard Wilson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10365) for the relief of John Samuels—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10366) for the relief of Matilda Cody—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WALKER: A bill (H. R. 10367) granting a pension to Joshua Caldwell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WASHINGTON: A bill (H. R. 10368) for the relief of Sophia Fowler—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 10369) to place the name of Anthony Grady on the pension-roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10370) for the relief of Edward Heffner—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10371) for the relief of James S. Sayler—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: A bill (H. R. 10372) for the relief of John Kalbfleisch—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. J. A. ANDERSON: Petition of Samuel Morehead, of Robinson, Kans., for relief—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BLOUNT: Petition of Andrew H. Turner, of Alapaha, Ga., for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. C. R. BRECKINRIDGE: Petition of John Lacotts, of Mary Lowe, of William A. Kimbrough, of Nancy F. Jones, and of B. M. Crabtree, of Arkansas County, Arkansas, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL: Memorial of Eliza J. Alexander, widow of Lieut. Francis Alexander, United States Navy, for an increase of pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FARQUHAR: Resolutions of the Merchants' Exchange, of Buffalo, N. Y., favoring the passage of the Nicaragua Canal bill—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FORNEY: Petition of citizens of Cullman County, Alabama, for amendment of the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GAINES: Petition of N. A. Tucker, of Deatonsville, Va., for relief—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Abraham Miller, of David L. Wood, of Joseph Sharp, of Rosa B. Hill, heir of John H. Batte, of A. R. Shands, jr., for heirs of Ann C. Wood, of William B. Shands, trustee for M. C. Shands' children, and of Peter W. Anderson, heir of Francis B. Anderson, of Virginia, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of citizens of Farmville and of Petersburgh, Va., for repeal of the internal-revenue tax on tobacco, and setting forth the suffering of the trade on account of delay by the Fiftieth Congress—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the Military Board of Virginia, for the pending bill making appropriations for the maintenance of the militia of the States of the Union—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HERBERT. Petition of Sophia Stacey and Alice Stacey, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HUNTER: Petition of H. E. Jenkins, of T. T. Roup, of Joseph Woorley, of James Oller, of J. M. Oller, of G. W. Woorley, and of George H. Galloway, administrator of Logan M. Dishman, of Kentucky, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Daniel F. Gann, for removal of charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LAIDLAW: Petition of citizens of Chautauqua County, New York, relating to protection to American industries—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LODGE: Petition of William F. Sears and 32 others, of South Harwich; of Addie E. Lake and 107 others, of South Brewster; of George W. Breed and 35 others, of Lynn; and of S. R. Keith, and 48 others, of Malden, Mass., for the repeal of duties on sugar and molasses—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McCREARY: Petition in favor of bill for relief of Alexander Curd—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCULLOGH: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Alexandria, Pa., for the immediate repeal of the internal-revenue tax on liquor—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MILLS: Petition of Jones Corgrove, of Navarro County, Texas, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MORGAN: Petition of Mrs. M. A. McCracken, widow of David J. McCracken, of Tate County, Mississippi, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. NEAL: Papers in the case of S. H. Fox, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PETERS: Papers in the case of George Prescott, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition and papers in the case of Milton Fuson, for relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PHELAN: Petition of William L. McLean, administrator of Charles D. McLean, of Shelby County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of A. F. Owens and others, asking aid for the colored people's exposition to be held at Atlanta, Ga., in 1889—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. ROGERS: Petition of numerous citizens of Lonoke, Ark., for an amendment of the interstate-commerce law—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, petition of Mrs. Sarah Ann Vaught, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers in the claim of Sarah Ann Vaught, of Crawford County, Arkansas—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEPHENSON: Petition of A. J. Packard and 206 others, citizens of Manitowoc, Wis., that that city be made a harbor of refuge, and to appropriate $100,000 to construct and maintain said harbor of refuge—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. J. D. STEWART (by request): Petition of C. C. Davis for heirs of Larkin H. Davis, Fulton County, and of heir of William G. C. Jones, of Fulton County, Georgia, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TAULBEE: Proof to accompany bill for the relief of Arch Huffman—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers to accompany bill for the relief of Brice Shepherd—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers to accompany bill for the relief of Miles M. Ward—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, papers to accompany bill for the relief of Susan Burnett, of Prestonburgh, Ky.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WASHINGTON: Petition of Sophia Fowler, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. W. L. WILSON (by request): Petition of Barbara Kropp, for relief—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The following petition for the repeal or modification of the internal-revenue tax of $25 levied on druggists was received and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. DARLINGTON: Of citizens of Spring City, Chester County, Pennsylvania.

The following petitions for the more effectual protection of agriculture, by the means of certain import duties, were received and severally referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. REED: Of citizens of East Jefferson and of South Livermore, Me.

By Mr. E. J. TURNER: Of W. T. Davis and others of Ellsworth, Kans.

The following petitions, indorsing the per-diem rated service-pension bill, based on the principle of paying all soldiers, sailors, and marines of the late war a monthly pension of 1 cent a day for each day they were in the service, were severally referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

By Mr. PETERS: Of Nelson Warren Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Danville, Kans.

By Mr. WADE: Of citizens of Fordland, Nebraska County, Missouri.

By Mr. THOMAS WILSON: Of John A. Myers Post, Grand Army of Republic, of Minnesota.

The following petitions, praying for the enactment of a law providing temporary aid for common schools, to be disbursed on the basis of illiteracy, were severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. McCORMICK: Of 126 citizens of Sullivan and Potter Counties, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. O'DONNELL: Of 48 citizens of Calhoun County Michigan.

The following petitions for an increase of compensation of fourth-class postmasters were severally referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads:

By Mr. BLOUNT: Of H. F. Barnes and others, of Butts County, Georgia.

By Mr. TAULBEE: Of citizens of Canada, Ky.

Also, of citizens of West Liberty, Ky.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 6, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the point of order on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill was withdrawn. I had some understanding that the point of order was withdrawn by unanimous consent yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The recollection of the Chair is that the condition of business appears fully stated in the RECORD. Does the Senator from Massachusetts submit a motion to amend the Journal?

Mr. HOAR. I have no interest as having any charge of this matter, but the RECORD reads in this way:

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that by unanimous consent the appeal may be withdrawn, and let the bill be laid aside, so that we may take up the Calendar.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CALL. I am entirely willing for that.

* * * * * * *

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to me the best way to relieve the Senate of any embarrassment is to adjourn, and so on. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] then says:

I will withdraw the appeal and let the bill go over.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the bill go over until to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the appeal from the decision of the Chair is withdrawn.

* * * * * * *

Mr. SHERMAN. I am informed that there are on the Calendar a number of pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, then, will stand on the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CALL. I suppose that would not prevent me from renewing the motion.

So the point of order was withdrawn, and the suggestion was that the Senator from Florida might renew his motion this morning.

The Chair then said:

The question will stand on the decision of the Chair.

The Chair then asked leave, if these proceedings were to be submitted to the Senate, to withdraw his decision upon the point of order, and submit it to the Senate to be voted upon. That is what was objected to by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to consent to the withdrawal of the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The result will be the same in either event.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to consent to it upon so plain a question.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, I submit that the Senator from Maine is making an issue with the Chair and is hammering the Chair.

* * * * * * *

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks unanimous consent to withdraw his decision upon the point of order.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HALE. I object.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

As I understand it, the decision of the Chair stands as the decision of the Senate, the appeal having been withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The only obstacle to that conclusion is that subsequently the state of the vote on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to lay the appeal on the table was announced and no quorum was disclosed, whereupon the Senate adjourned.

Mr. HALE. The condition under which the Senate adjourned comes up now, does it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. HALE. Whenever that comes up I have a proposition to make which I think will meet with approval. After the morning business is completed that will come up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The only question before the Senate now is whether the Journal shall be approved.

Mr. HOAR. I make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no objection be made, the Journal will stand approved as read.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the regular morning business it is necessary to have a brief executive session. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

JOHANNA LOEWINGER—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 739, entitled "An act granting a pension to Johanna Loewinger."

The husband of the beneficiary named in this bill enlisted June 28, 1861, and was discharged May 8, 1862, upon a surgeon's certificate of disability. He was pensioned for chronic diarrhea. He died July 17, 1876. A coroner's inquest was held, who found by their verdict that the deceased came to his death "from suicide by cutting his throat with a razor, caused by long-continued illness."

This inquest was held immediately after the soldier's death, and it appears that the case was fully investigated, with full opportunities to discover the truth. Upon the verdict found, in the absence of insanity caused by any disability, it can hardly be claimed that his death was caused by his military service. The attempts afterwards to impeach this verdict and introduce another cause of death do not seem to be successful.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 5, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the message and bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STEWART. Let the bill be passed now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the message and bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR. Why not take the question on the passage of the bill? Is there objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the bill with the message of the President of the United States be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR. As it is suggested that there may be a question as to a quorum being present, I do not wish to press the matter; but these veto messages, as far as I have ever examined any of them, are universally unjust. They nevertheless result in the defeat of the bill. It occurred to me that it might be well enough to discuss some of these cases in open session and take action upon them.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire simply to say that I do not believe one solitary statement of the Senator from New Hampshire in regard to these vetoes being unjust. If the Senator desires to discuss them the legitimate way is for the Committee on Pensions to report them back to the Senate and propose to pass them, notwithstanding the veto. Then we shall have a fair chance to discuss them upon their merits.

Mr. BLAIR. It is a matter of indifference to me whether the Senator believes my opinion to be my opinion or not. I express it as my opinion. In regard to the propriety of referring the bill and message to the committee, I know that is the regular way, but I suggested another way which might result in some discussion and the knowledge on the part of the country as to whether these cases thus vetoed are properly vetoed upon their merits or otherwise. It is of no use to send them to a committee; they do not come back here; and they might as well be disposed of when they are first received.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] that the bill with the accompanying message be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and memorials are now in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a petition of the Board of Trade of South Omaha, Nebr., praying for the passage of the Pacific Railroad funding measure, known as the Outhwaite bill; which was referred to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of J. H. Husted, M. D., and 25 other citizens of the Sixteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the Platt prohibition bill for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of citizens of Lane and Benton Counties, Oregon, praying for the passage of amendments to the act of May 6, 1886, entitled "An act to protect homestead settlers within railroad limits, and for other purposes;" which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the State Grange of Oregon, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. MORGAN presented the petition of G. W. Stidham, delegate of the Creek Indians, praying that 500 Creeks be paid for the expenses of their emigration to the Indian country west of the Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2764) granting an increase of pension to James McGowan, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred an amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. MITCHELL to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill for the purpose of reimbursing B. F. Bonham, United States consul-general at Calcutta, India, for transit pay for twenty days' unavoidable detention at San Francisco by sickness on his way from his home in Oregon to his post of duty, etc., reported it favorably, and moved that it lie on the table; which was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3008) for the relief of P. A. Leatherbury, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1077) for the relief of Mrs. Clara Morris, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 610) for the relief of William Lavery, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1257) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah H. Wood, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

PENSIONS TO PRISONERS OF WAR.

Mr. QUAY. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1770) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors confined in Confederate prisons, to report it favorably. Majority and minority reports will be prepared and filed in this case. I make the formal report now in order that the bill may take its place on the Calendar. As it involves the expenditure of a large amount of money, I move that it be printed in the RECORD. It is a brief bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and the majority and minority reports when received will be printed together. The bill will be printed at length in the RECORD, if there be no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the names of such officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines who, while in the service of the United States and while in the line of their duty, were taken prisoners of war, and as such confined in so-called Confederate prisons, between the 1st of May, 1861, and the 1st of May, 1865, as follows: All who were prisoners of war two months and less than six months, one-half pension; those who were prisoners of war six months and less than twelve months, a three-fourths pension; and all such as were prisoners of war twelve months and more than twelve months, a total pension; and, furthermore, such surviving prisoners of war shall receive $2 per day for each and every day's confinement in said Confederate prisons: Provided, That such pension shall in each case begin from the date of the passage of this act, and shall be paid at the same time and in the same manner as other pensions are now paid:

Provided further, That this act shall not entitle any person to draw more than one pension, but that such survivors of the so-called Confederate military prisons as are entitled to and are receiving a pension at the time of the passage of this act shall be entitled to the increase of their pension which this act may grant them.

MINISTER TO PARAGUAY AND URUGUAY.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report a resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations recommend that the annual salary of the minister resident and consul-general to Paraguay and Uruguay be increased to the sum of $7,500.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3106) for the relief of W. H. Davis; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3107) for the relief of John Kalbfleisch; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 3859) for the relief of the Sone and Fleming Manufacturing Company (Limited), of the city of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAULKNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER and Mr. TELLER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ARTHUR KILL BRIDGE.

Mr. McPHERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and it is hereby, directed to place before the Senate the recent report and recommendation of the Secretary of War, together with a report of the Board of Engineers, in respect to change of plan of the bridge now under construction over Arthur Kill or Kill von Kull between Staten Island and the State of New Jersey, and that the reports and accompanying papers be printed for the use of the Senate.

CREEK INDIAN CLAIM.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior send to the Senate a copy of a report made by R. L. Owen, United States Indian agent for the Union agency, relating to the claims of the Indians of the Creek tribe for reimbursement of expenses of travel and for a year's support when said Indians were emigrated to the Indian country west of the Mississippi River, and any other facts shown on the records or files of the Indian Bureau bearing upon the justice of such claim.

JULIET G. HOWE.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to present the report of a conference committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business that order is closed, and the Chair will receive the conference report.

Mr. PADDOCK. I present this report simply to perfect the record. It will not be necessary to take action upon it as the House has receded from its amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 300) granting a pension to Juliet G. Howe, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment to said bill.

ALGERNON S. PADDOCK,
C. K. DAVIS,
D. TURPIE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. LOGAN CHIPMAN,
CARLOS FRENCH,
E. N. MORRILL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report requires no action on the part of the Senate.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889.

Mr. HALE. In order to relieve the Senate from the condition that it found itself in last night, without a quorum, I ask that all proceedings touching the appeal, the decision of the Chair, and the vote which was begun upon the same be vacated by unanimous consent. That will bring the Senate back to the consideration of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to lay the appeal made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] upon the table, the decision of the Chair, and the interposition of the point of order by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] may be withdrawn. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Foreign Relations at its meeting this morning considered the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida and reported it to the Senate, which makes it in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, therefore, recurs upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida to amend the bill. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 40, it is proposed to strike out the words "Paraguay and Urugnay," and to insert after the words "San Domingo," in the forty-fourth line, the words:

For minister resident and consul-general at Uruguay and Paraguay, $7,500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] desires to obtain the floor for a few minutes to call up a bill. I have no objection myself to that being done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that the pending order be informally laid aside. The Chair hears no objection.

RED RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. COKE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2930) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct a bridge across Red River at or near Hooks' Ferry, Red River County, Texas.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 25, to strike out "Congress" and insert "Secretary of War;" and in line 29 to strike out "Congress" and insert "Secretary of War;" so as to read:

And the said structure shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and the said structure shall be changed, at the cost and expense of the owners thereof, from time to time, as the Secretary of War may direct, so as to preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to the revocation or modification by law whenever the public good shall, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, so require, without any expense or charge to the United States; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, suit may be brought in the circuit courts of the United States of Texas or Arkansas, in whose jurisdiction any portion of said bridge may be located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 13, to strike out "Congress" and insert "Secretary of War;" so as to read:

And if, upon such reasonable notice to said railway company to make such change or improvements, the said company fails to do so, the Secretary of War shall have the authority to make the same, and all the rights conferred by this act shall be forfeited; and the Secretary of War shall have power to do any and all things necessary to secure the free navigation of the river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year 1889.

Mr. HALE. Because of the amendment just adopted, I move, in line 41, on page 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "40" and insert "35;" so as to read:

At $5,000 each, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. On page 9, after line 200, I move to insert in consulates of class 3 "Austria-Hungary, consul at Prague;" so as to read:

CLASS III.

At $3,000 per annum.
Austria-Hungary:
Consul at Prague.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Some time since I submitted an amendment which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and reported back with a recommendation that it be inserted in this bill. I now offer it. I ask to have a very brief letter from the Secretary of State read in support of it and then I will appeal to the Senator in charge to permit the amendment to go on this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 19, after line 438, it is proposed to insert:

For the purpose of reimbursing B. F. Bonham, United States consul-general at Calcutta, India, for transit pay for twenty days' unavoidable detention at San Francisco by sickness, on his way from his home at Salem, Oregon, to his post of duty at Calcutta, in December, 1885, $271.74.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter of the Secretary of State will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 5, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 31st ultimo, inclosing a proposed amendment to the bill making appropriations for deficiencies in the diplomatic and consular service, etc., "for the purpose of reimbursing B. F. Bonham, United States consul general at Calcutta, India, for transit pay for twenty days' unavoidable detention at San Francisco by sickness, on his way from his home at Salem, Oregon, to his post of duty at Calcutta, in December, 1885, $271.74," I have the honor to inform you that on the 21st day of February, 1887, this Department addressed a communication to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, the terms of which it now repeats, to the effect that Mr. Bonham's statement concerning the delay in reaching his post was satisfactory, and that inasmuch as his claim had been disallowed by the Comptroller, it unhesitatingly recommended the proposed Congressional action for his relief.

Returning herewith, as requested, the inclosure in your letter, I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate.

[Inclosure.]

Bill for relief of B. F. Bonham.

Mr. HALE. That is a just and proper claim against the Government. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that none of those matters ever go on the consular and diplomatic bill, which simply provides for the running force of the Department, but it is proper for the deficiency bill which will be at no distant day reported. It may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations as an amendment to that bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Upon that statement I will consent to that arrangement. I sent it at the last Congress to the Committee on Appropriations, but it was not put in the deficiency bill, and that is why I offered it now. However, under the statement made by the Senator in charge of the bill, I will consent to withdraw the amendment for the present, and will offer it as an amendment to the deficiency bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon withdraws the proposed amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to make a verbal amendment in order to adapt the bill to the amendment adopted a few moments ago. In line 247 I move to strike out the letter "s" in the word "consuls," so that it will be in the singular number instead of the plural, and in the same line to strike out the words "and Prague," after "Trieste;" so as to read:

Consul at Trieste.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. In line 188, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "three hundred and seventy-nine" and insert "three hundred and eighty;" so as to read:

For salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, and commercial agents, $380,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 1295, being the bill (H. R. 8724) to prevent the employment of alien labor upon public buildings or other public works and in the various Departments of the Government, etc.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask that the Senate take up in advance of the Calendar a bill reported from the Naval Committee in reference to the cadets at Annapolis. I do that because the graduation will take place in a few days, and if the bill is to pass at all it ought to pass now.

Mr. SPOONER. I am obliged to leave the Chamber, and I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to yield to me to present a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report is in order and will be received.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7264) for the erection of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN C. SPOONER,
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
SAMUEL DIBBLE,
WM. H. SOWDEN,
HERMAN LEHLBACH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report requires no action on the part of the Senate.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BAY CITY, MICH.

Mr. SPOONER also submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7263) for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Mich., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN C. SPOONER,
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
SAMUEL DIBBLE,
C. NEWTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report requires no action by the Senate.

NAVAL ACADEMY CADETS.

Mr. CAMERON. I now ask for the consideration of Order of Business 1386, being Senate bill 2925.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the regular order be laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2925) in relation to cadets at the Naval Academy. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear that read.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to inquire what effect the motion will have on the consideration of the pending bill. I do not desire to yield it preference for any length of time certainly.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not think this will take more than fifteen minutes. The reading of the report will be called for I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLAIR. If there is to be debate upon it I must object. I have no desire to obstruct the convenience of the Senator from Pennsylvania. If it can be passed without debate and without obstructing the bill which is regularly in order, I shall not object; but there is no reason why one bill should be preferred to the other, and the bill now pending has been partly discussed, and it would be certainly very convenient to me to have it disposed of now.

Mr. CAMERON. I stated the reason why I asked for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HALE. It is a very important bill and I think it had better go over. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine objects.

JOHN A. DOYLE.

Mr. QUAY. Before proceeding with the Calendar I ask permission of the Senate to move to recommit a bill. It is the bill (S. 2596) to increase the pension of John A. Doyle. It was reported adversely by the Committee on Pensions, and indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed may be reconsidered and the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. It is so ordered, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

SUSAN E. ALGER.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate passed the bill (S. 1162) for the relief of Susan E. Alger, and that a message be sent to the House of Representatives requesting the return of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

ALIEN LABOR ON PUBLIC WORKS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8724) to prevent the employment of alien labor upon public buildings or other public works and in the various Departments of the Government, etc., the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. TELLER to come in immediately after the enacting clause:

That all public buildings or public works for which an appropriation shall have been made by Congress shall be constructed wholly of materials made and prepared within the limits of the United States, and no bid shall be received or accepted for the construction of any such public building or public works from any person who is not a resident and citizen of the United States or who has not declared his intention to become a citizen, and——

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not insist upon pressing the amendment at this time. It seems to be legitimate matter for a new bill, and requires consideration independently of the provisions of this bill. This bill comes from the House of Representatives, and as far as it goes I have heard no fault found with it. An amendment will be considered hostile to the purpose of the bill itself and may endanger its passage. I hope the Senator will not insist upon his amendment being voted on at this time.

Mr. TELLER. This is the only bill that has come from the House of Representatives for the protection of American laborers from the competition of alien labor on this continent on public buildings. It is equally important that they should be protected against alien labor on the other continent. If, on any principle, the bill as it came from the House can be defended, the amendment must be sustained. It has nothing to do with anything except public buildings and public works. That is all the bill deals with as it comes from the House, and it is all the amendment deals with. If the one presents a question of policy for the protection of American labor, so does the other. If it is worth while to protect American labor against foreign labor at all, it is more important that we should protect the American laborer against the foreign labor performed abroad than it is against foreign labor performed on this continent.

In order that the Senate may know what the amendment is, I ask that it may be read in connection with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read Mr. TELLER'S amendment and the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not imagine that there can be any serious objection to the amendment if the bill is to pass, and I hope the Senate will make itself aware of the nature of the bill under consideration.

That in all advertisements for the erection or construction or completion of public buildings or other public works, and in all contracts made under or in pursuance of such advertisements, there shall be inserted—

In the advertisement and in the contract—

a condition that no person who is not a bona fide resident within the limits of the United States, and who is not a citizen, or who has not declared his intention to become a citizen thereof, in the manner provided by law, shall be employed in the erection, construction, or completion of any public building or other public work.

If gentlemen desire to pass that I will submit, but I think it belongs to a narrow and illiberal class of legislation unworthy of the great American Republic. This bill is intended to command that the vigilant eye of the great Republic shall be directed to every public work to the end that out of the tens of thousands employed, and the thousands and you may say millions of money expended, there shall be no dollar given and no day's work offered to any man from any foreign country who happens to be on this shore, just landed, and desiring honestly to earn his bread to keep out of the poor-house—not a day's work and not a dollar to be given to such a man!

He may be at a very considerable distance from some court before which to declare his intention to become a citizen. It is no matter; he shall not be permitted to earn his daily bread.

That is not all. The second section proceeds to say that if any contractor should happen to employ any such man—"willfully" to be sure it says—he is to be fined $10 or $50 or $100. No, that does not satisfy those who have drawn this bill. The employment of a clerk by the contractor to perform sculpture or the apprentice of a sculptor or a mason's apprentice who has not declared his intention—the employment of any such one out of twenty thousand employed and $10,000,000 expended—shall constitute a complete defense in bar against any claim or action against the United States for the recovery of any sum or sums under said contract; and it shall be the duty of the officer letting any such contract, upon being advised that any contractor has knowingly violated the terms of such contract, to declare the same forfeited.

The officer in charge of one of these works, of his own sovereign will, at five minutes' notice, shall declare a $500,000 contract forfeited. Is that proceeding with any due regard, any reasonable regard, to the proportions of offenses? Is it possible to imagine the Czar of Russia (who is often held up as about the wickedest man) adopting any more severe measures against an American who might find himself stranded on Russian soil and desire to earn something before becoming or without becoming a Russian citizen?

There is no gradation in the character of the employés. As I said, it may be a man who carries a hod for a week or rolls a wheelbarrow for a week to get something for his family, or it may be a sculptor; it may be a man of art and taste; it may be a man like Brumidi, who decorated this Capitol. No matter; if he has not declared his intention to become a citizen his employment is to be guarded against, and if by any carelessness or oversight the employer does take him, knowing him to be such, then the whole contract is by that one single act forfeited.

I submit that the bill is out of proportion; I submit that it is a cruel and unusual measure. If the Senator from New Hampshire desires to punish that class of heinous crimes, let him do it by some fine, or, if he chooses, imprisonment. I should think some pecuniary penalty of a moderate kind would answer the purpose if the crime is one worth taking notice of.

We are all foreigners. We have none of us been in this country a very great while anyhow; and I used to think that measures of this kind were narrow and bitter, and I took up arms against the Know-Nothing party when I was a young politician. I thought it a party unworthy to represent any American. I would keep out any foreign element, I would keep out any large body of men whose sympathies were not in accord with our Constitution, or who did not come here to be citizens, who came to stay a little while and then go away, who were to any extent a dangerous element. We have a right to protect ourselves against the fraud, if we may call it so, on our liberal laws by sending paupers and criminals here. We are trying to do that by our legislation.

I think this is an unnecessary, an extreme, an unusual step. I am afraid the Committee on Education and Labor did not give it the consideration they should have done; otherwise I am sure they would at least have moderated the penalty and would have put in, if necessary, some of the old-fashioned words about necessity, charity, and mercy in employing men.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Connecticut finds a little fault with the bill because it provides that a contractor willfully violating the law shall forfeit his contract; and the Senator supposes that for some lesser penalty he should be permitted to violate the law, and proposes to have the committee consider the matter and decide after careful examination, first, what shall be paid by a contractor for the privilege of violating the law of the country. Why should that be? After prosecution for a criminal offense it is a very usual, a universal condition, that attaches to any willful violation of law in the performance of a contract with the Government that the contract shall be forfeited. That is all there is about that. And whether it is good theory or is not good theory is of course for the Senate to consider. I am not able to see precisely how it is that the Senator from Connecticut can expect the country in enacting laws to make some definite provision or fix some definite sum or fix some definite consideration for which it will permit this contractor to violate the provision of an existing law with reference to which his contract was specially made. We have put the provision in this bill, which is a general law, if it becomes a law at all, and every contractor will have notice of it beforehand; and if he refers to it, he will make his contract with a view to it, knowing that if he willfully employs a foreigner or person being a foreigner who has not declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, or who does not actually become one, his contract shall be forfeited. Of course that being the law, he would make his contract with reference to it, and it seems to me that it is no hardship whatever if with a full knowledge beforehand he makes such contract and then deliberately violates it, the contract at least should be forfeited.

Of course it is not to be supposed that if he inadvertently or carelessly employed any one prohibited by law, though he should perhaps have exercised greater caution, he is to be deprived of his contract, and the bill does not provide that he shall be deprived then of his rights under his contract; but if he willfully does it, if he designedly violates this law, then the contract with the Government will be forfeited, and he will be obliged to appeal to Congress for such equitable adjustment of the amount that may be due him, if he had really conferred great benefit on the country by the substantial discharge of his contract, in order to get what might be equitably allowed him in the judgment of Congress.

Now, upon the main question which the Senator raises, whether this sort of legislation is desirable, that of course we shall decide according to our general views. We have indulged in some legislation touching foreigners from the Asiatic shores, and I think the general sentiment of this country is that they should not only be excluded from employment by the public, but also from employment by private individuals, and excluded from the country itself absolutely and totally. And yet I do not know any reason that can be in principle applied to the Mongolian, so far as employment after he is in the country is concerned, which we may not properly apply to any other foreigner whatsoever.

The principle of legislation by which we exclude foreigners from the occupation of our country, carried to its full extent, it seems to me, is certainly all-comprehensive of everything that is contained in the provisions of this bill. I do not say that persons of our own race should not be permitted to come here and become citizens of the United States; but that they should come here for temporary purposes with no design other than for a time to occupy our land and eat up our substance, and then go away and give to foreign countries the advantages which they may have derived from a temporary residence here, is strictly within the argument which has been made from time to time by our friends on the Pacific coast with regard to the Mongolian immigration. It is an argument which if it is good for anything is good for any foreigner, so far as that part of the subject is concerned.

Those men who come to this country with the design of becoming residents of the United States can have no difficulty whatever in making their application early and at once, and they will do so, and it is fair to presume that if they come here in good faith they will do so immediately upon their arrival. So there can be no hardship whatever in the principle of the bill so far as it is applicable to any foreigner who is here in good faith desiring to become a citizen of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has spoken five minutes.

Mr. BLAIR. Is this proceeding under the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under Rule VIII.

Mr. BLAIR. We did not so regard it when the bill was up before.

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senator's time be extended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from New Hampshire proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAIR. I will not abuse the privilege.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask a question about the third section of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I will speak of that later. To refer to it now is not exactly in the line of the remarks I was making, and I do not wish to be diverted.

The bill itself is not a new bill. We passed it in the last Congress through both Houses. I do not remember whether the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] opposed it at that time or not; but it recommended itself to the judgment of Congress. It reached the Executive very late, and failed to become a law, as I am informed, because the Executive did not have time for action; at any rate for some reason he did not act upon it.

I do not care to argue the provision. These men have plenty of avenues left open to them. The simple question is whether the public money derived by taxation on everybody and expended on public buildings and public works shall in being paid out for labor be paid only to those who are or who design to be citizens of the United States?

As I was saying when the bill was up before, this may be of comparatively little consequence so far as public buildings in the interior of the country are concerned. Foreigners going there may be supposed to intend to become citizens, though some may be imported in violation of law; but all along the Canadian border there has been complaint that in the erection of public buildings and the construction of public works foreigners across the line have been invited over to take work away from those who are really residents of the United States, to a very large degree, and that contractors encourage this sort of thing; and thus it comes to be the case that the public money is really made use of to encourage competition with American labor. It ought not to be so. I submit that it ought not to be so; and this bill is designed to reach primarily that practical evil.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] calls attention to the third section, which provides that—

> No person shall be employed in any Department of the Government of the United States (except persons employed in the consular or diplomatic service abroad) who is not a citizen and resident of the United States or who has not previously declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States.

I do not know the point of the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. MITCHELL. The declaration that it shall not be lawful. Suppose it is done; how is the prohibition to be enforced?

Mr. BLAIR. If done at all, it should be done by some authority of the Government itself, by the Secretary of the Interior, or by some subordinate, or by some other Cabinet officer, or by the President.

Mr. MITCHELL. But suppose the bill becomes a law with the third section, and suppose a subordinate officer retains a person who is not a citizen and who does not propose to become a citizen, in one of the bureaus in one of the Departments, what are you going to do about it? What is your remedy? What is your process?

Mr. BLAIR. Impeachment and removal from office. Sir, this will be a law of the United States, and if in violation of it the head of a Department wantonly employs a person who is prohibited by law from being employed, in such a case, if it could be shown to be a willful violation of the law it would be the business of the House of Representatives to impeach that officer and of the Senate to try him, and, if the proof was complete, convict him, for it would be a violation of his oath.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would it be a high crime and misdemeanor?

Mr. BLAIR. It would be a misdemeanor unquestionably, and a high crime, because it would be the commission of official perjury.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, will one objection postpone the consideration of this bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule provides that the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceeding.

Mr. VANCE. I think it is a very important bill, and I am afraid it is a departure from the principles of both the great parties which prevail in this country and will be attended with very serious consequences. Inasmuch as there is evidently a very thin Senate, and probably the calling of the roll would disclose the absence of a quorum, I object to the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over under Rule IX.

Mr. BLAIR. I give notice that I will call it up as soon as possible, for it is desirable that the bill should be disposed of.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 2017) to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 6899) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at the Woodley Lane Road, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 1483) for the erection of a public building at Monroe, La.; and

A bill (H. R. 7340) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Hickman, Ky.

The message further announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7052) relating to postal crimes, and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned, and agreed to the same.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2805) granting a pension to Martha F. Woodrum, widow of James Woodrum, deceased; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the bill and amendment, and had appointed Mr. THOMPSON, of California, Mr. CHIPMAN, and Mr. HUNTER managers at the conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1191) for the relief of the legal representatives of Mary H. Pike, deceased.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1507) providing for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 8307) for the relief of John T. Higgins; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SUPREME COURT BUILDING.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a bill at this time, as I must leave the Chamber directly.

Mr. HOAR. I have morning business to present, but I will wait until the Senator gets through.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the consideration of a bill among the first on the Calendar that will be reached in regular order, Order of Business 1303, Senate bill 2727.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed now to consider the bill (S. 2727) authorizing the purchase of a site for a building for the accommodation of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. MORRILL. I supposed it was generally understood when the site for the library was acquired that in due time an effort would be made to acquire the squares upon the opposite side of East Capitol street. It is obvious that if we delay this the greater will be the cost of the acquisition, and there is an immediate necessity for different accommodations for the Supreme Court. Its members, as well as Congress, fully understand that they must soon be crowded out of the Capitol. The Supreme Court is a co-ordinate branch of the Government, and therefore ought to have accommodations of some dignity and propriety.

This bill only proposes at the present time the acquisition of the three squares directly on the east of the present grounds and north of East Capitol street. It will be necessary for us to have them in order to complete the grounds around the Capitol, but we want them for this purpose, and some members of the other House think they want them for some other purposes. At all events, I think there is a general agreement in favor of the acquisition of these squares at the present time.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported this bill unanimously. It is in the same terms as were used for the acquisition of the ground where the Library is now being constructed. I ask, therefore, for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2727) authorizing the purchase of a site for a building for the accommodation of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. STEWART. I move to amend in section 3, line 5, by striking out the words "nor the prices at which the respective owners shall have heretofore consented in writing to sell the same to the United States."

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Nevada will not press that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be first reported from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 5, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to strike out:

> Nor the prices at which the respective owners shall have heretofore consented in writing to sell the same to the United States.

So as to read:

> SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to purchase said land, or any part thereof, as soon as practicable, at such prices as may be fixed by agreement between the said Secretary and the respective owners, not exceeding the actual cash value thereof, and payment therefor shall be made to the respective owners, on the requisitions of the Secretary of the Interior, upon the release and conveyance of said lands to the United States by good and sufficient deeds executed in due form of law.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator from Nevada will not insist upon the amendment. There are some parties who have offered their property at reasonable prices on the valuation as estimated some years ago. Other parties are asking more, and theirs will probably not be taken without condemnation proceedings. That is precisely the condition. Therefore I hope the Senator from Nevada will not insist on the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. It occurred to me that these prices having been offered several years ago, values may have advanced, and while persons would be willing to negotiate on fair terms, they would not take the prices fixed years ago. They may have made improvements since. It seems to me we might trust the Secretary of the Interior to make the contracts where people are willing to sell at the present cash value, which is easily ascertained. This provision might force the whole proceeding to be at law and require condemnation in all cases. It really takes away the ordinary power we have given to the Secretary of the Interior to contract with persons at the present cash value. It seems to me that that is an unusual limitation; and as I understand the offer was made several years ago, probably it would not be a fair price now. It seems to me we should be more likely to get through with the business speedily by leaving this to the Secretary of the Interior. I think it would be safe to allow him to contract with these owners according to the present cash value.

Mr. MORRILL. I am very sure that any proposition of the kind giving unlimited power to purchase will meet with objection in the other House, and therefore I hope the Senator will not insist on his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN HALE'S ESTATE.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Claims to report a resolution which I ask to have put on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the petition of Apollos Hale, administrator of the estate of Benjamin Hale, and Senate bill 877, referring the claim of Apollos Hale, administrator, to the Court of Claims, be referred to the Court of Claims to find and report the facts relating thereto and the facts concerning any laches of petitioner or his intestate in presenting said claim or prosecuting the same, or applying for relief against the final action of the Court of Claims therein.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, the Chair will put the question on its adoption. The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NAVAL ACADEMY CADETS.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1386, Senate bill 2925. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] withdraws his objection, as I understand, to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 2925) in relation to cadets at the Naval Academy be now considered. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 8, after the word "than," to strike out "nineteen" and insert "twenty;" in line 9, after the word "follows," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the section read:

That the act of August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service be, and is hereby, so amended that the number of appointments from graduates of the Naval Academy to positions in the lower grades of the line and Engineer Corps of the Navy and the Marine Corps shall not be less than twenty in each year, to be apportioned as follows: Fifteen to the line, four to the Engineer Corps, and one to the Marine Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 6, after the words "ages of," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "sixteen," and before the word "years" to strike out "twenty-two" and insert "twenty-one;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That cadets shall be appointed one year in advance of the time of their admission to the Academy, except in cases where by reason of death or other cause a vacancy occurs which can not be provided for by such appointment in advance. Appointees shall be admitted to the Academy only between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 7, after the word "years," to strike out:

No cadet who is reported as deficient in either conduct or studies, and recommended to be discharged from the Academy, shall, unless upon recommendation of the academic board, be returned or reappointed or appointed to any place in the Navy before his class shall have left the Academy and received their commissions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEWART & CO.

Mr. MITCHELL. There was a resolution passed over on the Calendar the other day in my absence referring a matter to the Court of Claims. I ask that it be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was it passed over without prejudice?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir; it is Order of Business 789.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution reported by Mr. MITCHELL from the Committee on Claims March 21, 1888, to refer the bill (S. 800) for the relief of Stewart & Co. to the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 800) entitled "A bill for the relief of Stewart & Co.," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of the fourteenth section of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of said section of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

The resolution was agreed to.

GEORGETOWN BARGE, DOCK, AND ELEVATOR COMPANY.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask leave to call up Order of Business 529, being the bill (S. 2252) to incorporate the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railway Company.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Virginia to a verbal mistake in the printing in line 41 of section 1. The word "on" should be "or;" so as to read:

Duly authorized route or routes, etc.

The amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Let it be made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Calendar, Mr. President.

POSTAL CRIMES.

Mr. SAWYER. I present a conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7052) relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

ELI SAULSBURY,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
E. K. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
S. R. PETERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report requires no action on the part of the Senate.

COURTS AT DULUTH, MINN.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar will be proceeded with and the next bill in order will be stated.

The bill (H. R. 5932) providing for the holding of the terms of the United States courts in the district of Minnesota was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That hereafter, and until otherwise provided by law, there shall be held annually, on the second Monday in September, a term of the district court of the United States for the district of Minnesota at the city of Duluth, in said district, said term to be in addition to the terms now required by law to be held at the cities of St. Paul and Winona, in said district; and a grand and petit jury may be summoned to serve at said term of court hereby established.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

An act providing for the holding a term of the United States district court at Duluth, in the district of Minnesota.

SUBURBAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The bill (S. 905) to incorporate the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 5, before the name "Page," to strike out "Frank" and insert "Horace;" in lines 7 and 8, to strike out the words "and created into;" in line 21, after the word "along," to strike out "or" and insert "a line;" in line 22, after the word "by," to strike out "the most eligible" and insert "such;" in line 23, after the word "company," to strike out "under" and insert "with;" in line 26, after the word "by," to strike out "the most eligible" and insert "such;" in line 27, after the word "thence," to insert "bordering the proposed park;" in line 28, after the word "to," to strike out "P street bridge" and insert "Woodley road;" and after the word "Potomac," in line 31, to insert:

Thence eastward with and in the vicinity of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal to the head of M street extended in Georgetown. Also beginning with the intersection of said roadway on Maryland avenue, at Twelfth street northeast, and running thence northward on Twelfth street east to Boundary street, and thence northward across Boundary street, passing in the vicinity of the National Fair Grounds; thence northward—bearing westward to a point northeast from the Soldiers' Home—where it will intersect the east and west line of said road: Provided, That all of the routes herein mentioned shall be subject of the approval of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

So as to make the section read:

That L. G. Hine, Joseph G. Waters, Charles E. Creecy, W. W. Curtis, John T. Mitchell, J. W. Denver, Green B. Raum, Horace Page, Gilbert Moyers, Thomas J. Myers, Michael Shaughnessy, John W. Childress, D. W. Glassie, and their associates, successors, and assigns, are hereby created a body corporate by the name, style, and title of "The District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company," and by that name shall have perpetual succession, and shall be able to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended in all courts of law and equity within the United States, and may make and have a common seal. And said corporation is hereby authorized to lay out, locate, construct, furnish, maintain, and enjoy a continuous railroad with single or double track wholly or in part in the District of Columbia, with the necessary switches, turnouts, depots, stations, and other appurtenances, beginning at or near the intersection of Maryland avenue and First street east, in the city of Washington; thence along said avenue northeast to Boundary street; thence along a line near to the Columbia or old Bladensburg road to or near the District line; thence by such route as may be determined by the company (with the approval of the commissioners of the District of Columbia), and passing east and north of the Soldiers' Home to or in the vicinity of Brightwood; thence by such route to Rock Creek; and thence bordering the proposed park along the valley of Rock Creek to Woodley road, with a branch railroad from some point along Rock Creek to a point near Tennallytown; thence to the Potomac River, in the vicinity of Little Falls of the Potomac; thence eastward with and in the vicinity of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal to the head of M street extended in Georgetown. Also beginning with the intersection of said roadway on Maryland avenue, at Twelfth street northeast, and running thence northward on Twelfth street east to Boundary street, and thence northward across Boundary street, passing in the vicinity of the National Fair Grounds; thence northward—bearing westward to a point northeast from the Soldiers' Home—where it will intersect the east and west line of said road: Provided, That all of the routes herein mentioned shall be subject of the approval of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 2, after the word "limits," to insert the words "and along Rock Creek valley;" in line 3, after the word "power," to insert "which may be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia;" beginning in line 12, after the word "railroad," to strike out the words "said company shall always maintain along its line of route a suitable fence on each side thereof at such places as may be designated by the proper authorities of the District of Columbia. The company shall maintain a suitable protection along their line outside the city limits," and insert "at such place or places as may be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and from such place make connection with other street railways;" so as to make the section road:

SEC. 2. Said company may run and operate their trains and cars within the city limits and along Rock Creek valley by means of any motive power which may be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia other than that created by steam in locomotive engines; and they are hereby empowered to construct and make all necessary bridges and culverts, and also necessary trenches and excavations for cables, and to place and work therein motive apparatus, tubing, cables, and machinery, and erect the necessary buildings and operating engines and other machinery and other apparatus required in the construction and operation of their railroad at such place or places as may be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and from such place make connection with other street railways.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, to strike out in lines 1, 2, and 3, the following words, "the capital stock of said company shall not exceed $1,000,000 and be not less than $250,000," and insert "said company is hereby authorized to issue its capital stock to an amount not to exceed the actual cost, more than 10 per cent. of the right of way, construction and equipment, motive power, and such land and buildings as may be necessary to said road;" in line 23, to strike out the words "and the highest bidder shall be taken to be the person who offers" and insert the words "and the person who offers;" in line 26, after the word "due," to insert "shall be taken to be the highest bidder, and such shall be conducted;" and in line 30, after the word "said," to strike out "body" and insert "corporation;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. Said company is hereby authorized to issue its capital stock to an amount not to exceed the actual cost more than 10 per cent. of the right of way, construction and equipment, motive power, and such land and buildings as may be necessary to said road, in shares of $50 each. Said company shall require the subscribers to the capital stock to pay in cash to the treasurer appointed by the corporators the amounts severally subscribed by them as follows, namely: Ten per cent. at the time of subscribing and 5 per cent. each thirty days thereafter until 50 per cent. thereof shall have been paid, the balance of such subscription to be paid at such times and such amounts as the board of directors may require; and no subscription shall be deemed valid unless the 10 per cent. thereof shall be paid at the time of subscribing, as hereinbefore provided; and if any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay any installment as aforesaid, or as required by resolution of the board of directors after reasonable notice of the same, the said board of directors may sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, so many shares of his stock as shall pay said installments, and the person who offers to purchase the least number of shares for the assessment due shall be taken to be the highest bidder, and such shall be conducted under such general regulations as may be adopted in the by-laws of said company; but no stock shall be sold for less than the total assessments due and payable, or said corporation may sue and collect the same from any delinquent subscriber in any court of competent jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 14, after the word "national," to strike out "banking house" and insert "bank;" so as to read:

Provided further, That nothing shall be received in payment of the 10 per cent. at the time of subscribing except lawful money or certified checks from any established national bank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 22, before the word "newspapers," to strike out "public" and insert "daily;" so as to read:

And when the books of subscription to the capital stock of said company shall be closed, the corporators named in the first section, their associates, successors, or assigns, or a majority of them, and in case any of them refuse or neglect to act, then a majority of the remainder shall, within twenty days thereafter, call the first meeting of the stockholders of said company, to meet within ten days thereafter, for the choice of directors, of which public notice shall be given for five days in two daily newspapers published in the city of Washington, and by written personal notice to be mailed to the address of each stockholder by the clerk of the corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 31, after the words "forfeiture of," to strike out "all chartered rights and privileges granted to said company. That the iron or steel used in the construction of said road shall be of American manufacture," and insert "this charter;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That it shall be unlawful for the company hereby incorporated to consolidate with any other railroad company now in existence or which may be hereafter chartered, and any such consolidation shall of itself operate as a forfeiture of this charter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 5, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That within the city limits six tickets shall be sold for 25 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. That the said road and its branches shall be deemed real estate, and they, together with other real property and personal property of said body corporate, shall be liable to taxation as other real estate and personal property in the city or District of Columbia as aforesaid, except as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [7] 6, line 10, after the word "tracks," to insert "and rails;" in line 11, after the word "order," to insert "with such kind and character of pavement as shall be designated by the commissioners of the District of Columbia;" in line 15, before "District of Columbia," to insert "authorities of the;" and in line 17, after the word "avenues," to strike out "and the average thereof, as may be under their authority and control;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That within the city limits the said railway shall be laid in the center of the avenues and streets, as near as may be, in the most approved manner adapted for street railways, with rails of the most approved pattern, laid upon an even surface with the pavement of the street, and the space between the two tracks shall not be more than 4 feet, and the gauge to correspond with that of other city railroads, and the said corporation shall be bound to keep said tracks, and for the space of 2 feet beyond the outer rail thereof, and also the space between the tracks and rails, at all times well paved and in good order, with such kind and character of pavement as shall be designated by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, without expense to the United States or the District of Columbia: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent the authorities of the District of Columbia, at any time, at their option, from altering the grade or otherwise improving such streets and avenues; and in such event it shall be the duty of said company to change their said railroad so as to conform to such grade as may have been established.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [8] 7, line 2, before the word "convenient," to insert the word "such;" in line 3, after the word "points," to insert "as the commissioners of the District may approve;" and in line 10, after the word "said," to strike out "grantees" and insert "company;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That it shall be lawful for said company and its successors or assigns to erect and maintain, at such convenient and suitable points as the commissioners of the District may approve, along the line of the streets or avenues under which wires or cables are placed, steam-engines and boilers of sufficient power, and to connect the same with said wires or cables, and it shall not be lawful to propel their cars over said railroad, or any part thereof, at a rate of speed exceeding 8 miles per hour within the city limits; and for each violation of this provision said company, their successors or assigns, as the case may be, shall be subject to a penalty of $50, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [9] 8, line 8, after the word "require," to insert "subject to the approval of the commissioners of the District;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That the said company shall place first-class cars on said railways, with all the modern improvements for the safety, convenience, and comfort of passengers, and shall run cars thereon as often as the public convenience may require. And said company shall also provide such passenger rooms, ticket offices, workshops, stables, depots, and necessary buildings at such points as the business of the railroad and the convenience of the public may require, subject to the approval of the commissioners of the District; and they are hereby authorized to lay such rails through transverse or other streets as may be necessary for the exclusive purpose of connecting said workshops, stables, and depots with the main tracks. The said company is hereby authorized to purchase or lease such lands or buildings as may be necessary for said passenger rooms, ticket offices, workshops, stables, and depots.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [11] 10, line 2, before the words "board of," to strike out "the" and insert "a;" in the same line, after the words "board of," to insert "nine;" in line 3, after the word "directors" to strike out "nine in number;" in line 5, before the word "duly," to insert "until their successors are;" in line 6, after the word "qualified," to strike out "to take their places as directors;" in line 15, before the word "vacancy," to strike out "the" and insert "such;" and after "vacancy" to strike out "thus occasioned thereby;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. That the government and direction of the affairs of the company shall be vested in a board of nine directors, who shall be members of the company, and who shall hold their office for one year, and until their successors are duly elected and qualified; and the said directors (a majority of whom shall be a quorum) shall elect one of their number to be president of the board, who shall also be president of the company, and they shall also choose a vice-president, a secretary, and a treasurer, who shall each give bonds with surety to said company in such sum as the said directors may require for the faithful discharge of his trust. In the case of a vacancy in the board of directors by the death, resignation, or otherwise, of any director, such vacancy shall be filled by the remaining directors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [12] 11, line 9, after the word "condemnation," to strike out "and also to issue bonds, secured by mortgage of its franchises and property, real and personal, but the amount of such bonds shall not exceed $20,000 per mile;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. That the directors shall have power to make and prescribe such by-laws, rules, and regulations as they shall deem needful and proper touching the disposition and management of the stock, property, estate, and effects of the company, not contrary to the charter or to the laws of the United States and the ordinances of the District of Columbia, and the said corporation shall have the right to obtain the right of way for their said railway either by purchase, lease, gift, or condemnation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [13] 12, line 6, after the word "prescribe," to strike out "and the said directors shall annually make a report in writing of their doings to the corporation;" so as to read:

SEC. 12. That the principal office of the company shall be in Washington City, and there shall be an annual meeting of the stockholders for choice of directors, to be holden there at such time and place, under such conditions, and upon such notice as the said company in their by-laws may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section [13] 12, to insert:

That said railway company shall, on or before the 15th of January of each year, make a report to Congress of the names of all the stockholders therein and the amount of stock held by each, together with a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures, from whatever source and on whatever account, for the preceding year ending December the 31st, which report shall be verified by affidavit of the president and secretary of said company; and if said report is not made at the time specified, or within ten days thereafter, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to cause to be instituted judicial proceedings to forfeit this charter; and said company shall pay to the District of Columbia, in lieu of taxes upon personal property, including cars and motive power, each year, 4 per cent. of its gross earnings, which amount shall be payable to the collector of taxes at the times and in the manner that other taxes are now due and payable, and subject to the same penalties on arrears; and the franchise and property of said company, both real and personal, to a sufficient amount, may be seized and sold in satisfaction thereof, as now provided by law for the sale of other property for taxes; and said per cent. of its gross earnings shall be in lieu of all other assessments of personal taxes upon its property, used solely and exclusively in the operation and management of said railway. Its real estate shall be taxed as other real estate in the District: Provided, That its tracks and right of way shall not be taxed as real estate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [14] 13, after the word "dollars" at the end of line 10, to strike out "to said company;" in line 12, before the word "liable," to strike out "remain," and insert "be;" after "liable" to insert "to said company;" and in line 16, after the word "committed," to strike out "unless the offender is beyond the jurisdiction of the courts of the District of Columbia;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. That said company shall have at all times the free and uninterrupted use of the roadway, and if any person or persons shall willfully, mischievously, and unnecessarily obstruct or impede the passage of the cars of said railway with a vehicle or vehicles, or otherwise, or in any manner molest or interfere with passengers or operatives while in transit, or destroy or injure the cars of said railway, or depots, stations, or other property belonging to said company, the person or persons so offending shall forfeit and pay for each such offense not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars, to be recovered as other fines and penalties in said District, and shall be liable to said company, in addition to said penalty, for any loss or damage occasioned by his or her or their act as aforesaid; but no suit shall be brought unless commenced within sixty days after such offense shall have been committed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [15] 14, in line 6, after the word "lawful," to strike out "general;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 14. That no person shall be prohibited the right to travel on any part of said road, or ejected from the cars by the company's employés, for any other cause than that of being drunk, disorderly, unclean, or contagiously diseased, or refusing to pay the legal fare exacted, or to comply with the lawful regulations of the company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [16] 15, line 7, after the word "Columbia," to insert "and use said tracks in common with such company," and in line 10, after the word "District," to insert "and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the companies or fixed by the supreme court of the District;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 15. That the corporation hereby created shall not have power to construct any part of their road, or its extensions or branches, in or upon any of the squares or other reserved lands in the city of Washington, nor in or upon the lands of the Soldiers' Home, or of any cemetery in the District; but they may cross, connect with, and coincide with the lines of any other railway company within the District of Columbia, and use said tracks in common with such company, under such regulations as may be made by the proper authority of the District, and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the companies or fixed by the supreme court of the District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 17, as follows:

SEC. 17. That this act may at any time be altered, amended, or repealed by the Congress of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 16. That if the work of construction is not commenced in one year and completed within three years from the passage of this act, such failure shall operate as a forfeiture of this charter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 17. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. When the bill comes into the Senate I shall reserve one amendment for a separate vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Connecticut indicate the amendment upon which he desires a separate vote?

Mr. PLATT. It is the amendment on page 6, from lines 31 to 34.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be concurred in, if there be no objection, except the one indicated by the Senator from Connecticut, upon which the question is, Shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in by the Senate? The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the words "forfeiture of," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the words:

All chartered rights and privileges granted to said company. That the iron or steel used in the construction of said road shall be of American manufacture.

And inserted:

This charter.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have the amendment agreed to inserting the words "this charter" in place of the first words stricken out, namely, "all chartered rights and privileges granted to said company." Then that will leave the remainder of the proposed amendment to be acted upon, which is to strike out the words:

That the iron or steel used in the construction of said road shall be of American manufacture.

It is upon this question that I wish to take the sense of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out the words "all chartered rights and privileges granted to said company" and insert "this charter;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That it shall be unlawful for the company hereby incorporated to consolidate with any other railroad company now in existence or which may be hereafter chartered, and any such consolidation shall of itself operate as a forfeiture of this charter.

Mr. PLATT. Now, the question being divided, I move that the Senate non-concur in so much of the amendment as proposes to strike out the words:

That the iron or steel used in the construction of said road shall be of American manufacture.

It is not fifteen minutes since we passed a bill relating to a dock and barge company in the District of Columbia in which that clause was contained. It seems to me that the Senate ought to be consistent, and inasmuch as the parties to this proposed charter have been perfectly willing that that clause should remain in the charter, I think it ought not to be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the first part of the amendment to be agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. Yes, inserting the words "this charter" in place of the words "all chartered rights and privileges granted to said company."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first part of the amendment will be concurred in if there be no objection. The question is on concurring in the second part of the amendment.

The second part of the amendment was non-concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to go to the Calendar of pension cases.

Mr. PLATT. We are almost to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of private pension bills upon the Calendar reported favorably and to which there is no objection. Is there objection to that course.

Mr. VANCE. Why can we not take all the bills as they come? We are almost upon the pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. VANCE. No, I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The first private pension bill on the Calendar will be announced.

Mr. TELLER. That is simply for to-day, I suppose.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, for to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For the remainder of this day, or until the private pension cases are disposed of. Order of Business 1315, Senate bill 849, is the first pension bill to be considered.

MORGAN GORDON.

The bill (S. 849) granting a pension to Morgan Gordon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Morgan Gordon, late of Company G, One hundred and twenty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JANE REILLY.

The bill (S. 2677) granting a pension to Jane Reilly was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, after the word "Cavalry," at the end of line 6, to strike out "to date from December 25, 1861, and otherwise;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Jane Reilly, widow of Alexander M. Reilly, late sergeant of Company M, First New York (Lincoln's) Volunteer Cavalry, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINERVA TILLEY.

Mr. COCKRELL. What was done with Order of Business 1312, Senate bill 2921?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was inadvertently omitted in the call of the Calendar. It will now be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2921) granting a pension to Minerva Tilley.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to withdraw the admission made by him in response to the Senator from Missouri. This bill has never been reported favorably from the committee, but it was introduced by the Senator from North Carolinia [Mr. VANCE], read twice, and placed on the Calendar without any action by a committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then how did the report come to be made?

Mr. VANCE. The report was made in connection with the petition. The petition was adversely reported and the report placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill does not come within the agreement of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Calendar does not show that it was an adverse report. The Calendar states that that bill was introduced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] and "read twice. Report No. 1263 on petition of Minerva Tilley." The Calendar ought to show that it was an adverse report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill does not come within the agreement, and will be passed over.

HARRISON WAGNER.

The bill (S. 332) granting a pension to Harrison Wagner was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, after the word "Maryland," in line 7, to insert "and pay him at the rate of $25 per month;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harrison Wagner, late a nurse in general hospital No. 1, Frederick, Md., and pay him at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOPHIA SCHIMMELFENNIG.

The bill (S. 2879) increasing the pension of Sophia Schimmelfennig, widow of Alexander Schimmelfennig, late brigadier-general and major-general by brevet, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Sophia Schimmelfennig, widow of Alexander Schimmelfennig, deceased, late brigadier-general and major-general by brevet, to $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES R. PORTER.

The bill (H. R. 6552) to increase the pension of James R. Porter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James R. Porter, late colonel of the One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAROLINE R. HAZELTINE.

The bill (S. 2385) granting a pension to Caroline R. Hazeltine was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Caroline R. Hazeltine, mother of Edward C. Hazeltine, late ensign in the United States Navy from New Hampshire at the rate of $15 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN ST. CYR.

The bill (H. R. 2535) granting a pension to Ellen St. Cyr was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ellen St. Cyr, widow of Abner St. Cyr, late a first lieutenant in Company G, Fourth Regiment Minnesota Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL A. TATE.

The bill (S. 2750) to increase the pension of Samuel A. Tate was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Samuel A. Tate, late of Company I, Fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at the rate of $24 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARITY J. TOWNS AND MINOR CHILDREN.

The bill (S. 2782) granting a petition to Charity J. Towns and minor children was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Charity J. Towns, the widow of Arthur D. Towns, late private of Company B, Seventy-second Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, and the names of Jessie Mabel Towns, born January 20, 1873; Edwin M. Towns, born November 15, 1875; Nellie B. Towns, born January 20, 1881, and Pearl L. Towns, born January 27, 1886, sons and daughters of Arthur D. Towns, late a private of Company B, Seventy-second Regiment of New York Volunteers.

Mr. PLATT. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. DAVIS May 15, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2782) granting a pension to Charity J. Towns and minor children, have examined the same, and report:

The claim covered by the bill is for the widow of a pensioned soldier and four minor children. The husband drew a pension for disabilities created by gunshot wounds in the right shoulder and thigh received at the battle of Williamsburgh, Va., in May, 1862. He died August 18, 1887, of Bright's disease of the kidneys, leaving his wife and children destitute. The widow's application for pension was disallowed on the ground of pathological disconnection between the wound for which the soldier was pensioned and the disease with which he died. This is probably technically true; but it is also probably true that the draining effects of gunshot wounds in the shoulder and thigh, severe enough to entitle the soldier to a pension, and suffered during a term of twenty-five years, were also severe enough to render his system less able to resist the fatal kidney disease, and to hasten his death, if it did not cause it; and in such a case, on a question between sustaining a pathological theory, on the one hand, and a pensioner's destitute widow and orphans, on the other, the committee, in the spirit of the pension laws, vote for the latter.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I do not understand this bill. It proposes to put on the pension-rolls, according to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of the widow and five children. It does not state the amount which is to be paid to any of them. I should like to inquire what the operation of the act would be, whether it would be to pension the widow and each of the children at $8 or $12 a month, as the case may be, or whether it would be one pension to be divided between them. From a hasty examination of the bill I am uncertain about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. The same point suggested itself to me, and not seeing in the Chamber the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] who reported the bill, I will suggest an amendment which will settle the question.

Mr. PLATT. I think perhaps it had better be passed over for the present.

Mr. COCKRELL. I presume the intention of the bill is to give them the rate of pension they would have received if the Pension Office had decided that they were entitled to a pension under existing law.

Mr. PLATT. That would give each of the children $2 a month until arrival at the age of sixteen?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, and the widow $12. I suggest that the amendment be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill:

And to pay them respectively such pension as they would have received if the pension had been allowed by the Pension Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY M. STRONG.

The bill (S. 2162) for the relief of Mary M. Strong was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary M. Strong, widow of Thomas J. Strong, late lieutenant-colonel of the Sixteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEMUEL S. SKINNER.

The bill (S. 2666) granting a pension to L. B. Skinner was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 6, before the name "Skinner," to strike out the initials "L. B." and insert "Lemuel S.;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lemuel S. Skinner, late of Company I, One hundred and twenty-third New York Volunteer Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Lemuel S. Skinner."

ISSUE OF COIN CERTIFICATES.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to offer a resolution at this time to lie on the table and be printed. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nevada will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That subdivision 3 of Rule XVI be suspended so that the amendment hereinafter set out shall be in order to House bill 9377, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending with June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, the amendment to be inserted in the bill immediately following the several appropriations therein contained for the United States mints and assay offices.

The following is the proposed amendment:

That any person may deposit at any mint or assay office of the United States either gold or silver bullion, or both, in quantities of not less than 5 ounces of gold or 80 ounces of silver and demand and receive coin certificates therefor at the rate of $1 in certificates for 25.8 grains troy weight of standard gold nine-tenths fine; and at the rate of $1 in certificates for 412½ grains troy weight of standard silver nine-tenths fine.

The coin certificates issued under the provisions of this section shall be of such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That they shall not be of less denomination than $1 or more than $1,000, and that one-half of the amount issued shall be in denominations less than $50, and shall be redeemable in gold or silver coin at the option of the United States. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be carried from time to time such portions of the bullion deposited under the provisions of this section as may be necessary to enable him to furnish coin for the redemption of such certificates.

The coin certificates issued under the provisions of this section shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in contracts heretofore made, and when such certificates shall be received for public dues they shall be reissued. And a sufficient sum to carry out the foregoing provisions of this section is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. And the provision in section 1 of the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase at the market price thereof not less than $2,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month, nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month of such bullion, is hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. STEWART. I give notice that I shall call the resolution up tomorrow for consideration.

Mr. HOAR. For the purpose of addressing the Senate?

Mr. STEWART. No, for its passage.

WASHINGTON T. OTEY.

The bill (S. 1307) to increase the pension of Washington T. Otey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Washington T. Otey, late a lieutenant of Company F, of the Sixty-second Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $12 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. LOUISA WARD.

The bill (S. 2639) granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa Ward was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Louisa Ward, mother of Edgar A. Ward, who served as a private in Company H, Twelfth Iowa Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EPHRAIM REYNOLDS.

The bill (H. R. 809) granting a pension to Ephraim Reynolds was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ephraim Reynolds, of Monroe, Me., late a private in Company F, Twenty-sixth Regiment of Maine Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SMITH V. CAMPBELL.

The bill (H. R. 5429) to place the name of Smith V. Campbell on the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Smith V. Campbell, late assistant surgeon of Twenty-third Iowa Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALPHEUS DYER.

The bill (H. R. 4891) granting a pension to Alpheus Dyer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Alpheus Dyer, of Belfast, Me., late a private in the One hundredth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LINNAEUS W. RISLEY.

The bill (H. R. 1074) granting a pension to Linnaeus W. Risley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Linnaeus W. Risley, late of Company D, Eighteenth Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALLY B. WILSON.

The bill (H. R. 6583) granting a pension to Sally B. Wilson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sally B. Wilson, wife of Franklin Wilson, late a private in Company B, Seventy-second Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW J. FOUST.

The bill (S. 2683) granting a pension to Andrew J. Foust was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Andrew J. Foust, Company B, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. H. WELSH.

The bill (S. 2842) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Welsh was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William H. H. Welsh, late of Company F, Thirty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $18 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES M. FROST.

The bill (S. 2759) granting a pension to James M. Frost was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James M. Frost, late a member of Company A, First Regiment of Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EZRA E. ANNIS.

The bill (S. 2746) granting a pension to Ezra E. Annis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ezra E. Annis, dependent father of John B. Annis, late hospital steward Seventy-second Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARRIET WELCH.

The bill (S. 2899) granting a pension to Harriet Welch was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Harriet Welch, widow of Cyraneous Welch, late a private in Company C, Thirty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WARREN OHAVER.

The bill (H. R. 2156) granting a pension to Warren Ohaver was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Warren Ohaver, late of Company A, Fifty-third Regiment Indiana Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES W. POAG.

The bill (H. R. 9170) granting a pension to James W. Poag was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James W. Poag, late private Company M, Seventeenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL M'CLURE.

The bill (H. R. 354) granting a pension to Samuel McClure was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Samuel McClure, late a private in Company B, Twelfth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, at $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. THERESE GUELICH.

The bill (H. R. 152) granting a pension to Mrs. Therese Guelich was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Therese Guelich, a volunteer nurse in the late war, at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. WILBURN.

The bill (S. 1750) granting a pension to George W. Wilburn was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of George W. Wilburn, late of Company K, Second District of Columbia Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE SIMMONDS.

The bill (S. 876) granting a pension to Catharine Simmonds was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Catharine Simmonds, widow of William E. Simmonds, late first sergeant of Battery L, First Regiment United States Artillery, enlisted under the name of William E. Scott.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DANIEL K. SMITH.

The bill (S. 2101) granting a pension to Daniel K. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Daniel K. Smith, dependent father of J. B. Smith, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment New Hampshire Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADRIAN C. DODGE.

The bill (S. 885) to increase the pension of Adrian C. Dodge was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Adrian C. Dodge, late a private in Company I, Nineteenth Maine Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension which he now receives.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY O'NEIL.

The bill (H. R. 3745) granting a pension to Mary O'Neil was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary O'Neil, sister of Thomas C. O'Neil, late captain of Company E, Twenty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, and to pay to her legally constituted guardian $18 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LYDIA A. HICKS.

The bill (H. R. 8260) granting a pension to Lydia A. Hicks was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Lydia A. Hicks, the widow of John Hicks, late a private in Company I, Sixty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILTON JUDD.

The bill (H. R. 3712) increasing the pension of Milton Judd was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that Milton Judd, a pensioner of the United States, a soldier in the late civil war, in Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, shall be allowed a pension at the rate of $45 per month, in lieu of $36 per month, as now allowed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHADRACH BROWN.

The bill (S. 2733) granting an increase of pension to Shadrach Brown was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Shadrach Brown, late a private in Company F, Seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the $37.50 per month heretofore allowed him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM C. SHIMONECK.

The bill (S. 2947) granting increase of pension to William C. Shimoneck was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William C. Shimoneck, late principal musician in the Third United States Infantry, at the rate of $24 per month, in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN T. BAKER.

The bill (S. 2825) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin T. Baker was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 6, after the word "late," to strike out "a seaman" and insert "a quartermaster on the United States steamer Spuyten Duyvil;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin T. Baker, late a quartermaster on the United States steamer Spuyten Duyvil in the United States Navy, and pay him at the rate of $72 per month, in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN GLENNING.

The bill (H. R. 7688) granting a pension to John Glenning was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of John Glenning, late private Company B, Tenth Regiment Tennessee Volunteers, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

The bill (H. R. 7115) granting a pension to William Scott was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of William Scott, of Kokomo, Howard County, Indiana, a special surgeon at Hospital No. 14, Nashville, Tenn., and then surgeon of the Eighty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, upon the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM COMPTON.

The bill (H. R. 6574) for the relief of William Compton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay William Compton, a soldier in the Regular Army in the Thirty-ninth Tennessee Infantry and other regiments, from 1814 to 1819, $25 a month, instead of $8 per month as at present allowed and paid him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JESSIE M. BARTHAUER.

The bill (H. R. 8722) granting a pension to Jessie M. Barthauer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-rolls the name of Jessie M. Barthauer, widow of William C. Barthauer, late private of Company A, One hundredth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY L. POTTER.

The bill (H. R. 7857) to increase the pension of Henry L. Potter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Henry L. Potter, late colonel of the Seventy-first Regiment of New York State Volunteers, to $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LYDIA BURRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 8400) for the relief of Lydia Burridge was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lydia Burridge, mother of Edwin Burridge, late of Company E, Third New York Light Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN SEXTON.

The bill (H. R. 8174) granting a pension to Ellen Sexton, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ellen Sexton, widow of Daniel Sexton, late a private in Company K, Tenth Regiment of Minnesota Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMILY M'CLURE.

The bill (H. R. 8884) granting a pension to Emily McClure was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Emily McClure, mother of Thomas J. McClure, late first lieutenant Company L, Seventh Regiment New York Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY MINOR HOXEY.

The bill (H. R. 600) increasing the pension of Mary Minor Hoxey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Minor Hoxey, widow of Bvt. Maj. Benjamin W. Hoxey, late of the United States Volunteers, at $30 per month, in lieu of the pension which she is now drawing as such widow.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENOCH WEATHERS.

The bill (H. R. 6973) for the relief of Enoch Weathers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Enoch Weathers, late captain of a company of Indiana militia during the Morgan raid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABIGAIL SULLIVAN.

The bill (H. R. 6577) granting a pension to Abigail Sullivan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Abigail Sullivan, widow of the late William Sullivan, late of Company G, Twelfth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANN V. FERGUSON.

The bill (H. R. 7944) granting a pension to Ann V. Ferguson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Ann V. Ferguson, of Indianapolis, Ind., a nurse in the United States Army during the late war of the rebellion at Hospital No. 1, Murfreesborough, Tenn., and other places, upon the pension-rolls, at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JANE BROWN DUNN.

The bill (H. R. 8159) granting a pension to Jane Brown Dunn was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jane Brown Dunn, daughter of William H. H. Dunn, late a private in Company A, Sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and Company L, Fourth Indiana Cavalry, at $18 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAPHAEL FOWLER.

The bill (H. R. 8217) granting a pension to Raphael Fowler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the name of Raphael Fowler be placed upon the pension-roll of the United States as the dependent father of Raphael S. Fowler, late a private in the Fifty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEAH ROARK.

The bill (H. R. 6531) to pension Leah Roark was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Leah Roark, widow of Yancy Roark, late a member of T. J. Babcock's company of Missouri independent militia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEVI B. SMITH.

The bill (S. 1719) granting a pension to Levi B. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Levi B. Smith, late sergeant of Company B, of the One hundred and twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M. DEAN.

The bill (S. 2862) granting a pension to William M. Dean was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William M. Dean, late a member of Company G, Fifteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, at $72 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH E. BOULTER.

The bill (S. 2898) granting a pension to Sarah E. Boulter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah E. Boulter, widow of Joseph B. Boulter, late a sergeant of Company D, Fifth New Hampshire Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELNATHAN MEADE.

The bill (S. 1427) granting an increase of pension to Elnathan Meade was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elnathan Meade, late of Company C, Forty-fourth Regiment of New York Volunteers, at the rate of $45 a a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CASPAR BLANKE.

The bill (S. 2833) granting a pension to Caspar Blanke, of Portland, Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Caspar Blanke, of Portland, Oregon, late of Company C, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry, at the rate of $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MITCHELL subsequently said: I wish to inquire if the bill (S. 2833) granting a pension to Caspar Blanke, of Portland, Oregon, was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For what purpose; to recommit?

Mr. MITCHELL. For the purpose of offering an amendment. I was trying to watch it, but it slipped through before I noticed it. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to it, if the motion to reconsider prevails.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 2833) granting a pension to Caspar Blanke, of Portland, Oregon, was passed, and also the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading. The Chair hears no objection, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to say to the chairman of the committee that in introducing this bill for this person I made a mistake in providing that the pension should be $50 per month where it ought really to be $72. This person is to all intents totally blind. I know him personally. He was brought to my room last summer; he was led; and while he can distinguish light slightly with one eye, he is as far as practical purposes are concerned totally blind. I move to strike out "$50" and insert "$72."

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not understand what the motion of the Senator from Oregon was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading——

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For the purpose of enabling him to move to increase the pension from $50 to $72 per month.

Mr. MITCHELL. On the ground, I will state to the Senator from Missouri, that this person is known to me personally, and he is totally blind. I made a mistake in introducing the bill at $50. The committee simply reported the bill back as introduced, giving him $50 when he ought to have $72.

Mr. DAVIS. I think it is perfectly proper to make the amendment. The mistake into which the Senator from Oregon fell was on account of consulting the previous statute, by which only $50 a month was allowed——

Mr. MITCHELL. That is it.

Mr. DAVIS. Overlooking the fact that by a later statute on the subject the pension for total blindness is $72 a month. The amendment is a perfectly proper one, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 8, before the word "dollars," strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-two;" so as to read: "at the rate of $72 per month."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BATE. What does the report say about the case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. TURPIE May 29, 1888:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2833) granting a pension to Caspar Blanke, have examined the same, and report:

This claimant was a private in Company E, Fourteenth Regiment United States regular Infantry. He served a term of enlistment from 1876 to 1881, and again re-enlisted in 1881, serving until 1885, when he was discharged for disability under a surgeon's certificate. The disabilities were described as rheumatism, partial paralysis, and loss of sight, or double sight.

There is no doubt of the serious nature of these disabilities; that they were incurred by the claimant during the time of his service. They are called technically "locomotor ataxia" and ophthalmia. The patient at present and for a long time has been wholly blind in one eye, almost blind in the other—discerning light but not objects, and being unable to walk, except with assistance; wholly unable to perform manual labor, and most of the time requiring the attendance of a third person.

The claim has been rejected by the Pension Bureau upon the ground that these disabilities are the results of vice in the claimant, not incurred or incurrable in line of duty.

The medical referee of the Pension Office, after an examination of the papers (not the patient), says:

"I could not, therefore, say that syphilis could with safety be eliminated."

We think this rejection a mild one—a conclusion not very well or firmly assured. On the other side, it is shown that four physicians—Wells, Wheeler, Taylor, and Easton—of Portland, Oregon, where the claimant resides, testify upon a personal examination of the claimant that "he is not a syphilitic subject; that locomotor ataxia and blindness are the diseases to which he is subject, and that his disability therefrom is total."

These are shown to be persons of credit and character, specialists in eye diseases, eminent in their practice and profession, totally disinterested.

Your committee think the disabilities mentioned were incurred by the claimant in the line of duty by reason of his military service, and therefore recommend passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUT. JAMES G. W. HARDY.

The bill (H. R. 8281) for the relief of Lieut. James G. W. Hardy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-rolls the name of James G. W. Hardy, late second lieutenant Company K, Eleventh Regiment of Indiana Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS TODD.

The bill (S. 1002) granting a pension to Thomas Todd was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Todd, late a member of Company K, Third Regiment Ohio Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADAM DENNIS.

The bill (S. 2880) granting an increase of pension to Adam Dennis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension allowed Adam Dennis, late private Company G, Seventy-ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, to $45 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH B. SMITH.

The bill (S. 2910) to increase the pension now paid to Elizabeth B. Smith, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Kilby Smith, United States Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension now paid to Elizabeth B. Smith, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Kilby Smith, late United States Volunteers, to $75 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUT. JAMES R. DURHAM.

The bill (S. 2675) granting an increase of pension to Lieut. James R. Durham, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $30 per month, the name of James R. Durham, late first lieutenant Company E, Twelfth Regiment West Virginia Infantry Volunteers, in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY CALVERT TRUXTUN.

The bill (S. 2275) granting a pension to Mary Calvert Truxtun was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Calvert Truxtun, widow of the late Commodore William T. Truxtun, of the United States Navy, at $50 per month in lieu of her present pension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDMUND RYAN.

The bill (H. R. 7097) granting a pension to Edmund Ryan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Edmund Ryan, dependent father of Michael Ryan, late of Company K, Twelfth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH E. M'NAMARA.

The bill (S. 2593) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah McNamara was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 6, after the name "Sarah," to insert the initial "E;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Sarah E. McNamara, widow of the late John McNamara, D. D., late a chaplain of the Wisconsin Volunteers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Sarah E. McNamara."

MARY ISABELLA R. CLEMENTS.

The bill (S. 2549) for the relief of Belle R. Clements was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 4, after the words "pension of," to strike out "Belle" and insert "Mary Isabella;" and in line 8, after the word "act," to insert "in lieu of the pension she is now receiving;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Mary Isabella R. Clements, widow of the late Bennett A. Clements, surgeon United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month from and after the passage of this act in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Mary Isabella R. Clements."

GEORGE W. PADGETT.

The bill (S. 2874) granting a pension to George W. Padgett was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of George W. Padgett, late a private in Company B, Fifteenth Regiment of Illinois Cavalry, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABBIE R. BROWN.

The bill (H. R. 7642) granting a pension to Abbie R. Brown was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Abbie R. Brown, widow of John A. Brown, late a sergeant in the Fifth Battery Maine Light Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB BEHR.

The bill (H. R. 4864) to place the name of Jacob Behr on the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jacob Behr, late of Company B, Second United States Reserve Corps, Missouri.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINNIE A. BAILEY.

The bill (S. 2344) granting a pension to Minnie A. Bailey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Minnie A. Bailey, daughter of Oscar M. Bailey, who was a private in Company F, Fifteenth Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers, at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BETSEY A. MOWER.

The bill (S. 2838) granting an increase of pension to Betsey A. Mower was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Betsey A. Mower, widow of the late Joseph A. Mower, a major-general of the United States Volunteers in the late war for the Union, to the rate of $75 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHERINE TATE.

The bill (S. 2483) granting a pension to Catherine Tate was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Catherine Tate, widow of John Tate, late of Company C, First Vermont Heavy Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ABBA E. JACKSON.

The bill (H. R. 8629) granting a pension to Mrs. Abba E. Jackson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Abba E. Jackson, late a nurse in the Army, at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY O. HALL.

The bill (S. 889) granting a pension to Mary O. Hall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Mary O. Hall, widow of Augustus J. Hall, late of Company D, Twelfth Maine Volunteers, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA LINTON.

The bill (H. R. 7721) granting a pension to Martha Linton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Martha Linton, widow of Benjamin Linton, late private in Company I, Eighteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEMAN RANKINS.

The bill (H. R. 7974) granting a pension to Heman Rankins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Heman Rankins, late a private in Company B, First Maine Coast Guards Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK LEWIS.

The bill (H. R. 7574) granting a pension to Frank Lewis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Frank Lewis, non compos son of Franklin Lewis, Company B, First Battalion Infantry Maine Volunteers, and to pay to his legal guardian a pension of $18 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISS CARRIE A. LUEY.

The bill (H. R. 6770) granting a pension to Miss Carrie A. Luey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Miss Carrie A. Luey, dependent sister of William B. Luey, late of Company H, Thirteenth New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE TIERNEY.

The bill (H. R. 5812) granting a pension to Catharine Tierney was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Catharine Tierney, widow of Mark Tierney, late of Company I, First Regiment of United States Infantry, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. FLORA C. ANDREWS.

The bill (H. R. 8771) to place the name of Mrs. Flora C. Andrews on the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Flora C. Andrews, widow of Samuel D. Andrews, deceased, late a private in Company C, Forty-fourth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY T. BRIDGES.

The bill (H. R. 6545) to increase the pension of Henry T. Bridges was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to grant an increase of pension to Henry T. Bridges, late a soldier in the war with Mexico, and to pay him $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT E. MAGOFFIN.

The bill (H. R. 8496) to increase the pension of Albert E. Magoffin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Albert E. Magoffin, late a member of the Eighty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, so as to include injury to leg, as set forth in original application.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REBECCA E. SHOEMAKER.

The bill (H. R. 6990) to place the name of Rebecca E. Shoemaker on the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Rebecca E. Shoemaker, widow of David R. P. Shoemaker, deceased, late a private of Company E, Eleventh Ohio Volunteers, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HANNAH H. GRANT.

The bill (H. R. 7466) granting a pension to Hannah H. Grant was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Hannah H. Grant, mother of John Jordan, late of Company D, Second Regiment United States Sharpshooters.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY M. SHATTUCK.

The bill (S. 3076) granting a pension to Mary M. Shattuck was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary M. Shattuck, widow of Merritt Shattuck, late a private in Company H, Thirty-fifth Regiment Iowa Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TILLMAN FAUX.

The bill (H. R. 5378) for the relief of Tillman Faux was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Tillman Faux, late a private in Company E, Two hundred and tenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEWIS FICHTHORN.

The bill (H. R. 2174) granting a pension to Lewis Fichthorn was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lewis Fichthorn, late a private in Company K, One hundred and thirty-first Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, and in Company F, Twenty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARRIE V. MILLER.

The bill (S. 3021) granting a pension to Carrie V. Miller was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Carrie V. Miller, a volunteer nurse in the late war, at $25 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. S. MAY.

The bill (S. 2945) granting a pension to J. S. May was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of J. S. May, private First Minnesota Infantry, at $25 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES M'DONALD.

The bill (S. 2938) granting a pension to James McDonald was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James McDonald, assistant wagon-master, Quartermaster's Department, whose invalid-pension claim, numbered 163621, was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground that applicant was a civilian employé when he received the injury which caused the amputation of his leg, and to pay him a pension at the same rate as if he had been a regularly enlisted soldier.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ELIZABETH STEWART.

The bill (S. 2995) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Stewart was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Elizabeth Stewart, mother of Charles Stewart, late a private in Company G, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserves.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HIRAM M. GOSS.

The bill (H. R. 6840) for the relief of Hiram M. Goss was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Hiram M. Goss, late of Company A, Ninety-fourth Regiment New York Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM BURK.

The bill (H. R. 6245) for the relief of William Burk was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William Burk, late lieutenant of Company D, Thirtieth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Mounted Infantry, at $17 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OREGON STATE CLAIM.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to discharge the Committee on Claims from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2440) for the relief of the State of Oregon, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the bill been referred to the Committee on Claims?

Mr. DOLPH. It has been referred to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Claims will be discharged, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

HENRY C. RICHARDSON.

The bill (H. R. 3706) granting a pension to Henry C. Richardson, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Henry C. Richardson, late of Company K, Fifth Kentucky Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAURA J. IVES.

The bill (S. 2979) granting a pension to Laura J. Ives was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Laura J. Ives, step-mother of George E. Ives, late second lieutenant of Company E, First Regiment of Iowa Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET S. HEINTZELMAN.

The bill (S. 2726) granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Heintzelman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the penson-roll the name of Margaret S. Heintzelman, widow of Maj. Gen. Samuel P. Heintzelman, deceased, at $100 per month, in lieu of $50 per month provided for in the act of Congress approved December 23, 1880.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHEBE M'LAUGHLIN.

The bill (S. 2711) restoring Phebe McLaughlin to the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 7, after the word "Volunteers," to strike out "to take effect from date of suspension of claimant from the roll;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Phebe McLaughlin, widow of James McLaughlin, late soldier in Company D, Seventy-eighth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID A. HALL.

The bill (S. 2861) granting a pension to David A. Hall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of David A. Hall, late a member of Company C, Fifty-fifth Massachusetts Regiment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JESSE DICKEY.

The bill (H. R. 9682) increasing the pension of Jesse Dickey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Jesse Dickey, late of Captain Johnson's company Illinois Mounted Volunteers, Black Hawk war, to $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENELOPE MORTON.

The bill (H. R. 3690) granting a pension to Penelope Morton, widow of Lieutenant Morton, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Penelope Morton, widow of James Morton, late lieutenant Company F, Twenty-second Regiment Kentucky Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. DARLING.

The bill (H. R. 780) granting a pension to James H. Darling was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James H. Darling, late of Company G, Seventy-third Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PLEMAN COOK.

The bill (H. R. 5177) granting a pension to Pleman Cook was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Pleman Cook, late of Company D, Sixth Ohio Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES J. ESTY.

The bill (S. 2665) granting a pension to Charles J. Esty was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles J. Esty, late a private in Company H, Tenth New Hampshire Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDNA M. HILDRETH.

The bill (H. R. 4103) granting a pension to Edna M. Hildreth was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to put on the pension-roll, at $18 per month, the name of Edna M. Hildreth, of Jay, Vt., the helpless invalid daughter of William H. Hildreth, a private in Company D, Fourth Regiment Vermont Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS M'GUIRE.

The bill (H. R. 7829) granting a pension to Thomas McGuire was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas McGuire, late of Company I, Ninth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MERCY KNIGHT.

The bill (H. R. 2413) granting a pension to Mrs. Mercy Knight was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Mercy Knight, dependent step-mother of Lendall Wright, deceased, late a private in Company D, Fifteenth Regiment of Maine Infantry Volunteers at $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOSES L. CHASE.

The bill (H. R. 7471) granting a pension to Moses L. Chase was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-rolls the name of Moses L. Chase, a private in Company M, First Vermont Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEWIS DAVIS.

The bill (H. R. 5903) for the relief of Lewis Davis, a soldier of the war of 1812, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 7, after the word "month," to insert "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to place the name of Lewis Davis, of Laclede County, Missouri, a soldier of the war of 1812, on the pension-roll, at the rate of $20 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FANNIE A. KIMBALL.

The bill (S. 2890) granting a pension to Fannie A. Kimball was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Fannie A. Kimball, the blind daughter of Charles A. Kimball, deceased, late sergeant Battery D, First Rhode Island Light Artillery, at $18 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NETTIE ELLICOTT.

The bill (H. R. 8798) granting a pension to Nettie Ellicott was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Nettie Ellicott, widow of George G. Ellicott, late a private in the Seventeenth New York Independent Battery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLUMBUS BOSTEDER.

The bill (H. R. 432) granting a pension to Columbus Bosteder was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-rolls the name of Columbus Bosteder, late a private in Company B, First Regiment of Missouri Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY F. HARKINS.

The bill (H. R. 3016) granting a pension to Mary F. Harkins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary F. Harkins, widow of John Harkins, late of Company E, First Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID GIBBONS.

The bill (H. R. 5756) granting a pension to David Gibbons was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of David Gibbons, late a private in Company D, One hundred and forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES GLAMANN.

The bill (H. R. 2215) granting a pension to Charles Glamann was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Charles Glamann, late of Company C, Ninety-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe that is all of the pension bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one that was passed over, Order of Business 1497, Senate bill 2724.

H. H. HELPER.

The bill (S. 2724) for the relief of H. H. Helper was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, before the word "dollars," in line 12, to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll the name of Hardie Hogan Helper, who was a private soldier in Company H, and sergeant-major of the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, also a private soldier of Company H, Second New York Cavalry, and who in the interim of that service was totally and permanently disabled whilst under military orders of General A. E. Burnside, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and that he be granted a pension of $24 per month instead of $10 per month, his present rating.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2305) to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments. The bill was passed over without objection recently. It was reported by the select committee of which I was chairman, and of which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] were members. I think it is a very important measure, and there can be no objection to the provisions of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri whether within the scope of this bill it would be in the power of any of the Departments to destroy the original papers that pertain to the conduct of the war?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. The bill does not give any power to the Departments until both the Senate and House have passed upon the matter. Under the existing law the Postmaster-General has authority to destroy all such papers as are described in the bill, which have no permanent value or historical interest. He is the sole judge of it, and every year he sells whatever papers he chooses of his Department. The Sixth Auditor has the same authority. The other Departments have no authority at all to dispose of waste papers, and they must accumulate there, valueless as they may be.

In order that there may be no criticism, the bill provides that whenever the Secretaries, not only the Secretary of the Treasury, but the Postmaster-General and all the heads of Departments, have an accumulation of papers which are deemed not valuable for reference or for historical purposes, they shall report that fact to Congress and give an inventory of the papers. Then the Senate is to appoint two Senators and the House of Representatives two members, and they examine the papers and the inventory, and if they say that the papers are no longer of any value for reference or for historical purposes, the Department is then authorized to dispose of them. So there can never be any disposition of any kind of a document by the Departments until first the character of the document has been passed upon by the Senate and the House through their committees. In the event that the administration is one way, the Senate or House the other way, no advantage can be taken. All branches of the Government will participate in the disposition of the documents.

Mr. MANDERSON. Is the committee, composed of two members of the Senate and two members of the other House, required to report to their respective bodies?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes; the bill authorizes them to report to their respective bodies that fact.

Mr. MANDERSON. The bill seems very well guarded.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, so that there is no possibility of evasion. I drew the bill after considering all the laws and all the possibilities of conflict between the Senate and the House and the Departments, so that I do not think anybody can object to it on any ground.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1483.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 2662) for the erection of a public building at Salt Lake City, Utah, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, which were, in line 14, after the word "of," to strike out the words "five hundred" and insert "one hundred and twenty-five," and in line 23, after the word "of," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "one hundred and twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise provide a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the Legislature, the governor and secretary, United States courts, land offices, internal-revenue offices, post-office, United States marshal's office, surveyor-general's office, and for other Government uses at Salt Lake City, Utah Territory. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $125,000; nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and no purchase of site nor plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $125,000 for site and building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAKOTA TERRITORIAL JUDGES.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1497, Order of Business 1353.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. 1497) to provide for two additional associate justices of the supreme court of Dakota, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 11, line 6, to strike out the word "subdivision" and to insert "county;" so as to read:

SEC. 11. That the associate justice of the eighth district shall hold two terms of the United States district court in each year, in the city of Grand Forks, and grand and petit juries shall be summoned thereto as now provided by law, and said associate justice shall hold at least two terms of court in each county of his district in each year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 12, line 3, after the word "proceeding," to strike out the words "upon which he has acted judicially" and to insert the words "decided by him;" so as to read:

SEC. 12. That no justice of the supreme court of said Territory shall sit as a member of said court in any matter, action, or proceeding decided by him in his district or wherein he has any interest directly or indirectly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert the following as an additional section:

SEC. 14. That all offenses committed before the passage of this act shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect (except as to the number of judges) as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8307) for the relief of John T. Higgins was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT OMAHA.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate take up Order of Business 1308, House bill 6440, granting permission to build a bridge at Omaha.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6440) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of Omaha, Nebr.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to add as a new section:

SEC. 7. This act shall be null and void unless the construction of the bridge hereby authorized shall be commenced within one year and be completed within three years from the date of the approval of this act.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words "two" and "four," in the third line of section 7, where the words "one" and "three" occur respectively; so as to read:

Shall be commenced within two years and be completed within four years from the date of the approval of this act.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1450, Senate bill 1138.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1138) to reimburse the depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for losses incurred by the failure of said company.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 11, after the word "representatives," to insert "as hereinafter provided;" so as to read:

That the commissioner of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and his successors in office, be, and the same are hereby, authorized and directed to pay, or cause to be paid, under such regulations as said commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, to all depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company whose accounts have been properly verified and balanced under existing laws, or to their legal representatives, as hereinafter provided, a sum of money equal to the verified balances due said depositors from said company at the time of its failure, less the amount of dividends which have been or may be declared from the assets of said company.

Mr. VANCE. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 7, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 6, 1888.

FOR PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

First Lieut. Francis Michler, regimental adjutant, to be captain, May 23, 1888, vice Price, deceased.

JUDGE-ADVOCATE GENERAL OF THE NAVY.

Capt. William B. Remey, of the Marine Corps, to be Judge-Advocate General of the Navy, with the rank of colonel in the Marine Corps, for the term of four years.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 6, 1888.

JUDGE-ADVOCATE GENERAL OF THE NAVY.

Capt. William B. Remey, of the Marine Corps, to be Judge-Advocate General of the Navy with the rank of colonel in the Marine Corps for the term of four years.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 31, 1888.

CONSUL.

Laws V. Moore, of Iowa, to be consul of the United States at Lyons.

POSTMASTER.

Joseph D. Lopez, to be postmaster at St. Augustine, St. Johns County, Florida.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 6, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The House was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 6, 1888.

SIR: Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore during the sitting of the House to-day.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Prayer by Rev. Dr. PRICE, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JOHN B. REED VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the proceedings of a board of officers appointed to examine upon the claim of John B. Reed against the United States for use of projectiles, rifled ordnance, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

EMMA S. FREE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 431) granting a pension to Emma S. Free, widow of Thomas S. Free, late a major of the United States Army, the House amendments to which were disagreed to by the Senate, with a request for a committee of conference.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, by unanimous consent, the committee of conference was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will announce the conferees on the part of the House during the day.

UNLAWFUL GRAZING ON INDIAN LANDS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8393) to protect lands belonging to Indians from unlawful grazing, and for other purposes, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, that is a bill reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I ask unanimous consent that it lie on the Speaker's table until I can have an opportunity to examine it.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PUBLIC BUILDING, MONROE, LA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1483) for the erection of a public building at Monroe, La., with amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, that bill as it passed the House appropriated $100,000. The Senate has amended the bill by reducing the amount to $75,000. There is also a Senate amendment authorizing the acquirement of a site by condemnation. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 2, after the word "purchase," insert "acquire by condemnation."
Page 1, line 17, strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five."
Page 1, line 21, strike out the word "same" and insert the word "sum."
Page 2, line 3, strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the only material amendment is a reduction of the amount from one hundred thousand to seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. NEWTON. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

DAVID MERIWETHER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether, with amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. CARUTH. I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the Senate do not ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out all after the word "appropriated" down to and including the word "also," in line 7.
Page 1, line 9, strike out all after the word "part" down to and including the word "all," in line 10.

Mr. CARUTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the effect of the amendments?

Mr. CARUTH. It strikes out all but the $500.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH]?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BRIDGE ACROSS TRAIL CREEK, MICHIGAN CITY, IND.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2097) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Trail Creek, in the city of Michigan City, Ind.; which, with the amendments of the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT HICKMAN, KY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7340) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Hickman, Ky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill has been passed by the Senate with an amendment.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate. It relates simply to the length of the span of the bridge.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to ask whether this is a high bridge.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. It is a bridge 85 feet high.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then I have no objection.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. As I have said, the amendment of the Senate relates simply to the length of the span.

Mr. CLARDY. What is the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senate?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The House bill provides that the length of the middle span shall be determined at the discretion of the Secretary of War. The Senate amendment provides that three engineers shall go there and fix the length of the span.

Mr. CLARDY. Does the bill contain the same provision that was in the Memphis bridge bill?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARDY. Then I have no objection.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were respectively read a first and second time, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 385) for the erection of a public building in the city of Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 785) to provide for an addition to the United States building at Jackson, Miss.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 1318) for the erection of a public building at Altoona, Pa.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 2277) to provide for the extension of the public building at Lynchburgh, Va.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 2319) for the erection of a public building at Waterbury, Conn.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 2788) for the erection of a public building at Virginia City, State of Nebraska—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 2789) for the erection of a public building at Reno, State of Nevada—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 194) to increase the endowment of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural College—to the Committee on Education.

The bill (S. 375) to restrict the use and sale of opium in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 506) to remove the charge of desertion against Thomas Conroy, deceased—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 653) defining the positions and salaries of assistant astronomers at the United States Naval Observatory, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

The bill (S. 750) for the relief of Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (S. 1100) to retire certain disabled officers of the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 1169) for the relief of Commander George M. Bache, United States Navy (retired)—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill (S. 1190) for the relief of the estate of Joseph Fenno, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF MARY H. PIKE, DECEASED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 1191) for the relief of the legal representatives of Mary H. Pike; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be now taken up and passed. It is a little claim for only $35.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of Mary H. Pike, deceased, late of Little Rock, Ark., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $35, for rent of a building in Little Rock, Ark., occupied by the military authorities of the United States, under contract, from October 1 to October 30, 1864, and for which vouchers were given her by said authorities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the amount involved?

Mr. ROGERS. Thirty-five dollars.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFERENCE OF BILLS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House bills of the Senate; which were severally read a first and second time, and referred as follows, namely:

The bill (S. 1245) for the relief of Nancy E. Day, administratrix of the estate of James L. Day, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1632) to refund moneys collected from William Schaus at the port of New York on an oil painting not subject to duty—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1450) for the relief of Maj. Gen. W. W. Averell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 1807) to refund to the State of West Virginia the money paid to officers of the One hundred and thirty-third Regiment West Virginia Militia for services rendered during the rebellion—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (S. 1914) for the relief of Mary E. Hopkins—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 2013) for the relief of Forman Mathews and David Stout Parker—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 2040) to establish a land office at Folsom, in the Territory of New Mexico—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill (S. 2477) granting the right of way to the Mobile and Birmingham Railway Company, the successor to the Mobile and Alabama Grand Trunk Railroad Company, across the Mount Vernon arsenal reservation, in Mobile County, Alabama—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 2787) for the erection of an equestrian statue of ex-President Zachary Taylor—to the Committee on the Library.

The bill (S. 1162) for the relief of Susan E. Alger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2269) restoring the name of Wilhemina Hosband to the pension-roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2439) granting a pension to Charlotte T. Alderman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2451) placing the name of Elizabeth Domm on the pension-rolls—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2459) granting a pension to Mary S. Maynard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2500) granting a pension to Gertrude K. Lyford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2595) to increase the pension of Seth F. Myers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2604) granting a pension to Mrs. Loanda Sherman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2646) granting a pension to Danville A. Ricker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2657) granting an increase of pension to Emily J. Stannard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2705) granting a pension to Ellen Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2707) granting a pension to Samuel Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2710) granting a pension to the widow of John Schafer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2716) granting a pension to Carl M. Schwantes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2717) granting a pension to John K. Evans—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2720) granting a pension to John B. Ross—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2721) granting a pension to Jackson Chapman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2728) to grant a pension to Indiana J. Nichols—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2852) granting an increase of pension to Clara B. Davidson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2866) granting a pension to Abel G. Rankin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2884) granting a pension to William S. Grow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2885) granting a pension to Henry A. Hawley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2886) granting an increase of pension to Joseph B. Sellers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

WITHDRAWAL OF APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair wishes to state that on yesterday conferees were appointed on the bill H. R. 2972, the Chair being under the impression that there had been a disagreement in reference to the Senate amendments. It appears upon an examination of the record that this appointment was premature, there not being the necessary action taken on the part of the House, and the appointment will be withdrawn. The Chair makes this statement in order that the proper correction of the Journal may be made.

ADDITIONAL ASSOCIATE JUSTICE, UTAH.

Mr. CAINE. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the Territories from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1507) providing an additional associate justice for the supreme court of the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes, and pass the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the supreme court of the Territory of Utah shall consist of a chief justice and three associate justices, any three of whom shall constitute a quorum; but no justice shall act as a member of the supreme court in any action or proceeding brought to such court by writ of error, bill of exceptions, or appeal from a decision, judgment, or decree rendered by him as a judge of a district court.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint one additional associate justice of said supreme court, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor is appointed and qualified.

SEC. 3. That temporarily, and until otherwise ordered by law, the additional associate justice to be appointed under this act is hereby assigned to the third judicial district in said Territory of Utah, as an associate of the judge already assigned to said district, and each of said judges may hold separate hearings and trials, or sit and act together for the expedition of the business of said district, as they may deem expedient, and the times and places as now fixed by the statutes of said Territory for holding court therein shall remain until changed by law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAINE. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in the third section all after the word "act," in the third line, down to and including the word "Utah," in the fourth line; and insert: "Shall, from time to time, as the business of the courts may require, be assigned by the governor of said Territory of Utah to either of the judicial districts thereof."

Also strike out the word "said," before "district," in the fifth line, and also in the seventh line, and insert the word "such" in each place.

Mr. REED. How does this bill now differ from the Senate bill?

Mr. CAINE. In this, that the Senate bill assigns the judge to the third district, while this provides that the governor may assign the judge from time to time, as the business of the court may determine, to either district.

Mr. FORD. The Senate bill provides for one district, and this provides that the judge may be assigned to any district.

Mr. SPRINGER. A bill for this purpose has already been recommended by the Committee on the Territories at this session, and is now pending, providing for associate justices in several of the Territories, Dakota, Arizona, Wyoming, etc., and I hope that bill for the other Territories will receive consideration at an early date. I shall seek an opportunity to ask unanimous consent, if practicable during this week, to call it up for consideration.

Mr. WARNER. Why not ask unanimous consent now?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say to my friend from Illinois that I think this bill to which he refers ought to be referred to the Department of Justice for a report. While I do not make objection to the present bill on account of not having been so referred, I shall insist upon that action before unanimous consent is hereafter granted for the passage of any of these bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Utah.

The amendment was adopted.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill 988 and put it upon its passage.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

Mr. HEMPHILL. As the regular order is demanded, I desire to submit a conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6899) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "personal" before "taxes," in line 18, page 2; so as to read:

"And said company shall pay to the District of Columbia in lieu of taxes upon personal property, including cars and motive-power, each year 4 per cent. of its gross earnings," etc.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Amend section 8 so that it will read:

"That the main line of said railway shall be commenced within three months and completed within twelve months from the passage of this act, and the branches of the same shall be completed within two years from the time First and Fourth streets and New York avenue shall be, respectively, graded; and if the said work on the main line shall not be so commenced and completed, then the privileges and powers herein granted shall be void."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 15, 16, 17, and 18, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the words "sell the same" in the Senate amendment insert "after five days' notice;" so that it will read:

"SEC. 12. That all articles of value that may be inadvertently left in any of the cars or other vehicles of the said company shall be taken to its principal depot and entered in a book of record of unclaimed goods, which book shall be open to the inspection of the public, and if said property remain unclaimed for one year the company shall sell the same after five days' notice."

That the House recede from its disagreement of the Senate numbered 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 28, and agree to the same.

That the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 29 and 30, and the Senate recede from the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same.

JNO. J. HEMPHILL,
W. H. F. LEE,
M. S. BREWER,
Conferees on the part of the House.

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
C. B. FARWELL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The following statement was submitted under the rule:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6899) to incorporate the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted in the accompanying report.

The first amendment gives the company the privilege of extending its line from one of its termini on Fourth street, northward along said street to the Bunker Hill road, within one year after Fourth street shall have been opened and graded, which will carry the road to the proposed Catholic University.

The second amendment requires the company to sell six tickets for 25 cents.

The third amendment strikes out the words "Eckington and Soldiers' Home" as surplusage so that the section reads "That said railway company, etc.," a mere improvement on the phraseology.

The fourth amendment provides that if the said company does not make the required report to Congress each year, giving a full and detailed statement of the business of the company during the preceding year, within ten days after the time specified, the commissioners shall cause to be instituted judicial proceedings to forfeit this charter.

The fifth and sixth amendments of the Senate are merged in one in the conference report, and the section is amended by the conference committee by striking out the word "personal," in line 18, page 2, and inserting after the word "taxes" in same line the words "upon personal property, including cars and motive power." The word "each" [year] is substituted for the words "the next ensuing" in same line; so as to read: "And said company shall pay to the District of Columbia in lieu of taxes upon personal property, including cars and motive power each year 4 per cent. of its gross earnings," etc.

The effect of these amendments leaves the bill substantially as it passed the House, the change in phraseology making the meaning clearer.

The seventh amendment strikes out the words "upon traffic for the preceding year, as shown by said verified statement," as being unnecessary after the above amendments.

The eighth amendment strikes out provision requiring the company to reduce its fare whenever the net receipts of the company shall for any year exceed 10 per cent. of the cost of the road, and provides that the real estate of the company shall be taxed as other real estate, except that its tracks shall not be treated as real estate.

The ninth and tenth amendments substitute for the word "order" the word "repair," a mere verbal amendment.

The eleventh amendment requires the company in the event of change of grade of the streets occupied by it to change the grade of its road at its own expense so as to conform to the established grade.

The twelfth amendment makes a mere verbal change by striking out the words "engineer commissioner" and inserting the words "commissioners of the District."

The thirteenth amendment merely perfects the sentence by inserting, after the words "boiler house," the words "or houses."

The fourteenth amendment, as amended by the conference committee, strikes out section 8 of the bill and inserts the section set out in the conference report. Its effect is to fix the time within which the branches of the said road shall be built within two years from the time First and Fourth streets and New York avenue shall be respectively graded. (See conference report for amendment agreed to.)

The fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth amendments, limiting the increase of the capital stock on the branches of the road, above provided for, were rendered proper and necessary by the fourteenth amendment, changing section 8 of the bill, giving such increase for new branches provided for as was thought necessary.

The eighteenth amendment merely improves the wording of the section, in reference to sale of articles left in the cars of the company.

The nineteenth amendment provides for the sale of articles of value left in the cars of the company, and which are not claimed within one year; the company is required to give five days' notice of such sale.

The twentieth amendment requires the corporators to keep their books of subscription to the capital stock of the company open not less than five days, instead of two days, as provided in the bill.

The twenty-first amendment requires notice of the time and place of the opening of the books of subscription to be given in at least two daily papers.

The twenty-second amendment provides that nothing but money or certified checks from any national bank shall be received in payment of the 10 per cent. required to be paid at the time of subscribing.

The twenty-third amendment is a mere verbal change of a pronoun to correct the phraseology.

The twenty-fourth, twenty-fifth, and twenty-sixth amendments change the section so as to give the fine for obstructing the passage of cars over the tracks to the public Treasury, and provide that the company may maintain a civil action in addition to the penalty imposed, provided suit is brought within sixty days from commission of the act.

The twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth amendments are merely verbal amendments striking out unnecessary words; using the word "said" in lieu of repeating the words "Eckington and Soldiers' Home."

The twenty-ninth amendment proposed to strike out the provision that no person should be ejected from the cars of the company for any cause than that of being drunk, disorderly, unclean, or contagiously diseased, or refusing to pay the legal fare, or failing to comply with the lawful regulations of the company. The amendment was not agreed to by the conference committee, and it was agreed that the Senate recede from the same, leaving the provision as it passed the House.

The thirtieth amendment was a verbal one suggested by the Senate, but was not agreed to by the conference committee, and in this particular the bill stands as it passed the House.

The thirty-first amendment strikes out section 20, the repeal clause, as being unnecessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, before that vote is taken I simply desire to say that the report of the conferees upon this bill, explanatory of their agreement, is what every such report ought to be. It is almost the first time for a great while that I have seen conferees perform their full duty in that particular. If every conference report were accompanied by such an explanation as this, we should find it easier to agree to them, and in the end the time of the House would be saved, although it would take a little longer to read them.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, after that compliment I call for the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

Mr. STEELE. I notice that there is no penalty provided in case the branch lines are not completed, while there is a penalty for the non-completion of the main line. Is that intentional?

Mr. HEMPHILL. That was provided for by the Senate. Unless the company go to work and build the main line within a year, they can not do anything at all. If they do build that line and fail to build the others, Congress can easily charter another company. Of course we reserve the right to repeal the charter. The reason we did not put in any penalty in regard to the branch lines is that those branches can not be built until the streets are graded, and that depends somewhat upon the action of the commissioners. I call for the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROCK CREEK RAILWAY.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Mr. Speaker, I also desire to submit another conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2017) to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, and agree to the same.

That the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and that the Senate recede from the same.

JNO. T. HEARD,
J. H. ROWELL,
BARNES COMPTON,
Conferees on the part of the House.
ISHAM G. HARRIS,
C. B. FARWELL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees, accompanying the conference report, was read, as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House of Representatives on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on H. R. 2017, to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia, submit the following explanation of their report:

The first amendment requires the road to be built in the middle of the street, instead of the west side.

The second amendment strikes out the provision that whenever the net receipts of the company from its business shall for any year exceed 8 per cent. of the cost of said road the fare shall be so reduced as to bring the net receipts down to the said per centum.

The third amendment strikes out the words "engineer commissioner," and inserts the word "commissioners."

The fourth amendment inserts the words, "the line of," to improve the phraseology.

The fifth amendment strikes out the provision prohibiting the company from charging or collecting fare from parties not accommodated with seats.

The sixth amendment strikes out the penalty for the violation of the above regulation.

The seventh amendment inserts, after the word "associates," the words "successors and assigns," giving them authority to open books of subscription to the capital stock of said company.

The eighth amendment inserts, after the word "first," the word "section," a clerical omission.

The ninth amendment inserts, after the word "maliciously," the words "and unnecessarily" in the clause providing a penalty for the malicious and unnecessary obstruction of the tracks of the said company.

The tenth amendment inserts the word "motive," omitted by mistake.

The eleventh amendment proposed was not agreed to, and the conference committee agreed to retain the provision that no person shall be ejected from the cars for any other cause than that of being drunk, disorderly, contagiously diseased, for the use of profane and obscene language, refusing to pay the fare, or failing to comply with the lawful regulations of the company.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia what motive governed the conferees in agreeing to strike from this bill the provision that the company, when their profits shall exceed 8 per cent., shall reduce their rate of fare.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The Senate struck that out for two reasons. In the first place, the fare as fixed in the bill, with a requirement that the company shall furnish six tickets for 25 cents, is the same that governs all the railroad companies in this District; and under the law requiring interchange of tickets among the several railroad companies it would be difficult to arrange so that a company selling tickets at a less rate could exchange with those charging more.

In addition to that, one of the Senators on the District Committee of the Senate [Mr. SPOONER] is preparing a general tax bill by which it is proposed that all railroads making more than a specified rate of profit on their business shall be compelled to pay the excess into the public Treasury. The Senate thought it better that this excess should go into the public Treasury for the benefit of the whole community, rather than that the benefit should be confined to the people who may ride on the railroad. It would be unfair to make this railroad company sell tickets at a lower price than that charged by other railroad companies, while it would be perfectly fair to make all these companies pay the amount of their profits over a reasonable sum into the Treasury for the benefit of the whole community.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman state briefly why the conferees struck out the provision of the bill which prohibited the company from charging fare after the seats were full. That is a system of restraint upon railroad companies which has been tried in some of the large cities and seems to work reasonably well.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The suggestion was made by some of the Senators (and it struck the members on the part of the House with considerable force) that it may be very doubtful whether such a provision would not do more harm than good, so far as concerns the convenience of the public. For instance, when a man is waiting at a street corner in rainy or snowy or very hot weather, or when he is in a hurry, he may prefer to take the first car that comes, although it is crowded, rather than wait for another car, because by standing in the crowded car a few minutes he may be able to get a seat for the remainder of his ride after the car has gone only a few blocks, as people are constantly getting out. As a gentleman suggests to me, a man, in order to catch a train or meet some important engagement, would much prefer to stand in a crowded car rather than wait.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PEEL. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back with the amendments of the Senate the bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; and to ask that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and ask a conference.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It seems to me that these amendments are important enough to be considered in committee.

Mr. PEEL. I hope the gentleman will not object to this proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understands, objection is made.

Mr. PERKINS. Perhaps the gentleman from New Jersey does not understand that the Senate amendments have already been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs; and the gentleman from Arkansas now reports them back.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection, then, would carry the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand the status of the case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill, with the amendments, will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the gentleman will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in 1864 four men who resided in the district in which I live enlisted in the Federal Army. They served about six months, and were not mustered into service until the end of that time. Before they were mustered, however, the company to which they belonged was consolidated with another regiment. From the time of the consolidation these men served as private soldiers until the close of the war. They had served as officers of that company up to that time. They were not mustered as officers at the time of the consolidation, from the fact that they were absent on detached service. Now, these men from that time to this have never been paid for their service during those six months. I ask unanimous consent that the House will now pass a bill which will pay those men for that service. A bill providing for this has been favorably reported by the Committee on War Claims. Two of these men I know to be in suffering circumstances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill indicated by the gentleman can only be taken up by unanimous consent. The call for the regular order, unless it is withdrawn, cuts off that.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman from Texas to withdraw the call for this purpose.

Mr. MILLS. I am afraid if I do it in this case, I shall have to do it for gentlemen all around. But I withdraw the call for the present.

Mr. BYNUM. I object, and call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. MILLS. I now ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to make may file them with the Clerk for reference to the appropriate Calendars.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's desk:

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. LAIRD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8639) granting the Leavenworth Rapid Transit Railway Company the right to construct and operate its railroad through a portion of the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

IRWIN M'ADAMS.

Mr. WILKINSON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9989) for the relief of Irwin McAdams; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MUSCATINE, IOWA.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1883) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Muscatine, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, CLINTON, IOWA.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1882) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Clinton, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. MATILDA WILKINS EMORY.

Mr. LYNCH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2547) to increase the pension of Mrs. Matilda Wilkins Emory; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

KATE A. DALZELL.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably with amendment the bill (S. 1338) granting an increase of pension to Kate A. Dalzell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY VON KUSSEROW.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 655) granting an increase of pension to Mary Von Kusserow; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PHILLIPE RAY.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1614) granting a pension to Phillipe Ray; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. VIRGINIA GRIER.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 123) granting a pension to Mrs. Virginia Grier; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MANHATTAN PICKETT.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2301) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TOBIAS BANEY.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 121) granting a pension to Tobias Baney; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN F. BALLIER.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1613) granting an increase of pension to John F. Ballier; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. SARAH R. BLEECKER.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6339) for increase of pension to Mrs. Sarah R. Bleecker; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SARAH E. ROBERTS.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5253) to restore the name of Sarah E. Roberts to the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELNATHAN MEADE.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4069) granting an increase of pension to Elnathan Meade; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES MILLER.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 528) granting a pension to James Miller; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FLORIAN LISCHEWSKY.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5918) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Florian Lischewsky; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARY KARSTETTER.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7877) to place Mary Karstetter on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MINOR CHILDREN OF GEORGE R. M'GUIRE.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4038) granting a pension to Victor, Gertrude, Margaret, and Helen, minor children of Lieut. George R. McGuire; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN A. GRIFFEY.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6783) to place the name of John A. Griffey on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES MONOHAN.

Mr. LYNCH also, from Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5919) restoring to the pension-roll the name of James Monohan, minor child of Richard Monohan, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calander, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGARET STEWART.

Mr. LYNCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 4716) granting a pension to Margaret Stewart; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calander, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EMMA BIDDLE.

On motion of Mr. LYNCH, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4074) granting an increase of pension to Emma Biddle, and it was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

C. A. WILLIAMS AND OTHERS.

Mr. McCULLOGH, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2411) for the relief of C. A. Williams and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TARIFF.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The pending paragraph was read as follows:

Pickets and palings.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on yesterday during my temporary absence from the House my colleague [Mr. OUTHWAITE] paid some attention to some figures which I had submitted upon a former day in the course of this discussion, and he made the statement that he desired to be entirely fair in the consideration of those figures. In the line of that statement, and believing the gentleman meant what he said, I wish to take the inflation out of some of the figures which, as I had stated, I had used only for the sake of argument, in order that we may arrive at something near a proper and correct conclusion.

The gentleman selected that statement of mine in which I said that we would call the amount of lumber used on the farm 60,000 feet. He is aware, as I am, that the statement is too high, and he will agree with me that the average amount of lumber used is not more than 30,000 feet for an average farm in the average period of thirty years, that being the basis of calculation; that not more than one-half of the lumber used in this country is used on the farms, the balance being used in cities and villages. It will reduce the amount of the tax paid on account of lumber used on the farm which the farmer pays, as we are told, to not more than $1 a year. But what does he get for that? There are employed 147,000 laborers. It is fair to presume those laborers have three persons in each family besides the laborer. Therefore laborers' families, including three persons besides the laborer, would give us 441,000. To this we must add the laborers, 147,000. The estimated number of manufacturers is 50,000. Their families will average three persons each, or 150,000, to be added to the 50,000 manufacturers. The total number of persons to be supplied and supported, then, is 788,000. The estimated cost of food for each of these persons at 25 cents per day would be $197,000. This estimate I believe to be entirely too low. Per month of 30 days it would amount to $5,910,000, or for a year of 360 days to $70,920,000.

Now, these 788,000 persons who are engaged in the lumber business must draw their subsistence from some source, and from what source do they draw it? They raise no cereals themselves. They are dependent upon the farmers for the means of their subsistence. They provide this home market to our own farmers to the extent of $5,910,000 a month of 30 days, or $70,920,000 a year of 360 days. That being true the farmer pays one dollar a year for the advantage of this home market, even supposing the free-trade view that the consumer always pays the tax—a proposition I utterly deny and repudiate.

The amount of lumber used, as stated in my former remarks, was estimated too light, and was not seriously stated as a fact, but simply to illustrate an argument. More than one-half of the lumber is used in villages and towns, as I have already stated. This cuts the statement down to $8,000,000 paid by the farmers, supposing my colleague's argument to be correct, and the estimate being twice too high cuts it down another half, or to $4,000,000, or to $1 each per year. It will thus be seen that each farmer, therefore, gets a home market of $17.50 worth of produce per year by the payment of $1, and no more. Whoever else may have reason to complain, this calculation will demonstrate to every reasonable person that certainly the farmer has no good ground to complain, but on the contrary has reason to rejoice in the establishment of such a system as will bring him such a reliable and remunerative home market for the sale of his agricultural products.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is one other question which ought to be considered and acted upon by this Congress. That question seems so far to have been lost sight of in this discussion of economic principles and tariff details. It is a question which ought to be carefully weighed, and, for the honor of American history and American patriotism, justly decided. I should not speak of it in this discussion were it not for the fact that the application of the rules of this body and the exercise of the power given under them bid fair to prevent a majority of the House from having any opportunity whatever to otherwise discuss or act upon it.

And that majority is forced, too, into that attitude of inaction notwithstanding the fact that both dominant parties for more than twenty years now have declared in their national platforms in favor of an opposite policy.

I call attention to some of those declarations in order that I may "stir up" your pure minds "by way of remembrance."

NATIONAL REPUBLICAN PLATFORMS.

1864.—That the thanks of the American people are due to the soldiers and sailors of the Army and Navy, who have periled their lives in defense of the country and in vindication of the honor of its flag; that the nation owes to them some permanent recognition of their patriotism and their valor, and ample and permanent provision for those of their survivors who have received disabling and honorable wounds in the service of the country; and that the memories of those who have fallen in its defense shall be held in grateful and everlasting remembrance.

1868.—Of all who were faithful in the trials of the late war there were none entitled to more especial honor than the brave soldiers and seamen who endured the hardships of campaign and cruise and imperiled their lives in the service of their country; the bounties and pensions provided by the laws for these brave defenders of the nation are obligations never to be forgotten; and the widows and orphans of the gallant dead are the wards of the people—a sacred legacy bequeathed to the nation's care.

1872.—We hold in undying honor the soldiers and sailors whose valor saved the Union. Their pensions are a sacred debt of the nation, and the widows and orphans of those who died for their country are entitled to the care of a generous and grateful people. We favor such additional legislation as will extend the bounty of the Government to all our soldiers and sailors who were honorably discharged, and who in the line of duty became disabled, without regard to the length of service or the cause of such discharge.

1876.—The pledges which the nation has given to her soldiers and sailors must be fulfilled, and a grateful people will always hold those who imperiled their lives for the country's preservation in the kindest remembrance.

1880.—That the obligations of the Republic to the men who preserved its integrity in the day of battle are undiminished by the lapse of fifteen years since their final victory. To do them honor is and shall forever be the grateful privilege and sacred duty of the American people.

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC PLATFORMS.

1864.—* * * That the sympathy of the Democratic party is heartily and earnestly extended to the soldiery of our Army and sailors of our Navy, who are and have been in the field and on the sea under the flag of our country, and in the event of its attaining power they will receive all the care, protection, and regard that the brave soldiers and sailors of the Republic so nobly earned.

1868.—* * * That our soldiers and sailors who carried the flag of our country to victory against a most gallant and determined foe must ever be gratefully remembered, and all the guaranties given in their favor must be faithfully carried into execution.

1872.—* * * We remember with gratitude the heroism and sacrifices of the soldiers and sailors of the Republic, and no act of ours shall ever detract from their justly-earned fame for the full reward of their patriotism.

1876.—* * * The soldiers and sailors of the Republic, and the widows and orphans of those who have fallen in battle, have a just claim upon the care, protection, and gratitude of their fellow-citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I shall ask consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, the gentleman shows by his estimates and the figures submitted that a man working in the lumber district to which he refers pays the agriculturist $456 each year. How does he do it out of the $194 that he is able to earn in the lumber business? I ask the gentleman to explain that.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. The calculation made by the gentleman is as wild and extravagant as the profits he assigns in his former remarks to the manufacturers.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But I am taking your own figures. You gave one set of figures here which proves conclusively that the lumberman gets $194 for his earnings in a year. You show by another set of figures to-day that he pays $456 each year to the farmer. How does he do it?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. If you will allow me time I will give the gentleman a satisfactory explanation. A large portion of this home market comes from the manufacturers, and not from the laborers alone.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be permitted to proceed without interruption for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I thank my colleague for his kindness.

These, Mr. Chairman, are some of the pledges of the people of this Republic to the men who passed through the fiery furnace of untold suffering in order to preserve the nation's existence.

The consideration of any proposition to reduce taxation that might prevent the fulfillment of these pledges without first considering the righteous demands of the Union soldiers is to that extent a repudiation of an obligation so sacred that it can only result in lasting dishonor to the whole American people.

It is proposed by this bill to reduce our yearly revenues to the extent of $78,000,000, and yet no one appears to be asking the question, how will this affect needed and just pension legislation?

Can this be done and still leave us sufficient revenue to pay off the $230,000,000 or more of bonds falling due in 1891, and the interest on the rest of our bonded debt, and the current expenses of the Government, and at the same time enable us to keep with honor these pledges of the nation to these soldiers?

Gentlemen say, do we not now pay them $80,000,000 per year, and is not that enough? I say no, it is not enough. For, in the first place, the Union soldiers themselves only get about $60,000,000 of it. The balance goes to dependent relatives, soldiers of other wars, Department expenses, etc. But of this I am not complaining. Concede that, in some sense, the whole amount is paid largely for the soldiers of the war of 1861–'65, and then let us ask what are some of the reasonable demands they may yet make which the nation should pay?

I answer, they are these:

1. A service pension.

2. A pension to their minor children, in case of their decease.

3. A pension to the physically or mentally afflicted children as long as such disability continues.

4. A pension to their widows during widowhood.

5. In cases where there are dependent parents, but no widow or minor children, a pension to such parents.

6. That these various pensions shall be large enough to preserve the respective classes from want in old age and affliction.

I believe in the principle of what is known as the "per diem rated service-pension," so modified in cases of "total incapacity" and half "total incapacity" as that when the pension so calculated would in those cases be less than $12 and $6 per month respectively, it shall be increased to those amounts. I think also that the amounts paid in the cases of minor children should be at least $5 per month, and that sum should be continued to imbecile or otherwise helpless children as long as the disability continues.

These are features, Mr. Chairman, which I know the Union soldiers feel ought to be incorporated into our pension system, and they feel that it ought to be done now.

I therefore ask attention to a statement of the reasons upon which and because of which such relief should be granted, and to a discussion of the objections which are or may be urged against granting it.

The nation never can, in money, fully discharge the debt it owes to these men for a preserved and perpetuated existence. But I recognize the principle that their just and reasonable demands upon the bounty of the people must be measured by the ability of the people to pay. I shall therefore try to demonstrate in this argument that this claim of theirs is based upon a correct principle; that it is within the ability of the nation; that the bill S. 181, now standing upon the Calendar of this House, favorably reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House, ought not, as proposed by that committee to be amended, to be enacted into law, because it is impolitic and unjust. And if we are ever permitted to consider or discuss that measure I shall propose and hope to have incorporated into it the following amendments in place of those proposed by the House committee:

AMENDMENTS.

1. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States the name of all persons specified in this section, upon satisfactory proof that they respectively performed the service referred to below, namely: All officers and enlisted men who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, including regulars, volunteers, and all other enlisted men in any war. The rate of pension to be paid shall be the aggregate sum per month of 1 cent for each day of service so rendered. The date of muster-in and of final discharge from the service shall determine the period of service, but no discharge given by reason of re-enlistment as a veteran volunteer, or on account of promotion shall be taken into account, and no pension under this section shall be given to any person who deserted after April 1, 1861, and prior to May 1, 1865, until such charge shall be removed by lawful authority. The pension herein provided shall be paid to the persons entitled for the remainder of their natural lives respectively, and is a service pension, and to be paid in addition to all other pensions heretofore or which may be hereafter granted for disability proven to have originated in the said service: Provided, That in all cases where any person entitled to pension by the terms of this section is so disabled by physical or mental disease, or injury, not the result of his own vicious acts, as to be entitled to be rated as "totally incapacitated," according to the meaning of that term as now used and understood by the Pension Department, which disability such person may be unable to prove originated in the said service, then in such case such person shall be entitled to receive a pension as long as such degree of disability continues at the rate of $12 per month; and in cases where the disability is equal in degree to one-half "total incapacity," as above defined, of not less than $6 per month; and upon the disappearance of such degree, or degrees, of disability such pension shall then be rated as first hereinbefore stated, provided that in cases where the pension computed as first hereinbefore stated would amount to more than $12 per month, or $6 per month as the case may be, the $12 rate or $6 rate shall not apply.

2. That if any pensioner has died, or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow, minor child or children under eighteen years of age, or in case there be no widow or minor child or children, a dependent mother or father, such widow, minor child or children, or mother or father shall be placed upon the pension-roll at the rates established by law for widows, minor children, and dependent parents without regard to the cause of death of such pensioner: Provided, That in the case of a widow, where the service has been rendered prior to the passage of this act, she must have been married to the deceased soldier, sailor, or marine prior to the passage of this act. But in cases of service rendered after the passage hereof the marriage, to entitle the widow to the pension herein provided, must have been solemnized prior to the expiration of the five years next following the close of such service: And provided further, That no pension granted by this section shall date from a period prior to the passage hereof, but in cases of the death of the soldier thereafter such pension shall date from the day of such death, and in all other cases from the date of the passage of this act; and such minor child or children shall hereafter be paid a pension of $5 per month instead of $2 per month, as heretofore paid, and in cases of physical or mental helplessness of such minor or minors which amounts to "total incapacity" as in this act defined, such pension to a minor child or children so incapacitated shall continue during the existence of such disability; and a widow's pension shall be paid only so long as she remains the widow of the soldier, sailor, or marine on account of the death of whom such pension is originally granted.

Now, in this discussion, I assume to speak from the standpoint of the rank and file—for the lowly home and poverty-stricken abode of the private soldier—because it is a fact, as undeniable as it is deplorable, that a large number of the private soldiers who served the nation faithfully in the hour of its direst necessity are men in moderate, if not in necessitous, circumstances. And there are substantial and sufficient reasons for this, as I will endeavor to show presently.

WHY GOVERNMENTS ARE INSTITUTED AMONG MEN.

It is an elemental as well as fundamental proposition that a government owes, by reason of its very existence, certain duties to its people; certain general obligations which it will gladly discharge in order that it may be called a good government. These obligations are twofold:

1. The duty of the government to secure for its people, as far as it is able, better social and moral conditions.

2. As a means to reach this end, its duty to secure for them the best possible material condition.

Acting within the scope of the limitations of its power, that government fails of its duty which does not, at all times, keep these ends in view.

It is to the second of these general obligations that the subject under discussion is to be referred—the bettering of the material condition of a most deserving class of our people.

Do you claim that this is class legislation? If so, I concede at once that it is the duty of the nation, as far as it can, to give all classes of its citizens an equal chance in the race of life. But I hold that where the nation has for its own purposes deprived any class of our people or that equal chance it then becomes its duty, just as soon as it is able, to reinstate that class in the position it would have occupied but for such deprivation. That gives the equal chance. The citizen is called upon to make sacrifices to preserve his government. Is not the obligation reciprocal? Should not the government, saved by the sacrifices of certain of her citizens, in all honor, make sacrifices to preserve those citizens from hardship and want in their hour of need?

Recognizing the justice of this proposition, every civilized nation on the face of the earth has a service-pension policy of some kind, differing in details it may be, but agreeing in the main upon the principle of paying an amount reasonably sufficient to preserve from want those who have served in their armies. And if this nation shall not pay to the Union soldiers of our great war a service pension it will be the first considerable body of men ever serving in its armies during a war which it will have failed to so reward.

HOW THE SOLDIERS OF 1861 REGARD THIS QUESTION.

The war closed twenty-three years ago. The average age of the Union soldiers is calculated, by those best able to determine the question, to be fifty-two years. The number now alive closely approximates 900,000 persons. There rests undeniably in the minds of these men the conviction that our Government should grant them a service pension. Let us ask why this is so. The answer will develop this state of facts:

1. That a service pension has been at some time granted by the Republic to her soldiers of all prior wars.

2. That the soldiers of prior wars also received bounty lands, while the Union soldiers did not.

3. That the Union soldiers were paid in a currency on an average worth less than 39 per cent. of its face value.

4. That those who volunteered last received by far the larger compensation, so that the men who really bore the heat and burden of the day received the least for it.

5. That those who loaned money to the Government, by legislation adopted since the contract of loaning was made, but of course declaratory of that contract, have been or will be paid in coin, or its equivalent, while these men who loaned their lives to save the nation have met with no such generous and honorable treatment.

6. That when they returned from the Army, in very many cases, instead of finding themselves better off they found themselves in debt for the support of their families; lands gone up to a price far beyond their reach; employment gone; business scattered to the four ends of the earth, and they were practically compelled to begin life over again.

7. Many of them who served long and faithfully and in spite of diseased conditions which would have sent less resolute men to their beds in the hospitals, refused to go there time and again, and now they have no "hospital record," and for their very faithfulness can not, though justly entitled, obtain a disability pension.

That this last statement is true, I need only cite the fact of the large number of disability claims which are now daily rejected by the Pension Bureau, although present disability is proven, because origin of the disability in the service can not be proven. The soldier now finds that, although comrades are dead and memories are defective, and forgetfulness of the value of his work in the day of our great trouble is engulfing him and his labors with its Lethean waters, yet there is one thing which fails not to assert its power—the seeds of disease sown in his system by the swamps and malaria-breeding regions of the South, when he served in the armies of the Union, now in his age assert their power and remind him continually that if his Government does not remember him, they do.

8. Another and weighty reason they urge for granting this relief, is, that the Union soldiers are now very generally broken down in health.

The truth of this statement is apparent even to a casual observer who will take the trouble to examine the matter. And the reasons why it is so require but little consideration in order to convince the most skeptical. The men were, as a rule, taken from their Northern homes at any and all seasons of the year, and being hurried from a temperate zone to a semi-torrid climate were plunged at once, from regular habits of living and employment, into the hard life of a soldier engaged in carrying on an aggressive campaign. Coming from the comfort of their homes, the men were, before they could be acclimated, compelled to undertake the hardships of the camp, the bivouac, the march, the skirmish line, and the battle-field, while hard fare, irregularly supplied, scanty medical attendance, insufficient shelter, exposure to winter's cold and summer's heat in a strange climate, marchings by day and watchings by night, overshadowed always and ever by the nervous apprehension of a violent death, all contributed to tear down and destroy their constitutional vigor, and to plant within their systems the seeds of disease that should in after years rob life of its pleasure. No wonder that at fifty-two years of age they find themselves physically bankrupt when they should be in the full enjoyment of health and strength.

These reasons the Union soldiers consider substantial and sufficient to warrant them in asking this relief, this partial reinstatement in the position in life in which but for their service they would now be placed. And I submit that no man can dispassionately consider their request in the light of our history without subscribing to the opinion.

And, sir, I submit another observation; it is this, that the men who were intelligent enough to comprehend the questions involved in that great war, and brave and resolute enough to fight it through to the end, are not now unpatriotic nor willing to make or persist in making an unjust and unconscionable demand upon the nation they suffered to save. That if this demand is wrong and unjust, there ought to be and will be no serious difficulty in convincing these men that it is so.

If, however, as they believe, it is based upon a right principle; if it is intrenched by precedent, and rests within the ability of the nation, then, sir, it will require something more than the demands of a penurious economy to convince them that they ought not to make the demand. Now, the summary statement of the reasons they urge why this legislation should be had is that by their service in the armies of this Union they lost time, health, opportunity, education, and wealth. They were left behind in the race of life. And they feel that the nation ought now, in the fulfillment of its pledges then made, and since quadrennially repeated by all parties, and out of its present abundant prosperity, secured by their efforts, preserve them from want in their age and necessity.

OTHER REASONS WHY A SERVICE PENSION SHOULD BE GRANTED.

Suppose one desired to find reasons why this demand should be granted, instead of searching for an argument to overthrow it. He would find but little trouble in seeing that these results would be reached, namely:

1. The pay of the soldiers would be equalized. That he who has served longest and got least heretofore would now get most.

2. That the deserving man and faithful soldier would, in a measure, be placed upon an equality with those who remained at home and became well to do or wealthy by reason of the high prices the war created.

3. That a demand of the soldiers, by them believed to be just and established by precedent, would be satisfied.

4. That it would preserve the nation against any reasonable charge of ingratitude or bad faith towards its preservers.

5. That, being inherently right, it would commend itself to the people of the nation.

6. That it would be a law presuming in favor of the claim of the faithful soldier instead of against him.

7. That it would largely reduce the cost of the present cumbrous pension machinery and greatly relieve from special-act legislation.

8. That in the cases of great disability and poverty it would preserve the nation from the humiliating and disgraceful charge that by its neglect it permits the men who gave up everything to preserve its existence to die in its poor-houses.

THE NATION IS ABLE TO GRANT THIS RELIEF.

Upon the question as to our ability to grant this relief I call the attention of the House to the following computation of its probable cost.

A very accurate statistician and distinguished public man, Mr. Blaine, states that the whole number of enlisted men upon the side of the North in that war was 2,063,000; the number killed in battle or who died during the war was 285,545. There were then living at the close of the war of these enlisted men 1,777,455. Of this latter number the best estimate we can obtain from the pension officials is that 50 per cent. have died since the close of the war, so there are now surviving in all 888,728.

And this estimate of the number of survivors is corroborated by the opinion of Adjutant-General Drum, who states the number to be 884,000.

Now, estimating the average service to be twenty-four months, which I think is over rather than under the mark, and the total additional annual cost per man, except in cases of "total incapacity," is $87.60, or, in all, an additional annual charge in round numbers of $77,000,000.

Now, this increased cost the nation is amply able to bear. And assume that it will continue for twenty years yet, which is not at all probable, we will then have paid for pensions, all told, a sum less by one-half than the amount paid and to be paid on account of the principal and interest of our bonded war debt. It may be claimed that this is too great a charge upon our people and that it will bankrupt our Treasury. Let us examine that objection, for if it be well taken then the soldiers ought not to insist upon the demand; if not well taken, then the opponents of their claim ought not to raise the objection.

The probable annual Treasury surplus now accumulating is variously estimated at from $120,000,000 to $150,000,000. From this surplus this just expenditure can be most properly and easily made, and, if those estimates be true, still leave a large margin for the reduction of taxes. And when we consider that our population is increasing by more than 1,300,000 persons yearly, we may reasonably expect that even with a large reduction of taxes our revenue will increase with the population and still exceed the estimates. Also, when we consider that the pension-roll, even though thus increased, would be diminishing yearly by reason of death, remarriages, and children getting beyond pensionable age, it will be seen how easily the nation can do this act of justice. Now, the money paid out on account of pensions does not go out of the nation. It is expended here, and remains here with our people. It is collected from the whole population, including the soldiers themselves, paid into the Treasury, from thence paid out to our own people—the soldiers—and remains with the people until again collected and again disbursed to the pensioners.

It is the money which goes out of the nation that makes it poorer; not so if it remains with its people.

So that the payment of pensions, briefly stated, consists in taxing our whole people in order to pay a portion of them in part for that which years ago that portion gave to the nation to preserve its life.

If we, as I believe we should, pay the bondholder the last cent due him, should we not be equally honest with those other creditors of the Government, the men of the rank and file who loaned the nation their lives to save it from destruction? When that bonded debt is canceled this nation will have paid on that account, in principal and interest, nearly $6,000,000,000, or more than twice the amount necessary to liquidate this demand of the soldiers.

We have been swift to preserve our honor in this regard; shall we not with greater alacrity hasten still further to save it by the discharge of this higher and holier obligation which we owe to the men who loaned us, not money, but lives? The Republic can not with honor permit itself to be placed in the position of being generous only to its bondholders. It must so act that the American citizen of any number of years hence will say we of this day and generation treated the men who saved the nation, the soldier and the bondholder alike, justly and generously.

THE ADOPTION OF THE SERVICE-PENSION PRINCIPLE AS NECESSARY FOR THE SOUTH AS FOR THE NORTH.

The adoption of the principle I advocate is, I maintain, as necessary and valuable to the Southern citizen of the future as it is just to the Northern citizen of the present. We do not know what wars the future may develop. We hope none. But three great wars in the first century of our national existence teach that we can not say when our citizens may be called upon to risk their lives and brave the storm of shot and shell in defense of the nation. If the call shall come, we confidently expect to see the American citizen from the South coming up shoulder to shoulder with the man from the North, to the common sacrifice of a common defense for our common flag—the stars and stripes of the United States. And when he shall do this, then for him, as well as for the man from the North, I want the history of this nation to say, that neither of them shall ever be sent to the almshouses of the country because of the laches of the Government in failing to grant service-pension.

And, furthermore, I want that history also to say that in all cases of the wars of the Republic a service-pension shall be granted to her soldiers just as soon after a war closes as the nation is able to pay it. I want the laws of this commonwealth so constructed in that regard as that the Government may not wait until the men to be benefited are dead in order that we may be economically generous.

OBJECTIONS URGED AGAINST A SERVICE-PENSION POLICY.

Objections to the principle of the measure I am advocating, or similar measures, come usually from two sources:

1. From those who oppose such legislation for these particular soldiers.

2. From those who oppose a service pension in any form.

This last class find themselves arraigned against all of the precedents in our history, as well as against the universal practice of the other civilized nations of the world.

When cited to the policy of other nations on this question as a dernier resort they urge that it requires a much longer term of service in the armies of civilized Europe to enable a soldier there to secure such a pension than would be required by this measure, and that we are proposing to pay too much for a short period of service. They forget, however, that in the European systems nearly every able-bodied man is a soldier by virtue of their military codes all his active life; that when not drawing pay as a soldier he is usually drawing a service pension; that in computing the time when this shall commence the years of peace as well as of war are taken into the account, while here we have no standing army, or next to none, and base our demand for a service pension and our precedents upon actual service in time of war. We can pay the amount proposed by this measure, and still pay in the twenty-seven years which have gone by since the war began, very much less than any one of the first-class powers of Europe has expended in the same time upon her armies.

The Republic can not afford to be less mindful of its soldiers who have faithfully served it in war than is France, Great Britain, Austria, Germany, and other nations of theirs who have served mainly in time of peace.

I beg of gentlemen to remember that the annals of the world record no other instance of a war approaching our civil war in the arduous and fatally dangerous service required of the soldier. Consider the line of battle, a thousand miles long, which the Union soldier was required to man; the fact that he was almost always the attacking party; the two thousand or more battles and skirmishes he was required to fight—being more than one for each day of the continuance of the war; the great army of those who perished in these engagements; that other great army, the maimed and crippled, left at the close of the conflict to drag out their days in pain and anguish. Search the history of the world and find, if you can, another example of such heroic sacrifice and fatal service required of the soldiery of a nation. It does not exist.

Then we may properly say that the judgment of the civilized world has declared in favor of the principle of a service pension. That it comes to us as the result of the ripened experience of mankind. And certainly our civil war, bloody and costly and dangerous and great as it was, should not form an exception to the rule. For if it is admitted that my position is right, but argued that this war does not fall within the principle, I would ask gentlemen to state one good reason why it does not. Certainly it lasted long enough, was cruel enough, and costly enough, and bloody enough to rank it as the greatest war of modern times. Do gentlemen expect that we will ever again be engaged in another comparable with it? But in any event, why ought the Union soldiers to be excluded from the benefit of this time-honored, righteous, and generous custom of the Republic, and the 1812, Revolutionary, and Mexican war soldiers be permitted to profit by it?

Sir, the true principle which, in my judgment, we must preserve is that in all the wars of the nation those who faithfully serve in its armies shall, just as soon as the nation is able to pay it after a war closes, receive a service pension commensurate with the service rendered, and that the disabled shall have a disability pension in addition thereto.

Let this principle be enforced, that he who risks most and suffers most in the service of our country shall, when the battle is fought and won, receive most from the people whose cause he upheld. By so doing we shall show that republics are not ungrateful, and that the debt of gratitude we owe to the defenders of our flag is not one which we intend shall be paid in words merely. Do you say this detracts from the glory the Union soldier earned by his service, and that it is mercenary? I answer: Praise is poor food for a hungry, unclothed, and poverty-stricken man to live upon, or to feed and clothe and educate his family with.

Why, sir, the mercenary part of this matter is upon the other side of this question. The nation that will not and does not provide against letting her defenders be sent to the poor-houses, or preserve them from want, when she is amply able to do so, is, in my opinion, a stingy nation, a penurious nation, and a mercenary nation, and can not expect either to obtain or retain the respect of her people.

Now, regarding the objections coming from those who would not grant a service pension to these particular soldiers, I have only this to say: That the man who can not rise above the clouds and passions of that great conflict and see that by this policy the best interests of our whole people, both present and future, are subserved—I say the man who can not do that would not be convinced by anything that might be said upon the subject. The man who will not see can not see, and I shall spend no time discussing the subject with him. But I would say to him, Go, learn to love your country, its people, its institutions, and its flag, and then you will be broad enough in your sympathies and liberal enough in your views to appreciate this great boon and blessing to humanity of American citizenship, preserved against your murderous acts by the sacrifices and sufferings of these soldiers.

There are, however, some objections that may be urged, which I propose to discuss. It may be claimed that if this proposition should become the law, it will prevent a reduction of taxation, and the people demand such reduction. I recognize in such an objector a face that has become familiar to the friends of a service pension. It is the face of the man who is against all such legislation. He is a pretended friend, and a real enemy to the measure. It makes no difference to him that his objection has no foundation in fact; that taxes can be largely reduced and the revenues still be amply sufficient to meet the expenditure required. But he will still insist that we can not reduce taxes if we pass this measure; and then after taxes are reduced we will find him vehemently arguing that we can not pass the measure without increasing the taxes, and we must not think of doing that. He is of those who look upon the function of a legislator as arising no higher than to the plane and level of a trick; and belongs to that class of men who are eternally engaged in doing mean little acts in a mean little way, and are afterwards in a chronic state of apology to an alleged conscience therefor.

Depend upon it, sir, the men who were able to discriminate between real and pretended friends when that great struggle was in progress have not lost their power of discrimination. They will not punish their friends believing them to be enemies, nor will they reward their enemies believing them to be friends.

Another objection that may be urged is that cases of disability among the soldiers are already taken care of by existing laws; and we should not grant a service pension until the men are older, and consequently in greater need. The answer to the first part of the objection is that it is not true. The disabled are not taken care of by existing laws. Many, very many, of the men who know they are suffering from their army service are unable to procure a disability pension because comrades are dead or a "hospital record" is wanting. And they are going down in years and want to their graves; suffering for the common necessaries of life, while they see others who did perhaps not one-half the amount of service, but who have fortunately secured a record in some hospital, for some fancied disease, placed on the invalid pension-roll. It is that state of affairs, sir, that is driving the dagger home to the hearts of the men who had most to do in putting down the rebellion. And the only remedy that can relieve this, in whole or in part, is a service pension based upon the principle of these amendments.

Now, as regards the claim that we must wait until the men are older before we pass this measure, I undertake to say in answer to that that there is no case on record, and one can not be found, where a service or any other kind of a pension has ever really benefited a dead man.

Fifty per cent. of the soldiers are now dead; and to delay this matter longer, until the men are older and in greater want, is to court the shameful charge that ingratitude marks the action of our nation in dealing with her preservers.

What stronger evidence is necessary that this action is needed now than the fact that the States are by taxation moving to the relief of these men.

We have in the State of Ohio for two years or more raised money by taxation, now amounting to three-tenths of a mill upon all the taxable property in the State, for the relief of the "indigent Union soldiers, sailors, and marines, and their widows and orphans," thus taxing a State for a necessity which the General Government should meet, because the service was rendered not for the State, but for the United States. But, sir, the State of Ohio believes that it is shameful and disgraceful to permit these men to suffer, and she does not intend that it shall be truthfully said of her she stood by consenting to it. And yet no State ought to be permitted or required to do this when the General Government is amply able to prevent it, and I sincerely hope, for the honor of our people, it will soon be unnecessary.

Another objection urged in this case, as in all similar cases, is that the measure will only benefit the claim agents. This claim-agent objection is what country merchants name an unsalable article of dress-goods—a shop-keeper. It is known throughout the Union as the cloak which covers up a secret opposition to all such legislation.

No soldier to be benefited by the law makes such a complaint. He does not for that reason regard this or similar legislation with disfavor, or ask its repeal when passed, or petition for the staying of the legislative hand. The objection in question deceives no one and convinces no one, because it is not true. And if it were true it can not apply to the principle of these amendments, because the allowance of the pension and the amount would depend upon the Army records and muster-rolls and medical examinations, and the services of an attorney would be as useless and unnecessary as the argument is illogical and untrue.

Another objection is that this antagonizes the wishes of the Grand Army of the Republic, which desires other and different legislation.

My answer to that is, that when that grand body of men formulated a demand of what they at the time thought the country ought to do for the soldiers they had in mind, not so much the ultimate relief which should be asked, but what they hoped to obtain now for the most neccessitous. They saw men who had fought valiantly for this Union in the county poor-houses. They saw the orphans and widows of others begging bread. They asked that the most needy be first cared for. But now the situation is changed. The per diem rated bill had not then been thought of, or at most was under discussion for the first time by the committee on pensions of the organization known as the Union Veterans' Union, then in session at Cleveland, Ohio, which, acting upon the suggestion of its commander-in-chief, first formulated the idea.

The soldiers who have favored a service pension have all the time felt the injustice of giving as much to the man who served least as to him who served longest. But until the principle I am discussing was placed before them they had found no measure which adequately set forth their feeling upon the subject. The large and increasing Treasury surplus had not then received so much public attention as it has since, and the members of the Grand Army did not know then, as they do now, that the Government was able to do more than care for the classes they then designated.

One of the most strongly urged and often repeated arguments against the first "dependent bill" was, that the revenues were not sufficient to meet its requirements. But since the meeting of the last national encampment of the Grand Army, which indorsed the bill as passed by the Senate of this Congress, that organization, as well as all other soldier organizations, has seen that the plea of insufficient revenues is not good as against this demand. And the soldiers everywhere, without regard to organizations, have overwhelmed the Committee on Invalid Pensions of this House with petitions for the passage of a law embodying this principle. And the Grand Army itself, acting by State departments and post organizations, has been foremost in circulating, signing, and forwarding such petitions, until I am certain more Grand Army men have in that way signified their desire for the passage of these amendments than voted for the bill which the Senate passed.

The soldiers now feel that they may well ask themselves the question: If the Government will not grant this just claim when it is abundantly able, when may we expect it to take such action? They feel now when the objection of a want of means is urged that it is only opposition under a false pretense of economy coming from men who intend finally to prevent the legislation. And they demand that the issue shall now be made, and that public men shall declare for or against the measure. They desire to know who the men are that are willing to violate every precedent in our history, and to steel their hearts against a just demand in order to prevent giving a service pension to the Union soldier. They believe in the justice and honesty of the claim they make, and they will submit the issue upon that claim to the people, and abide by the result. But they now demand acts, not words.

Now to the objection that it is proposed to make this service pension additional to disability pensions already granted, or that may be granted, I would reply, the reason upon which such proposed action is based is that of two men serving the same length of time, one of whom is disabled, and for which disability he receives a disability pension; that man has suffered more from the service to the extent indicated by his disability rating than the other, and so should receive more.

At first view this would seem to work a hardship in the cases of those who are really disabled by their service, but can not make proof of that fact, in that they would only be receiving a service pension when their condition ought to entitle them to a greater rating. But upon reflection it will be seen that it is no reason why a man who is disabled by his service, and can prove it, should not receive this treatment because some other man who is likewise disabled can not prove it. Withholding from the one will not benefit the other; nor will giving to the one withhold from the other; and it is difficult to see how justice would be done to the man whom we know, beyond question, has been disabled by the service, if we refuse to give him the benefit of the consideration due to his number of days' service, plus that due to the fact that he was disabled in the service. Absolute justice can not be done in all cases; but we can approximate it. And certainly length of service and disability combined ought to receive more consideration than length of service only.

OBJECTIONS TO THE MEASURE AS PROPOSED BY THE HOUSE COMMITTEE.

In the discussion of these objections I do not wish to be understood as reflecting improperly upon the committee or upon the individual members of the committee. Men honestly differ in their views upon this pension question, but it does seem to me that if the recommendation of the majority report upon that Senate bill 181 shall be carried into law it will be an injustice and a mockery to the men whom it is supposed to benefit. I do not mean to say that the committee intended to attain that result, but the effect is the same as if it had been intended.

Let us judge of it by a comparison with the treatment given to the soldiers of other wars.

In 1818 the Revolutionary soldier who had served nine months or more and was in necessitous circumstances was pensioned at $8 per month.

In 1828 there was added to this roll, at the same rate, all who had served through that war.

In 1832 the Revolutionary roll was further increased by placing upon it, at $8 per month, those who had served two years, and all others who had served six months and less than two years at a proportionate rate.

In 1871 a service pension of $8 per month was granted to the 1812 soldiers who had served sixty days or more. In 1878 this roll was increased so as to include at the same rate all who had served fourteen days or more.

In 1887 a like pension of $8 per month, to begin at age sixty-two or sooner if any disability ordinarily pensionable existed, was granted to the Mexican war soldiers, and this law required only sixty days' service, or in lieu thereof participation in a battle or battles of that war.

Now, judging of the action of our nation in these prior years, does not the patriotic American, who is honest with himself, earnestly wish that the payment of those service pensions had commenced at an earlier period in the lives of the men, so that it would have benefited more of them? Do we now feel that the amount paid was or is too much? Do we not excuse the tardiness of the nation in those cases by the reflection that it was unable to act sooner? Does not the lapse of time between the rendition of the service and the granting of those pensions at once excite the inquiry, "Why did the nation wait so long before granting those pensions?" I believe, sir, that if we respond truly to the promptings of our better natures we will say these payments did not begin soon enough. The amount paid is not too much, and we wish it could have been made more. If I am correct in this, then the argument that a service pension should be paid as soon as the nation is able after the close of a war, and should be sufficient in amount to preserve its beneficiaries from want, becomes irresistible.

Judged by this standard and by the amounts heretofore paid by the nation, how does the bill reported by the committee commend itself to the thinking mind? Why, sir, the number proposed to be benefited is entirely too small. It only includes, prior to age sixty-two, the soldiers who are "totally incapacitated" for the performance of manual labor; in other words, those only whose incapacity is equal to the loss of an arm below the elbow, or a leg below the knee, for that is what "total incapacity" means. This would leave a large number of partially disabled men to drag along for ten or twelve years more, without receiving any assistance from the Government, in whose service they know they were disabled, and that, too, when the Government all the time is abundantly able to grant the needed and well-earned aid.

Again, the amount proposed to be paid by the bill is entirely inadequate. The man who faithfully served two full years, and is "totally incapacitated," receives only $7.30 per month. Another, in like physical condition, who served one full year, gets only $3.65 per month; and those who served less than a year would receive a pittance per month so small as to cause a feeling of shame when it is mentioned. And yet each and all of these classes of soldiers can not get any more although they are in exactly the same physical condition, namely, "totally incapacitated" for the performance of manual labor.

Contrast this with the 14 and 60 day limit as to length of service in the prior wars, and the $8 per month service pension granted in them, and the absolute injustice and wrong of the measure is apparent. It violates all precedent. It violates our sense of justice. It makes an invidious and harmful distinction between the Union soldier and the other soldiers of the Republic who precede him. It arises out of a too close adherence to the idea that length of service alone should determine the amount to be paid and disregards the present condition of the men, the debt the nation owes to them, the nation's ability to care for them, and the demands of fair play and just treatment.

Again, the same injustice that marks its provisions in regard to the men themselves enters into its terms touching their widows, and it makes no provision for the imbecile and helpless minor children.

Now, amend the bill as I propose and these objections, which seem to me to violate every sentiment of patriotic feeling and all sense of justice and equality, will disappear, and the perfected measure will stand forth a fit monument marking the generosity and gratitude of a great nation and a liberal people toward those whose heroism and suffering gave a new lease of life to the Republic. It will give meaning to the term "debt of gratitude" which the nation owes to its defenders.

It will constitute a just, liberal, and wise precedent for the future. It will promote a sense of justice and fairness among our people upon the pension question, and, above all, it will remove the gaunt specter of want, now daily stalking about in the homes of many of these old veterans.

Sir, I have so far considered and argued this subject upon the facts and cold logic of the situation. But I wish to remind the House and the country that, rendering homage to a divinely noble sentiment and truth combined, it becomes us, when we are called upon to consider such topics, to feel that we should come to their consideration, not with hearts steeled against them, not with feelings as hard and unyielding as the stone steps of this Capitol. But, before acting we should ask ourselves this question: If the men whose statues adorn yonder hall, which aforetime was wont to ring with their patriotic eloquence, and those others, whose splendid and costly images of bronze, erected by an admiring and grateful people, command attention in the public grounds and parks of this city, could arise from their now inanimate dust and again counsel us as of old, what would they say is the duty of the United States Congress upon this question?

Nay! If the great army of the dead, who fell from our ranks during the progress of that terrible war, and now repose in sacred but unforgotten graves, could again be marshaled in the blue-coated columns as of yore, and pass in voiceless review here before us; and if, after that long column of speechless heroes had passed by, some Almighty voice should make known to us the wish of the soldier dead for his comrade living, what think you would that voice declare that wish to be upon this question? I ask the members of this House to measure their action upon this matter by a patriotism no less exalted than that which required the sacrifice of 285,000 lives offered upon battle, on skirmish line, in prison pens, and in the fevered and plague-stricken hospitals in order to preserve our nation and our flag.

For once I ask you to let justice and generous sympathy speak with united voice and command the nation to crown the "uncrowned heroes" who passed through the red sea of trial, and hardship, and suffering a quarter of a century ago to preserve that nation's existence.

Defer action upon this tariff bill until the measure I am advocating can be passed. Then bring forward your measure for reducing taxes based upon the idea of saving the American market for Americans, of protecting our nation's industries and our labor, and you will have done that for which generations of Americans yet unborn shall rise up and bless you, and that which will preserve and establish us as a wise and patriotic people among the nations of the earth.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

"A bill that is in the main so moderate." Thus is the Mills bill described in the leading editorial of a Democratic newspaper. "A bill in the main so moderate"—a bill that, in its initial lines, strikes down one of the greatest industries of the United States; a bill that changes the policy of nearly half a century in reference to lumber, that would crush an industry that amounted last year to over one hundred millions of dollars, that would drive our "hewers of wood" into direct, unprotected, disastrous competition with the lower wages of Canada—is such a bill, so far as lumber is concerned, moderate? If it is, then action by Congress that would enter and devastate the workman's cabin is moderate; for my friend from Pennsylvania [MR. MCCORMICK], during the general discussion of this bill, demonstrated that the duty on lumber was a direct benefit to its amount to the lumber workmen, that the amount of duty precisely measured the difference between the wages of American and Canadian workmen, and demonstrated it so ably and conclusively that no gentleman on this floor has attempted to answer him.

Moderate to make lumber free from and after the 1st day of July, 1888? Moderate to take such radical action in such haste as to amount almost to a stampede? But why should we take this very moderate step? What reasons have our friends on the other side of the Chamber given us during the discussion of the lumber paragraphs to suppose the bill in this particular is not extreme? What arguments have they advanced to prove not alone the moderation of this section, but that it will benefit the American people? All through the general debate upon the Mills bill they told us they wanted duties removed, a reduction of revenue, and now and then one braver than his fellows spoke of "free trade" so as to open "the markets of the world" to all American products.

Pass this bill, they said to us, and the "markets of the world" are yours. Pass it, and you will have a ready foreign sale for everything you produce. Surely if that argument applies to one article it applies to all. And yet hardly is the bill taken up for consideration by sections when they tell us they want lumber free. Why? So that the markets of the world will be open to American lumber? Oh, no. Free trade in lumber, they say, will not open other markets for our lumber, but our markets for others, and thus save our beautiful forests. That now seems to be the one idea—excepting "trusts," of course—paramount in the Democratic Congressional mind. Our forests must be saved. They are being wasted so rapidly, the beauty of the country, the health of the people demand that the lumber we need should come from other countries. American lumbermen must suffer that our forests may be saved.

Let me say, sir, it is not waste to cut trees into lumber. What is used for the benefit of mankind is no waste. It is the forest fires, the rot, the decay of years that is waste, and this waste is saved where the lumberman is at work. Our forests will never disappear. Certain uses for timber grow less as others increase. Coal for fuel, wire for fencing, stone and brick for building have largely displaced certain uses for timber. I suspect, sir, the Democrats in Congress are not sincere on this question. They want lumber free as a part of their free-trade crusade work.

That is the long and the short, the height and depth of their proposed moderate action. [Applause.]

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the hammer fell.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be permitted to occupy the floor for five minutes longer without interruption.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. MILLS. I hope we will now have a vote on this line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn; and the question is on striking out line 17.

The motion was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 18: "Laths."
Line 19: "Shingles."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 19 strike out the final "s" in the word "shingles," and add the word "bolts;" so that it will read "shingle-bolts."

Mr. BUCHANAN. The effect of the amendment, if adopted, will be to take shingles off the free-list, where they are placed by this bill, and leave upon the free-list the rough material out of which the shingles are made. The word that I have suggested is a word that is known in many sections of the country, and it means the rough blocks from which the shingles are cut. We hear a great deal about the advisability of importing free of duty raw material for the benefit of our people. My amendment does not affect that question in the least.

It is hurled back to us with derision, almost with disdain, by the other side of the House when we say to them that they are free-traders. They say, "No; we deny it." We are "revenue reformers," and we want "free raw material." The effect of my amendment is, as I have said, to give them free raw material in this regard; but it goes further, it protects the labor which places the raw material in manufactured form.

These bolts or blocks are either sawed or riven into shingles. The shingles themselves after they are riven are shaved and jointed, and this is all done by the expenditure of labor. Now if you are not free-traders, do not vote against this amendment. If you are free-traders, show your faith by voting against the amendment. Come out of your camps and place yourselves fairly and squarely on one side or the other of this question.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Did the gentleman observe that the article of lumber to which he refers is included in lines 9 and 10?

Mr. MORSE. Oh, he does not care about that. Let us have a vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. I believe if this bill is the perfect thing it is pretended to be, and, as I understand, in a caucus held in this Hall, it was held to be, then there was a purpose in placing this paragraph, "shingles," there where we find it. I purpose to meet that question now, and say, All right, gentlemen, you want raw material to come in free; let it come free. But if you want to protect the labor which puts that raw material into manufactured form, then adopt this amendment. Now, let us see your faith.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman will see that this comes in free already, under line 9 of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am not responsible for line 9. It did not emanate from my brain or heart.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is already a portion of the bill, so far as it can be at this time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman finds redundancy of expression in the bill, it is for the framers of the bill to explain, not for me.

And I am glad to say to the gentleman——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then the point you make is that you must put in a provision yourself.

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir; my point is that you must come out from behind your cry of free raw material, but really no duty on manufactured products, and place yourselves fairly and squarely on one side or the other. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side, and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MORSE. We will not do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, of course you will not. You say one thing and vote the other way. [Jeers on the Democratic side.]

That is all right, gentlemen. Keep up your howling on the other side. I have a right as a Representative of the people to express my opinion of these paragraphs, and I mean to do it; and in view of the evident preparations for the coming influenza upon the other side [laughter], I will recite a verse which I happen to find lying upon my desk:

From Oregon, the Pioneer State,
To the mouth of the Susquehanna,
The good people will settle the fate
Of Cleveland and his red bandana.

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clapboards, pine or spruce.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Some remarks which I made here yesterday in regard to the duty upon staves were answered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who said that they were not a Northern product, because staves in great quantities were shipped from the South as well as from the North; and, among other things which he said, was that staves to the value of $138,000 were shipped abroad from my own port of Belfast, Me.

That statement, I think, must have been a lapsus linguæ upon the part of the gentleman, for on looking over the statistics he will find it to be entirely incorrect.

Now, what are the facts about staves? It is true that large quantities of staves are shipped from the South, but that does not prove that this provision in the Mills bill is not sectional, because those are hardwood staves which are shipped, many of them to the West Indies for the purpose of making molasses hogsheads, and there are no staves manufactured in Canada that compete with them. They do not need any duty to protect them, because they have no competition. But the staves that are made in Maine are made of soft wood, and are used in large measure for cement casks, and are marketed in this country. The same kinds of staves are made in Canada, and come in direct competition with ours. The statement I made yesterday is correct, that during the existence of the reciprocity treaty, when we had no duty upon staves, we lost the industry; it went over to New Brunswick; and, as I said, the staves were carried from New Brunswick up the Hudson and to ports in different parts of this country by vessels built and owned in the province of New Brunswick and other parts of Canada.

Mr. KERR. What was the final effect of the reciprocity treaty upon the price?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Our product was driven out of the market by the reciprocity treaty, but our industry in staves revived after that treaty was abolished; and it exists now in my State in a healthy condition.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Then, as a matter of fact, the putting of a tariff on staves raised the price of the staves in the market, while the removal of the former tariff put the price down?

Mr. MILLIKEN. The putting of a duty upon staves unquestionably protected the industry upon this side of the line against the competition of cheaper staves manufactured by cheap labor in Canada.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. And raised the price here?

Mr. MILLIKEN. It had the same effect that the duty has everywhere. The gentleman knows what that is.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have but five minutes, and I do not believe we could go into such an extended discussion of that subject as the gentleman's question would lead to in so short a time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to answer a question which was raised on the other side yesterday. When I claimed that the Mills bill was sectional, gentlemen asked what we had to offer in place of it. To that I reply that at the beginning of this session I introduced a bill which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and was undoubtedly buried there deeper than if it had been at the bottom of the tomb of the Capulets; at any rate, it never has been heard of since. I now send that bill to the desk, and ask the Clerk to read it as a part of my remarks, to show what means I would propose of reducing the revenue.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill. During the reading the time of Mr. MILLIKEN expired, when, on motion of Mr. MAFFETT, by unanimous consent, he was permitted to proceed for five minutes more.

The bill was read in full, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the laws providing for the assessment and collection of internal-revenue taxes upon tobacco and the manufactures thereof be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That sugar of all standards, when imported, shall be exempt from duty on and after the 1st day of January, A. D., 1889: Provided, That this section of this act shall not apply to the sugar product of any country which shall lay an export duty upon such sugar; nor to sugar imported in vessels other than those of the exporting country and the United States of America; nor to sugar from countries refusing to vessels of the United States of America the same treatment in their ports as to light-house and other charges that are granted to the vessels of such countries in American ports; nor to the sugar of any country which shall not make as favorable terms for the entry of the products of the United States in its ports as for the entry of the products of other countries the most favored by it in this respect.

SEC. 3. There shall be paid out of the Treasury, from any moneys not otherwise appropriated, to the producers of sugar in the United States of America, in lieu of the duties hereby repealed, within thirty days after the 1st day of January each year, a sum equal to the present rate of duty upon their product, having regard to standard and quality, the sum to be paid each producer to be ascertained and awarded through the internal-revenue or customs officers under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now will the gentleman explain why there should be a bounty paid to sugar-raisers any more than to the raisers of any other agricultural product in this country?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will. It is because the sugar-producers of Louisiana have already got thousands upon thousands of dollars invested in that industry, and I do not believe that the Government of the United States ought to pass any law that would ruin those investments. I do not believe that the Government has a right to legislate away the accumulations of years out of the hands of its citizens in that way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to this bill of mine, I want to say in the first place that it would be certain to reduce the revenue and the surplus in the Treasury, while on the other hand the bill now before the House is by no means certain to do that. This Mills bill comes in here with flying colors as a measure to reduce the revenue; it comes in with the recommendation of the President of the United States, who looks with alarm upon the great surplus that is in the Treasury, and warns Congress of the necessity of reducing it. And yet, sir, it is a matter of great doubt whether, if this Mills bill becomes a law, it will not rather increase than reduce the revenue, whether the greater importation of goods from abroad, which will result from the lowering of the duties, will not increase the revenues to an amount at least equal to the reduction made by putting certain articles on the free-list and the proposed reduction of the tobacco tax.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say another thing about the bill which I introduced. It attacks no industry in this country. It protects the sugar-grower at the same time that it reduces the duty. It harms no man in the land. It threatens no interest in this country. Again, it would reduce the duty upon one of the prime necessaries of life, an article that goes into the consumption of every family in the country. Men use sugar in Texas as well as in Maine, in California as well as in New York; therefore there is nothing sectional about this proposed reduction, and I do not believe there is any way in which you can reduce the revenue of this Government and do no harm to any industry in the country and at the same time carry comfort to so many homes in the United States as by passing this bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the paragraph.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of line 20 add, "not planed nor worked."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer that amendment for this reason: I do not know whether it was the purpose of the Committee on Ways and Means to allow the importation free of clapboards planed and wrought or not, but I do know that the provision as it stands in the bill would be susceptible of that interpretation. Clapboards are sawed, then planed, and then some kinds are tongued and rabeted, the planing and tonguing and rabeting being of late years performed in one operation by the same machine.

Now, I wish a distinct and authoritative expression by the Committee of the Whole, either by accepting or rejecting this amendment, as to whether this provision in the bill is intended to include these products or not. If it is so intended, then it does not merely permit the admission free into this country of raw material, but it permits the free entry of a manufactured product of the planing-mill. It seems to me that this amendment ought, on principle as well as from considerations of justice, to be adopted.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to let this subject of putting lumber and its products on the free-list pass without saying a word. In the State which I have the honor in part to represent there are thousands of men engaged in the lumbering business whose interests will be affected by this bill. Sir, those men are to-day receiving wages ample and sufficient to satisfy them, wages that are bringing men from Maine, from New York, from the old country, to the pineries of Wisconsin; and to strike down their interests, as I believe this bill proposes to do, and place them on a level with the pauper labor of Canada is something that is unnecessary, cruel, and vicious, something that requires of me a protest, and as long as I have a vote in this House it shall be given against such legislation. It is claimed here that unless we pass this bill our forests will be denuded, although gentlemen on both sides have admitted that it will probably not make a difference of 1,000 feet in the cut. But, sir, the practical effect will be to strike down the laborer in this industry and make his wages less in consequence of the competition of the Canadian laborer.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman. This bill will strike down the interests of the farmers of my State, who now have a large local market, a market nearly equal to the supply. They sell to the lumbermen the oats, the hay, the corn, the pork, everything that the farm produces. It will strike down the merchants; it will strike down every interest. And I believe that at the next election you will hear a louder protest from the people of Wisconsin against this legislation than you have heard recently from Oregon. [Applause on the Republican side].

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BUCHANAN, it was rejected—there being ayes 73, noes 84.

Mr. BURROWS. I move to amend by striking out line 19.

The CHAIRMAN. Line 19 has been passed; the Committee of the Whole is considering line 20.

Mr. BURROWS. I move, then, to amend by striking out line 20.

The amendment of Mr. BURROWS was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Logs.

Provided, That if any export duty is laid upon the above-mentioned articles, or either of them, by any country whence imported, all said articles imported from said country shall be subject to duty as now provided by law.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to amend by adding to the paragraph just read the proviso which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That all said articles shall be subject to the same duty as now provided by law when imported from any country which denies in its ports, to fishing or other vessels of the United States authorized to touch and trade at foreign ports, the same commercial privileges, including the right to buy provisions, bait, and supplies, and to transship any portion of cargo, as are granted to similar vessels of such country in the ports of the United States.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, does a point of order lie against this amendment that it is not germane to this portion of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. There is no doubt about its being germane.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I hardly think it is. We are now discussing the lumber schedule. This is a provision in regard to fish.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] make a point of order?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do.

Mr. DINGLEY. I want to be heard on the point of order, if it is made seriously. This is simply a further limitation in addition to the proviso in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (after examining the amendment). The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order. The point of order is overruled.

[Mr. DINGLEY withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. WILSON of Minnesota. The question before the committee, Mr. Chairman, is one solely whether the proposed amendment is germane to the bill or not.

Mr. LODGE. That question has already been decided.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. But I understand there is an amendment proposed, and the question is whether that is germane or not.

Mr. LODGE. The Chair has ruled the amendment in order.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. What was the decision of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decided that the amendment was germane.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. As that has been disposed of, then I will not occupy the floor longer, as I do not wish to discuss the merits.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have sat here for the last week listening with patient attention to the discussion of the different paragraphs of this section of the bill and I have so far remained silent. On yesterday, when the paragraph in lines 11 and 12 was under discussion in this House and voted on, myself and the gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] were the only two gentlemen on this side of the House who voted to strike those lines from the bill. In justice to myself and in justice to my constituency I desire to explain the reason why I so voted. I did it for the purpose of moving at the proper time, if I could, an amendment to this bill providing that the lumber schedule should be reduced annually 33⅓ per cent. until it came upon the free-list; but the House voted down the motion to strike out those lines.

I stand here as the representative of one of the largest lumber constituencies in the United States. The produce of the Saginaw River during the last year was 779,000,000 feet of lumber. That section in which the principal portion of the entire lumber product of Michigan is produced is represented on this floor by my colleague [Mr. FISHER] and by myself. I could point to you from the bridges at Saginaw to-day a continuous line up and down that river as far as the eye can reach of smoke-stacks, of mill chimneys, and docks on either side loaded with lumber the product of those mills.

I have been somewhat amused to find prairie chickens from the prairie fields of the Northwest, from Iowa and Kansas, standing up upon the floor of this House to protect Saginaw lumber. [Applause.] And I have been accused of neglecting the interest I represent. Why, sir, as I have said, I have listened to all this conversation (I call it conversation) upon this floor, and I have heard of the great benefits that labor has received by reason of your protective tariff. But when did you ever hear under that system of protection of its ever protecting the laboring man one dollar's worth in the world? [Applause on the Democratic side of the House.] We employ thousands of men in our lumber industry, but how are they protected? Within a few miles of the Canadian line we have found year after year that our lumbermen, instead of protecting the American laborer, would go into the province of Ontario and bring over cheap Canadian labor, bring them across the river and through the lines, and greet them with a good morning as they passed out of the custom-house and came into competition with American labor whom you pretend to protect. That is the way you protect American labor. [Applause on the Democratic side of the House.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. You say that has been permitted in your district?

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Where is the United States district attorney up there that he does not enforce the statute?

Mr. WEBER. Why did you not apply to the Secretary of the Treasury, as I did, to enforce the law and protect your labor?

Mr. TARSNEY. Now, sir, while my desire was, and it is my earnest desire yet, to see this bill so amended that those who have invested their money upon the basis of this existing but false theory and false law should have time in which to adjust their business to meet the change proposed, yet, sir, when I come to contemplate the fact that all over this country to-day, with an overflowing Treasury, we have a pauperized people—— [Cries of "Oh," and derisive laughter on the Republican side.] Go on, gentlemen, I repeat the assertion. With a tax-list that is bringing into the Treasury of the United States over $1,000,000 every day, more than we need by one-half, and when I realize the fact that this money, so needed in the business, in the commercial interests of the country, is drained like draining the very life-blood that flows through the veins, under this vicious system of taxation, and is daily being absorbed in this manner, I look forward, I must confess, with very fearful forebodings to that condition of things which must eventually bring about universal ruin and bankruptcy to the people of this land.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS. If I can be recognized I will yield the floor to my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan will be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. TARSNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to ask a question for information.

Mr. TARSNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BURROWS. Permit me to ask the question if it is true that the lumbermen of your locality go into Canada and hire cheap labor and bring it into your district?

Mr. TARSNEY. They advertise over there and bring laborers in. They send agents from Michigan into Canada, and they are continually bringing them in.

Mr. WEBER. I asked the question of the gentleman a few moments ago, why he did not invoke the aid of the Secretary of the Treasury to stop that, as I did in my district, and succeeded?

Mr. TARSNEY. I will come to that. I yield now to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Michigan says protection affords no relief to the laboring men. I ask if in making that statement he includes the laboring men who own the mills and timber lands? [Laughter.]

Mr. TARSNEY. Oh, no; that is quite a different question.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have heard various opinions expressed about the results of this protective law upon the people of this country. According to my recollection, the last census shows that there were 44,019 industries in this country protected under the protective tariff laws. Sixty million of people have been paying tribute to them. If it be true, as stated by some of our Republican brethren over there, that the removal of the duty on lumber will not decrease its price, then for God's sake what do you want of this protection?

You are not hurting the manufacturer if you place it upon the free-list. If upon the other hand it does increase the price of lumber $2 per thousand feet by thus fixing it upon the tariff laws, who is the person who pays that tribute? Let us take into consideration the tens of thousands of people who consume that lumber. We are not to legislate for the benefit of the few at the expense of the great multitude.

Mr. BREWER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TARSNEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. BREWER. If that is your opinion, why did you pass through the tellers and vote with us upon the proposition to strike out these lines in reference to manufactured lumber?

Mr. TARSNEY. I did not.

Mr. BREWER. I understood you to say that you and Mr. SOWDEN on that side were the only gentlemen who did pass between the tellers from that side of the House.

Mr. TARSNEY. Oh, I did not understand the gentleman's question. I have already explained that I did it for the purpose of presenting at the proper time such an amendment to the bill as I believe ought to be made to enable those who have put their money in the business to prepare to meet the change and conform to the changed conditions.

Mr. BREWER. But why did you vote to restore the tariff on lumber, when, according to your own view, it is prejudicial to the ten thousand consumers that you pretend to be speaking for?

Mr. TARSNEY. Do not ask any questions. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I say do not ask because I have but a very few minutes.

Now, I desire to send to the Clerk's desk, to be read for the information of the committee, a table of wages, compiled by the Board of Trade of Saginaw in 1886, showing the wages that are paid in the mills upon the Saginaw River upon the protective system.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WEBER was recognized.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan, representing an important lumber district, be allowed five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. TARSNEY. I wish now to suggest a few comments upon that table.

Mr. COX. With the permission of my friend from Michigan, I would like to have a little matter read from the desk.

Mr. TARSNEY. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I ask the Clerk to read this dispatch.

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. LOUIS, June 6—12.12 p. m.

Cleveland nominated by acclamation.

[Loud applause on the Democratic side, followed by counter applause and cheers on the Republican side.]

Mr. TARSNEY. Now, if this interruption will not be taken out of my time, let me explain that table a little. This table shows the rate of wages paid, the highest and the lowest, and I presume no gentleman will question its accuracy, for it is prepared by the board of trade of my city. We find the rate of wages running from $1.25, in some instances, to $3.25, $3.50, and $4.

Mr. KEAN. And $5.

Mr. TARSNEY. I do not think there are any at five. Yes, there are one or two, I believe. And these men are skilled sawyers, the gang-men and the scientific engineers who manage the machinery. They are the men who receive the higher wages. Now how many of these are in one mill? There is one engineer, or two at most; and if two, the assistant engineer receives but one-half as much as his superior. The sawyer receives a high rate of wages; the foreman receives a high rate; but the great masses are working at from $1.25 to $1.50 per day. There is your protection to American labor.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Is that not more than a man gets on the railroads and the farms in the Northwest?

Mr. TARSNEY. No.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I say it is, and that is all there is of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. TARSNEY. Well, you can settle that to suit yourself. I say no.

Mr. BLAND. The lumbermen, I suppose, are more charitable than the farmers.

Mr. TARSNEY. I never knew in all my experience any one of your manufacturers that ever paid a workingman a dollar more than he was compelled to pay, and you never will find one. Wages of men are regulated by the law of supply and demand.

Mr. FUNSTON. Answer this question: Is there a farmer in your State that pays a dollar a day to the men he employs?

Mr. TARSNEY. But he boards the men.

Mr. WEAVER (to Mr. FUNSTON). Are you opposed to taking the duty off lumber?

Mr. FUNSTON. I say there is not a farmer in the State of Michigan who pays his farm hands a dollar a day. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. Are you opposed to taking the duty off lumber?

Mr. FUNSTON. I am for every man being paid what he is worth.

Mr. ROGERS. Will you answer the question? [Laughter].

Mr. FUNSTON (to Mr. ROGERS). Have you got a man in your State that pays his men 75 cents a day? You do not pay your men 50 cents per day.

Mr. WEAVER. I want you to answer my question. Are you opposed to taking the duty off lumber?

Mr. OWEN (to Mr. WEAVER). Take your seat until the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] answers the other question.

Mr. FUNSTON. Yes, gentlemen; one at a time.

Mr. WEAVER (to Mr. FUNSTON). Are you opposed to taking the duty off lumber.

Mr. FUNSTON. Go back to Iowa and have your question answered next fall by the people of your district. You will have all you can do to manage them.

Mr. WEAVER. I dare you to answer it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FUNSTON. I will answer it in my own way and in my own time. There is one thing——

Mr. WEAVER. Are you opposed to taking the duty off lumber?

Mr. FUNSTON. I want to answer you this way—— [Jeers on the Democratic side.] We can always tell—your side refuse to let me answer.

Mr. WEAVER. Are you opposed to taking the duty off lumber? Yes or no?

Mr. FUNSTON. We can always tell—— [Jeers and loud interruptions on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WEAVER. Are you opposed to taking the duty off lumber?

Mr. FUNSTON. I will answer that question at the proper time and in my own way. I say you do not pay your farm hands a dollar a day in your State. Either admit my charge or refute it, and I will then answer.

Mr. WEAVER. I challenge you to answer my question.

Mr. FUNSTON. Stick to the text. You will not find a farmer in your State that pays his farm hands a dollar a day. [Great confusion in the Hall.]

The CHAIRMAN. The House will come to order. No business will be transacted until order is restored. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] has expired.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not responsible for these interruptions.

Mr. BREWER. I hope the time occupied by these interruptions will not be taken out of my colleague's time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman had expired before the interruption occurred. [Laughter.] Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WEBER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

Mr. BREWER. I want to ask my colleague a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER] is recognized.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I do not rise for the purpose of taking part in the debate, but simply to ask the indulgence of the House to make a single observation. I think it would be well to get one of Mr. Edison's phonographs in order to record such a scene as this for the contemplation of posterity. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEBER. I would be glad to have a phonograph put in operation here while the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] answers the question I asked him a few moments ago. He very kindly yielded to me for a question and then stopped short. Now, under the rule, I have five minutes, and I desire to yield to him so much of that time as he requires to give me a straightforward answer to the question I put to him, namely, "Why do you not apply to the Secretary of the Treasury and invoke his aid to enforce the law relating to contract labor?"

Mr. TARSNEY. I am not the district attorney for the district of Michigan.

Mr. FORD. Will my colleague allow me to answer that question?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. TARSNEY. We have law officers whose duty it is to do that. We have also citizens there who have done it and who are doing it to-day, citizens who are interested in this matter, and I thank God that the time has gone by when even in the State of Michigan the contract-labor law can be violated.

Mr. PERKINS. I thought you said it was violated all the time.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, of the two minutes which I yielded to the gentleman to answer my question, about one minute remains, and he is still at liberty to proceed to answer the question.

Mr. TARSNEY. I have answered your question, sir.

Mr. WEBER. To the best of your ability?

Mr. TARSNEY. I am here attending to my public duties as a Representative upon this floor——

Mr. REED. We had not noticed that. [Laughter.]

Mr. TARSNEY. I have been here for months; I have not been in Michigan for six months.

Mr. WEBER. But when my constituents living upon the border called upon me and directed my attention to violations of the law, I did not answer them that I was here attending to my duties as a Representative, but I notified the Treasury Department and had the abuse stopped. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TARSNEY. And in the United States court at Detroit cases have been prosecuted.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I asked you if these violations were still going on, and you said they were.

Mr. TARSNEY. They were, last winter.

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] will devote his great abilities and some of his time to the practical solution of the difficulty in that way, instead of wasting the midnight oil in writing speeches and posing as a pretended friend of the laboring man, he will be of some practical benefit to the laboring man; which he is not now. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLAND. As I understood the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARNSEY], he stated that advertisements for laborers were sent into Canada; now, where is there any law to prevent that?

Mr. WEBER. During this discussion——

Mr. BLAND. I want an answer to that question.

Mr. WEBER. I am going to answer it.

Mr. BLAND. Is there any law to prevent Canadians coming into Michigan?

Mr. WEBER. I am going to answer the gentleman. During all the debates it has been iterated and reiterated on this floor that our "robber barons," our "piratical lumber millionaires" have been going to Canada and bringing into this country this cheap labor under contract to compete with our American labor, and it has been affirmed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] this morning more emphatically perhaps than upon any previous occasion. Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Michigan and to the House that there are no more Canadian dinner-pails coming across the Suspension Bridge since the Secretary of the Treasury has enforced the law, upon my calling his attention to it directly after being requested to do so by my constituents.

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan. The Canadian laborers do not come over in the morning and go back at night. They come over and spend the winter in our lumber woods, and there is no law to prevent it.

Mr. WEBER. If they come here they violate the law.

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan. They do not violate any law.

Mr. WEBER. If gentlemen will assist in the enforcement of the law where these grievances exist there will be no difficulty.

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan. There is no law to prevent their coming over. They come over all along the border, work on this side during the winter, and take away the wages which would otherwise be earned by American laborers.

Mr. WEBER. It is suggested to me here that the grievance of which gentlemen on the other side complain may be more useful to them than the remedy.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I arise for the purpose simply of answering the question which the gentleman from New York put to my colleague [Mr. TARSNEY].

Mr. REED. And which your colleague did not answer.

Mr. FORD. I did not suppose the gentleman from New York was so unsophisticated as to think the lumbermen undertook to violate our laws with reference to the importation of contract labor. They do not attempt that; but this is the way they operate: They put advertisements in the newspapers in Canada saying that a great demand is now existing in the State of Michigan for men to work in the lumber woods. Only last winter an advertisement appeared in the Toronto Mail, I think, which read something after this fashion: "Wante', ten thousand men to work in the lumber woods at Saginaw." One of the Saginaw papers, in copying this article from the Toronto paper, said: "We advise the men in Canada not to come here; no men are wanted here in the lumber woods at all; the market is already overstocked; within the last ten years wages have declined 25 to 40 per cent." These lumber operators never undertake, Mr. Chairman, to go to Canada and contract for the importation of Canadian laborers; but by means of these deceptive advertisements they get them into the country, and thus "flank" the law, which is designed to keep such laborers out.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I rise merely to have the two gentlemen from Michigan, both on the same side of the House, reconcile their statements. One gentleman [Mr. TARSNEY] said in a very emphatic way that contract labor was imported by the lumbermen——

Mr. OWEN. By the car-load.

Mr. BAYNE. Imported by the car-load into Michigan under advertisements for contract labor inserted in the Canadian newspapers. His colleague [Mr. FORD] denies that there is any violation of the law by bringing in contract labor from a foreign country. The question of veracity does not arise between any gentleman on this side and a gentleman on the other side, but the question of veracity seems to lie between the two gentlemen from Michigan. Now, I would like very much—and I yield the remainder of my time for that purpose—that these two gentlemen would reconcile that question of veracity which they themselves have raised between themselves as to this matter.

Mr. MCMILLIN. You and your colleague, Judge KELLEY, should settle your differences first.

Mr. BAYNE. I have repeatedly said that I am not responsible for all the utterances of my friend, Judge KELLEY. [Laughter.] He is an optimist.

A MEMBER. What is that? [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYNE. He looks on the sunny side of everything, and especially on the sunny side of the future of the South. I do not look upon the future of the South with such an optimistic view, unless you gentlemen of the South will reconcile your views with better business ideas and better methods. When you come to do that I shall join with my colleague in his great expectations respecting your future development; but at present I can not take that view.

But I rose for the purpose of having the two Representatives from Michigan reconcile their statements, which are diametrically opposed to each other.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, there is no contradiction between my colleague [Mr. FORD] and myself. My colleague's statements, which supplement what I said, simply demonstrate that there is a great deal more devilment going on up in that part of the country than I had informed the House about. And I say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] that I thank God Judge KELLEY is not responsible for the gentleman's utterances or his conduct. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Now, sir, the rate of wages which I have shown you—and those are the mill wages—continues how long? Our mills generally open about the 1st of May and close from the 15th of November to the 1st of December. That is the extent of the sawing season. Now, take the rate of wages—$1.25 a day—and consider that the work continues only six or seven months in the year; and how much, under this so-called protective system, does a laboring man receive for the support of himself, his wife and family? That is the point I want to get at.

Another question. If one of these laboring men is so prudent and thrifty as to be able to save money to buy himself a little lot and to build a house, then when he buys from his employer 10,000 feet of lumber, the cost to that workingman who produces the lumber is $20 more than it would be if your theory were correct.

Mr. BREWER. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BREWER. Are you in favor of placing lumber on the free-list, or are you opposed to it?

Mr. TARSNEY. I am in favor of this, and I supposed you had comprehension enough to understand it——

Mr. BREWER. I did not understand my colleague's position.

Mr. TARSNEY. With a pertinacity which has been almost impertinent I have labored night and day with members of the Committee on Ways and Means and members of the House to have an amendment adopted to this bill which would place lumber upon a sliding scale. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Laugh, will you? You will be braying in a little while. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Why, Mr. Chairman, as I look across the aisle of this House I observe some persons who are laughing now, but in my humble judgment their ears are too short for the animals they represent. [Derisive cries on the Republican side.]

I have explained my position on this question—the position on which I stand to-day. But I stand here to refute some of the assertions which have been made here which I know to be untrue. And I am willing to go before my constituents at home and repeat to them what I say on the floor of this House to-day.

Mr. BREWER. The gentleman has not answered my question. Will he answer it—yes or no?

Mr. TARSNEY. I have told you what I propose to do.

Mr. BREWER. What are you in favor of?

Mr. TARSNEY. If the time comes, and come it will, and I shall stand here to say whether I shall yield to the amendment or whether I shall not, whether I shall vote on this floor in the interest of lower taxation for the benefit of the entire people, although some of my own people may suffer slightly by it, then as a patriotic citizen, representing a patriotic constituency, I shall vote in favor of that lower taxation for the entire people. In that accomplishment of the general good I feel confident my constituency will approve of my course. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me ask the gentleman from Michigan a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. TARSNEY. Certainly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In that connection I should like to ask the gentleman this question. We have been told, but we may have been wrongly informed, that in the canvass between our late friend on this floor, Mr. Horr, and our brother, TARSNEY, the latter was successful because he was deemed the better protectionist.

Mr. TARSNEY. That is not true, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I thought it was; and as the statement has been made more than once, I have asked the gentleman from Michigan whether it was true or not.

Mr. TARSNEY. No, sir; it is not true. In the campaigns in which I have been a candidate for Congress in that district the question of tariff was the leading one. I stood upon the rostrum in every town in my district and advocated the doctrine of the reduction of taxation. It is only fair to say that in the canvass between myself and Mr. Horr the tariff question was the one chiefly involved.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman who was successful persuaded the people of that district that he was a better protectionist than his opponent, Mr. Horr.

Mr. TARSNEY. I wish to say here on this floor, and it can not have been forgotten, that I voted for the consideration of the so-called Morrison tariff bill in the Forty-ninth Congress. I went home to my people after I gave that vote and I was attacked by high protectionists. The gentleman whose name headed the memorial presented by my colleague [Mr. BURROWS] was at that time the Democratic mayor of the city of Saginaw. He is a protectionist. He opposed me. He wrote in the newspapers against me. He placed upon every door-step of every house in that city a flyer, "Do not vote for TIM TARSNEY; he is a free-trader." I spoke in that city the night before the election, and I said to them that I had been accused of being an enemy of my own surroundings. If that were true I was my own enemy, because everything I had was centered in Saginaw. I told them that I had voted for the consideration of the so-called Morrison bill and I told them I would do it again. I did do it again. Notwithstanding those statements, not leaving my position in the slightest doubt as to what I was for and what I was against, the next day after that speech I carried the city of Saginaw by a larger majority than the mayor of the city had ever received. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I carried the county of Saginaw on that platform by 1,650 majority.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Did you tell your people during the campaign that if you were elected you would vote to put lumber on the free-list?

Mr. TARSNEY. I did not.

Mr. KERR. Were you charged with being a free-trader? Are you not in fact a free-trader in lumber?

Mr. TARSNEY. I am a fair trader. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TARSNEY. I wish to ask, by unanimous consent, that I may have leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD. There are some tables which I wished to present in connection with my remarks which I did not get time to refer to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection and it is ordered accordingly.

Mr. FARQUHAR rose.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment is now in order except the one moved by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], upon which debate is exhausted.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will move a pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in the list or scale of wages presented by the gentleman from Michigan we find the lowest upon the unskilled scale is at the rate of $1.25 a day. The highest wages are those of foremen and head sawyers and engineers. That skilled labor receives from $3.50 to $4 a day.

Now, in this connection, Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan one or two questions. We will between us consume the five minutes in a friendly way, without interruption by others. Let me ask him whether the engineers and sawyers in his district belong to labor organizations?

Mr. TARSNEY. As distinct organizations?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Do they belong to organizations of skilled labor?

Mr. TARSNEY. If they do, I am not aware of it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Do the unskilled laborers in your district belong to any labor organizations?

Mr. TARSNEY. I am unable to answer except in this way, that I understand there are organizations of labor known as Knights of Labor, and I have no doubt they do belong to that organization.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is, generally speaking, then, you think both the skilled and the unskilled labor is organized?

Mr. TARSNEY. I am not certain of that.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Well, as to the mill men?

Mr. TARSNEY. I do not know that all of them are; I know some are.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I am not quite so well acquainted with that district during the last four or five years; prior to that time I was, and I would like to get this information. Let me ask if your district is subject to many strikes on the scales of wages?

Mr. TARSNEY. Not many; we had one strike in 1886.

Mr. FARQUHAR Was that a strike of a single assembly of the Knights, or several assemblies helping one out?

Mr. TARSNEY. I do not know as to that. I am not a Knight of Labor myself——

Mr. FARQUHAR. Certainly.

Mr. TARSNEY. I could not be if I would, nor would I be if I could.

Mr. FARQUHAR. But it would seem that you ought to know about these things, as you speak in the interests of labor in your own district. Now, as your district has been free from strikes, and as you come here as the champion of wages of your people. I want to know if you are paying less wages in your district than what others are paying in other parts of Michigan or in Wisconsin.

Mr. TARSNEY. I do not know the rate of wages in Wisconsin.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Well, is it your opinion that the average rate paid in your district is about the same in money value as it is in corresponding industries in Wisconsin?

Mr. TARSNEY. I repeat, I do not know the rates in Wisconsin.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The presentation of some figures made here by Mr. GUENTHER and Mr. BOUTELLE seemed to furnish food for considerable thought in that direction.

Mr. TARSNEY. I am only speaking from personal knowledge. I am not quoting figures of which I know nothing.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Your labor, unskilled and skilled, as I understand it, is organized. Now, I am free to say that all organized labor in America is protection labor, and the very fact that any man is a Knight of Labor or Trades Unionist indicates that he is a protectionist, and the reason that the Knights of Labor are so closely united is that it is an acknowledged protection to those who are in these organizations of labor.

Mr. TARSNEY. Protection against capital!

Mr. FARQUHAR. Ah! protection against a reduction of wages. Now, if you are taking care of your district as I take care of mine in these matters, and as every Representative on this floor ought to do, I hold that you should be able to speak from information upon these points which are essential in the consideration of the present subject; you ought to be able to give the rate of wages as compared with other districts, and also the fact of the existence of these various organizations.

I do not want men to come here and talk to us of pauperized labor, when an intelligent Congressman can go to his own district, where he is respected for his opinions, and elevate the unorganized labor to a better wage, and thus settle this clamor as to a tariff bill and reduction of duty.

Mr. TARSNEY. It has been settled twice already by a vote of my constituents.

Mr. FARQUHAR, You say, then, that your strikes are stopped, and you intimate from your argument that your men are satisfied; but I will tell you they never will be satisfied to take up their little holdings in the Saginaw Valley and tramp across the Canadian line and take 20 per cent. less wages for their labor than they can get in protective America. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLAND. Does a protective tariff prevent strikes?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Nobody pretends that it does. There are other conditions which prevail.

Mr. BLAND. I believe in labor striking against injustice and in protecting itself. But what I want to get at is what is the use of the tariff if it does not protect the labor as you claim?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Men have to strike in order to secure their rights at times. No tariff can prevent the necessity for that. When you had slavery you had no strikes; slaves never strike; but men who go South now may bring about strikes.

Mr. BLAND. Then protection does not prevent strikes?

Mr. FARQUHAR. No, sir; protection does not prevent them. Protection elevates the condition of the laboring classes and neutralizes strikes. As the workman rises in the scale of intelligence he has a keener sense of his rights and an increased courage to stand up for them, strike or no strike.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. MILLS. I renew it.

Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] admonished us to consider well before we conferred this great boon on Canada of removing the duty on lumber to be imported into this country. It has always been understood from the time that we first read of commercial transactions in history that it requires two parties at least to make a trade, and the reasons why trades are made is because each party to the trade is benefited thereby.

I do not doubt but that Canada will receive the benefit of the removal of the duties on lumber, nor do I doubt that the people of the United States will receive a greater benefit from it than Canada. The trade will be beneficial to both people. I am not at all astonished that the people of Canada and the great leader of the protection party in the Parliament of Canada is deeply impressed with the importance of the action we are taking on this part of the bill. I am not at all astonished at the expressions quoted from his speech by the gentleman from Maine.

If my friend had been a careful and attentive reader of the speech he would have found that the speaker said that both countries would have been benefited by the removal of the barriers to commercial exchange. He said the reciprocity treaty was beneficial to both countries, and more to the United States than to Canada; and so of the measure we are now discussing. He did not say that we were helping Canada alone by our bill, but that we were helping ourselves as well. Let me read a paragraph from his recent speech in which he refers to this bill we are now considering. He says:

> When we take the proposal to put lumber on the free-list, as it is proposed in the Mills bill, a bill regarding which I still entertain a very sanguine hope that it will become law during the present session of Congress—I say when we find that to be the case, we know at once that it is not for the purpose of furthering Canadian interests. It is done simply because in carrying out the policy of the Democratic party of the United States, they desire to make that article free in the interests of their own country and in the interests of their own people.

He well represents the Democratic policy on this question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Who are you reading from?

Mr. MILLS. I am reading from the budget speech of Sir Charles Tupper in the Canadian Parliament. They feel the same interest in exporting the surplus products of their labor that are injured by the prohibitory duties we impose upon them that we feel to-day in this country in getting cheaper lumber and getting prohibitory duties removed from our exports.

The injury from prohibitory duties on our pork and grain and other products by the action of some of the governments of Europe is one which has been severely felt in this country; and we would feel to-day that we would do almost anything in our power if we could remove the barriers that intervene between us and the European people so that we could export our wheat, which a few years ago was worth $1.19 a bushel, but which was worth last year only about 66 cents per bushel, if I remember right.

We feel deeply interested in removing the obstructions to the exportation of our pork and our beef, our lard and our cotton. Of course we feel on our side of that question that we would be benefited by the removal of the duty, but we also know that if the European Governments were wise, if they would seek the advantage of all their people instead of the benefit of class interests, they would remove those obstructions so that when our exports went to them we would receive in return the things that their labor makes, the surplus above their home consumption, and both parties would be benefited by the transaction. Commerce is not a one sided affair. Commerce benefits both him that gives and him that receives, and that is an inseparable part of the nature of the transaction.

No man is injured by commercial exchange. He only sends away from home that which is a surplus to him, which he can not consume, and he gets in exchange for it the other man's surplus which the producer can not consume. It goes away from the man that has not the want, it goes to the man that has the want, and both are benefited by it. So it is with us to-day. Canada, of course, will be benefited by our removing the duty on her lumber, but are not the people of the Northwestern prairies to be benefited also, some of whom are now living in the ground because they are unable to buy lumber on account of the high duty that is placed upon it—a duty that raises the price of the domestic product over $30,000,000 upon an annual output of about $250,000,000?

And is not that something worthy of consideration in this House as well as the question of the interests of the lumbermen and the syndicates? Is it not something worthy of consideration in our councils here, and should we not think of the amount of taxes that we are extracting in this way from the laboring people and the farmers on the prairies of the West? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FUNSTON was recognized.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] is recognized. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maine later.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Chairman, it was not my design to occupy the attention of this committee further upon the question of the duty upon lumber, but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] kindly put a question to me a few moments ago that I think it proper to answer in my own way [laughter on the Democratic side], and I thank him for it. He did me a very great kindness in asking me the question, which I feel in duty bound to answer. True, I was not addressing the gentleman from Iowa at the time, but he was at perfect liberty to ask the question, and I am very much obliged to him. The gentleman put the question to me whether I am in favor of placing lumber upon the free-list. In asking that question I suppose he intended to follow my answer with a reference to the action of the Legislature of the State of Kansas in 1883 in passing a resolution instructing their Representatives in Congress to vote for free lumber, which had been done by the gentlemen from Missouri, Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. BLAND.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that the Legislature of Kansas did pass such a resolution, but, mark you, sir, after 1883, in March, 1884, I went before the people of my district and took up the doctrine of protection which had been advocated upon this floor by the distinguished and lamented Haskell. I advocated protection, not merely to such things as we produce ourselves, but protection to everything that gives employment to American labor or in which American capital has invested a dollar, and I came here from the second district of Kansas with a majority of 6,000. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] that my people, thank God, read newspapers and books; they are an intelligent people, and therefore I am not afraid of them, as he is afraid of his people in Iowa, and that, too, without any foundation, for I can assure him that their intelligence is far above his estimate of them.

Mr. GEAR. What gentleman from Iowa does the gentleman from Kansas refer to? [Laughter.]

Mr. FUNSTON. I beg pardon of the gentleman [Mr. GEAR]. I am referring to the district of his colleague, Mr. WEAVER. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, in this talk about free lumber the farmer has been used by the other side as a stalking horse all the way through. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] stated the other day, though he was very careful not to have it appear in the RECORD, that he wanted free lumber in order to give the farmers fencing boards [laughter], when in fact he knows, and everybody knows, that almost the only material the farmers of the West use for fences to-day is barbed wire, and upon that material this Democratic House has put a duty of 45 per cent. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] And not only have they put that duty upon barbed wire but they have placed a duty of 60 and odd per cent. upon the material from which barbed wire is manufactured. Some historical personage once exclaimed, "Oh, Liberty! what crimes are committed in thy name," and I say to this House, "The farmers! what crimes are committed in their name!" [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the people of my district ask to have nothing free upon the list as it stands to-day, unless you give them all free. We do not ask that those articles which we want to purchase shall come in free, while we seek protection on everything else. The farmers of my district believe that under our system they are getting a good market for their products, which fully compensates them for every extra cent they may possibly have to pay for their lumber. What are the facts? Gentlemen have told us that this duty is keeping the benefits of cheap lumber from the farmers of the Western States, especially of Iowa and of Kansas.

What are the facts? I call upon the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] to tell whether there is not a lumber-yard association in his State, as there is in mine, which dictates the price of lumber to the consumer, without regard to what the dealers purchase it for?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MILLS. I want to correct one statement which the gentleman from Kansas made awhile ago. He said that we had increased the duty on barbed wire to 45 per cent. We have not done anything of the kind. We have not touched it.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas be allowed to continue his remarks for five minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask how much benefit will the farmer get from the taking off of this duty of $2 a thousand? The Democratic party have been tinkering with the railroad question; they have appointed a railroad commission, the members of which I presume are all Democrats; if not, it is the fault of the Democratic party. You have undertaken, gentlemen, to regulate the railroads in regard to freight with reference to lumber and other things, and what is the result? The result is that lumber is higher to-day in Kansas than it was before you appointed your railroad commission. So much for that.

Mr. DOCKERY. Did not you vote for it?

Mr. FUNSTON. I did; and it is a good law if managed by men who understand their business.

Now you propose to take the duty off lumber, but who will get the benefit of that reduction?

Mr. MCMILLIN. The people of Kansas.

Mr. FUNSTON. The railroads will get the lion's share as they are getting to-day under your railroad commission.

And in my State there is a lumber-yard organization controlled by a gentleman named S. A. Brown. There is not an independent lumber-yard in my district to my knowledge unless it is owned by some very rich man whom this man Brown can not crush. Near me, a young man started a lumber-yard with a small capital, and this man S. A. Brown sat down by the side of him and undersold him, and continued to do it until he broke him up; and then, having accomplished that, he ran up the price of lumber sufficiently high to get back every dollar he had lost while engaged in the process of breaking up his young rival. Now I say that if you take off this duty, this same S. A. Brown and his associates will get the benefit of it, and the farmers will pay the same for lumber as before.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I have made a canvass of my district, and I have heard Democrats testify (we have honest Democrats there) that they believe that the market for their hogs and their cattle and their farm products is so much better by reason of the protective system as to fully compensate them for what they have to pay extra, if anything, upon lumber and other articles which they buy. The people of my State believe in the protective principle. They want everything that we produce in this country protected, and they want everything that we can not produce to come in free. Now, I answer the gentleman's question by saying, Yes; I am opposed to anything coming in free that we produce in this country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Does the gentleman insist that the protective tariff on lumber is an advantage to the labor employed in that industry?

Mr. FUNSTON. Certainly I do. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] stated a while ago that the wages paid for labor by the farmers of Michigan were as great as those paid in the lumber manufactured, but in making that statement I think he will admit himself that he was incorrect. I understood the gentleman from New York to show by statistics a moment ago that the lumbermen pay from $1.30 to $1.62 a day to the workers in that branch of business. Now, I stand here to-day to defy the gentleman from Michigan to name a single farmer who pays his hands that much; and I will give him time to answer.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then the farm laborer does not derive any benefit from this protective tariff?

Mr. FUNSTON. I stand here to-day to say that whenever you transfer the industries of this country to a point 3,000 miles away, and force the American farmer into a foreign market, where he will come into competition with the cheapest labor of the world, you might as well pitch the products of our farmers into the sea. It is the markets which are created in the West by the protective policy that the farmers greet as their best friend.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I renew the pro forma amendment. It is not my purpose to attempt a reply to all the statements just made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON]; but before I get through with my five minutes I think I can show that the utterance of the gentleman on a former occasion will be a sufficient answer to one of the statements he has just made. I regret that the gentleman is not now in his seat.

Prior to the so-called tariff revision of 1883 the State of Kansas, by her Legislature, passed a resolution, which will be found on page 5210 of the RECORD, instructing her Senators and requesting her Representatives in Congress to vote to put lumber on the free-list. In response to that expression of the people of Kansas four of the Representatives from that State have, during the consideration of the present bill, voted to put lumber on the free-list. The gentleman can reconcile his own course in this respect as best he may with the action of his colleagues and the Legislature of his State.

He stated a moment ago, in reply to a question, that the tariff on lumber did operate to the advantage of the laborer in this industry. I ask to read in response to that statement of the gentleman his own declaration made on this floor on the 2d of June, to be found on page 5210 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. He there states in a colloquy with the very able gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] that the laborers employed in the lumber industry receive no greater wages than those employed in the non-protected industries, and yet in spite of this admission he records himself in opposition to the positive request of his own Legislature and insists that lumber shall still pay a tax of $2 a thousand. If labor gets no benefit from the tariff on lumber, why should the farmers of Kansas and other States be compelled to pay tribute on this article of universal necessity? The gentleman can make answer to this interrogatory to his own constituents.

Mr. PETERS. Does the gentleman claim that the farming industry in this country is not protected?

Mr. DOCKERY. I was not talking about farming industries, but about lumber industries.

Mr. PETERS. You were referring to a comparison between labor in the lumber industry and labor in the farming industry.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was simply placing the testimony of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON], given in this Hall on the second day of the present month, against his statement made on the floor to-day. In order that I may not misrepresent the gentleman I will read from the RECORD, page 5210:

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Now, after this, I hope the gentlemen from these great Northwestern States will answer the question why poverty should "protect" wealth. That is the question that touches the masses of the people and which they would like to have answered. Says the gentleman, our laborers are benefited. The man that stands up to-day and says labor in the lumber industry receives higher wages than in other like industries, protected or not protected, makes a statement that can not be sustained.

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. No one said that.

No one said what? That labor in the lumber industries receives higher wages than in the non-protected industries. Let me read further and the position of the gentleman is clearly manifest:

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I am glad that you disclaim such a position. To say that laborers in the lumber protected industries receive higher compensation than in other industries is an absurdity.

Mr. FUNSTON. No one made that assertion.

No one made what assertion? Why, clearly the meaning is that no one asserted that labor employed in the lumber industry receives higher wages than in the non-protected industries. This is the statement of the gentleman as it appears in the record of the proceedings of the 2d of the present month.

Mr. GROUT. He was simply stating what had taken place on the floor; that is all.

Mr. DOCKERY. I submit in all fairness, Mr. Chairman, that no other construction can be given the language than the one I have submitted. "No one made that assertion." If the "assertion" had not been made, and the "assertion" was true, it was proper then for the gentleman to rise in his place and state that laborers in the lumber industry do receive higher wages than in the non-protected industries. He did not so state.

A MEMBER. Mr. FUNSTON is not here.

Mr. DOCKERY. I regret that the gentleman is absent from the Hall, as I have no doubt but that he would have honored me with his presence had he known of my purpose to reply to his observations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. KERR. Was it not the fact that nobody had made the assertion up to that time?

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, that is begging the question. You can not afford to masquerade behind such a flimsy technical construction. The language of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] was too clear and explicit to admit of any misunderstanding. I have read the statement which the gentleman made; and I again submit that it fairly admits of no other construction than the one I have given it.

Mr. ADAMS. Will you please point out what the contradiction is between the statement which you are assuming the gentleman from Kansas to have made the other day and something which he said to-day?

Mr. DOCKERY. When the gentleman addressed the House a few moments since I rose in my place and asked him whether labor in the lumber industry was protected by reason of the tariff, and he said that it was.

Mr. ADAMS. That is, it was protected.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not think there is any misunderstanding about that, and I am unable to reconcile it with the admission that appears in the colloquy with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON]. Protection that brings no increase in wages is no protection at all. If those men employed in the protected industries get no more wages than men employed in the non-protected industries, where does the "protection" to labor come in? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. KERR. Is it not true that men go from one industry in the United States to another in accordance with the rise or fall of wages paid in those various industries?

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, most certainly.

Mr. KERR. Is it not true that high wages paid in one industry maintain high wages in other industries?

Mr. ADAMS. Is that true or is it not?

Mr. DOCKERY. Is what true?

Mr. ADAMS. That high prices in one industry tend to raise wages in another?

Mr. DOCKERY. It depends on the character of labor, whether the labor is skilled or unskilled.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is it.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman attempts to evade the force of the statement I made by "lugging" in a general proposition. The question at issue was the relation of the tariff on lumber to the wages paid in that industry and the seeming change in the views of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON]. I thought it but right that he should be permitted to explain to his people and to the Republican Legislature of Kansas why he is not in harmony with four of his colleagues who favor free lumber.

Mr. CHEADLE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Not now. Mr. Chairman, I have no personal knowledge of the lumber industry in Michigan; but I do know that it is the most prosperous business in my section of the country. While it is not conducted under the auspices of a "trust," yet as a rule I think it may be safely stated that the schedule of prices is controlled by local "pools," and competition thus avoided.

Mr. CHEADLE. Will the gentleman pardon me for asking him a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. WARNER. What is the lumber interest in your country? Is it not the interest of the lumber yard?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER. The sale of lumber?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly. The scale of prices is fixed and maintained by agreement, so as to avoid competition, and the profits thus made staple, certain, and highly satisfactory.

Mr. WARNER. Let me ask the gentleman another question. If you could make more money in the lumber business, that is, if you could make larger profits than you could expect to make in the banking business, would you not leave the banking business and go into the lumber business; that is, if you understood it?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly; but that question has no relation whatever to the point at issue. It trenches in nowise upon the accuracy of the statement under discussion. I reassert that many of the dealers in lumber in my district, as indeed all over the country, avoid competition by "pooling their issues" and fixing a scale of prices that insures a profit in excess of that enjoyed by other industries not so favorably circumstanced.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WARNER. I will take the floor and yield my time to my colleague; but before he proceeds I would like to ask him whether the lumber interest is the only one which has agreed upon a scale of prices? Is it not true that the medical profession and the legal profession also fix schedules of fees which are to be charged?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER. Do not lawyers and doctors agree to charge the same fees for the same services?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly; but that does not affect the proposition under consideration, for the reason that the medical and legal professions do not come to Congress and ask for "protection" as our friends of the lumber interest do. [Applause.] The analogy my colleague seeks to establish does not hold good at all. In one case the men engaged in the lumber business ask for legislative aid, while in the other case the sturdy, self-reliant doctors and lawyers depend on their own energies and rely upon the resources given to them by the Almighty. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KERR. Is is not a sufficient answer to that proposition to say that the lawyers and the doctors are not importing goods?

Mr. DOCKERY. No; I do not think it is. I can not see that the observation of my friend is at all relevant.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in discussing the tariff question and looking over the message of the President in relation to that question, I am clearly of the opinion that he misunderstands or has entirely misunderstood the whole subject. I do not know that he is to blame for that, and for the reason that I believe he has not had any considerable experience in that direction. Had a legal proposition been submitted to him for an opinion probably he would have been capable of advising as to the proper way to deal with it. But this is a business question, and as his business relations have not been very extensive it is not to be expected, of course, that he would be able to handle the question with that clearness its importance demands. If he had had that training and experience he would never have penned the message he sent here to this Congress, because in its conclusions he is clearly wrong in the deductions he makes, and I desire briefly to call attention to the facts.

For instance, if you look at page 7 of the message when he takes up and discusses this question of the tariff, where he refers to it as being "vicious, inequitable, and illogical," he goes on to argue that those who buy these imports pay the duty charged thereon, and which goes into the public Treasury. But let me ask my friends, the members of this House, who it is that buys these imported commodities. Is it your farmers, your artisans, your mechanics throughout the country? That I would like to know. Mr. Chairman, there is not a member on this floor who represents a constituency of the people who has been troubled with that question any time from the first moment he came here as a member of this Congress to the present hour. There is no complaint from his people as to the tariff on imports. Where, then, do these complaints arise? They come from the nabobs of the land, who complain about the tariff. They are complaining, for they are the ones who buy the foreign importations, the foreign goods, and they would be able if the reduction of the tariff was made to be benefited by the reduction. They are complaining; not the working classes or the farmers of the country. They do not say a word about it. They are perfectly satisfied. Nobody is suffering under the present condition of things. The country is prosperous; and besides, supposing you do reduce the tariff, how are you going to get any money out of these rich people? How will you raise money from them for the support of the Government? You will not collect any money from them, and why? Because they have their money in bonds and stocks. You collect no taxes on their bonds. Therefore if you do not collect it in the shape of duties from them you can not collect it at all. They are able to send to Europe and Asia and other countries for these things which are imported. The Government and the people generally reap the benefit from the duty which they pay. If that is true then why remove the duty? They can afford to spend their money for these fine goods on which the duty is levied, and what object would there be in repealing the tariff? The complaint which comes for a change or modification comes from these very people, the rich people of the country. They are the ones who want to escape paying the duty.

Mr. Chairman, I venture to assert that there are not a hundred men in any constituency in any district, in the western part of this country especially, that have been affected by this tariff in the way that has been suggested here, while the other two hundred thousand people, the average in a Congressional district, are satisfied with the goods that we have in this country. They are good enough for them, and they are satisfied with our home productions; therefore the tariff does not affect them.

But, furthermore, to justify his views on this position, the President goes on to argue what he is in favor of, and so has misled the committee, with all due deference to the committee, by telling them that in addition to this they pay the duty directly into the public Treasury. But he says there is another class of people who pay it indirectly, and that this goes into the pockets of the manufacturers. That is the grand mistake and delusion. If he had been a manufacturer, or if any member of the committee had been a manufacturer, this statement would not have gone abroad as a fact. It is a grand fallacy. It can be easily demonstrated that it is, and if you will wait a moment I will endeavor to show you why it is so. Take, for instance, the article of calico. There is 3 cents a yard duty; but you can go into the mills and factories in Massachusetts and buy it for 2½ cents a yard.

Before the war that calico sold for 12 cents per yard, and of a medium quality. To-day you can buy it in the retail stores in the West for 4 cents a yard. How does it come, then, that the duty would raise the price of calico? This goes clearly to show that it has reduced the price instead of increasing it. Why? In consequence of the great competition among the manufacturing establishments throughout the country. So it is, Mr. Chairman, the same principle runs through all these commodities. You can take woolen clothes, if you please, of which so much has been said here, and you will find the same principle prevails.

Some members of the House, and especially the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], have advocated the theory that the tariff on wool increases the price of the domestic article. That is a clear mistake.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman explain how, if the value of calico has been reduced to 3 or 4 cents a yard by the tariff, it has enabled the manufacturer to pay his labor higher wages, as has been alleged?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. My dear sir, I did not say it made higher wages. [Laughter.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is the claim over there.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I told you yesterday that your side of the House had an opportunity to remedy that difficulty, and that is what I propose to do as one member of this side of the House, if I am permitted to remain and live long enough to do it. That is the future question that I propose to attend to.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BYNUM. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, as the lumber schedule is under discussion, whether he is in favor of free lumber?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. No, sir; I am in favor of free nothing that our people can manufacture. I am in favor of having the benefit of all that we can manufacture.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the pro forma amendment to be withdrawn.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Are you in favor of free coal?

Mr. BYNUM. Of free wool?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I said free coal, but I will include free wool.

Mr. BYNUM. Certainly I am in favor of free wool. I have nothing to keep back; I am in favor of free wool and free coal, too.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine is exhausted.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I find in one of the daily papers of the great metropolis of our country a comment on the debate which has been taking place in this House upon the subject of the duty on lumber, which expresses very well the sentiment I entertain myself on that subject after having listened to this discussion. Before calling attention directly to this article, however, I will remark that one would suppose from the character of the debate here there was no lumber in this country save that in Maine and in Michigan. Some of us upon this side of the House who represent the States of Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi come from a region of country which is as largely interested as any other, perhaps more largely interested in this lumber industry than even Maine or Michigan. On the coast of Mississippi, on the Pearl and the Pascagoula, and other streams which drain the interior of the country, there are mills as large in extent probably as any in Maine or Michigan.

Our vast area of pine timber remained in almost a virgin state until very recently, when these mills have been erected, and only a few days ago there passed through both Houses of this Congress a joint resolution to prevent large entries of lands in the South, and of timber lands, upon the ground that great monopolies and syndicates were being formed for the purpose of getting possession of those lands, which are now coming into market and are eagerly sought in consequence of the exhaustion of the timber lands of Maine and of Michigan by use, and their still more terrible exhaustion by fires.

It has been said here at times that this bill is sectional. Why, sir, there is no region of the country which will be more affected by the provisions of the bill than the timber region of Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi. But I agree with the sentiment expressed by my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. COX] a few days ago (which excited ironical remarks upon the other side of the chamber), that among the prime reasons why the policy of this bill should be adopted is the desirableness of preserving our forests and protecting the agriculture of the country from the injury which would result from the too rapid drainage of our rivers. It was said by some gentleman on the other side, in reply to the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], that that was an exploded idea, something that had been entertained in the past, but which in this progressive age no man familiar with the subject would consider. In connection with that point I now ask attention to an extract from the New York Evening Post.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE TAX ON LUMBER.

The House has been engaged for three days in Committee of the Whole in considering the duty on lumber. The insensate obstinacy of the Republicans, their determination to defend every tax that goes to the creation of a monopoly, however oppressive it may be to the great mass of the people, and however deleterious to the physical well-being of the country, receives here its decisive illustration. During the past ten or twelve years the highest scientific testimony in the nation has been regularly and unremittingly presented to Congress to the effect that measures should be taken to preserve the remaining forest area from the ravages of reckless woodmen in the interest of fertility and public health, and in order to prevent the springs and life-giving water courses from drying up. The arguments which enforce this policy are only in part economic. They touch the higher ethical considerations which ought to move the public spirit of the nation. They appeal to our love for the beautiful, and bid us preserve, while there is yet time, the forest-clad slopes of our uplands, with their grateful shade, their charming color, their sublimity, their poetry, their religious inspiration. They teach at the same time a most impressive lesson of another sort, showing how countries that have allowed their timber to be swept off by private greed have become the prey of alternate droughts and freshets, their once fruitful lands being either torn from its bedding in the rocks and washed away, or dried up and rendered barren to such a degree that population can no longer be supported on it.

Mr. HOOKER. And in confirmation of the views thus expressed, I desire to refer to an investigation which was made some years ago in that country which has been so often alluded to in this debate, Canada, and to the testimony given before a commission appointed by the Canadian Parliament to make inquiry upon the subject of the value of the timber lands and the importance of their preservation. Mr. Thayne was being examined upon that subject, and he said:

In regard to the duration of timber supply in the North of Europe, a definite answer could not be given. Russia is credited with a large forest area that might be made available by railroads. Austria likewise possesses some magnificent forests in the center of Europe, which can only be reached by similar means. Whether so bulky an article of timber can bear the expense that such transportation in Europe would involve, can only be decided by experience. It is true that the European governments are beginning to show a great deal of interest in protecting the forests; but this newly-awakened feeling does not owe its existence entirely to any desire to promote the exportation of forest products, but rather to the fact that they are alarmed at the injuries sustained by the arable land consequent on stripping the hills and river banks of their wood.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman of Mississippi has expired.

On motion of Mr. ROGERS, by unanimous consent, Mr. HOOKER'S time was extended for five minutes longer.

Mr. HOOKER. The same gentleman, speaking on the same subject, says further on:

By a system very different to the one pursued in the older provinces of the Dominion, the forest lands have been treated without due regard either for present purposes or for the future wants of the country. Here, however, the opinion was universal that the timber was inexhaustible, and that its destruction was advantageous to the country. It is only of late years that the fallacy of this belief has been brought home to the minds of those who have examined the matter. In the Northwest the case is very different; no competent authority affects to maintain that the timber supply is equal to the wants of such a population as the fertile lands might be expected to support. The obvious policy of the government would, therefore, be to have the timber-producing regions surveyed at the earliest date, before any vested interests are created, and set apart permanent reserves wherever the adjacent land requires shelter, or where a large population is likely to settle. These reserves should be under the direct control of the government, who might either lease them, subject to the condition that the lessees should maintain a regular supply, or better still, according to the system followed in the state forests of Northern Europe, a certain proportion of full-grown timber should be disposed of by public competition, the trees to be removed by the purchasers, the number being regulated by the requirements of the locality and the yield of the reserve.

I wish to refer also to a report made by the Secretary of the Interior of our own country in 1878–'79 upon this question of the importance of preserving our timber lands. I allude to that eminent and distinguished incumbent of the Interior Department under a Republican administration, Mr. Carl Schurz, who in his report to Congress upon this subject said:

The traditions of a time are still alive when the area covered with virgin forest in this country was so great that the settler might consider the trees on the land he occupied as a mere difficulty to be overcome and to be swept out of his way. But circumstances have very materially changed. We are now rapidly approaching the day when the forests of this country will no longer be sufficient to supply our home wants, and it is the highest time that the old notion that the timber on the public lands belongs to anybody and everybody, to be cut down and taken off at pleasure, should give way. A provident policy having our future wants in view can not be adopted too soon. Every year lost inflicts upon the economical interests of this country an injury which in every part of the country will be seriously felt, but in the mountainous regions threatens to become especially disastrous and absolutely irreparable. We ought to learn something from the calamitous experiences of other parts of the world. If the necessity for such a provident policy be not recognized while it is time the neglect of it will be painfully appreciated when it is too late. I am so deeply impressed with the importance of this subject that as long as I remain intrusted with my present duties I shall never cease to urge it upon the attention of Congress.

The Secretary also says:

As to the importance of this subject I shall add but little to what I said in my last annual report. The disastrous consequences which always follow the destruction of the forests of a country are known to every well-informed man. These consequences will inevitably come upon us in a comparatively short period of time, considering the rapidity with which the timber growth of this country is being swept away, unless legislation be adopted systematically to arrest this indiscriminate spoliation. In accordance with the suggestions which, in this respect, I offered in my last annual report, a bill was introduced in the Senate (Senate bill No. 609) which provides that all timber-bearing lands, chiefly valuable for the timber upon them, shall be withdrawn from sale or other disposition under existing laws, and be held by the Government with a view to preventing indiscriminate destruction and waste, and to the preservation of the young timber and the reproduction of the forests. The bill further provides ample means by which settlers on the public lands and miners can procure timber and fire-wood to supply their wants, with or without the soil, at minimum rates. It also provides for the sale of timber at reasonable prices for manufacturing purposes and for export period. It finally provides for the appointment of a number of officers to execute its provisions under the direction of this Department.

In another report, made in a subsequent year, Mr. Carl Schurz, the same Republican Secretary of the Interior, speaks further upon this subject, and says:

The rapidity with which this country is being stripped of its forests must alarm every thinking man. It has been estimated by good authority that, if we go on at the present rate, the supply of timber in the United States will, in less than twenty years, fall considerably short of our home necessities. How disastrously the destruction of the forests of a country affects the regularity of the water supply in its rivers necessary for navigation, increases the frequency of freshets and inundations, dries up springs, and transforms fertile agricultural districts into barren wastes, is a matter of universal experience the world over. It is the highest time that we should turn our earnest attention to this subject, which so seriously concerns our national prosperity.

The Government can not prevent the cutting of timber on land owned by private citizens. It is only to be hoped that private owners will grow more careful of their timber as it rises in value. But the Government can do two things: 1. It can take determined and, as I think, effectual measures to arrest the stealing of timber from public lands on a large scale, which is always attended with the most reckless waste; and, 2. It can preserve the forests still in its possession by keeping them under its control, and by so regulating the cutting and sale of timber on its lands as to secure the renewal of the forest by natural growth and the careful preservation of the young timber.

* * * * * * *

Moreover, nowhere is a wasteful destruction of the forests fraught with more dangerous results than in mountainous regions. The timber grows mostly on the mountain sides, and when these mountain sides are once stripped bare, the rain will soon wash all the earth necessary for the growth of trees from the slopes down into the valleys, and the renewal of the forests will be rendered impossible forever; the rivulets and water-courses, which flow with regularity while the forest stands, are dried up for the greater part of the year and transformed into raging torrents by heavy rains and by the melting of the snow, inundating the valleys below, covering them with gravel and loose rock swept down from the mountain sides and gradually rendering them unfit for agriculture, and, finally, for the habitation of men. Proper measures for the preservation of the forest in the mountainous regions of the country appear, therefore, of especially imperative necessity. The experience of parts of Asia, and of some of the most civilized countries in Europe, is so terribly instructive in these respects that we have no excuse if we do not take timely warning.

In consonance with the views which other gentlemen have expressed on this subject, I wish to say that wherever syndicates are formed, whether in Maine, Michigan, Mississippi, Arkansas, or Louisiana, for the purpose of raising the price of the product to the consumer, who has to shelter himself, his wife, and his little ones by means of this timber when manufactured and carried as it is by the billions of feet on our railroads and steam-boats to the untimbered lands of Kansas and Nebraska, where you offer a premium for the raising of timber by allowing land devoted to that purpose to go untaxed, we propose now to send you the lumber which is grown cheaper and cheaper every year; and I am astounded to hear gentlemen from those regions which produce no lumber oppose this proposition to take $2 a thousand feet off the cost of lumber.

But I favor this proposition for another reason. I am opposed to these syndicates and "combines" whatever form they take and whatever commodity they affect, whether lumber or anything else. That distinguished jurist who once adorned the office of Attorney-General of the United States, that man of splendid intellect and vast acquirements, whose memory is still treasured in the hearts of the American people—I allude to the illustrious Jeremiah S. Black, of Pennsylvania [applause on the Democratic side]—has well described these trusts and their effect upon the country when in a periodical published within the last few years he said of these trusts and "combines" that—

They are inventions to increase the plunderers' stealing powers, through which his felonious fingers are made long enough to reach into the pockets of posterity, lays his lien on property yet uncreated, anticipates the labor of coming ages, coins the industry of future generations into cash, and snatches the inheritance from children whose fathers are unborn.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be regarded as withdrawn.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, representing as I do a large lumber district in the South, and being familiar, I think, with the lumber business, I have been amused at the statements which have been made here during the last month—statements made, too, by gentlemen from the South who ought to be the representatives of an industry which has become within the last few years one of the most flourishing and most important to our people. I undertake to say to-day that not a man, woman, or child in any of those districts has asked any representative, directly or indirectly, to have the tariff taken off lumber—not one. What would be the result of removing this duty? Take my district; and we ship largely. Lumber is one of our most important industries, next to iron. We ship to London; and we ship also to Boston and New York. Most of our lumber goes to the two latter cities. When it lands there, with what does it come in competition? With Canadian lumber. We sell our lumber for $10 a thousand; the Canadians sell theirs for the same price. They pay $2 a thousand duty, giving them $38 on the thousand, while we receive $40. Now, the proposition is to take off the $2. Who will get the benefit of it? Why, Mr. Chairman, what is the use of talking to sensible people about a matter like this? If the duty be removed, the Canadians can either keep the price at what it is to-day and pocket that $2, or they can reduce the price $2 a thousand and we shall have to do the same; otherwise we could not sell our lumber.

What is the argument (and I have been amused at it) which is made by Representatives on the other side from the South? How eager they are to help these Yankees! They want to give the Yankees cheap homes, cheap barns; and they want to give the Northwestern men cheap fences. To use the phrase of a Baptist minister down in Arkansas, "how their bowels yearn for these Yankees!" They want to give them cheap lumber.

A statement was made by the gentleman from Arkansas that people in his section of the country were selling lumber at $9 a thousand, and that if this bill should not be passed, the price would go up to $15. How the people down there would murmur at that! How the workmen and the owners of the stumps, as we say down there, would bewail such a calamity! How everybody connected with the lumber trade in Arkansas would shed tears if lumber should go up from $9 a thousand to $15 a thousand! I can imagine I see some of these Arkansas men who cut the trees or haul the logs to the mill, getting together and saying, "What does this mean? Lumber has gone up from $9 to $15. Will not our wages go down?"

Mr. Chairman, that sort of claptrap will not do for sensible men, even those who cut the trees down in Arkansas. There is no man in any business who, when he gets good prices and fair profits, does not feel like giving better wages to his workmen. Let me give you a little bit of my own history. I have a furnace. When iron, charcoal iron of the very best character, went down from $30 a ton to $19 a ton (and I had been giving my hands good wages when the price was $30) I called my workmen into my office and said, "Gentlemen, here is a great difference in price. Look at my books. I do not want to deceive you. I shall have to cut down your wages or I must stop the furnace—must 'blow out.'" They said, "We do not want you to do that; we will submit to such reduction as you see proper." Notwithstanding that I said to them, "Take your houses; here is plenty of land; go to work and raise what you want to eat, but I must stop."

Do you tell me that if the price of lumber advances from $9 to $15 there is any employer in Arkansas who will not feel like giving to the poor men who work for him—his neighbors—better wages than when the price was $9 a thousand?

As I have said, the lumber business is a great Southern industry. Since we emerged from the rebellion it has become under the tariff one of our greatest industries. Our people are prosperous. The farmer has a ready market for all he can supply. He feeds the people engaged in this industry. The community is contented. I can say that in my own State there is not a single individual connected with the lumber business, or a farmer, or a merchant, or a mechanic who has asked any Representative of our State to have the tariff taken off lumber.

Nobody wants it. It was the demagogues who brought about these strikes on the part of the workingmen. Gentlemen may talk about strikes and combines and trusts, and all that sort of thing. I will give you my own opinion of that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask by unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee be allowed five minutes longer.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BUTLER. Now I will give you my opinion about these strikes. It is the demagogues of the country who have brought them about. In old times the workingmen got their wages, they got them promptly, and they were satisfied: but this cry of the rich getting richer and the poor getting poorer, and all the talk about railroad magnates have made the workingmen dissatisfied.

When I first came to Congress some years ago I was put on the Committee on Labor. Men came before that committee and talked about giving the workingmen their share of the profits earned by the capital invested in business; that is, that after the workingmen got their wages the profits should be divided up between them and the capitalists. In this way these demagogues of the country engendered a feeling of dissatisfaction on the part of the workingmen, who were made to believe they had a right to a part of the profits of capital invested in business all over the country.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Then your theory is for the Government to protect the rich, and they will take care of the poor? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I understood that to be your argument.

Mr. BUTLER. I will take care of myself. The Southern country is prosperous and looking up. Our lumber is doing well; there is no doubt about it. The only thing that stands in the way is the demagogue who has caused strikes on the part of the workingmen as the result of the dissatisfaction which he has created on their part.

But some of our Southern Representatives seem to be anxious about furnishing cheap houses to the Yankees who are going down there. They seem to be wonderfully careful of them! [Laughter.] I remember the time when these same Yankees were nothing to them but hirelings, who went down there for no other purpose than to steal their negroes and everything else they had. [Great laughter and applause.] Now, it would seem they want to furnish them with good houses like we have in Tennessee and Arkansas. [Laughter and applause.] Those are about the facts in the case.

If the removal of this tax on lumber makes that article cheap, who is to get the benefit of it? Will it not be the Canadian manufacturer of lumber and the Canadian laborer engaged in the production of that lumber? If, on the contrary, the removal of the tax does not cheapen the cost of the article, then the Government loses the revenue which it now gets from that article. If it does not protect those engaged in the lumber interest so far as the cost of this article is concerned, and it does not give any revenue to the Government, I should like to know what good reason there is or why our people should be anxious to take off the duty on lumber? Is it for the purpose of helping these Yankees to whom they have referred? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, so far as my country is concerned I represent a large lumber district. Yesterday one of the most intelligent gentlemen from Abingdon, in Southwestern Virginia, came here to meet myself and Mr. GOFF on business. I asked him about the feeling in reference to the removal of the duty on lumber, and he said that the people in that section of the country were almost unanimously opposed to taking the duty off of lumber. He said that every one engaged in the lumber trade in Southwestern Virginia was against the proposition contained in this bill.

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, my question to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] was propounded for the purpose of having it understood in the Northwest just what the issue is. I am opposed to all tax on lumber, and wish it put on the free-list. I wish the honorable gentleman from Kansas to state before the House whether he is opposed to putting lumber on the free-list. That was the only motive I had in propounding the question to him. I esteem him highly as a personal friend. He had the candor to say a few moments ago that he is opposed to free lumber and in favor of keeping the protective duty upon it.

To use his own language, he is in favor of "protecting everything that is produced in this country," and then, strange to say, he accuses the gentlemen in charge of this bill of putting a duty of over 40 per cent. on barbed wire, of which he says the fences of Kansas are constructed. I want to say to him that the committee did not put a duty on barbed wire at all. They left the duty where it is now under the law, fixed at an ad valorem rate of 23.91 per cent. or about 2 cents per pound, and just where it was placed by a Republican House of Representatives.

Mr. FUNSTON. I know the gentleman does not want to misrepresent my statement.

Mr. WEAVER. Certainly not; and if the Chair will extend my time the gentleman can have as much time as he wants to explain himself.

Mr. FUNSTON. I did not accuse the Democratic party of keeping up the duty on barbed wire; I only stated it as a fact.

Mr. WEAVER. But you stated they had increased the duty to 45 per cent.

Mr. FUNSTON. Well, you did; you increasad the duty on billets from 45 to 65; and you increased it $11 per ton, the equivalent of which is about 65 per cent.

Mr. WEAVER. But that is not barbed wire. The material out of which barbed wire is made is wire known as No. 10, and from that to No. 16; never below No. 10 nor above No. 16. That has not been disturbed.

Mr. FUNSTON. Did not the chairman——

Mr. WEAVER. Now, I can not yield any further in the short time that I have.

That duty was placed there, I repeat, by the Republican party, and the gentleman has confessed before the House that he is not only in favor of that duty of 2 cents per pound upon wire, but that he is also in favor of a duty upon lumber.

Mr. FUNSTON. Let me say that you are mistaken.

Mr. WEAVER. It is true, as the gentleman says, that very little fencing is made in Kansas of lumber; all or nearly all of it is made of barbed wire. But Kansas is interested in lumber because the granaries, the barns, and the houses are made of lumber; so we have the issue clearly made here between the gentleman and his constituents. He states squarely and openly that he is in favor of a duty on lumber and on barbed wire as well.

Mr. FUNSTON. I did not make any such statement, sir. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WEAVER. Did you not say that you were in favor of protecting everything?

Mr. FUNSTON. Yes; everything that America produces. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. Do we not manufacture wire—barbed wire? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FUNSTON. I made a statement——

Mr. WEAVER. No, no; do not take my time now to explain what you meant. Answer my question. Do we not manufacture barbed wire?

Mr. FUNSTON. Yes; but you put a duty on it. Do you favor that? [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. Not at all. The Republican party put it on, and this committee left it just where it was. Now, I will ask the gentleman from Kansas, will you vote with me to put wire on the free-list? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FUNSTON. Now, answer me a question. You say you represent the farmers. Why not take the duty off?

Mr. WEAVER. No; the gentleman must submit to my questions or sit down, one or the other.

Mr. FUNSTON. I am asking you a question. Answer my question first and then I will answer yours. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. I have the floor, and I intend to hold it. Answer this question, yes or no. This matter goes into the RECORD for your constituents and my constituents to read, and let them decide the question between us. I ask if you will vote with me to put wire No. 10 and No. 16, out of which barbed wire is made, on the free-list. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FUNSTON. Answer my question and I will answer yours. [Renewed laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended.

Mr. GROUT. I will object unless he allows the gentleman from Kansas to ask his question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request to the committee. Is there objection to the gentleman from Iowa proceeding for five minutes longer?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEAVER. Now, I wish the gentleman to take his seat and allow me to proceed.

Mr. FUNSTON. Will you not answer my question? [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. Not until you have answered mine.

Mr. FUNSTON I was first.

Mr. WEAVER. I have the floor, and I will insist that either the gentleman shall take his seat or answer the question. [Laughter.]

Mr. FUNSTON. I want to know why you do not take the duty off of barbed wire and billets?

Mr. WEAVER. And I have asked you if you would vote with me to do it. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Why do not you answer? I challenge the gentleman to answer.

Mr. FUNSTON. Why not take the duty off barbed wire?

Mr. WEAVER. I am not on the committee. [Laughter and jeers on the Republican side.]

Mr. FUNSTON. If you represent farmers why not take it off, and why do not you take it off of blankets? [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] You dare not answer it. Why do not you take it off of blankets and woolen goods? I repeat it.

Mr. WEAVER. I am in favor of that. But you want to shift the controversy from lumber to blankets. [Applause on Democratic side.] I repeat the question, and challenge an answer. Will you join me in voting to take the duty off of wire?

Mr. FUNSTON. Well, answer the other question first. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, when you come squarely up and answer mine. And I want the gentleman to understand that he has no right to interrupt me when I have the floor, and when I tell him plainly that I will not yield unless he answers my question. Now he declines to answer. He replies with counter-questions, shirking the real issue. I arraign the gentleman before this House and the district he represents as being opposed to putting barbed wire and lumber upon the free-list. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FUNSTON. And I arraign you, sir, before your district as being opposed to taking the duty off barbed wire. You are a coward and afraid to do it. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WEAVER. I say I will vote to put barbed wire on the free-list. Will you do it?

Mr. FUNSTON. I have said that I am in favor of protecting everything that American labor produces, whether it be little or great. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WEAVER. Do I understand you to answer that you are opposed to taking the duty off either barbed wire or lumber?

Mr. FUNSTON. Certainly; I am opposed to taking the duty off both or either, and I appeal to my party friends that they will stand by me as they did in 1886.

Mr. WEAVER. Now, then, I arraign the gentleman before his constituents and before the Republican party of Kansas, as opposing and trampling under his feet the resolution of his own Republican State Legislature.

Mr. FUNSTON. Why do you not take the duty off both?

Mr. WEAVER. I stand exactly where the Republican Legislature of Kansas has stood, and the gentleman is here in rebellion against it and in favor of the lumber trust and the barbed-wire trust of this country. [Applause on Democratic side.] I arraign him also as being in opposition to four of his own colleagues, who stood up here like men and voted with us on this side of the House for free lumber.

Mr. PETERS. Oregon has given an increased majority against free trade. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WEAVER. There is another wounded duck. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HERMANN. Six thousand majority in Oregon, according to the latest reports. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has expired.

Mr. FUNSTON. I am glad to hear from the gentleman from Iowa, but first of all I want to reply to the observations of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]. I was called out just as I had finished my remarks awhile ago by a gentleman from Kansas, but I would not have gone at that time if I had known that the gentleman from Missouri intended to reply to what I had said. The gentleman claimed that I had asserted that protected labor in the lumber business was better paid than any other industry. What I said was that no one on this floor had asserted that. The RECORD reads:

Mr. FUNSTON. No one made that assertion.

That is the only reference I made to the subject, and I repeat now that no one did make that assertion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], I thanked him a few moments ago for putting a question to me, because I delight to answer these questions. I say to him now, as I have said before, that I am a protectionist, not merely for the things that we produce ourselves, not upon the ground that I want all things that we consume in my State to come in free and a duty to be laid upon all things that we produce. That is not the kind of protectionist I am. I place myself upon the broad principles of Henry Clay, who so ably advocated the doctrines of the protective system. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, sir, I stand here to say that the gentleman misrepresents even his own Iowa. He came down into my district last fall and made a canvass there. The people of Kansas have learned by experience that whenever there is a drought in the Rocky Mountains we get the grasshoppers, and whenever there is a failure of crops in Iowa we get the cranks. [Laughter.] So they came down and overran my district, but the gentleman with all his pals did not succeed in carrying a single county for his doctrine of free trade.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will say further, so far as regards barb wire, that I am in favor of putting everything we produce in this country upon the protective-list. I am consistent; I am in accord with the protective system of the Republican party. But you [Mr. WEAVER] claim to be a free-trader; you claim to be a friend of the farmer; you claim to be a friend of the farmer of Iowa, Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, and yet you stand by the Committee of Ways and Means who propose to put a duty of 45 per cent. on barb wire and increase the duty on the material of which it is manufactured, so as to make it amount to about 65 per cent. You also vote for a duty of about 80 per cent. on rice. And at the same time you do that you vote for free wool; you vote for free flax; you vote for free linseed oil; you vote for making every thing free that the farmers in your State produce, and the farmers of your district, if they vote for you this coming fall, will make the greatest mistake of their lives. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BYNUM. The gentleman states that he is in favor of protecting everything that we raise. Do I understand him, therefore, as intending to vote against the proposition which comes from his side of the House to put sugar on the free-list?

Mr. FUNSTON. I want to say to the gentleman that I differ with some of my friends on this side, and that I shall stand for protecting sugar just as I stand for protecting other things. I am not a little-souled man. I hope I do not represent a little-souled people who want everything free that they consume and everything that they produce protected. The gentleman from Indiana can not say as much. [Applause.]

Mr. BYNUM. That is all. I just wanted a square answer and I have got it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. The amendment being formal, the Chair will presume that it is withdrawn.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to renew the amendment for the purpose of saying a word on this barb-wire question. In regard to that there are two points to be taken into consideration: first, the effect of the duty upon the material, and, second, the effect of the patents upon the profits of the manufacturers. Now, what has the Committee on Ways and Means done as to the first? In line 161 of this bill I find, "slabs and billets of steel, $11 per ton." Wire is made of wire rods; wire rods are made of slabs and billets. The present duty on these billets is 45 per cent., which a large manufacturer as well as importer tells me is equivalent to $8 per ton. Therefore this bill raises that duty from $8 to $11 per ton. Looking farther along in the bill I find that "iron and steel wire and iron and steel wire galvanized, and all manufactures of iron and steel wire and of iron and steel wire galvanized shall pay the duties now provided by law; provided that no such duty shall be in excess of 60 per cent. ad valorem." That shows the sympathy of the committee for the barb-wire-using farmer.

Now, as to the other point, the effect of the patents. Almost all this barb wire is made under a set of patents granted by the Government of the United States, and I do not hesitate to say that our patent system needs a thorough revision. I do not hesitate to say that the price of barb wire has been raised beyond the normal point because of the existence of these patents; and in that connection I want to state that bills have been introduced in this House limiting the effect of the patent system, and have been referred to the Committee on Patents, of which the honorable gentleman from Iowa is chairman; but he has made no effort to have those bills considered in this House.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider the formal amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending amendment is that of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

And provided further, That whenever the said commercial privileges, including the right to buy provisions, bait, and supplies, and to transship any portion of cargo, are granted to the fishing and other vessels of the United States by the Dominion of Canada, then mackerel, herring, salmon, and other fish smoked, dried, salted, pickled, or preserved, except anchovies and sardines, or other fish preserved in oil, shall be free of duty.

And provided further, That whenever the Dominion of Canada admits products, wares, and merchandise grown, produced, or manufactured in the United States free of duty, then the products, wares, and merchandise grown, produced, or manufactured in said Dominion of Canada shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is admitted by almost everybody that there must be some reduction of the revenue. The entire amount of revenue now raised annually by means of the duty on the various items of lumber, wood, etc., which this bill places on the free-list, is a little over $1,000,000—not quite the amount of the revenue now received by the Government in a single day, and not quite 1½ per cent. of the surplus after the payment of all the annual expenditures. So that the entire amount of reduction by the schedule which we have been discussing for the last four or five days does not equal one day's revenue, and is not quite 1½ per cent. of the annual surplus.

As it is necessary to reduce revenue, the only way, of course, in which it can be done is by an assorting of taxes, by an elimination from the tax schedule of some subjects of taxation or a reduction of the tax upon subjects which are left. The entire amount of these various articles annually imported has been a little less than seven million dollars, the amount exported between twelve million dollars and fifteen million dollars, The schedule reported by the Bureau of Statistics is not so classified as to render absolutely certain what is the amount of exportation under the classification given in the present tariff law and in the pending bill. It is probably about $15,000,000. Thus it appears that the schedule which we have been discussing embraces items of which the exportation is nearly twice as much as the importation. Therefore, it is perfectly clear, as it strikes me, that the contests we have witnessed on the part of gentlemen on the other side have not been for the purpose of preserving the revenue received from these various articles, but simply in defense of protection as protection. There is and can be no schedule as to which it can be more absolutely certain than in this case that the contest made to prevent the change proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means arises from a purpose to preserve the system of protection for the sake of protection, and not for the sake of the revenue arising from the existing duties.

The amendment which I propose to attach to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], so that if his amendment be adopted and become law, it may have substantial and fruitful results, puts upon the free-list, not only the fish that we may import from the Dominion of Canada, but also those that we may import from other countries. A very large part of the fish that we import is not Canadian fish. I am informed that the larger part of the imported fish used by the foreign population in the Northwest is not Canadian fish, but is fish cured or preserved in Norway, Sweden, and other European countries.

The second branch of the amendment I offer looks to commercial reciprocity between the Dominion of Canada and the United States. Canada has a protective tariff. The cheap Canadian labor, of which we have heard so much, is protected by a protective tariff. Along the extended border between our country and Canada there are the two barriers—the protective tariff of Canada and the protective tariff of the United States. The effect of the second branch of my amendment is that when the Canadian Government shall see its way clear to give free admission to American goods into Canadian markets, when the oversupply of manufactured articles which could be produced if labor had full twelve-month's occupation given to it annually, when the oversupply of our farmers who now have to seek a market across the ocean can find admission into Canada by means of the removal of the protective duty which Canada imposes, then we shall give to the Canadians the advantage, whatever it may be, of our market.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire further time?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No, I will not trespass further upon the attention of the Committee of the Whole. My main purpose was to submit my proposition rather than to make any extended remarks upon it.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to be recognized to oppose the amendment to the amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally, when, Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore,

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, requested that the House return to the Senate the bill (S. 1162) for the relief of Susan E. Alger.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year 1889.

DAVID MERIWETHER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. SHAW, Mr. TAULBEE, and Mr. MASON as the conferees upon the part of the House on the bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether.

TARIFF.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

The amendment and the amendment to the amendment were read.

[Mr. DINGLEY withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Maine is discussing a question that goes beyond the mere rate of duty upon articles imported for use in this country, I trust that the gentleman will be permitted to proceed without the enforcement of the five-minute rule until he has concluded his remarks.

Mr. COX. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Ohio also.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, well, the gentleman from Ohio knows when to speak.

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not wish to be ungracious, Mr. Chairman, and decline the request in favor of the gentleman from Maine, but in view of the fact that the gentleman has already occupied ten minutes in presenting the amendment and now ten minutes again on the amendment suggested, this is such a manifest change in the order of debate and course of proceedings in committee that it does not seem altogether just to other gentlemen. Would the gentleman consent to occupy but five minutes more?

Mr. DINGLEY. I have some other words I would like to say in the hearing of the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I hope ten minutes, at least, will be allowed to the gentleman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will compromise on five minutes. I repeat I do not wish to seem ungracious.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I trust ten minutes will be allowed in view of the importance of the question which is presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Ohio to the committee.

Mr. MILLS. I want to move that the committee rise early this evening, because there are other matters, an appropriation bill, which should be considered. If the gentleman from Maine will consent to go on in the morning, I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. DINGLEY. That will suit me better. I would prefer to yield for the motion that the committee rise, with the privilege of continuing in the morning.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection to the gentleman having his ten minutes in the morning.

I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. COX having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the tariff bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, as is well known, the amendments of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill have been reported back by the committee to the House, and my object now is to move that we go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering those amendments. But inasmuch as the amendments, of which there are quite a number, are none of them of very great importance, I hope the House will consent, and therefore I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill, and that we non-concur in the amendments of the Senate, in accordance with the unanimous instructions of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which considered the Senate amendments this forenoon, and appoint a conference on the disagreeing votes thereon.

It is well known to gentlemen that when a conference report comes in the various amendments are set out in full. In addition to that the managers upon the part of the House have to make a separate report and a statement of the effects of the various amendments for submission to the House; and if there is any one point on which any gentleman desires to have a discussion or a separate vote he shall have the privilege when it comes before the House. I make this request, therefore, in order to save time, that we non-concur in the amendments and agree to the conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to non-concur in the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 8565) known as the Indian appropriation bill, and agree to the conference asked thereon.

Mr. ADAMS. I shall object unless I hear some good reason for such action. I know of no reason why the House of Representatives should not consider Senate amendments. My position in this respect is well known. If the gentleman from Arkansas will state some reason for making this bill an exception to the general rule, which he must admit to be a good one, I may perhaps withdraw my objection.

Mr. PEEL. It is a well-known fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is now in New York letting contracts which have to be met and paid for out of this appropriation. At the end of this month the current appropriation expires, and the prompt passage of this bill is necessary in order to close up these contracts. If we go into Committee of the Whole to consider these various amendments it will undoubtedly take a great deal of time. I assure the gentleman there is no principle of legislation involved that will provoke any discussion.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman state how much has been added to the bill by the Senate?

Mr. PEEL. Very little. Really I can not say that they have added anything. They claim to have reduced it to some extent and perhaps made some increases in one or two places, so that when the two are balanced up there is little difference.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no new legislation involved?

Mr. PEEL. No, sir.

Mr. ADAMS. I suggest to the gentleman that he can now move to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the various amendments.

Mr. PEEL. As a matter of course; and that is what I propose to do if objection is made to the request.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is not my colleague from Illinois willing to trust his political associates on this subject?

Mr. NELSON. Let me state to the gentleman that this has been thoroughly considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and they are unanimous in this conclusion.

Mr. ADAMS. Has it been considered by the Committee of the Whole of the House of Representatives?

Mr. NELSON. And we are simply following out what has been the custom here in making this motion.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the gentleman regard it as a good or a bad custom?

Mr. NELSON. I am not here to criticise the action of the House in that regard.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I will criticise it, and say it is a bad custom.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill has already been considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS. I object.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Indian appropriation bill.

The amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 were read, and, by unanimous consent, were concurred in.

Amendments numbered 8 and 9 were read, and non-concurred, in by unanimous consent.

Amendments numbered 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27 were concurred in, by unanimous consent.

Amendments 28 and 29 were non-concurred in.

Amendment 30 was read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 817 and 818 of the bill the words: "For subsistence and civilization of the Assinaboines in Montana, including pay of employés, $30,000."

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be concurred in.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to know the reason for that.

Mr. NELSON. The reason is simply this: We have entered into a treaty with these Indians for the purchase of a large portion of their reservation, and in pursuance of that treaty they get a large annuity. The treaty has been ratified and confirmed by an act passed and approved since this appropriation bill passed the House, and the provisions of the treaty render this appropriation unnecessary.

The amendment was concurred in.

By unanimous consent, amendment 31 was concurred in.

Amendment 32 was read, as follows:

Strike out lines 854, 855, and 856 of the printed bill, as follows: "For support and civilization of the Gros Ventres in Montana, and for pay of employés, $30,000."

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be concurred in, for the same reason. The amount to be struck out by the Senate in these cases are simply the estimates that were made by the Department for these various bands of Indians in Montana. At the time this appropriation bill was made up by the committee there was a bill pending before the House to ratify an agreement made with the Indians last fall, by which, if it became a law, we should acquire from them some 17,000,000 acres of land, for which we were to pay them $4,300,000 in ten annual installments. Not knowing whether that bill would become a law or not, we inserted the usual estimates; but when the appropriation bill reached the Senate this other bill of which I have spoken had already become a law, so that there was no longer any necessity for these various appropriations. Having that contingency in view, we had inserted a provision in the appropriation bill which would have prevented the expenditure of these moneys in case the other bill became a law, and the Senate proposes now to strike out these items, and we ask the House to concur.

The thirty-fifth amendment was read, as follows:

Insert the following:

"For continuing the work of constructing ditches and reservoirs for the Navajo Indians, and for the purchase, maintenance, and operation of a portable sawmill for the use of said Indians, and for the purchase of nails and such other necessary materials as can not be obtained by the Indians for houses to be constructed by them, $15,000, to be taken from the funds now in the Treasury belonging to said Indians."

Mr. PEEL. The Committee on Indian Affairs recommend non-concurrence in this amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The thirty-sixth amendment was read, as follows:

Insert the following:

"The sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the settlers who, in good faith, made settlement in township 29 north, ranges 14, 15, and 16 west of the New Mexico principal meridian, in the Territory of New Mexico, prior to May 1, 1886, for their improvements and for damages sustained by reason of the inclusion of said townships within the Navajo reservation by Executive order of April 24, 1886, and such settlers may make their homestead, pre-emption, and timber-culture entries as if they had never made settlement within said townships."

Mr. PEEL. I ask that this amendment be non-concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, while I shall not oppose the request of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs that this amendment be non-concurred in, I wish to express the hope that the conferees on the part of the House will do whatever may be in their power to secure in the conference the adoption of both these items with reference to the Navajo Indians, the item embraced in the thirty-fifth amendment, appropriating $15,000, and the item in the thirty-sixth amendment, appropriating $10,000. I am satisfied that this sum of $25,000 ought to be appropriated for the purposes specified. My friend from Arkansas understands, of course, the condition of these Indians. The Navajoes are one of the very best and most progressive of our Indian tribes, and one of the most capable in the main of self-support. They have large herds of sheep, goats, and horses. As a tribe they are increasing rapidly in numbers and have been for years. I hope, therefore, that the encouragement proposed in this appropriation of $25,000 for the two purposes named will be readily yielded.

Allow me to say another word. It was at the instance of the committee of which the gentleman from Arkansas is now chairman and of which I had the honor to be at the time a member that this action by the Government extending the boundaries of the Navajo reservation was taken. We were not aware at the time of the number of settlers on the land which was added to the reservation, but it was very manifest that on account of the increasing numbers of the Navajoes their reservation ought to be enlarged.

While I will not now ask concurrence in this amendment, I trust the committee of conference on the part of the House will not hesitate a moment in concurring in the action of the Senate as to both these amendments.

Mr. PEEL. I fully agree in all that has been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. I have no authority, of course, to anticipate the action which may be taken by the conferees on the part of the House, though I feel myself strongly inclined to concur in the gentleman's suggestion; but not understanding this matter thoroughly we thought it the safe course to ask non-concurrence, so that we may ascertain the reasons which have actuated the Senate in inserting these two amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks which have just fallen from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] I move concurrence in this amendment, and I wish to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The thirty-fifth amendment has already been non-concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. The two amendments ought to go together; and after the intimation of the chairman of the committee [Mr. PEEL] I think we can safely allow them to do so.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not know that I shall insist on my motion; but I most respectfully protest against the reason just given by the chairman of the committee in favor of non-concurrence—that the committee want further information. My whole point in opposition to this proceeding and the only reason why I have objected to non-concurrence is that I deem it the duty of the Committee on Indian Affairs to inform the House in regard to questions of this kind. If they can send a messenger to the Senate to get information, all right; if they can not, let them get information in some other mode. But let us, at any rate, have information in order that we may legislate, and that we may not allow the Senate and the House conferees to legislate for us.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me say a single word. I would very fully concur in the view expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] but for the fact that we have already non-concurred in one of these paragraphs, and of course we might as well put the other on the same footing.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether on a second view he sees such a logical connection between these two amendments that we can not now concur in this because we have non-concurred in the preceding.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; they stand on a somewhat different footing, but they are for the benefit of the same tribe of Indians.

Mr. ADAMS. The pending amendment is for the benefit of the settlers, not for the benefit of the Indians at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I connect the two measures together, though they are somewhat different as to their subject-matter.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman connects them, permit me to say, without having any logical reason for doing so.

Mr. HOLMAN. There may be no very logical connection except that this provision is really for the benefit of both the Indians and the settlers, for the difficulties in regard to the lands added to the Indian reservation have been a source of trouble between the Indians and the settlers.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the thirty-sixth amendment will be non-concurred in.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The thirty-seventh amendment was read, as follows:

Insert the following:

"For support and education of the Seminole and Creek Indians in Florida, for the erection and furnishing of a school-house, for the employment of teachers, and for the purchase of seeds and agricultural implements and other necessary articles, $6,000."

Mr. PEEL. I ask that this amendment be non-concurred in.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee why he makes that request.

Mr. PEEL. Simply because there is no estimate from the Department in regard to this item, and we have had no opportunity to hear the reasons of the Senate committee and the Senate for putting the amendment upon the bill. The gentleman says that we ought to inform ourselves in regard to these matters. I do not know any rule of parliamentary law which would allow a committee of one House to be in conference as a body with a committee of the other to hear arguments in favor of action which may have been taken. Hence we have no legitimate means of ascertaining the reasons which have secured the adoption of these amendments in the Senate unless we personally interview members of that body. When we non-concur an issue is made up between the two Houses, and the House has the matter to that extent within its control until the question can be examined in conference. But if we concur at this stage, without understanding the reasons in favor of the amendment, there is no opportunity to remedy any mistake we may make.

Mr. ADAMS. Would not that reason require non-concurrence in any amendment which the Senate might choose to make?

Mr. PEEL. I did not understand the gentleman's remark.

Mr. ADAMS. Does not your argument require you to throw into conference any amendment which the Senate may choose to make?

Mr. PEEL. Not necessarily. Any amendment which we can understand, and which appears to us proper, we can readily concur in. We have already concurred in quite a number.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman is the chairman of a committee which it is supposed ought to be able to investigate these questions and give us information.

Mr. PEEL. It is a rash assumption to suppose that the chairman of the committee must know all about these matters.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The thirty-eighth, thirty-ninth, fortieth, forty-first, forty-second, forty-third, and forty-fourth amendments of the Senate, which are as follows, were concurred in:

Thirty-eighth amendment: Strike out the following:

"The various amounts appropriated in this act for the support, maintenance, civilization, pay of employés, etc., of the Indians in Montana receiving rations at Fort Peck, Fort Belknap, and Blackfeet agencies, respectively, shall not be expended, provided the several agreements made with them by the agents of the United States in December, 1886, and January and February, 1887, be ratified by Congress. The first installment stipulated in said agreements to take the place of said appropriations."

Thirty-ninth amendment: Strike out in the paragraph under general incidental expenses of the Indian service the word "general" and insert the following words: "Incidental expenses of Indian service in Arizona: For general."

Fortieth amendment: Insert in the same paragraph the words "for Hoopa Valley agency."

Forty-first amendment: Strike out the following paragraph:

"For the payment of salaries of judges of the Indian courts, $5,000."

Forty-second amendment: Insert the following paragraph:

"For compensation of judges of Indian courts, at such rate as may be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of the Interior, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Forty-third amendment: Insert the following words: "In accordance with treaty stipulation."

Forty-fourth amendment: Strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" so it will read:

"For survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and of lands to be allotted to Indians, and to make allotments in severalty, in accordance with treaty stipulation, to be expended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $10,000."

The forty-fifth and forty-sixth amendments of the Senate were non-curred in, as follows:

Forty-fifth amendment: Strike out the following:

"For pay of special agents, and necessary expenses to carry out the provisions of section 3 of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," $35,000; $10,000 of which sum shall be immediately available."

Forty-sixth amendment: Strike out the following:

"For surveys and resurveys under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 8, 1887, to be repaid proportionately out of the proceeds of the sales of such lands as may be acquired from the Indians under the provisions of said act, $75,000; in all, $100,000."

Mr. PERKINS. The forty-seventh, forty-eighth, and forty-ninth Senate amendments are more specific and are in lieu of the forty-fifth and forty-sixth amendments of the Senate in reference to what is known as the general allotment bill. As we have non-concurred in the forty-fifth and forty-sixth amendments striking out the House provisions we should also non-concur in the forty-seventh, forty-eighth, and forty-ninth amendments, and let the whole question go to the conference committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will not the gentleman from Kansas admit that the Senate provisions are better and more specific?

Mr. PERKINS. They are.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me ask whether this is not an instance illustrating how unwise it is on our part to concur or non-concur by unanimous consent in reference to these amendments, as was proposed in the House, and to which I objected. If consent had been granted these amendments of the Senate would have been non-concurred in.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

The fiftieth amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert the following paragraph:

"To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay Charles F. Larrabee for services rendered as disbursing officer of the commission appointed May 15, 1886, to negotiate with certain tribes and bands of Indians in Minnesota, by reason of which service he was required to give a bond and to incur extra responsibility, $1,000."

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The fifty-first amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Insert the following:

"To pay Shirley C. Ward, of Los Angeles, Cal., for his services to date as special attorney for the Mission Indians of Southern California, under appointment by the Attorney-General, made at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, $2,500."

Mr. PEEL. The committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. What information has the chairman of the committee in reference to this claim for services as special attorney for the Mission Indians of Southern California?

Mr. DUNN. I happen to know about that case. Suit was brought to dispossess the Indians, and the decision of the lower court was against them, but the decision of the Supreme Court reversed that decision of the lower court and left the Indians in possession.

I say that fee provided for in this amendment of the Senate was earned in a righteous cause, every dollar of it. I have read the decision of the Supreme Court since I have been here.

Mr. PEEL. We do not know whether the amount provided is reasonable or not, and therefore we move to non-concur so as to look into it. We do not know whether it is too much.

Mr. DUNN. This attorney was employed by advice of the Attorney-General, and the fee is not one-quarter of what it would have been to private parties. This land sold for $130,000 while I was there to the parties who had brought the action of ejectment against the Indians. The fee is $2,500, but it ought to be $10,000. It was honestly earned and in a righteous cause.

Mr. PEEL. That may be all true, but I move to non-concur.

Mr. DUNN. I do not wish to antagonize the committee, but in my judgment that fee ought to be paid.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate numbered 52 and 53, which are as follows, were non-concurred in:

Fifty-second amendment: Insert the following:

"For payment to Anna Adamson the equivalent of five months' salary as a teacher at the Indian school at the Mission Indian agency, California, $300."

Fifty-third amendment: Insert the following:

"For this amount, to be paid to Wallace W. Rollins and Otis F. Presbrey, it being in full payment of the amount of their claim against the Eastern band of Cherokee Indians in North Carolina, found by the Court of Claims, in Departmental Case No. 18, Senate Executive Document No. 158, Fiftieth Congress, first session, to be due them for services rendered under their contract of May 15, 1874, with same Indians, $10,176.75."

Amendments numbered 54 and 55 were non-concurred in.

Amendment numbered 56 was read, as follows:

For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Cœur d'Alene tribe of Indians for the purchase and release by said tribe of such portions of its reservation as such tribe shall consent to sell, on such terms and conditions as shall be considered just and equitable between the United States and said tribe of Indians, which purchase shall not be complete until ratified by Congress, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand the committee recommend non-concurrence in this amendment. I would ask why this should be non-concurred in. I suggest that the transaction is not to be completed until it is ratified by Congress.

Mr. PEEL. That may be true; but it may be found on an investigation that it is not necessary to go to this expense at all. There may be an experimental expenditure there of this sum without producing any good results.

Mr. ADAMS. But it is subject to the approval of Congress.

Mr. PEEL. I move to non-concur in this amendment.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendments 57 and 58 were read, as follows:

Strike out the words "support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, for construction and repair of school buildings, and for purchase of horses, cattle, sheep, goats, swine, and so forth, for schools, $725,000," and insert:

"For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, $685,000; for the construction and repair of school buildings, $55,000; and for purchase of horses, cattle, sheep, and swine for schools, $10 000; in all, $750,000: Provided, That the entire cost of any boarding-school building to be built from the moneys appropriated hereby, including furniture, shall not exceed $10,000, and the entire cost of any day-school building to be so built shall not exceed $600."

Mr. ADAMS. I rather infer that amendment No. 58 is intended as a substitute for what is proposed to be stricken out by the Senate. Before that is non-concurred in let us hear the judgment of the committee as to whether the substitute is not better than the provision contained in the original bill.

Mr. PEEL. That may be so. It should be remembered, however, that this bill only came over to the committee on Saturday last, and we have had little time to consider these matters, and therefore prefer to look further into it.

Mr. ADAMS. Has the gentleman any opinion of his own as to the superiority of the amendment numbered 58?

Mr. PEEL. There is a difference between them, and for the present I should prefer to non-concur in the amendments.

The amendments were non-concurred in.

Amendment 59 was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "and for transportation of pupils to and from said school" and insert "at not exceeding $167 for each pupil;" so that it will read: "For support of Indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., at not exceeding $167 for each pupil, $80,000."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Is that the Philadelphia school?

Mr. PEEL. No; that is the Carlisle school.

Mr. ADAMS. What change does this make?

Mr. PEEL. I believe it has been the rule, anyhow. I see no special objection to it as amended by the Senate.

The amendment was concurred in.

Amendment No. 60 was concurred in.

Amendment No. 61 was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 62 was concurred in.

Amendment No. 63 was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 64 was concurred in.

Amendments numbered 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, and 70 were non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 71 was concurred in.

Amendments numbered 72 and 73 were non-concurred in.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to non-concur in all the other amendments, as I want to move an adjournment.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope the gentleman will come at once to amendment No. 76 and let us hear an explanation of why the Senate have stricken out this paragraph.

Amendments numbered 74 and 75 were non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 76 was read, as follows:

Strike out the words:

"For the support and education of Indian pupils of both sexes at day and industrial schools in Alaska, $20,000; this to be expended under the supervision and control of the Bureau of Education."

Mr. NELSON. The gentleman from Illinois wants to know the object of the Senate in striking out this paragraph. We do not know. We propose to non-concur to find out.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 77 was read, as follows:

For the purpose of constructing and completing suitable school-buildings for an Indian industrial school, to be located at some point in Ormsby County, in the State of Nevada, upon lands previously donated to the Government of not less than 200 acres in extent, and of such character and location as shall be deemed most suitable for the purpose by the Secretary of the Interior, upon plans and specifications to be approved by him, $25,000.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that we non-concur in this and all the rest of the amendments.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I want an explanation first of one of the following amendments, No. 78, before that is done.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment, No. 77, will be concurred in. The appropriation of $25,000 here is for the construction of an Indian industrial school in Nevada. We have done nothing at all for these Indians in Nevada, and quite a large number of intelligent and benevolent people are interested in their education.

Mr. PERKINS. Permit me to suggest to the gentleman that the committee have already reported a bill, which is upon the Calendar, providing for an Indian school in Nevada. But there are some provisions in that bill which are not incorporated here; and while we are in favor of the school we thought it well to compare that bill with the Senate amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the hope that the committee will yield to that amendment, I shall make no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. The committee have already reported a bill.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Amendment No. 78 was read, as follows:

That in the expenditure of any money appropriated in this act for any of the purposes of education of Indian children, those children of Indians who have taken lands in severalty under any existing law shall not, by reason thereof, be excluded from the benefits of such appropriations.

Mr. NELSON. At the request of the gentleman from New Jersey, I will briefly explain the nature of this amendment.

At the instance of the gentleman from New York, who is not now in his seat, I was informed that there were certain Indians in New York and other places who had lands allotted to them in severalty whose children the Department thought were not entitled to the educational provisions in the appropriation bill; and this amendment, or the substance of it, was suggested to meet that difficulty.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then you are in favor of it?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to non-concur in that amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman is in favor of this proposition why should we not concur?

Mr. NELSON. Has the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs any objection to amendment 78?

Mr. PEEL. I see no objection to it.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to non-concur in all the remaining amendments.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported from the Committee of the Whole that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the Senate thereto, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that certain of the amendments be concurred in and that the others be non-concurred in.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments in which the Committee of the Whole have recommended concurrence be now adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Are separate votes demanded on the amendments?

Mr. PEEL. Let them be taken together.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the amendments reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the other amendments will be considered as non-concurred in.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PEEL. I now ask unanimous consent that a conference be requested on the disagreement of the two Houses on the bill and amendments.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House, Mr. PEEL, Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi, and Mr. PERKINS.

BARRACKS AT FORT SNELLING.

On motion of Mr. TILLMAN, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War for an appropriation for the erection of barracks at Fort Snelling, and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

GENERAL PLEASANTON.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, there is a bill upon the Speaker's table which came from the Senate yesterday with an amendment—a bill to retire General Pleasanton. I move that the Senate amendment be non-concurred in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not on the Speaker's desk, but will be here in a few minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. GEST: A bill (H. R. 10373) granting a pension to Alex. Kelleman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEAL: A bill (H. R. 10374) for the relief of John T. Gates—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PEEL: A bill (H. R. 10375) granting a pension to S. R. Watts—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 10376) granting a pension to Eva L. Webb—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill (H. R. 10377) to refer the claim of Mahala H. Portlock to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. T. H. B. BROWNE: A bill (H. R. 10378) for the relief of William J. Lewis—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. R. H. M. DAVIDSON: Petition of citizens of Citrus County, Florida, for the improvement of Homosassa River, Florida—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Memorial of the Boards of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa.; of Portland, Oregon; of Savannah, Ga.; of Mystic Valley, Conn.; and of the Chamber of Commerce of Duluth, in favor of the Nicaragua canal—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. GAINES: Petition of E. Oscar Pegram, of Dinwiddie County, Virginia, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LEE (by request): Petition of Elias Cooper, of Loudoun County, and of J. F. and Charles E. Conrad, executors of J. M. Conrad, of Loudoun County, Virginia, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PETERS: Copy of discharge and papers in case of Eva L. Webb, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. G. M. THOMAS: Petition of William Bell, of Fleming County, Kentucky, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WADE: Petition of citizens of McDonald County, Missouri, for the establishment of a system of Government telegraph—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Jesse Keys, of Madison County, Alabama, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions in favor of House bill 9716, for the better protection of free labor from convict labor, were received and severally referred to the Committee on Labor:

By Mr. DUNHAM: Of Jerry Scofield and 7 others, members of Local Assembly No. 1597, Knights of Labor, of Lake, Cook County, Illinois.

By Mr. PERKINS: Of William J. Needham and others, citizens of Cherokee County, Kansas.

By Mr. WADE: Of citizens of McDonald County, Missouri.

The following petition for the more effectual protection of agriculture, by the means of certain import duties, was received and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

By Mr. GROUT: Of William Douglass and other citizens of North Concord, Vt.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 7, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BRIG GEORGE WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting conclusions of that court in regard to the French spoliation claim in the case of the brig George Washington; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FAULKNER presented the petition of Justin Rittenhouse and 37 other citizens of Harrison County, West Virginia, praying that the interstate-commerce law be amended; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of George Peltier, late a private in Company F, Eighth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, praying that he be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of citizens of Jacksonville, Fla., praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1448, to create a national bureau of harbors and water ways; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Indian River, Fla., praying that an appropriation be made to deepen and straighten Indian River from Grant's Farm to Jupiter Inlet; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DOLPH presented a petition of citizens of Washington Territory, praying that certain improvements be made on the Skagit River at Mount Vernon, in Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GEORGE presented the memorial of the Board of Trade of Jackson, Miss., remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 1448) to create a national bureau of harbors and water ways; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition of citizens of Clay County, Missouri, who respectfully pray that, in view of recent public disclosures of gross violations under the interstate-commerce act by the railway companies of this country, in case of all prosecutions commenced and brought after the passage of the interstate-commerce act against any person or corporation for a violation of the act passed February 4, 1887, on the complaint of a citizen of the United States, whether the violation of said act complained of occurred prior or subsequent to the passage of this act, such citizen shall be entitled to have and receive for his own benefit all fines and penalties that may be imposed and collected for such violation of law.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9487) granting a pension to Mrs. Aurelia P. Hall, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1963) for the relief of John A. Lynch, have carefully considered the same, and, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate of February 7, 1884, report as follows:

That they have referred the same to the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1960) granting a pension to Willard A. Jackson; and

A bill (S. 2756) granting a pension to Andrew J. Hadley.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2982) granting a pension to Ellen M. Thornton, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 436) for the relief of James Barnes, Joab Williams, and William Titus, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

JOHN TAYLOR.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask that the bill (S. 2058) granting a pension to John Taylor be recalled from the House of Representatives. The House of Representatives has passed a bill similar to it, and when the Senate bill is returned I shall ask its indefinite postponement and the passage of the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill indicated by him to the Senate. That order will be made; if there be no objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 3108) granting a pension to Daniel Hartsook; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3109) granting a pension to D. G. Rummel; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3110) to amend section 2 of an act entitled "An act to define more clearly the jurisdiction and powers of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 1, 1866; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAMERON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3111) to incorporate the trustees of the National Industrial Institute in Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE introduced a bill (S. 3112) granting an increase of pension to William H. Marston; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 3113) granting a pension to Clara H. McIntire; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3114) granting a pension to Joseph H. Harwood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills, and agreed to the same:

A bill (H. R. 7263) for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Mich.; and

A bill (H. R. 7264) for the erection of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHAW, Mr. TAULBEE, and Mr. MASON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PEEL, Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi, and Mr. PERKINS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolutions; which were read:

Whereas in the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations on the treaty now pending in the Senate between the United States and Great Britain, concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington February 15, 1888, the question is presented whether the President had authority to negotiate such a treaty without the previous consent of the Senate; and

Whereas in said report the question is also raised whether the persons appointed by the President without the advice and consent of the Senate as plenipotentiaries to negotiate and sign said treaty were lawfully appointed, and whether said document is a treaty duly negotiated for the consideration and action of the Senate; and

Whereas said committee declare in said report that the matters to which said treaty relates are not fit subjects for negotiation with the Government of Great Britain and that the time for negotiation with that Government on these subjects has passed; and

Whereas the Senate will consider said treaty on its merits, and declines to adopt the views of the committee as expressed in their report as to the constitutional powers of the President in negotiating treaties, and also declines to affirm that the time for negotiation with Great Britain on the subject of our fishing rights or the commercial rights of our fishermen has passed, or that the existing difficulties on these subjects are not subjects of negotiation:

1. Resolved, That, in the opinion of the Senate, the treaty signed by Thomas F. Bayard, William L. Putnam, and James B. Angell, as plenipotentiaries of the United States, in conjunction with the British plenipotentiaries, on the 15th day of February, 1888, and sent to the Senate by the President as a treaty duly negotiated for the consideration and action of the Senate, is properly authenticated as a treaty made by the President of the United States, acting within his constitutional powers, and is lawful and valid as a negotiation.

2. Resolved, That, in the opinion of the Senate, the time has not passed for negotiation with Great Britain as to the just interpretation of any part of Article I of said treaty of 1818 upon any point of sincere disagreement between the two Governments as to the true meaning of the same, and that no act of Congress has declared that such time for negotiation has passed; nor has the time for such negotiation passed in respect of any commercial rights that may be claimed or that may be needed for our fishermen in any of the harbors or ports of the British possessions of North America, and that the existing matters of difficulty, including the claims of our fishermen, for damages wrongfully sustained, are subjects for treaty negotiation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama ask for the present consideration of the resolutions?

Mr. VANCE. I move the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolutions are subject to objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are, under the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of course, I should like to have them printed. I have not read them. I can only see that there is an endeavor to avoid and evade the real issue in regard to the British treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. I rise to make an inquiry of the Chair. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] has moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I desire to know if I can not be heard now in opposition to the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would hold that, under the rules, if objection is made to their present consideration the resolutions will lie over one day and be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rose to make the objection when the Senator from North Carolina rose, and I paused because I did not know but that he intended to make the objection.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from North Carolina made a motion to refer the resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair could not entertain that motion until unanimous consent had been asked for the consideration of the resolutions, under the rule.

Mr. MORGAN. I must say, Mr. President, that I am utterly surprised at that ruling, because it has never been before practiced in the Senate, so far as I am aware.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator permit the rule to be read? The Secretary will read the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. Am I at liberty to ask the Senator from Alabama what is his desire in regard to the resolutions?

Mr. MORGAN. My desire is to address the Senate on the resolutions this morning.

Mr. SHERMAN. This morning?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I must object to that, very decidedly.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not wish to have any action taken on the resolutions this morning, however.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is but proper that I should state that the Senator who was the author of the report which is commented upon and which is said to make certain allegations is not here. He is out of the city, and I therefore deem it my duty, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to object to the present consideration of the resolutions. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] wrote the report, and I am very glad to give him now the credit of it.

Mr. MORGAN. I propose this morning to make in the Senate the speech I made in executive session, every word of which the Senator from Vermont heard, or could have heard if he had listened to it. If the Senate will give me leave to furnish that speech in print I will print it without delivering it in the Senate. Otherwise I shall find an early opportunity to deliver it.

I desire to say also, Mr. President, if I am permitted to do so——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the Senator from Alabama proceeding.

Mr. SHERMAN. Reserving, however, the right to object to the consideration of the resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has already ruled on that point. Will the Senator from Alabama pause one moment to allow the rule to be read? Clause 5 of Rule XIV will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

5. All resolutions shall lie over one day for consideration unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Senator from Alabama will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the Senator from Alabama proceeding to explain, but I do object to the consideration of the resolutions to-day. I will waive my objection for the purpose of allowing him to make a statement now.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not understand that the consideration of a resolution is the subject that is up when a motion to refer it to a committee is made. The consideration of a resolution implies——

Mr. SHERMAN. Consideration can not be had on the day of presentation until the consent of the Senate is given by unanimous consent. Without the leave of the Senate, the Senator can not discuss the resolutions at all to-day.

Mr. MORGAN. If that is so, then the Senate has been out of order for at least twelve years under my observation.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution which relates to a mere matter of business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not receive any further resolutions except by unanimous consent while the question now pending is undetermined.

ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution. This is my only opportunity, as the Senator from Alabama is going to make a speech.

Mr. MORGAN. No, I do not suppose I shall have the opportunity to make a speech.

Mr. CALL. The resolution I wish to offer relates to a mere matter of business.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. CALL, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate a schedule of all claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act approved June 20, 1874, since the allowance of those which are embraced in Senate Executive Document No. 101, present session.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Florida if there has not been already a resolution passed on that question.

Mr. CALL. Not that I am advised of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio objects, and the resolution lies over under the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object simply because the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought that I had the unanimous consent of the Senate to take the floor. Other Senators on this side and on that have asked me the courtesy to yield it for a moment for formal business.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves——

Mr. MORGAN. Have I the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator had been recognized. The Chair understood him to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MORGAN. I had not yielded. He had not asked my consent to yield.

Mr. CAMERON. I beg pardon; I thought the Senator had yielded.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not propose to be taken off the floor at the will and pleasure of every gentleman who chooses to claim it. I am rather peacefully inclined in this body, but——

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. What is the pending matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] offered a series of resolutions, to the consideration of which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] objected. The Chair held that the resolutions, being objected to, must lie over one day under the rule for consideration. The Senator from Alabama asked unanimous consent to be heard on the proposition, and the Chair submitted that to the Senate, and there was no objection.

Mr. HOAR. On what proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Whether or not the resolutions, being objected to, went over until to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. To make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Alabama proceeding?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have an objection to his proceeding to discuss the resolutions. If he wishes only to state his view of the point of order raised, I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no rule that the Chair can enforce restraining Senators from debate upon any aspect of the question if consent is given.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to any debate on the resolutions until the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is present, and then at any time when the Senator from Alabama desires to address the Senate he can do so. I have no objection to the proposition that he made a while ago, but I think until the Senator from Vermont is here this debate ought not to proceed. This whole subject was postponed by unanimous consent till next Monday.

Mr. MORGAN. I have the floor, Mr. President, by the unanimous consent of the Senate, and I do not think the Senator from Ohio has the right to object to my proceeding under that consent to say what I have to say.

Mr. SHERMAN. I respectfully enter my objection. I did so from the beginning. The very moment the resolutions were read I sent for them to look at them, and rose to object; and the Senator from Alabama can not get the floor in this way. Of course he can hold the floor, because nobody would prevent him and pull him down, or anything of that kind. But the Presiding Officer having ruled that the resolutions are not now in order, except upon the point of order, I shall say nothing further about the matter, except to renew my objection.

Mr. MORGAN. The Chair, in stating the attitude of the question before the Senate, has omitted one very important fact, which is that the resolutions were read, and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] got the floor and moved to refer them to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolutions were not before the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. And it was after that, a considerable time, when the Senator from Ohio interposed his objection to the consideration of the resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Alabama will pause one moment the Chair will state that under the rules the motion to refer could not be made until the question of consideration was decided. No disposition could be made of the resolutions while the question of their consideration was undetermined, and before they can be considered to-day unanimous consent must be given, to which the Senator from Ohio objected. The resolutions therefore are not before the Senate, unless the Senator from Alabama sees fit to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MORGAN. That is what I was about to do. I was about to appeal; and I now take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question then is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. MORGAN. The resolutions have been characterized by the Senator from Ohio as an attempt to evade an issue brought up by the treaty. On the contrary, Mr. President, this is an attempt to present the true issue before the country which the treaty presents, separated from an issue that the Committee on Foreign Relations have seen proper to make in their report, which is simply a political issue and nothing else.

I maintain that I am in order in the discussion of this question, in bringing forward now the attitude of that committee for the consideration of the Senate and of the country in respect of this very important matter, and in showing that they are making a mere political foot-ball of a great treaty and of treaty relations with foreign countries for the sake of advancing the interests of certain gentlemen in a convention which is about to assemble at Chicago.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am sorry to do it, but I should like permission to introduce some morning business. It will take but a moment.

Mr. MORGAN. If it can be done without taking me off the floor, I will yield.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would not ask it if it did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield for that purpose, retaining the floor?

Mr. MORGAN. Unless the Senator has some urgent reason for being absent from the Senate, I wish he would excuse me.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will wait. I did not notice that the call for morning business had been concluded.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the minority of the Committee on Foreign Relations had no expectation that the majority would take the ground in their report that the time for remonstrance or negotiation with Great Britain had passed with reference to the fishing rights or the commercial rights of our fishermen. Nor did they have reason to suppose that a majority of the committee would hold that the President had no right to negotiate a treaty without having first obtained the consent of the Senate, or to appoint plenipotentiaries for that purpose without having first submitted their names to the Senate for confirmation. In this opinion I was confirmed after the resolution declaring his right to do both these things had been laid upon the table of the committee on the motion of a member of the majority.

The committee having decided without the aid of a single vote of the minority against a resolution to discuss this treaty in open session, the minority had the right to suppose that this attitude would be adhered to.

On May 14 the Senate, after full debate, voted 3 for and 41 against the discussion of the treaty in open session.

On May 22, after further debate, the Senate by a vote of 28 to 28 again refused to discuss this treaty in open executive session, Mr. HALE, of Maine, voting in the negative.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio will state his point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to state it in all seriousness, because if this example set to-day is followed, that is the end of our rules. I raise the point of order that the Senator from Alabama is not discussing the question before the Senate, but is, in violation of the rules, discussing resolutions offered by him, which by the rules can not be discussed to-day except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. The Senate agreed, by unanimous consent, that the matter should go over until next Monday.

Mr. SHERMAN. And the subject-matter of which has been postponed until Monday next. I raise the point of order simply that the Senator from Alabama is not at all discussing the question before the Senate, but having the floor upon a point of order he is discussing a question which by the rules of the Senate is not now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds that under parliamentary practice the Senator from Alabama should confine himself to the discussion of the point of order. The Chair, however, has no means of enforcing the rule, and it is for the Senate to decide and not for the Chair.

Mr. MORGAN. The Republican party in the Senate held a party caucus on May 21 and reached two conclusions, first, that the treaty should be discussed in open Senate, thus reversing the action of the committee, as I have stated it, in which the opposite result was reached alone on the votes of Republicans; and second, that no amendments of the treaty should be permitted, at least on the motion of a Republican.

They were unable to execute the decree of the caucus of the Republican party on the 22d of May, because one Republican Senator voted with the Democrats against it.

That honorable Senator was absent from the Senate until after May 28, when the final vote was taken, and was not paired.

The Democratic side of the Chamber, rather than resort to the expedient of breaking a quorum of the Senate, concluded to permit the Republican side of the Chamber to execute the mandate of their caucus, even in the absence of the Senator from Maine, who was still absent without a pair.

It was under these circumstances that the debate proceeded on Friday 25th and Monday 28th of May. On stating his position on the question of an open discussion of this treaty, the Senator from Vermont announced that his convictions, often expressed in the Senate heretofore, and also in this debate, were not changed in the least, but that he would vote for the open session because he yielded his convictions to the superior wisdom of his party associates.

It will never be forgotten by the members present in the Senate how ably and eloquently the Senator from Vermont had presented his views against the discussion of this treaty in open session on the 14th May, 1888. Many of the Democrats in the Senate had made up their minds to vote in favor of open sessions on this treaty, until they heard the argument and impassioned appeal of the Senator from Vermont on that day. Many of them yielded their preference for an open session to the force of his argument, as they then and afterwards stated.

This fact accounts for the vote of 41 to 3 against the resolution for an open discussion of this treaty, including the vote of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who offered the resolution, and the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], who had so powerfully opposed it. No pairs were announced, and neither of the Senators from Maine voted.

The following was the vote on that resolution:

Those who voted in the affirmative were Messrs.—

Dawes,	Sherman,	Teller.

Those who voted in the negative were Messrs.—

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hiscock,	Saulsbury,
Allison,	Davis,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Spooner,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Blair,	Evarts,	Palmer,	Vance,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	Walthall,
Butler,	George,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa,
Call,	Gray,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.
Chandler,	Hampton,	Ransom,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Reagan,
Coke,	Hawley,	Sabin,

The sudden revolution in the attitude of the Senate between the 14th and 22d of May, which produced a tie vote on the same proposition, was the result of caucus mandate. It reconciled the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the support of his own resolution, which he had so recently assisted in killing, and swept the Senator from Vermont so far from his base that it placed his vote in the affirmative and left his convictions on the negative side with the Democrats, many of whom he had so recently converted to his views on this subject. When I was convinced that the unbroken usage of the Senate for a hundred years would be violated in the discussion of this treaty in open executive session I could not forego the last opportunity I would have to present to the Senate in confidential session my views of the situation in which we would place the United States by the adoption of the report of the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I was the more compelled to do this because the minority of the committee had not had any opportunity to answer what we think is a very dangerous and indefensible attitude in which the assertions and arguments of the majority of the committee in their report will place the country.

Announcing to the Senate that I had prepared a written statement of my views in reply to the report of the majority, which I had never seen until it had been reported to the Senate, I proceeded in executive session to read what I will presently again read to the Senate in open session.

I stated then that I had written out what I desired to say by way of reply to the majority report, and that I would repeat it in the open Senate if the vote of the body should open the doors, in order to present properly the issue between the reports of the majority and the minority. In consequence of interruptions by other Senators, I answered orally upon questions submitted while I held the floor, and those episodes in the discussion I have not attempted to recall. I could not do so without giving my version of remarks and statements made by other Senators, which might not be just to them.

When the argument was afterwards progressing in open executive sessions several allusions and statements were made by the Senator from Maine and others as to what I had said in the remarks I am now about to repeat.

I shall not now attempt, as I will do at a later period in this debate, to show that my remarks, made in executive session, were misunderstood by the Senators from Maine and Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

I wish first to put into the RECORD what I did say, and further to say that nothing was said by me in any oral remarks during that debate that was at all in conflict with or different in sentiment or statement from my written remarks, which I will now proceed to read:

It may be correct in practice, but in nearly twelve years' service in the Senate I have never known an instance in which the report of the majority of a committee has been withheld from the minority until it was laid before the Senate, in any matter of real controversy.

In this case the report was printed and laid before the Senate without the minority having been informed of a word that it contained.

This statement is made now, not as a complaint that the minority were not advised as to the facts relied upon by the majority, or of the general course of the argument they would follow, but as an explanation of the reasons why the minority did not essay to answer, as I now propose to do, the argument that has been presented in the report of the majority, but relied solely upon the strength of the treaty for the vindication of the views they entertained in favor of its ratification.

It was as well known to the committee then as it is now to the Senate that the majority did not agree in their opposition to the treaty upon at least two very important points:

First. As to the power of the President to negotiate this treaty, through the agents he selected, without the advice or consent of the Senate; and Second. As to the importance of the delimitations in the treaty of the bays and harbors from parts of which the treaty excludes our fishermen.

These disagreements, which were known to the committee, disappear in the report.

It was also obvious that in the main the provisions of every article in the treaty except the fifteenth were acceptable to at least one member of the majority.

It was therefore a surprise to the minority that the attack upon the treaty made in this report of the majority should have been made upon these grounds, along with others.

It was a startling surprise to me, as it must have been to my colleagues on the committee, to find, as we did, on yesterday, by acknowledgments of no uncertain sort on this floor, that a caucus decree had preceded the discussion of the treaty, which forbade the allowance of any amendments by its friends or the friends of any sort of negotiation, by which it could be in any way improved or made more acceptable to the country. That caucus edict has crushed an amendment that was presented in committee by a very distinguished Senator of the majority, and has silenced other Senators on that side who said that they had amendments to offer.

I am glad to know that no political party ever before attempted thus to impose upon a question of foreign policy the embarrassments of domestic party politics. It rejoices me to find that the party that would attempt to do such a thing makes this broad confession that all its other policies have failed to engage the confidence of the people. In its wild distress it thus addresses itself to the task of doing what it hopes will enable it to regain power by a united appeal to a supposed restless desire of our people for strife and war and to old resentments towards Great Britain, recently intensified amongst our Irish population by the conduct of that Government towards their friends in Ireland. The party that made this decree in its caucus, that this treaty should neither be amended nor ratified, feels the sad need of a new issue for its campaign.

They need another issue where prejudice can set free the tongue of clamor until the voice of reason can not be heard.

If they get it they will need a new rider for this Pegasus. Mr. Blaine, Mr. EVARTS, Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. Gresham were all members of cabinets, and two of them were Secretaries of State, while discussion, which always implies negotiation, was being conducted on these same questions. The wrongs went on; the people suffered; the diplomats quarreled, as lovers do, only to prove the depths of an inner love that no surface storm can reach, but they still mildly discussed a treaty and hid away all thoughts of war from their peaceful contemplations. Their repose, which argued an indifference to the wrongs then existing, is in strange contrast with their present wild and sudden fury, excited by those wrongs.

They were in power then and were not so mad as they are now with the Queen of Great Britain. They are very mad now, but their anger is so sudden and unexpected to the people concerned in promoting good feeling with the Canadians that no responsive growl has come back from the masses. The only answer yet made from a convention comes from the State of Maine.

It was confidently expected by this caucus of treaty-makers that the people of that State would follow the caucus pell-mell and that the treaty and its friends would be pushed into the sea. Instead of that we see the people on the Bay of Fundy courageously supporting a treaty that is honorable and just.

It was a cooling douche upon this hot expectation that the caucus could not compel a Senator from Maine to throw open the doors of the Senate and invite the galleries to assist us in treating with Great Britain or in forcing us to go to war with that power.

But the firm Democracy of Maine, who will also become at no distant day the Democracy triumphant, have utterly flattened out this brilliant hope of the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Virginia. In their State platform they expressly indorse this treaty, and they put at the head of their ticket for governor Hon. Mr. Putnam, one of the "plenipotentiaries" who negotiated it, and one of its ablest supporters, whom this committee try to disparage as the usurper of a high office. There will be open debate in Maine, and before we hasten to reject this treaty it would be wise for the Senate to hear the result. Their bold resolution in favor of this treaty must cause the people of the other States to give thoughtful consideration to its provisions.

None of the great names I have mentioned could be safely trusted on a war platform about a matter that so long encouraged their comfortable and peaceful slumbers. With the new issues the caucus has made they must find a new candidate. Who can so well play the austere rôle of the offended friend of the fisherman as the distinguished Senator from Vermont? No drowsy dolce far niente of a Cabinet couch has ever closed his vigilant eyes on the fishermen's wrongs. Alert, powerful, adroit, and modest, he fills the character that is needed for the occasion. He is no summer friend, and is willing to suffer the cold severity of own self-condemnation to let the world know how he loves the fishermen.

When the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] hauled his venerable form into the Senate, a captive draggled in the dust of his chariot wheels, I felt indignant that such a prisoner should grace such a triumph; but when I discovered that the venerable Senator from Vermont was happy in the recent discovery of his ability to change his vote without changing his convictions my grief was modified. The gentle composure of this lofty and irascible spirit in its new cage has led me to believe that he is content, and that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER], instead of capturing a prisoner of war, has captured a new candidate for the Presidency—and a big one at that.

The minority of the committee found no objection to this treaty or to the manner of its negotiation. They found not only an open field for negotiation, but one that could not be honorably retired from by the United States while Great Britain manifested a desire for an amicable arrangement of our disputes. This duty, we thought, was made imperative by the fact that our retaliatory legislation was directed against Canada, and the treaty we relied upon was a treaty with Great Britain. They were of one mind in support of the entire "document," as it is ironically styled in the report.

They believed that the President had served his country with wisdom and patriotic fidelity in resorting to negotiation, that he might find a just and honorable way by which to avoid the necessity of embarrassing the trade of our own people along the whole northern border and at our great seaports on both oceans, with retaliatory non-intercourse, in order to obtain a fair settlement of disputed questions with Great Britain. They looked over the wide field of disputation, filled for most of the time during seventy years with dangerous incidents and violent contentions, and they found that only two of our statesmen, Mr. Seward and Mr. Bayard, had ever attempted to settle these troubles by a conference and mutual agreement with Great Britain. They found that of more than four hundred cases of seizures of our ships not one had been made the occasion of a demand by our Government for redress for the violation of the treaty of 1818 until Mr. Bayard came into office as Secretary of State.

They looked over our statute-books and saw that Congress had never declared that any of these seizures of our ships were violations of any treaty with Great Britain, or of any commercial rights or privileges that our fishermen were entitled to enjoy under any agreement with Great Britain, tacit or express.

They found that the Committee on Foreign Relations, in 1886, had declared that Great Britain had violated the treaty of 1818, but no measure was enacted, or even proposed, which followed up that declaration with the moral support of a legislative act, or a declaratory resolution, which asserted that such a violation of that treaty had ever, in fact, occurred. I will read an extract from that report, in which I participated, and to which I still adhere:

It will be seen, from the correspondence and papers submitted by the President in his message on the subject, of the 8th of December last (Ex. Doc. No. 19, Forty-ninth Congress, second session), and from the testimony taken by the committee, that some of these instances of seizure or detention, or of driving vessels away by threats, etc., were in clear violation of the treaty of 1818, and that others were on such slender and technical grounds, either as applied to fishing rights or commercial rights, as to make it impossible to believe that they were made with the large and just object of protecting substantial rights against real and substantial invasion, but must have been made either under the stimulus of the cupidity of the seizing officer, sharpened and made safe by the extraordinary legislation to which the committee has referred, whereby the seizing officer, no matter how unjust or illegal his procedure may have been, is made practically secure from the necessity of making substantial redress to the party wronged, or of punishment, or else they must have arisen from a systematic disposition on the part of the Dominion authorities to vex and harass American fishing and other vessels, so as to produce such a state of embarrassment and inconvenience with respect to intercourse with the provinces as to coerce the United States into arrangements of general reciprocity with the Dominion.

Our whole complaint was just to the extent that we stated it; but we were cautious to make it general, not specifying particular cases. We were using pressure to gain justice and future peace, and were not stating any case upon which to formulate a demand for redress, or to invite hostilities. We had a good case for redress, but we had no desire to make it capital.

That committee did not impute to Great Britain—the power responsible to us—any complicity in the violation of the treaty. It complained of wrongful acts of the Canadians, and the legislation that was recommended by the committee did not relate to British commerce or British ships, but to Canadian commerce and ships. The wrongs imputed to Great Britain were not those of aggression on our treaty rights, but of permission in allowing Canada to do so.

The act of Congress, passed in full view of all that had been said by committees in both Houses, mounted this high, and no higher than this, in the heroic work of predatory retaliation on the goods, wares, merchandise, and ships coming from the Dominions. I read the act, as follows:

An act to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels, in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that American fishing vessels or American fishermen, visiting or being in the waters or at any ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied or abridged in the enjoyment of any rights secured to them by treaty or law, or are or then lately have [been] unjustly vexed or harassed in the enjoyment of such rights, or subjected to unreasonable restrictions, regulations, or requirements in respect of such rights; or otherwise unjustly vexed or harassed in said waters, ports, or places; or whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any such fishing vessels or fishermen, having a permit under the laws of the United States to touch and trade at any port or ports, place or places, in the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied the privilege of entering such port or ports, place or places, in the same manner and under the same regulations as may exist therein applicable to trading vessels of the most favored nation, or shall be unjustly vexed or harassed in respect thereof, or otherwise be unjustly vexed or harassed therein, or shall be prevented from purchasing such supplies as may there be lawfully sold to trading vessels of the most favored nation; or whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any other vessels of the United States, their masters or crews, so arriving at or being in such British waters or ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied any of the privileges therein accorded to the vessels, their masters or crews, of the most favored nation, or unjustly vexed or harassed in respect of the same, or unjustly vexed or harassed therein by the authorities thereof, then, and in either or all of such cases, it shall be lawful, and it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, in his discretion, by proclamation to that effect, to deny vessels, their masters and crews, of the British dominions of North America, any entrance into the waters, ports, or places of, or within the United States (with such exceptions in regard to vessels in distress, stress of weather, or needing supplies as to the President shall seem proper), whether such vessels shall have come directly from said dominions on such destined voyage or by way of some port or place in such destined voyage elsewhere; and, also, to deny entry into any port or place of the United States of fresh fish or salt fish or any other product of said dominions, or other goods coming from said dominions to the United States. The President may, in his discretion, apply such proclamation to any part or to all of the foregoing-named subjects, and may revoke, qualify, limit, and renew such proclamation from time to time as he may deem necessary to the full and just execution of the purposes of this act. Every violation of any such proclamation, or any part thereof, is hereby declared illegal, and all vessels and goods so coming or being within the waters, ports, or places of the United States contrary to such proclamation shall be forfeited to the United States; and such forfeiture shall be enforced and proceeded upon in the same manner and with the same effect as in the case of vessels or goods whose importation or coming to or being in the waters or ports of the United States contrary to law may now be enforced and proceeded upon. Every person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act, or such proclamation of the President made in pursuance hereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Approved, March 3, 1887.

Why was the word "authorized" used in the title of the act, and why was not the word "required" put into the body of this act, if Congress intended to limit and not to enlarge the powers of the President?

Was this all that it was expected that the President would do, or was permitted by Congress to do, under this law, to choke the Dominion to its knees by choking down its commerce? Was he forbidden even to ask Great Britain, the treaty power whose treaty obligations were alleged to have been violated by the Dominion Government, whether it avowed or disavowed these wrongs, before he should declare a blockade of our ports against Dominion vessels? Such an attitude taken by Congress would have been unworthy the character of any nation.

There is no hint in this act of Congress that the time for negotiation had passed.

The President was bound, according to the plainest dictates of justice and propriety, to lay this matter before the British Government, and it was done, and that firmly.

If Alabama should do a wrong, under State authority, to a Cuban ship in the Bay of Mobile, what would we do if Spain should prohibit any ship from that State to enter a Spanish port, without having first informed the United States of the wrong which led to the act of retaliation? Congress never expected the President to do such an absurd act.

On the contrary, Congress, in the act of March 3, 1887, instead of declaring that any wrong had been done to our fishermen, enacted that "whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied" that our fishermen and fishing vessels "are or then lately have been denied or abridged in the enjoyment of any rights secured to them by treaty or law," that he should have the power to retaliate as to certain privileges of commerce enjoyed by the Canadians in our country, and might cut them off by his proclamation.

The minority of the committee searched in vain to find any declaration made by any competent authority to the effect that the time had passed for "negotiation and unavailing remonstrances" in relation to our fishing and commercial rights or privileges or their denial or abuse by the British Government.

The emphatic and very remarkable statement made on pages 21 and 25 of the report of the majority of the committee that Congress, on March 3, 1887, had reached this conclusion, and had expressed it in the retaliation act of that date, has affected me, as I think it must have affected other Senators of the minority of the committee, with painful surprise. I will read it:

This condition of things became so intolerable that, at last, the remonstrances of the Executive became vigorous and urgent, and on the 8th of December, 1886, the President sent to Congress the following message on the subject:

"To the Senate and House of Reprcsentatives of the United States:

"I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State, which is accompanied by the correspondence in relation to the rights of American fishermen in the British North American waters, and commend to your favorable consideration the suggestion that a commission be authorized by law to take perpetuating proofs of the losses sustained during the past year by American fishermen, owing to their unfriendly and unwarranted treatment by the local authorities of the maritime provinces of the Dominion of Canada.

"I may have occasion hereafter to make further recommendations during the present session for such remedial legislation as may become necessary for the protection of the rights of our citizens engaged in the open-sea fisheries of the North Atlantic waters.

"GROVER CLEVELAND.

"EXECUTIVE MANSION,
"Washington, December 8, 1886."

Justly influenced, doubtless, by this message and by the state of affairs shown in the documents accompanying it and by the evidence taken by, and the report of the Senate Committee of Foreign Relations on the same subject made on the 19th of January, 1887 (Report No. 1683, Forty-ninth Congress second session), Congress came to the conclusion that the period of negotiation and unavailing remonstrance had passed, and with almost absolute unanimity and without any party division enacted the act of March 3, 1887, hereinbefore mentioned, by which the duty was imposed upon the President of withdrawing from British North American vessels, etc., those liberties and advantages which by the pre-existing laws they were enjoying in the harbors and ports of the United States, whenever and as often as it should appear to him that similar rights and liberties were denied the United States fishing vessels, etc., in the ports, etc., of British North America, or whenever it should appear to him that American fishing vessels should have been subjected to outrageous or unjust treatment in the exercise of the rights secured to them by the treaty of 1818.

All that remained unprovided for according to the sense of self-respect and of just policy on the part of the United States was to obtain indemnity from the British Government for the injuries that had thus far been committed.

The utter want of any rational foundation for this statement, and the very serious attitude in which it places Congress and the United States towards Great Britain, demand of this body a careful consideration under circumstances of the least possible embarrassment to individual expression of opinion, before the Senate shall yield its assent to the situation in which it will place the country.

When the Senate has indorsed this statement, what must it be held to mean by so grave a declaration?

After so many disputes and conflicts of opinion between two great governments, many of them existing for more than half a century, and all of them attended with much bitterness of feeling, one of the governments declares that the Parliament, or the Congress, has reached the conclusion that "the time has passed for negotiations or unavailing remonstrances," and that the next step, the first and lightest step towards redress, shall be retaliation.

What does that mean but the opening of the door to a new plan of redress which it may be impossible to close until war has filled the land with slaughter? Congress refused to open that door, and the Senate now proposes to tear it open.

If Great Britain had followed up her many complaints as to the violation of the treaty of 1818 by our people with a declaration of her Parliament stating that it had reached the conclusion that "the time had passed for negotiation and unavailing remonstrance," our people would not have stopped to inquire whether she intended to fight us with non-intercourse or with arms. They would have instantly accepted such a declaration as one pregnant with war, and would have defied her to take the first step in a march towards redress, the last step of which would be halted upon the battle-field.

Does the committee mean that, in following up this alleged solemn conclusion of Congress, we should attack British commerce and our own with non-intercourse proclamations, and, these failing to secure our rights, that we will then abandon our rights; or that we will in that contingency advance to blows when words have failed? We would thus interpret such a declaration by Great Britain, and how shall we expect that Government to regard such a declaration on our part?

If the United States has really been put into this attitude by any "conclusion" that Congress has reached about our fishery or commercial rights, the rejection of this treaty will place the Senate in the position of being the first branch of the Government to declare the fact, the first to act upon that declaration, and the first to assume any responsibility that it may create.

If this is done for the purpose of forcing conclusions with Great Britain by commercial retaliation, wherever that may lead, we should be certain of support from the co-ordinate branches of our Government and from the people, at least, before we assume this heroic attitude, lest the solitude of our glory should become painful.

It is certain that the President has been entirely unconscious of the "conclusion" to which the Senate is now required to give recognition through the rejection of this treaty, that "the time for negotiation had passed." The Congress must have been equally unconscious of the fact, and equally ignorant of the situation when it was left to the President to first become "satisfied" as to the facts on which, alone, such a conclusion could rest, and then to make proclamation of non-intercourse, "in his discretion."

The Senate, in the effort to sit in supreme judgment upon the situation of the country, and to force it into an attitude that no other branch of the Government recognizes, should find some safe and undeniable ground for its lofty isolation and some more cogent reason than the political solicitudes and aversions that have marked all the proceedings thus far upon this treaty, and that are so obvious in the critiques, the irony, the disparagement, the bad temper, and the scarcely-concealed contempt which the report unjustly loads upon the President.

If we reject the treaty, we adopt the report of the majority of the committee as settling the ground upon which this part of our treaty-making power refuses either to amend or ratify it. The report, if it is not amended, will constitute the irreversible ground upon which the United States, represented by the Senate in these high and sovereign powers, will solemnly place these great contentions over the fisheries, with all their varied aspects of strife.

When the Senate has adopted this report by rejecting the treaty, as it will be held to have done, this résumé by the committee of this history of the questions in dispute, and the declaration founded on that statement, must be considered as the decision of the Senate, as it is found in the report, in the following language:

> In view of the plain history of these transactions and of the matters hereinbefore stated, it does not seem to the committee that the existing matters of difficulty are subjects for treaty negotiation; and such appears to have been the opinion of the Senate by its action and by the remarks of many of its members of both political parties and by the action of the House of Representatives upon and in the passage of the act of March 3, 1887, and its approval by the President.

This shuts the door upon all further negotiation. It removes the entire subject of our disputes from the category of unsettled questions; settles them by our sole decree, which cuts up further discussion of them by the roots and burns the bridges behind us. "No treaty, no negotiation, and no surrender" is written on our banners by the Senate, and, in its impotence to take a single step to carry its flag into action, it becomes the subject of universal amazement.

If this report is to be adopted as stating the grounds and reason of our action, I very much regret that it was ever written and laid before the Senate. It hedges in the country with arbitrary and unreasonable barriers by dismissing negotiation as a means of coming to a proper and satisfactory understanding with Great Britain, so that no branch of the Government can resort to anything but force for the settlement of these serious disputations.

The only door of escape from the dilemma was the fact stated by the Senator from Virginia that the issue presented on this treaty is only political; as he expressed it, "politics and only politics." He advised the Republicans to use the open discussion of this treaty as the means of getting the votes of foreign-born people.

Hereafter, when further steps are to be taken with reference to these troubles, the country will claim, as the Senator from Virginia claims, that the Senate turned aside from the proper consideration of this treaty on its merits and used the occasion for the purpose of gratifying its desire to obtain a political victory over a Democratic President.

The foreign vote that the Senator from Virginia avowed that it was the purpose of this opposition to the treaty to capture for the Republican party, that he has led with such distinguished success recently, may turn out to be a potent factor in the election now approaching. I doubt, however, if it will more than fill the gap that will be created by the desertions from his own party of those Americans whose honor and interests will be put at hazard by this political exploit.

How all this may turn out we do not know, but we do know that the Senator from Virginia has possibly relieved the Senate, whose organization he holds in his grasp, by attributing its action to the inconsiderate heat and passion of a political campaign instead of its being a solemn judgment upon matters of great and vital interest.

This Senate never saw a more dangerous day than this to its own influence and the welfare of the country, when the chairman of this committee, who is an avowed and very prominent candidate for the Presidency, resorts to a party caucus to force the Senate to violate all its wise and time-honored practice in order to promote the political ends that the Senator from Virginia has so boldly and honestly avowed.

This report of the majority, signed by the chairman of the committee and a very distinguished following of his party associates—all the Republicans on the committee—was published to the world on his motion, and must have received his hearty concurrence. Its doctrines are his doctrines, its conclusions are his conclusions, after most mature consideration. I can not but regret that he can not have the support of my vote in the public exhibition of the pride he must feel in launching this report and the treaty it is intended to crush into the great campaign about to open. Should he fail in this, however, no one can deprive him and the Senator from Virginia of the distinction of having compelled two at least of the great statesmen of the country to yield to him their votes and everything but their convictions in converting this treaty and the interest involved in it into a target for campaign practice.

If the President believed, as the report more than intimates, that this treaty, or any treaty on the topics to which it relates, was attempted to be forestalled and forbidden by Congress in the act of March 3, 1887, his assertion of his constitutional powers against such usurpation and attempted destruction will forever distinguish him as among the most intrepid defenders of the constitutional powers of his great office, and will mark him as being worthy of the gratitude of the people.

This report places Congress in a most humiliating attitude. Congress was not satisfied on March 3, 1887, that such wrongs had been inflicted on our fishermen as to demand any conclusive measures which the President would be compelled to execute. Committees of both Houses had declared the facts that would justify such measures, but Congress avoided the responsibility. Instead of making the final decision and acting upon it, Congress left it to the President to take action, by retaliation on Canadian commerce, when he should be satisfied that the occasion had arisen, and then to act according to his discretion—a most remarkable and peculiar duty in a matter of such momentous importance, and attended with the most serious difficulties and responsibilities.

If he should follow the opinions of the two committees and was "satisfied" with their finding of the facts, he would thereby advance far beyond the ground taken by Congress, which refused to declare that non-intercourse should be enforced upon those very facts. Such conduct would have been offensive to Congress, as well as extremely rash. Congress had made no provision of military or naval forces with which to capture ships or men that might attempt to break such a paper blockade. Forfeiture and confiscation of ships or fine or imprisonment of men, provided they were caught, was as far as Congress was willing to go in backing up this mock heroic policy which the President was required, in his discretion, to inaugurate and enforce.

This act undertook to compel the President to decide what Congress refused to decide, and thus to assume a responsibility that Congress refused to incur. If he could not agree with the committees, and acted in harmony with Congress, he would do precisely what Congress had done, which was nothing, as to the redress of wrongs "then lately" sustained by our fishermen.

As to future wrongs that might happen there was no need of this law, for the act of September 20, 1850 (Rev. Stat., section 3129) gave all the power of retaliation that was needed; but imposed the duty of retaliation on the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approbation of the President.

The minority of the committee saw that this law had never been enforced; that Congress had never complained that it had been a dead letter on the statute-books for more than thirty years; and that no one ever had supposed that this law compelled retaliation as the only means of expounding our fishing rights under the treaty of 1818, or of securing to our fishermen commercial rights or advantages.

The treaties of 1851 and 1871, relating both to fisheries and commerce, were made in the face of this retaliatory law; and no one ever supposed that the great publicists who made those treaties or the Presidents who sent them to the Senate, were forbidden by that statute from negotiating with Great Britain for the liberalization of our fishing rights under the treaty of 1818 or for commercial privileges.

The minority of the committee did not believe that Congress had the power, or that it ever had the intention, to prescribe to the President and to limit him to the exercise of the power of retaliation under the act of March 3, 1887, as the only way in which he should employ his "discretion" in securing justice, immunity, or redress for our fishermen.

The minority of the committee did not suppose, until they saw the report of the majority in print, after it had reached the Senate, that this act was construed as conferring the power of retaliation on the President as the only means of removing the cause of our troubles about the fisheries, and that the resolution of the Senate, which I will read, was construed as destroying or interfering with his constitutional power to negotiate a treaty for the same purpose:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the appointment of a commission, in which the Governments of the United States and Great Britain shall be represented, charged with the consideration and settlement of the fishing rights of the two Governments on the coasts of the United States and British North America, ought not to be provided for by Congress.

That resolution is such an absurd basis for such a conclusion that we never supposed that it would be considered by the committee as placing any limit upon the President in his power to negotiate treaties, or even as an expression of opinion that "the existing matters of difficulty" are not "subjects for treaty negotiation," as the majority of the committee assert.

With all these and many other considerations in view, the minority of the committee saw that the majority, who were divided in opinion on the merits of the treaty, united in an adverse report, and that, when united, their lines coincided "with the lines of political parties." I use the language of the majority in stating this fact.

In the report of the minority of the committee no allusion is made to party lines. They had no place in our estimate of the treaty. But the majority, with an evident purpose of uniting as a political party against the treaty, point out the coincidence of the minority with party lines, and read a lecture to us that is utterly without justification in the history of these transactions. They say in their report:

The committee regrets that these conclusions do not meet the approval of all its members. It had hoped, as has been the case generally hitherto, that no influences or divisions of a nature coincident with the lines of political parties would enter into a matter of this character, and that, as was the case only a little more than a year ago, all Senators of all political parties would unite in standing firmly in the attitude taken in the winter of 1886-'87, and culminating in the act of March 3, 1887, and in declining, at whatever cost, to enter into any new engagements with the British Government that should leave any American citizen, engaged in whatever occupation or business, deprived of any right or privilege, other than fishing, in any British North American or other waters, that is or may be granted to citizens of the United States engaged in any other occupation, and that have been and are fully and freely granted by the United States to every British subject, whatever may be his occupation.

They also attempt to support this unjust statement by allusions to opinions expressed in debate by Senators in the discussions on the measures of retaliation.

I well understand this reference, and will answer it before I have closed my remarks on this treaty. I allude to it now for the purpose of denying that any member of the minority on that committee has ever taken the ground that the time for negotiation had passed, or that the President was ever informed by Congress or the Senate that such a conclusion had been reached by any branch of Congress.

Availing myself of this the first opportunity to discuss the attitude of the majority of the committee towards this treaty, and the great and serious questions, past and future, to which it relates, I will examine their report in some of its leading features.

The leading view they take of the situation is that negotiation is an unfit and even humiliating means of securing our rights from Great Britain; that such a resort is condemned in advance by the action of Congress; that "all that remains unprovided for (within the duty of the President) according to the sense of self-respect and just policy on the part of the United States, was to obtain indemnity from the British Government for the injuries that had thus far been committed;" and that on the 19th of January, 1887, "Congress came to the conclusion that the period of negotiation and unavailing remonstrance had passed, and enacted the act of March 3, 1887, for the purpose of retaliation."

This is a bold statement, and, if it were sustained by the facts, would be extremely derogatory to Congress. If Congress had sedately reached "the conclusion that the period of negotiation and unavailing remonstrance had passed," as to what subject do the committee mean to assert that this period had passed?

On page 23 of the report the committee say:

And the treaty of 1818, formed on that basis, was not intended to and did not in any way touch the question of any trade or commercial right whatever, and of course made no distinction in these respects between fishing and other American vessels.

It could not, therefore, be in reference to any trade or commercial rights under the treaty of 1818 that "the period of negotiation and unavailing remonstrance had passed." It must have been in relation to fishing rights, if at all.

All the commercial rights we have in any Canadian port exist only by the permission of the British Government, which it may rightfully withdraw at any moment. This is expressly conceded in the report of the majority. (Pages 5 and 6.)

The right (except in the cases before stated) of the British to exclude such vessels and all others of the United States from her ports in British North America, as the matter stood until 1830, is fully conceded, and it is also conceded that during that time the only right of any vessel of the United States to enter the waters of British North America depended upon the treaty of 1818 alone, and in order to obtain the benefit of that treaty for such purposes, the American vessel must have been a fishing vessel, and must have resorted to those particular waters for some one of the purposes mentioned in the treaty, and no others.

The matter, then, under the treaty of 1818 was a very simple one, and can be restated thus:

1. No American vessel had any right to resort to British North American ports for any commercial or other purpose, and no British North American vessel had any right to resort to any port of the United States for such purposes.

2. But American fishing vessels had a right to resort to certain of the coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks of that part of British North America described in the treaty of 1818 for all purposes of fishing which they had anciently enjoyed.

3. But American fishing vessels, and fishing vessels only, had also a right to resort to all other British North American waters for the special purposes named in the treaty.

4. The general result of this was as to American fishing vessels that they had, on all the British North American coasts and in all her bays and harbors, the right to shelter, to repair damages, and to obtain wood and water, but on certain named parts of the same coasts, etc., they had not the right to take or cure fish; and

5. As a consequence of the situation embraced in the British laws and in that treaty, the matter of resorting to British North American ports either by American fishing or other vessels was entirely outside of and unaffected either way by that treaty.

"The period of negotiation" as to commercial rights for our fishermen never commenced until this treaty was agreed upon, and therefore it had not passed in 1887.

"The period of remonstrance" for the denial of commercial rights to our fishermen passed in 1850, if the passage of a retaliatory law is held to conclude and forbid all such remonstrances.

But how could we remonstrate against the denial of a right that is one of mere permission and not of agreement?

So the period of remonstrance and negotiation that Congress concluded had passed in 1887 must have related only to the wrongs we had suffered under the treaty of 1818. And yet those wrongs were as flagrant in 1871 as they were in 1887.

Negotiation and remonstrance being thus ended, nothing remains to be done, in the view the majority of the committee take of the subject, but "to obtain indemnity from the British Government for the injuries that [have] thus far been committed," and by retaliation to secure commercial privileges to our fishermen.

The committee advise the country that "the sense of self-respect and just policy" forbid us to negotiate or remonstrate, and that Congress has thus concluded; and, therefore, all we can do is to retaliate.

The issue is thus made that we must have no further treaty, no further remonstrance, nothing further except retaliation and indemnity.

This is the conclusion that the committee assert that Congress had reached in 1887 and expressed in the act of March 3.

If that was the conclusion reached by Congress it unjustly threw upon the President the responsibility of deciding for the country that which Congress had already decided but had not the honesty to avow, and made him responsible for the exercise of a discretion that was so hedged in with conclusions already reached and determinations already fixed that it was not attended with any moral liberty of choice or action.

If this plan, attributed by the majority of the committee to Congress, is true, instead of its having been the purpose to relieve the country of troubles, by the act of March 3, 1887, it had only a design to entrap the President, or else to force the country into an attitude of hostility to Great Britain.

To the imputation, made in the report of the majority, that the minority of the committee, for party reasons, had abandoned the ground that retaliation is the only means that self-respect can now permit the United States to employ for the redress of our wrongs, we may justly reply, that the effort made to confine the country to this narrow ground for the settlement of a great dispute has developed into a mere design to throw a responsibility upon the President that Congress should have assumed, and to leave him after he had been forced to embroil the two countries, and after he had been forced to greatly damage our country by crippling its commerce, without any right to declare war, or any means with which to commence war.

If Congress had used the language so boldly stated by the committee, even as a "whereas" or recital of its conclusions as a précis to the act of March 3, 1887, no one could have doubted that the United States had reached the last ditch and that Congress had determined to try conclusions with Great Britain, first with a blockade and embargo on commerce, and, that failing, then with armies and navies.

The argument of the majority of the committee is all centered upon the propositions which I will now read:

Our Government remonstrated at first mildly, and later on with something of the vigor that should belong to those intrusted with the defense of clear American rights. But these remonstrances, unaccompanied or followed by any further steps, were unavailing.

The President, in his annual message of December, 1885, in view of these circumstances, recommended to Congress the making provision for a commission to adjust and settle the difficulties and disputes thus arisen, but Congress did not see fit to do it, and the Senate, on the 13th of April, 1886, adopted a resolution by a majority of 25 declaring that, in its judgment, no such commission ought to be established; and by a resolution of the 24th of July, 1886, proceeded to order an investigation by its Committee on Foreign Relations into the fishery question and into the unjust treatment of our fishermen and the circumstances connected therewith, with a view, as it may be presumed, to taking such measures on the report of its committee as the interests and honor of the United States should require.

So far as is known to the committee, no step whatever was taken by the President to put this law into execution, but negotiations were initiated and continued to the apparent end of accomplishing what Congress had thought it unfit to undertake in such way, an adjustment of these difficulties by the diplomatic course of securing a part of American rights at the expense of yielding other and the most fundamental and important of them.

On pages 24 and 25 of the report they say:

Justly influenced, doubtless, by this message and by the state of affairs shown in the documents accompanying it and by the evidence taken by and the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations on the same subject made on the 19th of January, 1887 (Report No. 1683, Forty-ninth Congress, second session), Congress came to the conclusion that the period of negotiation and unavailing remonstrance had passed, and with almost absolute unanimity and without any party division enacted the act of March 3, 1887, hereinbefore mentioned, by which the duty was imposed upon the President of withdrawing from British North American vessels, etc., those liberties and advantages which by the pre-existing laws they were enjoying in the harbors and ports of the United States, whenever and as often as it should appear to him that similar rights and liberties were denied the United States fishing vessels, etc., in the ports, etc., of British North America, or whenever it should appear to him that American fishing vessels should have been subjected to outrageous or unjust treatment in the exercise of the rights secured to them by the treaty of 1818.

All that remained unprovided for according to the sense of self-respect and of just policy on the part of the United States was to obtain indemnity from the British Government for the injuries that had thus far been committed.

Page 34:

In view of the plain history of these transactions and of the matters hereinbefore stated, it does not seem to the committee that the existing matters of difficulty are subjects for treaty negotiation; and such appears to have been the opinion of the Senate by its action and by the remarks of many of its members of both political parties, and by the action of the House of Representatives upon and in the passage of the act of March 3, 1887, and its approval by the President.

No new event or situation of affairs has arisen since that time, and the only real questions subsisting between the two countries in respect of the subject were those of reclamations by the United States for outrages upon its citizens, for which this treaty makes no provision, and the question of whether the mutual arrangements of 1830 and the mutual rights of transit under the treaty of 1871 shall continue.

After these distinct statements there can remain no doubt of the purpose of the committee to close forever the door of negotiation against all efforts to reach an amicable settlement of these vexed questions with Great Britain.

No other branch of this Government and not one of our diplomatists, amongst whom are numbered Adams, Monroe, Calhoun, Webster, Clay, Cass, Marcy, Everett, Seward, Fish, EVARTS, and Frelinghuysen, have ever intimated that the United States had even approached the point where this committee so broadly places our Government, in the attitude of open hostility to Great Britain, at least in a commercial warfare. Such contests between adjoining countries must soon result in more serious collisions.

The Senate can not declare war or make war or peace, but it can, by the use of its lofty powers as an obstruction to a peaceful solution of international disputes, make war necessary, as I am afraid we are doing on this day in this Chamber.

The declarations I have read from this report and the adoption of the report by the Senate close the door to amicable arrangement, and that in the end means war. Where nations refuse to negotiate in reference to great interests that are sincerely in dispute some sort of force is necessary to bring about a settlement.

What I have just read is what the committee declare that Congress meant in March, 1887, and no doubt is left in the majority report that this is the alternative they prefer to any negotiation or remonstrance.

If Congress meant to force the country to so sharp an alternative it shamefully devolved the responsibility of the choice of the horns of the dilemma, that it had created and had fled from, upon the President.

If this is what the committee mean to assert is our only self-respecting way to deal with these alleged wrongs, nothing can excuse the majority from a duty that their self-respect now plainly demands, to bring in a bill to declare our wrongs, to demand their redress, and to provide the means for enforcing that demand.

You have the power, at least in the Senate, to enforce your views and to vindicate your motives.

The legislative power of this country is supreme over the treaty-making power. It can override the treaty now under consideration, if it should be ratified by a two-thirds majority of the Senate, by the power of a bare majority in each House of Congress. It can force the President to execute any degree of retaliation upon British commerce that it may require. It can declare war and provide men and means for its prosecution.

With all this power in our hands, what must we do if this treaty is rejected? What do we mean to do in that event? What does the Committee on Foreign Relations advise that we should do?

It is declared in this majority report and the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations (page 15), made on the 13th of April, 1886, that the treaty of 1818 has been violated, that we must have redress and indemnity, and that retaliation is the only remedy that self-respect will allow us to demand.

It is also declared in this report that "our Government remonstrated, at first mildly, and later on with something of the vigor that should belong to those intrusted with the defense of clear American rights. But these remonstrances, unaccompanied by other steps, were unavailing."

The wrongs remain, but "the further steps" not having been taken, they remain to be taken.

Does this committee propose to take even the first of these further steps? No bill has been introduced in either House to promote this heroic purpose. There is no intimation of any such intent in the report, or in anything that Congress has done on this subject.

The committee, forgetting the blood of our own race, rely upon British pusillanimity. They expect Great Britain to wilt under the sham threats of their report.

This committee, and those who oppose the treaty, do not permit their indignation towards Great Britain or their contempt for that "ill-advised negotiation" (as they advise Her Majesty that it is, in their concluding address to the British crown) to materialize in a law that is adequate to their high conceptions of duty and their resolute purposes. They provide no substitute for the treaty; they suggest none. Nevertheless, it is but the demand of justice and truth that I should admit that they are making some preliminary preparation, so that "when the worst comes to the worst," they will have enlisted the sympathies of disaffected subjects of Her Majesty, and will be better prepared to protect American rights and American honor, with the assistance of foreign levies, against British wrongs.

Having once voted in favor of and once against the "Riddleberger resolution" for open sessions in committee, and having once voted for and once against that resolution in the Senate, they content themselves with making of this great question, and of the interests, honor, peace, and prosperity of the American people, a political foot-ball to be kicked about by politicians in the approaching Presidential election. They use these great questions to make war on the Democracy, and forget to make war on Great Britain in view of the greater prize of the Presidency.

I am not averse to open discussion of this treaty, because I know that the immense interests of the great populations contiguous to Canada and along the Great Lakes will considerately weigh every fact that bears on this controversy. Their vote will be that peace, cultivated under honorable agreement with a kindred people in the Dominion, is better than votes that politicians may win by vociferous abuse of the Government of Great Britain to help them to get or to retain offices through their party alliances.

Now, what is the actual situation?

Congress, in the act of March 3, 1887, asked the President to satisfy himself, first, whether any rights had been recently denied or were thereafter denied to our fishermen, and then, in his discretion, to proclaim total or partial non-intercourse with Canada and Newfoundland.

The President finding, as he believed, in his diplomatic powers a means of settling these troubles, resorted to that method of composing them. If the Senate rejects that settlement, the law of 1887 still operates. If the President is still not satisfied that the wrongs we have sustained should be redressed by the expensive, disturbing, and dangerous "further steps" that the committee demand that he should have taken and shall take, who will take these further steps?

The way will be open when this treaty is rejected to all the "further steps" that the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senate, or Congress may wish to take. It is open now to them, and has been open for nearly seventy years. Fifty years ago, and every day since, the wrongs were as great in their nature as they are now; the demand upon Presidents and upon Congress for decisive "further steps" was as great then as now; it is as great now as it was in 1887. Yet no shadow of an approaching host of intrepid patriots, coming to occupy this open way and to sacrifice themselves in this just cause, has flitted across these legislative halls. Congress has been dead to its duty, if it has been anybody's duty, to retaliate on British commerce for their denial of rights to our fishermen. It is yet dead to that duty, and gives no sign of life.

This committee comes into the Senate sounding melancholy funeral notes for the President, who is supposed to have died in the pit which Congress dug for him, without being conscious that they furnish in their own wasted remains the corpse for the funeral.

Congress gave to the President the power, which all the Presidents had possessed since 1850, to wage a paper war on British commerce. It then stood by to see whether he would push this paper war into the category of real war. Had he done this the country would have cried out for his impeachment for a reckless abuse of power that was attended with a full and responsible discretion expressly given him in the act of March 3, 1887. Failing to do this, he is charged, in this report, with usurpation and abuse of constitutional powers, because he sought to find a peaceable and just way to get our rights and to suppress future troubles on the fishery question; and a threat is made by the committee of a future dealing with the President, held "in reserve for the time-being" on account of such abuses. See page 17 of the report, as follows:

But holding in reserve, for the time-being, these grave questions touching usurpations of unconstitutional powers, or the abuse of those that may be thought to exist on the part of the Executive, the committee thinks it sufficient for the present occasion to deal with the document itself.

Congress commands the President that he will satisfy himself, and in his discretion, and on his own responsibility for the exercise of that discretion, to make a paper war on Great Britain, which, it is prophesied in the Senate, would never lead to a conflict of arms. He prefers to exercise his constitutional powers to secure a wiser, safer, and better settlement. He brings the result to the Senate and asks that it be ratified, if two-thirds of this body concur; and what I have just read is the insulting, unjust, incriminative, and threatening answer they have to make to a President who is as honest, true, and patriotic as any of us in his devotion to the country.

The supposed offense that the President has given to the Senate in this "document," as it is derisively styled by the committee, is (1) that he presumed to negotiate when Congress had commanded him to "be satisfied" that wrongs had been done us, and then to make war, on paper, with British commerce, and that, therefore, he must not negotiate; (2) that he presumed to enter upon any negotiation without the consent of the Senate; and (3) that he chose agents to conduct and conclude the negotiation whose names were not first submitted to the Senate. The country will not fail to see the injustice and the spirit of usurpation which led the committee into the following criticisms upon the President and the plenipotentiaries:

> These plenipotentiaries, thus created, began their real work at Washington while both Houses of Congress were sitting, and without any communication by the President in his annual message on the meeting of Congress, or otherwise, of the fact that such important and extraordinary operations were in progress, or that very grave interests of the United States had been placed in the custody of gentlemen whose names had not even been communicated to it.
>
> These "plenipotentiaries" came to a conclusion of their labors on the 15th of February, 1888, and the offices of "plenipotentiaries" terminated, and the result was reached without the advice and consent of the Senate having been asked or taken concerning the selection of these public ministers, and without any communication to either House of Congress concerning this most important subject.
>
> It is not difficult to see that, in evil times, when the President of the United States may be under influence of foreign and adverse interests, such a course of procedure might result in great disaster to the interests and even the safety of our Government and people.
>
> It is no answer to this suggestion to say that an arrangement thus concluded can not be valid or effectual without the advice and consent of the Senate, for the rights and interests of the people of the United States might be so neglected, misunderstood, abandoned, or sold by President's "plenipotentiaries" as to greatly embarrass, if not defeat, their ultimate reassertion in better times and under better administrations, though it is hoped that such will not be the case in respect of these negotiations.
>
> The document submitted to the Senate by the President as the outcome of these negotiations may, it is thought, well illustrate the dangers of such methods.

These complaints, accusations, and threats are rested upon an assumption that has no other foundation than mere arrogance.

The history of the country, and the practice of Presidents and of the Senate, utterly overthrow this pretension, which is, that the Senate has the right to permit or to refuse to permit, any negotiation, on any subject, to take place, without the consent of two-thirds, or at least of a majority, of that body is given in advance.

In more than four hundred cases the President has appointed negotiators whose special powers were not first communicated to the Senate, to make and sign treaties. Washington, Jackson, and Grant, and other Presidents not so conspicuous in their services to the country, tore up by the roots this parasitic growth of presumption that has sometimes flourished in the atmosphere of party zeal, and oftener in the jealousies of political rivalry, that are sometimes found even inside the walls of this Chamber.

To illustrate how far this assumption of authority over negotiations is carried by the committee, and the want of consistency in their contention that no negotiation or remonstrance is now allowable because the time has passed for such weak remedies, I will read the concluding appeal—the doxology and final prayer—of the committee, made in their report. It is addressed to Her Majesty's Government, the Queen of Great Britain. It is not a prayer for the forgiveness of the sins of Congress, or of the Committee on Foreign Relations, for having neglected to exercise their powers in the interests of peace to be manifested by a sudden blow administered upon her crowned head in a fit of sudden anger at wrongs that are now more than half a century old. Neither Congress nor the committee were guilty of that sin, and had no forgiveness to ask. The burden of the petition is that President Cleveland, having the power, if he saw fit (as Congress had not seen fit) to do all these sudden things, with a sudden effect, missed his opportunity and entered into "these ill-advised negotiations." The humble prayer is that the Queen will not mistake the Senate as being in any way responsible for such follies, "which, as is known to all the world, can not properly commit the United States in any degree." Then the prayer concludes with a devout appeal for full commercial reciprocity for our fishermen.

The committee having notified Her Majesty that this treaty would be rejected, and that the President having made this "ill-advised negotiation," his protection would not be claimed, and that the committee were not willing longer to intrust the subject of retaliation in the hands of the President, who preferred negotiation to unfriendly controversy, they with one accord besought Her Majesty Queen Victoria in the following plaintive petition:

> The committee can not but hope * * * that if these ill-advised negotiations * * * shall fail [that] Her Majesty's Government will take measures to secure justice and fair treatment in her North American dominions to American vessels and American citizens in all respects and under all circumstances.

This may be claimed to be a covert threat to Great Britain that we will go to war if she fails to do us justice. If that is what is meant, who has empowered this committee to flaunt a threat and to declare the ultimatum of the United States to Great Britain on this or any other question? That is a diplomatic subject, in dealing with which the President has the constitutional power and responsibility. If a committee can do this, it can force the country into war.

But this is no threat. It is a petition, a prayer. It does not demand justice, but invokes justice, forbearance, and leniency for reciprocal considerations and for the sake of peace.

We have traditions that reach back to our first war for Independence that the poorest and weakest citizen who would claim "British protection" was disgraced before the American people.

Yet here is a committee of the Senate praying the British Government "to take measures to secure justice and fair treatment * * * to American vessels and American citizens."

This case had been hauled before the country in the period of an eager canvass for the Presidency, doubtless with a view to exciting the antagonism of Irish voters against the present Administration, because of its alleged subserviency to British influence, and it is asserted this treaty proves the fact. This is a charge that rankles with injustice. But how does the alleged subserviency to British influence, which this treaty is made to express, by a false construction, compare with this imploration of the committee for British protection? An Irish patriot in a British dungeon would grow to the walls of his prison before he would turn his back on the League and implore "Her Majesty's Government" to "take measures to secure justice and fair treatment in her prisons even to her wronged Irish subjects."

But the committee go still further. Having closed their prayer for British protection in lieu of these "ill-advised negotiations," they rise to their feet and begin to negotiate. They state, in a previous part of their report, already quoted, "that the period of negotiation and unavailing remonstrance had passed," and yet they proceed to remonstrate and negotiate in their report. The President's "time" is up, and the committee assume the function of negotiators. It is not very strange they should do this, when they had just closed a tirade against the President, which I have read from their report, for having presumed to enter upon this negotiation without the consent of the Senate, and for having appointed negotiators whose names had not been submitted to the Senate for their judgment upon their fitness for the place.

Contrary to the statutes and to all proper usages, and in a spirit of usurpation that the Senate by a vote has never sanctioned, the committee address their remarks directly to the British Government:

> The committee can not but hope that * * * Her Majesty's Government * * * will see the justice and propriety of according to American vessels engaged in the business of fishing all the commercial rights and facilities in her North American ports that are freely and cheerfully accorded to her own in the ports of the United States, and that thus the friendship and good feeling which ought to exist between neighboring nations may be finally established and secured.

The Senate has never empowered this committee to send out this diplomatic missive to the British Government. It is a purely gratuitous offer of a reciprocal agreement with Great Britain for equal commercial privileges to their fishermen and ours, which no Senator has a right to make.

In the fifteenth article of this treaty Great Britain proposes the largest commercial privileges to our fishermen whenever Congress shall repeal the duty on fish. This offer of the committee is the same reciprocal agreement without the proposed equivalent of free fish. If the committee flattered themselves that Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, would accord these blessings to their prayerful importunity, or that Her Majesty's Government would accept the fifteenth article of the treaty without the equivalent of free fish, it was their plain duty, as the advisers of the President, to propose through him an amendment of the treaty to that effect.

How can Senators excuse their deliberate refusal to offer to amend the fifteenth article of the treaty by striking out the condition as to free fish and then make imploration and give advice to Great Britain to the effect that these concessions should be granted, and that such concessions would establish and secure "the friendship and good feeling which ought to exist between neighboring nations?"

If there is any meaning or significance in the extraordinary address to Her Majesty's Government made by the committee, they must have believed that it would excite the sense of "justice and propriety" of that Government to the degree of "according to American vessels" the "commercial rights and facilities" claimed for them in the report.

Believing this, was it not as well worthy of the committee to amend the treaty as it was to soften British obstinacy by prayer, or to inform British judgment by suggestion as to a policy that would smooth out all our troubles?

Yet, in the face of these hopeful expressions in favor of "friendship and good feeling," this treaty comes from the committee as a "document" that is not worthy of amendment, and British forbearance and British fear are relied upon for the security of this friendship by the committee, who declare that the time for negotiation and remonstrance has passed.

In my opinion the President and the Senate and the Congress of the United States are still a better reliance than the implorations or the threats of the Committee on Foreign Relations to secure justice at the hands of the British Government.

As I am endeavoring to reply to the report of the majority of the committee, which was never laid before the minority for examination, and as the minority of the committee have presented in their report the facts upon which they are willing to rest their support of the treaty, I will not undertake to repeat what we have said in that report. My purpose on this occasion, I repeat, is to define the real issues that are involved in our differences of opinion as they appear in the two reports.

The broadest issue thus presented is this, that the President seeks to amend the treaty of 1818 so that it shall be understood as to all disputed points hitherto in controversy; and to add to it commercial rights and navigation privileges fixed by mutual agreement, so that we can live under it without the harassing controversies that have attended the whole period of its existence. The committee refuse to amend the treaty; insist upon the execution of its provisions in accordance with all our constructions of the instrument; and further demand full commercial privileges for our fishermen to be obtained by retaliation on Canadian commerce. To emphasize this policy they declare that Congress, on the 3d of March, 1887, "came to the conclusion that the period of negotiation and unavailing remonstrance had passed." This alleged "conclusion" was applied in that act of Congress to fishing rights and commercial privileges alike, so that, if Congress did come to that conclusion, it has shut the door finally and forever, until that act is repealed, against any negotiation with Great Britain about fisheries or commerce with their North Atlantic possessions.

If this position taken by the committee is not well founded on the facts, or if it is, the question of entering upon an effort at negotiation on either of these subjects before proceeding to exercise his discretionary power of retaliation was one of expediency and personal duty on the part of the President, of which he was the sole judge under the Constitution.

If the committee are correct in saying that Congress had come to such a conclusion, and that it operated as an instruction to the President, that he should not negotiate or remonstrate, but should proclaim non-intercourse with Canada, then Congress puts words and phrases into that act that have no meaning. The act says that the President shall, "in his discretion," make proclamation, and "it shall be lawful" for him to do so "whenever" he "shall be satisfied" that certain things have been done to our commercial and fishing rights that are referred to descriptively in the statute.

These words are vain and idle expletives if the President must be "satisfied" without further conference with Great Britain as to the redress or indemnity they are willing to give for such wrongs; or as to what provision that Government will make against their repetition; or what sincere constructions they may have placed upon the treaty of 1818; or the true meaning of the so-called reciprocity of 1830, as affecting our rights; or as to what humble apology and reparation they will make if our rights have been flagrantly abused.

To require the President to be "satisfied" on subjects of this character, without the privilege of remonstrance and the advantage of a reply, is a palpable absurdity. But it is not less absurd than the other "conclusion" which the committee impute to Congress, that the President, in the exercise of his "discretion" which this act gives him, should be required to abdicate his constitutional power to negotiate treaties.

It would be altogether unprofitable to consume further time in discussing a matter that is so entirely plain. "The absurdity" of such a construction of this act could not be "overlooked by any intelligent person," to use the language that the committee employ towards the President.

The minority of the committee are much surprised at the effort of the majority to commit the Senate and the country to the statement that the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of Washington is any way affected by the treaty now before the Senate. It is true this assertion is made with reserve and tentatively in the report, but in any form it is misleading and unjust.

The committee do not assert, and can not say, that the present treaty would in the slightest manner affect the twenty-ninth article of the treaty of Washington. If that article ever gave any commercial rights to our fishermen, as such, these rights remain, wholly unaffected by anything contained in this treaty. That question was settled by the Halifax commission. In that controversy, the United States' agents distinctly asserted, and it was so decided by the commission—

That the various incidental and reciprocal advantages of the treaty, such as the privileges of traffic, purchasing bait and other supplies, are not the subject of compensation, because the treaty of Washington confers no such rights on the inhabitants of the United States, who now enjoy them merely by sufferance, and who can at any time be deprived of them by the enforcement of existing laws or the re-enforcement of former oppressive statutes.

After this decision of the very question here raised against the British contention, before the Halifax commission, the committee reassert that claim, and in support of it make no other argument than this:

That the proceedings before that commission distinctly demonstrate that under article 29, the right to transship fish was understood by the British to be included, and without any conditions depending upon the force of any other articles of the treaty.

If that was true then, it will be equally true after this treaty is ratified. The committee find no difficulty in adopting this British contention, adverse to the United States, when it is supposed to help their argument.

Why should the committee state and rely upon the alleged British understanding of Article XXIX without giving any expression as to their own understanding of it? Why bring this subject into controversy in the face of the declaration of the committee "that the fisheries articles of that treaty (1871) contained no provision either in respect of any commercial rights in Canadian ports or in respect of transshipments, and that the reciprocal transshipment article of the treaty was entirely separate from any question of fisheries or fish as such?"

Throughout this report there is an evident seeking for occasion to condemn the President, and to place him in the light of a usurper of authority to enter upon negotiations with Great Britain without the consent of the Senate and against the "conclusion" of Congress, as is alleged, that the time had passed for negotiation.

This strained, indefinite, and obscure allusion to Article XXIX of the treaty of Washington is brought from a very far distance to aid in the array of surmises with which to meet the array of facts that have made negotiation indispensable, unless we have resolved upon hostilities with Great Britain, and to condemn the President for what he has not done.

A criticism upon the language of Article XI of the treaty suggests the inquiry, why did not the committee present to the Senate an amendment that would relieve that article of all doubt and obscurity as to its meaning if there is, in fact, any such difficulty? The answer is that the committee hold to their main ground as to our relations with Great Britain, that the time for negotiation has passed. No treaty that could have been made would have met the demand of the committee unless it had abrogated the treaty af 1818 as to its effects upon the commercial rights and privileges of our fishermen.

If that treaty is in our way we should find some means of getting it out of our way, and not allow it to remain an incubus on our prosperity, if it is such, or as a pretext to justify constant interference with our people.

Congress alone has the power to open the road to this result if the people desire it and will support Congress with men and money.

The majority of the committee are not willing that the treaty of 1818 should be improved by a new negotiation, and hence they decline to amend Article XI of the present treaty so as to make the meaning clear as to clauses that are a great improvement upon the former treaty.

There is no real obscurity in Article XI, and it does confer on our fishing vessels, on all occasions, the right to purchase needful or casual supplies for their voyages, whether or not they are homeward bound. It is not the present destination of the ship, but the occasion that creates the necessity for the supplies that controls the privilege of purchase in the Canadian ports. "Needful provisions and supplies" and "casual provisions and supplies" are such as necessity or casualty has made reasonably necessary for the support of the ship's company or the purposes of the voyage. They are not such as are required for the mere purposes of commerce or economy in conducting a fishing venture.

Believing this article of the treaty to be clear, I did not have occasion to try to improve it by amendment. But I am quite willing to vote for its amendment, if any one who is in doubt prefers to change the language of this or any other article in the treaty. If the privilege intended to be provided for is valuable, it should not be thrown away by a refusal to amend the language of this article.

I will not go further now in making answer to the objections and criticisms of the majority as to the several articles of the treaty. I believe they are all fully answered in the views presented in the minority report.

The allusions in the report to the language of Senators give to their utterances in debate on other issues a significance that is not due to their intrinsic importance, and are very embarrassing to their freedom of action when they represent the Senate in committee.

If the minority had thought it proper to array before the country the utterances of Senators in respect to the fisheries question they could have brought together a jumble of wild and excited declarations that would have shocked the common sense of mankind. They never thought of holding the country responsible for either the animus or the forms of these expressions of opinions, nor did anybody else.

So far as my expressions in debate are concerned, or my votes on questions, I have no trouble in reversing them at any moment I may find it right to reverse them. But I have uttered no opinion, nor have I given any vote on these questions that I find it necessary now to reverse. In speaking on these topics in the Senate, in advance of diplomatic or other effort to secure justice and peace to our country, I have spoken and voted with the reserve that every Senator must feel in the open discussion of matters that can only be properly considered when we are in confidential session. I did not, therefore, speak of the remedies that bore upon my mind with great weight as being the just, patriotic, and most beneficial method of settling our fisheries disputes.

I have always felt that the treaty of 1818 was a disgraceful surrender of an important part of the independence we won from Great Britain in the war of the Revolution, and was conceded to us in our treaty of peace. I am prepared to advise and vote for a demand that shall be nothing but an ultimatum that all those rights shall be restored to us, and to sustain that demand with any exercise of power that may be necessary. But I could not afford to say this in the open Senate, as I have said it in committee, for I would have been ridiculed for making a vainglorious effort to gain notoriety; yet every Senator here feels that this is the true measure of American duty to American honor and history.

I did not say in the Senate, as I say now, that every trouble that had arisen, or will arise, under the treaty of 1818, would disappear the moment Congress shall repeal the duty on fish. In this opinion I am sure I must have the concurrence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. Why did I not then speak out on that question? It was because we were then dealing in the Senate with Great Britain, and not with differences of opinion on domestic questions, and I thought it hardly fair to add even my feeble influence to stimulate the hope of Great Britain for a free market for fish. I want that duty repealed for many reasons, the chief one being that it will lower the price and increase the supply of food to the great body of our industrial classes.

I could advance and prove another reason, as I believe, for the support of this conviction to which I give great weight. It is that the duty on fish does not increase the wages of the fishermen, while it does increase the cost to the consumer. It enables the "Fisheries Union," the "Halibut Syndicate," the trusts and other monopolies to make great profit at the expense of hunger to the poor. It enables the owners of fleets of fishing vessels to hire Canadians to man their ships and to drive the American fishermen into other pursuits by their low capacity to live and thrive on low wages. Thus has been stolen from the United States by private monopoly and cupidity the hope of training hardy mariners for our fleets for which we have paid enormous sums in bounties to our fishermen.

I did not think that, as a Senator, I could afford to bring into any discussion respecting the conduct of so great a government as Great Britain towards our people, a domestic question, even if I felt, as I do, that the repeal of the duty on fish imported from Canada and Newfoundland would forever settle this whole fisheries question.

I will reserve any further remarks until the treaty is taken up by articles for consideration by the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I withdraw the appeal which I took from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The appeal is withdrawn. The resolutions go over under objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 300) granting a pension to Mrs. Juliet G. Howe;
A bill (S. 393) for the relief of Frances Anne Pyne Ricketts;
A bill (S. 1037) granting a pension to the infant children of Michael A. Moran;
A bill (S. 1146) granting a pension to L. J. McGoffin;
A bill (S. 1299) granting a pension to George Park;
A bill (S. 1948) to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Ark.;
A bill (S. 1957) granting a pension to Virtue Smith;
A bill (S. 2167) granting a pension to Mary E. Woodward;
A bill (S. 2332) granting a pension to John Linsley;
A bill (S. 2551) to amend section 993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for the District of Columbia, so as to make Inauguration Day a holiday within said District;
A bill (H. R. 322) for the relief of B. M. Parish;
A bill (H. R. 417) granting a pension to David Strunk;
A bill (H. R. 488) granting a pension to Elizabeth Burr;
A bill (H. R. 611) for the relief of Mrs. P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased;
A bill (H. R. 955) granting a pension to Mary M. Sweet;
A bill (H. R. 1483) for the erection of a public building at Monroe, La.;
A bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia;
A bill (H. R. 1599) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Sedalia, in the State of Missouri;
A bill (H. R. 1844) to promote agriculture, and for other purposes;
A bill (H. R. 2151) for the relief of Joseph B. Burton;
A bill (H. R. 2167) for the relief of George E. Oliphant;
A bill (H. R. 2695) for the relief of Charles V. Mesler;
A bill (H. R. 3922) to place the name of Casper Seibel on the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 3959) granting a pension to Dolly Blazer;
A bill (H. R. 5522) for the relief of Elijah Martin;
A bill (H. R. 5844) to increase the pension of William Clark;
A bill (H. R. 6520) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Ward;
A bill (H. R. 6575) for the relief of James L. Alslip;
A bill (H. R. 6845) granting a pension to John Witham;
A bill (H. R. 7052) relating to postal crimes and amendatory of the statutes therein mentioned;
A bill (H. R. 7265) for the erection of a public building at Hoboken, N. J.;
A bill (H. R. 7490) for the relief of Sidney W. Whitelock;
A bill (H. R. 7509) granting to the New York Harbor and Beach Railroad Company a right of way;
A bill (H. R. 7913) granting a pension to Nellie Palfrey Goodwin;
A bill (H. R. 8266) for the relief of Mrs. Clarissa G. Green;
A bill (H. R. 8279) to authorize the county of Laurens, in the State of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Oconee River, at or near Dublin, in said county and State; and
A bill (H. R. 8965) to authorize the Postmaster-General to cancel mail contract on route No. 30100, and for other purposes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. DAWES, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. CALL.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator yield to me to make another motion, which is that the Senate do now adjourn until Monday?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts takes precedence. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate do now adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 11, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 7, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. The House was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN, as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the reading of the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 7, 1888.

SIR: I hereby designate Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House to-day.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

STEAMER CHAMPION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Fish Commission, submitting an estimate of an appropriation to pay damages sustained by the steamer Champion by collision with the steamer Fish Hawk; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting conclusions of fact and of law in certain spoliation claims; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. KERR, until the 26th instant, on account of important business.

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year 1889, with amendments of the Senate thereto; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the amendments ordered to be printed.

UNLAWFUL GRAZING ON INDIAN LANDS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8393) to protect lands belonging to Indians from unlawful grazing, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, that is the bill that I asked yesterday should be allowed to lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection it will be so ordered.

PARIS, CHOCTAW AND LITTLE ROCK RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the bill (S. 2929) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct and operate a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, a bill which is substantially a copy of that Senate bill has been reported favorably by the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I object. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to state to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] that a bill, which is substantially this Senate bill, has been recommended unanimously by the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SUSAN E. ALGER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, June 6, 1888.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill of the Senate No. 1162 for the relief of Susan E. Alger.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, this request will be complied with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TOMBIGBEE RIVER IN ALABAMA.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9610) to authorize the Birmingham, Selma and New Orleans Railway Company to build a bridge across the Tombigbee River in Alabama, and that the bill be now put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I object.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report from the committee of conference.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House 7264 for the erection of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
WILLIAM H. SOWDEN,
HERMAN LEHLBACH,
Managers on the part of the House.
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
J. C. SPOONER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following is the accompanying statement under the rule submitted by the House conferees:

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House bill 7264, for the erection of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn., beg leave to submit with the conference report the following statement:

The limit of cost in the bill is $100,000; and this, by the Senate amendment, is increased to $150,000. The conference report recommends the latter amount.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
WM. H. SOWDEN,
HERMAN LEHLBACH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move the adoption of the conference report.

The report was adopted.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BAY CITY, MICH.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present another conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House 7263 for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Mich., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
C. NEWTON,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. C. SPOONER,
JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The conferees on the part of the House submitted under the rule the following:

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill 7263, for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Mich., beg leave to submit with the conference report the following statement:

The limit of cost in the bill is $150,000; and this, by the Senate amendment, is increased to $200,000. The conference report recommends the latter amount.

SAMUEL DIBBLE,
C. NEWTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move the adoption of the report.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. DIBBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MINING DÉBRIS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. BIGGS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 1216, providing for the investigation of the mining-débris question in the State of California.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

LIGHT-HOUSES AT LUBEC NARROWS, ETC.

On motion of Mr. LONG, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Appropriations was discharged from the further consideration of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of the communication from the Light-House Board relative to additional appropriations to complete the construction of light-houses at Lubec Narrows, Deer Island, and Crabtree Ledge; and the same was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

W. J. BLACKBURN.

On motion of Mr. CRISP, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Elections was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of W. J. Blackburn, for pay as a Representative in the Fortieth Congress from the State of Louisiana; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

SAMUEL M'KEE.

On motion of Mr. CRISP, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Elections was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Samuel McKee, formerly of Montgomery County, Kentucky, now of Louisville, Ky., asking to be paid expenses of contest for a seat in the Fortieth Congress; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

J. EDWIN PILCHER.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10340) for the relief of J. Edwin Pilcher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COMMISSIONS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. SENEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (S. 143) to provide for the issuing and recording of certain commissions in the Department of Justice; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF DENTAL SCIENCE.

Mr. SENEY also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (S. 2941) to incorporate the National Academy of Dental Science; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT STERLING, ILL.

Mr. NEWTON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 1940) to provide for the construction of a public building at Sterling, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REAR-ADMIRAL CARTER.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The Committee on Naval Affairs have directed me to report back favorably the bill (S. 71) for the relief of Rear-Admiral Carter, and to ask leave that a minority of the committee have leave hereafter to file their views on this bill. The committee has also instructed me to ask that they be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 572, on the same subject, and that it be laid on the table.

The bill (S. 71) for the relief of Rear-Admiral Carter was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed; and the bill H. R. 572 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, a minority of the Committee on Naval Affairs will have leave to file their views upon Senate bill No. 71, just reported.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER.

Mr. PHELAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 10063) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct a bridge across Red River at or near Hooks' Ferry, Red River County, Texas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD BRIDGE ACROSS SNAKE RIVER, ETC.

Mr. PHELAN also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 2607) authorizing the construction of railroad bridges across the Snake River and across the Clear Water River by the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS BAYOU D'ARBONNE.

Mr. PHELAN also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 2199) authorizing the Little Rock and Alexandria Railway Company to maintain and construct a bridge across Bayou D'Arbonne, in Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue.

Mr. STEELE. I hope the gentleman from Texas will allow us to have the morning hour to-day for business of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MILLS, there were—ayes 75, noes 57.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. STEELE and Mr. MILLS were appointed.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I hope the gentleman from Texas will allow the Committee on Military Affairs to have the consideration hour for their business.

Mr. MILLS. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is not here; and I am unwilling to consent to this proposition except on his request.

The House proceeded to divide by tellers; but before the result of the count was announced,

Mr. MILLS said: We lack so many of a quorum at present that I am indisposed to press my motion just now. I withdraw it in order to allow the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] to bring up the business of the Committee on Military Affairs in the consideration hour.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, my object being the consideration of business of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to state that in the consideration hour we have already entered upon the consideration of a bill which I now understand to be pending in that hour—the bill (H. R. 3255) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes. I do not remember that the Committee on Military Affairs has the right of way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the bill to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] refers has not been finished, it would be first entitled to consideration.

Mr. LANHAM. I have no objection to the Committee on Military Affairs occupying this morning hour, provided it does not interfere with the status of the bill to which I have just referred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the bill to which the gentleman from Texas refers is the unfinished business it can only be postponed by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEELE. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

Mr. BYNUM. I object.

Mr. STEELE. I think an examination of the Journal will sustain my supposition that the business of the Committee on Military Affairs is now in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have the Journal examined, and will afterward make the proper announcement.

Mr. STEELE. I hope my colleague [Mr. BYNUM] will withdraw his objection. The bill which the Committee on Military Affairs desires to bring up is a public bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. COX in the chair.

Mr. STEELE. I call up Senate bill——

Mr. BYNUM. What is the unfinished business before the committee. I demand the regular order.

Mr. LANHAM. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the bill to which I referred a few moments ago, with reference to the claim of the State of Florida, is the unfinished business; but I ask unanimous consent that that bill be passed over informally, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

Mr. OATES. I join in that request for the reason that neither of the gentlemen from Florida is present. It is a claim of the State of Florida as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3255) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes.

Mr. BYNUM. Can the committee pass over this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It can be done by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent. Does the gentleman from Indiana object?

Mr. BYNUM. I call for the regular order; and I make the point that this can only be passed over by the House in the regular way.

Mr. LANHAM. It can be done by unanimous consent in the committee, and I have asked that consent be given.

Mr. BYNUM. And I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Objection being made to the consideration of the bill, the committee must rise and report the objection to the House.

Mr. KERR. I move that the objection be reported to the House——

Mr. LANHAM. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry first.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANHAM. In the event that the committee should now rise, I desire to know if the bill will still retain its place on the Calendar? It has been considered during a part of one morning hour, and is, as I understand it, the unfinished business.

The CHAIRMAN. It is up for consideration now, and the committee must either consider it, or if objection is made to its consideration, it is for the House to determine whether it will pass it over or not.

Mr. LANHAM. But if the committee should rise now it would still come up for consideration hereafter when the committee again resumes its session?

The CHAIRMAN. So the Chair thinks.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to know whether or not this bill would lose its place if that order were made; and in the event that the bill was ordered to be passed over, whether it would be in order then to call the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. LANHAM. I have no objection to the Committee on Military Affairs taking up such bills as they desire during this morning hour, provided that the bill for the relief of the State of Florida may go over without prejudice, to be taken up in the next morning hour.

Mr. STEELE. I do not desire to prejudice that bill. I think it ought to be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request to the committee. Is there objection to passing over this bill informally? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BYNUM. I did not hear the statement of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair put the question to the House for unanimous consent that the Florida bill go over without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BYNUM. I have already objected to that. I did not suppose it was necessary to rise and interpose an objection every fifteen minutes.

Mr. KERR. I make the point of order that it is now too late to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman as not insisting upon the objection; but on the statement that he did not withdraw it, the Chair must recognize that objection.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Can the objection of the gentleman be obviated by asking that the committee rise and report to the House for action?

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, it is evidently impossible for gentlemen to reach the consideration of business from the Committee on Military Affairs this morning. I therefore move that the committee rise, with a view to resuming the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. BAYNE. And I move to amend that motion, if amendable, by reporting the objection to the House, so as to reach the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SPINOLA. Before that motion is submitted I desire to ask unanimous consent to make a statement not exceeding one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from New York making a brief statement?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPINOLA. I would ask, Mr. Chairman, before the committee rises——

Mr. BURROWS. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is on the floor by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURROWS. I understood the Chair to ask if there was objection. Objection to what?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asked unanimous consent to occupy the floor for a minute.

Mr. MILLS. My motion is pending, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending motion is that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from New York; unanimous consent had been given him, and it was so announced by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has half a minute in which he proposes to make a statement by consent.

Mr. SPINOLA. I understood the Chair to rule——

Mr. McMILLIN. I believe the motion to rise is not debatable.

Mr. REED. But the gentleman from New York asked unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

Mr. SPINOLA. I have but a word.

I understood, sir, that the measures reported to this House by the Committee on Military Affairs would be taken up this morning. I hold in my hand a resolution reported unanimously by that committee, asking for a small appropriation to pay some legitimate expenses to be incurred by the reunion of the two armies who fought the great battle of Gettysburgh. It comes to our committee and this House recommended by every soldier who fought in that great battle belonging to the Union arms. They have extended a cordial invitation to those who fought against them on the other side to meet there on the Fourth of July to indicate the positions occupied on those three terrible days by the Confederate forces. Both armies will come there together, and our side has already, as is well known to every member of the House, clearly defined the positions occupied by them during those three days. I would therefore ask unanimous consent——

Mr. McMILLIN. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is not in order pending the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. LANHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANHAM. Suppose the committee will rise now, not having entered upon the consideration of the Florida bill, would that bill lose its place on the Calendar?

Mr. BURROWS. But its consideration has been entered upon. It has been called up.

The CHAIRMAN. It was the unfinished business before the committee.

Mr. LANHAM. But its consideration has not been entered upon.

Mr. BURROWS. It has been called up.

Mr. LANHAM. I assume that it would be the unfinished business hereafter when the committee again resumes its session.

Mr. BURROWS. I think that would be a question to be determined by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not determine that matter now. It would be for the House to determine.

The motion of Mr. MILLS was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. McMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 3255, had come to no resolution thereon, objection having been made to its consideration.

TARIFF.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to further consider the tariff bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore decided that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. STEELE. I demand a division; but pending that I desire to know if this bill goes over—this bill for the relief of the State of Florida—if the Committee on Claims has the morning hour when we next reach the consideration of business in that hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to know if the Military Committee would follow that committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state for the information of the House that when the Committee on Military Affairs was reached an agreement was entered into that it should be passed over informally, its call not being lost, and that being the case the Committee on Claims was called and this bill was reached as the unfinished business from that committee.

Mr. STEELE. With that understanding on the part of the Chair I withdraw the demand for a division.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion of Mr. MILLS was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of a bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday lines 22 to 25 of this bill were under consideration, and the question before the committee was on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. Debate upon the amendment to the amendment was exhausted, but unanimous consent had been given for the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to continue his remarks upon this amendment for ten minutes.

[Mr. DINGLEY withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

The amendment of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, was read.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I would like to say a few words on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There is already pending an amendment in the second degree. If there is no objection, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] can proceed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I hope consent may be given that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] may occupy five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the difference between the proposition submitted by my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] and the first proposition embraced in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is this: It is proposed in the pending bill to admit into the markets of the United States all classes of lumber free of duty. In response to that the gentleman from Maine suggests that as an equivalent certain rights which we have claimed and which have been conceded to us practically for more than half a century should be guaranteed to us by Canada; that is, that there should be this reciprocal recognition and guaranty for the granting and yielding of the privileges proposed by the Mills bill in reference to lumber. The proposition of my friend from Kentucky is, that in consideration of a bare recognition by Canada of a right which we not only claim but have substantially enjoyed for more than half a century with hardly a protest from Canada or the English Government, we shall open our markets to the produce of their seas and lakes and rivers with the few exceptions mentioned. In other words, the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is to compel us to acknowledge practically the right of the Canadians, under the treaty of 1818, to exclude our fishing vessels from their ports; we are to concede that they have been right in this controversy and we have been wrong; and in consideration of our abandoning our position and recognizing the soundness of theirs, we are, in addition to our humiliation, to accord to them certain rights and privileges, to wit, the admission into the United States of the product of their fisheries free of duty.

Now, I favor the proposition of the gentleman from Maine, because if we concede to the Canadians these privileges we have a right to exact of them at least that they shall acknowledge rights which we demand as a fair equivalent. I oppose the proposition as submitted by my friend from Kentucky because it does what I have already suggested—makes a tacit or implied admission that we have been wrong all these years, and places us in the position of tendering Canada a consideration for recognizing that which we have asserted all along to be our right.

As to the other proposition submitted by the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, which looks in the direction of reciprocal trade with our neighbors on the north, my attitude is well known to this House, for in that regard I have done nothing and said nothing in a corner. His proposition, however, has not been well considered, nor is it in any wise guarded; nor would it even tend to the consummation of that which many of us desire in the matter of extending our commercial relations with our neighbors upon the north. There is no provision here which would protect us against the importation into the United States of goods manufactured outside of Canada and in Europe and which might seek admission into our ports. It is true, the letter of the proposition provides that it shall apply only to articles manufactured or produced in Canada; but there is no provision in the amendment looking to the enforcement of the letter or spirit of the proposition. More than that, there is no provision with reference to our internal-revenue system; none whatever. It will be observed that under our internal-revenue law high taxes are imposed upon spirits. Not so in Canada. The result would be the shipment of the products of the stills and vineyards of Canada into the markets of the United States and then sale in the markets at less than the tax our producers pay.

The proposition is not well advised or well considered, and hence I am constrained to oppose it; and in all this, I submit to my friend from Kentucky, I am perfectly consistent. I would make the tariff system continental, and place at the feet of my countrymen wealth enough to enrich a thousand million of people. But it can not be done in this way. This measure, it seems to me, has not had that considerate thought and attention which my friend from Kentucky usually bestows upon propositions which he submits to this House.

Now to recapitulate, for I have not time in five minutes to discuss the whole aspect of the question presented by the second clause of the proposition before the House. My friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] proposes simply to say to the Canadians, "If you want to bring into the United States your lumber free of duty, you shall at least bestow upon the fishermen of this country the right to go into your harbors, the right they have hitherto enjoyed, at least in practical experience, for more than half a century." In addition to that, he says, "We will not concede that we have been wrong in insisting upon this right, and pay you for the privilege of enjoying that which is already our own, though you interfere temporarily with its enjoyment by our fishermen."

As to the other branch of the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, it is only necessary that attention should be called to it to see that it needs enlarging, changing, modifying, before it could properly meet with the acceptance of any one here, however thoroughly devoted to the policy of the widest and fullest commercial relations between ourselves and our neighbors on the north.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a formal motion and to ask recognition on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. There is now an amendment in the second degree, and no other can be entertained until the amendment to the amendment is disposed of. After that the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to know whether it is in order to ask a vote upon the last portion of this proposition separately.

The CHAIRMAN. It is; the amendment can be divided.

Mr. PARKER. Then I propose to ask for a division of this question, and I wish to submit to this House whether it desires to vote, after half an hour's discussion, upon a proposition which seems to be the most outrageous that has been presented during the last four Congresses.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] having called for a division, the first question will be on the first branch of the proviso; afterward on the second part.

Mr. PARKER. I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this question be allowed to run on without objection for the present.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], if he desires to speak, be allowed to do so.

Mr. PARKER. Let the debate run on for, say, one hour.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I trust my friend from Kentucky will allow my friend from Illinois and some other gentlemen to submit observations on this question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. So far as I can, I am willing that this five-minute debate proceed for a time without objection; but I would not like to commit myself to its continuance for any specific time.

Mr. REED. This is a serious question, which ought to be fully debated. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that he can permit the debate to proceed by withdrawing his amendment and allowing it to be renewed afterward by some other member seeking the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no objection to that. If it be understood that my amendment shall be renewed, I withdraw it.

Mr. REED. The amendment can be renewed from time to time, as the time allowed by the rules for debate upon it is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the arrangement suggested will be carried out; and gentlemen will be permitted for the present to speak upon this question without reference to the pendency of the amendment.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, here are two propositions, two amendments offered, both relating to the commercial privileges of our vessels in Canadian ports, and we have to consider them together; but how different! The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], like a careful statesman, proposes that inasmuch as the Democratic majority of this House has voted to take the duty off of the principal Canadian products coming to this country, by which they will receive a great boon, we now simply add this condition to that boon that they shall not enjoy all these great advantages if they continue to abuse our vessels and fishermen, refuse them the commercial privileges of coming into port and buying supplies, privileges granted by us to them and by all civilized nations except them. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] humbly proposes that after we give Canadians the advantage of all these articles, like lumber, which they sell, being admitted without paying duty, after giving this gratuitously, we shall propose to them that whenever they will grant to us the commercial privileges we claim and all Christendom recognizes, then their fish also shall come in without paying duty. Such humiliation of our nation and admission of the wrong on our part is new to our ears.

The proposition of the gentleman from Maine to make sensible use of the enormous concessions by the United States to Canadian interests already voted by this House, amounting to a trade of many millions of dollars, in order to get something in return, is a business method and procedure so common in conducting international affairs, requiring some concession in return for every valuable advantage granted, that all he has said, and ably said, in the way of argument in support of it has only shown its self-evident merit, has only illustrated, not proven, the manifest good sense and wisdom of the proposition. I have before me the statement of a leading Tory paper of Canada, rejoicing over the hope of the passage of this Mills tariff bill, which estimates the advantages to the trade of Canada that will accrue from it at over $9,000,000. This is urged by the Tory newspaper, inspired by English interests, and opposing the movement in Canada now going on friendly to enlarging commerce with us by taking away all barriers on their side as well. "Wait," he says, "and the Mills bill will do the work for us, and we will get every advantage without granting anything to the Americans."

Mr. Chairman, the privileges demanded in the amendment of the gentleman from Maine are our rights now, and for many years they have been solemnly asserted and vindicated by our Government—always till these last few months, when we have fallen upon different men and different times. Why, even during the present Administration those rights were at first maintained with vigor. None of our statesmen have stated and urged them with more logical clearness than Minister Phelps at London, who never was refuted, nor with braver spirit than the stout-hearted Secretary Manning; and who of us did not feel some humiliation when the gentleman from Kentucky (and Kentuckians are generally high-spirited men) proposed that we should offer to give the Canadians our much-coveted market for their fish free of duty whenever they would grant commercial privileges. "Grant" is the word he uses. Sir, they are our rights, and are not to be granted under such humble purchase.

Canada should recognize and admit these long-vindicated rights, which all other civilized nations recognize. Not a diplomatist among those who have contended over this question for over fifty years, not an English or Canadian statesman has ever claimed more in exchange for all they have to give than the gentleman from Kentucky now wishes to throw into their laps. But we have never yet admitted, and I trust this House will not lower the country by admitting, that the position we have maintained for so many years was all wrong and untenable; that we had no rights and should buy the grant of this privilege of decent treatment by giving them the fish duty.

Shall we abandon all that was said in the earlier dispatches of Secretary Bayard and the dispatches of Mr. Phelps in defense of the right of our vessels to humane treatment? I am sorry to know that the words of that Department have been followed since by acts that have lost much of our vantage ground, and after the unfortunate treaty was negotiated lately with Mr. Chamberlain and Sir Charles Tupper the President indorsed it in a message, and thus placed us officially in the world's public opinion as a government in very bad position for any negotiation hereafter, though this treaty may soon be rejected. All this I knew, but it should not have been crowned by this complete humiliation and purchase proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky.

He has attached to his amendment a proviso proposing in a few and, I think, hasty words complete reciprocity with Canada. I am in favor of unrestricted trade with Canada, and, still more, of commercial union; and with a hope of such a solution of all our troubles on the north, I have thought we should not at this time touch the tariff on lumber and the other products of Canada, but keep those duties up while they are a motive for an active movement toward us from the side of Canada. Besides, this is not proposed seriously by the gentleman, but his whole amendment is contrived as a parliamentary device to load down the proposition of the gentleman from Maine.

When so comprehensive and important a measure as one providing for unrestricted reciprocity, to go into immediate effect, is proposed, it should be carefully framed and in the form in which we expect it will be accepted and actually put into operation, for before long they will be ready to accept it. Recently it was proposed and elaborately discussed in the Canadian Parliament. That debate, running through weeks, was of marked ability and thoroughness, and at the end, despite the whole power and patronage of the government pressing against it, the measure received 66 votes in that parliament. I observed, too, that the members voting for it represented the districts of greatest wealth and activity in the Dominion. They were in favor of unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. It is therefore our duty to treat this vast question as a practical one—not a thing to play with as party fencing over amendments to a partisan tariff bill. We will, I hope, before long, take it up and frame such a measure as the Canadians will accept and act upon; and the importance of such legislation can hardly be exaggerated. I believe the best method would be to form a commercial union and extend our revenue system all round the north to the sea——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that the gentleman's time be extended for another five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HITT. I thank the gentleman and the House.

Such a measure should not be put in a crude, careless form, as it is now before us, where no mention is found, or provision made, for the different internal-revenue systems of the two countries, which would bring on infinite fraud and confusion if the tariffs of the two countries were removed and the internal taxes on spirits and tobacco left different. A careful measure of this kind was introduced by my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH]. Better still would it be to assimilate the tariff and internal taxes of the two countries—make them alike, the same in rate, and divide the proceeds equitably. This would at once give us the full benefit of Canadian trade, which our manufacturers have been excluded from. Nor is the problem of assimilating the tariff so very difficult. It is said that their tariff is far below ours. Gentlemen are fond of saying in this debate that our average tariff rate is above 47 per cent. That depends on the classes of articles of which the trade is composed. The tariff levied last year by the United States on articles coming from Canada was far lower than that. Let me give you some new figures. By a careful and laborious computation made by the Bureau of Statistics at my suggestion, a comparison has been made of the tariff rate of the United States and the tariff levied by Canada upon every article imported from the United States into Canada last year. I will not give you the long details, but the final result, to show how near the tariff systems of the two countries are. On $30,578,332 of dutiable goods the Canadian Government levied $7,265,135.73, or 23.76 per cent., while the duty on the same articles under United States law would have been $8,099,686.92, or 26.49 per cent. The difference between the two systems is the difference between 23.76 and 26.49, or 2.73 per cent.—not quite 2¾ per cent. So slight is the difference to be reconciled in the problem of reconciling the tariffs of Canada and the United States and making one common tariff for both. It should be considered in connection with the internal-revenue systems of the two countries, which ought also to be made alike if we have commercial union, or excepted altogether as to the articles subjected to internal taxes if we have unrestricted reciprocity. In a commercial union we will have to provide an equitable method of dividing the proceeds of the common tariff.

Now, I would be glad to vote for such a proposition properly and carefully framed—either unrestricted reciprocity or commercial union; but I can not approve this nor any other when you couple with it this proposition to abandon our position so long maintained as to the commercial privileges of our vessels, and propose to buy for a great price what is by right ours now. It is discreditable to us; it is but a step from what would be national dishonor. That part of his amendment condemns it hopelessly, and I shall vote against it all, as we will vote on it altogether.

It was bad enough to see the principle we had so long contended for in our disputes with England frittered away in the Chamberlain treaty, by concession after concession, all on our side and all along the line; but to have the House of Representatives, who should stand for the people themselves, turn back from the stout words of other days, give up the whole vantage-ground of our position, all the rights we have claimed, and come in praying to be allowed to purchase from the Canadians, with the fish trade, the favor to our vessels of such humane treatment, such commercial privileges as civilized nations ordinarily extend every one, is more than I ever looked for to hear in the Congress of the United States, more than the Canadians ever asked and expected, more than Mr. Chamberlain or Sir Charles Tupper ever thought possible or dared hope for. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, the Forty-ninth Congress, in both branches, with hardly a dissenting voice, took the ground that the true policy of the United States, after the outrages committed by Canada upon our fishermen, was the policy of vigor and courage, a policy of retaliation. That attitude was assumed by the Congress as I believe Congress should always act in regard to foreign matters, without distinction of party. They took in that connection a decided stand. How far, sir, have we drifted from that position since that time? The attitude then taken by Congress, expressive as they believed of the popular will, has been completely abandoned and disregarded by the present Administration in control of the Government.

This Administration has passed by the legislation of Congress as if it was of but little importance, and they have entered into a treaty that gives to us as a boon the rights of humanity which the semi-civilized and barbarous people of the world would not think of refusing and would scorn to make a matter of barter and sale. That is what is conceded to us as a gracious boon by the emissaries and commissioners of England and Canada.

In that treaty we surrender the claim which we have made from the very outset, that we are entitled as of right, under the doctrine of international reciprocity and under the proclamations of 1830, to the ordinary commercial privileges, and that they have no business to draw any distinction between our fishing vessels and our other vessels in Canadian waters. That is conceded by this treaty when we undertake to get these commercial privileges by altering our domestic laws in deference to Canadian wishes.

Mr. Chairman, there never has been such an attitude taken by any American administration in the history of this country. No administration hitherto has sought to alter our domestic laws in deference to the harassments and bullyings of a British province. But this is not all that is given up by us in that treaty.

For instance, under the delimitation clause we have conceded thousands of square miles of fishing water of which we have had the free use before, and we have admitted, in a large measure, the headland theory, which we have always held to be preposterous, and, as I think, have rightly so held.

But we have gone even further than that. There is a clause here in the treaty by which the United States agree to have the numbers of the fishing vessels placed upon the bows of each of such vessels, and regulations are to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the regulations so made by the American Secretary of the Treasury are to be submitted to Her Majesty's Government. That clause is not reciprocal by any means. It stands alone in the treaty. Pending the delay of this treaty we are offered that precious modus vivendi, by which an American fisherman is to be allowed to go into the Canadian port and buy for money the right to touch and trade, a right which we concede to Canada and to all the world—the ordinary commercial advantages which we refuse to no one—and our fishermen to-day are obliged to buy these rights. In the Senate of the United States, which stood up in a solid phalanx only a year ago against such a position as that, the Democratic party, under the pressure of post-offices and patronage, has been whipped into line until they have accepted this treaty as a party measure, and now the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] comes into this House and offers an amendment to this bill which places the Democratic party in the House also squarely on the ground of that treaty.

It is no time, sir, in my judgment, to talk of reciprocity until these questions involved in our present relations with Canada are settled in accordance with the dictates of national honor.

And now, sir, I wish to say one further word in regard to some of the defenses which have been made of this treaty policy. It is said—I have read it in the organs of the Administration—that the American fishermen or the crews of our fishing vessels are aliens. Why, sir, the statistics of the State of Massachusetts of 1886, compiled by Colonel Wright, show that 60 per cent. of these men are native born—not simply American citizens, but native-born citizens; and Mr. Manning, the late Secretary of the Treasury, in his report, said that 75 per cent. of them were American citizens. In a wandering and varying occupation, such as the occupation of fishing and following the sea generally, this is an exceedingly large percentage of American citizens. But if the crews were aliens, they are American ships, owned by Americans, navigated by Americans, and they fly the American flag; and our contention is, Mr. Chairman, that every man whom that flag covers in the United States or elsewhere is bound to be protected, whether it be on the deck of a fishing vessel or anywhere else. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman will be allowed five minutes additional time.

There was no objection.

Mr. LODGE. It is also said, Mr. Chairman, that they are few in number. Compared to the great body of this great nation they are few in number. There are, I think, thirty-one thousand of them in New England.

Mr. DINGLEY. Thirty-seven thousand.

Mr. LODGE. There are thirty-seven thousand of them in New England. That number represents some one hundred and seventy thousand people who are directly dependent on this industry for their support. But, Mr. Chairman, whether they are few or many, it does not touch in the least the duty of the United States to defend them, and I think the sneers which have been cast upon them by certain of the Administration newspapers come with a very ill grace. The fishermen of New England, the fishermen of my own State of Massachusetts, are the men who have been associated with the defense of the country from the days of the Revolution. It was the fishermen of Marblehead that ferried Washington across the Delaware to the battle of Trenton. They manned our ships and they enlisted in our regiments in the war of the rebellion. They were with Farragut and Porter. They shed their blood on every deck and on every battle-field of the Republic. They are a bold, hardy, resolute set of men. Our fisheries are the nurseries of seamen, to which you must turn if you are ever involved in war with a foreign country. I lay aside now the economic question of a tariff duty. It has always been the policy of a great nation to encourage and defend and protect and build up its fishing industries, because out of the fishing industry come the men to man its ships of war, and I think the question involved in this proposition is something far more important than the mere economic question. It is a question of national honor and of national dignity, which has been but little understood by the people of this country, and I trust that the discussion which is going on upon this treaty in the Senate and which is going on in this House will be carried outside and onto every platform in the country. I believe that it is the feeling of the American people that they want to protect American citizens in their rights, whether they live North, South, East, or West. Whether few in number or many; whether native-born or adopted citizens, it is the wish of the people of this country that all shall be protected; and although this treaty has been made in response to outrages heaped upon the American fishermen, it contains not one line of apology, not one word of reparation.

To-day you have all seen in the newspapers the case of a vessel which is not a fishing vessel, the Bridgewater, which was taken into a Nova Scotia port in distress, and the owners of which have been harassed and insulted by the Canadian Government. Why should not the Canadians treat us as they do? Why should they have any opinion of a country which so palters with the rights of its citizens as this treaty does? We go to them "with bated breath and whispering humbleness" and in a bondeman's key we say, "Fair sirs, you spit on us on Wednesday last; you spurned us such a day; another day you called us dog, and for these many courtesies we will give you free lumber and free fish." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, the question that is now under discussion is not a new one. Once or twice before in our history the same question practically has been up; but I think that never before has the House of Representatives or the National Legislature attempted to enact into law a proposition as broad as that which is contained in the last part of the resolution offered yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

The part of the resolution referred to is as follows:

And provided further, That whenever the Dominion of Canada admits products, wares, and merchandise grown, produced, or manufactured in the United States free of duty, then the products, wares, and merchandise grown, produced, or manufactured in said Dominion of Canada shall be admitted free of duty.

It has been charged repeatedly by Republicans during the discussion of the tariff bill in the House that the real meaning and intent of the movement made under the guise of the Mills bill was free trade. Here and there that has been denied in a weak way, and I am glad, for one, that the part of this resolution quoted has been introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky, if for no other reason than to show that the charge that the Democratic party now, backed up by the Administration, is really in favor of free trade. No other construction can be put upon the latter part of this resolution than that it means free trade, unrestricted, with Canada—4,000 miles of American territory opened with four lines of a resolution to free trade with the subjects of England. That is what it means.

In 1854 the United States entered into a treaty called "the reciprocity treaty," in which a few articles were made the subject of reciprocal free trade between Canada and the United States. For ten years and more that law was in operation between the two countries, and what was the result? The result was that the American Congress, with hardly a dissenting voice, directed the abrogation of that treaty simply because it was found that the Canadians were not fair in the administration of it. It was in operation, too, at a time which was most favorable for the success of such a scheme if it were desirable as an economic measure, because during almost five years of the time we were engaged in war. Nevertheless, sir, it was found that it was not a success as an economic proposition, and the United States abrogated that treaty. And, Mr. Chairman, we did not receive any favors or friendships from Canada in return for extending to them in this treaty access to our markets. They were unfriendly to us during the whole period of the late civil war. If any scheme was to be concocted for the assistance of the Confederacy it was concocted nine times out of ten upon Canadian soil, and they even went so far as to organize and carry out raids from Canada across the border into the United States. Our vessels on the Great Lakes were seized. Those raids, organized by the agents of the Confederacy, came from Canadian soil, and yet, sir, we had opened to them by this treaty our territory and our markets when we had from thirty-one to forty millions of people.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, you will find that when you establish free trade with Canada you are not establishing it with the Government of Canada alone. You will find that Canada is merely the paw of the lion. The lion lies back of it—the British lion at that. And when you propose by six lines of a resolution to throw wide open the doors along 4,000 miles of our frontier, so that the British Government, by its Canadian subjects, and by others coming into Canada, can walk into your territory and get the benefit of our markets, you do an act which is subversive of the very principles upon which our Government is founded. Our Government was founded upon the principle of protection to our products and our labor through a tariff placed upon foreign products coming here for a market, and there has been no time within the last one hundred years and more when we have not had a protective tariff. England has always fought against our policy in that regard, and England now in such resolutions as this is fighting against this national policy.

Mr. Chairman, in 1871 we made another treaty with Canada. That treaty provided that she should have the privilege of navigating our waters, our inland lakes and our canals, free. Even the great Erie Canal, running through the State of New York, Canada, under this treaty, navigates free of toll. In the same treaty, article 27, it was provided that we might navigate the Canadian waters, the Welland and Lachine Canals and the St. Lawrence, from the forty-fifth degree down. What has been the result? Has that treaty been carried out in good faith? Not at all. While Canada has navigated our waters freely and without charge, let, or hinderance, if an American vessel, loaded with American products from the great West, seeks to-day to pass through the Welland Canal into Lake Ontario, and so on down the St. Lawrence, and to an American port, she is charged tolls upon the amount of freight which she carries, upon her tonnage. This is a plain discrimination against our commerce. This is a plain violation of a solemn understanding. It discriminates against our ports of entry, and discrimination against our ports of entry is a discrimination against our Government, and discrimination against our Government is a discrimination against every American citizen.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the time of my colleague [Mr. NUTTING] be extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. NUTTING. When one of our vessels, loaded with the produce of the West, attempts to pass through the Welland Canal into Lake Ontario, with its 7,000 square miles of navigable water, or to go down the St. Lawrence, she is charged toll upon every bushel of grain or every foot of lumber that constitutes her cargo, provided she is bound for an American port. If that vessel is to unload at a Canadian port down the St. Lawrence, those tolls, when she gets to such port, are paid back; but the tolls collected from an American vessel are never paid back. This twenty-seventh article, which declares in so many words that the American people shall be treated in the same manner as the Canadians in the navigation of this canal, is, for the purpose of committing this act of injustice, construed by the Canadians in this way: They say that in making this discrimination against a vessel which unloads at an American port they are not making a discrimination against American citizens, but against the American port. No man with the honesty which should belong to any one living in a civilized community would put such a construction as that upon a treaty, even for the purpose of gaining a suit in a court of justice. Yet they do it.

What further? In this twenty-seventh article—and I hope gentlemen of the House will read it—we are given the privilege of navigating the waters of the Welland Canal free and on the same terms as the Canadians. This canal is entirely in Canadian territory. In 1882 one of our vessels, carrying the American flag, with American sailors on board, loaded with American produce, being carried to an American market, was sunk in the waters of the Welland Canal. The vessel was in danger, the cargo was in danger, and even the sailors were in danger. A telegram was sent to the Canadian authorities asking that an American tug be allowed to come from Buffalo, 22 miles distant, to assist this distressed vessel, her cargo and crew. The permission asked by telegraph of the Canadian authorities for this purpose was refused. They said it must be a Canadian tug and Canadian wrecking appliances that should go there to take care of that property. They said it was in Canadian waters. Then it was that this vessel in distress was obliged to wait until Canadian wrecking appliances could come from a distance of more than 200 miles.

By the time the Canadian float could get there the vessel and cargo were greatly damaged. This is only one of many instances which might be cited where the Canadian Government has violated not only the spirit of this treaty, but the rights which ought to be and usually are granted by civilized nations without treaty.

My friend from Iowa who sits near me [Mr. GEAR] asks me whether a claim for salvage was made. It seems to me, sir, that the injustice of the act itself is enough, without stating the fact, if it were true, that the Canadian tug asked salvage. This is the kind of treatment we have had from Canada. Yet the gentleman from Kentucky to-day, by this resolution, seeks to allow our farmers, our laborers, our manufacturing establishments in the United States to come into competition with the products of Canada from across the border. Remember, Mr. Chairman, what you give to Canada you give to England. I will never give my vote to such a measure as this; nor will the American people hold any man in Congress blameless who may give his vote for it under existing circumstances. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, before entering upon this question I would like to ask, so that some of the gentleman's colleagues may answer it hereafter, what the Republican administration then in existence did to rectify the injustice which, in the instance he has stated, was perpetrated upon an American vessel in Canadian waters.

Mr. NUTTING. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Take your own time hereafter and answer the question. [Derisive cries on the Republican side.] If I can have my time extended I am willing the gentleman should answer it now. Go on.

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Evarts, who was at that time Secretary of State, sent letter after letter——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Letters!

Mr. NUTTING. He sent letter after letter—he did not go himself; he did what any Secretary of State would do—he sent letter after letter to the authorities of Canada asking the privilege that when our vessels and our sailors were in distress we might go to their assistance.

Mr. GROUT. In what year was that?

Mr. NUTTING. It was when Mr. Evarts was Secretary of State.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. As I understand, then, the Secretary of State begged for the permission or the privilege on the part of our citizens——

Mr. NUTTING. He demanded it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. To exercise the same equal rights in regard to which your side has been abusing this Administration, which has been pursuing just as vigorous, just as straightforward, just as effective measures to secure the rights of American citizens as did your Secretary of State.

Mr. REED. Your Administration has made a full surrender.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to bring this debate back to the point from which it started.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman will allow me a moment. Mr. Chairman, four or five gentlemen on the other side have spoken on this question and nobody has interrupted; but now when the first gentleman on our side speaks he is met with a series of interruptions——

Several MEMBERS (on the Republican side). He asked an answer to a question.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I asked that it be answered in your time.

Mr. NUTTING. But you asked the question in your time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. A habit has grown up on that side of half a dozen gentlemen interrupting any member on this side who begins to talk.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The trouble is that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] asks questions which he does not want to have answered.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I said that you could answer in your own time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. This is simply another evidence of what I am calling attention to. Four or five gentlemen on the other side by the courtesy of the House have had extensions of their time—the gentleman from Maine had thirty minutes—and there has been no interruption at all; but as soon as a gentleman on our side takes the floor to make a reply, he is subjected to repeated interruptions.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am satisfied that no one desires to interrupt the gentleman from Ohio, if he will not invite interruptions in a very aggressive manner.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That is just another demonstration of what I have been saying.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] has the floor.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to proceed, I want to repeat, so that it may be emphasized, so far as any repetition of mine may emphasize it, that gentlemen here have been bristling with patriotic ardor as if they wanted somebody in this country to take up arms and march against Canada because certain things had been done there during this Administration which were no worse than those done in the preceding administrations which were under the control of the Republican party. It is all for effect. It is not because they believe any such proceeding should be had. It is not because they believe that, in a tariff debate, it is the proper place to bring in a discussion of treaties which have been made and are being considered at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. Chairman, I want to get this debate back to the point at which it belongs. I made the point of order, when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] introduced his resolution, that it was not germane to this part of the bill. If the point of order was properly overruled, we have an illustration in the tendency of this discussion here that there ought to be some limit to it.

We were discussing, not concessions to Canada, not grants to Canada, not grants to this country, but we were discussing the question of the reduction of taxes to millions of people. [Applause.]

I would be inclined to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] if such amendment were in my opinion proper to this section of the bill and provided simply for free fish.

There is a proviso which is pertinent to the subject, and that is:

Provided, That if any export duty is laid upon the above-mentioned articles, or either of them, by any country whence imported, all said articles imported from said country shall be subject to duty as now provided by law.

This relates to lumber. The gentleman from Maine, by his amendment, brings in the fish-bait question, and then from that we have the fishery question. Now, if it be proposed to consider what shall be done in regard to the duty on fish, let us take that subject up separately and apart from this amendment and in its proper place. I will vote to put fish on the free-list, so as to give cheaper food to our people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. REED. I think the gentleman from Ohio is entitled to an additional five minutes. I hope the House will grant it. That was the understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the course of this discussion we find in the first amendment offered to the lines under consideration a proposition with regard to including the right to buy provisions, bait, and supplies, and the right to transship any portion of the cargoes as are granted to similar vessels of the United States in ports of other countries. The gentleman from Kentucky in his amendment applies it to other countries, and gentlemen upon that seek to spread the impression abroad in this country that this side of the House is about to grant or concede great privileges to the Dominion of Canada. There is no such intention. That is not the proposition. The main proposition which must be kept clearly before the minds of this House is the question as to the duty or no duty on lumber.

If it were desirable to reply to the attack made upon this Administration as to its want of vigor, its want of stamina, its want of boldness in standing up for the rights of American citizens, nothing would be necessary except to quote from remarks of gentlemen here showing that the Department of State and all the officials of the Department of State have done their duty fully and clearly in that particular. Let us not forget that among the first acts of this Administration was one to vindicate the rights of Americans when some slight disturbance occurred in Central America. It was not twenty-four hours before the Navy Depaftment had in progress movements which had the effect to settle, and finally did settle, the question favorably to this Government.

Let us then vote down both of these amendments, as the one has no more business here than the other.

The second has been introduced properly for the purpose of putting the matter fairly before this committee and the people. If you begin to make concessions of one kind or the other, if you begin to deal on a purely revenue bill in a bargain and sale with foreign countries, one is as properly there as the other.

Mr. Chairman, as to this proposition that is presented by the gentleman from Kentucky, I want it distinctly understood that I am not in favor of its adoption. I trust that it will be voted down with unanimity, and I trust that the other amendment will be voted down with the same emphasis. Let us clear this matter entirely out of the way and go on and consider the reduction of the taxes that are provided for in this bill. If the subject of free fish is to be considered let it be offered as an amendment, so that those on both sides who wish may vote in favor of getting free fish from all parts of the world.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COGSWELL. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that I represent the largest fishing district in this country. This discussion comes up by no invitation of mine. I think the discussion of this great fisheries question is belittled by bringing it into the discussion of a tariff bill.

It is not an economic question, nor is it a question upon which the great parties of this country should divide politically for a moment. It is a question simple in its statement, but far reaching in its consequence; a question of American rights and of American honor. It is not a question of a few fishermen on the Eastern shores of New England, but it is a question interesting and involving the rights of every American citizen. It is purely a question whether we shall have our rights which we are entitled to as they exist under international comity, that comity which prevails amongst all of the civilized nations of the world; those rights which are ours under mutual and reciprocal proclamations between this country and Great Britain—rights which are the commonest rights of humanity. This is the question that presents itself to us, and I repeat, it is belittling such a question to bring it into debate here and now in the manner it is presented, in my judgment.

Why, Mr. Chairman, do you know for the last three seasons in Canadian waters the an American fisherman, falling from the icy rigging to the deck of his schooner, breaking his bones, could not be landed on Canadian shores to seek the services of a surgeon without risk of the seizure and confiscation of his vessel? Do you know that? Such is the fact. I do not put the statement too strong, for I use almost the exact language and the exact illustration that was used by our minister to England, Mr. Phelps, in the discussion of this very question; and now I find myself confronted with the question, that this great nation shall buy from Canada these rights, instead of our demanding them, and demanding them, Mr. Chairman, in a spirit worthy of the patriotism and the courage of the American people. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I hope that consent will be given.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman will be permitted to proceed.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Chairman, the question confronts us now in this debate, shall we buy a recognition of our rights, or shall we demand them? And let me say to you, when we do demand these rights in a spirit which means that we intend to back up that demand they will be granted, and granted in an hour. [Applause.] If not granted, then in a dignified, manly way let us retaliate in kind by withdrawing from them the privileges they withhold from us, and reason will mighty soon return to them.

Mr. Chairman, in this connection I am reminded of and desire to read a word from Henry Clay.

He says:

If there be any description of rights which more than any other should unite all parties in all quarters of the Union, it is unquestionably the rights of the person. No matter what his vocation, whether he seeks subsistence amid the dangers of the sea, or draws them from the bowels of the earth, or from the humblest occupations of mechanic life, wherever the sacred rights of American freemen are assailed, all hearts ought to unite and every arm be braced to vindicate his cause.

And, sir, I regret from the very bottom of my heart that so soon there should rise from the seat which Henry Clay so honored and so filled with American patriotism, an occupant who would sell or barter away American rights and American honor for a paltry kettle of fish. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I welcome the gentleman to the record he is making or trying to make for his party. I dare him to make it. And I tell him that next November every Northern State will be an Oregon for him and his party if in this way they go back upon the rights and honor that flag represents, or ought to. [Applause on the Republican side.] I welcome the gentleman from Kentucky, I repeat, to the record he would make. Add, if you will to add it, to that which you have already made, and if you do, gentlemen, that record will stand as too ignorant to govern, too cowardly to protect American rights and honor, and only successful in its abject toadyism to Great Britain. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COGSWELL] ought to be, and I apprehend will be, deeply offensive to my friend from Maine, Governor DINGLEY, who introduced into this House the discussion of this question, which, he avers, has been belittled thereby. It must have been also offensive to my friend from Maine to have the gentleman denounce with such vigorous rhetoric the attempt to purchase these rights of our fishermen, which he declares it is dishonorable to make an object of barter and sale, as my friend from Maine introduced that question, and as it was he who desired to purchase those rights by offering his amendment that they should be purchased with lumber, or, I confess, I am unable to see the difference so far as the question of honor is concerned in offering to buy these rights with free lumber or offering to buy them with free fish, or with both.

But I leave that question to be settled between the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] and the eloquent and somewhat passionate gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COGSWELL] who has just taken his seat. It will be borne in mind, I hope, that the gentleman who last took his seat [Mr. COGSWELL] is wholly mistaken, as is the scholarly and literary gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and other gentlemen who have spoken upon that side, as to the point that this question is one which gives up any rights to which American fishermen are entitled in Canadian waters, or in any way changes our attitude so far as the diplomatic relations of the two countries are concerned. Whatever are the rights of our fishermen under the treaty of 1818, which is the treaty under which we are now probably living, or under the subsequent commercial treaties which have been made between us and Great Britain, still remain, after that amendment is adopted, precisely as they do now. All that this does is to provide that if Canada accords certain rights and privileges, which even if they are technically ours, are not ours practically, we will admit from Canada not only lumber but free fish.

But, Mr. Chairman, I desire to go one step further back. So far as our side of the House is concerned, we had not touched that question. That was a matter which the treaty-making power had under consideration. A majority of the Senate is Republican. Twelve Senators from New England sit in that body. No treaty, therefore, could possibly be adopted which was not approved by the Republican majority; and it was not from this side of the House that the offer came to interfere in any way with the diplomatic negotiations that were going on between the two countries, and which, so far as we were concerned, were in the hands of the Senate, which is itself controlled by a Republican majority. So that when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] introduced his proposition he introduced the subject into the House, I will not say with the purpose, but with the effect, that if it was adopted it would render the schedule which the Committee of the Whole had agreed to absolutely nugatory.

The real effect of the proposition of the gentleman from Maine was that the schedule embracing free lumber should not take effect, because it could not take effect until a certain thing was done, which thing would not be done without the consent of the Republican Senate to the treaty which is now being discussed by that body. Therefore, I say, whether the gentleman meant that or not, the effect of his proposition was to adopt an indirect mode of defeating the schedule which had been agreed to here. The gentleman's proposition was based upon the idea that the economic changes made in the present tariff by that schedule were made for the benefit of Canada—an assumption wholly unfounded and absolutely gratuitous. Those changes were made for the benefit of sixty millions of American citizens. In the assorting of taxes, in the elimination of articles upon which duties were laid, the Committee of the Whole determined that it would reduce the revenue by $1,000,000 received from duties upon these various articles of lumber, which is just about one day's revenue and less than 1½ per cent. of our annual surplus.

To that determination the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] interposes an objection in the form of a proposition, which, if adopted, would have the effect to prevent the reduction of the revenue and indefinitely postpone the operation of the law. So much with respect to the introduction of these questions into this House.

As to all that has been said about the defense of the fishermen and their rights, I have no other response to make than the response which was made by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] in the last House, to which all on this side cordially agreed, that whenever the American Government was driven by the necessity for the protection of any of its citizens to take steps more rigorous than diplomatic negotiation it should be sustained in that action by the patriotic and willing assistance of everybody on this side of the House, and by every form of legislative or personal support that the circumstances then arising should require.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS was recognized and yielded his time to Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But, Mr. Chairman, none of us contemplate—certainly none contemplate without very great sorrow—the possibility of a war between Great Britain and America. He is indeed a man to be pitied who contemplates without sorrow a war between these two great English-speaking peoples, and it is to the credit of the Republican administrations which preceded the Democratic Administration that with all the subjects of irritation which existed between these two great English-speaking peoples, modes were found for preserving the peace.

I do not hesitate to express my profound hope that the Democratic Administration, with the assistance of all right-minded and patriotic Republicans, as well as that of all Democrats, will find an honorable solution of all difficulties between this country and Great Britain and her colonies, one consistent with peace and with honor; and he scarcely deserves the name of demagogue even who, in a discussion in this House or anywhere else, will attempt, for personal or partisan or temporary reasons, to inflame the mind of the American people so as to render the continuance of peace with honor doubtful or hazardous. I desire to say also, although it is not quite relevant to this discussion, that the treaty which was made by the present Administration has seemed to me to be a fair settlement of the questions involved.

Personally I do not care very much whether it is adopted or not, because I look forward to a day not far remote when the fishery questions on the Pacific Slope and the questions growing out of the purchase of Alaska and the Bering Sea and the ownership of the Aleutian Islands will be of great importance, and I have felt that this treaty, if adopted, might possibly affect the questions arising in connection with those subjects. I have once before said in an official report, in which my colleague from Indiana, General BROWNE, united with me against the majority of my colleagues and the majority of his colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee, that the questions which would soon confront us on the Pacific Slope were of such importance that I hesitated to take any step that would settle these questions in a way which would not leave us entirely free.

Therefore, so far as that treaty is concerned, while I approve its spirit and think it a fair treaty, I have not taken the same interest in its ratification that most persons on my side of the House have felt.

One more observation. As to all this fishery question in Massachusetts and other Eastern States there are some branches of it which have been wholly ignored. That great population in the Northwest who use salt fish do not, as a rule, use American or Canadian salt fish. They use fish that are cured in the countries from which they come.

Because of this question between us and Canada we are putting a duty upon their food which is wholly unnecessary and absolutely without justification, and one of the reasons why I introduced these amendments was that we might emphasize in the sight of the American people the fact that no question between us and Canada, no question between us and Mexico, no question between us and any other foreign government was capable of a fair, free, and separate discussion and settlement without those who advocate protection putting in the economic advantages which some of their constituents get as heavier than the broader and weightier reasons which ought to control in the settlement of those questions.

As to the reciprocity amendment which I have offered, and which I do not expect the House to put on to this bill—for I frankly say that while I hope these two amendments will be appended to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], I hope that the House will then vote the whole amendment down, so as to leave the bill exactly as it came from the Committee on Ways and Means; as to reciprocity I say to my friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] who offered the joint resolution which is now before the Committee on Ways and Means, that I am perfectly willing to accept an amendment to that amendment, providing that those articles upon which there are internal-revenue taxes shall be excluded from the operation of this amendment. I am willing to go farther and accept an amendment that will allow the adjustment of exchanges to be made under regulations made by the Treasury Department.

As to my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], whose love for reciprocity with Canada has proven this morning to be entirely Platonic [laughter], poetic, eloquent, and wholly unprofitable, he is always advocating it where it can do no good and opposing it at the only time and place where it is possible to do good, and I do not know that I can do better than put into the RECORD the preamble of the bill which he has submitted on that subject.

And, Mr. Chairman, before the gavel drops I ask leave also to put into the RECORD some facts taken from a speech which my literary friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has made heretofore and published in the North American Review, a speech which I beg leave to say is somewhat more accurate than the one which he did us the honor to submit on the floor this morning, and also some other extracts showing the extent of this fishing industry and the number of aliens who are engaged in it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] includes in the estimate of the extent of the business the men and vessels engaged in all the fisheries of every kind in all of the United States. The deep-sea fisheries on our Eastern coast are very much smaller. Mr. LODGE, of Massachusetts, in a late number of the North American Review, wrote:

The New England fisheries, which are chiefly involved in this contest, employed, in 1880, 37,043 men, 2,066 vessels, 14,787 boats, and yield an annual product of $14,270,393.

And I accept this statement as correct. What proportion of these fishermen are either native or naturalized citizens seems to be a matter of dispute. I append two extracts from the testimony reported to the Senate in the Forty-ninth Congress.

And lately the Boston Post has been attempting to ascertain the exact facts, and the discussion may result in the establishment of the facts as to this industry.

I append extracts from that paper. If the statements in these papers are at all accurate, it is another demonstration of the mockery of the oft-reiterated plea that protection is for the benefit of the American workingmen. The people of Gloucester and New England know what the facts are, and they will gradually become known to the public. These statements also puncture with fatal accuracy the rhetorical declamation that these deep-sea fisheries are the nurseries of the American Navy—for much more are they the training-school of the Canadian marine.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] is unwilling to have free lumber granted to our own citizens unless Canada will recognize certain claims made by our fishermen. We meet him on his own ground and say we will obtain for our citizens a larger boon than free lumber out of this bargain; we will, in addition to free lumber, get an article of universal and prime necessity, free from taxation, fish, an article of food to the poor and the laboring classes. Because of these unsettled questions on our northeastern coast all salted foreign fish are subject to duty. If Canada recognizes the claims we make, and thereby these questions are settled, then all plausible claim for the retention of tax on foreign fish passes away, and this duty ought to be removed. And the amendment offered by me to the proposition of the gentleman [Mr. DINGLEY] will, if adopted, secure this result.

SAINT PAUL, MINN.

SIR: We, the undersigned, importers, dealers, and consumers of salt fish, respectfully request that your honorable committee will take into consideration the matter of placing food-fish on the free-list for the following reasons:

That the salt fish imported from Norway, Holland, Scotland, Newfoundland, and Nova Scotia form a very important part of the food of the farming and laboring population of the Northwest, and the duty, which is now from 25 to 40 per cent. of the first cost of the goods, bears especially hard on the class least able to pay it.

These foreign packed fish do not enter into competition with the fish produced on the American coast, being of entirely different quality and cure, being cured in a manner that is impossible in this country on account of the climate, and as it appears to be the desire of the present Government to relieve the people of any unnecessary taxes, we ask that the food of the people may be among the items selected to be free of duty.

GOLDSMITH & CULLEN and 27 others.

The CHAIRMAN of the Committee of Ways and Means,
Washington, D. C.

Petition of 74 citizens of Michigan and Indiana: "The undersigned respectfully ask for the removal of the existing duties on salt fish and that they be placed on the free-list."

Twenty-two merchants of Memphis say: "The undersigned, believing that the exaction of duties on fish is detrimental to our interests and a hardship to the great body of consumers throughout the country, and that the settlement of the fisheries question is, in the words of the President's message, 'of much importance,' respectfully ask for the appointment of commissioners on the part of the United States to confer with those of Canada, as recommended by the President."

Sixty-two citizens of Michigan "respectfully but must earnestly petition that fresh fish and frozen fish be imported free of all duties. Or should a reciprocity treaty be negotiated, fresh and frozen fish be one of the articles included."

One hundred and twenty-six citizens of Minnesota and Wisconsin ask for the removal of the existing duties on salt fish and that they be placed on the free-list.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever it shall be duly certified to the President of the United States that the Government of the Dominion of Canada has declared a desire to establish commercial union with the United States, having a uniform revenue system, like internal taxes to be collected, and like import duties to be imposed on articles brought into either country from other nations, with no duties upon trade between the United States and Canada, he shall appoint three commissioners to meet those who may be likewise designated to represent the Government of Canada, to prepare a plan for the assimilation of the import duties and internal-revenue taxes of the two countries, and an equitable division of receipts, in a commercial union; and said commissioners shall report to the President, who shall lay the report before Congress.

A bill (H. R. 6668) to extend the trade and commerce of the United States and to provide for full reciprocity between the United States and the Dominion of Canada.

Whereas certain controversies have arisen and are still pending between the Government of the United States and the Government of the Dominion of Canada, respecting commercial intercourse; and

Whereas by reason of the contiguity of the two countries and the similarity of the interests and occupations of the people thereof, it is desired by the United States to remove all existing controversies and all causes of controversy in the future, and to promote and encourage business and commercial intercourse between the people of both countries, and to promote harmony between the two Governments, and to enable the citizens of each to trade with the citizens of the other without unnecessary restrictions: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever, and as soon as the Government of the Dominion of Canada shall permit all articles of trade and commerce of whatever name or nature, whether the product of the soil or of the waters of the United States, all manufactured articles, live-stock of all kinds, and its products, and all minerals the produce of the mines of the United States, to enter the ports of the Dominion of Canada free of duty, then all articles manufactured in Canada, and all products of the soil and waters, and all minerals the produce of the mines of Canada, and all other articles of every name and description produced in said Dominion of Canada, shall be permitted to enter the ports of the United States free of duty: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any product or article upon which an internal-revenue tax is imposed by the laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. That when it shall be certified to the President of the United States by the Government of the said Dominion of Canada that by the authority of its Parliament it has authorized the admission into the ports of said Dominion of all articles of trade and commerce the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, free of duty, the President shall make proclamation thereof, and shall likewise proclaim that all articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the said Dominion of Canada shall be admitted into all the ports of the United States free of duty, and such articles shall be so admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty so long as the said Dominion of Canada shall admit the products of the United States, as herein provided, into the ports of the Dominion free of duty.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, with the approval of the President of the United States, and in conjunction with the proper officials of the government of the Dominion of Canada, to make rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, and to protect the said respective governments against the importation of foreign goods or articles through either into the other without payment of duty; and the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall furnish to the customs officers of the United States all such rules and regulations for the purpose of guiding them in the discharge of their duties in the premises.

SEC. 4. That before making the proclamations or either of them authorized by this act the President shall be satisfied that all citizens and subjects of the United States may have and enjoy the right of commercial intercourse in all the ports, harbors, and places in Canada with the citizens and subjects of the Dominion, in as full and ample a manner in all respects as may be had or enjoyed by the latter in the ports, harbors, and places of the United States, with the citizens and subjects thereof.

MARINE INTELLIGENCE—FISH RECEIPTS AND ARRIVALS AT GLOUCESTER.

GLOUCESTER, MASS., March 12.

Schooner Uncle Sam arrived to-day from Pubnico, Nova Scotia, bringing 100 men who go fishing from this port. Of late it has been hard to secure crews. Schooner Herman Babson, New York, from the Georges, to-day brings 500,000 pounds of codfish.

MARINE INTELLIGENCE—BRITISH FISHERMEN TO SHIP FROM GLOUCESTER.

GLOUCESTER, MASS., March 20.

British schooner On Time arrived to-day from Liverpool, N. S., bringing 60 men to go fishing. Among them are several skippers who will command vessels from here. The Sentinel, from Philadelphia, and the Senator Morgan, from New York, have arrived.

GLOUCESTER FISHERMEN DO NOT LIKE THE IDEA OF BEING SUPPLEMENTED BY NOVA SCOTIANS.

GLOUCESTER, March 22.

The exposure of the gigantic halibut monopoly has been the common conversation among the fishermen on the street corners, around the wharves, and on board the vessels, wherever one may chance to go. "Well," said the spokesman of a crowd of men who were on Parkhurst's wharf, "the Post and Herald deserve credit for the enterprising spirit they have shown in giving the public some light on this halibut pool and how it has been using the fishermen." "But," interrupted another, "there are other things which want to be shown up which are of vast importance to the fishermen. One is the importing of men from the Provinces to man the vessels. That is the worst outrage that has been committed upon the rights of the American fishermen."

The reporter, out of curiosity, perambulated the wharves to see what knowledge could be gained. With the aid of two ex-skippers who volunteered their services, nearly every wharf was visited, and it was found that the large fleet of vessels which have been hauled up all winter were being rapidly fitted out for the various fishing grounds. The first part of the season there was some difficulty in procuring crews to man the early fleet for Georges and Western Bank. Since the 1st of March a large number of men have arrived here to engage in fishing from this port, principally from Pubnico and Argyle, N. S. These men are expert fishermen and can be hired cheaper than Americans, consequently their services are eagerly sought, and they are shipped in preference to the men who live here and have families to maintain.

Among the fleet fitting out, wholly commanded and manned by Provincial crews, are the schooners William H. Jordon, Fernwood, John W. Bray, Marguerite, Epes Tan, Mist, Nellie N. Davis, Druid, Margaret Mather, Plymouth Rock, Wildfire, and others too numerous to mention. The owners here who so strenuously cry for protection by excluding Canadian fish from the markets of the United States, throw their arms wide open and hail with great joy the advent of those men, whom they want to man their vessels and whom they could not get along without. Now, the way those men are shipped and the method that the owners are adopting are worthy of note.

After the season is over a large majority of the vessels are hauled up, with the exception of those which go halibuting, haddocking, and to Newfoundland. The crews in most cases are Nova Scotians, and when the season is over they return to their provincial homes, taking what money they have earned with them and spending it there. But before leaving they are engaged for the next season, and about the first of March they put in their appearance, the masters who live there coming with them. On their arrival here they go on board, when the vessel is used for a boarding-house, they in most every case buying their own food. They take out ballast or put it in, as the case may require; put in salt; put the vessel on the railway and clean her, and, in fact, every conceivable thing is done to make her ready for the voyage.

Now, this is what our men are claiming is an injustice on the part of the owners; for the men who brave the storms of winter are often turned on shore to make room for the imported foreigners. This work once was all done by the fishermen and 'longshoremen who live here and who have families to support, receiving a considerable sum during the season. Said a group of excited fishermen and lumpers who stood on the Atlantic wharf and saw the British schooner On Time haul in and land sixty men just from Liverpool, N. S., who had been engaged the season before to come here, among them being several who were going as masters:

"This is what the owners call protecting the fishermen, importing foreign labor. Is not what they have been preaching a farce?" 'Well," said John F. Cunen, "it is time this was shown up. Our local papers will not say anything about it for fear they would insult some selfish owner who is trying to get up a fishing trust. The Boston papers should have a true statement of these facts and expose this as well as the halibut pool." "What a pity the investigating committee of the Senate was not here now," shouted out another; "they could see if what was told them two years ago was true—that there were but few Nova Scotians going from here."

The American fishermen here say they do not blame the men for coming, but they blame the owners for importing foreign labor; and it is the general opinion that if the men are coming here fish should be admitted free and make it cheaper to the consumer, for the price is such that it is almost impossible for a poor man to buy it. Fishermen say they do not make as much as when there was free fish. And there is not so much money among the laboring class as there was in former years.

It is the opinion of all the fishermen and laboring men that they are being treated unjustly by the men who shout for protection by excluding Canadian fish from the markets of the United States. Two years ago the testimony was given by those same ardent advocates of protection that they wanted nothing from Canada, and it was detrimental to the fishermen to go there. At the same time they were importing provincial crews at wholesale, and in many cases paying their passage here and feeding them on board the vessels for a number of days while getting ready for the voyage—something they would not do for the men here.

In looking over the testimony given in this city before the subcommittee of the United States Senate, Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submits his report, and in that document will be found (January 19, 1887, No. 1683) the evidence of several parties from this city interested in the fishing business; and on page 140 is the testimony of Capt. John Chisholm, who says, in answer to questions by Senator EDMUNDS, that he had four Nova Scotians on board his vessel, and he had engaged them to come here, sending them money to pay their passage.

Is this not importing foreign labor? And what other men in various ports of the country have been prohibited from doing? Others testified that not more than 1 per cent. of the Gloucester fishermen were foreign born and but few were provincial. The statement of things to-day is in contradiction to that story, for a large majority of the vessels are manned by Nova Scotians, and a talk with them will reveal the fact that they are the most loyal of British citizens, and not a trained reserve for the American Navy, whom the United States can rely on in time of war, as Capt. Fitz J. Babson and other ardent advocates of a Chinese war policy are endeavoring to make the people believe. Some of these alleged American fishermen jumped to arms when a call was made for men to help to put down the Riel insurrection in the Northwest. Our fishermen need protection, but not in the way they are receiving it at the hands of a few selfish fishing owners, who are trying to keep them from getting a living by engaging men six months in advance to come from the provinces to man their vessels.

[Boston Post, May 1, 1888.]

NOVA SCOTIA CAPTAINS COMMAND VESSELS MANNED BY PROVINCIAL CREWS—SOME MORE ADDITIONS TO THE LISTS PREVIOUSLY PRINTED IN THE POST—A NOVEL SCHEME FOR EVADING THE LAW.

GLOUCESTER, April 30, 1888.

The interest in the Post's articles on alien fishermen continues unabated. The resident fishermen rejoice at the exposure of the owners, who, in their turn, claim that they are being persecuted. Facts, however, are stubborn things. Of the names of non-resident masters already published not one can be found upon the voting list used at the last election. In addition to the names of those already published, the following masters are residents of Nova Scotia, and are not upon the voting list here:

Isaac Goodwin, schooner Lizzie, owned by Daniel Allen & Son; has a provincial crew.

Benjamin Goodwin, schooner William H. Jordan, owned by James L. Anderson; provincial crew.

Michael Swim, schooner Carleton, owned by John F. Wonson & Co.; crew principally provincial.

Charles Rudolph, schooner Daniel Marcy, of Beverly; crew brought from the provinces.

Stillman Goodwin, schooner S. P. Putnam, of Beverly; brought his crew from the provinces.

Thomas Cunningham, schooner Everett Pierce, owned by John F. Wonson & Co.

All of those mentioned above came from the provinces this spring. Isaac Gayton, who is master and part owner of schooner Carrie and Andie, resides here. He went to Nova Scotia last winter and returned this spring with his crew, who are, with a few exceptions, stated to be on wages. The crews of schooners Wildfire, carrying about twenty men, and H. A. Duncan, carrying about fourteen men, are, with the exception of the master of the Duncan, men who arrived from Nova Scotia this spring. These two vessels are owned by George Steele.

That the influx of Canadian fishermen has worked injury to local fishermen is shown by the following statement of an ex-fisherman:

"I went fishing for the ten years preceding 1881. In those ten years my greatest year's work was $840, and my lowest $450; now an average year's work will not exceed $300."

It is said that a method of evading the law requiring masters to be citizens is for a member of the crew who is a citizen to take out the vessel's papers, the actual captain taking command when the vessel sails. The vessel-owners are uneasy at the exposure of their methods, which will affect the securing of provincial seamen for the large mackerel fleet that will fit out in May. Interesting local developments are expected soon.

Extracts from testimony taken by subcommittee (Senators EDMUNDS, FRYE, and SAULSBURY) of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, under a resolution of the Senate of inquiry into American Fisheries Interests, page 81, testimony of William F. Jones:

Q. Now state anything else that you want to.

A. I don't know that there is anything else that I have in mind to say, unless it is on the question of the nationality of the fishermen.

Q. Vessel-owners and officers, of course, are all Americans?

A. A good many of the captains are Americans, as a matter of form, but they reside in Nova Scotia.

Q. But they are American citizens?

A. They are American citizens; they have been naturalized as a matter of form, but a great many of them go home when the fishing season is over and live in Nova Scotia. I suppose 75 per cent. of the crews of American vessels are not natives of the United States. The two counties of Inverness and Cape Breton, in the island of Cape Breton, and Shelburne and Yarmouth, in Nova Scotia, furnish about five thousand men to our fleet. As to what other localities furnish I do not know. The cry was made last year that the fisheries were a training-school for the Navy, but that was so absurd that I thought it worth while to mention it.

Page 93, testimony of Edwin R. De Long:

Q. State anything else that you desire.

A. In my dealings with the provinces I have been made acquainted with the nationality of our crews to some extent. We have a great many orders sent us from the provinces. These American vessels leave America with a sufficient number of men to go the provinces, and there they ship new men, and then after the catch they land that part of the crew before returning home. Those men that are landed down in the provinces send orders here on the American fishing-houses for their shares of the proceeds of the catch, as they fish on shares largely. So I know that a large number of men in our vessels, both masters and sailors, are simply provincial people.

Q. How can the masters be so?

A. They take out papers to become American citizens, but whether they ever complete their citizenship I do not know. Some claim to be natives of the United States when they are not. I have known a great many masters of vessels to make that claim when I knew that they came from the provinces.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally, when

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate requested the return of the bill (S. 2058) to increase the pension of John Taylor.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5932) providing for the holding of the terms of the United States courts in the district of Minnesota;

A bill (H. R. 5903) for the relief of Lewis Davis, a soldier of the war of 1812;

A bill (H. R. 6440) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near the city of Omaha, Nebr.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 152) granting a pension to Mrs. Therese Guelich;
A bill (H. R. 354) granting a pension to Samuel McClure;
A bill (H. R. 432) granting a pension to Columbus Bosteder;
A bill (H. R. 600) increasing the pension of Mary Minor Hoxey;
A bill (H. R. 780) granting a pension to James H. Darling;
A bill (H. R. 809) granting a pension to Ephraim Reynolds;
A bill (H. R. 1074) granting a pension to Linnæus W. Risley;
A bill (H. R. 2156) granting a pension to Warren Ohaver;
A bill (H. R. 2174) granting a pension to Lewis Fichthorn;
A bill (H. R. 2215) granting a pension to Charles Glamann;
A bill (H. R. 2413) granting a pension to Mrs. Mercy Knight;
A bill (H. R. 2535) granting a pension to Ellen St. Cyr;
A bill (H. R. 3016) granting a pension to Mary F. Harkins;
A bill (H. R. 3690) granting a pension to Penelope Morton, widow of Lieutenant Morton;
A bill (H. R. 3706) granting a pension to Henry C. Richardson;
A bill (H. R. 3712) increasing the pension of Milton Judd;
A bill (H. R. 3745) granting a pension to Mary O'Neill;
A bill (H. R. 4103) granting a pension to Edna M. Hildreth;
A bill (H. R. 4864) to place the name of Jacob Behr on the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 4891) granting a pension to Alpheus Dyer;
A bill (H. R. 5177) granting a pension to Pleman Cook;
A bill (H. R. 5378) for the relief of Tillman Faux;
A bill (H. R. 5429) to place the name of Smith V. Campbell on the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 5756) granting a pension to David Gibbons;
A bill (H. R. 5812) granting a pension to Catharine Tierney;
A bill (H. R. 6245) for the relief of William Burk;
A bill (H. R. 6531) to pension Leah Roark;
A bill (H. R. 6545) to increase the pension of Henry T. Bridges;
A bill (H. R. 6552) to increase the pension of James R. Porter;
A bill (H. R. 6574) for the relief of William Compton;
A bill (H. R. 6577) granting a pension to Abigail Sullivan;
A bill (H. R. 6583) granting a pension to Sally B. Wilson;
A bill (H. R. 6770) granting a pension to Miss Carrie A. Luey;
A bill (H. R. 6840) for the relief of Hiram M. Goss;
A bill (H. R. 6973) for the relief of Enoch Weathers;
A bill (H. R. 6990) to place the name of Rebecca E. Shoemaker on the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 7007) granting a pension to Edmund Ryan;
A bill (H. R. 7115) granting a pension to William Scott;

A bill (H. R. 7466) granting a pension to Hannah H. Grant;
A bill (H. R. 7471) granting a pension to Moses L. Chase;
A bill (H. R. 7574) granting a pension to Frank Lewis;
A bill (H. R. 7642) granting a pension to Abbie R. Brown;
A bill (H. R. 7688) granting a pension to John Glenning;
A bill (H. R. 7721) granting a pension to Martha Linton;
A bill (H. R. 7829) granting a pension to Thomas McGuire;
A bill (H. R. 7857) to increase the pension of Henry L. Potter;
A bill (H. R. 7944) granting a pension to Ann V. Ferguson;
A bill (H. R. 7974) granting a pension to Hannah Rankins;
A bill (H. R. 8159) granting a pension to Jane Brown Dunn;
A bill (H. R. 8174) granting a pension to Ellen Sexton;
A bill (H. R. 8217) granting a pension to Raphael Fowler;
A bill (H. R. 8260) granting a pension to Lydia A. Hicks;
A bill (H. R. 8281) for the relief of Lieut. James G. W. Hardy;
A bill (H. R. 8400) for the relief of Lydia Burridge;
A bill (H. R. 8496) to increase the pension of Albert E. Magoffin;
A bill (H. R. 8629) granting a pension to Mrs. Abba E. Jackson;
A bill (H. R. 8722) granting a pension to Jessie M. Barthauer;
A bill (H. R. 8771) to place the name of Mrs. Flora C. Andrews on the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 8798) granting a pension to Nettie Ellicott;
A bill (H. R. 8884) granting a pension to Emily McClure;
A bill (H. R. 9170) granting a pension to James W. Poag; and
A bill (H. R. 9682) increasing the pension to Jesse Dickey.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 332) granting a pension to Harrison Wagner;
A bill (S. 849) granting a pension to Morgan Gordon;
A bill (S. 876) granting a pension to Catharine Simmonds;
A bill (S. 885) to increase the pension of Adrian C. Dodge;
A bill (S. 889) granting a pension to Mary O. Hall;
A bill (S. 1002) granting a pension to Thomas Todd;
A bill (S. 1307) to increase the pension of Washington T. Otey;
A bill (S. 1427) granting an increase of pension to Elnathan Meade;
A bill (S. 1719) granting a pension to Levi B. Smith;
A bill (S. 1750) granting a pension to George W. Wilburn;
A bill (S. 2101) granting a pension to Daniel K. Smith;
A bill (S. 2162) for the relief of Mary M. Strong;
A bill (S. 2275) granting a pension to Mary Calvert Truxtun;
A bill (S. 2344) granting a pension to Minnie A. Bailey;
A bill (S. 2385) granting a pension to Caroline R. Haseltine;
A bill (S. 2483) granting a pension to Catherine Tate;
A bill (S. 2549) for the relief of Mary Isabella R. Clements;
A bill (S. 2593) granting a pension to Sarah E. McNamara;
A bill (S. 2639) granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa Ward;
A bill (S. 2665) granting a pension to Charles J. Esty;
A bill (S. 2666) granting a pension to Lemuel S. Skinner;
A bill (S. 2675) granting an increase of pension to Lieut. James R. Darham;
A bill (S. 2677) granting a pension to Jane Reilly;
A bill (S. 2683) granting a pension to Andrew J. Foust;
A bill (S. 2711) restoring Phebe McLaughlin to the pension-roll;
A bill (S. 2724) for the relief of H. H. Helper;
A bill (S. 2726) granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Heintzelman;
A bill (S. 2733) granting an increase of pension to Shadrach Brown;
A bill (S. 2746) granting a pension to Ezra E. Annis;
A bill (S. 2750) to increase the pension of Samuel A. Tate;
A bill (S. 2759) granting a pension to James M. Frost;
A bill (S. 2782) granting a pension to Charity J. Towns and minor children;
A bill (S. 2825) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin T. Baker;
A bill (S. 2833) granting a pension to Caspar Blanke, of Portland, Oregon;
A bill (S. 2838) granting a pension to Betsey A. Mower;
A bill (S. 2842) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Welsh;
A bill (S. 2861) granting a pension to David A. Hall;
A bill (S. 2862) granting a pension to William M. Dean;
A bill (S. 2874) granting a pension to George W. Padgett;
A bill (S. 2879) increasing the pension of Sophia Schimmelfennig, widow of Alexander Schimmelfennig, late brigadier-general and major-general by brevet;
A bill (S. 2880) granting an increase of pension to Adam Dennis;
A bill (S. 2890) granting a pension to Fannie A. Kimball;
A bill (S. 2898) granting a pension to Sarah E. Boulter;
A bill (S. 2899) granting a pension to Harriet Welch;
A bill (S. 2910) to increase the pension now paid to Elizabeth B. Smith, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Kilby Smith, United States Volunteers;
A bill (S. 2945) granting a pension to James McDonald;
A bill (S. 2945) granting a pension to J. S. May;
A bill (S. 2947) granting an increase of pension to William C. Shimoneck;
A bill (S. 2995) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Stewart;
A bill (S. 2979) granting a pension to Laura J. Ives;
A bill (S. 3021) granting a pension to Carrie V. Miller;
A bill (S. 3076) granting a pension to Mary M. Shattuck;
A bill (S. 905) to incorporate the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company;
A bill (S. 1497) to provide for two additional associate justices of the supreme court of Dakota, and for other purposes;
A bill (S. 2252) to incorporate the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railway Company;
A bill (S. 2305) to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments;
A bill (S. 2662) for the erection of a public building at Salt Lake City, Utah;
A bill (S. 2727) authorizing the purchase of a site for a building for the accommodation of the Supreme Court of the United States;
A bill (S. 2925) in relation to cadets at the Naval Academy; and
A bill (S. 2930) to authorize the Paris, Choctaw and Little Rock Railway Company to construct a bridge across Red River at or near Hook's Ferry, Red River County, Texas.

TARIFF.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] who has just taken his seat has gotten himself, during the last few weeks, into that condition of mind which seems to render it exceedingly difficult for him to state a proposition clearly, not to say fairly.

He has never known the time, place, or occasion when the gentleman from Ohio would hesitate a moment to declare his conviction in regard to reciprocity or any other question which affects the well-being of his country. So his statement in that behalf is entirely gratuitous.

He had no reason to believe that I would hesitate to plainly express my views touching the wisdom of a full, complete, and unrestricted reciprocity of trade between this country and our kinsmen on the north. There is not a line or syllable I have written or uttered in this place or elsewhere which properly authorizes the statement he has been pleased to make.

I have before me a bill which I introduced, and which under the rules of this House was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, proposing to do that which the statesmen of this nation have advocated from the foundation of the Government, and which looks to the fullest enlargement of the commercial opportunities of the people of this country so far as Canada is concerned.

But I do not propose to go into the discussion of the question involved in the bill, and only because I have not the time to do so. The measure is one to which I have given not merely a passing consideration; on the contrary, I have given to it patient study and careful investigation, and in that I have but followed in the footsteps of those we have been accustomed to account the wise men of this country. In the Thirtieth Congress, first session, a bill in the words following passed this House without a division:

Be it enacted, etc. SECTION 1. That when the President of the United States shall issue his proclamation that the articles hereinafter enumerated, being of the growth or production of the United States, are admitted into the province of Canada by law free of duty, that on and after that day the like articles, being the growth or production of the said province of Canada, shall be admitted into the United States free of duty when imported direct from said province, so long as the said enumerated articles are admitted into said province of Canada from the United States free of duty, unless otherwise directed by Congress, to wit: Grain and breadstuffs of all kinds, vegetables, fruits, animals, hides, wool, tallow, horns, salted and fresh meats, ores of all kinds of metals, timber, staves, wood and lumber of all kinds, seeds, pot and pearl ashes, butter and cheese.

Passed the House of Representatives July 12, 1848.

This bill was passed by a House made up as follows: Whigs, 117; Democrats, 110; Native American, 1.

Robert C. Winthrop was Speaker. John Quincy Adams was the master spirit in that House. Abraham Lincoln was a member. Mr. Grinnell, of Massachusetts, was the author of the bill. Robert C. Schenck, Caleb B. Smith, Joshua R. Giddings, Richard W. Thompson, and the leading protectionists of that day were members of that Congress. All New England and the border States on the North were present. And so obvious and vast were the blessings that would follow in the wake of this commercial alliance no voice was raised against it.

In my judgment, not only would the prosperity of all our people be enhanced by the enlarged opportunities and increased facilities which closer relations between ourselves and our neighbors across the northern border would bring, but beyond that I deemed and now deem the necessities of the conditions and civilization of the age to demand in as large a degree as is possible the unification of the Anglo-Saxon race upon this continent, representing as we do the most advanced and enlightened civilization of the earth, and it was in recognition of this demand, as well as from the more sordid level of business or financial advantage, that I introduced at the beginning of the session the bill which I hold in my hand, and which I shall insert at length in my printed remarks.

But first let me call attention to the fact that in the same line of broad and comprehensive statesmanship President Grant and Secretary Hamilton Fish negotiated a treaty which embodied in the main, or in large part, the substance of the bill I introduced.

That bill reached the Senate very late in the session, and was not considered. That its consideration was not postponed in the interest of the people—I mean the whole people—is certain. What influence selfish and sordid interest had in permitting it to slumber I do not know. For myself I can say I would rather have had the honor of negotiating and carrying that treaty into successful operation than to have been the victor at Appomattox. So, gentlemen, I am not ashamed of the company I am in, nor do I hesitate to advocate a measure which promises such beneficent results in its practical operation. [Applause.] The measure in no wise makes war upon the protective system.

A tariff deals, as I have before asserted, with conditions, and not merely with national boundary lines. If it dealt with boundary lines, and was useful in the abstract and without reference to competitive conditions, every man who is possessed of ordinary reasoning faculties could see that our industrial salvation and financial prosperity would be best subserved by proceeding at once to carve our country up into at least six divisions (the greater number the better), and each division get rich by taxing themselves and their neighbors beyond the line whenever they attempted to cross it to get to market. [Laughter and applause.]

The office of the protective system, when philosophically and honestly applied, is to guard against the influences of a certain kind and character of competition which unjustly places the manufacturers and workmen of the United States at disadvantage, not only in the markets of the world outside, but even in our home market. This hurtful influence at present results from the difference in the wages paid workmen here and in Europe. I endeavored to point this out in my remarks addressed to this House on the 15th of May. I regret that the few moments allowed me now will not permit me again to review the subject as pertaining to the amendment now under consideration.

Touching the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], which relates to enlarged trade relations with Canada, and which he asserts I have hesitated to advocate here and now when the opportunity is presented, I submit that I have at all times, and do here and now, declare my devotion to full, complete, and unrestricted reciprocal trade and commerce between the United States and Canada, subject to such restrictions and regulations as will protect us from unfair competition with other foreign countries. And he [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is not justified in calling in question my advocacy of that measure because I refuse to vote for an amendment to the pending bill which does not accomplish the result sought, and was not conceived for that purpose. And that it does not even approximate to the proper accomplishment of what is suggested, but not formally proposed by it, becomes apparent on a moment's careful consideration of the amendment in connection with the subject-matter of which it treats. I pointed out its defects this morning, both as it would affect our internal-revenue system and otherwise.

It is ill-considered and out of place and seemingly intended to direct this discussion away from its proper line and apart from its legitimate field. [Applause.]

And if I desired to be as free in my criticism as the gentleman has been I might with more propriety charge that it is an attempt to rescue the administration of the Government from the embarrassing situation into which it has fallen, in that it has apparently been willing to surrender or barter away the rights of American citizens, American fishermen upon the high seas, and pay a bonus for the enjoyment of a right they have freely enjoyed for generations. [Applause.]

In saying this I might be unjust to the Administration, and I am far from desiring to do such an injustice, for I earnestly sympathize with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] in his deprecation of any unnecessary word or act that could provoke a conflict of arms between ourselves and the Canadians. It would be akin to barbarism to consider favorably the contingency of war with the people of the Dominion over the border. The words of John Quincy Adams, uttered upon this floor during his last term of service here, reflected the enlightened civilization of the age, and are even more applicable to the conditions of to-day. Standing in his place and replying to some gentleman who was shouting for war, he said:

> I neither desire the friendship nor the sympathy of that man who can regard with satisfaction the possibility of war between ourselves and our kinsmen of Canada or Great Britain.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask five minutes more.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move the gentleman have five minutes more.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. These words of the venerable statesman of Massachusetts neither involved nor suggested a surrender of any right of an American citizen, for it is known that our fathers, as we do, knew that the surest way to peace is in the just and honorable maintenance of every right and privilege which belongs to the citizen. And I am in full accord with the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COGSWELL] in his patriotic and earnest protestations against any course on the part of this nation which would tolerate brutal and inhuman treatment of New England fishermen by the Canadian authorities. No right must be surrendered and no wrong tolerated without proper redress, is the position, and properly so, of the gentleman from Massachusetts. But I have no fear that our rights will not be vindicated and maintained without resort to methods which, although sometimes inevitable, savor none the less of a ruder civilization and a condition of barbarism. And I do not err in asserting that not infrequently jingoism and partisan or personal ambition have more to do with kindling the war spirit than any just sense of wrong suffered or right withheld.

In saying this, I in nothing lose sight of the fact that national honor is inseparable from the maintenance of national right, and that firmness, with dignity and justice, is the surest road to that security which results from peace preserved with honor. Individuals are for a day or a year. Nations endure, or ought to, for centuries. I deprecate any condition and every influence that in anywise tends to separate us from the other branch of the English-speaking family on this continent. Our social relations should be friendly, our commercial relations unrestrained and intimate, for, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that under a fiat above that of congresses or kings our destiny upon these shores is bound to be one. It is inevitable. The civilization which the Anglo-Saxon (and I use the words Anglo-Saxon in their broadest significance) represents on this continent is bound to dominate through all its border or be dominated by worse influences; and I submit that we should have little sympathy with those who can contemplate with serenity and favor a condition of things which would lead us into a conflict of arms with those who by our side are bound by an inexorable decree of Providence to work out with us the great problem of progressive civilization, which shall in its unfolding bless the nations with freedom and equality.

My object in calling attention to this bill in the early part of this session was that it might be considered fairly as an economic measure, not from a partisan or political standpoint, and I discussed it somewhat throughout the country, because I thought it a question that rose far above the low level of partisan politics. Here is the bill.

> A bill to extend the trade and commerce of the United States and to provide for full reciprocity between the United States and the Dominion of Canada.
>
> Whereas certain controversies have arisen and are still pending between the Government of the United States and the Government of the Dominion of Canada, respecting commercial intercourse; and
>
> Whereas by reason of the contiguity of the two countries and the similarity of the interests and occupations of the people thereof, it is desired by the United States to remove all existing controversies and all causes of controversy in the future, and to promote and encourage business and commercial intercourse between the people of both countries, and to promote harmony between the two Governments, and to enable the citizens of each to trade with the citizens of the other without unnecessary restrictions: Therefore,
>
> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever and as soon as the Government of the Dominion of Canada shall permit all articles of trade and commerce of whatever name or nature, whether the product of the soil or of the waters of the United States, all manufactured articles, live stock of all kinds, and its products, and all minerals the produce of the mines of the United States, to enter the ports of the Dominion of Canada free of duty, then all articles manufactured in Canada, and all the products of the soil and waters, and all minerals the produce of the mines of Canada, and all other articles of every name and description produced in said Dominion of Canada, shall be permitted to enter the ports of the United States free of duty: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any product or article upon which an internal-revenue tax is imposed by the laws of the United States.
>
> SEC. 2. That when it shall be certified to the President of the United States by the Government of the said Dominion of Canada, that by the authority of its Parliament it has authorized the admission into the ports of said Dominion of all articles of trade and commerce the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, free of duty, the President shall make proclamation thereof, and shall likewise proclaim that all articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the said Dominion of Canada shall be admitted into all the ports of the United States free of duty, and such articles shall be so admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty so long as the said Dominion of Canada shall admit the products of the United States, as herein provided, into the ports of the Dominion free of duty.
>
> SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, with the approval of the President of the United States, and in conjunction with the proper officials of the Government of the Dominion of Canada, to make rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act, and to protect the said respective Governments against the importation of foreign goods or articles through either into the other without payment of duty; and the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall furnish to the customs officers of the United States all such rules and regulations for the purpose of guiding them in the discharge of their duties in the premises.
>
> SEC. 4. That before making the proclamations or either of them authorized by this act the President shall be satisfied that all citizens and subjects of the United States may have and enjoy the right of commercial intercourse in all the ports, harbors, and places in Canada with the citizens and subjects of the Dominion, in as full and ample a manner in all respects as may be had or enjoyed by the latter in the ports, harbors, and places of the United States with the citizens and subjects thereof.

In its provisions I submit that it rises clear above that low level, and does not sound merely in that advantage which is to be measured in shekels. And my object in introducing it early in the session was that it might receive at the hands of this House that consideration to which its importance as a great economic and political measure entitled it to receive.

It will be observed at a glance that it opens up to us the commerce of a continent, and, as I have before stated, places at our feet enough in kind and quality of rare and varied resources to enrich a thousand millions of people. It would make our protective system continental in scope and operation, and would thus accomplish a vastly greater good than the bill which received the support of the honorable gentlemen whose names I have before mentioned, to wit, John Quincy Adams, Robert C. Winthrop, Abraham Lincoln, Robert C. Schenck, Caleb B.

Smith, Richard W. Thompson, and others whose names were glorious in the earth, and whose achievements in behalf of the Republic were the boast of that and are the pride of this generation.

I will be glad when this measure shall come before the House for discussion and careful consideration. But, Mr. Chairman, I bide my time. I am not concerned as to the future, and the effect that the advocacy of this measure will have upon me or my political fortunes.

I know, sir, that it is of little consequence whether, as an individual, I am voted up or voted down; but it is of great consequence whether an economic and political measure which enlarges the opportunity of all our people, gives to our protective system a broader field, and the civilization of our country permanent control upon this continent, shall be adopted.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that if the protective policy which we advocate is good for half the continent it is good for the whole continent. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I did not expect when I took the floor to have occupied the few minutes allowed me, and I regret that my remarks have been somewhat disjointed. Still, since my consistency or candor has been called in question, in that I refuse to vote for the amendment submitted, permit me to say there never will be a time, there will be no place, nor any circumstances, when, where, or in the presence of which I will be deterred or prevented, whatever the result to me politically, from advocating and demanding what I believe to be just to my country and in the interest of its people.

I will not pay the doubtful compliment to my countrymen of saying that in every field of industrial endeavor in which they are engaged they are not more than the peers of any other people upon earth where we hold an equal opportunity with them. [Applause.] Where the competition is, as our own, leavened with humanity, and that spirit of justice which fairly apportions to the workman his just share in the product of his labor, our workmen enter the lists without fear and asking no favor. [Applause.]

My friend says, why not vote upon a separate item, that is for free lumber and free fish? Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of international arrangement and adjustment, and invokes an economic policy or system as a whole. I have not sought in the bill I introduced to take up the matter piecemeal. I have not sought to take it up by reference to single items or by sections, but to deal with the great question presented as an entirety, unifying, if you please, the Anglo-Saxon race on this continent and enlarging the opportunities of our people and removing all cause of attrition between us. I insist there are no reasons which can be deduced from any sound political or economic philosophy why the swelling tide of our commerce should stop at the fortieth parallel of north latitude any more than it should stop at the one hundredth meridian of west longitude, unless the conditions across that fortieth parallel are such as to make the competition we encounter unfair to our people and wanting in humanity.

I must stop here long enough to illustrate the idea presented. What is it in the Old World against the influence of which we interpose the protection of our tariff shield? We say to foreign producers that we fear nothing in the field of competition if you temper the character of your competition with fairness and humanity; but you refuse to do it.

In this country we proceed on the assumption that capital is entitled to have its fair share of the profits, but we say and will maintain that labor shall have its fair share as well. [Applause on the Republican side.]

On the other side of the ocean they say, in practice, in this field of competition capital must have its profit whatever the result to labor, and in order to meet the competition of American producers and undersell them in the markets you consent to rob labor of its fair share and the laborer of his hire. I repeat, we say to Europe and the world, leaven your competition with the humanity that enables the workman to clothe, to feed, and to educate the children at his fireside; leaven it with the spirit of fairness and Christianity, and against you we ask no odds. We can not make you humane or just to your workmen, or compel you to give them what they are entitled to when their effort, united with capital, produces a certain result; but we can, by a tariff, shut out the influence of your inhumanity so it will not reach the homes and hearthstones of our American laborers. [Applause on the Republican side.] And this we will do if our Democratic friends do not prevent it.

But, Mr. Chairman, where these hard conditions do not exist, where the competition is free from this inhumanity and is fair and equal, I still say that a protective tariff has no proper mission. There is no philosophy in the maintenance of the system where these conditions do not exist, but wherever they do exist, wherever the line that marks the boundary of these hurtful influences, then, in the interest of American labor, in the interest of our common humanity, we ask you to erect the tariff wall. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly, Brother WILSON; any number of questions.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Do these conditions to which you have referred exist as between Canada and the United States?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have already stated that I do not regard those conditions as existing in Canada; and therefore I am ready, as we hold the coign of vantage against Canada, to throw down the barriers that separate us and extend the tariff wall around that country, making us one great country for commercial purposes, and ultimately to be, under God's providence, one great nation, dominating the civilization of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That is, you would do all the good you can in the gross, but not as to the items.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is in nowise a fair or true statement of my position. Does it follow that because I desire, as a business venture, to buy a drug store, that I should as evidence of my desire be willing to purchase a mustard plaster?

This is a subject of arrangement between two nations of the world, and there is no other way of getting at the matter except as I have suggested—that is, an arrangement that embraces the whole field and relation of commercial exchanges and the course of trade.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in answer to what has fallen from the lips of my friend from Ohio, while I express my regret that I should have said anything to irritate him, yet I feel that I ought to be grateful that it has caused so sound and eloquent a speech. I did not mean to put a coal of fire upon his back, but I am glad I did so when it produced such good results; and if there has been anything either in my remarks or in my manner that tended to irritate my friend from Ohio he ought to have known that nothing was further from my desire or intention than to wound or offend him.

All I meant to say was that his advocacy of reciprocity with Canada had always displayed itself where it could do no good, and had failed here to-day where it might do some good. Now, I remit to the gentleman from New York [Mr. NUTTING] the discussion with my friend from Ohio as to whether this is absolutely free trade or not, and when my friend from New York demonstrates that the Democratic party is an absolutely wicked party, given over to a strong delusion to believe a lie, because it is willing to have free lumber, I hope he will explain to his constituents how my good friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] and my friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] can be good Republicans in view of the bills which they have introduced into this House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

By unanimous consent, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE'S time was extended for five minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am glad that the gentleman from Ohio has explained to us why he thinks protection necessary and why Canada does not come within his system; for, first, the Canadians are an English-speaking people nearer probably to an equality with the American people than any other in the world; and secondly, they have a co-terminus line of frontier with this country across which no transportation has to be paid. They have not the burden of freight, which is equal to about 10 or 12 per cent. of protection to all American products as against foreign products from countries beyond the seas. Therefore, if our relations with Canada are favorable to free trade, why are not the conditions favorable to free trade with every other country? That is the conundrum which the gentleman's argument will submit to the American people and upon which, having the benefit of his great and deservedly distinguished name, they will be set thinking.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I very heartily concur in the sentiment expressed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] when he declares not only his hope but his belief that the Anglo-Saxon race, the people of this Republic, will dominate this continent. And I am glad, sir, to note a further fact in connection with my friend; that is that he seems to be doctrinally sound, but simply drawn to one side and made to deflect from the line of his own doctrine by reason of extraneous influences; but my judgment, Mr. Chairman, in view of the history and growth of this principle which they call "protection," and which they dub their great "American system," is that the time will never come when, struggle as he may, those extraneous influences will not be sufficient to dominate him and withhold him from the practical application of his own doctrine.

What is the history of this question in this country? Henry Clay, who has been referred to here this morning by my friend from Massachusetts in most eloquent terms, never, in the greatest length to which he went on this question, contended that protection to home industries ought to exist longer than those industries continued in a condition of infancy. Now, sir, I believe firmly, and that belief is so largely and fully developed in me that I am willing to experiment upon it, that our American industries are to-day fully grown to the estate of manhood, fully able to open the gates and throw down the gantlet to the civilized world and offer a general challenge to all competitors. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, just note the growth of this doctrine of protection. We passed some years ago from the Henry Clay doctrine of giving protection to our industries in their infancy into another stage when they pleaded another condition of misfortune, based upon the misfortunes of their country. First, their plea was infancy; then, later, in the midst of the throes of civil war they came to this House and implored protection in consequence of the great burdens that were imposed upon manufactured articles by the internal-revenue laws. And in connection with this point I want to read the language of an eminent tariff Republican of New England, giving a distinct pledge that when the necessity disappeared, then these war duties should disappear also and these taxes and burdens upon the American people should cease.

Speaking for New England and for its industries in this second condition of infancy, as it were, Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, in 1864, when the protectionists were exacting this great consideration from the American people, said here:

This is intended as a war measure, a temporary war measure, and we must give it our support as such.

Again he said that it was—

A war measure imposed by the necessities of the Government, the scarcity of laborers, and the enormous direct taxation.

When the stage of "infancy" was passed and that was no longer their rallying cry we found them making another pledge; and now when both "infancy" and the direct taxes of the war have passed away and the time has come to give relief to the American people from these burdens, we find these gentlemen here running the whole gamut of subterfuges, saying that the time has not yet come, and attempting to fasten upon this country as a permanent institution this system of taxing one man in order to support the business of another.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DOCKERY was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Now that the gentleman has additional time, will he permit a question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman will admit, I take it, that while we have eliminated the difficulty and overcome our disadvantages as to the three factors of capital, plant, and skill, yet where labor enters so largely into the production of an article, we can not successfully compete with rivals who do not pay more than 25 or 50 per cent. as much wages as we pay. How does the gentleman solve that question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I will solve that by telling you, as to the matter now under consideration, that you bring men across the border from Canada into Maine and the other lumber States, and feed them upon the high wages that are paid there—that is, conceding that there is anything in your argument that wages are increased in consequence of the tariff.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But my friend sees that that proposition goes to admitting away his case.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I can not yield further. I have not time to say what I want to say. I would like to answer your questions. If I had unlimited time nothing would give me greater pleasure, because you are struggling in the way. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will award unlimited time to the gentleman from Iowa. He will certainly make a very interesting speech if he keeps on in his present line of remark.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I thank the gentleman very kindly, but I do not ask unlimited time, because I am not loaded in an unlimited way. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, in view of the record which our protection friends have made, what answer can they make to the people in this country who suspect that they have not been dealing with them in good faith? First, the plea was infancy; but at the time that plea was made they conceded that when they had arrived at the estate of manhood they would be able to open the gates and go out and meet all competitors upon any field. Yet now they seek to take refuge behind the other pleas which I have mentioned.

A MEMBER. We have learned something.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Yes, you have learned something, and you need not criticise those who suspect the cause of the great conversion (to which I want to allude if I have time) that has taken place in this country, which is attributed simply to an enlightened statesmanship and greater scope of view. They passed the stage of "infant industries;" they came on to the stage of "war necessities;" they pleaded the misfortunes of the country; they took a new position before the American people, took it in order to "go back" on it directly and to prove as recreant to it as they had proved to the pledges which they gave the country when in consideration of "infant industries" the first protective duties were imposed.

Under these circumstances I ask my friends on this side, Republicans with whom I have trained all my life, in the face of the distinct pledges that have marked the history of this business from its beginning—I ask, how do they account for the wonderful strides they have made with reference to this question? I am a Republican, and always have been. I learned all my political knowledge, though it may be little, in the Republican household; and while there are those who may criticise me with reference to my party fealty, it does not alter the fact that I am familiar with the history of the Republican party of this country. I know its record not only in my State but in this Union with reference to this great economic question, and I want to produce, if I am allowed to do so, some authority with reference to this matter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER. If I can be recognized I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa be permitted to proceed five minutes longer. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WARNER. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, I understood him to avow the doctrine of protection of "infant industries" to be correct.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I am a protectionist; and I am willing to extend protection wherever in my judgment it is needed, to the extent of the requirements of this Government for revenue in connection with the taxes it now imposes on whisky and tobacco.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman answer me whether he is in favor of protecting "infant industries" and only "infant industries?"

A MEMBER. And the sugar industry.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. No, I am for free sugar.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman tell me whether he believes that the rice industry, the sugar industry, the iron industry, or any of the industries protected in the Mills bill are "infant industries?"

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I want to say in answer to all such questions that, as for myself, I have made up my mind the tax burden upon the people of the country, which is $100,000,000 in excess of what it ought to be, should be reduced to that extent. As to matters of detail, I challenge this side of the House, in spite of all its boasted glee in tackling this great question, to bring in a bill on which you can align your own forces. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I have agreed in my own mind that a reduction should be made. How it shall be done is a matter of detail; and while the bill under consideration does not in many particulars satisfy me, I undertake to say that it is a step in the right direction and that it is more reductive; there is a less per cent. of protection in it than there would be in any bill now pending in this House if the Republican side dominated the House. This is, as already suggested, a question of details; and you have not during the long months that this question has been here exhibited any disposition to get yourselves together upon the matter of details and point out the items upon which you will agree to a reduction; but you stand here in the way, finding fault with the men who are making honest effort in the direction of reduction of taxation.

Mr. WARNER. I understood the gentleman to say he is in favor of the Mills bill because there is less of protection in it than in bills produced by this side of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I am in favor of the Mills bill, so far as I am in favor of it at all, because it is a step in the direction of obedience to the commands of all parties in this country, including that party with which I have acted all my life.

A MEMBER. Which is that?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. The Republican party.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman answer whether he is in favor of the Mills bill because there is less protection in it than in any bill which could be framed by this side of the House?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I undertake to say that these men who are standing here opposing all kinds of reduction of impost duties are outside the pale of Republicanism as it has been known in the State where I have lived for thirty years.

Mr. WARNER. Will you answer my question? Have you not stated that you are in favor of this bill because there is less of protection in it than in any bill emanating from this side of the House?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I have said—and I do not want to be misunderstood or misquoted—that in my judgment there is no bill, taking it all in all, presented to this House for the reduction of taxation that is as satisfactory in all particulars as the one under consideration to-day. By that declaration I am willing to stand; and you may make the most of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER. I hope unanimous consent will be given for an extension of the gentleman's time. I unwittingly occupied a considerable part of his time with interruptions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa may continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, on what meat do these our modern self-constituted Republican leaders feed, that they have grown so great and know so much more than the rank and file and body of the party as it has declared time and again the doctrine of the party in State and national conventions?

A MEMBER. How about Oregon?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Oregon! I presume that the lumber trusts have got together and declared that they must stamp out this principle of reduction of taxation.

Mr. HERMANN. Let me say that the greater portion of the 7,000 majority in Oregon is right along the line of the agricultural counties, the wheat-growing, wool-growing, and lumber counties. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I do not doubt the results which can be produced by these combinations where their greed prompts them to contend for that which will do them the most good.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It must be a pretty lively "trust" that could create a majority of 7,000.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. It is a lively trust; and therein is the danger of the principle of protection advocated here, unless it is put under the most stringent control. In politics the principle of protection is what poison is in medicine; it must be handled in the same guarded manner. It is the fell influence of this institution, growing and widening like a Upas tree, that accounts for the great strides Republican leaders in certain quarters have taken in reference to this question. They have found this principle not only a politic thing in certain quarters, but they have found that it is or may be an exceedingly lucrative thing.

Mr. HERMANN. The gentleman will allow me to say that the largest product of the people of Oregon is wheat; the next largest product is wool; and the third largest, lumber; and within the confines of that State there is not a single "trust," lumber, wool, or otherwise.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. You have made your speech, now let me make mine. The question which the gentleman said he would put to me is less of a question than it is a speech, but I believe I can supply a sufficient answer to it by asking the gentleman from Oregon whether he was not crushed out of a lumber trust in the State of Oregon. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HERMANN. I most emphatically deny that, or anything like it, under any circumstances. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. You make a special denial. You do not deny there is a lumber trust in that State, and you will not deny it. And you will not deny that you attempted to gain admittance into that lumber trust in your State but you could not do it. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HERMANN. I do deny that most emphatically, and I deny there is any such trust in the State of Oregon.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Oh, yes; it has been denied there is any lumber trust in the State of Iowa, where I have knowledge of its existence; where I know it as a fact that there is a lumber trust in the State of Iowa; where I know it as an open and a notorious fact, as fully as I can possibly know of any other business arrangements. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REED. Stick to your Oregon text. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. That is not all. But I do not rely on vague statements as to the existence of a lumber trust in the State of Iowa, but I refer to the columns of the State Register, which is the head and front of protection in that country. That paper in denunciation of a member of the Legislature of its own party said that he should be gotten rid of for the reason he was a member of the Green Bay lumber trust. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to proceed to the conclusion of his remarks.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will not object to the extension of the gentleman's time if he is allowed to proceed with his remarks, and not subjected to a continued cross-examination by gentlemen on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I will not indulge, gentlemen, any further in cross-examination, but will proceed with the remarks which I was submitting.

Mr. GEAR. I hope my colleague will permit me to ask him a question.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Certainly I will yield to Governor GEAR.

Mr. GEAR. My colleague has stated that there is a lumber trust existing in the State of Iowa. Let him state who compose that trust, if he knows.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Oh, yes, gentlemen, when I say there is a lumber trust in the State of Iowa——

Mr. GEAR. Answer that statement of mine. You say there is a lumber trust in the State of Iowa. Now who are the men that control that trust?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. It will not do for gentlemen simply to ask questions with a sneer, a leer, a jeer, into which gentlemen unwittingly drift in their questions, and which compose at least three-fourths of their arguments. [Laughter and applause.] I have stated that there was a lumber trust in Iowa and you ask me to prove it. Where there is no proof of a trust you all deny its existence until it becomes as patent and as open to everybody as the existence of the Standard Oil Trust. You denied the existence of the Standard Oil Trust, and you asked who composed it, and you would not acknowledge that any such trust as the Standard Oil Trust existed until its existence was known to everybody. Until the existence of the Standard Oil Trust became palpable to all you continued to deny in the face of the country that there was any such trust, just as you deny the existence of any lumber trust in the State of Iowa.

I have said that there is such a lumber trust in the State of Iowa, and if you want to learn all the facts, why do you not go before your Congressional committee and make an investigation? The Committee on Manufactures has been investigating during this session into these very matters; why do you not go before that committee and find out whether there is a lumber trust in Iowa or not?

Mr. REED. Answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. You go before the committees of the House; go before the Committee on Manufactures, investigating this matter, and they come upon the floor and report to you after they have investigated the matter whether there is or not a lumber trust. That committee has at its back all the machinery of the House. They can send for witnesses. They can examine them as to the facts within their knowledge, but frequently fail under these circumstances to elicit any reliable information. Yet when I say upon the floor of this House that there is a lumber trust in the State of Iowa you sneer and say because I do not come here with proof full and complete and palpable in every particular, therefore there is no such trust.

Mr. REED. Now give us the names.

Mr. GEAR. I ask my colleague who compose that lumber trust in the State of Iowa?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I do not know. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GEAR rose.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Wait a moment.

Mr. GEAR. Do you know of your own knowledge there is any such trust in the State of Iowa?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I know of my own knowledge there is such a trust in the State of Iowa. I know as well as I possibly can know things notoriously proclaimed in the columns of the daily press and throughout the community and the State where I have lived for thirty years.

Mr. GEAR. Who compose it?

Mr. WEAVER. I will answer it.

Mr. REED. Let your protégé take care of himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. I will tell you who compose it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. It is immaterial who compose it. I say there is such a lumber trust, and that is not the way to prove that it does not exist. You only ask these questions to divert attention. Statutes are not suggested in advance of the presence of the crimes they seek to prohibit, and you know that Iowa's last Legislature enacted a statute prohibiting trusts, and that such statute largely grew out of the agitation of the lumber trusts of the State.

The State Register said a member of the Legislature from Polk County, Hon. James G. Berryhill, was one of the leading members of the Green Bay lumber trust; and he was a member of the Republican party holding a position in the State Legislature for two successive terms, and held it by the votes of the Republican party of that State.

Mr. GEAR. Is that an answer to my question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Your question is answered now. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

His questions, I submit to all sensible, fair-minded men, as to who are the individual members of this trust, are so absolutely and utterly immaterial, and he knows it, that they are unworthy of an answer; and it is just by that class of immaterial questions and answers——

Mr. McCOMAS. Answers! [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. That you propose to stave off the reduction of the taxes on the people of this country, that they are now paying, of more than one hundred millions of dollars a year.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Would it be fair to ask the gentleman where this trust is, as he does not seem inclined to state who are the parties composing it?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Where the trust is?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. It is coextensive with the trade; and I know personally that there exist good reasons why anybody in my State who enters that business without leave of a given syndicate or secret power abiding somewhere, is absolutely driven out of business or into bankruptcy. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.] Ay! you may answer with your laughter, gentlemen, and you may answer with your sneers, because those are the most potential arguments you have to employ in defense of your views and in opposition to the people on this great question. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will you be kind enough to state, as you are on the subject of trusts, the process by which the lumber trusts accomplish this?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will not be deprived of the time so courteously extended to me by the House by these irrelevant questions. I have already had a considerable extension of the time, and have been indulgent in the matter of answering questions.

Mr. GEAR. You have not answered my question.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. And I do not propose to be side-tracked to answer these irrelevant suggestions further than I have already answered them.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But this is on the main track. I want to keep you on that. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Well, you are from the Maine State [laughter] and you want the Maine business well taken care of. It is the duty on lumber that you are mainly interested in.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But, I repeat, I want to keep you on the main track. You say that you do not propose to be side-tracked by irrelevant questions. Now, these are pertinent questions to keep you on the track.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. That is the State of Maine, and $2 a thousand feet bonus for your people paid by the people of my district, and paid by people generally not in the business, to those Maine men who are in the business, is the main business with you. Now I decline to be interrupted any further. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. But you have had twenty minutes by unanimous consent, and I think the gentleman ought to give us some information upon this subject of which he talks so knowingly.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I want to show, Mr. Chairman, now by the record which I propose to quote that I am strictly in the line of the party in the position I occupy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FELTON, Mr. ADAMS, and others asked unanimous consent that Mr. ANDERSON be permitted to proceed five minutes longer.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I ask to be allowed to continue my remarks a little further. I am nearly through.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We have taken up a good deal of the gentleman's time by interruptions.

Mr. REED. But he has not answered any questions. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have not occupied any time in this discussion——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I hope five minutes additional time will be given to the gentleman in view of the interruptions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that five minutes additional time be granted to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I object until the committee is in order. I object to anything in this disorder and confusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and the business of the committee will be suspended until order is restored on the floor.

Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no objection to extending this courtesy to the gentleman from Iowa if he will occupy a portion of it in the way of answering fair and proper questions.

Mr. MORSE. Oh, he will speak for himself on that subject. Do not be afraid.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I desire to go on for one moment longer. It seems that gentlemen are not only determined that we shall have an embargo on trade in lumber, but even free speech; and if you can not grant me the time without imposing a duty upon it, I tell you frankly, gentlemen, that I do not want it at all. [Laughter and applause.] I will and have answered all questions material and pertinent to the facts I am discussing.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I withdraw any objection I may have made. I think the gentleman is doing a pretty reasonable amount of talking on his own hook.

Mr. LAWLER. I object unless the gentleman can proceed in his own way. It is contrary to parliamentary rules to have the gentleman's time taken up by so many others.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that objection is made.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have not been recognized in this debate, and if I can be recognized I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I insist that we have order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state that no business will be transacted until gentlemen resume their seats.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again submit the request that the gentleman from Iowa be permitted to proceed.

Mr. LAWLER. I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask, then, that the gentleman be permitted to occupy five minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I am very much obliged to the committee, for I did not expect so much indulgence. There is one further point, however, that I wanted to make, and it is in the trend of the argument, if I may call it such, to show what progress, and in connection with showing what progress to show what danger there is in this principle of so-called protection if it is not properly and carefully guarded and restrained.

Why, my predecessor on this floor, whose loyalty to the country and the party has not been questioned by those men who have thought fit to differ with me, when he came fresh from the people, with his homely virtues, such as we have upon the prairies, was occupying the position as to the question of lumber that would to-day put his standing in the party, as far as the would-be leaders of the party are concerned, in jeopardy, and I want to show what his opinion was with reference to this subject in some of the debates that took place on this floor some years ago, and which he, no doubt, entertains to-day, unless, forsooth, he has made as much progress as some of his colleagues on this floor. In the Forty-seventh Congress, on the 14th day of February, 1883, in his place in this Hall, my distinguished predecessor made these remarks, and I wish to repeat that his whole political standing in the party, if some of those self-constituted bosses are allowed to determine the question, would be jeopardized.

Mr. HEPBURN said: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin—

I think he referred to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] who sits near me—as well as the gentleman from Maine, is unnecessarily indignant towards those of us who have said something with reference to the preservation of the forests of this country. No one has proposed to say that the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Wisconsin may not destroy their forests as rapidly as they choose. It is not the question presented in this paragraph. The question is as to whether we will offer them a bonus of ten, fifteen, or twenty dollars an acre for the destruction of their forests. That is what they ask us to do.

He does not put it on the doubtful ground that is suggested here by some. He wants to protect the forests by a broad and manly and defensible plan in the interests of his constituents and of all the people of the country.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Verily.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. You can not go further in indorsing his ability than I do.

Mr. GUENTHER. Why did not his people elect him again?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Because he had gone into the ranks of the monopolistic powers of this country body and breeches. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish we had his breeches here. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Yes; and I do not doubt that every other member on this floor, who wants to tax somebody else's business in order to keep up his own, would join in the wish. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, this is what my colleague said further:

It is not the question presented in this paragraph. The question is as to whether we will offer them a bonus of $10, $15, or $20 an acre for the destruction of their forests. That is what they ask us to do. There is no objection to these forests being destroyed, perhaps. There is no question of the right of these gentlemen who own them to destroy them if they see fit.

Mr. Chairman, I concur with my predecessor in that, and I put my belief in free trade in lumber on no such ground as the protection of the forests. My predecessor went on to say:

But they have no right to quarrel with us because we refuse to give them this bonus of one, two, three, and three and a half dollars a thousand feet for their destruction, which amounts to from $20 to $25 an acre of the forests.

Mr. Chairman, I invite attention to the reason which my predecessor gives at this point. He says further:

Here is a difference, it seems to me, between the position of this now under consideration and any of the other protected industries of this country. It is claimed that the reason why this protection should be given is to protect the laborer, and yet a gentleman speaking by authority for the State of Michigan only a few days ago in another place admitted that ten thousand and more laborers from the Dominion of Canada each winter cross the river, or an imaginary line, and become competitors with our people in the forests of Michigan. We know that in Maine it is an easy matter to introduce all the cheap labor—the pauper labor, if you choose—from Canada. Now, why should we offer this bonus to that class of laborers?

Mr. GUENTHER. Have you heard from Oregon? [Laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman, I have taken no part in this debate, having been paired. My colleague from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] has stated in his place here that there is a trust among the lumber manufacturers of Iowa. I deny that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Prove your denial. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Prove a negative.

Mr. GEAR. I will come as near proving my denial as you have come to proving your assertion.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I want to show the gentleman the absurdity of the assault he makes. If its putrid carcass was not fully exposed so that it is a stink in the nostrils of all men I suppose he would deny the existence of the Standard Oil Trust.

Mr. GEAR. I say I will come as near proving my denial as the gentleman has come to proving his assertion. Now, Mr. Chairman, the timber interest in my State, while we have no pine timber, is quite a large one. The millmen of my State cut 350,000,000 feet of lumber annually, amounting to about $4,000,000. Some of them own their stumpage, but the majority buy logs which are floated down that great artery of commerce, the Mississippi.

The largest lumber manufacturers in the State of Iowa live in my own district. One of those gentlemen is here to-day on the floor of this House, and he assures me that as between the lumber manufacturers there is not, so far as he knows, and there never has been, a lumber trust in the State of Iowa. But there are large dealers who should not be confounded with the manufacturers. It is true that these dealers have had an arrangement by and under which they each have control of certain territory, an arrangement of the character of that described by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON].

But, sir, the Republican party of my State, having ever in mind, as it has had for the last thirty years, the welfare of the people, has enacted a law under which a trust or trade league can not stand on the soil of Republican Iowa for one minute [applause on the Republican side]; and when my colleague states that there is a lumber trust there, he makes a statement which, in my judgment, is not warranted by the facts.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. One question. Is it not true the Iowa State Register, published by Mr. John S. Clarkson, a member of the National Republican Committee, made the charge directly and continuously that James G. Berryhill, a Republican member of the Legislature from Polk County, was a member of a lumber trust, and that the case ought to be investigated by the Legislature?

Mr. GEAR. I do not know whether it did or not, as I was not a subscriber at that time to the State Register.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I supposed you could not keep house without it.

Mr. GEAR. But Mr. James G. Berryhill was a member of the Legislature which enacted the anti-trust law, and he voted for it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Of course he did. You do not deny, though, that I state facts, do you?

Mr. WEAVER was recognized.

Mr. BLAND. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a few minutes, in order that I may have read a dispatch sent to the New York Herald showing why and how Oregon has been carried by the Republicans.

The dispatch was read, as follows:

OREGON GOES REPUBLICAN—RAILROAD INFLUENCES CONTROL WITH A VIEW TO THE SENATORSHIP.

[By telegraph to the Herald.]

PORTLAND, June 5, 1888.

This State went Republican yesterday by about 4,000 majority. The real issue was the Senatorship. The Legislature just elected will choose a United States Senator, and the corporation influences—the Northern Pacific Railroad—are powerful in the State, and on the Republican side, because the Democratic policy about land grants has been bitterly opposed and resented by the railroad.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, here again we find the great monopolies arrayed against the Democratic party. Gentlemen on the other side of the House have claimed to be the friends of the laboring men, and of homes for the laboring classes, places to which they can retreat when they have been driven from the employ of the monopolies; and yet, sir, because the Democratic party in this House has passed a bill forfeiting over fifty million acres of the public lands which had been granted to railroads, and forfeiting the land-grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad, the party has been proscribed by that great monopoly, and the combine of the tariff monopoly and the railroad monopoly has carried Oregon against the Democratic party, which has always been fighting those monopolies in the interest of labor and in the interest of homes for the people of this country. In that interest the House of Representatives passed the bill forfeiting the land grant of the Northern Pacific, and that monopoly has fought the Democratic party in Oregon in order to secure a United States Senator for the Republican party. That bill, which passed this House in the last Congress, sleeps now in the Senate, and hence the importance of the Republicans keeping control of the Senate, so as to continue to throttle the interests of labor and of the people of this country generally. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I was very much astonished at the remarks of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] in reply to the questions of my colleague [Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa]. Now I want to ask the gentleman from Oregon a question, and I want him to answer yes or no.

Mr. HERMANN. I will answer you.

Mr. WEAVER. I want you to answer yes or no. Then you can have the floor to say what you please after I get through.

Mr. HERMANN. I will answer you.

Mr. WEAVER. Now, I ask the gentleman whether it is not true that he owned some saw-mills in Oregon.

Mr. HERMANN. I do not.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask whether it is not true that you did own and operate saw-mills in that State.

Mr. HERMANN. Several years ago, probably four or five years ago, I did own one small saw-mill.

Mr. WEAVER. And is it not true that you took your lumber to Portland, and that you could not land it or get a man to measure it for you unless you paid $500 for the privilege of going into the organization that controlled the wharfage at Portland? And did you not refuse to pay that, or rather did you not at first agree to pay it, and then did not they notify you that they had all the members they wanted and refuse to let you into the combine; and were you not compelled to sell your lumber at a reduced rate and at a heavy loss? I want to ask you one other question: Did you not make substantially that statement in the presence of four or five gentlemen, members of this House, who are here listening to me while I put these questions? Now, answer that.

Mr. HERMANN. Do you wish it answered now, or do you propose I shall have my five minutes to give the answer?

Mr. WEAVER. You may answer it now, and afterward you can explain in your five minutes.

Mr. HERMANN. Then I will say "no" now, and I will answer more fully in my five minutes.

Mr. WEAVER. You say "no" to all those propositions?

Mr. HERMANN. I say that in the main the statement is incorrect; and as to the exact particulars, I will answer in my five minutes.

Mr. WEAVER. Did you not make that statement in substance in the presence of four or five members of this House?

Mr. HERMANN. I will answer the gentleman in my five minutes fully and completely.

Mr. WEAVER. I will yield, and let the gentleman take his five minutes now, and I will reserve the residue of my time. [Cries of "Oh, no."]

Mr. HERMANN. Say what you desire to say in full now, so that I shall have five minutes to answer what you may say.

Mr. WEAVER. I have said all that I want to say to the gentleman from Oregon now. He can take his five minutes, and I will reserve the remainder of my time. [Cries of "Oh, no."]

Mr. BAYNE. I object to any reservation.

A MEMBER. You can not object.

Mr. BAYNE. I will see whether I can not.

Mr. WEAVER. Very well; I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. BAYNE. That will do.

Mr. WEAVER. And I will ask to be recognized after he is through. [Laughter.]

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not at all surprised that my friend on the other side [Mr. WEAVER], and those of my friends who are near him prompting him, should be very desirous to avail themselves of this opportunity to put the questions which have just now been addressed to me. It is proper I should say this: In the first place, I was, four or five years ago, the owner of a small saw-mill in the State of Oregon, and was shipping lumber from that State. My shipments were confined almost exclusively to cedar—white cedar—what is called Port Orford cedar, which is grown almost exclusively upon the Pacific coast, in the State of Oregon. It may really be called a luxury in the lumber business, being used exclusively for the finest finishing work. No lumber of that class is produced in Canada, British Columbia, or anywhere else, so far as I have knowledge, than where I have stated. A few men controlled the business in California, and entered there into a combination; so that it became impossible for me to place my cedar upon the markets of San Francisco on equal terms with theirs. I was refused admittance into their combination. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side; cries of "Wait!" "Wait!" on the Republican side.]

This species of lumber has no connection with the great bulk of the lumber manufactures of the Pacific coast; it is possibly about the one-thousandth part of the lumber manufacture of that coast. It has no connection with Canada lumber. You may put it on the free-list or leave it off, and it will make no difference. It has no connection with any tariff regulation. There was a combination among a few lumber manufacturers on our own coast, which existed for about six months, and after that was dissolved. That is the history of that "lumber trust;" and it has now no existence, so far as I understand. That is the whole sum and substance of this matter. It had no relation to the great lumber production there, which is Oregon pine, of which Oregon produces to-day 300,000,000 feet and the Pacific coast 1,000,000,000 feet. It has no connection with the great lumber traffic of the United States, and the combination to which I have referred existed but a short time, but was never in any sense a trust, merely an association of lumber dealers in San Francisco, not manufacturers.

This is the matter which I related in ordinary conversation in connection with trust combinations to my associates, some of them political opponents, in the Committee on Manufactures. The facts are as I now state them, and it is due to them and to me that I should make this statement.

So far as regards putting this lumber upon the Portland market, we have no Portland market for it, and there is no combination, no trust in the State of Oregon. We are all manufacturers there; we are engaged in the logging business; we are engaged in raising the products of the soil for the support and sustenance of the loggers. We have no dealers, no combinations, in that State. Our markets are in San Francisco; they are up and down the coast; they are in China. We have no associations of dealers in our State. Consequently, when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON], who preceded the gentleman that last spoke, charged that trust combinations had exercised some interference in the recent election in the State of Oregon, he said that which is entirely without foundation; but I will do him the justice to say he would not have made so reckless an assertion if he had not been prompted by gentlemen on the other side who are now seeking so anxiously to get here the admission on my part of the existence of a cedar trust between three or four wealthy firms, which existed only six or seven months, and had relation to an article of luxury in the lumber business—had no connection whatever with the great body of the lumber business in the State of Oregon or California or on the Pacific coast.

Let me repeat that if there was a cedar trust it had no more relation to the tariff than has the anthracite trust or the coal-oil trust, which seems to figure so conspicuously in the omissions of the gentlemen on the other side, or a long list of trust organizations which might be mentioned. It was, let me say, the hay-makers, the hop growers, the fruit-growers, the wheat-growers, the laborers, the wage-earners of Oregon who rose up in that State. One-fourth of the Democratic party of Oregon rose up in their might and concluded that now was the time to administer a rebuke to these industry-smashers, these "sheep-stealers," if I may use the term [laughter], who are seeking to destroy the great interests of my State, lumber, wool, fruit, hops, and other industries which have pushed that State forward in great strides to a prosperity and greatness which are not equaled among all the States of the Union. It was not the Republicans alone who joined in that rebuke, but the records show that more than one-fourth of the Democratic party arose in their might to administer this rebuke. The consumers of that country joined with the producers and the manufacturers in administering this rebuke.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WEAVER obtained the floor and said: I will yield to the gentleman if I can afterward be recognized.

Mr. HERMANN. Nothing probably can furnish so strong a confirmation of what I have been stating; no better proof can be presented of every suggestion I have made than this telegram which I have received this morning from the chairman of the Republican State central committee of Oregon, who has been receiving returns from all portions of that widely-extended State:

Your majority will reach about 7,000. Democrats have less than twenty members in both houses.

The aggregate membership being ninety.

Tariff question did it.

[Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLAND. Hurrah for the Northern Pacific Railroad land grant! [Laughter and applause.]

Several MEMBERS. Hurrah for BILL SCOTT. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WEAVER. I send to the Clerk's desk, to have read as a part of my remarks, a telegram which has just been received by Mr. MILLS.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONVENTION HALL, ST. LOUIS, June 7, 1888—11.19 a. m.

SCOTT of Pennsylvania, greeted with applause, presented from committee on resolutions a resolution indorsing and recommending early passage of Mills bill.

[Great applause.]

Previous question ordered and resolution passed amid great cheering and waving of hats.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WEAVER. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. Did Mr. SCOTT or the convention fix the date at which the Mills bill will go into effect? [Renewed applause.]

Mr. WEAVER. This House will fix that early enough for the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Applause on the Democratic side of the House.]

Mr. BAYNE rose.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not desire to be interrupted.

Several MEMBERS. Allow a dispatch to be read.

Mr. WEAVER. You can get the floor after I am through.

Mr. BIGGS. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will yield and allow the gentleman from Pennsylvania to have a telegram read.

Mr. WEAVER. No. When the gentleman from Oregon put in his speech of confession and avoidance he said it was a small saw-mill he owned [laughter], and that it was a small part of the lumber business in Oregon. I want to say that the lumber trust was large enough to crush out his small business it seems, and he could not get in, just as he states it.

The evidence seems to be cumulative in favor of the existence of the lumber trust. Will any sane man say that that lumber trust was confined to the cedar lumber? I ask the Clerk to read the following extract from the New York Tribune of March 7 last.

The Clerk read as follows:

The pine lumber pool has succeeded during the past year in advancing the prices of lumber $12 to $15 per thousand, on the ground of high shipping rates and increased wages. The grounds for the advance are trivial, as the wages of the men are only $5 more per month and the running expenses of the vessels are no greater. The pool, which has adopted all the methods of newly invented trusts, has simply made the people of California pay about one and a half millions into its pocket. It controls ships and mills, and regulates the prices of pine lumber to suit itself.

Mr. WEAVER. The article which has just been read is from the New York Tribune, a Republican journal, the services of which they can not do without in the coming campaign.

My honored colleague, Governor GEAR, also denies the existence of a lumber trust in the State of Iowa.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let us hear who has been nominated at St. Louis for the Vice-Presidency.

Mr. COX sent up the following telegram to be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. LOUIS, June 7.

Thurman is nominated.

[Long-continued applause.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE stood at the Clerk's desk exhibiting a large photograph of Mr. Thurman, which was greeted with applause.

Mr. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I have worked for over thirty years to secure the nomination of Mr. Thurman for the first place; I wanted him put at the head of the ticket. He has now been put in the second place, and I tell you that California will give him a majority at the coming election of over 15,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Missouri refers to the active part taken by the Democratic party in the forfeiture of the unearned land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad, I wish to say to him that the man who took the most active part in getting through this House the bill forfeiting those lands and returning them to the public domain was not a Democrat at all, but a Republican member on this side of the House. I refer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]. [Applause on the Republican side of the House.]

The man who made the strongest speech in opposition to that measure was not a Republican, but he was the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. Van Eaton, a Democrat on that side of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.] The statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] was in keeping, so far as veracity is concerned, with the platform adopted by his party in 1884, in which it declared that the Democratic party had forfeited over 100,000,000 acres of land grants in the United States. A letter was written to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, asking for information upon that subject, and his reply was that there were only 8,000,000 acres up to that time which had been forfeited. [Laughter.] So that the Democratic party of Missouri in its platform came within ninety-two millions of the truth; and that is pretty near for the Democrats. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will you permit a question?

Mr. PETERS. No; I want to yield one minute now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let me ask this question——

Mr. BLAND. Let me ask the gentleman what became of that bill in the Senate, which was passed by the House but hung up in the Senate, forfeiting the entire Northern Pacific land grants?

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman from Kansas yields to me, and I desire to have read a telegram in that time. I want to have this dispatch read for the information of the House; and while it is going to the desk I will simply inquire why it is that this enthusiasm is manifested on that side of the House over the tail of the Democratic ticket when so little was manifested over the head of it? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I ask the Clerk to read the telegram.

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. LOUIS, June 7, 1888.

Hon. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH,
House of Representatives.

Democratic committee refuse to pay for transportation——

Mr. BUTTERWORTH (interrupting the reading). One moment. You need not read that telegram. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. PETERS. I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Telegrams being in order, I have sought the floor to enable me only to ask the Clerk to read two, which I think will throw some light upon the measures which have been taken looking to the precipitation of that war amongst the people of this country which the gentleman from Kentucky was so eloquent in describing this forenoon. I did not know that we had just gone through a war; but I discovered that the measures adopted on yesterday to strangle ultimately the Committee on Ways and Means by a direct refusal to indorse their bill in St. Louis, and then ultimately to come in with a supplemental proposition, was worked out through means which are described in these telegrams which I now ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Watterson received the following telegram from Washington to-day:

"Failure to indorse the Mills bill may defeat it.

"WILLIAM C. BRECKINRIDGE."

Governor John C. Brown handed the following telegram he had just received from Congressman MCMILLIN to Mr. Watterson:

Governor J. C. BROWN, Southern Hotel:

"Failure to indorse the Mills bill in platform or separate resolutions may defeat it. We charged bayonets here. Have the convention do its duty.

"BENTON MCMILLIN."

[Laughter.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. With my compliments, gentlemen. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLAND. The question is, who stole that telegram? [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. May not the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri be born of the spirit that always attributes to somebody else that which is prominent in a man's own mind. These telegrams, I will state to him, were cut from the current issue of the public press of to-day, and were doubtless handed to the press by the gentlemen who are thus being called upon to aid the Ways and Means Committee in the hour of its distress.

Mr. BLAND. The mind and character of the gentleman inspired the question.

Mr. KELLEY. Let me state that they are in the New York Tribune of this morning, both of them.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know what it was that made my friend from Tennessee suggest this reference to a charge of bayonets, unless it was because of the refusal of the Chair on that day to recognize anybody on this side of the House to move a suspension of the rules and fix a day for the consideration of pension legislation. [Laughter.] I suppose it must have been that, because that was the only thing that has recently occurred that did look like a charge of cavalry.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to supplement the telegram of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] by adding the remainder of it? He should have continued:

Have the convention do its duty.

[Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLS. That is all right.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And the convention has done its duty, and that duty will result, I can tell the gentleman, in no comfort to him and his side of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. Can you inform us whether it gives the date when the Mills bill is to go into effect? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. This Congress will fix that date, and I will tell the gentleman that he will then have less comfort, for the people are going to have relief from oppressive taxation and the gentleman and his party can not prevent it. [Applause.] All the powers of sophistry, all the interests of monopoly which can be brought to bear in this connection will not fortify the gentleman and his side in preventing that action. [Renewed applause.] Even filibustering will not do it.

A MEMBER. We will see.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate, unless, by consent, we can come to some understanding that this discussion shall terminate. We have had politics enough for a time.

Mr. REED. I should like to make a few remarks myself on the amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee now rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 100, noes 92.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the tariff bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House on the Indian appropriation bill, and agreed to the conference asked by the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. CALL conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 2017) to incorporate the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 7263) for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Mich.; and

A bill (H. R. 7340) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Hickman, Ky.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and pending that I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to forty minutes.

Mr. ADAMS. I should like to have at least ten minutes myself on this question.

Mr. MILLS. We spent all day yesterday on it.

Mr. ADAMS. That was not my fault.

Mr. REED. I suggest that the gentleman allow thirty minutes on each side.

Mr. MILLS. I will accept that, and move that the debate close in one hour on this paragraph and all amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

THE TARIFF.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the pending bill, all debate upon the pending amendment being limited to thirty minutes. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] is recognized.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, before I begin, I ask unanimous consent that I may have ten minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, what, with the telegrams from nominating conventions and the interesting revelations of private conversations upon the floor of the House, we have wandered somewhat from the matter under immediate discussion. I desire to call back the attention of the House to the amendments on which we are to vote, because I believe them to be full of importance not only to my immediate constituency but to the country at large. This nation was founded by a union of States for the purpose of presenting to foreign powers an unbroken front. It was founded upon the basis which is expressed in the constitution of the Knights of Labor, that an injury to one was the concern of all; and, however remote the northeastern corner of this country may be from the southern region represented by the gentleman from Kentucky, it is as much the concern of the nation as is the whole region bordered by the Mississippi River. This nation has an interest to see that no foreign government is allowed to trample upon the rights of our citizens.

Some years ago we had a treaty by which the fishery question was arranged. That treaty arranged it to our disadvantage, as the facts and figures prove. Two years before the advent of the Democratic Administration notice was given of the intention to abrogate that treaty, and the abrogation took place after the incoming of the present Administration. The abrogation of that treaty deprived Canada of one of its richest sources of revenue, namely, the American market for the product of her fisheries. Thereupon commenced, in defiance of all the principles of comity among civilized nations, a series of persecutions of American citizens for the purpose of so annoying them that the United States might be driven again to give to Canada free access to our markets. Those persecutions had their origin in no other motive, and the history of no civilized community for the last fifty years has been polluted by such outrages. Privileges which the Barbary states in the times of piracy were forced to give us have been denied by a civilized nation to another civilized nation to such an extent that the President of the United States in a message upon the treaty actually congratulates himself that he has wrested from a foreign Christian power the right for our vessels in distress to receive the ordinary succor that is universally accorded among civilized countries. That is the attitude of Canada towards us. Towards her we have maintained an attitude of the most perfect fairness. We allow the Canadian fishermen to purchase bait upon our shores. We allow their disabled vessels all the rights which civilized communities allow anywhere, and in 1887, last year, this Congress solemnly resolved that unless the policy of non-intercourse was abandoned by Canada the policy of non-intercourse should be adopted by us. In coming to that determination the only struggle between the two sides of this Chamber was as to which should go farthest, and the Democratic side based their opposition to the action of the Senate upon the ground that it did not go far enough to satisfy their wishes and their desires. Yet here to-day there is presented upon the proposition of my colleague [Mr. DINGLEY] a proposition of surrender, so utter and absolute that it was followed by silence on the Democratic side for the space of half an hour, after which came a complete, but not vigorous, retraction on the part of the gentleman from Kentucky himself [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who frankly confessed that his amendment was simply a parliamentary device to enable the Democratic party, by voting a worse proposition, to vote down a good one.

Now, then, paying no further attention to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, the futility and impropriety of which he himself has confessed, which confession was enforced by the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], I confine myself to the proposition of my colleague from the State of Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. We are here proposing to give to Canada our markets for lumber. Canada is the only nation that is going to be affected by the repeal of the tariff upon sawed lumber. She is to have free access to our markets. The nation which has refused to our fishermen the common courtesies of civilized intercourse, which has refused to our citizens the decencies granted by every civilized country, is now to be dowered with the right to enter our market free with the products of her forests, a market the advantages of which have been forcibly set forth by the gentleman from Texas himself.

As against this proposition my colleague [Mr. DINGLEY] proposes that our markets shall not be open to any nation that refuses to our fishermen the same rights which we grant to the citizens of a friendly nation, and which all the civilized nations of the world grant from one pole to the other; and the question now is what do the Democratic side mean to do upon that proposition? Do they mean to stand up to their vote of the year 1887? Do they mean to give our fishermen the benefit of all the powers of this nation for their protection? Do they mean to say to the Canadians: Not only shall reciprocity be refused to you when you refuse it to us, but you shall not have access to our market for your lumber unless you allow our fishermen the rights which you know belong to them? I tell you, gentlemen, that the rights of our fishermen date away back of the treaty of 1818.

Years ago we and the Canadians were fellow-colonists of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and as such colonists we not only had a right to participate in these fisheries, but we did participate in them year in and year out, and when we separated from that country we separated with all the rights that we had had as colonists. It is true that for years we struggled in weakness, in disaster, in doubt, and that some of our rights were wrested from us in our days of weakness; but to-day we stand the peer of any nation on earth, able enough and strong enough to assert our rights, and nothing can prevent our doing it but cowardice in the House of Representatives. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, those who love America and believe that it should assert its rights, those who believe in standing by this great country and in backing up the demands made even by your Democratic Secretary of State, will join at once in voting down the pusillanimous surrender offered by the gentleman from Kentucky and in voting up the rightful proposition of my colleague from the State of Maine. [Renewed applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is any more "pusillanimous" in its nature than the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY.] If the House can for a moment throw off the thrall of the eloquence of the gentleman who has just addressed us [Mr. REED], I wish to say a few words upon the point which he has brought up for the second time in this debate. I would state to gentlemen on the other side who have heretofore spoken, as well as to the gentleman from Maine, that the relations between this country and Canada at the present time are based upon the treaty of 1818, a fact that several speakers seem to have overlooked; and I can not agree with the gentleman in saying that that treaty was wrung from the weakness of this country. No, sir; that treaty was made with Great Britain by three commissioners of the United States who could not be called weak or liable to be imposed upon.

If my memory serves me, these commissioners were John Quincy Adams, Mr. Rush, and Mr. Gallatin, three of the most distinguished men in our history. We had just come out of the second war with the greatest power on the earth; we had come out triumphantly, and our flag had an equality with the flag of Great Britain on every ocean, upon seas where it is now less known than the flags of the least important nations of Europe. Those most eminent American statesmen negotiated the treaty, under which, since the lapse of the treaty of Washington, we have been living for the last three years, and under which these difficulties with the government of the Dominion of Canada have arisen. When the gentleman from Maine says that nothing like the existing difficulty has ever been known before in our history, I will remind him that there has not been a time when we have been under this treaty, unmodified by any other act, that we have not had the same difficulties as now beset us.

From the hour almost of the ratification of this treaty Canada and the British Parliament passed laws to render it effective that were severe upon our interests in the fisheries. Later on, in the administrations of Jackson, Van Buren, Tyler, and Fillmore, vessels were seized and condemned without redress, and this continued until the reciprocity treaty of 1854. All trouble then ceased until the abrogation of that treaty twelve years afterwards, when the difficulties were renewed. In 1870, under Grant, many vessels were seized and condemned, but as it was under a treaty to which we were contracting parties no cause of war was thought to exist by that administration, which only sought to make peaceful negotiation without threat or bluster.

The treaty of 1818, contrary to the statement made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] this morning, never authorized our people to go into the ports of Canada to buy bait.

Mr. DINGLEY. Secretary Bayard so states. I have his letter here.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Secretary Bayard did not make the treaty of 1818.

Mr. DINGLEY. He states that it gives that authority to our fishing vessels.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. The treaty of 1818, as I stated before, was made by diplomats upon whose tombs the moss has long since grown. Furthermore, the fishermen of this country did not then claim through those commissioners the "right" to enter Canadian harbors to touch or to deal there. Or if they did make such claim it was not conceded. They accepted it as a "liberty" given by the people of Canada. That is the word used in the text of the treaty. I have the very words here, having sought for them while the gentleman from Maine was speaking:

> American fishermen shall be admitted to enter such bays or harbors for the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever.

It is known that the claim to buy bait was urged on our side, but it was strenuously resisted, and the American commissioners did not insist upon it.

It was the lapse of the treaty of Washington that brought the treaty of 1818 again into operation as the only ground upon which our Government could stand; and it was to obviate the great difficulties and hardships arising under this treaty that the present Administration appointed a commission to negotiate a new treaty which has been so despitefully treated by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] this morning.

It will, I am well aware, be said in answer to me that this treaty has been modified by the maritime reciprocity of 1822 and 1830, the reciprocity that was declared by the proclamations of William IV and of Andrew Jackson; but, sir, the Canadian people have never allowed that vessels engaged in fishing were entitled to the benefits of these regulations. They have looked upon a fishing vessel as sui generis, and as not included in the maritime reciprocity which we now demand.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FORD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts be allowed further time.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Massachusetts will be permitted to continue his remarks for five minutes. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I will occupy but a moment more, for I do not wish to take the time of the committee. We should be acting upon these amendments. I do not propose to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Maine or the antagonizing amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. But this question of the treaty having been raised, and the Administration sharply criticised, I desire to present another view and to recall to gentlemen's minds the facts in the case that they seem to overlook in their eager haste to condemn.

It has been the duty of the Administration to make a modus vivendi, and they have done it to their best ability. In the making of a treaty both sides are interested. It is a diplomatic war in which each strives to get the better of the other. In this, if we have not succeeded in getting everything, we have at least got what we could and as much as our predecessors secured. We have a better way of living. We have an arrangement modifying the harsh features of the treaty of 1818, upon which we are now standing. If that arrangement fails at the other end of the Capitol, what will be the result? Certainly we shall not appeal to arms. Such a failure will only lead to the negotiation of another treaty.

If we went to war with Great Britain on this case, what would be the result? Incalculable injury and then a treaty. A treaty is made at the close of hostilities. We have made a treaty like wise and brave men, without bluster or threat, with due regard to the rights of others, and I believe that if it is ratified the difficulties of which our fishermen complain will be obviated and we shall have honorable peace and content. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] and the amendment to that amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] stand on entirely different ground. When the gentleman from Maine offered his amendment the House in Committee of the Whole had already decided to place lumber on the free-list. It was a gift to the Dominion of an American market for one of the most important products of Canada. It was an important and valuable gift. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] had said so a day or two before.

I do not mean to intimate that in putting lumber on the free-list the gentleman from Texas was actuated mainly or at all by good-will to Canada. His motive was to change the tariff policy of the United States. It was not to reduce the revenue. The gentleman from Texas had himself said in regard to some of the items which we had considered that the amount of surplus revenue thereby reduced was insignificant. His motive was to substitute, so far as he could, the system of a tariff for revenue only in place of the existing tariff for protection. He said, however, only the other day that the effect of the enactment of this part of the pending bill would be to confer a benefit upon Canada.

What could be more reasonable than to propose, as the gentleman from Maine has proposed, that this benefit to Canada should be granted only on condition? Even from the standpoint of gentlemen on the other side, is it not far better and more patriotic to forego for the present the benefit of free Canadian lumber, if free Canadian lumber be indeed a benefit, rather than confer even incidentally a pecuniary benefit upon a foreign country which has never willingly conferred a benefit upon ourselves and has even refused to concede to our fishing vessels the privileges freely accorded elsewhere in the ports of all civilized nations except for the very large and substantial consideration of a free American market for Canadian fish? The amendment of the gentleman from Maine was therefore not only reasonable, but patriotic.

It provided that Canada should not receive the benefit of the free-list which the Committee of the Whole had adopted so long as Canada denied in its ports to fishing or other vessels of the United States the commercial privileges granted to similar Canadian vessels in the ports of the United States.

Now, what does the gentleman from Kentucky propose in his amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine? He proposes that if the Dominion of Canada shall comply with the reasonable condition imposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Maine the Dominion shall get the benefit not only of the American market for Canadian lumber, which his side of the House had already decided to give to the Dominion without any condition at all, but the additional advantage of a free market in the United States for Canadian fish.

